

DEAR FRIEND MAYBE:

May-be you will attend the Band Reunion at Dayton, Va., May 23, 1908, and may-be you won't. May-be you will have a great time and may-be you won't. May-be some-one will go with you and may-be they won't. May-be you will make a mash and may-be you won't. May-be you will be sick and may-be you won't. May-be you will hear good band music and may-be you won't. May-be you will get to see the Ball Game and may-be you won't. May-be you will come on the train and may-be you won't. May-be you will get there early and may-be you won't. May-be you will miss it all and may be you won't. May-be your friends will take you and may-be they won't. May be you will walk and may-be you won't. May-be you know the way and may-be you don't. May-be it will rain and may-be it won't. May-be there will be a big crowd and may-be there won't. May-be you will be satisfied when it is all over and may-be you won't. May-be you will see your old friends here and may-be you won't. May-be you will make new friends and may-be you won't. May-be you will take a ride on the steam launch and may-be you won't. May-be there will be more bands in the parade than there has been before and may-be they won't. May-be your band will play the best and may-be they won't. May-be you had better come and see? May-be it will be the biggest Band Reunion and may-be it won't.

May-be you do not know who this is from, if you do you are a daisy, old friend, and should meet me at the Band Reunion at Dayton, Va., on May 23, 1908.

From your unknow friend,

MAYBE.
