

Mansfield Open-Air Mission Band

Gavin Holman, 13 October 2025

The open-air missions were started by the Wesleyans in Mansfield in 1892, and were shortly joined by the Primitive Methodists and the Free Church in their meetings. J.W. Graham, a member of the local Wesleyan Methodist Church, organised a brass band in 1919, to accompany the open-air mission services. At first this was a boys' band of some 20 players, all of whom worked in the collieries. At a later date a few adults also joined the band to swell the numbers. In its early years it was conducted by Mr F. Eggleshall.

Mansfield had no shortage of bands during the period of the Open-Air Mission Band. The Mansfield Woodhouse, Mansfield Borough, Mansfield Colliery, Mansfield British Legion, Mansfield Salvation Army, and Mansfield Excelsior Bands were all contemporary with the Mission Band.

The Band supported the local Methodist churches and raised funds for various good works in the district, particularly support the childrens' and hospital funds.

Members of the Band (above) in 1923:

H. Kemp, J. Parker, A. Knight, S. Steele, F. Jelly, C. Clarke, L. Johnson, J. Tack, S. Ward, F. Kirkland, J. Roberts, E. Ward, F. Clibbery, C. Shaw, William Towers, A. Clibbery, L. Litchfield, H. Brocklehurst, M. Boocock, R. Jakeman, W. Stoke, P. Vardy, H. Eggleshaw, W. Bradley, G.E. Flint, S. Ross, F. Eggleshaw, J.W. Graham, F.N. Ellis, E. Pilgrim, V. Sutherland, E. Hobson, W. Towers, A. Lister, A. Hobson, and G.Ward

Arthur Henshaw was conductor of the Band in 1935.

The Band competed in the City of Leicester Brass Band Festival (4th Section) at the Lancaster Hall, on Saturday 7 March 1936, playing the test piece “Sunrise to Sunset”. They were unplaced.

There is no mention of the Band after 1936, so it is assumed that it disbanded soon thereafter, and certainly did not survive WW2.
