ACKNOWLEDGEMENTS

I am deeply indebted to my entire committee for their patience, support, and guidance throughout this process. I owe a special debt of gratitude to Dr. Joseph Skillen, my mentor and advisor, for his direction and commitment to this document. I am most appreciative of the outstanding work of R. Winston Morris, Daniel Perantoni, Kenyon Wilson, and Charles McAdams. Without their steadfast dedication to cataloging the repertoire of the tuba quartet in Guide to the Tuba Repertoire: The New Tuba Source Book, a document of this scope would be impractical.

I would like to thank all of the teachers who have instilled a love of music and education in me from the beginning of my musical studies: Kenneth Watkins, Michael Zion, Jill Sheldrake, Chris Mallory, Michael Jones, David A. Schmidt, Bobby Adams, and Frank Wickes.

Finally, I would like to thank my family for their continued support and motivation: Richard and Earlene Boone, Jane and Nicholas Clark, and Rosemary Simpson. Rosemary, I am doubly indebted to you – for your assistance editing this monograph and, more importantly, your incredible daughter, Liz. I would be remiss if I neglected to recognize my wife, Liz, for her patience while I have worked on this degree. Liz, without your advice, criticism, and support, this document would never have been completed.

ABSTRACT

Unlike established chamber ensembles, which have an elevated public perception because of their rich history and works by well-known composers, tuba quartets are challenged with educating their audiences about the tuba and overcoming negative biases about their instruments and repertoire. Established in the mid-twentieth century, the tuba quartet is an important medium for increasing the instrument's public exposure and introducing chamber music to university music students. This study analyzes the data of 1,236 tuba quartets listed in the "Music for Multiple Tubas: Four Parts" chapter by Charles McAdams and Kenyon Wilson in the Guide to the Tuba Repertoire: The New Tuba Source Book (GTR) to identify important trends in the development of tuba quartet repertoire. This document, which may be the first project of its kind to review such a large body of repertoire for a musical medium, identifies the most prevalent tuba quartet composers, arrangers, and publishers through 2005.

The pedagogical emphasis of tuba quartets is evident in the ensemble's relative isolation to university recital halls and brass instrumental association conferences. Accordingly, this document addresses pedagogical considerations ranging from a brief history of the tuba family, the importance of chamber music, the historical development of the tuba ensemble, and an examination of twenty selected tuba quartets with musical examples. Finally, the monograph contains eight appendices that discuss performance opportunities and rehearsal suggestions; identify fifty-three ensembles founded after 1970; provide a discography of thirty-six ensembles; offer contact information for tuba quartet publishers, and supply the complete catalog of 1,236 quartets gathered from the

GTR with updated and additional information. Searchable catalogs and databases will be hosted online at <http://sites.google.com/site/tubaquartet>.

INTRODUCTION

PURPOSE

The tuba quartet is a subcategory of tuba chamber music that refers to any combination of four members of the tuba family, though the ensemble is typically comprised of two euphoniums and two tubas. The ensemble is frequently called a “tuba-euphonium quartet,” a term that is unnecessarily redundant because the euphonium is a tenor member of the tuba family. Academic studies currently focus on the history and literature of large tuba ensembles which are usually affiliated with American university studios (though there are notable exceptions) and frequently double parts on works for four or more tubas.

In the mid-twentieth century, the tuba community, led by R. Winston Morris, began the work of cataloging its repertoire; however, no studies exist that analyze the tuba quartet literature in detail. Since 1950, more than 1,200 original works and transcriptions have been written for the tuba quartet. The purpose of this study is to document the history of the tuba quartet and analyze its repertoire.

BACKGROUND

Chamber music for tuba grew at an astonishing rate beginning in the mid-twentieth century. This growth can be attributed to three eminent tuba advocates: William J. Bell and his students Harvey Philips and R. Winston Morris. In 1954, Philips co-founded the first brass quintet (the New York Brass Quintet), which led to renewed interest in chamber music for brass instruments. Other prominent groups founded at this time were the American Brass Quintet in 1960 and the Chicago Brass Quintet in 1964.

With the emergence of new brass chamber ensembles, tuba teachers began gaining full-time faculty appointments at American universities. Rex Connor led the way at the University of Kentucky in 1960, followed in 1961 by William Bell at Indiana University. Professors who maintained a presence in both the academic and performance worlds embraced the quintet and other small ensembles for their faculty and students.

The tuba quartet was established in the 1950s with the publication of Eric Ball's Quartet for Tubas and Kenneth Cook's Introduction and Rondino.<sup>1</sup> The first public performances took place as early as 1956 at the Hoffnung Music Festival Concert in London.<sup>2</sup> The quartet, consisting of Gerard Hoffnung (a British humorist and tubist), Nigel Amherst, Jim Powell, and John L. Wilson, performed Daniel Abram's arrangement of Mazurka Op. 68, No. 2 in A minor by Frederick Chopin.<sup>3</sup> The festival performance, an intentionally comical affair, elicited a cheer from the crowd during the "solemn investiture of mutes to the four tubas."<sup>4</sup> The inception of the tuba quartet is traced to this parodic performance.

The large tuba ensemble was established in America in the 1960s under the guidance of Constance Weldon (1960, University of Miami), William Bell (1964, Indiana University), and R. Winston Morris (1967, Tennessee Technological University).<sup>5</sup> These studios featured large ensembles that frequently doubled parts on trios, quartets, and larger works. Through a number of conferences, symposiums, recordings, and composition competitions, the medium began to develop a rich and varied repertoire of transcriptions and original works.

REVIEW OF LITERATURE

Tuba Ensemble Reference Publications

In 1966, Bell and Morris published The Encyclopedia of Literature for the Tuba, listing twenty works for multiple tubas, only two of which were tuba quartets. Morris published the Tuba Music Guide in 1973, which cited fewer than two hundred works for multiple tubas, with eighty-five quartets.<sup>6</sup> At the time, it was regarded as “the most comprehensive annotated bibliography of music ever compiled for any one instrument.”<sup>7</sup>

Edward Goldstein persuaded Morris to return to cataloging tuba repertoire after taking a twenty-year hiatus. The pair edited the Tuba Source Book (TSB), an extensive catalog covering tuba works submitted by July 1993. More expansive than previous works, it includes a discography and discussion of tuba history, usage, and equipment. Charles McAdams edited the section on music for multiple tubas, where he compiled and annotated 1,058 pieces, over six hundred of which were for quartet.

The latest work cataloguing the literature is the Guide to the Tuba Repertoire: The New Tuba Source Book (GTR), edited by R. Winston Morris and Daniel Perantoni, and published in 2006. This work is the summation of prior publications in the field. The editorial deadline for submitting works for the GTR was January 2005. Kenyon D.

Wilson, professor of Tuba and Euphonium at the University of Tennessee in Chattanooga, updated McAdams's first-edition chapter on music for multiple tubas. Wilson's directory of 1,905 entries from duets to large ensembles includes 1,236 works for tuba quartet.

Tuba Ensemble Dissertations

There are five dissertations relevant to the study of the tuba ensemble. They are: Gregory Lonnman's "The Tuba Ensemble: Its Organization and Literature," University of Miami, 1974; Gilbert Keathley's "The Tuba Ensemble," Eastman School of Music, 1982; Richard Perry's "The Tennessee Technological University Tuba Ensemble: A Short History and Summary of Original Contributions to Tuba/Euphonium Ensemble Literature," University of Wisconsin-Madison, 1996; Matthew Simmons' "A Compilation of 12 Progressive Festival and Concert Music Selections for Tuba and Euphonium Ensemble, together with Three Public Recitals with Works by Bach, Vivaldi, Koetsier, Plog, Arutiunian, Swann, Jager, Hindemith, Vaughan Williams, and others," University of Memphis, 2005; and, Christopher Lair's "A Historical Overview of the Development of Collegiate and Professional Tuba-Euphonium Ensembles in the United States," Florida State University, 2010. While many of these works discuss the history and literature of the large tuba ensemble, none focuses specifically on the history and evolution of tuba quartet ensembles and quartet repertoire.

Gregory Lonnman's dissertation documents the growing prevalence of the ensemble in American universities and the development of its literature. His major professor at the University of Miami, Connie Weldon, was the founder of the tuba studio ensemble. Lonnman outlines the following objectives of the collegiate tuba ensemble:

"intensified melodic playing, improved intonation, musical awareness, discussion of the tuba, teacher preparation, conducting experience, and individual responsibility to an organization."<sup>8</sup> He also provides a selected list of literature for multiple tubas. Since the tuba ensemble was in its infancy at this time, Lonnman provides guidance to university studio teachers seeking to establish a tuba ensemble program.

Gilbert Keathley's work expands on Lonnman's research from a decade earlier but focuses on composing and arranging for the medium. Keathley examines forty-two musical examples and discusses existing transcriptions and original works. He addresses specific valve requirements of the variously keyed tubas and problems related to acoustics, range, and orchestration. Finally, Keathley provides in his appendix correspondence from five prominent early tuba ensemble composers and arrangers: James Self, William Presser, Frank Lynn Payne, George Heussenstamm, and Rayburn Wright.

Richard Perry, John Steven's doctoral student at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, published his dissertation chronicling the history of the Tennessee Technological University Tuba Ensemble (TTTE) in 1996. While Perry's work focuses on the TTTE, it also provides a detailed history of the founding of the genre and cites numerous firsthand accounts from Morris. Perry documents the sixty-one original compositions written for the group. Lastly, he lists the performances, ensemble roster, and discography of the seven albums the TTTE recorded between 1967 and 1995.

8. Gregory George Lonnman, "The Tuba Ensemble: Its Organization and Literature" (DMA diss., University of Miami, 1974), Abstract. (the page is unnumbered).

Matthew Simmons's dissertation is a collection of his tuba ensemble arrangements for young students. These works fill a need for appropriate repertoire for high school tuba ensembles. Simmons provides a general history of the tuba and euphonium and a brief biographical sketch of the original composers: Josquin des Prez, Martin Luther, Johann Sebastian Bach, John Stafford Smith, Joseph Haydn, Wolfgang Mozart, Ludwig van Beethoven, Richard Wagner, Johannes Brahms, and Samuel Ward.

The most recent dissertation is Christopher Lair's "A Historical Overview of the Development of Collegiate and Professional Tuba-Euphonium Ensembles in the United States." Lair's work summarizes the histories in Lonnman, Keathley, and Perry. He also provides several copies of concert posters and programs. The major contributions of his study are the appendices, which contain full transcripts of interviews with notable tuba-euphonium pedagogues: R. Winston Morris, Scott Watson, Harvey Phillips, Jerry Young, John Stevens, Joseph Skillen, Demondrae Thurman, and Skip Gray. The interviews preserve a rich history from direct sources.

SCOPE

This study does not purport to include every tuba quartet written. With the exception of Mike Forbe's arrangement of St. James Infirmary, the works selected for analysis are catalogued in the GTR covering a period from 1931 through 2004.<sup>9</sup>

DESCRIPTION OF THIS DMA MONOGRAPH

Chapter one presents a brief history of the euphonium and tuba with an emphasis on the tuba family's predecessors, the serpent and ophicleide. The second chapter discusses the importance of chamber music in the West, highlighting the string quartet, the brass and wind quintets, and the saxophone quartet. Chapter three summarizes the growth of the large tuba studio ensemble and the development of the tuba quartet. The fourth chapter analyzes the general state of the tuba quartet repertoire as cataloged in the GTR, answering questions relevant to teachers, composers, and publishers. In addition to a macro-analysis of the repertoire, twenty tuba quartets are analyzed in chapter five. These works have historical or pedagogical significance and represent the following genres: original works, transcriptions, marches, jazz, and popular music.

Eight appendices are provided at the end of the document, including: permission for copyright letter, copyright permissions, catalog of tuba quartet ensembles founded after 1970, discussion of pedagogical considerations and performance opportunities, publisher contact information, discography, and a catalog of more than 1,200 quartets gathered from the GTR. Finally, a searchable catalog of quartets and discography will be uploaded to <http://sites.google.com/site/tubaquartet> and serve as a resource for the tuba community.

DEFINITIONS

The euphonium is a tenor voiced, conical bore, valved instrument of the tuba family. The instrument is pitched in B-flat and sounds at pitch when notated in bass clef and sounds down a major ninth when notated in treble clef. Notation in tenor clef is also common. For the purposes of this document, the term “tenor tuba” is synonymous with “euphonium”; except for bibliographical references.

The tuba is the bass member of the brass family, which is divided into two categories: bass and contrabass. All tubas, regardless of key, sound as written when notated in bass clef. Traditional European brass bands notate tuba parts in treble clef. Tubas transpose down a major sixteenth when notated in B-flat in treble clef, and down a major thirteenth when written in E-flat. Contrabass tubas are pitched in C and B-flat, while bass tubas are in either F or E-flat.

Tuba ensembles are distinguished by their instrumentation (trio, quartet, quintet, etc.) and size (one player or multiple players per part). The tuba quartet is the most common small ensemble with one player per part. Large tuba studio ensembles are typically an American institution, involving multiple players per part as needed to accommodate the size of the studio. Mass tuba ensembles are characterized by multiple players per part, often three or more, and usually planned at tuba conferences where groups may exceed eighty members.

CHAPTER ONE

A BRIEF HISTORY OF THE TUBA FAMILY

Before beginning an analysis of tuba quartet literature, a brief examination of the development of the tuba family will demonstrate how the tuba family's musical role has evolved over time. As the orchestral wind families developed, composers desired a balanced and homogenous sound from the winds that would match that of the string section. Additionally, new wind instruments expanded the available pitch and timbral palette of the orchestra. Developments in the woodwinds extended the orchestra and wind band in both high and low registers with the invention of the piccolo and contrabassoon. Beginning in the late Classical period through the late nineteenth century, orchestras and bands added entire new families of woodwinds, such as the clarinets and saxophones. Similar growth in the brass family was limited until the development of valves by Heinrich Stölzel in 1814.<sup>10</sup>

Prior to the use of valves, vented and key-operated instruments (like the serpent and ophicleide), extended the bass register of the orchestra and permitted brass instruments to play chromatically, rather than being limited to the notes of the harmonic series.<sup>11</sup> One of the tuba's predecessors, the serpent, is a lip-vibrated wind instrument, usually made from walnut with six or more vented holes, and was widely used in 17th century sacred music.<sup>12</sup>

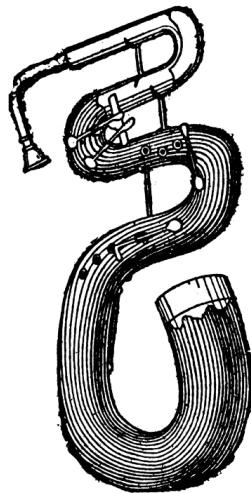

Fig. 2. Military serpent.<sup>13</sup>

In Berlioz's Grand traité d'instrumentation et d'orchestration modernes, the staple text of orchestration from the mid-Romantic period, the serpent was classified as a woodwind with mouthpiece. Berlioz wrote the following regarding the serpent:

The fundamentally barbarous sound of this instrument would have been much more at home in the bloodthirsty rituals of the Druids than in those of the Catholic church, where it is always in evidence, a monstrous monument to the stupidity, tastelessness and lack of feeling which have guided the functions of music at divine service in our churches since time immemorial. An exception must be made for the occasions when the serpent is used to double the awesome Dies iræ plainchant at Requiem mass. Its cold, horrible bawling is doubtless appropriate there. It even seems to assume a kind of poetic misery as accompaniment to those words embodying all the horror of death and the vengeance of a jealous God. This implies too that it would be well suited to secular music concerned with the expression of such ideas – but only for that. Besides, it blends poorly with other orchestral and vocal timbres. As the bass line to a wind section the bass tuba and even the ophicleide are much to be preferred.<sup>14</sup> ophicleide is a member of the keyed bugle family and its name is derived by combining the Greek words “ophis” (serpent) and “kleis” (a cover or stopper).<sup>23</sup> Typically keyed in B-flat or C, the ophicleide occasionally appears in pairs of both tunings in the same work. Berlioz believed the practice of pairing ophicleides of two keys reinforced some of the weaker tones that are inherent in various registers of the ophicleide.<sup>24</sup> In other words, the strengths of one tuning would compensate for the failings of the other.

The number of keys on the ophicleide varied by instrument maker; typically from nine to twelve.<sup>25</sup> Later additions to the ophicleide made it a much more versatile and agile instrument. These additions include a rotary change valve on the crook (to transpose the pitch from C to B-flat), thumb rollers, and vent holes by the bell.<sup>26</sup>

Ralph Dudgeon explained that "Paris was the first major centre of activity for ophicleide players because of the well-funded opera activity."<sup>27</sup> The first opera to use the ophicleide was Spontini's Olimpie, which premiered on December 22, 1819, almost two years before the instrument was patented.<sup>28</sup> Notable works with ophicleide include Rossini's Moïse (1827), Mendelssohn's A Midsummer Night's Dream (1826/1842) and Elijah (1845-46), and numerous works by Berlioz.<sup>29</sup>

Some accounts claim that ophicleides were used in modern orchestras as late as the 1870s;<sup>30</sup> however, they were largely replaced by modern brass instruments by the 1860s.<sup>31</sup> Berlioz's commented in the Journal des débats [April 1, 1845]:

[The tuba], which is no more than a giant trumpet with cylinders, has always struck me as superior to the ophicleide, for the following reason. Like the keyed bugle (the brass instrument with the worst intonation) the ophicleide has enormous holes in its bore which are closed by keys made of material quite different from that of the instrument itself. Thick leather is used to cover the aperture beneath the key and this naturally has the effect of a mute. In addition the instrument's bore is constantly subject to changes depending on the number of keys left open, and this makes the sound very uneven. The quite large area beneath each opening deprives the interior surface of smoothness and regularity, causing further intonation problems. That is why there are so few musicians who play this instrument in tune; there are scarcely three in Paris, the best of whom is M. Caussinus, professor at the Gymnase Musical.<sup>32</sup>

Berlioz adds in his orchestration treatise:

The tone of the low notes is rough, but they can work wonders beneath a body of brass instruments in certain circumstances. The very top notes have a wild character for which no proper use seems yet to have been found. The middle range too strongly recalls the sound of cathedral serpents or herdsmen's horns, especially in the hands of a mediocre player. The ophicleide should only occasionally be allowed to sound on its own. There is nothing more clumsy, nothing, I should say, more monstrous or more at odds with the rest of the orchestra than those quite rapid passages written as solos for the ophicleide's middle range in certain modern operas. They are like an escaped bull running loose in the salon.<sup>33</sup>

With such strong sentiments, it is no wonder that some composers and instrument makers were working to invent a true and fully chromatic bass brass instrument. This evolution, as mentioned earlier, was dependent upon the application of valves to extant brass instruments. Once inventors added valves to trumpets and horns, makers developed larger bored valves and applied them to the tenor and bass brasses (8 to 18 feet of fundamental length).

In 1833, Prussian military bandmaster Wilhelm Friedrich Wieprecht and Berlin instrument maker Johann Gottfried Moritz patented the Berliner-Pumpe.<sup>34</sup> This piston valve was an improvement over other valve designs (such as Stölzel's) because the diameter was large enough to allow curved, free-blowing windways. The early valves, designed by Stölzel, Reidl, Wieprecht, and Périnet, were patented in Europe between 1813 and 1839.<sup>35</sup> Remarkably, the duo of Wieprecht and Moritz also patented the first bass-tuba on September 12, 1835.<sup>36</sup> In the patent document, Wieprecht observed that the wind family was lacking a true contrabass instrument comparable to the string family. The deficiencies of the existing instruments (English bass horn, serpent, bass trombone, and ophicleide) were the impetus for his invention.<sup>37</sup> The first tuba was pitched in F with five Berliner-Pumpe valves, with two valves operated by the left hand and three by the right.<sup>38</sup>

This instrument differs from its modern counterparts in two significant respects: the bell of the instrument measures only 19.3 cm (7.6 in), and the main valves (1 and 2) are operated by the left hand.<sup>39</sup> The modern tuba has a much larger bell, and the main valves are played with the right hand (anywhere between three to five valves for the right hand). Bevan suggested that Moritz and Wieprecht based their valve layout on the

The tuba performs numerous roles in the symphonic orchestra and symphonic bands. Supporting the trombone section and doubling other sections of the orchestra is the tuba's primary responsibility. The tuba filled similar roles in the popular music ensembles in the twentieth century. From the 1920s onward, jazz ensembles and recording groups utilized the tuba for outdoor performances, especially before the amplification of the string bass.<sup>45</sup> The sousaphone, the marching band variant of the concert tuba, is a staple of the New Orleans brass groups like the Rebirth Brass Band and the Dirty Dozen Brass Band. A small number of rock groups (such as Blood, Sweat & Tears) also employed the tuba to create unique bass effects. Lastly, the tuba plays prominent roles in Hollywood film scores.

The bass and contrabass tubas may be in any combination of BBb, CC, Eb, or F;<sup>46</sup> the choice of which is often left to the performer's discretion. With the exception of British brass band music, tubists do not transpose bass clef parts.<sup>47</sup> Bass tubas lend themselves to greater technical facility, improved clarity of articulation, and superior response for passages written above the bass clef than contrabass tubas.

The tenor tuba, created by Carl Wilhelm Moritz<sup>48</sup> of Berlin in 1838, was the next logical result of instrument development. His tenor tuba is pitched in B-flat and has four valves, two for each hand. Soon other makers began developing their own models of valve-operated, tenor-voiced brass instruments. The modern day euphonium and baritone horn are the models developed after Moritz.<sup>49</sup>

The modern euphonium has three valve configurations,<sup>50</sup> two bore sizes, three mouthpiece receiver sizes, and a conical taper. Most professional players perform on a large bore instrument, with a large mouthpiece receiver, and upright compensating valve system. The compensating system corrects tuning deficiencies inherent in 1-3 and 1-2-3 valve combinations. Because of the euphonium's conical taper, euphoniumists are capable of producing a rich, warm sound.

46. This system of description is the traditional designation of the fundamental length of the tuba family, where BBb is equivalent to B-flat0, CC is equivalent to C1, Eb is equivalent to E-flat1, and F is equivalent to F1.

47. British Brass Band treble clef tuba parts are traditionally transposed to E-flat for bass tubas or B-flat for contrabass tubas.

48. Carl W. Moritz was the son of Johann Gottfried Moritz, co-inventor of the Berliner-Pumpe and tuba with Wieprecht.

49. Bevan, The Tuba Family, 221.

50. The most common student combination is with 3 to 4 upright valves with the bell facing the player's right. Professional euphoniums have 3 upright valves and a 4th valve along the side of the instrument (operated by the left hand) with the bell facing the player's right. The least common configuration is with 3 to 4 horizontally-operated valves placed on the front of the instrument with the bell facing the player's left.

Despite players' improved technical facility and pleasing timbre, the euphonium was not readily accepted into the symphony orchestra. This may have been due to the euphonium's range, which was covered by the tuba, trombone, horn, cello, and bassoon. Romantic era composers also associated the euphonium with outdoor military bands, which prompted Holst to include prominent euphonium parts in "Mars, the Bringer of War" in The Planets. Many of the orchestral excerpts for euphonium and baritone horn are catalogued in Orchestral Excerpts for Euphonium and Bass Trumpet.<sup>51</sup>

The wind ensemble embraced the euphonium for its virtuosity and tone. The euphonium was a popularly featured solo instrument in the golden era of wind bands from the 1870s through the 1940s. Popular solos from this period include: The Carnival of Venice by Jean-Baptiste Arban, Concerto per flicorno basso by Amilcare Ponchielli, Beautiful Colorado by Joseph DeLuca, and Fantasie originale by Ermano Picchi.

The euphonium currently has a limited role in contemporary popular ensembles. Rich Matteson, Marcus Dickman, John Allred, Ashley Alexander and Robert Bachner are euphoniumists whose work in jazz and popular music has begun to expand the public's perception of the instrument. Jeffrey Cottrell assesses the future roles of the euphonium in "A Historical Survey of the Euphonium and Its Future in Non-traditional Ensembles Together with Three Recitals of Selected Works by Jan Bach, Neal Corwell, Vladimir Cosma, and Others."<sup>52</sup>

In the tuba quartet, the bass tubas are well suited for very technical passages and are ideal for many first tuba parts. The larger contrabass tubas are the preferred instrument for the lower second tuba part. As is typical with most chamber music, the first euphonium and first tuba parts are voiced higher than their counterparts.

In conclusion, composers and conductors sought a fully chromatic brass instrument to compliment the string and wind families in the Romantic orchestra and wind band. The serpent and ophicleide had limited success filling this need because of their inconsistent tone, which did not match the timbre of existing high brass instruments. With the invention of various valve systems, instrument makers developed the tuba family to extend the brass family into the bass and contrabass register.

CHAPTER TWO

THE IMPORTANCE OF CHAMBER ENSEMBLES IN WESTERN MUSIC

Chamber music has a long and rich history in Western music. As the name suggests, the literature was initially performed in private homes, sometimes for small audiences.<sup>53</sup> Homer Ulrich provides the following definition: "chamber music refers to any music designed for home performance, as opposed to performance in the church, concert hall, or opera house."<sup>54</sup> This definition includes both vocal and instrumental music; however, this document will limit its discussion to instrumental repertoire – specifically string quartets, brass and wind quintets, and saxophone quartets.

The quartet is simply defined as music for four performers. Although there are several possible combinations of voices, the traditional vocal setting of soprano, alto, tenor, and bass has served as the model for most instrumental quartets. Essentially, four instruments are capable of supporting a melodic line with a bass line and supporting harmonies. Imitative polyphony is also effective in the quartet medium. The quartet is an intimate genre that has been described as "the music of friends"<sup>55</sup> and "four rational people conversing."<sup>56</sup>

The string family reached maturity before the wind and brass families. Attributing the invention of the string quartet to one composer is misguided when there is evidence that the quartet developed independently throughout Europe. David Wyn Jones lists several composers from Italy and England whose works for four strings predate Haydn:

Gregorio Allegri (1582-1652), Adriano Banchieri (1568-1634), Andrea Gabrieli (1533-85), Florentio Maschera (c. 1540-c. 1584), Alessandro Scarlatti (1660-1725), John Jenkins (1592-1678), Henry Purcell (1659-95), and Christopher Simpson (c. 1605-69).<sup>57</sup>

One of the popular Baroque ensembles consisted of three melodic instruments and continuo. The continuo accompanied the melodic instruments and normally consisted of a harmonic instrument (keyboard, lute, or theorbo) and a sustaining bass instrument. As performance practice changed, it became acceptable for the continuo to be played with or without the supporting harmonic instrument.<sup>58</sup> Scarlatti wrote six works for two violins, viola, and cello without continuo, explicitly stating this practice.<sup>59</sup>

Another common practice was the creation of de facto quartets by performing four part symphonies with one player per part.<sup>60</sup> This tradition grew out of the Italian concertos of Arcangelo Corelli (1653-1713), Giuseppe Torelli (1658-1709), Antonio Vivaldi (1678-1741), and Giovanni Battista Sammartini (c. 1700-75).<sup>61</sup> The classical quartet likely emerged from these two practices: reducing the number of players of orchestral works and omitting chordal continuo instruments in sonatas.

Haydn, with his sixty-eight numbered quartets, was arguably the first major composer to produce a significant body of literature for the ensemble. Most of Haydn's works followed a classical four-movement form that consisted of a fast movement, slow movement, dance movement, and fast finale, similar to the Classical symphony. Mozart would follow this tradition, composing twenty-three quartets, dedicating six to Haydn.

Beethoven, who strongly felt the influence of Haydn and Mozart, wrote sixteen numbered quartets of his own that expanded the expressive and technical demands on the performers. His work straddled the Classical and Romantic periods, and his quartets reflected this transition. Beethoven moved from the established four-movement form to more substantial works, some of which had seven movements and exceeded forty minutes in duration.

Beginning in the nineteenth century, with the rise of commercial concert performances, chamber ensemble literature began to transition from works performed in parlors by accomplished amateurs to large scale works played in professional venues.<sup>62</sup> The work of Haydn, Mozart, and Beethoven had a lasting effect on the genre, but was technically too demanding for many amateur musicians. Professional string quartets began to tour Europe with these works, which led to increased interest for domestic quartet music, or Hausmusik, among the middle class.<sup>63</sup> Notable ensembles from this time include the Müller Quartet (1830), the Helmesberger Quartet (1849), and the Joachim Quartet (1869).<sup>64</sup>

Wind and brass chamber musicians did not receive the same attention from the great symphonic composers as did their string counterparts. There are few examples of brass or wind chamber ensemble repertoire from before the mid-nineteenth century; however, pieces for a solo wind or brass instrument with strings or piano are more common.<sup>65</sup> The slow acceptance of brass and wind chamber music was due in part to the relatively late technical maturation of the instruments. Traditionally, brass instruments connote open-air performances, such as the hunting horn and military bugle. This contrasts with refined string ensembles, which were in-door instruments suitable for intimate performances. As chamber ensemble venues grew from parlors to concert halls, brass chamber music became more accepted, as brass are more appropriate in large rooms or outdoors. Since the modern wind and brass families were not established until midway through the nineteenth century, there are few significant works of wind and brass chamber literature by well-known composers.

The predominant wind chamber group, the wind quintet, was established by Franz Danzi (1763-1826)<sup>66</sup> and Anton Reicha (1770-1836).<sup>67</sup> The work of these lesser-known contemporaries of Mozart and Beethoven was largely neglected until the twentieth century. The typical configuration of the contemporary wind quintet is a horn and four winds: flute, oboe, clarinet, and bassoon.

Brass chamber music, like its counterpart the wind quintet, lagged behind string chamber groups. The Distin Quintet, active in 1835, was the earliest known touring brass chamber group.<sup>68</sup> The group endorsed Adolph Sax's saxhorn family of instruments in 1844 before setting up their own manufacturing business in London in 1850.<sup>69</sup> Jean Francois Bellon (1795-1869) and Victor Ewald (1860-1935) are two of the earliest composers of original music for five brass. Bellon's works from around 1850 were originally for E-flat flugelhorn, B-flat cornet, horn, trombone, and ophicleide, rather than the modern composition of two trumpets, horn, trombone, and tuba.<sup>70</sup> Beginning around 1890, Ewald began composing multi-movement works for two B-flat cornets, E-flat alto horn, B-flat tenor horn, and tuba.<sup>71</sup>

Adolphe Sax, a Belgian instrument maker working in Paris, patented a family of valved bugles and a new family of woodwinds between 1845 and 1846.<sup>72</sup> The saxhorn and saxophone families as they became known, were quickly adopted by military wind bands. His saxhorns were early predecessors of the euphonium.<sup>73</sup> Both families were predominantly made in alternating E-flat and B-flat keys, although a few were created in F and C.

In 1857 Jean-Baptiste Singelée composed his "Premier Quatuor, Op. 53," which is likely the first original work for saxophone quartet.<sup>74</sup> At present, at least twenty recordings of this work have been produced by professional saxophone quartets.<sup>75</sup> The modern saxophone quartet's early repertoire, which was written between 1930 and 1954, was inspired by Marcel Mule's ensemble Le Quatuor de la Garde Republicaine.<sup>76</sup>

The modern saxophone quartet is comprised of a B-flat soprano, E-flat alto, B-flat tenor, and E-flat baritone saxophone. Because of the similarities in construction and tone production, the saxophone quartet has a fairly consistent sonority throughout the group's range. The saxophone quartet also has a range advantage over its tuba quartet counterpart because the saxophone quartet's range is more closely akin to the vocal quartet. The range of the saxophone quartet range in Fig. 4 spans from an E-flat baritone saxophone to a B-flat soprano saxophone. Due to the nature of tone production on brass instruments, the range of the tuba quartet varies with the proficiency of the players. The practical range of either the tuba or euphonium is roughly three octaves; however the range can be increased with certain limitations (accuracy, pitch, dynamics, endurance) to more than four octaves.

Saxophone and tuba quartets have met with success at recent national chamber music competitions in the United States. Saxophone quartets were awarded first prize a total of ten times between 1988 and 2010 at the Music Teachers National Association Chamber Music Performance Competition according to the association's history, which maintains the most complete public records of the major chamber music associations.<sup>77</sup> The most prestigious competition for tuba quartets is held biannually at the International Tuba-Euphonium Conference.

Chamber ensembles are a popular medium of expression that holds a significant position in Western music. Leading composers from the Classical period through the present have composed original works for vocal or instrumental quartets. The genre is successful because of its ability to convey a variety of musical expression (e.g. harmony, melody, and imitation) through a limited number of instruments.

CHAPTER THREE

A BRIEF HISTORY OF TUBA ENSEMBLES

There have been numerous studies and first-hand accounts concerning the founding of American university tuba studio ensembles; however, few scholars have focused specifically on the tuba quartet. Tuba ensembles are distinguished by their instrumentation (trio, quartet, quintet, etc.) and size (one player or multiple players per part). The tuba quartet is the most common small ensemble with one player per part. Large tuba studio ensembles are typically an American institution, involving multiple players per part as needed to accommodate the size of the studio. Mass tuba ensembles are characterized by multiple players per part, often three or more, and usually planned at tuba conferences where groups may exceed eighty members. Blaine Cunningham, a D.M.A. candidate at the University of Iowa, is currently preparing an extensive dissertation about the history of the tuba quartet; therefore, this document will limit discussion to prominent ensembles and briefly trace the ensemble's history through 2000.

Although the tuba quartet likely began in Britain in the early twentieth century, it was in America that the quartet was elevated above a novelty ensemble to a serious artistic medium. Early ensembles did not commission original works, instead relying on arrangements of existing literature. There is evidence that the tuba quartet existed as early as 1912 as a small group of the Foden Motor Works Band.<sup>78</sup> This British brass band had the typical bass section made up of two B-flat contrabass tubas paired with two E-flat bass tubas.<sup>79</sup> These early ensembles competed in popular quartet competitions, though there are no musical scores from this period.

78. Bevan, The Tuba Family, 435.

The tuba family has not enjoyed a long history of solo music on the concert stage, and it has not been a regular member of popular music ensembles, so the public naturally regards these instruments with some skepticism and humor. British comedian, cartoonist, and tubist, Gerard Hoffnung, recognized this perception and took advantage of the humorous effects of a tuba quartet in his first Hoffnung Music Festival held on November 13, 1956. The concert resulted in the first known tuba quartet recording. Hoffnung's concerts were held in Royal Festival Hall in London and filmed by the B.B.C.<sup>80</sup> The concerts had increasingly exaggerated titles, the Hoffnung Music Festival (1956), the Hoffnung Interplanetary Music Festival (1958), and the Hoffnung Astronautical Music Festival (1961). The quartet, consisting of Gerard Hoffnung, Nigel Amherst, Jim Powell, and John L. Wilson, performed Daniel Abram's arrangement of Chopin's Mazurka Op. 68, No. 2 in A minor.<sup>81</sup> Abram transposed the work to B-flat minor and scored the voices in the low register and spaced close together, producing a dense and ponderous ensemble tone for comic effect. The audience can be heard laughing throughout the performance, particularly when the ensemble employs mutes with a nasal effect.<sup>82</sup>

There is conflicting information surrounding the creation of the Hoffnung Festival. In the liner notes to Daniel Abram's solo piano recording Fantasie Variations on Tales of Approximately one year before the first Hoffnung Music Festival, Daniel Abrams met Gerard Hoffnung via an introduction by Howard Ferguson. Abrams needed an ocarina player for his “Intimate Trio” (4 players) and a tuba player for his tuba quartet version of three popular Chopin piano works that were scheduled to be performed at a concert on “All Fools’ Day.” Gerard Hoffnung fit the bill in both cases. This concert, presented by The London Friends of Music, took place on All Fools’ Day, 1955, in the Royal Festival Hall and was a huge success. Paul Badura-Skoda was the fourth player in Abrams’ “Intimate Trio,” in the scherzo for silent keyboard. (This work was written in 1953 and initially performed at The Aspen Music Festival.) There were other musical aberrations including the 1st movement of Mendelssohn’s Violin Concerto with a soprano soloist, and Benjamin Britten as one of the toy trumpeters in Haydn’s “Toy Symphony.” The publisher of Hoffnung’s cartoons, Punch Magazine, was in the audience at this concert and that led subsequently to the development of what came to be known as “The Hoffnung Music Festival.”<sup>83</sup>

Annetta Hoffnung, Gerard Hoffnung’s widow, supports Abrams’ claim that he was involved with the first Festival, but disputes that he was in any way an instigator of the event. Annetta goes on to claim that while the Hoffnung Festival concerts have been produced around the world, there has never been a repeat performance of Abrams’ tuba quartet arrangement.<sup>84</sup> Furthermore, she recalls meeting Abrams only once. Barnett responds to Annetta by claiming that “Daniel Abrams, and his wife, Sonia, were at the Hoffnung house on more than one occasion, whether Annetta knew it or not, during preparations for the original “All Fools’ Day” concert.”

Gilbert Keathley includes a Chopin Mazurka arrangement from this time period (1950s) in his dissertation, but does not credit an arranger or publisher of the work.

Eugene Anderson, one of the most prolific arrangers for tuba quartet, founded the music publishing company Anderson's Arizona Originals. Anderson writes that:

[He] is among the very first composers in the country to compose tuba quartet literature, starting in 1963 when he was first chair tuba in The University of Wisconsin concert band under Professor Raymond Dvorak. Professor Dvorak once asked him to arrange, by ear, the famous London England's, Hoffnung Festival tuba quartet, a Chopin Mazurka. He did so, and it was performed by four BBb tubas at every winter band tour concert that year. It was so successful that he was asked to do a new one each year for the next 3 years.<sup>85</sup>

The uncredited Mazurka arrangement in Keathley's document does not match Anderson's arrangement (see Fig. 5), and may in fact be a facsimile of Abrams' unpublished original arrangement.

Two early collections of quartet arrangements, published in 1931 and 1933, can be played by four tubas even though the pieces are simple, generic arrangements for any four bass clef instruments.<sup>86</sup> The first compositions of works written expressly for the tuba quartet are by British composers Eric Ball and Kenneth Cook. Eric Ball's Quartet for Tubas (1950) and Friendly Giants (1961)<sup>87</sup> are both two movement compositions scored for four tubas, where the E-flat bass tubas are the first and third voices while the B-flat contrabasses are the second and fourth.<sup>88</sup> Kenneth Cook's Introduction and Rondino (1951) is scored for two tenor tubas and two contrabass

During the 1960s, tuba players began accepting full-time teaching positions at American universities. Rex Connor led the way at the University of Kentucky in 1960, followed in 1961 by William Bell at Indiana University. The tuba ensemble also took root at this time under the guidance of Constance Weldon (1960, University of Miami), William Bell (1964, Indiana University), and R. Winston Morris (1967, Tennessee Technological University).<sup>91</sup> These tuba studios featured large ensembles that frequently doubled parts on trios, quartets, and larger works. Through a number of conferences, symposiums, and composition competitions, the tuba ensemble began to develop a rich and varied repertoire of transcriptions and original works.

The University of Miami ensemble met for seven years until it was given formal recognition with a course number and two hours of credit in 1967. In September of the same year, the University of Miami School of Music and the Tuba Society of Miami sponsored the International Tuba Ensemble Composition Contest. The competition was adjudicated by William Bell, Arnold Jacobs, and Constance Weldon. As a result of this contest, fifty-six new works were added to the tuba ensemble repertoire, many of which were scored for four parts. Notable winners included the: Tuba Quartet by Frank Lynn Payne (First Prize; $200), the Serenade for Four Tubas by William Presser (Third Prize; $50), and Tubafour by George Heussenstamm (Special Award; $50).<sup>92</sup> The University of Miami Tuba Ensemble went on to perform at the Mid-West National Band and Orchestra Clinic in Chicago in 1969.<sup>93</sup>

William Bell founded a tuba ensemble at Indiana University in the fall of 1964.<sup>94</sup> The ensemble met informally and initially struggled with the lack of literature, even going so far as to perform the “Scherzo” of Hindemith’s Sonata for Bass Tuba (1955), with approximately a dozen students playing the solo in unison with piano accompaniment.<sup>95</sup> Bell’s successor at Indiana University was Harvey Phillips who brought the ensemble to new prominence with his Octubafest (an obvious nod to the German Oktoberfest) and Tuba Christmas events. These events, launched in 1973 and 1974 respectively, have done much to promote the tuba ensemble through public outreach.<sup>96</sup> Octubafest was Phillips' effort to introduce new students in his studio and the public to the performance craft of the upperclassmen.<sup>97</sup>

Phillips dedicated the Tuba Christmas event to his mentor and predecessor, Bill Bell, who was born on Christmas Day in 1902.<sup>98</sup>

Through the legendary William J. Bell we reflect on our heritage and honor all great artists/teachers whose legacy has given us high performance standards, well structured pedagogy, professional integrity, personal values and a camaraderie envied by all other instrumentalists. The first TUBACHRISTMAS was conducted by the late Paul Lavalle in New York City's Rockefeller Plaza Ice Rink on Sunday, December 22, 1974. Traditional Christmas music performed at the first TUBACHRISTMAS was arranged by American composer Alec Wilder who ironically died on Christmas Eve, 1980.<sup>99</sup>

Alec Wilder wrote nineteen arrangements for the first event.<sup>100</sup> Tuba Christmas concerts occasionally feature ensembles upwards of 200 performers.<sup>101</sup>

The university with the most significant influence on the tuba ensemble is the Tennessee Technological University Tuba Ensemble (TTTE) under the direction of Morris, who exported the pedagogy and performance ideas gained in graduate school at Indiana University to TTTE. Richard Perry cataloged the ensemble's history through

Morris is responsible for the push to catalogue and annotate tuba literature as published in The Tuba Music Guide, The Tuba Source Book, and Guide to the Tuba Repertoire: The New Tuba Source Book. Some of Morris’s accomplishments include his nearly forty-five year teaching career at the Tennessee Technological University; twenty-five recordings; seven performances at Carnegie Hall; numerous commissions, dedications, and student compositions for the TTTE; a PBS documentary recounting his work Tuba U: Bass Profundo; and the hundreds of alumni Morris taught throughout his tenure. Charles A. McAdams and Richard H. Perry, Morris’ students, published The Tennessee Tech Tuba Ensemble and R. Winston Morris: A 40th Anniversary Retrospective, an exhaustive work that recounts the growth and development of this world-renowned program.<sup>102</sup>

With the establishment of these three vanguard university programs (University of Miami, Tennessee Technological University, and Indiana University), the literature for tuba ensemble and the awareness of the tuba community grew throughout American schools of music. In addition to the rise of these university studio programs, instrumentalists began developing international organizations to further promote the interests of their profession.

Harvey Phillips hosted the First International Tuba Symposium-Workshop at Indiana University in May of 1973. He dedicated the event to his mentor Bill Bell.<sup>103</sup> The five-day event was devoted to “redefining the role of the tuba, reshaping the image of the tuba and tubist, exploring new directions in techniques and performance, improving methods and teaching materials, generating new compositions, and expanding performance opportunities.”<sup>104</sup> Gunther Schuller’s Five Moods was an eleven minute original composition for tuba quartet written for this event. Schuller wrote the following regarding the work:

Taking it to be a basic assumption that a composer in any piece wishes to communicate through the language of music some thoughts, ideas, philosophy, moods, states of mind or emotion, there also can be from time to time subsidiary purposes which also motivate a composition. In the case of Five Moods, one crucial factor was the passing of William Bell, the first great American artist on the tuba and the mentor and teacher of many of today’s finest tubists. Indeed, Five Moods, dedicated to Mr. Bell’s memory, tries to capture in vignette portraits the different characteristic traits of this remarkable man.

In addition, as a composer who also is a brass player, I always welcome the opportunity to write challenging, serious music for these instruments and particularly for an instrument like the tuba which has for so many years suffered from stereotyping at the hands of composers and has generally been considered an “underdog” instrument, not regarded as capable of a full range of musical expression. But is it precisely Bill Bell’s artistry and teaching which gave that particular myth the lie. In a real sense, his legacy is the wealth of literature the tuba can now boast and the inspiration he has given to men like Harvey Phillips, who suggested that I write this piece for the first International Tuba symposium-Workshop (held in Bloomington, Indiana) and who carries on in Mr. Bell’s tradition.<sup>105</sup>

Harvey Phillips reported that approximately 150 tuba compositions were written as a result of the symposium.<sup>106</sup>

Harvey Phillips's was also the director of the First International Brass Congress (1976) held in Montreux, Switzerland.<sup>107</sup> With longtime friend and jazz euphoniumist Rich Matteson, he formed a tuba-euphonium jazz group (named the Matteson-Phillips Tubajazz Consort) that gave its first performance at the festival.<sup>108</sup> The group featured three euphoniums, three tubas, and a rhythm section. The lineup of the group changed over time and included: Rich Matteson, Ashley Alexander, Buddy Baker, euphoniums; Harvey Phillips, Dan Perantoni, Winston Morris, tubas; Jack Petersen, guitar; Dan Haerle, piano; Rufus Reid, bass; and, Ed Soph, drums.<sup>109</sup> This group paved the way for other ensembles, such as the Modern Jazz Tuba Project<sup>110</sup> and Heavy Tuba,<sup>111</sup> which followed in the 1990s and 2000s. The Matteson-Phillips Tubajazz Consort released two recordings, The Matteson-Phillips Tubajazz Consort – Live! and Superhorns, with the Harvey Phillips Foundation and Richmond A. Professional instrumental associations also formed in the early 1970s, which furthered the promotion of their respective instruments. The Tubists Universal Brotherhood Association (TUBA) was a natural product of the growing international

- To expand performance and employment opportunities.
- To enhance the image and role of our instruments and performers.
- To explore pedagogical approaches through new teaching resources.
- To promote activity in new instrument design.
- To generate new compositions for the tuba and euphonium.
- To explore new directions in technique.
- To establish and maintain appropriate libraries of recorded and printed materials.
- To encourage tuba-euphonium workshops and conferences.
- To publish a journal.
- To maintain a publishing company.<sup>113</sup>

The Tuba-Euphonium Press is the ITEA's sheet music publishing company. It published 165 of the 1,236 works in the GTR catalogue of tuba quartets.

The growth of repertoire and in the number of ensembles also led to a growth in the number of recordings. The earliest group to produce significant recordings of original works for tuba quartet was the New York Tuba Quartet. Scott Watson, Professor of Tuba-Euphonium at Kansas University, recalls "back in the 1970's there was the New York Tuba Quartet which may have kind of started everything. That group wasn't long lived, but it was very important in terms of showing what people could do and they performed a great deal back in the seventies, part of the early eighties.<sup>114</sup> The quartet was founded by Toby Hanks, Steven Johns, Sam Pilafian, and Tony Price. Their first recording was Tubby's Revenge in 1976 on the Crystal Records label. John Stevens said the following in an interview with Christopher Lair:

When I arrived at Yale for graduate school (1973-75) I began composing for multiple tubas because we had a small group of players there that were very interested in this. The New York Tuba Quartet had recently started up, and Toby Hanks was my teacher at Yale. Chamber music was a big focus - with the New York Brass Quintet all on the Yale faculty - so writing tuba quartets was a natural extension of that. I composed Power, Music 4 Tubas and Dances during my two years at Yale. When I graduated with my masters degree, I went to New York City to begin my freelance career. I started a quartet with, among others, Warren Deck (prior to him winning the Houston Symphony position), but I soon joined the New York Tuba Quartet, replacing Tony Price. They had already recorded their album, Tubby's Revenge.<sup>115</sup>

The New York Tuba Quartet also recorded John Steven's tuba quartet Dances on Toby Hanks' collaboration recording Sampler, released in 1979 by Crystal Records.

The tuba community was also active on the west coast in the 1970s. Jim Self accepted the tuba position at the University of Tennessee in 1969 where he became good friends with Winston Morris.<sup>116</sup> Self left Knoxville in 1974 to pursue his career in California, and brought with him the tuba ensemble. Christmases in the Los Angeles area in 1976. Self organized and hosted the third International Tuba Euphonium Conference at USC in 1978.<sup>117</sup> Self joined other noted studio musicians, Tommy Johnson and Don Waldrop, along with Roger Bobo of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, to create the Los Angeles Tuba Quartet. Unfortunately, this group of world class performers did not leave an audio record of their work.

The Atlantic Tuba Quartet, now known as Alchemy, was the self-proclaimed first American euphonium-tuba quartet.<sup>118</sup> Founded in 1976, the quartet was comprised of four members of the United States Coast Guard Band (USCG Band): David Werden and Denis Winter, euphonium; and, Gary Buttery and David Chaput, tuba.<sup>119</sup> Euphonic Sounds, the group's first album, was released on Golden Crest Records in 1976. Alchemy self-released the recordings Village Dances in 1997 and Live in Jever in 2010.<sup>120</sup> The ensemble founded Whaling Music Publishers in 1977, which published forty-four of the works listed in Appendix H, and later sold the publishing rights to Cimarron Music Productions.<sup>121</sup> Even today, Alchemy's membership consists of members who were associated with the U.S. Coast Guard Band: Dan Vinson and James E. Following the establishment of the USCG Euphonium-Tuba Quartet, the other U.S. Armed Forces premier and regular bands soon adopted the ensemble as a component of their musical mission. The premier ensembles included the U.S. Navy Band Tuba/Euphonium Quartet (founded 1985),<sup>122</sup> the “President’s Own” Marine Corps Band Tuba and Euphonium Quartet, the U.S. Army Band “Pershing’s Own” Tuba-Euphonium Quartet, the West Point Tuba Quartet (founded 1988),<sup>123</sup> and the U.S. Air Force Band Tuba/Euphonium Quartet.

The U.S. Army Band (TUSAB) has hosted annual Tuba-Euphonium conferences since 1983,<sup>124</sup> typically drawing between 600 and 800 attendees.<sup>125</sup> The event arose from a desire to increase performance opportunities for military tuba and euphonium players in the Washington, D.C. area and to “enhance the image of military musicians and military bands.”<sup>126</sup> The conference draws from a wealth of professional musicians to create the Armed Forces Tuba-Euphonium Ensemble. Winston Morris conducted the Armed Forces Massed Tuba-Euphonium Ensemble and a select group of mainly principal players from the premier military bands.<sup>127</sup> In 1988, the select ensemble

While an emphasis on serious music was an impetus for many founding tuba quartets, some groups, such as the Mighty Tubadours, did not neglect the public's comedic perception of the tuba ensemble. Through their television performances and light repertoire, the Tubadours became one of the most well-known early tuba ensembles. Albert Harclerode, a tubist who studied with Roger Bobo, James Self, and Rodger Vaughan, was a co-founder of the Tubadours. The group played at Disneyland from 1975 through 1986.<sup>131</sup> The Tubadours appeared on The Gong Show twice in 1977, winning first place prize on their first appearance and second place on their second.<sup>132</sup> Ya, Ve Iss Da Mighty Tubadours, released in 1978, and The Mighty Tubadours Merry Christmas Album, released in 1984, were combined in the 1991 compact disc Ve Iss Da

The Tubadours were founded in 1975 at California State University Fullerton under the guidance of James Self and Rodger Vaughan. Founding members included Frank Berry, Scott Lycan, Ron Davis and Bert Harcлерode who from Thanksgiving of 1975 through New Year's 1976 entertained guests at Disneyland.

In 1978 the quartet of Berry, Timothy Reilly, David Lusher and Harcлерode recorded the first of two projects for Crystal Records "Ve Iss Da Mighty Tubadours" a recording that hit the brass charts rather than platinum. In 1982 the quartet was invited to record its second LP disc for Crystal using material from its first performances at Disneyland resulting in "The Mighty Tubadour's Merry Christmas Album." ...In its 36 year history Tubadour personnel has included nearly forty of the finest low brass artists including today misters [Danny] Garcia and [Jason] Gilliam.<sup>134</sup>

The prevalence of professional tuba quartets grew in the 1980s. This growth was due to the increasing body of quartet literature, rising public awareness of the tuba quartet, sponsorship by tuba manufacturers, and reduction in the production cost of professional digital sound recordings. During the 1980s professional ensembles also became more prevalent in England, France, Germany, and Japan, rather than being largely confined to the United States.<sup>135</sup> Professional instrument makers began sponsoring tuba quartets beginning with the Melton Tuba Quartett in 1987. Meinl-Weston sponsored the Melton Tuba Quartett to promote Meinl's Melton tuba brand. This collaboration between tuba manufacturers and artists prompted the tuba and euphonium manufacturers Miraphone and Willson to sponsor professional quartets of their own.<sup>136</sup>

The evolution of the tuba quartet was fostered by the establishment of American university tuba studio ensembles. These student ensembles, such as the tuba ensemble at Tennessee Technological University, promoted the tuba quartet by commissioning original compositions, performing concert series like Octubafest and Tubachristmas, participating in chamber music competitions, and releasing recordings. As the prevalence of student ensembles grew, the graduates went on to found new professional ensembles, some of which were associated with military bands and sponsored by instrument manufacturers. Additionally, these professional ensembles produced recordings that experienced greater public exposure than those of the student ensembles.<sup>137</sup> Blaine Cunningham's forthcoming dissertation (University of Iowa) provides additional detail concerning the history of the tuba quartet.<sup>138</sup>

CHAPTER FOUR

OVERVIEW OF TUBA QUARTET REPERTOIRE

Each piece that a composer writes is indeed the solution to a problem, but the problem is an abstract musical one and factors such as acoustics, texture, intonation, and range (as you suggest) are extremely minor considerations. I might speculate that some composers writing for tuba or tuba ensemble might tend to be cutesy. However, my approach is to consider the instrument and ensemble as a viable chamber medium and go from there.<sup>139</sup>

The purpose of this overview is to address preconceptions about the tuba quartet repertoire. Because of the negative connotations often associated with the tuba family, many believe that the repertoire consists of a small body of music and is concentrated on genres in which tubists traditionally participate, such as marches and polkas. This chapter analyzes data cataloged in the “Music for Multiple Tubas: Four Parts” in the Guide to the Tuba Repertoire: The New Tuba Source Book (GTR). The data considered fell into the following five categories: prevalence of composers, arrangers, and publishers; year of publication; and, difficulty level rating.

The catalog, included in Appendix H, is the most comprehensive of its kind and includes works published through 2004. The tuba quartet chapter is edited by Kenyon Wilson, who continued the work begun by Charles McAdams in the 1996 edition. The GTR contains over 1,200 works and is organized as follows:

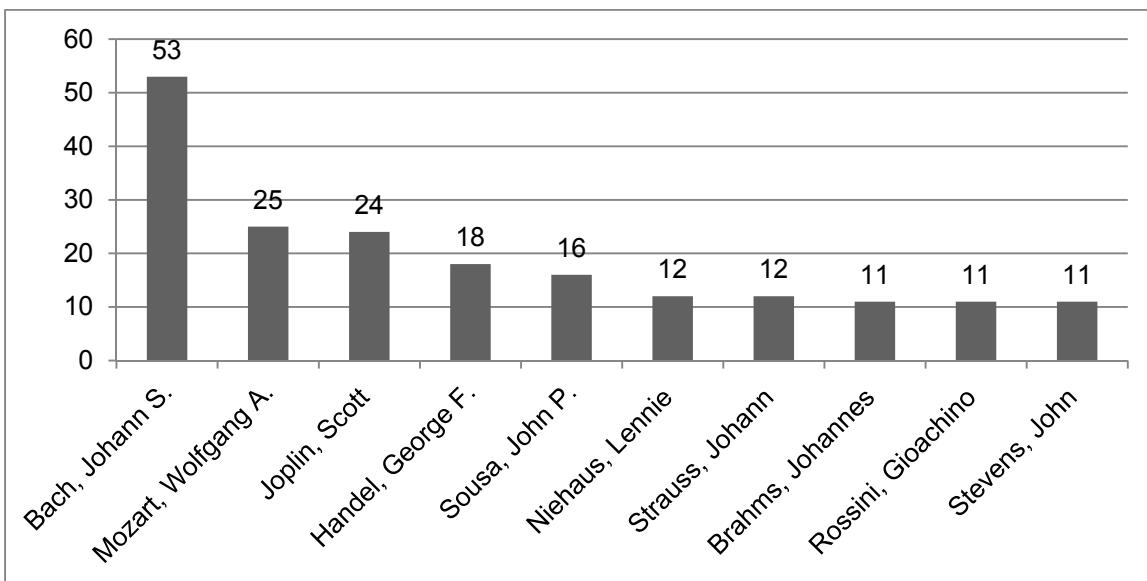

- Name of Composer – last name first.
- Title – as it appears in on the music.
- Arranger/Transcriber/Editor – first name first in the GTR, last name first in Appendix H.
- Publisher/Source – the contact information can be found in Appendix G.
- Date – copyright date for published works or date of composition for manuscripts.

- Price – not included in Appendix H; however the prices listed in the GTR are included in the online catalog.<sup>140</sup>
- Duration – expressed in minutes (collections and compilations are expressed in page numbers).
- Level – subjective assignment of the level of difficulty from I (Beginner) to V (Professional).
- Range – see Appendix H for system of octave designations.
- Movements – specific names where applicable, or numbered.
- Commission/Dedication/Annotation – not included in Appendix H, however this information is included in the online catalog.
- Recordings – see Appendix F.
- Tape Accompaniments – not included in Appendix H.
- References – not included in Appendix H. This category cross references citations with other works including: French Music for Low Brass Instruments by J. Mark Thompson and Jeff Lemke; Program Notes for the Solo Tuba edited by Gary Bird; and other chapters within the GTR.<sup>141</sup>

Table 2. Top ten composers of original or arranged works for tuba quartet.

Of the 1,236 entries in the GTR, 980 list a composer. The remaining entries are either unattributed or relate to compilations or traditional works (holiday tunes, folk songs, etc.). There are 471 unique listings in the composer category, which include sixteen entries with collaborating composers (e.g. “Lennon, John, and Paul McCartney” or “Key, Francis Scott, and John Stafford Smith”). Many of the composers on the list are well-known composers of instrumental chamber music for other ensembles, vocal chamber music, or military marches for wind band. The two unexpected members are Scott Joplin and Lennie Niehaus. Joplin is noted for his ragtime piano works. There are four arrangements of both The Easy Winners and The Entertainer. Lennie Niehaus is known for his work as a composer of original works for film and television, and an arranger and alto saxophonist with the Stan Kenton Orchestra. Eight of Niehaus’s twelve original tuba quartets have been recorded. John Stevens, the tenth member of the list, is a tuba pedagogue, performer, and composer. His original works for tuba quartet have been recorded by Sotto Voce on the album “Viva Voce: The Complete Quartets of John Stevens.” J. S. Bach’s fifty-three works account for about four percent of the quartets in the GTR. The most frequently arranged works are the “Air” from Suite No. 3 in D; “Contrapunctus IX”; Fugue in G minor “The Little”; and, Jesu, Joy of Man’s Desiring. Of the works listed in the discography with a composer, Bach is ranked third among composers behind John Stevens and traditional/anonymous.

Eight hundred and seven entries in the GTR list an arranger, transcriber, or editor. The remaining entries are either original compositions or lack data. There are 182 unique listings in the arranger category including ten entries with collaborating arrangers.

Paul Schmidt, who is responsible for about six percent of the quartet arrangements, is an electrical engineer and freelance musician.<sup>142</sup> He is a serpent and ophicleide enthusiast,<sup>143</sup> who self-publishes arrangements through Heavy Metal Music. Heavy Metal Music also publishes tuba quartets by Barton Cummings, Simon Proctor, Daniel Heiman, Edmund Ferguson, Clifford Bevan, and Keith Ryder.<sup>144</sup>

Table 3. Most prolific tuba quartet arrangers.

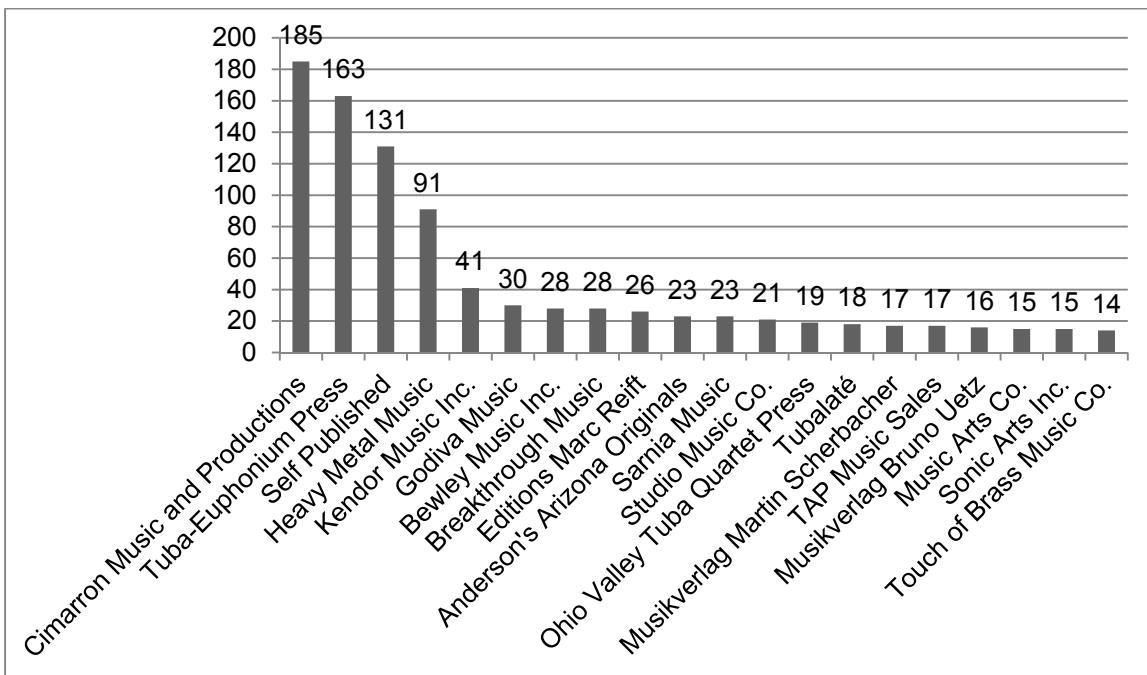

Many of the arrangers are also tuba and euphonium performers and teachers. David Werden (Alchemy/Atlantic Euphonium-Tuba Quartet), Gail Robertson (Tubafours), Ray Grim (TubaMeisters), John Stevens (New York Tuba Quartet), and Gary Butterly (Alchemy/Atlantic) are but a few of the notable musicians whose performance experience informs their arrangements.

Table 4. Prominent publishers of tuba quartets.

The GTR provides publisher information for 1,218 of the 1,236 entries. There are 138 publishers, many of whom have contact information, which can be found in Appendix G. Four publishers account for about forty-six percent of the quartets published.

Cimarron Music and Productions of Salem, Connecticut, published 141 quartets through 2004. Whaling Music Publishers, founded in 1977 by members of the Atlantic Tuba Quartet, sold the rights to their complete catalog to Cimarron on July 6, 1996.<sup>145</sup> The forty-four works listed in the GTR under Whaling were moved to Cimarron in this analysis, bringing the Cimarron total to 185 published works.

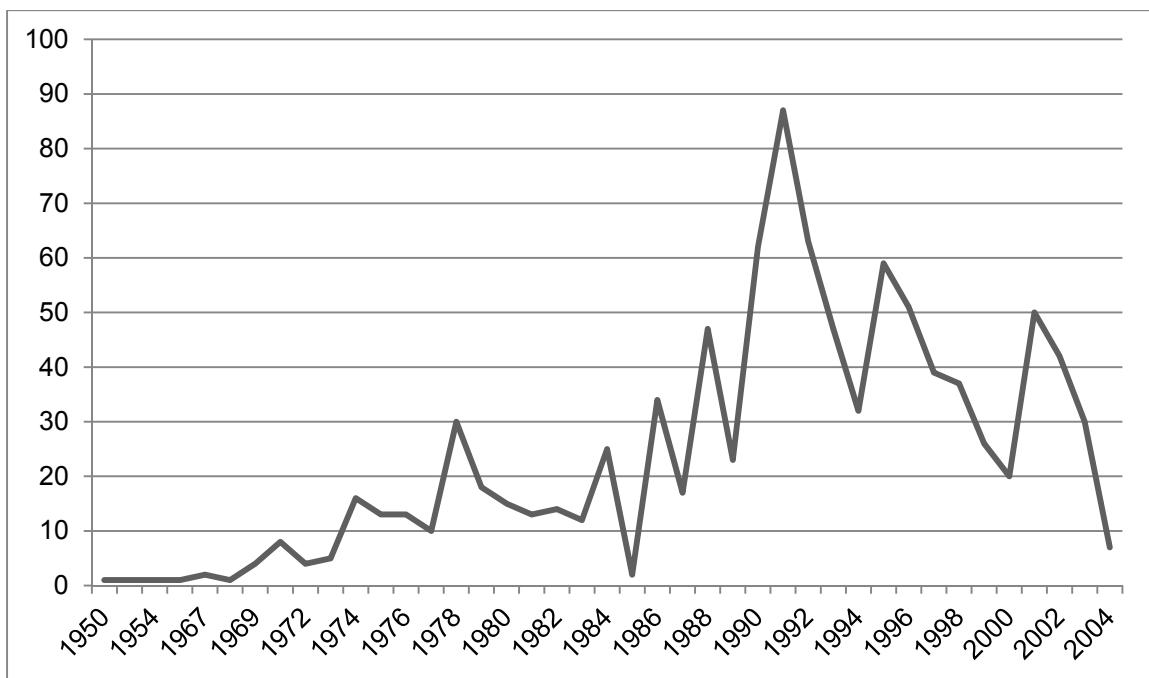

As of 2004, the Tuba-Euphonium Press was the second most prolific publisher of tuba quartet repertoire. The International Tuba-Euphonium Association founded the

Tuba-Euphonium Press to fulfill one of the association's stated objectives: "to maintain a publishing company."<sup>146</sup>

The third largest group of publishers, categorized as self-published, is listed in the GTR as "available from the arranger," "available from the composer," or by restating the name of the composer or arranger in the publisher's field. Many of these works may have been acquired by a publishing company or sheet music distributor since 2004. The prevalence of self-published works is likely related to the emergence of computerized music notation software in the 1990s (e.g. Finale and Sibelius).<sup>147</sup>

Table 5. Number of tuba quartet publications from 1950 through 2004.

The GTR provides the date of publication or manuscript for 984 entries. The 1931 and 1933 quartets are omitted from Table 5, as they were quartets written for unspecified instrumentation. As a result, the earliest work (Eric Ball's *Quartet for Tuba*s) dates from 1950.

For many entries, more than one date is considered. Some entries have earlier manuscript dates that are included in the catalog, even though the works were later acquired by a sheet music publisher and given a copyright date. When entries have conflicting dates, the earlier of the two dates was chosen for Appendix H and Table 5.

At first glance, the number of publications appears to have peaked in 1991 with eighty-seven publications, and declined through 2004 to seven. This tapering may be explained by examining the submission process for the two editions of the TSB. The 1996 edition of the Tuba Source Book accepted submissions for review through July of 1993. Furthermore, the works reviewed in the 1996 edition of TSB were largely left unedited in the second edition.<sup>148</sup> In the GTR, the submission deadline was January 2005, which may also account for the drop off in reviewed works from 2004. The drop in works published in 1985 may be attributed to various factors ranging from incorrect data entry to the selection of alternate publication dates for inclusion in the GTR.

The editors of the GTR provide difficulty ratings for 943 tuba quartets. The pieces were given a rating that is notated in Roman numerals from I to V or a combination of two levels. The level describes the “attributes and requirements of the music more than the expected skills of the [ensemble].”<sup>149</sup> The following definitions guided level selection by McAdams and Wilson:<sup>150</sup>

Table 8. Difficulty level ratings assigned by McAdams and Wilson.

A significant segment of quartets are written for professional ensembles with over four hundred quartets rated IV or higher. The graph reveals a scarcity of work written for beginning tuba and euphonium students. Matthew Simmons's 2005 D.M.A dissertation addresses the demand for more works for beginning tuba quartets.<sup>151</sup> His document is a collection of tuba quartet arrangements in varying styles written for young student ensembles.

One unexpected result of analyzing the GTR quartet annotations was the discovery of approximately sixty works that include additional (often optional) instruments, voice, and narrations. Examples of supplemental instruments include: percussion, rhythm section (guitar, piano, bass), vocals, flutes, chimes, marimba, vibraphone, duck call, harp, and narrator.<sup>152</sup> These range from the simple inclusion of tambourine to James Garrett's Songs in the Fight against Rum (Songs of Might to Cheer the Fight in the Blight of Liquordom)<sup>153</sup> which provides the following instrumentation: two euphoniums, two tubas, tenor solo, barbershop quartet, mixed chorus, female speaker, male speaker, country band, chimes, collection takers, and three clarinets.

The tuba quartet repertoire represented in the GTR is diverse, challenging, and still growing; however, the quantity of original compositions for tuba quartet falls far short of the original works for brass quintet, the most well-known brass chamber ensemble. The brass quintet has greater overall range and timbral variety compared to other brass chamber groups, which may account for the medium's success.

The American Brass Quintet hosts a brass quintet database on its website that includes a listing of original works published for quintet since 1950.<sup>154</sup> This database, which is in some regards analogous to the GTR's, currently lists 1,596 original works. While the quintet database includes about six more years of data than the GTR's, a search of the years 2004 through 2011 yields only thirty unique results. Consequently, for roughly the same period (1950 through 2004) original brass quintets outnumber original tuba quartets by nearly a four to one margin. This result is expected considering the higher public visibility of the brass quintet compared to the tuba quartet. Nevertheless, for an ensemble with a much lower public profile, the tuba quartet repertoire's growth is remarkable. Similar comparisons can not be drawn between other brass chamber groups (horn, trombone, or mixed brass quartet) and the tuba quartet because no comparable database of repertoire is available.

CHAPTER FIVE

AN ANNOTATED EXAMINATION OF SELECTED REPRESENTATIVE WORKS FOR TUBA QUARTET

Since the writing of Tubafour, I have come to respect the tuba as an instrument capable of noble expression, great power, virtuosic agility, wide dynamic range – a true melody instrument as well as a fundamental bass instrument. I was attracted by the sound character per se, and further intrigued by the effect of the sound of several -- four to be specific -- together.<sup>155</sup>

The purpose of this chapter is to introduce the reader to specific selections of tuba quartet repertoire that are representative of the broad trends outlined in chapter four. The selection of musical excerpts in this chapter is based on the following criteria:

- The work is representative of a broad range of styles and time periods.
- The work illustrates a specific pedagogical or performance issue.
- The work is by a prominent composer or arranger as determined by the meta-analysis on the GTR works (see the findings in Chapter Four: Overview of Tuba Quartet Literature).
- When possible, the work is selected from the GTR's "Music for Multiple Tubas: Four Parts" chapter.
- The work was available to the author with permission from the copyright holder.

The works are organized alphabetically by composer, then title. The selections reflect the 4:1 ratio between arrangements and original works demonstrated in the meta-analysis of the GTR catalog in the previous chapter. Each entry includes a table, musical excerpts, and discussion of the entry.

TABLE: lists bibliographic information, the specific range of each part, the GTR difficulty rating, and commission or dedication information where applicable. The recording field may include other arrangements and are labeled parenthetically.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: This quartet is a transcription of a solo keyboard work in C minor. Roberts scores the work for four tubas but further specifies the instrumentation as follows: Tuba 1 (euphonium), Tuba 2 (euphonium or bass tuba), Tuba 3 (bass or contra-bass), and Tuba 4 (contra-bass). Roberts provides detailed articulation and dynamic markings for performance interpretation. Michael Howard of the British Tuba Quartet also has an arrangement of Solfeggiotto (see Appendix H).

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The challenge is to produce even, flowing sixteenth note arpeggiations at a brisk tempo.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: The exchange of voices is one of the primary challenges of performing this work. Excellent subdivision, complimentary tones, and an understanding of how the four parts pass the running line to one another will improve the performance of this work. Roberts overlaps the exchanges, helping maintain the flow of the line. Simple exercises that address voice exchanges are: play each part in time on a unison pitch, clap the rhythms, or articulate the passage off the instruments by singing 'Ta' or 'Da'. This reduces the musical demands on the performers by eliminating pitch and finger technique.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: This work, originally in D major (BWV 1068), is one of the best-known works for strings of the Baroque era. The work, marked Adagio, is notated in 4/4 time, but the pulse is felt in the eighth note subdivision. This quartet has also been arranged by David Werden, Stephen Wood, and Øystein Baadsvik (see Appendix H).

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: C4 is also out of the range of many young contrabass tubists.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: The work provides an opportunity to stress the importance of vibrato, dynamic contrast through repeated sections, and resolutions of dissonances. The level II difficulty is a little deceptive in that the work requires great dynamic control, a mature understanding of phrasing, and challenging octave leaps in the bottom voice. This selection also provides an opportunity to discuss ritardando. Following the smallest division of the beat is a good guide for ensembles to properly execute a ritardando. In the final measure of the piece, the last two sixteenth notes of the first voice (the smallest division of the beat) will cue the arrival of the final chord.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Bist du bei mir, from the Anna Magdalena Notebook (BWV 508), is attributed to Bach but may be by Gottfried Heinrich Stölzel.<sup>156</sup> Werden arranges this simple Baroque melody so that the top two parts alternate statements of the opening phrase.

156. Janet T. Wasserman, "Bist du bei mir," An Independent Scholar's Voice, <http://www.janetwasserman.com/bist-du-bei-mir.html>, 2000 (accessed July 6, 2011).

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The top voice is notated in treble clef transposed to the key of B-flat. The third part may be played on euphonium. General guidelines for voicing the tuba quartet are as follows: maintain a space of at least a perfect fifth between the bottom two voices when possible, maintain bass motion that is similar to the original work when arranging, and follow typical four-part voice leading when resolving dissonances. This excerpt shows the close scoring that can be problematic for intonation and clarity. Given a fixed melody, bass line, and harmony, Werden was left with two parts to voice this passage. This leads to the closed voicing of the A diminished chord in m. 14 and the irregular leaps in the second voice at m. 17. Alternate orchestrations (see Fig.9) result in different problems as a consequence of these compromises.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Werden's manuscript is clear and legible, with numerous dynamic markings and performance indications.

The musical score consists of four staves, each representing a tuba part (T1, T2, T3, T4). The key signature is B-flat major (two flats). The time signature is 3/4. Measure 14 begins with a forte dynamic. The first measure (measures 1-3) consists of eighth-note patterns. Measure 4 starts with a dynamic marking 'mf'. Measures 5-6 show eighth-note patterns. Measure 7 starts with a dynamic marking '(Rit. 2nd time)'. Measures 8-9 show eighth-note patterns. Measure 10 starts with a dynamic marking '(Fine)'. The score ends with a final dynamic marking '(Fine)'.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Bach's polyphonic writing is often successfully transcribed for brass chamber ensembles. This work, from The Art of the Fugue (BWV 1080), is a double fugue in the original key of D minor. Rauch's arrangement is sparsely edited with very few dynamics or expression markings. The primary difficulty is in maintaining the transparency and independence of the lines with four low instruments. Tuba quartets achieve clarity through precise articulation, rhythmic emphasis, and observation of consistent note lengths.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Miscounting rests, ties, and dotted notes are typical errors in polyphonic works.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Performing a fugue requires an understanding of the rhythmic and harmonic interplay of all of the parts. Proper preparation of individual parts and score study increase the confidence of the group. As observed in the excerpt of Bist du bei mir excerpt, the voices in “Contrapunctus IX” are orchestrated close to one another. In this case, the arranger’s voicing are limited because of the nature and intricacy of the counterpoint.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: John Stevens is a renowned composer and arranger of tuba quartet music. His selection of three Bruckner motets includes Vexilla Regis, Locus Iste, and Pange Lingua. These vocal works transcribe well for four tubas and require exceptional intonation and dynamic control.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Challenging dynamic contrasts.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Steven's arrangement includes several indications of expression, phrasing, and dynamics. Approaching the work vocally with respect to the releases is essential. There are tutti releases every two measures in the above excerpt. In addition to the releases, entrances can be problematic. The clarity of the ensemble's entrances will improve when its member rhythmically prepare the preceding breath.

The musical score consists of four staves, each representing a tuba (T1, T2, T3, T4). The time signature is 4/4 throughout. The key signature is B-flat major (two flats). Measure 1: T1 has a sustained note with dynamic p. Measure 2: T2 has a sustained note with dynamic p. Measure 3: T3 has a sustained note with dynamic p. Measure 4: T4 has a sustained note with dynamic p. Measure 5: All staves play eighth-note patterns. T1 starts with mf, followed by f and mp. Measure 6: All staves play eighth-note patterns. T2 starts with mf, followed by f and mp. Measure 7: All staves play eighth-note patterns. T3 starts with mf, followed by f and mp. Measure 8: All staves play eighth-note patterns. T4 starts with mf, followed by f and p. Measure 9: All staves play eighth-note patterns. T1 starts with mf, followed by f and mp.

As with many vocal works, understanding the lyrics will help form the instrumentalists' musical interpretation.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: In addition to being a composer and arranger, Forbes is also a member of the tuba quartet Sotto Voce. Forbes's score is meticulously marked and provides the ensemble with detailed textural information. The cues include indications for solo and duet passages as well as voices pairings. Consequences has a notable introduction, requiring the players to "rip" through the harmonic series of their instrument to an approximate pitch (see Fig. 13). The detailed rhythmic figures, frequent shifts in meter and tempo, and contrasting melodic sections make for an effective and exciting composition.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Rhythmic and range challenges throughout the work. Probably better classified as a level IV-V work.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Consequences begins with an interesting performance effect, which Forbes describes as a valve rip. The effect is performed by slurring rapidly up through the harmonic series. Pressing down more valves, and playing through the higher harmonics, enhances the effect.

The following excerpt from the lyrical section of the work demonstrates the requirement for performers to know the ensemble texture. The ensemble should accentuate the melodic figures, dissonances, and rhythmic motion, and subordinate the supporting lines with longer note values. Fortunately, Forbes's instructions of dynamics and phrasing serve as a guide to the performers. By observing the contrasting dynamics (see m. 109 and 115) the prominent figures will sound above the other voices.

The musical score consists of two staves of music for four voices (T1, T2, T3, T4). The top staff (mm. 107-112) shows a 'Slowly' tempo with a dynamic marking 'solo' over T1's part. The bottom staff (mm. 113-116) shows a 'move ahead' instruction above the first measure. Both staves feature dynamic markings such as p, pp, mp, f, and fp. The voices are layered, with T1 having the highest pitch and T4 the lowest. Measure 107 includes a dynamic marking '3' above some notes.

Fig. 14. Consequences, mm. 107-116. Quarter note = 72.

The final excerpt below shows the complex rhythmic interactions between the voices. Forbes layers the voices three times, building the intensity of the finale. The layered sections (mm. 181-182, 185-186, and 188) provide opportunities for the ensemble to reset the dynamic to a softer volume. This effect is also heightened by the fortepiano markings in mm. 188 and 189. The (1/4) marking in m. 181 indicates that the first and fourth valves should be used for the D-flat4, which may simplify the pattern for some euphoniumists.

Finally, the ensemble must strive to achieve accuracy of articulation. The articulations connote both emphasis and duration. Forbes precisely notated the articulations to create a difference between marcato, accent with staccato, and accent with tenuto markings.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Roundtree's arrangement is similar to the well-known Robert King version for brass quintet. Roundtree provides rehearsal letters, breath and phrase markings, and many dynamic indications to create terraced dynamics. The slur markings are also consistent with other modern brass editions (Paul Schmidt also arranged this work, see Appendix H). Similar works from this period include Skip Gray's arrangement of the Canzona per sonare No. 4 (recorded by the Melton Tuba Quartette on Lazy Elephants), and Peter Rauch's arrangement of Canzona "La Spiritata" (recorded by the British Tuba Quartet on Elite Syncopations).

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Simple syncopations and intermediate ranges.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: The voice entrances should be played prominently to improve the clarity. The running sixteenth-note figure can dynamically follow the rise and fall of the melodic line. Like “Contrapunctus IX,” all of the voices are significant, but not all of the figures are equally important. Lastly, the dotted-eight figures must follow the subdivision established by the constant sixteenths in the other voices (see m. 2).

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Tuba Quartet, Op. 59 is a technically demanding original composition. The work is divided into three movements: Preludium (Vivace, quarter note = 152); Chorale (quarter note = 80); and, Finale (Presto, quarter note = 160). Gates notated the work for euphonium, E-flat tuba (or euphonium), CC tuba, and BB-flat tuba at the request of Mitchell Gershenfeld.<sup>159</sup>

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The tessitura of the fourth part is frequently in the pedal register (the lowest fundamental pitches on the instrument). Inexperienced players will encounter intonation difficulties due to the natural tendencies of tubas pitched in four distinct keys.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: In addition to intonation challenges presented by instruments pitched in four keys, the excerpt below is illustrative of Gates' use of extended diatonic harmonies and non-scalar melodic lines. The extended diatonic harmonies are the D minor seventh and E minor seventh chords found throughout the excerpt. The melody of this chorale movement is more intervallic in character than scalar; contrasting with the typical chorale patterns of eighteenth and nineteenth century chorale lines. Finally, the fourth part is often scored in the lower range of the instrument (mm. 117-121). Articulation, dynamic control, and intonation are problematic in the low register because of the method of tone production, size of the oral cavity, and lack of alternate fingerings.

The musical score consists of two systems of four staves each, representing a Tuba Quartet. The top system begins at measure 109 with dynamics f, mf, and mf. The bottom system begins at measure 117 with dynamics pp, mp, rit., ten., pp, and pp. Both systems feature sustained notes and rhythmic patterns typical of chorale music. Measure 109 includes slurs and grace notes. Measure 117 includes dynamic markings like rit. and ten..

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Thom Ritter George's original work, Tubamobile, highlights the perpetual motion of running eighth note lines that are passed between the four voices. With frequent dramatic dynamic contrasts throughout the work, the piece has the feeling of a machine run amok. The piece builds to a frenzied prestissimo finale featuring chromatically altered material from the beginning of the work.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Presto tempo notated with one beat per measure.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Ensembles should observe the dynamic contrast between mm. 1-3 and 7. The division of the bottom two parts creates the sound of one instrument playing a seamless running line. To practice matching styles, play the figure in the first tuba part in mm. 3 and 4 with both tubas simultaneously. The sustained notes are of secondary importance; the first and second parts should not cover up the rhythmically interesting lower voices.

The musical score consists of four staves, each representing a part labeled T1 through T4. The music is in 2/4 time. The first section (measures 1-9) includes dynamic markings such as ff, sf, and f. The second section (measure 10 onwards) begins with a dynamic ff and continues with sf and f. Measure 10 is highlighted with a rectangular box around the first two measures of Part T1. The score concludes with a final forte dynamic.

As in the first excerpt, there should be equality between the two lower parts.

Also, the two upper parts should agree on the length of the second note of the slurred groups. The final forte piano is made more effective when the three voices achieve the same piano quality and play an even crescendo.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Joplin's ragtime keyboard works are among the most arranged works for tuba quartet cataloged in the GTR. His rags have much in common with the military march form with the addition of distinctive syncopated rhythms and chromatic alterations. The works are typically divided into three repeated sections with the third section modulating to the subdominant, just as in many march trios. The popular appeal of Joplin's syncopated rhythms and jaunty melodies ensure that his works have a significant place in the tuba quartet repertoire.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Picher's arrangement passes the melodic material through all of the voices creating composite rhythms and melodies. Composite rhythms are the durations produced by combining all of the voices (see mm. 5-6 below).

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Syncopated rhythms are the hallmark of ragtime. The syncopations fall on the second and fourth sixteenth notes of the beat. Between the numerous ties and sixteenth-note rests, the rhythms can be difficult to read for musicians unfamiliar with this style of music. Young ensembles should approach these works with an understanding of the rhythmic interplay of the voices and precise subdivision. Rehearse this piece in a slow tempo to work on the rolling groove characteristic of the original piano version.

Musical score for "Elite Syncopations" by S. Joplin, arr. W. Picher, mm. 1-12. The score is for four voices (T1, T2, T3, T4) in 2/4 time, 2 sharps. The music features syncopation and eighth-note patterns. Measure 5 is indicated with a box. Dynamics include f, mf, and v. Measures 11-12 show a change in key signature.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: The marches of Karl L. King, along with John Philip Sousa and Henry Fillmore, are some of the best-known American military marches. The Melody Shop is a perennial euphonium audition excerpt for military and university wind bands because of its prominent eighth-note countermelody at the trio. Werden, a long time euphoniumist with the U.S. Coast Guard Band, chose to split the featured countermelody between the two euphoniums in his arrangement. The first tuba part has the original trio melody.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Some conductors and ensembles perform the work at a circus march tempo, around 168 beats per minute.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Prepare the divided euphonium part as though it is the original unified part.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Mozart's popularity persists in the tuba quartet repertoire, as he is the second-most arranged composer in the GTR. Despite the humorous title, this is an excellent transcription of one of Mozart's best known chamber works, Eine Kleine Nachtmusik. Though the articulation markings in Fletcher's arrangement are not consistent with those in the original string score, these markings help to emphasize the light and playful mood of the piece. Fletcher's instrumentation calls for four tubas but suggests a euphonium for the top voice.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The difficulty that tuba quartets face when performing classical transcriptions is in maintaining the lightness and clarity of the string family, especially with regard to the numerous staccato notes that can at times sound too dry and choppy.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: The excerpt in Fig. 22 demonstrates the quartet's ability to play with a light and refined sound. The slurred two note groups are performed with stress on the first note while deemphasizing the second. Examples of this figure are found throughout the first three measures. Additionally, the dynamic contrasts between forte and piano create intensity in the line. Lastly, with the bottom two parts sharing the same register, the two tubas must work on a clean, but not choppy, detached articulation.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: While the GTR does not claim to be complete, Forbes's arrangement of St. James Infirmary probably should have been included. The solo figures, based on Jack Teagarden's trombone solo, are transcribed with clearly notated jazz ornaments. In addition to the demanding range in the first and fourth voices, this arrangement is rhythmically and stylistically challenging.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: There are numerous solos throughout the work where the musicians must play above the ensemble texture. The ranges, jazz embellishments (growls, bends, half-valve glissandi), and tempo transitions between sections make this one of the more challenging works on this list.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Much like Consequences, Forbes's manuscript is meticulously notated with well-written dynamics and articulations. In the excerpt below, the work transitions from a texture that sounds like group improvisation to a harmonized tutti texture in m. 72. Many times the dynamics of the supporting parts are quieter to reflect their subordinate status. A prime example is in the first measure of the excerpt, where the two solo voices are marked forte, the walking bass line is marked mezzoforte, and the second euphonium is marked piano. These contrasting dynamics help the ensemble to achieve the appropriate balance. The second tuba player should imitate the note lengths of an upright bass.

The musical score consists of two staves of four brass parts (T1, T2, T3, T4) each.

Staff 1 (Rehearsal G):

- Measures 68-71: T1 has sixteenth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and f. T2 has eighth-note patterns with dynamics p, mf, f, and fp. T3 has sixteenth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and f. T4 has eighth-note patterns with dynamics mf and fp.
- Measure 72: T1 has sixteenth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and f. T2 has eighth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and ff. T3 has sixteenth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and ff. T4 has eighth-note patterns with dynamics ff and f.

Staff 2 (Rehearsal H):

- Measures 72-75: T1 has sixteenth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and ff. T2 has eighth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and ff. T3 has sixteenth-note patterns with dynamics f, fp, and ff. T4 has eighth-note patterns with dynamics ff and f.

Performance instructions include "solo" above T2 in measure 71 and "1/2 valve" above T1 in measure 72.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Renwick, composer and horn player, composed Dance for brass quintet in 1973. Dance evokes a Greek folk dance quality by employing asymmetric and mixed meters.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The range of the first euphonium part places Dance outside of the range of most high school players, which may warrant the work a level IV rating. Fortunately, the note (D5) is approached by a scale with a crescendo.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: The asymmetric meters and dynamic swells create the rhythmic interest in Dance. Rehearse this piece in a slow tempo with the eighth-note subdivision improve the lilting rhythms.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Sousa wrote several of the most popular American marches including: The Thunderer, Washington Post, The Liberty Bell, Sempre Fidelis, and of course The Stars and Stripes Forever. Sousa's El Capitan is based on musical selections from his operetta of the same name.<sup>160</sup> This is the earliest Sousa transcription in the GTR. As such, the arrangement is fairly straight-forward. Morris's transcription essentially keeps the integrity of the four parts throughout the work: first voice (melody), second voice (counter melody at rehearsal B, melody at the trio, harmonic support), third voice (a hybrid inner voice part akin to a typical Sousa trombone or horn line), and fourth voice (a standard march bass line throughout). The practice of moving interesting parts around the ensemble came later in the development of the repertoire.

160. Carol A. Hess, "John Philip Sousa's El Capitan: Political Appropriation and the Spanish-American War," in American Music 16, No. 1 (Spring 1998): 1.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Straight forward march arrangement.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Careful subdivision of the eighth rests insures the proper placement of the third triplet. Observe the notated dynamics on the repeated strains.

The musical score for rehearsal B-m. 29 of 'El Capitan' features four staves (T1, T2, T3, T4) in common time (indicated by '8'). The score begins at measure 21. Staff T1 starts with a dynamic 'f' followed by a 'p'. Staff T2 starts with a dynamic 'f'. Staff T3 starts with a dynamic 'p'. Staff T4 starts with a dynamic 'p'. The score continues through measure 25, with staff T1 ending on a dynamic 'f'. The score includes various performance markings such as slurs and crescendos.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Werden takes a different approach from Morris to voicing this popular Sousa march. In each strain, the melodic material passes between the top three parts. The first euphonium carries the melody in the first strain, and the famous piccolo line at the final statement of the trio. The second euphonium is responsible for the trio melody and harmonic support. The melody of the second strain and the trombone countermelody at the grandioso are covered by the first tuba part, while the second tuba plays the bass line throughout. This division of voices shifts the focus of the audience's attention from instrument to instrument.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Demanding first euphonium part at the trio. The trills (especially the trill between D-flat4 and E-flat4) are challenging to reproduce with a piccolo-like quality. The first tuba part would best be played on a bass tuba due to the extended high register playing.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: The excerpt in Fig. 28 shows the division of material between the four voices. Each of the four lines represents four primary lines of the original; as such, no one part should dominate the texture. The first euphonium should model its articulation and style after the piccolo. The first tuba part is high because it is notated at the pitch level of the original trombone counter line.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: John Stevens is one of the most significant contributors to the tuba quartet repertoire. He ranks tenth on the list of best-represented composers in the GTR, twenty-first among arrangers; in addition, he is the most-recorded composer of identified works in the discography. Steven's works listed in the GTR span twenty-five years from 1978 to 2003.

Benediction is an original work for tuba quartet in the style of a simple folk song, similar to Londonderry Air or Loch Lomond. The work features a flowing solo in the third voice at both the open and close of the piece. Stevens uses effect voice spacing to create an open and sonorous ensemble sound. The bottom two voices in this excerpt are never closer together than a perfect fifth.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Lyrical, soloistic passages for first tuba.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Benediction is notable for its treatment of dissonances. The dissonances create harmonic tension through which the performers can shape the melodic material. This passage contains many non-harmonic tones including accented and unaccented passing tones, suspensions, retardations, and an appoggiatura.

There are many sustained pitches in the first euphonium part where vibrato should be employed for musical effect. The width and speed of the vibrato are a matter of personal taste and should be consistent with the style of the piece. There are numerous method books that address the subject specifically, but as a basic guideline, the vibrato should not detract from the performance of the line.

Finally, the closing two measures show the need to coordinate the progression to the final chord of the excerpt. While the first euphonium is sustaining D4, the lower voices are preparing to resolve the G7 chord. The ensemble communicates its intentions extra-musically by maintaining eye contact and following the movement of an appointed player.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Manhattan Suite is one of the longest quartets in the GTR at over fifteen minutes of duration. The work is divided into four movements: "Rock," "Slow Swing," "Jazz Waltz," and "Slow and Free." Mvts. I, II, and IV have solo sections over chord changes, which is not common in the tuba quartet literature. Stevens provides sample written solos in an appendix for less confident soloists.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: Improvisation. Low register in the second part.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Figure 30 represents a vamp; a repeated figure that is harmonically sparse. This vamp, repeated twenty-two times, fits the rock character of the movement with its syncopated rhythm over a B-flat minor nine (Bbm9) chord. Observe the notated articulations for the vamp to have an authentic rock sound.

The excerpt in Fig. 31 accents the back beat, also called the off-beat, over a B-flat major pentatonic scale. An example of a blue note can be seen in the D-flat in mm. 70-71. Blue notes are typically a lowered third, seventh, or fifth scale degree. In this case, the D-flat represents the lowered third. Steven combines these elements to create the rock feel of the movement.

The excerpt in Fig. 31 from the second movement exhibits numerous elements of a jazz ballad. Note the extended chordal harmonies including sevenths and ninths throughout the excerpt. Stevens utilizes hemiolas to create rhythmic tension and ambiguity. The harmonic motion utilizes stepwise, often chromatic movement between chords, which is a common feature of jazz ballad writing.

The third movement excerpt (see Fig. 32), played one beat to the measure, combines a Flamenco chord progression with soloistic passages. The Flamenco progression is I-bVII-bVI-V, which in F minor reads: F minor, E-flat major, D-flat major, and C major. The accompanying voices are appropriately scored at a low volume.

Fig. 33. Manhattan Suite, mvt. IV, mm. 53-65. Dotted quarter note = 144.

The final excerpt (Fig. 33) is a low tutti passage that sets up the alternating 6/8 to 3/4 metric feel at the end of the work. The second voice is also scored in this low register, which can be challenging for euphoniumists to play with clarity. The improvised solos, all over a B-flat minor chord, begin at m. 91 in the third voice.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Power is an energetic original work with funk-inspired syncopated rhythms. This selection is one of the most recorded works in the tuba quartet repertoire.

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: The piece's range works well for four tubas, though two euphoniums can also play the top parts. The level IV rating is due to the rhythmic challenges and metric shifts.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Observing Stevens' articulations is essential to achieve the funk style. Some of the power Stevens creates in this work is owed to the pervasive octave doublings.

Both of these highly syncopated excerpts are based on the C blues scale: C, D, E-flat, F, F-sharp, G, and B-flat. The use of the blues scale and the stylized rhythms make Power a distinctive piece in the early tuba quartet repertoire.

GENERAL DESCRIPTION: Robertson, euphonium performer and teacher in central Florida, is a founding member and arranger for the Tuba 4's. This final selection is an arrangement based on an operatic excerpt (from act II of Lohengrin).

TECHNICAL CONSIDERATIONS: This work may be more difficult than level III due to the high range, the modulation to the key of E major at m. 32, and the challenging fourth part shown in the excerpt below.

REHEARSAL SUGGESTIONS: Robertson's arrangement moves the melodic and supporting lines through all four voices. This arrangement is very effective when the slow dynamic build reaches its climax at m. 82. The excerpt in Fig. 37 (e.g., m. 56 and 57) features voice crossing, a technique in which a generally lower voice sounds higher than a generally higher voices. Voice crossing can be an effective way to change the tone color of the ensemble.

The musical score consists of two systems of four staves, each representing a tuba (T1, T2, T3, T4). The key signature is one flat, and the time signature is 4/4. The score is divided into two systems by measure numbers 55 and 59. In System 1 (mm. 55-58), the parts are mostly in eighth-note patterns. Measure 55 starts with a dynamic of mp, followed by soli. Measure 56 starts with mp. Measure 57 starts with legato. Measure 58 starts with mp. Measure 59 begins the second system. Measure 60 starts with a dynamic of f. Measure 61 starts with solo. Measure 62 ends with a dynamic of f.

CHAPTER SIX

CONCLUSIONS

Less than two centuries old, the tuba family is a relatively new addition to Western music. The tuba family developed in response to a need of extending the sound of the tenor and bass registers of the nineteen-century orchestra and military wind band. While the euphonium has clearly found a home in the brass band and wind ensemble, it has, at best, held an auxiliary role in the orchestra and a limited role in jazz and traditional chamber ensembles. The euphonium's heyday was in the era of touring wind bands led by John Philip Sousa and Edwin Franco Goldman. By contrast, the tuba is much better represented in the areas of orchestral music and chamber music. The number of full-time tuba professional positions, however, is quite limited compared to more prominent instruments such as the trumpet, piano, clarinet, or violin. Established in the mid-twentieth century, the tuba quartet has become an excellent medium for increasing the instrument's public exposure while teaching the importance of chamber music to university students.

The tuba quartet is the only chamber ensemble many tuba and euphonium students experience in American universities. In point of fact, the other brass instruments (trumpet, horn, and trombone) have more chamber music opportunities than members of the tuba family. Students of each of these instruments may participate in studio quartets (where four members of the same family make up an ensemble) as well as in the brass quintet (with two trumpet parts), and in the case of the horn, a part in the wind quintet. There are simply too few parts for tuba and euphonium students in other chamber ensembles to meet the pedagogical needs of a large tuba-euphonium studio.

If not for an ensemble such as the tuba quartet, how else would university and conservatory students approach the great works of the pre-Romantic period? Educators recognize the value of this repertoire, which is evident in the analysis of the data catalogued in the GTR that demonstrates the prevalence of works by Bach, Mozart, Handel, and Haydn. There remains a large body of work suitable but neglected works from the Renaissance through Romantic periods to transcribe for tuba quartet.

The tuba quartet also provides an opportunity to introduce musical styles that are often neglected in curricular of many tuba-euphonium students: ragtime, Dixieland, jazz standards, funk, Latin, polkas, and other contemporary performance styles. These styles have popular appeal and can be a means to introduce the tuba quartet to a larger audience. Tuba and euphonium students who gain a solid understanding of these styles can create new, non-traditional performance opportunities.

The ensemble's repertoire has grown rapidly over its roughly sixty-year history; yet there are far fewer original works for the quartet than arrangements. This is certainly an area for future growth in the repertoire. Ensembles can continue to commission, premiere, and record new compositions. Quartets can move away from re-recording the same Sousa marches, Bach transcriptions, and Joplin rags. Original works by John Stevens, Jan Koetsier, Arthur Frackenpohl, and Alfred Bartles are well represented in the discography; nonetheless, there are far more recordings of arranged works than original of compositions. Recordings of original works by professional quartets would greatly enhance the future development of the ensemble.

The pedagogical emphasis of tuba quartets is evident in the ensemble's relative isolation to university recital halls and brass instrumental association conferences. Professional tuba quartets are striving to elevate their ensemble to the level of other serious chamber groups. Unlike established chamber ensembles, such as the string quartet, which have an elevated public perception because of their rich history and repertoire by well-known composers, tuba quartets are challenged with overcoming negative biases about their instrument and repertoire.

The public's negative perception of the tuba, as with many other bass instruments, is due to its size, range, and repertoire. Because the tuba is a large instrument and sounds in a low register, many perceive the instrument as unrefined, lacking in technique, and incapable of carrying a melody. Furthermore, the tuba quartet's original repertoire is largely by composers unknown to many audiences. These biases are unfounded, as there are many accomplished tubists who have the virtuosic technique, expressiveness, and melodious tone quality that one expects of professional musicians. Tuba quartet repertoire borrows celebrated works from other genres and has several notable original compositions in need of exposure by highly skilled ensembles.

AREAS FOR FURTHER STUDY

According to the GTR editors, "for the most part, the original TSB [Tuba Source Book] entries have not been altered in any manner."<sup>161</sup> Due to the large number of entries in a document of this scope, one would expect an occasional typographical or formatting mistake. An example of an erroneous citation in the GTR is the entry for Greensleeves arranged by Gary Butterly.<sup>162</sup> The work is credited in the GTR to William Bullet, though the score indicates “Lautenbuch des William Ballet.”<sup>163</sup> Furthermore, the range indicated for the first euphonium part in the GTR (B-flat-f')<sup>164</sup> does not take into account the tenor clef marking in m. 22. Therefore, the correct range of the first euphonium part should in fact read D-c”. Finally, the arrangement was originally published by Whaling Music Publishers in 1978, but acquired by Cimarron Music and Productions in 1994. Scholars could identify and correct these errors in future editions of the GTR and suggest corrections to the appendices included at the conclusion of this document and online at <http://sites.google.com/site/tubaquartet>.

161. R. Winston Morris and Daniel Perantoni, eds., GTR, ix.

The information contained in the GTR is due for an update, as it has been nearly seven years since its publication. In addition to changes in the publication status of the works, many works have been written and recorded since 2005. The discography in Appendix F lists at least 150 tracks recorded since 2005 (and many online recordings that were not included in the GTR). All the King’s Tubas member Tim Olt has published at least seventeen tuba quartet arrangements through Cimarron Music, none of which are listed in the GTR. This document has also shown that the GTR editors may have missed works published during the editorial deadline.<sup>165</sup> As a result of the errors found in the Butterly entry (among others), the omission of works published before 2005, and the need to update the catalog with new works, a review of all GTR entries is warranted for future editions.

Future studies of tuba quartet repertoire could examine the works for quartet and auxiliary instruments (rhythm section, flute, narrator, etc.) included in Appendix H. An analysis of part ranges or durations compared to difficulty ratings, or identifying popular genres, would also be of interest to the tuba community. Additionally, the ITEA Journal reviews many new tuba quartets and contains recital programs that may be successful sources for further study.

APPENDIX C
PEDAGOGICAL SUGGESTIONS

ESTABLISHING A TUBA QUARTET PROGRAM

The principal reasons for establishing a tuba quartet program are: reinforcing studio concepts, teaching diverse and challenging literature, community outreach, and developing studio camaraderie.

The tuba quartet is an excellent medium for bolstering concepts students are introduced to in private studio instruction. The quartet environment provides the opportunity for students to interact and apply the concepts they learn in private lessons (tone, style, intonation, articulation, and technique) to the chamber ensemble experience. Also, participation in the chamber ensemble promotes understanding of the concepts of balance, blend, and texture (counterpoint, melody, supporting role, etc.) by requiring the musicians to assume these roles in the quartet.

Tuba quartets provide a means by which students can be introduced to diverse and challenging literature. Through the tuba quartet, euphonium and tuba students gain an understanding of musical styles that may not be covered in traditional orchestra or wind ensemble repertoire. The tuba quartet literature covers a wide range of musical styles, forms, and compositional techniques: rags, various jazz and popular music styles, marches, chorales, fugues, polkas, ballads, folk tunes, hymns, madrigals, holiday tunes, nearly every “ism” in music, and many more.

In addition to diversity, tuba quartet music can be quite challenging. The musical demands, in some, cases exceed the demands of traditional wind band repertoire for tuba and euphonium students. The responsibility of phrasing, technique, and starting and stopping together are magnified in a quartet. Performers are called upon to produce a compelling musical experience without the aid of a conductor, which takes a great deal of musicianship and preparation to be successful.

The tuba quartet is a useful medium for reaching out to the community and exposing the public to the instruments. With a well-rehearsed ensemble and appropriate literature, the quartet can break some publically held stereotypes (non-musicians who lack technique and finesse) about the tuba family. An informed and enthusiastic community also creates future performance opportunities for the ensemble. Community outreach concerts with a tuba quartet are but another performance opportunity for students to learn the art of stagecraft. Stagecraft is the ensemble's ability to communicate effectively with one another and with the audience on stage.

Finally, tuba quartets help to develop studio camaraderie. Upperclassmen serve as role models for new students. Because success builds on success, an active chamber music program can help recruit exceptional students. Through working in a tuba quartet setting, students develop the interpersonal skills necessary to become effective communicators and musicians.

TUBA QUARTET COACH AND STUDENT REQUIREMENTS

Like any chamber music program, students are expected to play with blend, balance, individual proficiency, and stylistically match one another. Since quartets typically do not utilize a conductor, performers are required to start and release notes together, accelerando and ritardando as a group, and eventually be able to lead productive rehearsals in the absence of supervision from their teacher.

The concept of blend encompasses both tone and intonation. Capable musicians produce complementary tones and match pitch with one another. The problem of pitch is particularly perilous for inexperienced chamber musicians and is one of the major contributors to lackluster performances. Singing and hearing the correct pitch before playing are proven techniques for improving group intonation. Other intonation approaches involve the performance and study of Bach chorales and passing unison pitches around the ensemble.

Voice movement, how two or more musical lines relate to one another, can be addressed in quartets. Euphonium students encounter divisi parts and countermelodies that outline the underlying harmony in their core repertoire, whereas tubists are typically relegated to octaves on the fundamental harmonic pitches. Therefore, tubists in the quartet experience difficulty hearing and tuning inner harmonies, particularly in the third voice of the quartet.

Balance applies to volume, texture, and harmony. These are troublesome for the tuba quartet because of the homogeneity of tone, the generally low register of the ensemble, and the instruments' bell direction. Because the ensemble is made up of tenor, bass, and contrabass instruments within the same instrumental family, producing distinct sounds is difficult in a tuba quartet. The following are a few guiding principles for improving balance: play with a blended sound by matching tones; ensure that the melody is heard and not covered; use consensus to agree on note lengths and attacks; when possible, have all instruments' bells pointed in a similar direction; and, balance and tune chords to the root note.

Individual proficiency refers to each player being responsible for technically and musically preparing their part for rehearsal. Encourage students to bring the same level of attention to their quartet music as they would to preparing for a solo recital or wind ensemble performance. The result will be more productive rehearsals and more rewarding performances. For younger students, feel free to alter the musical material to meet their current level of development. The Orchestral Suite No. 3 excerpt discussed in chapter five (Fig. 7) is an example where simplification is appropriate for beginning tubists. The octave leaps in the bass line are challenging for beginning tubists. The excerpt can be simplified by removing the octave leaps and working on the descending scale pattern in either of two octaves.

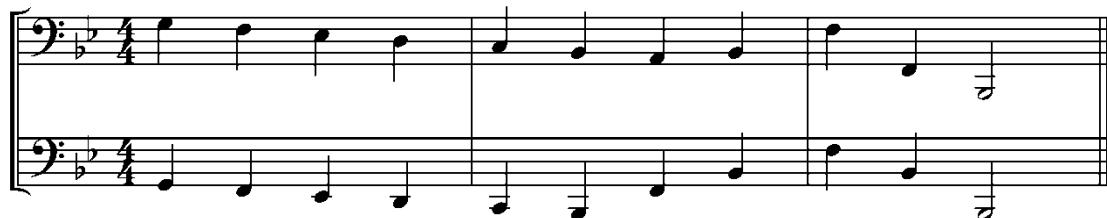

Fig. 37. Simplified bass pattern for J.S. Bach's Orchestral Suite No. 3.

Starting and stopping together is critical for tuba quartets. This, and ensemble precision as a whole, is linked to the players' ability to see and hear each other. Set up the group where everyone can make eye contact with one another and close enough together that they can hear all parts with equal ease. Insist that students know their parts well enough to get their eyes off the music and communicate with the group. Players can cue in to style and tempo by simply breathing together. This is particularly essential at musical transitions. Lastly, the shape and size of the instruments do not lend themselves to creating a clear ictus for starts and releases. The round shape and fact that they must be held with both hands presents a challenge to the group leader. It would be ridiculous to see a tuba waving around like a conductor's baton, but the performer can overcome this difficulty with slight movements in clear and opposing directions (horizontal or circular motions).

Finally, prepare students to rehearse productively without supervision from an instructor. Productive rehearsals work on group deficiencies and do not merely run the pieces from top to bottom. Encourage the students to be accountable for the ensemble's preparation, to listen critically both in rehearsal and to recordings. Foster a rehearsal environment where students are supportive of each other and are encouraged to take an active role in the ensemble's growth.

SELECTING APPROPRIATE REPERTOIRE

Select quality literature that is developmentally appropriate, challenging, and diverse. Consider the range, technique, and other musical demands. Refer to Guide to the Tuba Repertoire, or Appendix H from this document, for information about the availability, difficulty, range, and length of works. Ideally, all four members will be at roughly the same level of proficiency on their instrument or students may become frustrated. Whenever possible, urge the students to play an active role in selecting the quartet's repertoire.

REHEARSAL TECHNIQUES

Scheduling regular rehearsals is important to retain ensemble consistency. When conflicts arise, members should be flexible when rescheduling rehearsals. Also, the rehearsal area should be adequate to meet the needs of a tuba quartet. At a minimum, the room must be of an adequate size, properly lit, temperature controlled, and have good acoustics for listening and hearing protection.

Each rehearsal needs a plan. Individuals are responsible for preparing parts outside of ensemble rehearsal time; therefore, the plan should primarily address the fundamentals of ensemble performance: intonation, articulation, phrasing, balance, and blend. Develop the rehearsal plan based on the needs of the repertoire and the individuals. A general plan includes time to warm-up together, concentrated preparation of repertoire, time for breaks to mentally recharge, and a period to discuss goals for the next rehearsal.

The ensemble must establish a means of building consensus to settle musical disputes. Perform, record, and evaluate each section of music to resolve these issues. Strive to develop an atmosphere that is conducive to communication and musical experimentation. Each member should feel acknowledged and invested in the group.

Simply running the piece from top to bottom is not rehearsal. To ensure the group is progressing, break up the sections into component parts and address specific problems. General guidelines for rehearsal require that members know the score, listen to each other critically, communicate with eye contact, stay on task, and keep the goals of the rehearsal in mind.

There are numerous aids that are used in effective rehearsals. A pencil is a critical tool for marking reminders and cues into music. To cite an old saying, “a dull pencil beats a sharp memory.” Because the metronome is an independent arbiter of tempo, its use improves the ensemble’s rhythmic precision. Another essential instrument is a tuner with a tone generator. These devices should not replace the individual's responsibility for listening and adjusting pitch, but can be an impartial means of establishing and confirming ensemble intonation.

PERFORMANCE CHALLENGES UNIQUE TO THE TUBA QUARTET

The size of the instruments, bell direction, and clarity of sound are three difficulties a tuba quartet must address to improve its performance. The size of the tuba and its shape can limit the instrument's placement in the ensemble and the group's mobility. It can be a physically demanding to play, and is normally performed while seated. This can be overcome by attaching a strap or harness to the instrument to distribute the weight of the instrument to the player's back to allow for movement on stage if desired.

Accommodating the variety of bell directions is another challenge. Professional tubas and euphoniums come in variety of designs. The most prevalent design played by professional tubists in the United States has rotary or piston valves operated horizontally with an upright bell facing to the player's left. The most common euphonium construction, and to a lesser extent, tuba design, has upright piston valves with the bell to the player's right.

The ensemble should adjust the setup as necessary to achieve a clear and balanced sound, while still able to communicate with each other. Ideally, all of the performers' bells face a similar direction, which in most venues is out to the audience. The typical tuba quartet, two euphoniums and two tubas, sits in an arc where all players can make eye contact with one another. Eye contact is essential to convey and receive information within a chamber group through extra-musical gestures. With the most common instrument designs, the euphoniums are paired at stage right with the tubas on stage left.

Fig. 38. Horizontal valves with bell to player's left.<sup>166</sup>

Fig. 39. Upright valves with bell to player's right.<sup>167</sup>

Along these lines, memorizing music is an effective performance practice. Memorization removes the music stand which acts as a barrier to communication between the performers and the audience. When this is impractical, place the stands at a height where the audience can see the performers' faces.

Tuba quartets can improve their clarity by selecting well written literature, playing with rhythmic precision, and taking great care with note attacks and releases. The lowest two voices should not be closer than a perfect fifth whenever possible, unless writing for a desired effect. Chords can be re-voiced in transcriptions to improve the spacing. Low brass instruments are notoriously resonant, so all members must strictly observe articulations and note lengths to enhance precision. Lastly, members of the ensemble must agree on the subdivision of the beat and move collectively.

TEACHING MUSIC THEORY AND ARRANGING THROUGH THE TUBA QUARTET

Chamber music provides an excellent opportunity for reinforcing music theory and music arranging concepts. Quartets limit the musical material, like a piano reduction of a large work, to a manageable amount for less experienced students. The tuba quartet repertoire is stylistically diverse and written in a variety of forms, which allows teachers to introduce and review concepts like rondo, twelve bar blues, sonata allegro, swing, theme and variations, etc.

Encourage students to study quartet scores, observing idiomatic writing for the ensemble. An understanding of the voicing, range, articulation, and dynamics used by established tuba quartet composers and arrangers is an excellent departure point for beginning student arrangers.<sup>168</sup> Students will also profit by studying and adapting vocal, saxophone, and string quartets.

APPENDIX D
PERFORMANCE OPPORTUNITIES

Currently no tuba quartets earn the majority of their income through public performances and record sales. Professional groups are often comprised of musicians who hold teaching positions at universities, musicians with full time employment in a large ensemble, or enthusiastic amateur performers. Without going into the underlying issues concerning the state of classical music, this section will discuss traditional tuba quartet performance opportunities and how to develop new possibilities.

The three types of chamber groups (student, amateur, and professional) are defined by their performance goals and personnel. A student ensemble is learning the craft of chamber ensemble performance, usually in the controlled environment of a university school of music, and under the guidance of a mentor. The student quartet may perform public recitals and at music conferences, and perhaps participates in a chamber music ensemble competition. Familiarity with staple tuba quartet literature, development of ensemble skills, and development of stage presence are the primary goals of a student quartet. The amateur quartet is not defined as much by a standard set of performance goals as they are by the personnel. The amateur group is made of tuba enthusiasts who meet periodically to play together and to perform for the community. The group may even produce recordings or have a presence online. The professional group has established performance credentials and seeks paid work. Professionals also commission and premiere new works, produce high quality recordings, actively promote the ensemble, and are sometimes sponsored by an instrument maker.

Assume for the moment that the quartet is musically proficient, has selected repertoire appropriate to the performance goals, and has learned the skill of engaging the audience. In spite of the above assets, the tuba quartet still faces the dilemma of locating an appropriate venue. Tuba quartets do not sell out stadiums, tour the country, or play in crowded bars and clubs; nevertheless, these opportunities can arise for a talented and dedicated group. Traditionally, tuba quartets play at theme parks, music conventions, university recital series, and community/festival performances.

The Mighty Tubadours, the Tubafours, and the TubaMeisters are some of the better known examples of theme park tuba quartets. The groups typically play popular music or German polka tunes daily at set times throughout the park.<sup>169</sup> Unfortunately, many of the live music ensembles at American theme parks have been cut in lieu of recorded music or part-time musicians.

Music conventions and conferences are common settings for tuba quartet performances. Held annually, these events celebrate music education and performance. Some of the more prestigious conventions for tuba quartets include:

- International Tuba Euphonium Conference
- The U.S. Army Band “Pershing’s Own” Tuba-Euphonium Conference
- Mid-West International Band and Orchestra Clinic
- Music Teachers National Association National Conference
- MENC: The National Association for Music Education Conference
- International Women’s Brass Conference
- Texas Music Educators Association Conference
- Lieksta Brass Week in Lieksa, Finland
- Tubonium
- Harvey Phillips Northwest Big Brass Bash
- Regional ITEA Conferences

Two types of performances, featured recitals and masterclasses, occur at these music conventions. Featured recital performances are approximately an hour in length, and often premiere new compositions. The masterclass involves teaching a concept or method and demonstrating the technique through performance.

169. Refer to the discography in Appendix F for recordings by The Mighty Tubadours and the Tubafours.

Another performance venue for the tuba quartet is the university recital. This is a natural setting because most tubists' initial exposure to the tuba quartet occurs during university training and audiences are enthusiastic live music. Often, the performance is paid by a booking fee or a portion of the ticket proceeds.

The community or festival performance is a place where a tuba quartet can expect to develop and educate a new audience. Churches, fairs, and schools are excellent events with normally good audience attendance. These performances can lead to future paid events and are tremendous opportunities to introduce the public to the tuba family.

Some additional groundwork may be necessary to establish a point of contact with these organizations. A tool that most professional ensembles utilize in setting up engagements and promoting the group is a press kit. A good press kit includes a letter of introduction which describes the group and their musical product. The letter also cites past performances and describes the contents included in the press kit. High quality, professional photos are essential for promotional posters, flyers, and other media. The press kit should also include a brief bio of each of the members of the quartet, as well as a list of the group's accomplishments (e.g. recordings, important performances, and concert reviews). Letters or statements of recommendation from past venues are also appropriate. Finally, special performance requirements should be listed in a rider. A performance rider establishes what expectations and equipment the ensemble requests from the contact or host.

The importance of a professional and ubiquitous web presence can not be overstated. A website is a cost effective way to promote an ensemble to a large audience. Most professional groups' websites are like multimedia press kits that include sound and media files, calendars of upcoming performances, examples of concert programs, biographies of the members, and contact information. Facebook, MySpace, and Twitter are also essential social network sites that can help promote the ensemble.

One activity that some collegiate quartets pursue is chamber music competitions. Participating and placing in these competitions establishes some prestige within the chamber music community. In addition to being judged against peer ensembles, the journey to prepare for the competition is a great motivation for improving ensemble skills and observing the performance caliber of other quartets nationally and internationally. The following competitions are open to tuba quartets (see individual competitions for eligibility requirements):

Fischoff National Chamber Music Association<sup>170</sup>

170. The tuba trio "Tuba a Tre" from Tennessee Tech University was a finalist at the 2011 Fischoff Competition. Karen Lykins, "Tuba a Tre named national finalist in Fischoff Chamber Music Competition," May 6, 2011, <http://www.tntech.edu/pressreleases/tuba-a-tre-named-national-finalist-in-fischoff-chamber-music-competition/> (accessed August 15, 2011).

Creating new performance opportunities should be a goal of any chamber group. Venues that already support live music are great starting places: holiday concert series, theme parks, shopping centers, hotels, bars, or opening for established acts. It cannot be overstated that the exposure offered by the Internet and social media can propel an ensemble's popularity.

In summary, performers need to recognize that audiences want to be engaged, entertained, and occasionally educated by musicians who excel at their craft and play music with which the audience can connect. Seeking out great literature, developing ensemble skills, learning how to interact with the audience, and promoting the group are essential ensemble duties.<sup>171</sup> Finally, for the tuba quartet to become a relevant ensemble, it must break out of the self-referential performance cycle of college recitals and professional conferences and to seek new public performance venues. Attracting new advocates and employment opportunities is a practical concern for all tubists. Radio, television, and the Internet are essential promotional tools that an emerging chamber ensemble must embrace.

APPENDIX F

---

173. Arranged alphabetically by title.

Appendix F identifies sixty-five tuba quartet albums, or internet media sites, by thirty-six ensembles. The entries were discovered after developing the following search methodology:

- Include the discography included in the GTR and the participating personnel.
- Search the Internet for albums by the associated record labels, ensembles, and personnel listed in the GTR.
- Search broader catalogs for recordings (such as Billboard.com and digital sound stores).
- Search for albums by ensembles discovered in Appendix E.
- Search for audio files uploaded as “demo” files for music publishers.
- Works were not included for video files from sources such as YouTube or Vimeo.com.<sup>174</sup>

A hyphen is used to indicate “no data” for a particular cell.

177. Arranged alphabetically by composer or arranger.

The movement titles are listed where applicable. The Group column specifies the instrumentation and any supplemental requirements (e.g. rhythm section, taped accompaniment, conductor, mutes, etc.). A hyphen is used to indicate “no data” for a particular cell.

- Duration – single expressed in minutes, collections and compilations are expressed in number of pages.
- Level – subjective assignment of the level of difficulty from I (Beginner) to V (Professional).
- Range – see Appendix H for system of octave designations.
