| 2  | OVERTURE   | ... | "Raymond"                 | ... | Thomas   |
|    | After "Mignon" and "Hamlet" the masterpiece of Ambroise Thomas, "Raymond," an opera in three acts, produced at Paris in 1851, claims first place. The overture, which is based on motives from the opera, is the best known to English audiences of any of the composer's works. It comprises three movements, the second of which is a singularly beautiful idea, leading to a brisk march theme as a finale. The entire work is replete with rich orchestration and dramatic effect. |     |                           |     |                 |

William Vincent Wallace, composer, pianist and violinist, was born in Waterford, on June 1st, 1814. He was the son of Scottish parents, his father being an army bandmaster and bassoon player. On the removal of the family to Dublin, young Wallace frequently appeared at concerts as a violinist, from 1829, and in 1834 he played a Concerto of his own composition at a concert. In about the year 1836 he went to Australia, and travelled from there to New Zealand, India, and South America. He appeared in London in 1845 and produced his operas, but soon after resumed his wanderings, this time visiting the United States as well as South America. He died at the Chateau de Bagen, Haute Garonne, France, October 12th, 1865.
