Spanier, Herbert Anthony Charles ("Herb" "Herbie") (b. Cupar, Saskatchewan, Canada, Dec. 25, 1928; d. Toronto, Ontario, Canada, Dec. 13, 2001). Canadian trumpeter and composer. Spanier (no apparent relation to trumpeter Muggy Spanier) grew up in Regina. He learned to play the guitar and harmonica at age five, played bugle for the Sea Cadets at age thirteen, and began playing the trumpet in high school.

Mostly self-taught, Spanier's career began in 1948 when he joined a group called Boptet. He played in Chicago from 1949 to 1950, and then moved to Toronto in 1950 where he played with Trump Davidson, Benny Winestone, and Benny Louis. From 1954 to 1955, he played with Paul Bley and in various clubs in New York City, and in 1956 moved to Montreal where he played with various dance bands for two years. He moved again, this time to Los Angeles, where he continued playing with dance bands as a lead trumpeter and bebop soloist. He returned to Montreal in 1959, but eventually settled permanently in Toronto where he worked with his own groups, various dance bands, the CBC Orchestra, and notably with the Nimmons 'n Nine Plus Six (1971-80), which won a Juno Award for a recording.

Spanier was one of the first beboppers in Canada. His albums include Anthology 1962-93 (Justin Time), Anthology Vol. 2 1969-94 (Justin Time), Know Time (Justin Time, with Paul Bley), and Forensic Perturbations (RCI). In addition to trumpet, he also played flugelhorn, piano, and various reed instruments. He taught for a short while at Sir George Williams University, and composed music for film, including Via Montreal (1975). He died just before his seventy-third birthday.

Spaulding, Roger W. (b. San Bernadino, California, Dec. 19, 1932; d. Anaheim, California, Nov. 22, 2003). American trumpeter. Spaulding began playing the trumpet at age seventeen, and studied with Louis Maggio. His career started when he began playing in local dance bands. He became a Los Angeles studio musician, and also worked at the Angelus Temple (Los Angeles) and the Fox Theater (Redwood City).

In 1963, Spaulding published a pedal tone method based on the exercises given to him by Maggio, but modified with an exercise program to be played every other day, based on the Charles Atlas bodybuilding system popular at the time. His method, Double High C in 37 Weeks (High Note Studios), became one of several popular range, power, and endurance books used during the 1960s and beyond and by 2005 was in its fifth printing. Spaulding was possibly influenced by Fred Elias's book, The Elias Modern Scientific Trumpet Method.

Spera, Dominic (b. 1932). American trumpeter and composer. Spera received bachelor of music education, bachelor of music, and master of music education degrees from Indiana University. He worked for ten years as a studio musician in New York City, performing for numerous television and radio shows, as well as several Broadway musicals. He regularly performed with the Roxy Theater, Radio City Symphony, and the City Center Ballet Orchestra. As a jazz musician, he performed with the bands of Henry Mancini, Tito Puente, Benny Goodman, Burt Bacharach, Johnny Mathis, Natalie Cole, Frank Sinatra, Andy Kirk, Charlie Barnet, Billy Butterfield, Steve Lawrence and Edie Gormé, Les and Larry Elgart, Tommy Dorsey Orchestra, and Andy Williams. While in New York, he took lessons from Carmine Caruso. He has also performed with the Saint Louis Symphony, Cleveland Orchestra, Boston Symphony Orchestra, Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra, and the Indianapolis Symphony.

As one of the nation's most respected jazz educators, Spera taught trumpet and jazz at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire from 1968 to 1976 before becoming director of jazz studies at Indiana University for twenty years. He has served as a guest faculty member at dozens of summer jazz camps. He played with the Monaco Jazz Masters (1992), IU Jazz Ensemble (1996 New York Brass Conference, Concert for Mercer Ellington), and Bill Adam's eighty-fifth birthday tribute (2002).

Spera has published over one hundred jazz band compositions and arrangements. He is now retired.

Speziale, Marie (b. Brooklyn, New York, Apr. 4, 1942). American trumpeter. Speziale grew up in Ybor City, the Latin district of Tampa, Florida. Her father, whose main occupation was cigar making, was also a professional pianist who played banjo, guitar, and mandolin as well. Marie began playing the cornet during elementary school, and studied with Robert Price until she graduated (third in her class of 600) from Chamberlain High School in 1960. She also developed (through Price) a relationship with Vincent Bach who gave her a few lessons. She was also fortunate enough to study a bit with Rafael Méndez. As a young girl, she played in a four-piece jazz group for the local television show Date On Eight, which led to a featured spot on the NBC Today Show that aired nationally from the pirate ship José Gaspar docked in Tampa Bay. Speziale attended the Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music (CCM) where she studied with Eugene Blee from 1960 to 1964. While in school, she performed as an extra or substitute trumpet in the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. During her junior and senior years, she served as acting second and acting third trumpet, respectively. One of the highlights of her undergraduate years was being coached by the famous cornetist Frank Simon on his solo, Willow Echoes, that she performed on a concert in his honor. She also took some lessons with Arnold Jacobs.

In 1964, Speziale won the position of assistant principal trumpet of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra (CSO), and was promoted to associate principal in 1976, a position she held until 1996; she was one of the first female trumpet players in a major U.S. symphony orchestra. (The first was Wanda Pittman Yates, principal of the Houston Symphony Orchestra during World War II.) She then began teaching at CCM (1996-72) before accepting a position at Miami University in Oxford, Ohio (1973-79), where she also played in the Miami University Jazz Quartet. In 1979, she returned to her former adjunct teaching post at CCM. In 1999, she became a full professor at Indiana University, but continued her post at CCM, making the weekly commute from Bloomington, Indiana, to Cincinnati. During her thirty-two years with the CSO, she served as principal trumpet for one year (1974-75 season). She was offered the principal position on a permanent basis by Maestro Thomas Schippers, but preferred to play in the section, so that she would have the time to devote to teaching and performing with the Symphony Jazz Quintet, a group that was organized during the CSO's 1966 ten week world tour. At the start of a 1969 European tour with the CSO, Speziale appeared on Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show in a CSO jazz combo with Dave Brubeck. She was promoted to associate principal trumpet of the CSO in 1976.

In the middle of her career, Speziale developed Ménière's disease, an inner ear condition that causes imbalance and severe headaches. She also had vestibular pressure in the brain that causes the two hemispheres to process information at different speeds, which can lead to deafness. As a result, she was forced to stop playing for a while. Fortunately, a doctor was able to help her control the disease through diet and vitamins.

Speziale's career has been impressive. She was a member of the CSO from 1964 through November 1996, a member of the Cincinnati May Festival Orchestra, Cincinnati Ballet Orchestra, Cincinnati Pops Orchestra, and Cincinnati Opera Orchestra. Another highlight of her careeer was an impromptu jam session with jazz legend Duke Ellington at one of the earliest pops concerts presented by the CSO. Shortly after retiring from the CSO, she performed frequently with the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra (SLSO) including a European tour, in Carnegie Hall concerts, and on recordings. She served the SLSO as guest principal trumpet, guest assistant principal, and guest second and third trumpet. In 2002, she was appointed chair of the brass department, conductor of the brass choir and full professor of trumpet at The Shepherd School of Music at Rice University in Houston, Texas (replacing Armando Ghitalla). Since moving to Houston, she has been engaged as the third trumpet of the Houston Grand Opera Orchestra, and has performed with the Houston Symphony Orchestra and Houston Ballet Orchestra. She has also performed as guest assistant principal trumpet with the Colorado Symphony Orchestra. Speziale is a member of Monarch Brass, a large all-female ensemble consisting of some of the finest brass players in the U.S. and Europe. She was also selected to participate as the only American female in the first (1999) Super World Orchestra in Toyko. In addition, she has toured with DIVA, an all-female jazz band.

Speziale has served as a brass coach at the New World Symphony in Florida, and has conducted its brass ensemble in concert. She taught at the CCM's summer Opera Theatre Music Festival in Lucca, Italy (1996-98), where she conducted the Festival's brass choir, taught the brass orchestral repertoire class, and coached chamber brass ensembles. In 2010, she taught and conducted at CCM's Summer Festival in Spoleto, Italy. She has served as a judge at the National Trumpet Competitions, the International Trumpet Guild Orchestral Competition, and the Fischoff National Chamber Music Competition. She has been a featured guest artist at the International Women's Brass Conference and the ITG conference.

Speziale has recorded in the Los Angeles studios, performing for the television series Star Trek: Voyager, and Deep Space Nine. She served on the board of directors and as secretary of the American Federation of Musicians, Local #1, on the board of the Northern Kentucky Symphony, on the editorial committee of the American Music Teacher Journal, and as Province President and National Director of Instrumental Activities for Sigma Alpha Iota. She has performed with the Summit Brass, and taught at its annual Rafael Méndez Brass Institute. Speziale has performed as a soloist with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati Chamber Orchestra, Cincinnati Pops Orchestra, New York Orchestral Society, Tampa Philharmonic, and the Interlochen Orchestra. An active member of the International Women's Brass Conference, Speziale hosted its conference in 2000 at CCM, and has served on its board since 1996 and as its second president, following Susan Slaughter. Her awards include the Sigma Alpha Iota National Leadership Award, Leading Women in the Arts Award from the Greater Cincinnati Coalition of Women's Organizations, and the Outstanding Woman of the Year in Music Award from the Tampa Tribune. She considers her biggest professional influences to be Robert Price, Eugene Blee, Ernest and Betty Glover, Max Rudolph, and Arnold Jacobs. Speziale retired from teaching in 2013 and was replaced at Rice University by professors Barbara Butler and Charles Geyer (formerly at the Eastman School of Music and Northwestern University).

Spineux, Alphonse (b. Falaën, Belgium, July 13, 1934; d. Brussels, Belgium, Apr. 17, 2000). Belgian trumpeter. Spineux began playing trumpet at age fifteen, and attended the Royal Conservatory of Music while performing in the Symphony Orchestra of Liège. He then played for two years as principal of the Musique de la Force Aérienne Belge, and spent some time in the National Orchestra of Belgium. He completed his studies in 1958 with Raymond Sabarich at the Paris Conservatory.

An outstanding soloist and chamber music player, Spineux spent most of his career from 1958 as principal trumpet of the Grand Symphony Orchestra of the Belgian Radio and Television (RTB). After 1986, he was a professor at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Brussels.

Spivak, Charles ("Charlie") (b. Kiev, Ukraine, Feb. 17, 1907; d. Greenville, South Carolina, Mar. 1, 1982). Ukrainian-born American trumpeter. The Spivak family came to America when Charlie was a small child. He grew up in New Haven, Connecticut, and began playing the trumpet at the age of ten. He studied under Max Schlossberg and took some lessons with Harry Glantz. At the age of seventeen, he turned professional by joining the jazz orchestra of violinist Paul Specht, staying with that organization until 1931.

Although Spivak was not particularly skilled as a jazz improviser, his beautiful tone was in great demand with various dance orchestras including those of Ben Pollack (1931-34), the Dorsey Brothers (1934), Ray Noble (1935), Gus Arnheim (1937), Glenn Miller (1937), Raymond Scott, Bob Crosby (1937-38), Tommy Dorsey (1938-39), and Jack Teagarden (1939). His nickname was "Cheery, Chubby Charlie," but he was billed as "The Sweetest Horn in the World."

During the years 1936-37, Spivak became the highest paid studio musician in New York City. In November of that year, Glenn Miller financed him to form his own band, but it was not successful. His second band did well until 1959 and then broke up. His best-known recorded tunes are Autumn Nocturne, Star Dreams, and his theme song, Let's Go Home.

Spivak's later years were spent touring with his band through Florida, Las Vegas, and South Carolina (from 1967). His wife, singer Irene Daye, died of cancer in 1971. In the early 1980s, Spivak lived in Greenville, South Carolina, and played each night at the Ye Olde Fireplace restaurant. He made his last recordings in 1981. He was in poor financial shape at the time of his death in 1982. He had even pawned his trumpet a few weeks earlier. He is buried at the Greenville Memorial Gardens.

Spörri, Paul (b. Untersiggenthal [in canton Aargau], Switzerland, Aug. 21, 1909; d. Allschwil [near Basel], Switzerland, Aug. 9, 1991). Swiss trumpeter. Spörri began playing the trumpet at the age of five under the direction of his father. At age fifteen, he attended the Zurich Conservatory; two years later he studied with Alfred Matthes at the Berlin Academy of Music. As a student, he apprenticed with the Tonhalle Orchestra and in various theater orchestras such as the Wintergarten Variety Theatre. One year later, he auditioned for and won the principal trumpet position with the Berlin Philharmonic, a position he held for sixteen years (1927-43). In 1932, he performed the earliest known recording of Bach's 2nd Brandenburg Concerto in the correct octave with the Berlin Philharmonic orchestra, making him one of the earliest modern performers of this work. He also recorded the Brandenburg with the Edwin Fischer Chamber Orchestra (1941).

Because of World War II and the increasing devastation of Berlin, Spörri accepted a position in 1943 as principal trumpet of the Lucerne Festival Orchestra in Switzerland. He was allowed to leave Germany thanks to special permission from Goebbels. Almost immediately, he was also hired as principal trumpet of the Basel Symphony Orchestra and teacher at the Basel Conservatory. He retired from orchestral playing in 1969, but continued teaching for many years before retiring altogether. He died just a few weeks before his eighty-first birthday

Staff, David (b. Ipswich, Suffolk, England, Jan. 18, 1958). British trumpeter. Although Staff is known for his solo appearances on both modern and old trumpet (in more than twenty countries to date), he is best known for his work on the Baroque (valveless) trumpet and cornetto. He has recorded Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 six times on Baroque trumpet, performed it more than one hundred sixty times in public, and has presented trumpet and organ recitals all over the world. In 1985, he began to take playing the natural trumpet (without finger holes) seriously. From 1986, with the support of his colleague Jonathan Impett, he adopted this approach as standard within the trumpet section of Frans Brüggen's Orchestra of the Eighteenth Century. Up until now, they have given more than 1,100 performances adhering to this approach.

Staff became a professor at the Royal Academy of Music in London (teaching Baroque trumpet) at the age of twenty-three, serving in this capacity from 1986 to 1997. He has also taught at Guildhall School of Music and from 1983 to 2009 at the Royal College of Music in Manchester. He is a professor at the Royal College of Music in London, a position he will give up in September 2013 to become professor of Baroque trumpet at Amsterdam Conservatory, succeeding Friedemann Immer. He has been a featured lecturer and performer at conferences of the International Trumpet Guild and the Historic Brass Society as well as giving master classes at universities and conservatories worldwide. Staff's "early brass course" has been a feature at Dartington International Summer School for more than twenty years.

An active freelancer in London, Staff has recorded for television, film, and BBC Radio. In 1991, he started to work closely with master craftsman Frank Tomes on faithful copies of old trumpets. In 2007, David became Frank's apprentice, and in 2010 began making instruments of his own professionally. At the moment he offers two versions of 1746 Ehe trumpets from the Nuremberg collection; both can be played either as natural instruments or with vent holes. He also offers a copy of the 1651 trumpet by Hans Veit located in Berlin. Work is in progress on a William Bull trumpet and another by Huschauer (1796) from the Edinburgh collection.

Stafford, Gregg Vaughn (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, July 6, 1953). American trumpeter and cornetist. Stafford is a distant relative of Henry "Red" Allen. He began his career when he joined the Gibson Brass Band in 1970 at the age of sixteen. Soon, Stafford became a member of several New Orleans bands, including the Young Fairview Baptist Church Christian Marching Band (later known as the Hurricane Brass Band) with which Wynton Marsalis and Leroy Jones were fellow members under Danny Barker (1971-73), Young Tuxedo Brass Band (from December 1972: European tour in June-July 1988), Olympia Brass Band (February 1973-76, including Monterey Festival in 1976), and Hurricane Brass Band (1974-77).

Gregg Stafford is considered by many to be today's leading traditional New Orleans-style trumpet and cornet player in the Crescent City. He has toured Europe with New Orleans Delight, and currently leads the Jazz Hounds (1990s), Young Tuxedo Brass Band & Jazz Band (from 1988), and a band at Preservation Hall (replacing Kid Sheik). He also played with Clyde Bernhardt (guest in Breda, 1977), Preston Jackson (Preservation Hall, April 1977), Louis Nelson (1981-83), French Market Jazz Band (France, 1982), Royal Brass Band (with Teddy Riley, 1982), Danny Barker's Jazz Hounds (1984-88), Michael White (from 1984), Chester Zardis (1985), Kid Sheik's Storyville Ramblers (1987), Wynton Marsalis (1991, Tribute to Louis Armstrong), and Tremé Brass Band (1994, with Leroy Jones).

Stafford's recordings include That Man from New Orleans (Jazz Crusade), Gregg Stafford and the Easy Riders Jazz Band (Jazz Crusade), Streets of the City (Jazz Crusade), Down Home Music (Jazz Crusade), At the Cross—Praying & Swaying (Jazz Crusade), Dance at the Dew Drop (GHB), and New Orleans Delight (Music Mecca).

Stafford is a well-respected man in his hometown of New Orleans. He cofounded the Black Men of Labor, a charity and social club, which raises money for hospitals and other worthy causes. He is known for his snappy clothes that include silk shirts, pinstripe suits, patent leather shoes, and a raccoon skin coat. He is also an excellent vocalist.

Stafford, Terell [Lamark] (b. Miami, Florida, Nov. 25, 1966). American trumpeter. Stafford played the viola at age eleven, guitar at twelve, and trumpet at thirteen. His early life was spent in Chicago, but he and his family later moved to Silver Springs, Maryland. Stafford attended the University of Maryland, earning a bachelor of music education degree in 1988. Then, with the advice of Wynton Marsalis, Stafford earned a master of music degree at Rutgers University under William Fielder (1988-93).

From 1990 to 1995, Terell Stafford played and recorded with Bobby Watson's Horizon. He later performed with a myriad of leading jazz musicians, including Victor Lewis, Herbie Mann, the Clayton Brothers, Kenny Barron, McCoy Tyner's Latin All-Stars, Sadao Watanabe, the Carnegie Hall Jazz Band (1997), Vanguard Jazz Orchestra, Mingus Big Band, Billy Taylor, Cedar Walton, Bing Crosby's Showband, the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra, Frank Wess Quintet, the Benny Golson Sextet and Trumpet Summit (1999-2000), Alvin Queen (2007), and Kevin Mahogany (2009). Stafford has toured the world, and performs regularly at many of the best-known jazz festivals.

Stafford has appeared on over eighty recordings, and has released five of his own albums as leader: Time to Let Go (Candid), Centripetal Force (Candid), Fields of Gold (Nagel-Heyer), New Beginnings (MaxJazz), Taking Chances (MaxJazz). In 1996, he won the Dean Sherman Performing Arts Award. He has taught at the Boyer College of Music and the Juilliard School, and has been on the faculty at Temple University in Philadelphia for many years. Recently, he received its "Creative Achievement Award." He has also appeared on Jay Leno's The Tonight Show, and Bill Cosby's You Bet Your Life.

Stahl, David ("Dave") (b. Reading, Pennsylvania, Jan. 23, 1949). American trumpeter and bandleader. Stahl's first and only teacher was Walter J. Gier. Stahl served in the US Army from 1970 to 1973, performing as principal trumpet of the US Army Band, Army Herald Trumpets, and Army Blues big band. After his honorable discharge in 1973, he joined the Woody Herman band as lead trumpet. He played lead with Count Basie in 1975, Buddy Rich in 1976-77 (he was also Rich's band manager), Larry Elgart, and Toshiko Akiyoshi. In 1977, he formed his own band called The Dave Stahl Big Band.

During the 1980s and '90s, Stahl freelanced in New York City, performing on numerous television and radio commercials, backing celebrities such as Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald, Tony Bennett, Jack Jones, Mel Tormé, Englebert Humperdinck, Sarah Vaughan, and many others. He played in the house band for television's The Mike Douglas Show and The Big Show, and played lead in several Broadway shows including Saturday Night Fever (1999). In 1994, he played lead trumpet with Neal Peart in a tribute band to Buddy Rich, and recorded the album Burning for Buddy. In 1999, he also played lead with the Vanguard Jazz Orchestra and Blood, Sweat and Tears.

Stahl formed his own record label, Abee Cake Records, in 1987 and his own music publishing company, Dave Stahl Music, and in 1989, added a recording rights company, Dasta Music that licenses many of his compositions and arrangements for big band. Since 1987, he has mostly been freelancing in the New York area, but continues to tour the world with Liza Minnelli and others. He performed for President Reagan at the White House in 1988, and organized his own twenty-one-piece Sacred Orchestra in 2005 that performs religious concerts across the country.

Stahl's recordings are too numerous to list, and he can be heard on dozens of albums with the Army Blues, Woody Herman, Count Basie, Buddy Rich, Liza Minnelli, Frank Sinatra, Tony Corbiscello, Danny D'Imperio, Roland Vazquez, Chaka Khan, Forest Buchtel Jr., the Manhattan Transfer, and others. He has also played on numerous recordings by original Broadway show casts.

Staigers, Charles Aldebert Delaware ("Del") (b. Muncie, Indiana, Aug. 20, 1899; d. North Hollywood, California, July 12, 1950). American cornetist. At the time Staigers was born, his father was in the state of Delaware, so his parents chose Delaware for his middle name. As a boy, Staigers preferred being called "Del."

Staigers heard the Muncie Boys Band when he was six, which inspired him to become a cornet player. He began taking lessons from professor E.W. Garrett of the Muncie Conservatory, and practised several hours each day. Within two years, he was first chair in the boys' band that had inspired him earlier. When he performed his first solo the following year, he was dubbed "The Boy Wonder." At age thirteen, he played his first professional job with the NHDVS Band in Dayton, Ohio. He won a scholarship to the Manlius School, where the great bandleader Patrick Conway noticed him, and engaged him to play at Willow Grove Park near Philadelphia the following summer.

In 1916-17, Staigers was featured on the Keith and Orpheum vaudeville circuits, and in the following year John Philip Sousa hired him to be Frank Simon's assistant. His first tour with Sousa lasted forty-two consecutive weeks. He remained with Sousa through 1920.

Staigers moved to New York City and became first trumpet at the New York Hippodrome, and then the Strand Theatre. A few months later, he was first trumpet for the Okeh Phonograph Company. He joined Nat Shilkret's Victor Salon Orchestra, and played with it from 1926 to 1942. In 1927, he was hired by Edwin Franko Goldman to be his featured soloist. His first solo appearance with Goldman was in Central Park in New York City before 25,000 people; he won an enthusiastic standing ovation. National radio broadcasts of Goldman band concerts soon made Staigers the world's pre-eminent cornet soloist. His recordings of Princess Alice, Napoli, My Heaven of Love, and Carnival of Venice in 1929-30 added to his fame. When Sousa died in 1932, many of his former cornet soloists including Herbert Clarke, Frank Simon, Ernest Williams, Bohumir Kryl, and Walter Rogers attended the funeral. However, it was Staigers who was chosen to perform Taps at the ceremony.

Cornet players from all over America came to study with Staigers. When not touring, he often taught lessons all day. To help as many students as possible, he published several method and exercise books including Modern and Progressive Correspondence Course for Cornet and Trumpet, The Arban-Staigers Complete Celebrated Method for Cornet and Trumpet, and Flexibility Studies and Technical Drills (in two parts).

Staigers, along with Frank Simon and Walter M. Smith, was a member of an all-star cornet trio that was featured during the 1934 convention of the American Bandmasters Association. They performed the premiere of Herbert Clarke's The Three Aces with Clarke conducting. In the same year, Goldman made the difficult decision to fire Staigers because of Staigers's increasing problems with alcohol. Although his drinking didn't seem to affect his playing, alcohol became part of his life for many years.

Upon leaving the Goldman Band, Staigers moved to Hollywood, and began working as a soloist and studio musician. He endorsed the King "Liberty II" trumpet and the King "Master" Cornet. In 1940, he was engaged to be first cornet and soloist with the New York World's Fair Band under Eugene LaBarre. In 1942, he briefly returned to the Goldman Band to fill in for Leonard B. Smith, who had recently joined the Navy Band. In 1943, Staigers returned to California and resumed studio work. He stopped drinking and became one of Hollywood's most recorded musicians. He recorded forty-five jazz sessions on Tom Lord's Jazz Discography with The Virginians (1927-28), and is featured in the children's album, Rusty in Orchestraville.

Staigers died on July 12, 1950. His body was interred at the Hollywood Memorial Cemetery (also known as Hollywood Forever). He is remembered as one of the greatest cornet soloists of all time.

Stamm, Marvin ("Marv") [Louis] (b. Memphis, Tennessee, May 23, 1939). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. The trumpet caught Stamm's attention at age twelve when he first heard Clyde McCoy's recording of Sugar Blues. He studied under Jack Foster, A.E. McLain, and Perry Wilson (Memphis). Stamm later attended North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas), graduating in 1961 under John J. Haynie. Stamm later studied under Renold Schilke, Roger Voisin, Rick Metzger, James Stamp, and Carmine Caruso.

Stamm's talent as a lead player and jazz soloist was discovered by Stan Kenton in 1961. Stamm played in Kenton's band from 1961 to 1962 before joining other bands led by Buddy Morrow, Lionel Hampton, Charlie Spivak, Buddy Rich, Woody Herman (1965-66), the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra (1966-72), Duke Pearson (1967-70), Frank Sinatra (1973-74), the Benny Goodman Sextet (1974-75), Louie Bellson, Maria Schneider, Bob Mintzer (1984), the American Jazz Orchestra, Clark Terry, and the George Gruntz Concert Jazz Band (since 1987).

Having moved to New York City in late 1966, Stamm has been a top call studio player and jazz artist for over forty years. He has appeared at numerous jazz festivals and music conventions, and serves as a guest soloist with hundreds of high school and college jazz ensembles. Among his many albums are Bop Boy (Music Masters), Mystery Man (Music Masters), Machinations (Verve), By Ourselves (Marstam Music), The Stamm/Soph Project (Marstam Music), Elegance (TNC Jazz), Live at Birdland (JazzedMedia), Alone Together (JazzedMedia), Fantasy (Palmetto), The Nearness of Two (GoFour), and The Delaware River Suite (No Blooze Music).

In addition to touring as a guest soloist, Marvin Stamm currently performs in a duo with pianist Bill Mays, and with his own jazz quartet. A distinguished-looking and well-dressed man, Stamm has managed to stay in excellent physical shape into his early 70s.

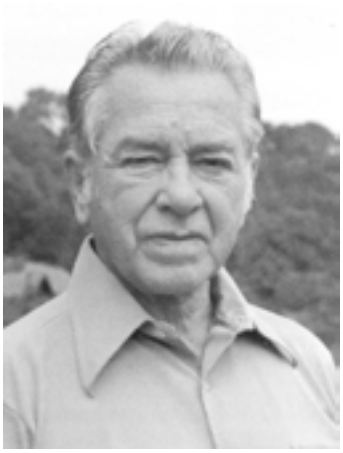
Stamp, James (b. Carberry, Manitoba, Canada, Dec. 20, 1904; d. Whittier, California, Dec. 23, 1985). American trumpeter. Stamp grew up in Rochester, Minnesota, and began playing the trumpet at the age of sixteen. He studied the trumpet with Max Schlossberg and Harry Glantz. During his teen years, he played in the Salvation Army and Mayo Clinic Bands in Rochester. Later, he was the principal trumpet of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (now the Minnesota Orchestra) for seventeen years (1927-44), and recorded with the orchestra on the RCA label with Eugene Ormandy conducting.



Stamp moved to Los Angeles in 1944, and began working in the Hollywood film, radio, and television studios. A heart attack in 1954 caused him to spend more time at home, so he filled his days away from the studios with teaching. He continued studio work until around 1960, and then performed in various community orchestras in the Los Angeles area. His teaching became well known during the 1970s, and many of the southern California professionals took trumpet lessons from him. He gave master classes in Bulle, Switzerland (1976-80), which were very influential. His numerous students included Albert Calvayrac, Pierre Dutot, William Dongois, Conrad Gozzo, Boyde Hood, John Madrid, Jack Millman, Bruno Nouvion, René Périnelli, Anthony Plog, Shorty Rogers, Thomas Stevens, John Taber, Pierre Thibaud, Bert Truax, and trombonist Raymond Katarzinski. His ability to diagnose mechanical problems was extraordinary. Thomas Stevens said of him, I believe James Stamp was one of the finest teachers in the world. His approach was so flexible that I have never seen him fail to improve a player, whether it be an established symphony musician, jazz or "lead" player, or a twelve-year-old student.

During the latter part of his life, Stamp published his exercise book, Warm-ups + Studies (1978), which has become a standard part of the trumpeter's library. BIM published a posthumous book, Supplemental Studies (2009). He died from heart failure at the age of eighty-one.

Stangnes, Hans Petter ("HP") (b. Heggenes, Norway, Sept. 3, 1965). Norwegian trumpeter. Stangnes studied with Arnulf Naur Nilsen at the Music Academy in Arvika, Sweden. He has performed with a variety of ensembles including the Norwegian Chamber Orchestra, Swedish Radio Symphony Orchestra, and Mahler Chamber Orchestra. He is a fine player of the Baroque (valveless) trumpet, and has performed with Anima Eterna, Freiburg Baroque Orchester, Netherlands Baroque Society, Concerto Copenhagen, Oslo Baroque Orchestra, and the Norwegian Baroque Orchestra.

From 1999 to 2005, Stangnes was principal trumpet of the Helsinki Philharmonic. He is still a member of the Finnish Chamber Orchestra, and since 2006 has also been principal of the Kristiansand Symphony Orchestra in Norway. During the 2009-10 season, he held the same position with the Trondheim Symphony Orchestra. He established the Nordic Brass Ensemble in 1993 and serves as its artistic leader and one of its primary music arrangers.

Hans Petter is an avid hunter, fisherman, and outdoorsman, and loves to cook.

Stańko, Tomasz (b. Rzeszów, Poland, July 11, 1942). Polish trumpeter and composer. Stańko first learned classical violin and piano from his father, a violinist and lawyer. He began playing the trumpet at age seventeen, studying at the Cracow Music Academy and graduating in 1969. Through listening to various radio broadcasts of jazz music on Voice of America programs, he became interested in the jazz playing of Miles Davis, Ornette Coleman, George Russell, and Chet Baker. However, since jazz music was officially outlawed in Poland at the time because it represented American culture and lifestyle, Stańko was forced to learn the art in relative secret until the ban was lifted.

Stańko formed his first jazz group, The Jazz Darlings, in 1962. In 1963, he joined Krzystof Komeda's quintet, but after Komeda died in an automobile accident in 1968, Stańko formed his own quintet. In 1970, he joined Alexander von Schlippenbach's Globe Unity Orchestra, and formed a new quintet. Five years later, he cofounded a new group with Adam Markowicz.

Stańko toured a great deal during the 1980s, mostly with Finnish drummer Edward Vesala. During the 1990s, Stańko lost all of his natural teeth, so he was forced to play while wearing dentures. It took a great deal of time, patience, and long tone exercises, but he managed to play again by 1998. His album, From the Green Hill won the 2000 German Critic's Prize for Album of the Year. In 2004, he was honored by the President of Poland with the Order of Polonia Restituta, the second highest medal awarded in his country.

During his illustrious career, Stańko has recorded dozens of albums, including Leosia (1993), Lady Go (1984), The Montreux Performances (1987), and Gotland (1991) for labels such as Power Brothers, Calis, Poljazz, ECM, Black Saint, Spree, Tutu, Muza, Intuition, Caprice, Leo, Utopia, Polonia, Gowi, and ITM. He has toured the United States and Canada (2005), as well as numerous other countries. Considered to be Poland's most famous musician, Stańko has performed or recorded with dozens of leading artists including Chico Freeman, Howard Johnson, Rufus Reid, George Adams, Nils Landgren, Manfred Schoof (since 1970), Albert Mangelsdorff (since 1970), Michael Urbaniak & Attila Zoller (1973), David Murray, Reggie Workman, Dave Holland, Jack DeJohnette, Lester Bowie, Manu Katché, and Don Cherry. The London Times called him "Europe's most consistently innovative jazz trumpeter." He plays on a mouthpiece bent forty-five degrees at the base, allowing a better bell angle for microphone placement.

Stapleton, William ("Bill") John (b. Blue Island, Illinois, May 4, 1945; d. Chicago, Illinois, July 15, 1984). American trumpeter. Stapleton attended North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) from 1963-67 and in 1971. He began his career with Joe Reichman, Ralph Marterie, Buddy Morrow, Don Jacoby, studios in Dallas, Texas, and Stan Kenton's Neophonic Orchestra (1966). After playing in the North Texas Lab Band (1971), he toured with Woody Herman's band from 1972 to 1974. He then moved to Los Angeles in 1974 and soon worked with Neal Hefti (1974) and Bill Holman (1974-75). He was an active arranger who contributed several works for the bands with whom he played. One of his last significant appearances was with Woody Herman's band during the 1981 Concord Jazz Festival.

Although Stapleton did not record any albums as leader, he can be heard on CDs such as The Raven Speaks (with Herman on Original Jazz Classics), Giant Steps (for which he arranged five titles, with Herman on Original Jazz Classics), and Palette (with Alan Broadbent on Granite). Bill Stapleton's death at the age of thirty-nine resulted from alcoholism.

Stark, Robert ("Bobby") Victor (b. New York, New York, Jan. 6, 1906; d. New York, New York, Dec. 29, 1945). American trumpeter. Stark began playing the alto horn at the age of fifteen. He later played the piano and various reed instruments before learning to play the trumpet under the noted teacher, Eugene Mikell Sr. He turned professional in 1925 and briefly played with the bands of Edgar Dowell, Leon Abbey, Duncan Mayers, Bobbie Brown, Billy Butler, Charlie Turner, McKinney's Cotton Pickers, and Chick Webb's first group (1926-27). His early style was rather staccato and harsh but displayed a wild enthusiasm for the music. During the 1930s, it became much smoother and more melodic. His playing influenced Roy Eldridge.

Stark's most important time was spent with Fletcher Henderson's orchestra from 1928 to 1933. He was a featured soloist whose 1933 recording of King Porter Stomp has a better trumpet solo than the later and more famous Bunny Berigan version with Benny Goodman. Stark recorded with the Chocolate Dandies in 1930 and played briefly with Elmer Snowden in 1932. He was with Chick Webb's band from 1934-39 but was not featured all that much. From 1939-40, he played in the Webb ghost band under Ella Fitzgerald.

Stark was in the Army from 1942 to 1943. After discharge, he played with Garvin Bushell (1944) and Benny Morton (1944), and recorded with Helen Humes. During his brief life, he recorded for the Columbia, Victor, Decca, Vocalion, and Parlophone labels. Sadly, he died at the young age of thirty-nine.

Steele, Colin (b. Glasgow, Scotland, Feb. 17, 1968). Scottish trumpeter and composer. Steele began his career with the pop group, Hue and Cry, during the 1980s, and toured Europe as a jazz performer from 1990 to 1996 while living for two years in France, after which he moved to England (where he attended the Guildhall School of Music and Drama) and then to Italy. He returned to Scotland in 1997.

Steele has received numerous awards as a jazz player and composer. His works are largely influenced by Scottish and Irish folk music; his CDs include Twilight Dreams (2002, on the Caber label), The Journey Home (2003, Caber), Through the Waves (2005, ACT), and Stramash (2008, GAD). He has collaborated on a number of successful theatrical projects including The Little World of Don Camillo, Look Back In Anger, Colin Steele Quintet Plays Miles Davis, A Funny Valentine (a theatre show based on the life, music, and drug addiction of trumpeter Chet Baker), and Colin Steele's Stramash.

Steele-Perkins, Crispian (b. Exter, England, Dec. 18, 1944). British trumpeter. Steele-Perkins was sent to boarding school when he was seven, and began learning to play the trumpet on his own. At age eight, he started taking lessons from Bernard Brown of the London Symphony Orchestra. At age fourteen, he became a member of the National Youth Orchestra (1958) and soon attended the Guildhall College of Music where he studied with Brown, but never completed his diploma because he started to play in various professional groups in London.

Steele-Perkins became a fulltime orchestra player at age twenty-one. However, the conductor of the orchestra took a dislike to him and made his life miserable, which broke his confidence, leading to a temporary nervous breakdown. He resigned from the orchestra, but the next day, two of his friends died in an automobile accident, and he was called to substitute for one of them in the English National Opera Orchestra, and ended up becoming a member of the orchestra from 1966 to 1974 alongside Denis Egan, the principal trumpet player. He then joined the Gabrieli Brass Ensemble (1976-84), an early music ensemble that included James Watson on first trumpet. Watson had become the principal of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, and helped hire Steele-Perkins as assistant principal of that orchestra in 1976. Steele-Perkins was later promoted to coprincipal, and played with the orchestra through 1979, covering all first parts whenever Watson was away with the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble.

Throughout the 1980s and first half of the 1990s, Steele-Perkins spent his career playing in the London movie and television studios. He recorded over eighty soundtracks for such films as Star Wars, Jaws, Batman, Ghandi, Excalibur, and For Your Eyes Only. Television credits include The Antiques Roadshow, Highway, and Dr. Who. He has even played lead trumpet for Led Zeppelin, CurvedAir, and Barclay James Harvest. His interest in collecting and restoring old pre-1900 trumpets led to his performing with the King's Consort (1985-2009), Academy of Ancient Music, Collegium Musicum 90, Taverner Players, Tafelmusik of Toronto, Barcelona Chamber Orchestra, English Chamber Orchestra, English Baroque Soloists (1980-91), Amsterdam Baroque Orchestra, and Parley of Instruments. Since 2009, he has been a member of the Retrospect Ensemble.

Steele-Perkins is well known for his masterful performances of oratorios by Handel, Purcell, and other English Baroque composers. (At last count in 2013, he has recorded Handel's Messiah eighteen times!) He has released twenty solo albums using period and modern instruments, and has published the book, Trumpet, which details the history of the instrument and offers musical exercises. He has presented hundreds of lecture-recitals on the history of the trumpet, demonstrating many of his over one hundred historical instruments. He received the Monk Award in 2004 for his many contributions to the history of the trumpet.

Steele-Perkins and Angela Helen Hall were married in 1961 and had three children: Emma, Guy, and Kate. After Angela died in 1991, he and Jane Elizabeth Mary Steele-Perkins were married in 1995. His hobbies include antique trumpet collecting and tennis.

Stegmann, Richard (b. Schönau [Eisenach area], Germany, Mar. 9, 1889; d. Würzburg, Germany, Apr. 3, 1982). German trumpeter and cornetist. Stegmann was one of the greatest orchestral trumpeters and pedagogues of the early twentieth century. A cornet and trumpet virtuoso, he studied violin and trumpet at the Eisenach School of Music from 1903 to 1907. During the summer of 1907, he became principal trumpet of the spa orchestra in Bad Berneck, and from October of 1907 through September of 1909, he was drafted into the military regiment in Gotha, Thuringia. Following his service years, he joined the Kaim Orchestra in Munich (now the Munich Philharmonic, 1911-12) and, briefly, the Elberfeld-Wuppertal State Orchestra (1911-12).

Stegmann was principal of the Tonhalle Orchestra in Zurich, Switzerland, during the 1912-13 season, and became principal of the Berlin Philharmonic from 1913 to 1925. From 1938 to 1954, he served as a professor at the Bavarian State Conservatory in Würzburg. He was famous throughout all Germany for his performances of the works of J.S. Bach, including the Second Brandenburg Concerto.

Stegmann wrote Elementary Method for Trumpet, as well as his popular Transposition Method for the Orchestral Trumpeter. These books are part of today's standard repertoire for trumpet. He retired in 1954.

Steininger, Karl (b. Zwettl, Lower Austria, Oct. 20, 1956). Austrian trumpeter. Steininger's first lessons were with his uncle. He then studied with Franz Weiss at the University of Music and Drama in Vienna from 1970 to 1979, and while still a student, was a trumpeter in the Baden Municipal State Theater Orchestra from 1977 to 1979 and also learned the profession of brass instrument maker. From 1978 to 1980, he played in the Tonkünstlerorchester of Lower Austria.

Since 1980, Steininger has been principal trumpet of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra. He also played Baroque (valveless) trumpet in Nikolaus Harnoncourt's Concentus Musicus from 1983 to 1992. He joined the faculty at the Vienna Conservatory in 1985, and in 1988 became a guest professor at the Innsbruck dependence of the Salzburg Mozarteum. Steininger has given master classes in various countries, including Japan annually since 1992.

Steinkopf, Otto (b. Stolberg, Germany, June 28, 1904; d. Celle, Germany, Feb. 17, 1980). German manufacturer. A bassoonist and saxophonist with the Gewandhaus Orchestra of Leipzig, Berlin Chamber Orchestra, Philharmonic and Radio Symphony Orchestras, Steinkopf in 1950 restored the woodwind instruments of the Berlin musical instrument collection that had been dispersed during World War II to escape destruction. He was thus a self-taught woodwind instrument maker, and then opened his own shop in Berlin, continuing with the Hermann Moech Verlag after 1964.

Steinkopf discovered two late-eighteenth century trumpets with vent-holes, which led him to apply the idea to correct the naturally out-of-tune eleventh and thirteenth partials of the natural trumpet, plus a larger vent-hole for the too-sharp tenth partial, f". In 1958 he, with instrument designer and manufacturer Helmut Finke, produced a coiled valveless trumpet similar to the one held by Gottfried Reiche in the famous 1727 portrait of Reiche by Elias Gottlob Haussmann. Although venting holes were not common to trumpets used during the Baroque era, Steinkopf's design led to the widespread use of vent-holes in modern replicas of such instruments. He also manufactured replicas of historic woodwind instruments, making him an important figure in the revival of early music using period instruments. Steinkopf played cornetto (Zink), Baroque bassoon, and even Baroque trumpet in various early music ensembles, including the Cappella Coloniensis and the concert group of the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis, two of the first early music ensembles of the twentieth century.

Stephan, Wolfgang (b. Dresden, Germany, Oct. 13, 1918). German trumpeter. Stephan studied with the famous "Mr. Infallible" Eduard Seifert (1870-1965) in Dresden. At age nineteen, he became the principal trumpeter of the Dresden Philharmonic Orchestra, and upon his retirement in 1969, was replaced by his student, Ludwig Güttler. Stephan was for a short while an assistant professor at the Hochschule für Musik in Dresden, and in 1958 recorded a trumpet concerto by Siegfried Kurz with the Dresden Philharmonic.

Stern, Jeffrey ("Jeff") (b. Manhattan, Kansas, Mar. 4, 1943). American trumpeter. Stern grew up in Cleveland Heights, Ohio. He began playing the trumpet at age nine; his early trumpet teachers were Richard Kolda and Harry Herforth. After graduating from Cleveland Heights High School in 1961, he attended the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston, studying trumpet with Roger Voisin, and earning a bachelor of music degree with honors in 1966, and a master of music degree in 1968. He freelanced in the Boston area from 1963 to 1976, often performing with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops. In these years, he was also principal trumpet of the Boston Philharmonia, the Handel and Haydn Society Orchestra, and the Cambridge Festival Orchestra.

Stern became principal trumpet of the Atlantic Symphony Orchestra, based in Halifax, Nova Scotia, Canada, in 1970. He has been the trumpet instructor in the Dalhousie University department of music in Halifax since 1972, where he has also taught numerous ensemble, repertoire, and methods courses. In recent years, he has edited, arranged, and transcribed several hundred works for trumpet, various brass ensemble combinations, concert band, and jazz band.

Stern has two sons, Henry (b. 1979, employed in upper level Internet security) and Michael (b. 1982, a pediatrician). His hobbies include digital photography.

Steuart, Richard Carson (b. Weyburn, Saskatchewan, Canada, Jan. 31, 1956). Canadian trumpeter. Steuart began playing the trumpet at age nine under the direction of his father, a telecommunications engineer and amateur brass player. Six months later, he took lessons with John Harding in Regina. Steuart's progress was astounding, and by age ten he was performing solos by Herbert Clarke on regional television. At age eleven, he won first prize in the Canadian National Music Competition (for children up to age sixteen) playing Hummel's Concerto in E-flat. At this same time, he was featured on a national tour as soloist with a professional big band (performing solos by Al Hirt and others) as part of the Canadian National Centenary celebration.

At the age of twelve, Steuart became the second trumpet of the Regina Symphony Orchestra (1969), and was promoted to principal (1971-74). He was also a member of the National Youth Orchestra of Canada (1970-75). He won first prize in the brass division in the Canadian National Music Festival competition (1976), and first in the CBC Radio and Television Competition for all instruments. The Canada Council of the Arts awarded him funding to study abroad: he studied in Philadelphia with Frank Kaderabek (1976), in Chicago with Vincent Cichowicz (1977), in New York with Mel Broiles and Theodore Weiss (1978), and in London with Philip Jones (1978). He also took lessons from Rolf Quinque in Germany.

By 1978, Steuart's career was taking off. He began touring as a soloist, and recorded for Audite, Orfeo, Koch International, Music Minus One, Virgin, RCA, EMI-Electrola, and his own label, La Tromba. He became the principal trumpet of the German Opera on the Rheine in Düsseldorf (1978-79) and the Bamberg Symphony Orchestra (1979-83). He was a cofounder of German Brass (1979), and also founded and directed the Munich Brass (1983), German Chamber Soloists (1989), European Brass Academy (1990), and European Baroque Soloists (1991). He also won first prize in two major international solo competitions, the Munich Competition (1980) and the Geneva Competition (1981).

Steuart began teaching trumpet at the Würzburg Conservatory of Music (1983), and in 2001 additionally became teacher of historic brass instruments and chamber music at the Bavarian State University in Würzburg (2001). He received an award from the Bavarian Ministry of Culture (2008) for his twenty-five years of service to music. Two years later, he added yet another position as professor at the University of Maribor in Slovenia. He has been a jury member for several international brass competitions. As an entrepreneur, Steuart established his own line of trumpets, mouthpieces, and accessories through his company, La Tromba.

Stevens, Roy (b. 1916; d. Riverside, New York, Oct. 24, 1988). American trumpeter. Stevens's father died when Roy was very young, so Stevens began playing the trumpet in order to help support his family during the Depression. He studied with William N. Costello, and developed an unusual method for playing in the high register of the trumpet.

When Costello died, Stevens published and taught the Stevens-Costello Triple C Embouchure Technique. He taught hundreds of students including Don Ellis, Bentley Ferguson (son of Maynard), Lew Soloff, Paul Bogosian, Lloyd Michaels, Roy Roman, Vince Penzarella, Bill Moriarity, Mike Vax, and Elmer White. Stevens played with the big bands of Jimmy Dorsey, Tommy Dorsey, Bunny Berigan, Benny Goodman (1940s), Claude Thornhill, Raymond Scott, and Coleman Hawkins. Stevens recorded with Kai Winding (1945) and the Manor All Stars (1947). His style of playing was influenced by Roy Eldridge and Dizzy Gillespie. Stevens also formed his own big band, managed by Joe Glaser, who also managed Louis Armstrong's band. The band recorded for London Records, and won Downbeat magazine's Band of the Year Award in 1950. For a while, Stevens taught at the Columbia University Teachers College. Dr. Alan Geller has produced a DVD of the Stevens-Costello method. Stevens's book has influenced several teachers around the world, including Fred Gérard in France. Stevens died of heart failure at the age of seventy-one.

Stevens, Thomas (b. Atascadero, California, July 29, 1938). American trumpeter and composer. Stevens's father, Thomas J. Stevens (aka Stepanian—Armenian ancestry) was a secondary school and later community college educator who taught world history and music. He died when Thomas was in his teens. Stevens's mother, Marian Stevens, was a civil servant in law enforcement who worked for the city of Taft, California. Stevens grew up in southern California and attended the University of Southern California where he received his bachelor of music degree. His early teachers were Lester Remsen and James Stamp. He played in dance bands and country bands in Bakersfield.

He studied with William Vacchiano, principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic, prior to being drafted into the US Army where he served as solo trumpeter of the US Military Academy Band at West Point (1961-64), a position previously held by Mel Broiles, Frank Kaderabek, and Malcolm McNab. Stevens continued his weekly studies with Vacchiano on a regular basis during his military service.

Following the completion of his military obligations, Stevens accepted a one-year position as second trumpet in the Dallas Symphony Orchestra (1964-65 season), and in the following year as assistant principal trumpet. Two years later, he became associate principal trumpet of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, a position he held until 1972, when Maestro Zubin Mehta appointed him coprincipal to share the principal trumpet duties with the incumbent principal, Robert DiVall. Following DiVall's retirement in 1980, Maestro Carlo Maria Giulini appointed Stevens sole principal trumpet with the orchestra. Stevens continued in that capacity until retiring from the orchestra in December of 1999. His reputation as an orchestral player is truly international, and he is known for his extreme accuracy, solid intonation, precise articulation, and large, dark tone. Sir Georg Solti named him principal trumpet of his World Orchestra for Peace that performed in Geneva, Switzerland, for the fiftieth anniversary of the United Nations. Stevens also maintained an active presence in the Hollywood film and television studios (1965-91), working on the soundtrack recordings of over fifty major motion pictures and numerous TV series.

Stevens was a founding member of the Los Angeles Brass Quintet that recorded and performed extensively in the U.S. (1966-74), including a concert during the 1973 National Trumpet Symposium in Denver, and made one European tour. He is perhaps best known for his solo recordings of the contemporary trumpet music of Robert Henderson, William Kraft, Peter Maxwell Davies, Hans Werner Henze, Meyer Kupferman, and others on the Crystal Records label, and he has commissioned many new works. Luciano Berio composed his Sequenza X for Stevens (it was dedicated to Ernest Fleischmann). Stevens has also recorded a great deal of chamber music for labels such as Sony Classical, Decca, Deutsche-Grammophon, and Summit Records. His solo albums include three different discs titled Thomas Stevens–Trumpet (Crystal).

Stevens recorded dozens of albums during his thirty-five years with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, including Joseph Haydn's Trumpet Concerto in E-flat (1974 on Decca) and J.S. Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 under Pinchas Zukerman (reissued on Deutsche Grammophon). He is also a versatile musician who played jazz and country and western music during his youth, both as a trumpeter and pianist, and has recorded two pop-jazz CDs, one with conductor-pianist André Previn, and the other with a group of prominent Los Angeles musicians: André Previn–Thomas Stevens (DRG) and Philharmonic Standard Time (Crystal).

As a composer, Stevens has written numerous works and etudes for trumpet and other instruments. Among his best-known trumpet works are A New Carnival of Venice, Variations on Clifford Intervals, Triangles I, Triangles III (Encore: Doc Severinsen), Segnali (Triangles VI), Changing Meter Studies, 44 Lyric Studies, 8 Studies for 8 Trumpets, Contemporary Interval Studies, and The Moudon Fanfares. Most of his works are published by Editions Bim in Switzerland, a firm with which he has held a long professional association since 1975.

As a noted clinician, Stevens has appeared throughout the world as a guest artist at the National Trumpet Symposium, International Brass Congress (Switzerland), The Trumpet Academy in Bremen (Germany), Center for Advanced Musical Studies at Chosen Vale, Lake Placid Institute, Music Academy of the West, and many other leading venues. He has also been an adjunct faculty member at the University of Southern California and CalArts. He edited James Stamp's Warm-Ups + Studies, and compiled and edited the James Stamp Supplemental Studies [2009] (Editions Bim), composing the original recorded accompaniments for the materials in both books. He has also authored several articles for Brass Bulletin magazine and the International Trumpet Guild Journal.

Stevens received the 1996 Outstanding Alumnus of the Year Award from the Thornton School of Music at USC, and was also awarded a certificate of special recognition by the US Congress for outstanding and invaluable service to the community.

Stevenson, Tommy ("Steve") [H. Thomas] (b. c1914; d. New York, New York, Oct. 1944). American trumpeter. Little is known of Stevenson's early life, or how he developed his impressive upper register. He was one of the first big band lead players to display a fantastic high range. After a stay with Ben Smith's White Hot Orchestra (alongside trumpeter Dave Page in 1932), he came to prominence when he joined Jimmy Lunceford's band in 1933, making many recordings, and then joining Blanche Calloway's band (1935-36). He led his own big band (in Boston, 1936) and also played with Coleman Hawkins, Lucky Millinder, Don Redman (1939-40), and Slim Gaillard. While playing with Cootie Williams's big band in 1944, Stevenson died from a rare strain of lobar pneumonia. He was only thirty years old.

Stewart, Al[bert Pearson] (b. c1927). American trumpeter. Born to Russian and Polish parents, Stewart grew up in the Bensonhurst section of Brooklyn, New York. He began playing trumpet while in junior high, and after graduating from high school enlisted in the US Navy in 1945. He was accepted into the Navy School of Music (studying trumpet with Leo Prager) and was transferred to the Air Force Atlantic Fleet Band in Norfolk, Virginia (1945-46). After his military obligation, he performed with the orchestras of Louis Prima (lead trumpet, 1947), Ray McKinley, Benny Goodman (lead trumpet, 1948-49), Charlie Parker, Bobby Hackett, Buck Clayton, Anita O'Day (1950), Alex Stordhal/Frank Sinatra (1951), Jerry Wald (1952), Billy May (1952), Chico O'Farrill (1952), Benny Goodman (again, 1953 alongside Ziggy Elman, Charlie Shavers, and Louis Armstrong—as a guest), and with such musicians as Maynard Ferguson, Conrad Gozzo, Bernie Glow, Gene Krupa, Claude Thornhill, Woody Herman, Tito Puente, Dizzy Gillespie, Lena Horne, Lee Morgan, Charlie Barnet, Buddy Rich, and many others. He also appeared on television shows hosted by Ed Sullivan, Harry Belafonte, Johnny Mathis, Michel Legrand, Woody Herman, Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gormé, and Jackie Gleason.

Stewart became a popular recording artist during the 1970s, and was one of the first to utilize the B-flat piccolo trumpet in jazz and rock albums. His solo albums include Museum of Modern Brass (RCA, 1975). Having taken a keen interest in photography during the mid 1950s, he gradually devoted all of his time to camera art.

Stewart, Michael ("Patches") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, July 31, 1955). American trumpeter. Stewart grew up in New Orleans and began playing the trumpet in junior high school after a year of French horn. At age sixteen, he made his recording debut with Patti LaBelle. Basically self-taught, Stewart took a few lessons from local teachers and received a few tips from pianist Ellis Marsalis. After graduating from St. Augustine High School, he turned down several scholarships to prominent music schools such as the Berklee College of Music so that he could begin his career as a jazz musician.

Stewart's first professional years in New Orleans were rough, but he eventually started doing studio work and playing with several rhythm and blues bands and pop groups. Along the way, he performed with the Brothers Johnson (1979-80), Quincy Jones (1981-82), David Sanborn, Lenny White, George Duke, Rickie Lee Jones, Al Jarreau (1983-90), and others.

Patches Stewart, who received his nickname while in high school because he liked to wear bell-bottom pants with large patches sewn on them, drew his inspiration from Miles Davis. Since 1989, he has been a member of Marcus Miller's group, which has become the unofficial successor to Miles Davis's band. Stewart has toured Japan, Europe, Australia, and North and South America, and has been a trumpeter with Earth, Wind and Fire, as well as Whitney Houston, Babyface, and Diana Ross. His albums include Blue Patches (Hip Bop), Penetration (Hip Bop), Sun Don't Lie (GRP, with Marcus Miller), Tales (GRP, with Marcus Miller), When Summer Comes (PRA, with Marcus Miller), and Blow. Stewart also played the trumpet voice of the character Louie, a mute trumpeter swan that ultimately finds his voice, in the animated children's film, Trumpet of the Swan.

Stewart, Rex [William Jr.] (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Feb. 22, 1907; d. Los Angeles, California, Sept. 7, 1967). American cornetist. Stewart grew up near Washington, D.C. and learned the piano, violin, and alto horn before taking up the cornet under Danny Doyle. He turned professional at the age of fourteen when he joined Ollie Blackwell's Jazz Clowns and played on various riverboats (1921). He toured with the Musical Spillers (1921-23) and moved to New York in 1923 where he freelanced for most of three years before playing in Elmer Snowden's orchestra from 1925 to 1926. He also spent two months in Fletcher Henderson's band (1926) before moving on to Horace Henderson's Collegians.

Stewart was with Fletcher Henderson again from 1928 to 1930, and was one of Fletcher's top soloists. Feeling a bit uncomfortable filling the shoes of the chair Louis Armstrong had just vacated, Stewart left the band to join McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1931 and early 1932), but returned to Armstrong's old position with Henderson from 1932 to 1933. From 1933 to 1934, Stewart led his own big band and worked with Luis Russell. His recording of Old Man River with Russell is considered a classic. Having been influenced by Louis Armstrong, Bubber Miley, and Bix Beiderbecke, Stewart developed fantastic half-valve effects and often "talked" through his cornet in this manner.

Duke Ellington hired Stewart in late 1934. Stewart played with the Ellington orchestra for eleven years, becoming famous through his many featured solos including Boy Meets Horn (1938), cowritten by Stewart and Ellington. Stewart also led small groups under Ellington's supervision.

In December of 1945, Rex Stewart left the Ellington orchestra. He became a member of Jazz at the Philharmonic and formed his own combo called the Rextet that traveled to Europe in October of 1947, staying overseas until the spring of 1950. His travels included performances and recordings in Australia and a lecture at the Paris Conservatory (1948). He returned to the U.S. and settled in New Jersey, playing Dixieland and swing music into the 1950s. Stewart organized and recorded with Fletcher Henderson's Reunion Band during 1957-58, and appeared on a television special called The Sound of Jazz that featured other great jazz artists including Red Allen, Pee Wee Russell, and Coleman Hawkins.

Stewart made many recordings for labels such as Brunswick, Victor, Vocalion, Bluebird, Classics, and RCA. Many of these recordings are now available on CD as reissues on Prestige, Silitar, Original Jazz Classics, and Columbia/Legacy. Stewart can also be heard in a brief film appearance in the movie Rendez-Vous de Juillet, made while his band was in France (1949).

As his lips gave out during the 1960s, Rex Stewart reduced his playing time. He moved to Los Angeles around 1960 and took jobs as a disc jockey and music critic. He wrote a series of essays that were later compiled into a book called Jazz Masters of the Thirties (Da Capo Press, 1972), and, with Claire Gordon, he cowrote his autobiography Boy Meets Horn (University of Michigan Press, 1991).

Stewart, Timothy ("Tim") (b. Chicago, Illinois, Feb. 21, 1949). American trumpeter. Stewart began playing trumpet while in sixth grade, studying with Harold Rolfing, and with William Scarlett of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra during high school. After graduating from Oak Park-River Forest High School in 1967, he studied with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University from 1967 to 1972, receiving a bachelor of music education degree in 1971, and a master of music degree in 1972. While a student, he performed as a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago from 1969 through 1972. He also took lessons from Adolph Herseth between 1977 and 1986.

Stewart became second trumpet of the North Carolina Symphony in 1972, and is currently associate principal. He has performed with many ensembles, among them the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. During his long tenure with the NCS, he has taken leaves of absence to teach at several universities including the University of Northern Iowa (fall 1979) and the University of Illinois (1982-83 academic year). In addition, he has served as an adjunct faculty member at East Carolina University (1975-76) and Duke University (1976-79). He has also taught at the Brevard Music Center (summers 1974-76) and the MasterWorks Festival in Indiana (summers 2005-07).

Stewart and flutist Cathy Stewart have been married since 1979 and have three children: Chris (b. 1983), Mac (b. 1987), and Lindsay (b. 1992). His hobbies include golf, bicycling, and reading.

Stiegler, Adolf (b. Vienna, Austria, Aug. 18, 1868; d. Vienna, Austria, Dec. 20, 1928). Austrian trumpeter. Little is known about Adolf Stiegler, one of Europe's finest orchestral trumpeters, other than that he was a member of the Vienna Philharmonic from 1888 to 1926, serving as principal trumpet from 1893 to 1909. Stiegler's trumpet colleagues were Victor Christ, Franz Rossbach, and Max Schöniger. His younger brother Karl Stiegler (1876-1932) was a distinguished horn professor and member of the Vienna Philharmonic. Adolf recorded the cornet solo Die Post im Walde with horn quartet accompaniment for the HPE label.

Stiles, Danny (b. Oct. 14, 1932; d. Orlando, Florida, Dec. 29, 1997). American trumpeter. Little is known of Stiles's early life other than that he grew up in central Indiana. While in high school, he excelled at both trumpet and baseball. He had difficulty deciding whether to go into music or professional baseball, but he chose the trumpet. He went on the road with singer Billie Holiday, ending up in New York City where he began his career as a jazz trumpeter and studio musician. He performed with Jake Hanna, Gil Evans (1959), Bette Midler, Jimmy Smith, Gerry Mulligan (1960), Woody Herman, and others. His biggest influences were Chet Baker and Dizzy Gillespie.

During the mid 1960s, Stiles became the contractor for Milt Lindsay, Merv Griffin's musical director. He played lead in the house television bands for The Merv Griffin Show and The Dick Cavett Show, but alcohol began to control his life. Stiles became best friends with Bill Watrous, a trombonist in the Griffin band. Together, they formed the group Manhattan Wildlife Refuge that became quite popular during the 1970s. They recorded two albums for Columbia, Manhattan Wildlife Refuge and The Tiger of San Pedro. Stiles also recorded three albums of his own for the Famous Door label, including In Tandem and One More Time.

Danny Stiles was known as a very talented, but often moody and brooding person. He was a perfectionist who possessed a clear and focused trumpet sound. However, continued alcoholism and discouragement with his career caused him to leave New York and move to Orlando, Florida. His music activities slowed considerably during the 1980s. In the early 1990s, he was a member of Mario Bauzá's band, but depression and alcohol took their final toll when he committed suicide on New Year's Day, 1998. He is survived by his wife and four sons.

Stine, Charles ("Chuck") E. (b. Libertyville, Illinois, Dec. 6, 1935; d. Chicago, Illinois, June 11, 2010). American trumpeter. Born and raised in the Chicago area, Stine began playing piano, but switched to the trumpet under the direction of Ralph Meltzer and George Quinlan. He attended DePaul University where he earned a bachelor of music degree, studying with Renold Schilke. He continued his studies with Schilke at Roosevelt University, earning a master of music degree. He also had lessons with Vincent Cichowicz and Arnold Jacobs, and as a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago, under the coaching of Adolph Herseth.

Stine toured Europe with the 7th Army Symphony from 1958 to 1960 before continuing his career as a free-lance musician in Chicago. He played in the Chicago Pops Orchestra, and for thirty-nine years, managed the stage band for the Chicago Lyric Opera. During his fifty-five year career, he performed with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Joffery Ballet, American Ballet Theatre, San Francisco Ballet, and Bolshoi Ballet. A dedicated teacher, he taught at Roosevelt University (1972-84), the Sherwood Music School, and Schurz High School. He was also the founder and owner of Crown Music Press, a company devoted to publishing brass music.

Charles and trumpeter Sharon [Jacobson] Stine were married in 1991. After a three-year struggle with lung cancer, he died at the age of seventy-four. He is survived by Sharon, daughter Karen (b. 1967) from a previous marriage, and by daughter Linnea (b. 1998). He enjoyed woodworking, photography, fishing, golfing, swimming, traveling, and spending summers at the cottage he built in 1971 in Canada.

Stockham, Jeffrey ("Jeff") Ralph (b. Rochester, New York, Nov. 12, 1958). American trumpeter and horn player. Stockham learned to play the piano, French horn, and trumpet while in high school. From 1979 to 1997, he was a member of various formations including the Airport Funk Band in Syracuse, New York, and earned a master of music degree from the Eastman School in 1982. Since then, he has performed with Rochester Philharmonic, Nate Rawls Big Band, and Central New York Jazz Orchestra which backed such artists as Phil Woods, Jimmy Heath, Slide Hampton, Howard Johnson, Rufus Reid, Marcus Printup, Allen Vizzutti, Wallace Roney, and Byron Stripling. He also played with Bob Mintzer, Chris Vadak, Veralyn & Eloquence, SLC Jazz Collective, Stan Colella Orchestra, Mario De Santis Orchestra, and Eddie Daniels. Since 1986, he has worked part-time as a graphic designer. He has also toured Africa with Jimmy Johnson (1996), and Europe with Thelonious Monk (1997).

Jeff Stockham is the founder of the Excelsior Cornet Band, a Civil War replica band. He is a specialist on the keyed bugle, and won first place in the 19th Century Historic Division of the 2008 National Trumpet Competition by performing Joseph Küffner's Polonaise for Keyed Bugle. He teaches jazz at Colgate University in Hamilton, New York, and is a current member of the Dreaming the Duke Ensemble, George Gruntz Concert Jazz Band, and The Jazz Police (his own group). He is also one of the few great jazz horn players lessons at age six. In 1974, he entered the Cologne Music School where he studied piano and classical trumpet (with Robert Platt), finishing with a concert degree in 1982. During that period he also studied jazz trumpet (with Manfred Schoof). He studied (1978-83) with Pierre Thibaud, Carmine Caruso, Thomas Stevens, and Konradin Groth at the Berlin Karajan Academy. He played with the Junge Deutsche Philharmonie, and beginning in 1972 spent the next twenty-five years collaborating with his father performing in modern music concerts. In particular, his role as Michael in his father's opera cycle, Licht, should be mentioned. He performed in trumpet/organ concerts with Jasper Van't Hof, played with the groups, Key (1974-76), and Riot (1979-80), performed with a Trumpet Trio with Kenny Wheeler and Ack van Rooyen (1980), and performed with Rainer Brüninghaus (1980-84). He also formed his own 1980's group, Kairos (1985-91), and is currently leading his new group, Eternal Voyage. He has also played with Simon Stockhausen, Terje Rypdal, and Bill Laswell. In 2002, he and the Dutch clarinettist Tara Bouman founded the duo Moving Sounds, playing his and his father's works and above all improving intuitively.

Stockhausen, Markus ("Pirol") (b. Cologne, Germany, May 2, 1957). German trumpeter and composer. The son of composer Karlheinz Stockhausen, Markus Stockhausen began taking piano

Stockhausen has appeared worldwide as a soloist at jazz festivals and at contemporary music festivals. He has recorded on over sixty CDs, including a dozen or so solo albums such as New Colours of Piccolo Trumpet (EMI), Clown (EMI), Karta (EMI), Instantanés (Enja), and the Haydn Concerto with a cadenza written by Karl-Heinz Stockhausen. (KHS has also written a cadenza to L. Mozart's Concerto for Markus).

As a composer, Stockhausen has received commissions from such organizations as the RIAS Chamber Choir, The London Sinfonietta, Orchestra d'Archi Italiana, Winterthur Chamber Orchestra, The 12 Cellists of the Berlin Philharmonic, Swiss Jazz Orchestra, and many others. He also composes for film. Stockhausen received the WDR Jazz Prize in 2005.

Stoelzel, Richard ("Rich") P. (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Mar. 25, 1961). American trumpeter. Stoelzel grew up in Auburn, New York, and began playing trumpet at age twelve. His first private teachers were William Machold (ninth grade) and George Coble (tenth grade). After graduating from Auburn High School in 1979, he attended the University of Louisville under Leon Rapier, receiving a bachelor of music degree in 1984.

Stoelzel began his professional career as a member of the US Coast Guard Band (1986-88), serving as cornet soloist and principal trumpet. While in the band, he took numerous lessons with Charles Schlueter in Boston, and Philip Smith in New York. He then earned a master of music degree at the University of Connecticut (1988-89), studying with Daniel Patrylak. He accepted his first teaching post at The University of Southwestern Louisiana, and served as acting third trumpet of the New Orleans Symphony Orchestra from 1989 to 1991. Prior to his winning the national audition for principal trumpet in the newly formed Louisiana Philharmonic Orchestra (comprised mostly of former members of the bankrupt New Orleans SO), he took occasional lessons with James Thompson who was principal trumpet of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra at the time.

Stoelzel left his positions in Louisiana to join the New World Symphony in Florida (1991-93). Then, in 1993, he became a fulltime professor at the Harid Conservatory in Boca Raton, Florida. During his nine years in Florida, he had the opportunity to perform with the Naples Philharmonic, Florida Symphonic Pops, Ballet Florida, and was principal trumpet with the Miami City Ballet Orchestra and the Palm Beach Opera Orchestra in which he still serves as principal trumpet. He also conducted the Harid Conservatory pops orchestra and the Florida Wind Symphony.

Stoelzel accepted his current teaching position at Grand Valley State University in Michigan in 2000. He founded and hosts the annual GVSU International Trumpet Seminar (since 2005), and is an active recitalist and clinician. He has performed with the Baltimore Symphony, Des Moines Opera Orchestra, Dallas Wind Symphony, Louisville Orchestra, Jacksonville Symphony, Aries Trio, Michigan Chamber Brass (on tour), and the Colorado Music Festival Orchestra. He is a Distinguished Guest Professor at the Shenyang Conservatory and Nanchang University in China, and has released two CDs, Born to be Mild and A Mild Fantasie (Albany Records). Stoelzel was the founder of the Avatar Brass and recorded two CDs with Avatar, the very popular Magnetic Rags and Liturgical Fanfares (Klavier label). Avatar was also featured as a guest group on a number of CDs, as well as maintaining a residency at the Coral Ridge Presbyterian Church in Fort Lauderdale, Florida, where they were broadcasted internationally on a weekly basis for three years. He has been a featured artist at several conferences of the International Trumpet Guild, and served as host of the 2013 ITG conference at GVSU.

Rich married Valerie Manzie Stoelzel in 1990. She is currently Concert Manager and Arts Information Officer at GVSU. Their son, Gabriel Michael Stoelzel, was born in 1999. Rich's hobbies include martial arts, bicycling, fishing, tennis, and "trying unsuccessfully to beat my son at X-Box games."

Stokes, Irvin ("Sonny") (b. Greensboro, North Carolina, Nov. 11, 1926). American trumpeter. Stokes began taking trumpet lessons at age twelve and graduated from James P. Dudley High School in Greensboro, North Carolina. He attended the Agricultural and Technical College of North Carolina (currently North Carolina Agriculture and Technical State University) in Greensboro from 1943 to 1947 and played with Lou Donaldson (1947) before moving to New York City in 1947. He jammed in Brooklyn with Charlie Parker, Miles Davis, Leonard Gaskin, and Cecil Payne (1948-49), and began his career with Mercer Ellington's orchestra (1948-49). He later played with the Duke Ellington Orchestra (1949-50), Erskine Hawkins, Tiny Bradshaw, the Jimmy Lunceford ghost band, Andy Kirk (1953-56), Buddy Johnson (1956-58), the house band at the Apollo Theater, and in various pit orchestras for Broadway shows during the 1960s and '70s.

Stokes toured with the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra (1978-79), Panama Francis's Savoy Sultans (1979-85), Oliver Jackson (on and off between 1982 and 1989), Illinois Jacquet's big band (1987-88), the Count Basie Orchestra (1990), and the Statesmen of Jazz (1997-98). His albums as leader include Just Friends (Arbors), Remembering Doc Cheatham (Arbors, with Chuck Folds), Man with a Horn (Blue Note, with Lou Donaldson), Year of the Rabbit (Blue Note, with Bobby Watson), Broadway (Black & Blue), and The Savoy Sultons, Vol. 2 (Classics Jazz).

A serious stroke in 1999 left Stokes unable to play the trumpet. Turning his attention to acting, he has been able to play minor roles in such movies as Angel Heart and Malcolm X.

Stölzel, Heinrich David (b. Scheibenberg, Saxony, Sept. 7, 1777; d. Berlin, Germany, Feb. 16, 1844). German maker. Stölzel was a hornist in the private band of the Prince of Pless. He later (1817-29) played in the Royal Opera orchestra in Berlin, and was a Royal Chamber Musician and instrument repairer to the King of Prussia. He designed a piston-valve mechanism that rendered the cornet, trumpet, and horn capable of playing chromatically with fast technique. He was first seen performing on a horn of this system in July 1814. The instrument was built by the firm of Griesling & Schlott.

Stölzel teamed up with instrument maker Friedrich Blühmel (fl. 1808—before 1845) and obtained a ten-year patent on a tubular (piston) valve with square corners, commonly referred to as the box valve. The square design was quickly abandoned, and the "Stölzel" valve in round-tube form made its first public showing in either 1817 or 1818. The Stölzel valve was simple and inexpensive to make, and was subsequently copied by makers in countries not affected by the Stölzel-Blühmel German patent. Disputes between the two makers, over who actually invented and first manufactured the valve, eventually caused their relationship to cease, but Stölzel managed to retain the rights of the patent, paying Blühmel a one-time sum of four hundred thalers.

Stölzel-valve cornets, trumpets, and horns became ubiquitous throughout Europe and America during the early half of the nineteenth century. They were eventually replaced, however, by the valve system patented by the French maker François Périnet, in 1838, a system still in use today. Despite the advantages of production and cost with Stölzel valves, problems such as ninety-degree bends in bore (the length of the valve was an actual wind-way) and slower action due to the overall length of the valve, made the Périnet system more appealing. Nonetheless, Herbert Heyde writes (and the New Grove Dictionary of Musical Instruments agrees) that according to the sources presently available, the priority problem between Stölzel and Blühmel cannot be resolved. Therefore, both Blühmel and Stölzel together are to be credited for designing and manufacturing the first fully-functioning valve system for brass instruments.

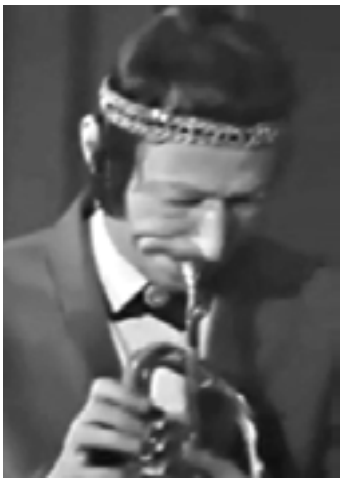
Stone, Fred ("Freddie") (b. Toronto, Ontario, Canada, Sept. 9, 1935; d. Toronto, Ontario, Canada, Dec. 10, 1986). Canadian flugelhornist and composer. Stone's father, Archie, was a jazz saxophone player at the Casino Theater in Toronto. Fred began learning the flugelhorn at age twelve, and by age sixteen was playing in his father's orchestra and with Benny Lewis. He studied trumpet with Donald Reinhardt in Philadelphia during the summers from 1949-55, composition with Gordon Delamont (1955-60), and composition with John Weinzweig (1960-62). Stone attended Metropolitan College in London, England, graduating with a bachelor of music degree in 1964. He became a highly versatile player and was a member of the CBC Symphony Orchestra and the Phil Nimmons band from 1965 to 1970. He also recorded with Duke Ellington as a member of Ron Collier's orchestra in a joint album called North of the Border. Also, from 1969 to 1970 he was a member of the Lighthouse Orchestra.



Duke Ellington hired Stone in 1970. Although his time with Ellington was brief, he did make one album with the Duke called New Orleans Suite (Atlantic). Stone is featured on the tune, Aristocracy à la Lafitte. After leaving Ellington, Stone returned to Toronto, led a few bands and did studio work for television and recordings. He experimented with amplified flugelhorn and with the use of a synthesizer to create a variety of electronically enhanced tonal colors. He also became a fine teacher of young jazz musicians, teaching as an artist-in-residence at Centennial College (1972-73), Humber College (1972-75), and George Brown College (1976). He formed and led a student jazz ensemble called Freddie's Band.

Heart problems in the early 1980s forced Stone to slow down. He continued teaching on a private basis at his home, and devoted much of his time to composing. Among his many compositions (mostly for jazz orchestra or flugelhorn with jazz ensemble) are Leah, Maiera, Reflections on a Theme, Sunshine and Pretty Things, Rice Lake Suite, For Igor, Tribute to Igor Stravinsky, Idea for Orchestra, Stone Poem, Uranus, Alphera, and Young Peoples' Guide to the Jazz Orchestra. His albums include The Music of Fred Stone (RCA) and In Season (Parasol Arts Foundation).

Stone died of heart failure at the age of fifty-one. Given annually by Sound Symposium, The Freddie Stone Award goes to outstanding jazz students.

Stoner, Roger (b. Hays, Kansas, June 1, 1945). American trumpeter. Stoner grew up in Garden City, Kansas. He began playing piano and recorder before studying trumpet with Bueford Roper at the age of ten. He attended the University of Kansas from 1963 to 1967, earning a bachelor of music education degree while studying with Kenneth Bloomquist. From 1967 to 1968, he was a graduate teaching assistant to Peter Ciurczak at Emporia State University. In 1968, he joined the US Marine Band in Washington, D.C., and completed his master's degree and a DMA at Catholic University of America, studying with Lloyd Geisler from 1969 to 1973. After his service years, Stoner taught high school band in the public schools of Virginia for a year before accepting a trumpet professorship in 1973 at the University of Kansas where he was also named associate chair of the music department in 1987.

Stoner was chair of the music department at Eastern Illinois University from 1999 to December 2004. In January 2005, he began serving as Head of the music department at Missouri State University in Springfield, and since 2008 has served as the associate dean of the College of Arts and Letters. During his many years of teaching, he has taught hundreds of trumpeters, among his best-known being Jon Lewis, Alan Hamant, Jon Burgess, Tijuana Julian, Mark Auffarth, Tom Bontrager, David Burt, Greg Clemons, Will Cooper, Andrew Dubowski, Jim Haverstrom, Colin Holman, Ed Kuhn, Doug McClure, Ron McCurdy, John Prescott, David Reynolds, Charles Seipp, Michael Ray Tyler, and Dave Von Blohn.

Stoner and his wife Sheré Stoner, a dietitian and social worker, have two children, Joanne (b. 1968) and Lynn (b. 1971). His hobbies include jogging and running marathons.

Stoppacher, Manfred (b. Friesach, Austria, Apr. 29, 1941). Austrian trumpeter and bandleader. Stoppacher learned to play the trumpet from his father. He later studied at the State Conservatory in Klagenfurt and with Helmut Wobisch at the Vienna Hochschule für Musik.

A highly versatile musician, Stoppacher began his career playing classical music at the Vienna Opera, Volksoper, and in the Johann Strauss Orchestra, and jazz with the ORF Big Band and the Bucktown Six (1958). He also performed with Fatty George and Bill Grah. From 1969 to 1984, he was a member of the RIAS Big Band in Berlin, which backed many famous artists including Bob Brookmeyer, Stan Kenton, Gil Evans, Oliver Nelson (1970), Toots Thielemans, Art Farmer, and Ray Conniff, among others. He toured under the name Stoppy Markus with his Original Swingtime Big Band and his Manfred Stoppacher Big Band.

Stoppacher is a noted composer and arranger who writes mostly for big band. He has been married to trumpeter Carole Dawn Reinhart since 1972, and serves as her manager. They live in Vienna.

Stork, John (b. Washington State, Nov. 29, 1954). American trumpeter and mouthpiece maker. Stork's career began as a trumpet player in the US Air Force Band for six years, after which he toured for a while with the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra.

During the fall of 1980, Stork went to the Giardinelli Band Instrument Company in New York City where he asked owner Robert Giardinelli for a job. Giardinelli hired him as his assistant, and over the next year taught Stork how to customize mouthpieces. Stork became head of the Giardinelli's Custom Pro Shop.

Stork and his wife, trumpeter Phyllis Stork, formed Stork Custom Mouthpieces in Plainfield, Vermont, to produce high quality brass mouthpieces, which are endorsed by several celebrity artists including William Vacchiano. They coauthored the book, Understanding the Mouthpiece (Editions BIM, 1989). They have two sons.

Stork, Phyllis Elena (b. New York City, New York, Jan. 17, 1955). American trumpeter and mouthpiece maker. Stork studied at New York's High School of the Performing Arts, and was encouraged by her teacher Gerard Schwarz to attend The Juilliard School where she studied with William Vacchiano, and began working as a freelance musician in New York. She performed with the New York Trumpet Ensemble (led at the time by Schwarz), the Alexander Schneider Festival Orchestra, and the Marlboro Music Festival Orchestra (summers of 1976-80, performing with the great Rudolf Serkin.). She was selected to participate in Lincoln Center's Young Artists Program, performing at numerous area schools with a brass quintet. She has played chamber music with Gerard Schwarz, Wynton Marsalis, and violinist Joseph Silverstein.

When Stork married John Stork, they founded Stork Custom Mouthpieces to produce high quality brass mouthpieces. They have coauthored the book, Understanding the Mouthpiece, published in 1989 by Editions BIM in Switzerland (in six languages). She is also a frequent clinician at universities and conventions throughout the world.

The Storks have two sons. She has a fifth degree black belt in the art of Shaulin Kempo Karate.

Stout, Ron (b. California, May 22, 1958). American trumpeter. Stout was born into a musical family. He joined the local musicians' union at age fifteen and studied music at Orange Coast College and Golden West College. As a teenager, he won numerous national and international awards for jazz improvisation.

At age twenty-seven, Stout went on the road with the Woody Herman Band led by Frank Tiberi (1986-87). He later played with Horace Silver (1992-93), Bill Holman, Phil Norman's Tentet, Bob Florence, Buddy Childers, Frank Capp, and Jack Sheldon. He became a top Los Angeles sideman, backing such artists as José Feliciano, Frankie Laine, Lou Rawls, Debbie Reynolds, Gloria Loring, The Righteous Brothers, Patti Page, Steve Lawrence and Eydie Gormé, Bobby Short, Tony Bennett, Frank Sinatra Jr., The Temptations, the Four Tops, Maureen McGovern, Kay Starr, Mel Tormé, Jack Jones, Cab Calloway, the Mills Brothers, Bill Watrous, Al Cohn, Arturo Sandoval, Dizzy Gillespie, Maynard Ferguson, Scott Hamilton, Buddy DeFranco, Richard Stoltzman, Billy Eckstine, Nancy Wilson, the Dukes of Dixieland, and dozens more.

Ron Stout has recorded on hundreds of albums, and is best featured on CDs such as Live at the Lighthouse (Seabreeze), Yesterday's Gardenias (Seabreeze, with Phil Norman), It's Got to Be Funky (Columbia, with Horace Silver), Pencil Packin' Papa (Columbia, with Horace Silver), and For Chet and Other Heroes (Jazz House).

A skilled ballad and bop player, Stout presents clinics and performances around the world. He is currently teaching on a part-time basis at California State University, Long Beach.

Stowman, William ("Bill") (b. DuBois, Pennsylvania, Sept. 22, 1963). American trumpeter and conductor. Stowman, the son of a police chief and a homemaker, grew up in Brockway, Pennsylvania.

He began learning to play the trumpet at age nine; his early teachers and mentors include George Monaco, Donald Routch, and Nancy Hills. He graduated from Brockway Area High School in 1981, and attended Indiana University of Pennsylvania from 1981 to 1984 where he earned a bachelor's degree in music education studying with Dr. William Becker. He received master of arts and master of music education degrees a year later at Eastern Kentucky University, where he studied with Dr. Kevin Eisensmith. He then accepted a position as interim director of bands at Transylvania University in Lexington during the 1993-94 academic year. From 1994 to 1996 he was a resident doctoral student and teaching assistant to Dr. Keith Johnson and John Holt at the University of North Texas, and eventually completed his DMA degree in 1998. He also studied conducting with Eugene Corporon.

Stowman has taught at Messiah College in Grantham, Pennsylvania, since the fall of 1996, where he currently teaches trumpet and directs the school's top jazz ensemble and trumpet ensemble, and during his tenure there, has also conducted the bands and choir. He is founder and director of BrassCross, a brass choir comprised of Messiah faculty and students that specializes in the music of Gabrieli. He has performed and recorded with the Messiah College Faculty Brass Quintet, Keystone Wind Ensemble, The North Texas Wind Symphony, The Philadelphia Brass, The Lexington Philharmonic, San Antonio Symphony, San Angelo Symphony, Garland Symphony, and Tromba Mundi. His solo CD is titled Matter of Seconds (MarkCustom Recording). He has received the Dr. Robert and Marilyn Smith Award for Excellence in Teaching at Messiah College, as well as the Citation of Excellence in Teaching at the College Level from the Pennsylvania Music Educators Association.

Stowman has been chair of the music department at Messiah College since 2001. He cohosted (with pianist Rebecca Wilt) the 2010 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and has served as an artist-faculty member at the National Trumpet Competition.

Stowman and his wife Lynn have four children: Mitchell (b. 1993), Carter (b. 1996), Olivia (b. 1999), and Elliot (b. 2003). His hobbies include cycling, hunting, fishing, and being in the outdoors.

Stratton, John F[ranklin] (b. West Swanzey, New Hampshire, Sept. 14, 1832; d. Brooklyn, New York, Oct. 23, 1912). American instrument maker. During his youth, Stratton learned to play the trombone, keyed bugle, and cornet; his older brother George William Stratton (b. West Swanzey, New Hampshire, Aug. 1, 1830; d. Berlin, Germany, Oct. 14, 1901) learned clarinet, and violin. John was a bandleader in Worchester, Massachusetts, and also received training as a machinist. He opened a retail music store in Hartford, Connecticut, and became leader of the Hartford Cornet Band. In 1859, he moved his store to New York City where he began producing brass and percussion instruments. He also conducted Stratton's Palace Garden Orchestra.

With the start of the Civil War in 1860, Stratton realized the potential of selling band instruments to the government. He partnered with John Howard Foote (1833-96) to form a company called Stratton & Foote, which became a major supplier to the military, producing as many as one hundred instruments each day and employing over two hundred workers. Over sixty thousand Stratton & Foote instruments were used during the Civil War, most of them being field bugles and over-the-shoulder-trumpets. In 1865, Stratton patented what may have been the first practice mute for cornet.

In 1866, Stratton established another factory in Markneukirchen, Germany, moving it to Gohlis (near Leipzig) in 1868. He also opened a string instrument factory in Gohlis, employing three hundred workers. Becoming weary of the long commute between New York and Germany, he sold both factories in 1883.

In 1889, in partnership with his son, Frank, Stratton established a new company, Stratton & Son, which lasted until 1895. John continued running his own company until his death in 1912. He had imported thousands of instruments made in France by Courtois and M. Goulet.

Stratton was a respected musician and entrepreneur. He composed numerous marches, waltzes, polkas, and quicksteps for military brass band including Goodnight My Angel, Arizona Quickstep, The Moon Is Above Us, Memories of Home Waltz, and Brin d'amour Polka. The American Brass Quintet recently recorded these works on the album, The Yankee Brass Band: Music from Mid-Nineteenth Century America (New World). His brother, George William Stratton (b. West Swanzey, New Hampshire, Aug. 1, 1830; d. Berlin, Germany, Oct. 14, 1901), was a composer and publisher of military band pieces.

Streitwieser, Franz Xaver (b. Laufen, Germany, Sept. 16, 1939). German trumpeter. Streitwieser grew up in Southern Germany, only a few miles from the Austrian boarder. His mother bought him an old Heckel B-flat rotary trumpet when he was a boy. He later enrolled in a music school in Laufen, and received his first lessons from a hornist named Franz Neumann. He also learned to play on an E-flat natural (valveless) trumpet and played in a local band. At age sixteen, he attended the Mozarteum in Salzburg where he studied with Fritz Krammer. He began performing Baroque works (his idol at the time was Adolf Scherbaum) and building a collection of instruments to expand his repertoire. Many of the instruments he collected were "old-pitch" trumpets that were obsolete.

After graduating from the Mozarteum in 1961 at the age of twenty-two, Streitwieser received a government grant to study in Vienna with Josef Levora. In 1963, he married Katherine Schutt, a wealthy American student studying in Vienna. The couple moved to New York City where Franz attended The Juilliard School, studying with William Vacchiano. After a few months, Vacchiano told him that he would only be able to give him lessons every two weeks, so Streitwieser began studying instead with Mel Broiles at the Manhattan School of Music. Broiles had a large number of trumpets and encouraged Franz to continue building his own collection.

Streitwieser accepted a position as principal trumpet of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Freiburg in Germany and worked as an assistant professor at the Freiburg Music Academy. With his wife's help, he began searching for more instruments to collect. In 1972, Streitwieser was stricken with an aural problem that affected his sense of pitch, so he was forced to leave his positions in Freiburg. He was hospitalized for six weeks, but doctors were unable to resolve his condition, and advised him to seek treatment in the United States. The couple moved to Pennsylvania, where after three years, he was finally diagnosed as having a severe allergic reaction to milk products; after successful treatment, he resumed playing and studied with Gilbert Johnson of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Streitwieser became an American citizen in 1975. However, in 1976 he and his family (they now had three of their four children) moved back to Freiburg where he became director of a local music school. They returned to the U.S. in 1979, and purchased a farm near Pottstown, Pennsylvania, where they established the Streitwieser

Foundation. In 1980, they opened a converted large historic barn as the Streitwieser Trumpet Museum, which held a large book library, concert stage, and several exhibition rooms for his one thousand plus instruments.

In 1992, Katherine was diagnosed with leukemia and died in March of 1993. Without the financial support of Katherine's family, Streitwieser struggled to keep the museum going. He married Kitty, a long-time friend of the family, in 1995. In the following year, the instrument collection was moved to the Kremsegg Castle in Kremsmünster, Austria, only a few miles from where Streitwieser's ancestors had once lived. The collection now includes over twelve hundred brass instruments of which approximately four hundred are on display. On October 21, 1996 Streitwieser received the Gold Medal of Merit from the Austrian government.

Streitwieser currently spends his retirement time living in Austria and Florida. He is the first trumpet and clarin-soloist of the Central Florida Bach Festival Orchestra, and has recorded a CD of works by Neruda and others on a modern B-flat (valve) posthorn. He is the author of numerous articles concerning the history of the trumpet, and has published The Flugelhorn, a book coauthored with Ralph T. Dudgeon.

Strickler, Benny (b. Fayetteville, Arkansas, Jan. 9, 1917; d. Fayetteville, Arkansas, Dec. 8, 1946). American trumpeter. After playing in several local bands in Arkansas, Strickler moved to California in 1936. There, he played with the orchestras of Ben Pollack, Joe Venuti, the Seger Ellis Brass Choir (with whom he made his recording debut), Vido Musso, and Wingy Manone. He toured with Bob Wills's Texas Playboys from 1941 to 1942.

Strickler joined the military in 1942 and played with the Yerba Buena Jazz Band during World War II. The band made several radio broadcasts and recorded six tunes while he was with them. (These recordings have been reissued on record #4409 by the Good Time Jazz label.)

After only a few weeks in the military, Strickler was diagnosed with tuberculosis and had to stop playing. He returned to his hometown of Fayetteville and was placed in a sanatorium where he passed away at the age of twenty-nine due to pneumonia.

Strickler and his wife Francis had two daughters, Diane and Janet. He was a strong family man who was described by Danny Alguire as follows: Benny was always thin and he never ate right. He was just so busy playing that he didn't think about eating. Every once and a while he'd say "Gee, I'm hungry. Let's get a hamburger or a bowl of chili," but he just lived to play, you know. So that led to TB, I'm sure. He never could get any meat on him. God, he was just a beanpole. About six feet tall and I don't think he weighed 135 pounds.

Stringer, Alan (b. Dec. 8, 1928; d. Sept. 8, 2012). British trumpeter. Stringer taught himself to play the cornet in 1937 at the age of eleven. He played in brass bands and freelanced before becoming the cornet soloist of the Royal Air Force Central Band. He also performed with the Covent Garden Opera, and was first trumpet of the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic in 1953.

As early as 1954, Stringer distinguished himself by playing difficult trumpet parts such as the Concerto by Leopold Mozart under Fritz Spiegl. The peak of his career was his short stay as principal trumpet in the prestigious London Symphony Orchestra (1960-61). He performed Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto under Sir Adrian Boult (1964), and toured the United States with the London Philharmonic Orchestra (1971). After 1962, Stringer was back as principal trumpet in the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic until he retired from music.

Stringer is mostly remembered for his recording of Haydn's Concerto in E-flat (Argo). He also recorded Handel's The Messiah many times (London, Decca, and EMI labels), and made one recording under his own name titled Trumpet and Organ at Liverpool Cathedral of works by Charpentier, Clarke, Greene, Purcell, Boyce, Bach, Roman, Viviani, and Fiocco. He also recorded with the Liverpool Brass Ensemble.

Stringer taught at the Royal College of Music in Liverpool. Like Denis Egan, David Mason, Dennis Clift, and Bernard Brown, Stringer became a legend among the British orchestral trumpet players, but underrated because of his personality. Trombonist Denis Wick said of him,...quiet and unassuming, Alan set high standards for first trumpet playing. Stringer was able to not play his instrument for weeks, and then play as well as always. He had a lovely tone and good intonation. He quietly retired to Nérac, a little village in southern France.

Stripling, Byron [Lloyd] (b. Atlanta, Georgia, Apr. 20, 1961). American trumpeter. His father was a classically trained vocalist and teacher. Byron began playing trumpet in Lexington, Kentucky, during fourth grade. His family moved to various places during his childhood including Colorado, Minnesota, Missouri, and Texas. He spent several summers at the International Music Camp in Interlochen, Michigan, where he studied with Leon Rapier. He also took lessons with Ronald Hasselmann and Michael Brand at other times. Stripling spent his senior year of high school attending the Interlochen Arts Academy under Larry Herman.

Wanting to become an orchestral trumpeter, Stripling attended the Eastman School of Music (1979-83) where he studied during his freshman year with Sidney Mear, and his remaining years with Charles Geyer. His focus turned to jazz when he was invited to perform a twelve-week tour of Europe with Clark Terry's band (1981). Through Clark Terry's recommendation, Stripling auditioned for Lionel Hampton and joined Hampton's band in 1983. A year later, Stripling played with Woody Herman's big band (1984). In 1985, he joined the Count Basie Orchestra under the leadership of Thad Jones and later, Frank Foster. He toured and recorded with the Basie band for nearly five years until he won an audition to star in a Broadway production of Satchmo, a musical based on the life of Louis Armstrong (1987). The three-month tour started in New Orleans and toured northward to Boston.

After a successful run of Satchmo, Stripling returned to the Basie band. He then moved to New York City and played in Broadway pit orchestras for such shows as City of Angeles, Jelly's Last Jam, and How to Succeed in Business. He performed with the Carnegie Hall Orchestra led by Jon Faddis, recorded soundtracks for television including The Young Indiana Jones Chronicles, 20/20, CNN, and the annual Grammy Awards Show. Along the way, he played lead with the big bands of Buck Clayton, Dizzy Gillespie (1988), Louis Bellson, and Slide Hampton (1993).

Stripling has released two solo albums, Byron – Get One Free, and Stripling Now! He has recorded seven albums with the Basie organization and has also recorded with Tony Bennett, Natalie Cole, Sonny Rollins, Jim Hall, Jack McDuff, Carla Bley, Joe Henderson, Lena Horne, Big Daddy Kane, Gerry Mulligan, Carol Sloane, Benny Green, J.J. Johnson, Freddie Cole, and Paquito D'Rivera, plus several cast productions of Broadway musicals. He has recorded under such labels as Verve, RCA, Ken, Columbia, MCD, Warner Bros., Global, Phillips, GRP, Blue Note, Electra, Atlantic, Fantasy, Telarc, Concorde, and Denon.

Byron Stripling is in great demand as a soloist with symphony orchestras and has appeared with the Boston Pops Orchestra, Minnesota Orchestra, New York Pops, Vancouver Symphony, Rochester Philharmonic, Virginia Symphony, Seattle Symphony, Toronto Symphony, Baltimore Symphony, Cincinnati Pops, Pittsburgh Symphony, National Symphony, St. Louis Symphony, Detroit Symphony, Utah Symphony, American Jazz Philharmonic, Carnegie Hall Big Band, Lincoln Center Classical Jazz Orchestra, and the GRP All Star Big Band.

A trumpeter with a very wide range, Stripling has become one of the leading jazz trumpeters of the world. Stylistically, he credits Roy Eldridge, Cootie Williams, Lee Morgan, and Kenny Dorham as having inspired him. He leads his own quartet and is the artistic director of the Columbus (Ohio) Jazz Orchestra (since 2002). He is also a busy clinician at schools and music festivals. He lives in Westerville, Ohio with his wife Alexis (a writer, poet, and retired dancer) and their daughters.

Stuart, Glenn (b. c1932; d. Laguna Beach, California, May 26, 2002). American trumpeter. Glenn Stuart received a bachelor of music degree from Ithaca College and a master of music degree from New York University. After graduation, he taught in the public schools of Maryland before moving to California. Stuart studied under Benny Baker and Louis Maggio.

Stuart was a lead trumpeter in bands led by Don Ellis (thirteen years), Tony Pastor (one year), Richard Hayman, Ralph Marterie (five years), Jimmy Dorsey (six months), Les and Larry Elgart, and Stan Kenton. His work in various television studios can be heard in episodes of Mission Impossible, Doctor's Hospital, and The Ed Sullivan Show. His movie credits include The French Connection (with the Don Ellis Orchestra) and Movin' On. He also taught high school band in the public schools of southern California. He was a featured guest artist at the 1977 International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Illinois.

In addition to his playing, Stuart wrote many books and articles: The Art of Playing Lead Trumpet, Chord Approach to Improvising (Colin), Create Your Own Phrases (Colin), Encyclopedia of Modern Improvisation (Colin), Lessons in Rhythm & Syncopation (Colin), Jazz Improvisation (Colin), Jazz & Ad Lib (Colin), Jazz Soloist (Colin), Modern Jazz Passages (Colin).

After retiring, Stuart spent much of his time sailing and traveling to Mexico. He married Lendie LaVerne who was taking care of her quadriplegic daughter (due to a 1982 automobile accident). The couple's marriage turned sour and they became separated. When Lendie filed for divorce, Glenn became depressed. According to Lendie's daughter who had become concerned when her mother did not return home, on May 26, 2002 police went to Stuart's residence to check on Lendie who was visiting that day. Police found the bodies of Glenn and Lendie in the bedroom. Evidence showed that Glenn had shot Lendie several times in the chest with a .38 caliber pistol before shooting himself twice in the head. It was a tragic end to a great lead trumpeter's life.

Sturdevant, Douglas Payson ("Pace") (b. Chadron, Nebraska, c1948). American trumpeter. Sturdevant's father was a high school band, choir, and orchestra director. While growing up in Ferndale, Michigan, Douglas began playing the cornet at age ten. He attended Ferndale High School for a while, but eventually transferred to the Interlochen Arts Academy where he graduated in 1966. He won a full scholarship to the University of Michigan under Clifford Lillya, graduating with a bachelor's degree in 1970, and a master's degree in 1971. While still a student, he joined the Toledo Symphony Orchestra in nearby Ohio as second trumpet in 1969. He was moved up to principal in 1970. During several summers of his college years, he attended the Aspen Music Festival, and during the summer of 1971 studied at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, Austria.

Sturdevant became second trumpet of the National Arts Centre Orchestra in Ottawa, Canada, in 1974. (Philip Collins was principal.) He was appointed principal in 1975, a position he held until retiring from the orchestra in 1999. (Karen Donnelly was his successor.) He soloed with the orchestra many times during his twenty-four-year tenure, including twice on tour. He taught at various conservatories and universities, including McGill University, the University of Ottawa, Conservatoire de Musique du Québec, and the State University of New York in Potsdam.

Pace Sturdevant is also a fine conductor who has led the Ottawa Chamber Orchestra, University of Ottawa Orchestra, and the McGill Brass Choir among other organizations. He is deeply involved in educating young musicians in Canada and has been involved with the Ottawa Youth Orchestra Academy since 1986.

Suddendorf, Richard ("Dick") J. (b. Cincinnati, Ohio, c1932). American trumpeter. Suddendorf earned a bachelor of music degree at the University of Cincinnati, and a master of music degree at the University of Illinois, studying with Haskell O. Sexton. He became the brass teacher and marching band director at The Ohio State University from 1956 to 1970, where he taught Thomas Battenberg (trumpet) and Gail Eugene Wilson (trombone), among others. He was also a trumpeter in the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Columbus Brass Quintet, and the Kenley Players Orchestra.

Suddendorf moved to Westerville, Ohio, in 1970 where he assumed duties as director of bands and orchestras at Capital University. He also conducted the Columbus Junior Symphony for two years. Then, in 1979, he accepted a position as trumpet professor at Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo. One of his best-known students is Dr. Stephen G. Jones, who has been a professor of trumpet at WMU since 1972. When Suddendorf retired in 1991, he moved back to Westerville, Ohio, but decided to again teach at Capital University. He conducted the Westerville Ohio Concert Band, and founded the Vintage Brass Quintet.

Suddendorf received Distinguished Teacher Awards from each university he taught at. In 1975, he was awarded the Citation of Excellence by the National Band Association, and has also been awarded the Orpheus Award for significant contributions to music in America. He was inducted into The Columbus Senior Musicians Hall of Fame in 2005.

Sudhalter, Richard ("Dick") Merrill (b. Boston, Massachusetts, Dec. 28, 1938; d. New York, New York, Sept. 19, 2008). American trumpeter, cornetist, and writer. Sudhalter is remembered as a musician and author. As a performer, he used the name Dick, but as a writer he went by Richard (and also the pseudonym, Art Napoleon).

Sudhalter's father Al was a jazz saxophone player who instilled a deep appreciation for early jazz in his son. Inspired by listening to the numerous Bix Beiderbecke albums from his father's record collection, young Richard (who took up the cornet at age twelve) decided to become a professional musician. Through his father's connections and friendships, Richard, while still in high school in Boston, was allowed to sit in with such jazz greats as Steve Kuhn, Chuck Israels, Pee Wee Russell, Bud Freeman, and Jimmy McPartland. Sudhalter attended Oberlin College in 1956, studying music and English literature and taking trumpet lessons from Louis Davidson of the Cleveland Orchestra.

After graduating from Oberlin College in 1960, Dick Sudhalter moved to Salzburg, Austria, and then Munich, Germany. He taught English and played in the Bavarian State Radio jazz ensemble. He joined the US Army in 1964 and became a correspondent for United Press International, covering the Soviet Union's invasion of Czechoslovakia. During the 1960s, he played with Ben Webster, Dexter Gordon, Heinz Schellerer Sextet, Dieter Seiffert Orchestra, Alfred Winter, and the Pepsi Auer-Peter Trunk Jazz Ensemble.

After his military obligations, Sudhalter continued his work for UPI (until 1972) after moving to England where he played with the Anglo-American Alliance (1966-68) and Sandy Brown (1972-74) and cofounded the New Paul Whiteman Orchestra in 1974-75.

Sudhalter returned to the U.S. in 1975, settling in New York City. He played with the New York Jazz Repertory Company (1975-79) and in several traditional and mainstream jazz groups including the New California Ramblers (1976-78), Loren Schoenberg Orchestra (beginning in 1981), Classic Jazz Quartet (1984-87), and Mister Tram Associates (1987-88). He became a writer and music critic for the New York Post newspaper (1978-84), wrote numerous liner notes (including the 1983 Grammy Award-winning album, Bunny Berigan: Giants of Jazz), and coauthored with Philip R. Evans a book titled Bix—Man and Legend. His second book became quite controversial; Lost Chords: White Musicians and Their Contributions to Jazz, 1915-1944 (Oxford) and was often attacked by readers who felt that it diminished the significance of blacks in creating jazz as an American art form. Sudhalter's last book, Stardust Memory, a biography of composer Hoagy Carmichael, received ASCAP's Deems Taylor Special Citation for Excellence.

Sudhalter recorded several albums as leader, including Anglo-American Alliance (Jazzology), Get Out and Get Under the Moon (Stomp Off), After a While (Challenge), With Pleasure (Audiophile), Dick Sudhalter and Connie Jones (Challenge), Melodies Heard Melodies Sweet (Challenge), and Time Waits for No One (Music Masters, with Loren Schoenberg). He also played on the soundtracks for films such as Zelig, Broadway Danny Rose, and The Shooting Party.

Dick Sudhalter suffered a stroke in 2003 that forced his retirement from trumpet playing. The condition later caused him to lose speech, and he ultimately died from pneumonia at the age of sixty-nine. He was survived by his two daughters, Adrian and Kimberly, from an early marriage (divorced) and Dorothy Kellogg, his twenty-two-year living companion. His sister Carol is a jazz tenor saxophone and flute player.

Suggs, Robert ("Bob") (b. Stillwater, Oklahoma, Aug. 8, 1949). American trumpeter. Suggs grew up in Ponca City, Oklahoma. He began playing the cornet at age ten; his early private teachers were Larry Gebhardt and Gerald Hemphill; Homer Luther, owner of a local music store, and cornetist in Herbert L. Clarke's Long Beach Municipal Band, also influenced him. Suggs switched to trumpet in tenth grade, and after graduating from Ponca City High School in 1967, earned a bachelor of music education degree at Wichita State University, studying with Walter Myers from 1967 to 1971.

Suggs became a member of the US Army Band "Pershing's Own" in 1972, and during his three years in the band, studied with Lloyd Geisler at Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., receiving a master of music degree in 1974. While in the Army, he was a member of The Army Herald Trumpets for six months in 1972, and was one of the original members of the Army Brass Quintet. From 1974 to 1993, after his military service, he was a member of the Annapolis Brass Quintet, America's first fulltime performing brass ensemble, which toured the world and released fifteen record albums. The quintet's complete library of over one thousand pieces, manuscripts, correspondence, and other archival material was donated to Oberlin Conservatory, which maintains it in a special collection. From 1993 to 1998, Suggs attended the University of Maryland, studying with Emerson Head, and completing a doctor of musical arts degree. During the course of his doctoral work, he conducted extensive research into Austrian trumpet and brass ensemble literature and performance, particularly relating to Karl Pilss, Helmut Wobisch, and Richard Strauss. In 1994, he concurrently became a fulltime faculty member at Villa Julie College (now Stevenson University), and is now the director of the music program and conductor of the Greenspring Valley Orchestra that he founded in 2002. During his long and distinguished career, Suggs has performed with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, National Symphony Orchestra, Kennedy Center Symphony, National Gallery Orchestra, and Baltimore Opera Orchestra.

Suggs is married to Barbara Lee, a writer known primarily for her mystery novels. His hobbies include expanding his musical horizons by studying voice with William Ray (Peabody Conservatory) and piano with Ernest Ragogini (University of Notre Dame of Maryland). Other hobbies include ballroom dancing (particularly the Argentine tango), international travel, and genealogical research.

Sugiki, Minéo (b. Toyama Prefecture, Japan, Mar. 25, 1945). Japanese trumpeter. Sugiki began playing trumpet at age fourteen. He studied at the National Conservatory in Tokyo under Fujio Nakayama (1966-70), receiving a bachelor of music degree. He then studied at the Paris Conservatory with Maurice André (1970-72) and had additional studies with Pierre Thibaud. From 1972 to 1975, he was principal of the Lyons Symphony Orchestra in France, and in late 1975 returned to Japan to play with the Sapporo Symphony Orchestra and the Chamber Orchestra of Saitama. In addition, he has performed with a variety of ensembles including the Gabrieli Brass Quartet, Kioi Sinfonietta, Saito Memorial Orchestra (since 1994), Mito Orchestra (since 1994), Ensemble of Tokyo (since 1987), and the Mito Chamber Orchestra (since 2003).

Sugiki has been on the faculty of the Tokyo University of the Arts since 1981 (full professor in 2002), and since 2009 has served as director of The Performing Arts Center in Tokyo. His sons Junichio and Kaoru are trumpet players.

Sulieman, Idrees Dawud ibn [born as Leonard Graham] (b. St. Petersburg, Florida, Aug. 7, 1923; d. St. Petersburg, Florida, July 28, 2002). American trumpeter. Leonard Graham's early professional experience was with the Carolina Cotton Pickers (1939-43), Earl Hines Orchestra (1943-45), Benny Carter (1944-45), and Sabby Lewis big band (1943-45). He also studied at the Boston Conservatory from 1943 to 1945. He found that by converting to the Islam religion, he would be classified as "white" by the Boston police, thus being able to perform at white nightclubs. He converted and became known as Idrees Dawud ibn Sulieman.

Sulieman played with Louis Jordan (1945), Mary Lou Williams, Thelonious Monk (1947), Cab Calloway, Count Basie, Dizzy Gillespie, Illinois Jacquet's jump combo, Lionel Hampton, Miles Davis, Ella Fitzgerald, Tadd Dameron, and Friedrich Gulda (1956, at Newport). When other black musicians saw that he was able to enter white-only restaurants and bring out sandwiches for his friends, many of them also converted to Islam.

Sulieman played on a 1957 recording with Coleman Hawkins where he demonstrated circular breathing by holding a single note during several choruses of music. He worked with Randy Weston (1958-59) and toured Europe with Oscar Dennard in 1961. He moved to Sweden in the early 1960s and settled in Stockholm in 1964. He doubled on alto sax, and performed with radio orchestras and the Kenny Clarke-Francy Boland Big Band.

During his long career, Idrees Sulieman recorded with many great jazz musicians, including Thelonious Monk, Coleman Hawkins, Randy Weston, the Clarke-Boland Orchestra, Gene Ammons, John Coltrane, Donald Byrd, Max Roach, Tommy Flanagan, Mal Waldron, Eric Dolphy, Dexter Gordon, Horace Parlan, Thad Jones, and the Don Byas-Bud Powell band. His albums include Now Is the Time (SteepleChase), Bird's Grass (SteepleChase), Groovin' (SteepleChase), Jammin' in Hi Fi (Original Jazz Classics, with Gene Ammons), Blue Gene (Original Jazz Classics, with Gene Ammons), Stockholm Sessions (Enja, with Eric Dolphy), The Hawk Flies High (Original Jazz Classics, with Coleman Hawkins), and Tribute to Cannonball (Columbia/Legacy, with Bud Powell).

Sulieman returned to the United States during the mid 1990s and retired in his hometown of St. Petersburg, Florida. He died of bladder cancer one month before his seventy-ninth birthday.

Sullivan, Ira Brevard Jr. (b. Washington, District of Columbia, May 1, 1931). American trumpeter, flugelhornist and saxophonist. Sullivan comes from a musical family. His father taught him to play the trumpet at age four, and his mother taught him saxophone at about the same time. At age six, Ira played on the radio, imitating Clyde McCoy's version of Sugar Blues. By age seven, he was playing professionally.

Sullivan moved to Chicago in 1947 and became a leading jazz musician. His ability to play trumpet and tenor saxophone equally well drew a great deal of attention, and he soon added all of the saxophones (soprano, alto, and baritone), flugelhorn, and flute to his arsenal of instruments. He was a member of the house band at the Bee Hive club from 1952 to 1955 where he played with Bennie Green, Paul Quinichette, Sonny Stitt, Howard McGhee, Roy Eldridge, and even Charlie Parker (Feb. 1955).

Sullivan joined Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers in New York in 1956, but after missing Chicago for a few months, he returned home. In 1962, he moved permanently to Miami, Florida, where he led several local groups in Miami and Ft. Lauderdale, and taught at the University of Miami. In 1980, he cofounded a quintet with trumpeter Red Rodney (Sullivan played mostly saxophones) that became a leading modern jazz group.

Ira Sullivan's albums include Nicky's Tune (Delmark), Blue Stroll (Delmark), Bird Lives! (Vee Jay), The Incredible Ira Sullivan (Stash), Ira Sullivan...Does It All (Muse), Strings Attached (on his own Strings-Attached label), Horizons (Atlantic) and Ira Sullivan (A&M). He also made several record albums with Red Rodney: Hi Jinx at the Vanguard (Muse), Night and Day (Muse), Alive in New York (Muse), and Spirit Within (Electra Musician). He was a hard bop player who transformed his style to free jazz when he started working with Rodney. He is now considered a jazz legend.

Sullivan, Robert ("Bob") (b. Norwood, Massachusetts, Oct. 26, 1961). American trumpeter. As a youth, Sullivan was interested in classical and jazz music, and was associate principal trumpet of the Massachusetts Youth Wind Ensemble. He realized that he wanted to be a career trumpeter when he performed La Virgen de la Macarena with his high school band. He attended the University of Michigan, studying with Armando Ghitalla, and also studied at the Tanglewood Institute. He participated in the All American College Band at Disneyland.

After completing studies in 1984, Sullivan joined the US Air Force Band in Washington, D.C. where he was a frequent soloist, and occasionally performed with the National Symphony Orchestra. Upon his release from the military, he joined the Chicago Chamber Brass, a quintet that toured many countries. He also spent two years touring with the trumpet-organ duo, Toccatas & Flourishes.

Sullivan began his orchestral career as associate principal trumpet of the Charleston Symphony Orchestra in South Carolina (1989-92). He became associate principal of the New York Philharmonic in 1993, and was also a member of The Principal Brass, a quintet made up of the first chair players in the orchestra. Sadly, Sullivan's wife developed terminal cancer around 2002, and wanted to be with her family in Cleveland, Ohio. Fortunately, Robert won a position as assistant principal and third trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra, so they moved to Cleveland in the fall of 2003. (His wife passed away soon after.) Sullivan accepted a position as principal of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra and Cincinnati Pops Orchestra in 2008, succeeding Philip Collins. He was a frequent soloist with both orchestras, and made his CSO solo debut with Music Director Paavo Jarvi.

Sullivan has taught at the Manhattan School of Music, Charleston Southern University, College of Charleston, the Cleveland Institute of Music, and the Mannes College of Music. In March of 2013, he accepted a position as professor of trumpet at Northwestern University to begin in the fall of that same year. He has performed with the Summit Brass, Canadian Brass, Empire Brass, and the German Brass. His two solo CDs are Treasures for Trumpet and Kaleidoscope, both on the Summit Records label. Sullivan has been a frequent recitalist, and has commissioned several works by major U.S. composers, including Eric Ewazen, James Stephenson, Jack Gallagher, and Joseph Turrin. He also taught several summers at the Hamamatsu Instrumental Music Academy in Japan and the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute hosted by Summit Brass. Sullivan has done a great deal of studio work in New York, recording for film and television, as well as performing for numerous live television specials including the Grammy Awards. He has been an important designer for Yamaha trumpets and mouthpieces.

Sullivan received a citation from the US Congress in recognition of his outstanding contribution to community service. His hobbies include running, cooking, and automobiles (especially his classic Porsche 911).

Sullivan, William ("Bill") Dennis (b. Eureka, Utah, Feb. 8, 1925). American trumpeter. Sullivan was raised in Park City, Utah, where he began playing the trumpet at age eleven in his school's band program. After graduating from Park City High School in 1943, he enlisted in the Army and was stationed in a post band in the South Pacific. After his service years, he attended Brigham Young University from 1946 to 1950, graduating with a bachelor of music degree. Although he had no formal trumpet lessons at BYU, he did have some impromptu lessons with Benjamin Klatzkin when the Los Angeles Philharmonic was in residence at BYU for a week. He also studied with Victor Kress in San Francisco from 1950 to 1952.

Sullivan began his orchestral career as principal trumpet of the Utah Symphony in 1952. He also taught elementary school band from 1952 to 1954, but was forced to give up public school teaching when the orchestra became full time. He can be heard on many recordings with the Utah Symphony, including A Trumpeter's Lullaby, Quiet City, and Lincoln Portrait, narrated by Charlton Heston and conducted by Maestro Maurice Abravanel. He served as an adjunct professor at the University of Utah for over twenty years, and gave clinics at BYU during the summer music programs. He retired in 1981, although he continued to maintain a large private trumpet studio until 2005. He taught thousands of students of all ages.

Sullivan and his wife Norma were married in 1949 and have two children, D. Vincent (b. 1954) and K. Sean (b. 1957). He enjoyed playing golf throughout much of his life.

Bibl.: personal interview, May 8, 2011.

Summers, Bob (b. Turlock, California, Aug. 21, 1944). American trumpeter. Summers's first instrument was a bugle that he received as a Christmas present at age seven. At age eight, he began taking cornet lessons. He eventually switched to trumpet and attended the Navy School of Music in 1963. After his service years, he enrolled in the Berklee College of Music in Boston in 1967 and graduated in 1971. He then played with Woody Herman (1971-72), Maynard Ferguson (1973-75), Bill Holman (1978-79), and Count Basie (1980-85).

After leaving Basie's band in 1985, Summers settled in Los Angeles, although he rejoined Holman's band for a while. He formed the Bob Summers Quintet and has been very active during recent years. Summers has recorded two albums as leader—Inside Out and Joy Spring, both on the Discovery label.

Sutphen, Albert H. (b. Columbus, Ohio, Jan. 21, 1897; d. Hamilton, Ohio, 1970). American trumpeter. Sutphen studied in Chicago with Alfred Wendon (1910-11), New York with Max Schlossberg (1923), and Chicago with Edward Llewellyn (1925-26). He performed in a Lyceum group called Sutphen's Metropolitan Men (with brother Frank, a trombonist, and others) and played in the house orchestra at the Ada Means (vaudeville) Theater in Lexington, Kentucky before joining the 158th Depot Brigade Band as cornet soloist at Camp Sherman in Chillicothe, Ohio. After his military years, he returned to Chicago where he was a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago (1922-23) and a salesman for the Conn-Chicago music store.

Sutphen replaced Albert Ulrich as third trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in 1926, and became second trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra during the 1926-27 season. He spent his last years as a school band director in Hamilton, Ohio.

Sutte, Jack (b. Oconomowoc, Wisconsin, Aug. 26, 1973). American trumpeter. Sutte began playing trumpet just before fifth grade (age ten) when his parents John and Nacye, both music educators, gave him his first trumpet. Jack's first trumpet teacher was his elementary school band director, Dwayne Block. He also had lessons with Rick Grothaus, Tonya Broyles-Brouillard, and David Reul. However, his primary private teacher during high school was Patricia Backhaus. Sutte also attended the Interlochen Arts Camp in Michigan where he studied with J. Craig Davis and Michael Davidson, and had an opportunity to take lessons from Adolph Herseth and Charles Geyer in Chicago.

After graduating from Oconomowoc High School in 1991, Sutte attended the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia (1991-95), studying with Frank Kaderabek. He then earned a master of music degree at The Juilliard School (1995-97) under Raymond Mase, and studied with Chris Gekker at the Aspen Music Festival and School. While freelancing in New York, he substituted as principal trumpet with the Charleston Symphony Orchestra, New World Symphony, and made his international solo debut in Mendoza, Argentina. In the fall of 1998, he accepted a fulltime position as principal of the Bergen Philharmonic in Norway. However, he resigned his position in December of that year to begin his current orchestral job as second trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra in January of 1999.

Sutte was on the faculty of the Oberlin College Conservatory from 2000 to 2002. He has been on he faculty of the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory in Berea, Ohio, since 2003, and has given master classes throughout the United States, Europe, and Japan. He has released a CD titled Beyond the Moon (self-produced).

Sutte married attorney Audra J. Zarlenga on August 13, 2005. Their children are Maya Edith Grace (b. 2005) and Louis John ("Louie") (b. 2006). His hobbies include cycling, running, duathlons, reading, and playing historical trumpets and cornets.

Swana, John E. (b. Norristown, Pennsylvania, Apr. 26, 1962). American trumpeter. Jazz artist John Swana is considered one of the finest and most active jazz trumpeters today. He began playing the trumpet at age eleven. His mother, a classically trained voice major at The Juilliard School and Temple University, arranged for him to take private lessons when he was twelve, but he was not interested in practicing what was assigned. As a result, he took lessons from numerous teachers but didn't get serious about music until, at seventeen, he listened to recordings of Dizzy Gillespie and Clifford Brown. After graduating from Methacton High School in Collegeville, Pennsylvania, he attended West Chester College (now West Chester University) for three years under Kenneth Laudermilch. Swana decided to switch majors from music education to jazz and transferred to Temple University in Philadelphia. After studying with Mike Natale at Temple for a few years, Swana graduated in 1987 at the age of twenty-five.

Swana's early career began in Philadelphia, but he eventually moved to New York City. He has performed with hundreds of leading jazz musicians including Shirley Scott, Tom Harrell, Joe Sudler, Brad Mehldau, Chris Potter, Jimmy Coles, Eric Alexander, Ralph Brown, Robin Eubanks, Slide Hampton, J.J. Johnson, Jon Faddis, Cecil Payne, Mickey Roker, Terrell Stafford, Bud Mintzer, Freddie Hubbard, Philly Joe Jones, Clark Terry, Don Patterson, Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Uri Caine, Sam Newsome, Phil Woods, and Trudy Pitts.

Most of Swana's solo albums are on the Criss Cross label. His first album was titled John Swana and Friends. Others include Feeling's Mutual, In the Moment, Philly-New York Junction, Tug of War, Philly Gumbo, and On Target. He has also recorded dozens of other albums with artists such as Eric Alexander, Charles Fambrough, Barbara Montgomery, Gerald Veasley, Bobby Zankel, Tom Harrell, Tito Puente, Chris Potter, Ralph Bowen, Pablo Batista, Jimmy Greene, Lou Lanza, Brian Trainor, Joel Weiskopf, Lenny White, Siora, Lisa Mason, K-Jazz All Stars, Huffamoose, Peter Leitch, Clarence Penn, J.D. Walter, Peter Smyser, Vic Stevens and Mistaken, Mike Boone, Demetrios, Orrin Evans, Benny Golson, Philadelphia Experiment, Minas, and others.

Sweet, Albert (b. Dansville, New York, July 7, 1876; d. Chicago, Illinois, May 12, 1945). American cornetist. Sweet's parents were musical: his father was a fine violinist, and his mother was an excellent pianist. At age seven, Sweet began studying the violin with his father, and at age ten began playing the E-flat cornet. He joined the Stowe Brothers Circus at age fourteen, and met bandmaster Marty Long, who convinced him to switch to the B-flat cornet (1890). After leaving the circus, Sweet traveled from town to town by hopping train boxcars, and played on street corners for pocket change.

At about the age of twenty, Sweet went to New York City and became acquainted with the great W. Paris Chambers. Chambers took an interest in him, and gave him lessons for free. This was the only formal instruction Sweet ever had on the cornet, and for the rest of his life he continued practising all of the fundamentals Chambers had taught him.

Between 1897 and 1899, Sweet performed in the New York area with various orchestras, and theatre and Central Park bands. In 1899, he became Music Director for the Edison Phonograph Company in East Orange, New Jersey. In addition to organizing musicians for many recordings and playing in most of the groups, he also recorded several solos for Edison. Later, he recorded a few solos for other labels such as Leeds, Catlin, and Columbia. Some of Sweet's recorded solos are Arbucklenian Polka, In Happy Moments, Louisiana Lou, Love's Old Sweet Song, Moth & Flame, Prismatic Polka, Sea Flower Waltz, and Grand Russian Fantasia.

Sweet assumed duties as the director of the Ringling Brothers Circus Band in 1905, and remained with it until the end of the 1911 season. From 1912 to 1914, he was the conductor of the Denver Municipal Band, with which he performed solos mostly by Jules Levy, John Hartmann, T.V. Short, and W. Paris Chambers. Just prior to World War I, Sweet established White Hussars, a group of nine musicians that toured the vaudeville and Chautauqua circuits. A little later, the group was booked by Mr. Dunbar, became known as Dunbar's White Hussars, and performed at fairs and other venues until 1933.

For most of Sweet's life, he preferred to travel; he claimed that staying in one place too long made him bored. He lived in Chicago his last few years, where he conducted several bands and continued to compose band music. His better known band works include Bandolero, Bronco Busters, and Ringling Bros. Grand Entrance.

Sweet was described as a very handsome and amiable man, who was always well dressed. He died at the age of sixty-eight.

Swift, George (b. South Shields, England, Sept. 26, 1911; d. Bexhill, England, Apr. 13, 1985). British trumpeter. Swift's first trumpet teacher was his father, also named George. As a boy of ten, young George played in the Bolden Colliery Band, and later in the Hebburn Colliery Band and Marsden Colliery Band. At age fifteen, he joined the St. Hilda's Colliery Band in which he played for three years.

Around 1930, Swift joined The London Sonora Band, an English dance band led by Bobby Hines that toured throughout Germany and Switzerland. It was during this tour that he met his future wife Elfriede in Dresden. He then played in the Bernard Etté dance band until 1934. He auditioned for the Jack Hylton orchestra, and played with it in London in 1935, and again in 1937-39. During World War II, he was with the Band of the Irish Guards, playing for troops in England, North Africa, and Italy. While in the military, he secretly performed at night in Mantovani's orchestra. After the war, he freelanced in London. In 1941, he joined the Sydney Kaye Orchestra and was a leading freelance musician throughout the 1940s and 1950s.

Around 1960, Swift joined the Mantovani orchestra fulltime. He became internationally known through his hit recordings with this orchestra, especially for his solo, What Kind Of Fool Am I in 1965. In 1961, Swift was featured in a Mantovani television show playing Elfriede, a composition he wrote for his wife. He moved to Spain, but commuted for many performances and recordings with Mantovani during the 1960s. He and his wife opened a launderette in Marbella, Spain where he often played at the bullfights. He premiered Iain Hamilton's Concerto for Jazz Trumpet with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra in 1957. Swift left Mantovani in 1970 and returned to England to play at the London Palladium. He also played three seasons of ice shows before retiring to Spain in 1973.

After retiring as a performer, Swift taught privately from his home. His favorite trumpeters were Bunny Berigan, Harry James, and Louis Armstrong. He played an Olds "Ambassador" Trumpet.

Swift's recordings have inspired thousands, especially his early recordings of The Jolly Twins (1931, but released in 1934), Sonia (his own composition named for his daughter in 1936), Zigeunerweisen (1936), Elfriede (1938), and La Capricciosa (1938). These recordings were the favorite of the legendary Rafael Méndez. Swift also recorded Elfriede and Il Bacio in 1952, and A Trumpeter's Lullaby with Mantovani in 1960. His incredible flexibility and ease of playing in the upper register make his recordings collector's items among trumpet players everywhere. By his own admission he wanted to be able to play like Jack Mackintosh, but an octave higher!

Swift had three sons: George, Turner, and Lindy; and a daughter, Sonia. He died at a nursing home in Bexhill, England, at the age of seventy-four.

Szabo, Rich (b. Newark, New Jersey, Mar. 16, 1956). American trumpeter. While growing up in Livingston, New Jersey, Szabo began playing trumpet at age eight. His early teachers were Edith Rothrock and Vernon Miller, while his idol was Maynard Ferguson. He turned professional at age sixteen, and took lessons with Stan Mark while attending high school. After graduating from Livingston High School in 1974, he earned a bachelor of music degree under Rich Gradone at Fairleigh Dickinson University (1974-78). He also studied with Jimmy Maxwell from 1973 to 1980. Soon, he fulfilled his dream by joining Maynard Ferguson's band.

After leaving Ferguson's band, Szabo moved to New York City for a short while where he formed his own band. Over the years, he also played in the bands of Buddy Rich, Sammy Kaye, Charli Persip, Xavier Cugat, Buddy Childers, Sonny Costanzo, Charlie Ventura, Ray Anthony, Billy May, Larry Elgart, Guy Lombardo, and Tito Puente. He has also performed or recorded with the Four Freshmen, The Temptations, Melissa Manchester, Regis Philbin, Frankie Valli, the Four Lads, The Chordettes, Steve Martin, Frank Sinatra Jr., Keely Smith, the Four Tops, Johnny Desmond, Joan Rivers, Natalie Cole, and many others. He was principal trumpet of the New Jersey Ballet Orchestra in 1977, and played with the New York Pops orchestra and the New Jersey Pops Orchestra. As a studio player during the late 1970s and 1980s, he recorded many jingles for companies such as Dr. Pepper, Nabisco, Coca Cola, CBS, NBC, and Burger King. He led his own big band at the New York Brass Conference for Scholarships. He lived in New Jersey for many years, but settled in Pocono Summit, Pennsylvania.

Szabo was hit by a drunk driver in 1992, making him unable to play the trumpet for over a year. He received help from Dave Stahl, Rick Henly, Joe Mosello, and Jeff Parke, and was able to overcome his physical problems. However, he became ill again in 2002 and was unable to play for six months. Thanks to the playing routine given to him earlier by Maxwell, and coaching by Henly and Dennis Noday, he came back relatively quickly.

Rich Szabo has released many CD albums: Big Bands '80s, Vol.3 (1980), Best of Both Worlds (1981), Jumpin' On The Bandstand (1982), Big Bands '80s, Vol.4 (1983), Manhattan at Dusk (1994), Breezy Summer (1997). He is a fine composer and arranger who has received many awards and honors, and served on the Recording Industry Association of America's marketing committee (1980-81) and the Congressional Business Advisory Council (2000-06).

Szabo's hobbies include golf, fishing, photography, and gardening.

Tabakov, Mikhail [Innokentyevich] (b. Odessa, Russia, Jan. 6, 1877; d. Moscow, Russia, Mar. 9, 1956). Russian trumpeter. Tabakov is today considered to be the father of the Soviet School of trumpet playing; his beautiful tone made him famous. His teacher, Willy Brandt, is perhaps historically more important, but Brandt was a cornetist.

Little is known of Tabakov's early life, other than that he began playing the trumpet at age twelve. He studied at the Odessa School of Music (1889-92) and then with the famous Willy "Vasily" Brandt. Tabakov made his debut in the Odessa Symphony Orchestra (1881), and then played in symphony and opera orchestras in Yalta, Sevastopol, Kharkov, Kiev, Tiflis, and Rostov-on-the-Don before finding work at the Fantasy Theatre in Moscow. After a short spell at the Moscow Private Opera (1896), he joined the famed Bolshoi Theater Orchestra as second trumpet (Feb. 2, 1898), and played in a brass quartet with Willy Brandt. When Brandt was appointed first cornet in the Bolshoi orchestra in 1903, Tabakov assumed duties as first trumpet, a position he held, with interruptions, until 1938. His powerful, but lyric sound made him famous in the works of Wagner and Skryabin. Following a performance of Le Poème de l'Extase, composer Skryabin said to Tabakov, I never knew that my "Ecstacy" was written for you! When I was writing it, I didn't think about the leading role of the trumpet. Skryabin also remarked to others, I wish that I had enough money to buy Tabakov so that he could play only my music.

When Maestro Koussevitsky formed a new symphony orchestra in Russia, he hired Tabakov as his first trumpet (1911-18). He was able to entice Tabakov away from the Bolshoi orchestra by paying him double the salary he was previously making. Koussevitsky also offered Tabakov the position of first trumpet in the Detroit Symphony Orchestra in the United States, but Tabakov's poor health prevented him from accepting it. Tabakov played under Sergey Rachmaninov, Fyodor Chaliapin, Alexander Glazunov, Claude Debussy, Arthur Nikisch, Otto Klemperer, and Felix Weingartner. He was also a founding member of Persimfans (an experimental orchestra without a conductor) in 1922-32. He is also said to have played at the Bayreuth Festival under Siegfried Wagner in 1911, but his name cannot be found in the records there.

As early as 1902, Tabakov taught the trumpet; later he taught at the Music College of the Moscow Philharmonic Society (1914-17), Moscow Conservatory (1918-56) and the Gnesin Music Institute (1947-56). At the All-Union Competitions in 1935 and 1941, all three prizewinners were his pupils. He was a stern man with strict rule over his students, but he taught hundreds of leading trumpeters, the most famous being Timofei Dokshitser, Vladimir Drucker, Georgy Orvid, Josef Volovnik, Leonid Yuryev, and Sergey Yeriomin. His teaching motto was: Sound is the most valuable capital of a musician. The Soviet government honored him with the titles of Honored Artist of the RSFSR (1924) and Honored Worker of Arts of the RSFSR (1956).

Tabakov played a B-flat trumpet made by Zimmermann. Many works, including the first concertos of the twentieth century for trumpet (not cornet) by Shchyolokov in 1929 and by Goedicke in 1930, were dedicated to him. He published his collection of etudes (mostly by other composers) as a series of four volumes called Progressive Trumpet Method (1946-53), and Daily Exercises for Trumpet (1952). He received a PhD in musicology (1940) even though his dissertation was never completed. In 1943, he established the department of instrumentation for military band at the Moscow Conservatory.

Tabakov was known to like gambling at cards. His students said that he sometimes wore large rings on all fingers of each hand. He died at the age of seventy-eight.

Tabor, Charly (b. Vienna, Austria, Jan. 5, 1914; d. Wasserburg am Inn, Germany, July 29, 1999). Austrian trumpeter. Tabor's father was a musician in the Army. Tabor began his career by playing with Bernard Etté and Teddy Stauffer, but made his name with the Lutz Templin Orchestra (1941 to 1945). In 1941, the members of the orchestra were drafted into military service, played at the Russian front, and recorded jazz music for Nazi propaganda under the name Charlie and His Orchestra. After World War II, he was assigned by the American military to move to Munich and create a group that could perform at American clubs. Tabor then played with the Freddie Brocksieper Quintet and Big Band (1947), Willy Berking, and Max Greger (1950).

Charly Tabor became famous after he joined Bert Kaempfert's orchestra and recorded the trumpet solo, Wonderland by Night, in the late 1950s. Although Kaempfert had originally composed the song for a German film, the record version became a worldwide hit that sold over a million copies. Tabor was also an arranger for Kaempfert's band. He played for the Hilversum radio orchestra during the 1960s.

During the 1970s and '80s, Tabor led his own group called the Charly Tabor Band, often featured on German television. In those years, he was one of the most popular German soloists (along with Horst Fischer and Roy Etzel). At the end of his career, he led a swing big band.

Takacs, William ("Bill") Joseph (b. Chester, Pennsylvania, Dec. 23, 1973). American trumpeter. Takacs took his first trumpet lessons during elementary school with Joseph Hoffman, and during junior and senior high with Bonnie Strang. He attended West Chester University under Dr. Kenneth Laudermilch, earning a bachelor of music degree in 1995. His graduate studies were at Bowling Green State University with Todd Davidson (master of music, 1998), and Florida State University with Bryan Goff (DM, 2003).

Takacs was the first-place winner of the graduate division of the 1999 National Trumpet Competition, and in the same year toured Taiwan as principal trumpet of the New Sigmund Romberg Orchestra. He also played first trumpet in the Orquestra Sinfónica de Trujillo in Peru (summer 1999). Takacs was a finalist in the 2000 Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition, and during the1999-2000 academic year, was a member of the Iowa-based Skyline Brass quintet that was an artist-in-residence ensemble at several Midwestern universities. He taught at the University of West Georgia during the fall 2001 semester before assuming his current position as professor of trumpet at West Texas A&M University in Canyon in the spring of 2002. He also serves as principal of the Amarillo Symphony Orchestra and the WTA&M faculty brass quintet.

William married his wife Karen, an oboist and English horn player with the Amarillo Symphony, in 2007. They have a son, Liam (b. 2010). His hobbies include reading, exercising, and following sports.

Tamburini, James ("Jimmy") J. (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, c1918; d. Florida, Feb. 13, 2011). American trumpeter. Tamburini attended the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, studying with Sol Caston, and graduating in 1940. (One of his classmates was Seymour Rosenfeld who later became second trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra from 1946 to 1988, and another was Leonard Bernstein.) Tamburini played in the NBC Symphony under Maestro Arturo Toscanini during the 1950s and '60s, and was principal trumpet of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra from 1944 to 1966. He also taught at the University of Windsor (in Canada, near Detroit), and conducted the Assumption High School band in Windsor during the late 1960s. He retired to Florida in 1994.

James Tamburini was conductor of the Mount Clemens Symphony Orchestra for fourteen years. He was also the founder of the Windsor Community Orchestra (in 1984). His daughter is Lynn Tamburini Dobbins.

Tamiya, Kenji (b. Tokyo, Japan, Oct. 30, 1945). Japanese trumpeter. Tamiya studied at the Toho Gakuen School of Music in Tokyo from 1968 to 1972, before traveling to Berlin to study with Fritz Wesenigk from 1972 to 1981 at the Hochschule der Künste. Additional studies were with Delbert Dale and Pierre Thibaud. He played in the German Opera orchestra in Berlin (1972-81), and was a guest soloist in Europe, the United States, and Japan: Tokyo Metropolitan Symphony, Tokyo Philharmonic Symphony, New Japan Philharmonic Symphony. Since 1988, he has served on juries of several international trumpet competitions, and has been a member of the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild. Tamiya teaches at the Toho Gakuen School of Music in Toyko, and is a member of Otto Sauter's trumpet ensemble, Ten of the Best. He also teaches part-time at Tokyo Gakugei University, and is the founder of the Kenji Tamiya Brass Ensemble. He has released the solo album, Kenji Tamiya Baroque Trumpet, plus appears on numerous recordings with Ten of the Best and soloist Otto Sauter.

Tamura, Natsuki (b. Otsu, Shiga, Japan, July 26, 1951). Japanese trumpeter and composer. Tamura began playing trumpet in his junior high school brass band. Shortly after graduating from high school, his professional career began to develop: he played with the World Sharps Orchestra, Consolation, Skyliners Orchestra, New Herd Orchestra, Music Magic Orchestra, Satoko Fujii Ensemble, as well as with his own jazz group. He worked as a studio player from about 1973 to 1982, performing for television shows such as The Best Ten, Music Fair, Kirameku Rhythm, and others.

Tamura came to the United States in 1986 to study at the Berklee College of Music in Boston, after which he returned to Japan to perform and teach at the Yamaha Popular Music School, as well as at private studios in Tokyo and Saitama. He also studied during the late 1980s at the New England Conservatory.

Tamura formed a jazz quartet in the city of Tobifudo in 1990, and in 1997 released a duo CD titled How Many? with wife Satoko Fujii on piano. His 1998 solo trumpet CD for Leo Records, A Song for Jyaki, received a Writers Choice award in Coda magazine, and Rick Marx in Jazz Central Station hailed it as A potent mix of passion and calculated madness, with Tamura's plaintive horn cry somewhere between a blast and a bleat. Tamura initiates a solo statement that is in the great tradition of original musical storytellers...his music magically captures the sounds of nature. He has also played with Orkestrova, Jimmy Weinstein, Misha Mengelberg, Angelo Verploegen, Larry Ochs, Chris Brown, and Gato Libre (since 2005).

A leading avant-garde jazz trumpeter, Tamura has appeared at festivals throughout the world including the 1998 Texaco New York Jazz Festival, Newport Jazz in Madareo, Festival of New Trumpet Music at Tonic in New York City, San Francisco Jazz Festival, Japan Jazz Aid, Yamaha Jazz Festival, Vancouver Jazz Festival, Moers Festival in Germany, and the San Francisco Alternative Music Festival. He has released seven albums with the New Herd Orchestra, and has recorded with the Juggernaut Big Band and the Music Magic Orchestra. Other recordings include White & Blue with drummers Jim Black and Aaron Alexander, In the Tank, Strange Village, Live in Japan, and Angelona.

Tarayan, Gugush Rubenovich (b. Igdyr, Turkey, May 30, 1898; d. Yerevan, Armenia, Feb. 9, 1943). Armenian trumpeter. Tarayan graduated from the Leningrad Conservatory in 1931, studying with Alexander Gordon. His entire career was spent in Armenia, teaching at the Yerevan Music College and Conservatory from 1931 to 1943, and performing in the Yerevan Opera Orchestra from 1932 to 1943. Among his best known pupils are Mikhail Khachatrian, Shagriman Khachatrian, Gaik Marutian, and Aikas Mesiyan. He died in 1943 at the young age of forty-four.

Tardy, Jack (b. c1925). American trumpeter. Tardy received his bachelor of music degree in music education. His teachers include Harry Glantz and William Vacchiano (private lessons). While in New York, he played with Hal McIntyre and Elliot Lawrence, and backed many television stars including Jack Benny, Steve Allen, and Ed Sullivan. He worked as a producer and music director of recordings for RCA and Columbia records. He then joined the US Air Force Band and Symphony in Washington, D.C. and performed for President John F. Kennedy.

Tardy spent most of his career as the principal trumpet in the Air Force Academy Band in Colorado Springs where he was also the associate conductor and trumpet soloist of the Falconaires stage band (1970-73). He made records with the Falconaires, such as Music by the Falconaires and Sketches with Dick Nash, Herb Ellis, and Sammy Nestico. With that band, he appeared with Sammy Davis Jr., Bob Hope, Clark Terry, Terry Gibbs, and Ed Shaughnessy, and recorded with Rosemary Clooney and Irene Kral. He made personal appearances with Doc Severinsen and The Tonight Show Band, and was the Pops conductor of the Colorado Springs Symphony. He also taught on a part-time basis at the University of Southern Colorado in Pueblo. In addition, Tardy was a performer and instructor in Austria during the Internationale Kulturtage, and with the Mozart Festival Orchestra.

Jack and his wife Mary are retired and spend their time in Colorado Springs, Colorado, and Green Valley, Arizona. Jack enjoys woodworking as a hobby.

Tarkövi, Gábor (b. Esztergom, Hungary, Mar. 13, 1969). Hungarian trumpeter. Tarkövi comes from a hundred-year-old musical family, and learned to play the trumpet from his father Istvan, starting at age six. Gábor attended the conservatory in Györ (1983-87) before entering the Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest where he studied with György Geiger (1987-90). He continued studying at the academy with Frigyes Varasdy (1990-91), and graduated in 1992. Additional lessons were with Timofei Dokshitser, Anthony Plog, and György Kurtág. He was also influenced by Hans Gansch.

Tarkövi played in the Radio Symphony Orchestra of Budapest (1988-90). He moved to Germany in 1991 to become the third/assistant first trumpet of the Württemberg Philharmonic in Reuttingen (until 1994), and was a member of the Budapest Festival Orchestra (1991-98). He was principal trumpet of the Symphonieorchester Orchester Berlin (1994-2000), and from January 1, 2001 was principal trumpet of the Symphonieorchester des Bayerischen Rundfunks conducted by Lorin Maazel. Since 2004, he has been coprincipal trumpet of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra.

An active chamber musician who has made many recordings, Tarkövi is a member of Pro Brass (since 1995), the Austrian Brass Connection, and has occasionally played with the German Brass. He is a frequent soloist who has appeared with the Berlin Philharmonic, Munich Bach Orchestra, and the Chamber Orchestra of the Bavarian Radio. He has presented numerous master classes throughout Europe, and teaches at the Hanns Eisler Music School in Berlin (since 1997) and the Herbert von Karajan Orchestra Academy (since 2004).

Tarr, Edward H[ankins] (b. Norwich, Connecticut, June 15, 1936). American-born trumpeter living in Switzerland since 1959, and Germany since 1985 (with a brief stay in France, 1980-84). Tarr's father Donald Browne Tarr (1907-86) was a Methodist and then Congregational minister who served as a chaplain during World War II, and his mother Ruth Wilkinson Tarr (1907-76) was a schoolteacher and choir conductor who played piano. The Tarr family moved around a great deal during Edward's childhood (twelve different states across the country) before he was age twenty-three. At age nine, Edward began playing the trumpet. His first trumpet study was in the Spokane, Washington, school system. His three most influential teachers were Don Pratt, Roger Voisin, and Adolph Herseth. Tarr was put on the right track almost from the start in 1945 by his first private teacher Don Pratt (?-1995), a cornet pupil of Herbert L. Clarke; Pratt taught him to play scales and arpeggios in all keys, following Clarke's approach in Technical Studies for the Cornet. He later studied with Pratt for a summer. After moving to Winchester, Massachusetts (1946), he took lessons in Boston with Jacob Knuttenen who was a steady extra with the Boston Pops orchestra; as a teacher, he insisted on the ability to transpose and also taught Tarr how to play jazz rhythms, which was helpful because at the age of thirteen, Tarr had formed his own dance band. Tarr then attended the prep school, Phillips Exeter Academy in New Hampshire from 1951 to 1953, where during his first year he played and made a ten-inch LP recording with a Dixieland group, The Almost Eight; during his second year there, he led the school dance band, The Royal Exonians. During this period,

Tarr developed an interest in the Baroque trumpet. He also spent a summer at the International Music Camp at Interlochen where his teacher, Herbert Harp (later active at SUNY in Fredonia), introduced him to the Schlossberg studies. During the summer of 1953, after graduation from Exeter, he studied trumpet with Roger Voisin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra who influenced him greatly during his later solo career.

Tarr attended Oberlin College from 1953 to 1957, studying trumpet with Arthur Williams and earning his bachelor of arts degree with a music major. From 1958 to 1959, he earned a master of music degree in history and literature of music under Dr. John F. Ohl at Northwestern University, and studied trumpet with Adolph Herseth of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra who taught him to play consistently and to respect the articulations in musical texts. In 1959, Tarr received a Rotary scholarship that enabled him to study musicology in Basel, Switzerland, under Dr. Leo Schrade from 1959 to 1964. Tarr and Madeleine née Fiorese of Basel were married in 1962 and had two children: Natalie (b. 1966, a housewife), and Philip (b. 1968, a medical doctor and player of historical timpani); their marriage ended in divorce in 1983. Tarr completed his doctorate in 1987 at the University of Hamburg under Dr. H.J. Marx.

Shortly before his move to Switzerland in 1959, Tarr had obtained a cornett (Zink) from the maker, Otto Steinkopf, and taught himself to play it. During his early student days in Basel, he played the instrument in the university's Collegium Musicum, which attracted the attention of the early music pioneer, August Wenzinger, under whose influence Tarr began to perform as a cornettist in concerts throughout Europe and to record for West German Broadcasting and EMI-Electrola records, both in Cologne. In 1960, Tarr read an article about a performance by Walter Holy on a coiled Baroque trumpet built by Helmut Finke and Steinkopf. He heard a live performance by Holy, Finke, and Steinkopf of J.S. Bach's Mass in B Minor, and curious about the possibilities of the instrument, placed an order for a Finke-Steinkopf instrument. He soon began performing with Holy in concerts, and on radio broadcasts and recordings. He also studied original instruments of the Baroque period housed in various European museums and the Wilhelm Bernoulli collection in Greifensee (near Zurich), now housed in the Basel Music Museum, and by 1967 had developed long-model Baroque trumpets based on instruments of Wolf Wilhelm Haas; copies of instruments by Hainlein and Ehe followed shortly afterwards.

Tarr also continued playing modern trumpets, and became the trumpet teacher at the Rheinische Musikschule in Cologne, Germany (1968-70), and principal trumpet of the Orchestra della RAI (Italian radio) in Rome, Italy (1969). He began teaching Baroque trumpet and cornetto at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis in 1972, and modern trumpet at the Music Academy in 1973, both in Basel; he held both positions until retiring in 2001. From 1973 to 1974, he taught brass chamber music at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Freiburg, Germany. As a guest professor and artist-in-residence, Tarr has also taught at Stanford University (1973), Musikhögskolan Stockholm (1974), Indiana University (1977), Victorian College of the Arts (Melbourne, Australia, 1979), Karlsruhe University of Music (1979-85, 2001-), University of Southern California (1985), Florida State University (1991 and 2001), and conservatories in Lausanne (2000-03), Bern (2007), and Sydney (Australia, 2009), among others. Since 2001, he has been teaching Baroque trumpet to the members of Reinhold Friedrich's trumpet class at the Karlsruhe University of Music.

Around 1964, Tarr formed a trumpet trio to perform Bach and Handel oratorios on either historical or modern trumpets. There were memorable concerts in the late 1960s with Karl Richter and the Munich Bach Choir and Orchestra, including a U.S. tour with Bach's B Minor Mass and Magnificat, and a Christmas Oratorio I-VI in Rome in 1968 under Lorin Maazel, whose cool conducting style apparently conflicted with Tarr's emotional way of performing; Maazel held the final note, concert d'", of Part VI much longer than in rehearsals, and only gave the cutoff when Tarr's tone began to tremble for lack of air. Tarr avenged himself, however, by prolonging the note for another full second. When he later told Herseth about the incident, Herseth said, Yes, very good, that's what you have to do to them!

Tarr's solo career began in 1966 with the release of his album Die Kunst der Trompeter, performed on Baroque and modern trumpets. In 1968, he formed the Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble that consisted of four of the finest trumpeters and four of the finest trombonists in Europe. Their debut album, Canzonas for Brass, Winds, Strings, and Organ by Giovanni Gabrieli, won a Grammy Award in 1968 for "Best Chamber Music Performance." In 1969, Tarr began annual tours of the U.S. with organist George Kent, professor of organ, trumpet, and music history at the University of Rhode Island. They produced three albums entitled Baroque Masterworks for Trumpet and Organ (Nonesuch) and toured through 1985. Around 1980, Tarr began collaborating with the concert organist Irmtraud Krüger. They married on December 31, 1983 and eventually released five albums together, toured worldwide, and performed during the 2005 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Thailand. (Irmtraud is also a highly regarded psychotherapist and author of thirty-two books and numerous articles from her various fields of interest, including performance preparation vs. stagefright). Tarr was a member of Mauricio Kagel's Cologne Ensemble for New Music in the late 1960s and 1970s; Kagel also wrote two solo works for Tarr, Atem (1969-70, also for Vinko Globokar) and Morceau de concours (1968-71). Tarr has participated in over one hundred recordings on historical and modern instruments, and has recorded for such labels as Ariola, BIS, Capriccio, Christophorus, Columbia, Deutsche Grammophon, EMI, Haas Classic Cologne, Hungaroton, Musikproduktion Dabringhaus und Grimm, Naxos, Nonesuch, Oryx, Tudor, and Vox.

After a half year as visiting professor at the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, Tarr and Irmtraud moved to Rheinfelden, Germany, in June 1985. From 1985 to 2004, he was founder-director of the Trumpet Museum in Bad Säckingen, Germany, which he helped to acquire over one hundred rare instruments and manuscripts. Tarr, who lives a short distance from the museum, also has a large personal collection of historic trumpets and music. He has served as a consultant to numerous instrument-making companies including Ewald Meinl (formerly Meinl & Lauber), Adolf Egger & Sohn, and Yamaha. He received the first Christopher Monk Award from the Historic Brass Society (1995), Cesare Bendinelli Award from the Accademia Filarmonica in Verona, Italy (1995), ITG Honorary Award (1996), 1997 Music Prize from the Volksbank Hochrhein-Stiftung (Waldshut, Germany), Medal of Achievement from the City of Rheinfelden/Baden (2003), honorary doctorate (Oberlin College, 2003), and the title of professor at the University of Music in Karlsruhe (2004).

Tarr has published over two hundred scholarly editions of trumpet music, shedding light on many Baroque and Classical masterpieces for trumpet that were dormant for centuries. His annotated editions and translations of important Baroque trumpet methods and treatises include Cesare Bendinelli's Tutta l'arte della trombetta of 1614 (The Brass Press), Girolamo Fantini's Modo per imparare a sonare di tromba of 1638 (The Brass Press), and Johann Ernst Altenburg's Essay on an Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettledrummers' Art of 1795 (The Brass Press). His most popular book, Die Trompete, was published in Germany in 1977 and is now in its fourth edition (Schott, 2005). It was published in English in 1988 (B.T. Batsford, London) and is now in its third English edition (Hickman Music Editions, 2008). Tarr also contributed the monumental book, East Meets West (Historic Brass Society, 2003), that details the Russian trumpet tradition, music, and key performers from the time of Peter the Great to the October Revolution, and coauthored with Bruce Dickey another important book, Articulations in Early Wind Music (Amadeus Music, 2007, in English and German).

Tarr has served on numerous international competition juries, including the Toulon International Competition (1976), International Munich Competition of the German Radio Stations (ARD) (1980, 1986, 1993, and 1995, the latter for trombone), Ellsworth Smith/ITG Solo Competition (1988, 1990, 1994), International Music Competition of the Prague Spring (1992), International Competition of Young Artists in Porcia, Italy (1993, 1996), International Competition for Wind Ensembles in Kerkrade, Holland (1996), Vassily Brandt International Trumpet Competition in Saratov, Russia (1996), International Music Competition in Markneukirchen, Germany (1998 [and 2014], the former for horn), International Trumpet Competition in Kiev, Ukraine (1998), International Handel Competition in Halle, Germany (for both modern and Baroque trumpets, 2002), International Jan Koetsier Competition for Brass Chamber Music in Munich (2002), German Conservatory Competition in Hamburg (2005), Kurt Alten Competition in Hannover (for trumpet, trombone, and horn, 2009), and many others. He was the organizer and host of the first and second International Altenburg Competition for Baroque trumpet (Bad Säckingen, 1996 and 2001), and participated on many search committees for important teaching posts at prestigious European conservatories and universities. He is a key member of the ITG, having served on its board of directors and as vice president from 1977 to 1979. He also edited a column for the ITG Journal called "Historical Instrument Window" from 2000 to 2005.

A prolific author, Tarr has published countless articles and reviews for the ITG Journal, Historic Brass Society Journal, The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, and other leading periodicals. With Uwe Wolf of the Bach Archive in Leipzig, he is publishing the seven-volume Bach for Brass (Carus-Verlag, 2002 ff.), which contains parts for the complete brass and timpani works of J.S. Bach, based on the original sources. He has also written the modern method, The Art of Baroque Trumpet Playing in three volumes (Schott, 1999-2000). He is an avid reader who speaks several languages including English, German, French, and Italian, and is now beginning to learn Spanish. Among his best-known students are Wolfgang Bauer, Bruce Dickey, Bengt and Niklas Eklund, Reinhold Friedrich, Håkan Hardenberger, Graham Nicholson, and Marc Ullrich. Tarr has also trained countless others in the proper manner of performing Baroque music. Indeed, all modern classical performers have been influenced either directly or indirectly by his life's work as a performer, editor, author, recording artist, and teacher. He is considered the world's leading teacher of early trumpet repertoire, and is the leading authority on the history of the trumpet. His hobbies include swimming.

Tartell, Joey (b. Amarillo, Texas, Oct. 16, 1966). American trumpeter. Tartell grew up in San Antonio, Texas. He began playing trumpet at age ten; his first teachers were Bernard Nero, John Carroll, and John Rankin. After graduating from Douglas MacArthur High School in 1984, he studied with Mel Broiles for one year at The Juilliard School in New York City. In 1985, he transferred to the Eastman School of Music where he studied with Barbara Butler, earning a bachelor of music degree and a Performers Certificate in 1988. He also studied with Vincent DiMartino.

Tartell was a member of the US Army Jazz Ambassadors from 1988 to 1992. He then attended the University of Miami from 1992 to 1994, earning a master of music degree studying with Gilbert Johnson. From 1994 to 1995, he toured with Maynard Ferguson's band, followed by a short stint as a kindergarten teacher in Kalamazoo, Michigan. In 1996, he began freelancing in Chicago. During his career, he has played with the Woody Herman band, Glenn Miller Orchestra, Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra, and performed as a guest lead trumpeter with the symphony orchestras of Saint Louis, Cincinnati, Detroit, Indianapolis, and Baltimore. He has backed such artists as Doc Severinsen, Arturo Sandoval, Aretha Franklin, Barry Manilow,

New York Voices, Don Henley, The Manhattan Transfer, and many others. Tartell accepted a professorship at St. Joseph's College in Rennselaer, Indiana, in 2000, and in 2003 joined the music faculty at Indiana University as a trumpet professor. He is a member of the trumpet ensemble, Tromba Mundi.

Joey and his wife Ly, a jazz singer and writer, have a daughter, Jamie (b. 2000). He enjoys playing basketball and is an avid sports fan.

Tasa, David Wayne (b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Nov. 21, 1948). American trumpeter. Tasa has spent his entire career in Germany, becoming one of the leading orchestral players and teachers in Europe. He studied at the University of Illinois with Haskell O. Sexton (1967-72), and has also studied in Chicago with Adolph Herseth and Arnold Jacobs.

Tasa moved to Germany in 1972 when he assumed duties as principal trumpet of the Northwest German Philharmonic in Herford. The following year, he performed in the State Theater orchestra in Kassel. Since 1976, he has been principal of the Frankfurt Opera and Museum orchestras, but plans to retire in the summer of 2014. He also became a teacher at the Frankfurt Hochschule for Music and Visual Arts in 1982, and was made a full professor h.c. in March of 1999; he stopped teaching there in 2007. He has taught many excellent students including Florian Balzer, Egbert Lewark, Heinrich Prinz, Gary Ritson, Karl Hanspeter, Markus Privat, Robert Hofmann, Benjamin Jung, Christian Meyers, Manuel Viehmann, Eberhard Kübler, Frank Severin, Frank Würtzl, David Williams, and Sebastian Krystek.

An active soloist, Tasa has been a guest soloist with many orchestras, and has toured North and South America, Europe and Israel with a trumpet and organ duo.

Taylor, Nancy E. (b. El Paso, Texas, Nov. 14, 1964). American trumpeter. Taylor began playing the trumpet at age eight; her first teachers were her brother Joe, then Larry Curry. After graduating from Coronado High School in her hometown in 1983, she attended Arizona

State University (1983-87), where she studied with David Hickman and earned a bachelor of music degree. She earned a master of music degree with Allan Dean at Indiana University (1987-89) and then began work towards a DMA in trumpet performance at the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music under professor Alan Siebert.

In 1990, Taylor won an audition with the US Marine Band ("The President's Own"), making history as the first woman trumpeter to join the organization in its nearly two hundred years of existence. She was often a featured soloist with the band, was a member of its brass quintet, made three national tours, and participated in two presidential inaugurations. After resigning from the band in 1998, she taught at the University of Alabama, Wright State University, and Center College. She has also performed with the Cincinnati Pops Orchestra, Cincinnati Chamber Singers, Dayton Philharmonic, Dayton Opera orchestra, Cincinnati Brass Band, Dayton Playhouse Theatre Orchestra, Ohio Valley British Brass Band, Lexington Brass Band, Advocate Messenger Brass Band, and the Lexington Philharmonic Orchestra. She has recorded with the US Marine Band, Washington Winds (Jumping Frog Records), and The New Columbian Brass Band (Dorian).

Taylor returned to El Paso in 2008, where she joined the music faculty at the University of Texas-El Paso. In 2010, she earned a master of occupational therapy degree from UTEP, and presented her research on musicians' focal dystonia problems at the International Conference of the Performing Arts Medicine Association in Aspen, Colorado, in 2010. She has also lectured (in 2013) on "Musicians and Pain: Prevention through Understanding" to the US Marine Band, as well as the US Air Force Band, in Washington, D.C. She is on the faculty of the Conn-Selmer Institute as a specialist in injury prevention for musicians, and currently performs with The El Paso Brass, Quintessential Brass, and the El Paso Wind Symphony.

Taylor has been married to Ron Hufstader since 2012.

Teagarden, Charles ("Charlie") (b. Vernon, Texas, July 19, 1913; d. Las Vegas, Nevada, Dec. 10, 1984). American trumpeter. Teagarden came from a musical family. His mother was a ragtime pianist, older brother Jack was a famous trombonist and bandleader, younger brother Cub was a drummer, and his older sister Nora was a fine pianist.

Charlie Teagarden's early professional experiences were with Herb Brooks's Oklahoma Joy Boys and Frank Williams's Oklahomans. He moved to New York in 1929 and, along with brother Jack, played in Ben Pollack's orchestra (1929-30) where he made his recording debut. He also played with Red Nichols (1930-31), Roger Wolfe Kahn (1932), and Paul Whiteman (1933-40). Charlie, Jack, and Frankie Trumbauer formed a trio called the Three Ts.

During the early 1940s, Charlie played with Jack's orchestra and freelanced in New York. During World War II, he joined the Army and served until 1945. In 1946 he became a member of the Harry James Orchestra and in 1947 was a member of Jack's band. He played in Jimmy Dorsey's band from 1948 to 1950 and also recorded with Dorsey's Original Dorseyland Jazz Band, a Dixieland group made up of members from the larger ensemble. With Dorsey's orchestra, he appeared in a short film titled Catalina Interlude (1948). Teagarden later played Dixieland music with Ben Pollack's Pick-a-Rib Boys (1950-55), a trio (1951-52), Bob Crosby (on and off from 1954 to 1958), and Pete Fountain.

Teagarden moved to Las Vegas around 1960. He played at the Monterey Jazz Festival with the Jack Teagarden Orchestra in 1963 and gigged with Lionel Hampton and Pete Fountain. He recorded a solo album in 1962 for the Coral label titled The Big Horn of Little T., but it received little attention. He became less active as a performer during the 1970s. He passed away in 1984 at the age of seventy-one.

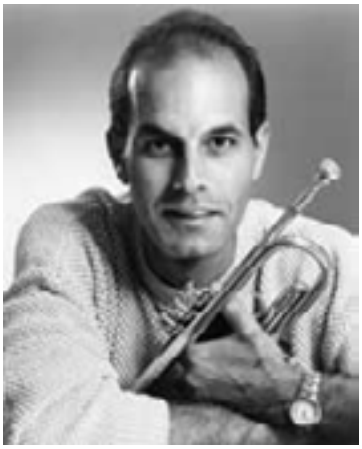
Tedesco, Chris (b. Niagara Falls, New York, Dec. 30, 1960). American trumpeter. As a teen, Tedesco displayed a remarkable ability on the trumpet, and was selected for All State, All Eastern, and National Honors bands. His early teachers were Ron Mendola and Chuck Livette. He attended the State University of New York in Fredonia where he studied with William Dederer for one year, and then transferred to the University of Miami in Florida where he spent four years studying with Gilbert Johnson. He completed degrees in music performance and music business in 1983.



Tedesco's early career included playing in western and upstate New York with the Artpark Theater Orchestra, Buffalo Philharmonic, National Ballet of Canada, and the Martha Graham Dance Company. He also toured with the Glenn Miller Band for a short while, and played with the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra for over a year, settling in Los Angeles in 1987. His career as a studio player includes backing and recording with a long list of celebrity artists such as Barry Manilow, Mel Tormé, Cher, Blood Sweat and Tears, Sammy Davis Jr., Joe Cocker, the Moody Blues, Pat Boone, Shaka, John Test, Frankie Valli, Don Rickles, Nancy Wilson, Shakire, and many others.

Tedesco has played on over one hundred movie soundtracks including Star Trek: First Contact, Finding Nemo, The Road to Perdition, The Mexican, Star Trek: Voyager, Batman Begins, Clockwatchers, Hercules, Nixon, and Best in Show. In addition to recording television commercials for Pepsi, Chevrolet, McDonald's, Kentucky Fried Chicken, Coke, Honda, Intel, Lexus, Toyota, Staples, Remax, Outback, Nike, Energizer, and Home Depot, his television credits include American Idol, Chicago Hope, Ellen De Generes, National Geographic, Star Trek Enterprise, Star Trek, Star Trek Deep Space Nine, The Guardian (theme), X-Files, Mike Hammer, and many others. His solo albums include Living the Dream and Classical Duets.

Terran, Anthony ("Tony") (b. Buffalo, New York, May 30, 1926). Terran's family was Sicilian. He grew up in Buffalo, New York, and began his professional career at the age of seventeen, and played in local big bands and radio orchestras. At age eighteen, he toured the country with Horace Heidt, but while in Los Angeles, decided to leave the band. He asked for airfare to return home, but Heidt refused to buy his plane ticket. So, in 1944, Terran settled in Los Angeles and began working as a studio musician—first with Skinny Innes, Nelson Riddle, and Desi Arnez. With Arnez, he played on the television show I Love Lucy, and is today the last surviving member of that band.

During the next fifty years, Terran became a legendary trumpeter in Southern California. He has played on over 10,000 records, and backed such artists and groups as Frank Sinatra, Elvis Presley, Chicago, Tijuana Brass, Diana Ross, Dean Martin, The Beach Boys, Michael Jackson, Madonna, Bob Hope, Ella Fitzgerald, Ray Charles, the Bee Gees, Nat King Cole, Barbra Streisand, and many others. His film credits include King Kong, The Lord of the Rings, Rocky I, II, III, The Deep, Foul Play, 10, Ghostbusters, An Officer and a Gentleman, The Natural, Black Stallion, Broadcast News, All the President's Men, Karate Kid I, II, III, Field of Dreams, and Close Encounters of a Third Kind. Television shows include Laverne and Shirley, Happy Days, Angie, I Dream of Jeannie, Star Trek, The Simpsons, Popeye, L.A. Law, Cheers, The Brady Bunch, The Carol Burnett Show, and Mork and Mindy.

Terran received the 1974 "Most Valuable Player Award" from the National Academy of Recording Arts and Sciences. He and his wife, Adele Kathryn Terran, have five children. He is currently retired.

Terry, Clark (b. St. Louis, Missouri, Dec. 14, 1920). American trumpeter, fluglehornist, and composer. If any trumpeter could be considered as royalty, Clark Terry would be king. He began by fashioning his own trumpet out of a piece of garden hose with a funnel for a bell. His neighbors loved his enthusiasm for music, but hated the blatty sound he acquired from the primitive instrument. They chipped in and, at a local pawnshop, purchased for him a $12.50 trumpet. Terry played with the Tom Powell Drum and Bugle Corps at age thirteen (1933-35). During high school, Terry was introduced to the valve trombone by a school music teacher, but he later switched back to the trumpet. He received advice or lessons from Louis Cauldwell, Clarence Hydon Wilson, Leonard Small, and even consulted Joseph Gustat. He played in his high school band conducted by Clarence Hydon Wilson and taught himself to play in the jazz style through recordings of Louis Armstrong, Dizzy Gillespie, Lester Young, and Charlie Parker.

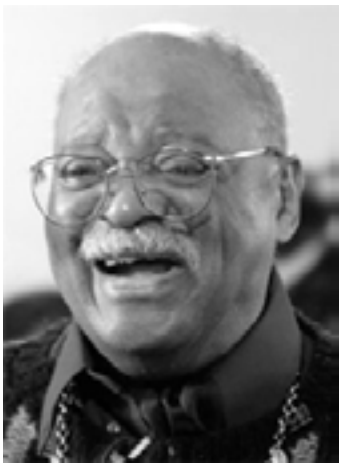
After finishing high school, Terry played with Dollar Bill and The Small Change, the Rubin and Cherry Carnival, and Ida Cox's Darktown Scandals. He also played on riverboats with Fate Marable and Dewey Jackson (1937-41). Terry joined the Navy in 1942 and was stationed at the Great Lakes Naval Station where he played in a dance band. After his discharge in 1945, he joined Lionel Hampton's band (1945, three weeks), and also played with George Hudson (1946-47), Charlie Barnet (1947), Eddie Vinson, Charlie Ventura, Count Basie (1948-50), and Duke Ellington (1951-59). Terry began seriously playing the flugelhorn in 1957, and by 1960 it became his main instrument. Keith Ecker (Selmer) made Terry's first flugelhorn, but he later played an Olds flugelhorn with a Clark Terry-model mouthpiece made by Giardinelli.



From 1959 to 1960, Terry toured Europe with the Quincy Jones Orchestra (Free and Easy show). Roger Guerin replaced him when he returned to New York in March of 1960. He joined the NBC studios staff orchestra and was assigned to Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show band under Skitch Henderson. He played in the band for twelve years, often featured as soloist. When the show moved to Los Angeles in 1972, Doc Severinsen (who had replaced Henderson as leader) offered Terry a spot in the new band, but Terry decided to stay in New York and work with his B.A.D. Band (established by Terry in 1966). He also performed with his quintet co-led by Bob Brookmeyer (1961-66) and with Gerry Mulligan (1962), Charlie Mariano (Newport, 1963), J.J. Johnson (1964, Japan tour), Oscar Peterson-Ella Fitzgerald (1965, in Europe), Dizzy Gillespie-Rex Stewart-Red Allen (Monterey, 1965), a Trumpet Workshop (Newport, 1966), Michel Sardaby (Pan Cake Palace in Paris, August 1966), and Charlie Barnet (February 1967; Newport, 1968) after which he free-lanced as a jazz soloist.

From 1972 to the present, Clark Terry has toured the world many times. He has performed with nearly every major jazz artist, worked with thousands of high school and college jazz ensembles, and participated in hundreds of top jazz festivals around the world. He has recorded with Wardell Gray, Duke Ellington, Johnny Hodges, Tubby Hayes, Paul Gonsalves, Count Basie, Oscar Peterson, Shirley Scott, Charlie Byrd, Gerry Mulligan, Johnny Griffin, Quincy Jones, Ray Bryant, Ernie Wilkins, Randy Weston, Eddie Davis, Thelonious Monk, Lalo Schifrin, Milt Jackson, Eddie Jefferson, Sonny Rollins, Don Butterfield, Buell Neidlinger, Louis Armstrong, Cleo Bradford, Chico Hamilton, Jimmy Smith-Wes Montgomery, Babs Gonsalves, Manhattan Brass Choir, Lionel Hampton, Ninapinta, Gene Ammons, Jimmy Rushing, Ed Thigpen, Charlie Barnet, Louie Bellson, Oscar Pettiford, Billy Taylor, Buddy Tate, Dinah Washington, Budd Johnson & the Four Brass Giants, Ambassador Satch Band, Trumpet Kings, Statesmen of Jazz, London Symphony Orchestra, and the Dutch Metropole Orchestra, to name a few!

Terry recorded film soundtracks such as The Hot Rock and L'ami de Vincent, and can be seen in many videos including Count Basie Sextet (1950, Snader/Storyville), Billie Holiday-Count Basie (1950), Jazz au Club St Germain (Bud Powell Quintet, October 1959), Jazz 625 (1965, BBC), Clark Terry Quintet/Big Band in Concert (London, 1965, with Bob Brookmeyer; London, 1974, with big band; Copenhagen, 1977, in quintet with Pepper Adams), Trumpet Kings (1985, includes Clark Terry with Benny Goodman in 1967), A Duke Named Ellington, (Clark Terry Big Band, 1989), Newport All Stars (Montreux, 1992), Hampton & His Gold Men of Jazz (Vienne, France, 1994), Flip Phillips 1995—80th Birthday Party (Arbors), Trumpet Summit (Marciac, 1999), The Clark Terry Quartet (Copenhagen, 1986), and Live in Concert (Santa Lucia Jazz Festival, Eagle Entertainment, 1984).

Having recorded nearly one hundred albums as leader, Clark Terry's discs include Color Change (Candid), Squeeze Me (Chiaroscuro), The Clark Terry Spacemen (Chiaroscuro), One on One (Chesky), Tread Ye Lightly (Cameo), The Power of Positive Swinging (Mainstream), Clark After Dark (his personal favorite, on MPS), To Duke and Basie (Enja), Introducing Clark Terry (EmArcy), Clark Terry (Polygram), Out on a Limb with Clark Terry (Argo), Mellow Moods (Prestige), More (Cameo), and Clark Terry Tonight (Mainstream). He has also recorded for Summit, Original Jazz Classics, Polydor, Impulse, Verve, and Vanguard. He has received a Grammy Award, two Grammy certificates, and two Grammy nominations. In 2010, Terry received the Recording Academy Lifetime Achievement Award. He has also composed over two hundred songs, many of which he has recorded.

Terry's awards are too many to list, but among them are seven Command Performances for seven U.S. presidents, being named Jazz Ambassador by the US State Department for tours of the Middle East and Africa, thirteen honorary doctorate degrees, keys to various cities around the world, being knighted in Germany, receiving the French Order of Arts and Letters, a star on the St. Louis Walk of Fame, and representation by a life-size figure in the Black World History Museum in St. Louis. During the 1970s, Terry was often voted as the most popular trumpeter in Playboy magazine's jazz poll, and he received the "Trumpeter of the Year" award from the Jazz Journalists Association. He was introduced into the Downbeat Hall of Fame in 2000. Terry has also authored three books: Let's Talk Trumpet, Interpretation of the Jazz Language, and Clark Terry's System of Circular Breathing for Woodwind and Brass Instruments.

A devoted educator, Terry established the Harlem Youth Band, as well as the Clark Terry Institute of Jazz Studies at Teikyo-Westmar University near Sioux City, Iowa. Early in his career, he and Milt Hinton purchased used instruments for needy kids, which sparked the formation of Jazzmobile in Harlem. He also established the Clark Terry Archive at William Paterson University in Wayne, New Jersey, that contains instruments, memorabilia, and over seven hundred music scores.

Clark Terry's health declined during the 1990s, and his touring schedule has subsequently slowed down a bit. He and his wife, Gwendolyn (Paris) Terry, now reside in Haworth, New Jersey. Terry's children are Victor (deceased), Hiawatha, Gary (stepson), and Tony (stepson). A perpetually cheerful man, Terry is said to possess the "happiest sound in jazz."

Terry, Dan [Daniel Kostraba] (b. Kingston, Pennsylvania, Dec. 22, 1924; d. Danville, Illinois, Dec. 27, 2011). American trumpeter, bandleader, and composer. Born as Daniel Kostraba, Terry moved to New York City at age fourteen and began playing in Muggsy Spanier's band. He joined the Marine Corps, and upon his release moved to Los Angeles where he formed the Hollywood Teenagers Band. He returned to New York in 1948 to play with Sonny Dunham for eight months, but settled in Los Angeles where he studied music theory at the College of the Pacific under the GI Bill of Rights. After a year of school, he formed another band that toured the country, performing at numerous festivals with well-known artists such as Sarah Vaughn, Dinah Washington, Billie Holiday, and others.

Terry's trumpet playing and fine compositional skill led to numerous recordings and features in movies. He recorded for Columbia Records in 1954, and was featured in the 1954 film, Birth of a Band. He performed at Birdland and Carnegie Hall, and toured with the Birdland All Stars and Count Basie. In 1958, he recorded for Devere Records, and during the 1960s wrote music for and played for hit movies such as The Hustler starring Paul Newman and Jackie Gleason, and The Manchurian Candidate. He became a staff arranger and composer for Dean Martin's television specials, and wrote for many albums recorded by the Jackie Gleason Orchestra. He was also music conductor for Sammy Davis Jr., Frances Langford, Noonan and Marshall, Yma Sumac, and Barbara McNair.

Terry built and operated Club Lido in Studio City, California, from 1962 to 1965, and began a second career as a radio announcer. He appeared on NBC's Tonight Show, and continued his recording career. In the 1970s, he moved to Las Vegas where he and his band played at the Pussycat A-Go-Go Club, and hotels such as the Tropicana, Sahara, Dunes, Mint, and Thunderbird. He hosted a weekly radio show for KDWN-AM, and served as president of Copyrite, Inc., a company that managed composers and arrangers.

In 1976, Terry moved to Toronto, Canada, where he formed the group, Horns of Toronto. He also lived in Phoenix, Arizona, for a while where he served as a local radio announcer. Finally residing in San Diego, California, Terry organized the San Diego Youth Swing Band for talented high school musicians.

Among Terry's many albums are Teenage Dance Sessions (Columbia), Teenage Dance Party (Harmony), Good Feeling Blues (Cinema), Reedtime (Metronome), Lonely Place (Metronome), and Dan Terry Big Band (Metronome).

Teste, Xavier (b. Nov. 17, 1833; d. 1905 or 1906). French trumpeter. It is not known where Teste studied. In 1854, he was principal cornet in the band of the Parisian Guides de l'Empereur, and shortly later became principal trumpet of the Paris Opéra orchestra; he was also active in the Concerts du Conservatoire (1872-96) and various other Parisian orchestras. In February 1874, he performed Handel's Messiah several times with the Concerts Lamoureux on a D trumpet specially made for the occasion. Lengthening its slides created the C trumpet, which Teste thus introduced in France. Resistance to use of the new instrument by his colleagues was high, so he was often forced to use the larger F trumpet.

In 1879-80, during Maury's illness, Teste substituted as cornet professor at the Paris Conservatory. On December 28, 1880 in Paris, he performed the world premiere of Saint-Saens's Septet on an alto E-flat trumpet. In 1885, he requested F. Besson to create a piccolo G trumpet that he used in a performance of Bach's Magnificat. He was often called on to perform works by Handel with the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire; two of his known performances between 1879 and 1890 are of the Ode for St. Cecilia's Day on January 26 and February 2, 1890 with the famous soprano Nellie Melba. A newspaper review of his performance of Bach's Mass in B Minor stated that he played with "lightning brilliance," and was "fearless and error-free." He retired from active playing during the 1895-96 season.

Teubig [Täubig], [Johannes] Heinrich (b. Buhla, Germany, Dec. 18, 1881; d. Leipzig, Germany, Nov. 30, 1968). German trumpeter. Little is known about his early life, but Teubig was the principal trumpet of the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra from 1909 to 1946. He was one of the first to perform the high trumpet works of Bach on the modern valve trumpets in piccolo D and F. He was the teacher of Hellmut Schneidewind, Armin Männel, and Rolf Quinque. He died at the age of eighty-six.

Thein, Max (b. c1950). German maker. The Thein family of instrument makers has been known for over one hundred years, first as fine piano makers. (One of their pianos was on the ocean liner, Titanic.) The Thein family was situated in Bremen, Germany. In 1971, Max's brother Heinrich began making brass instruments in a shop in an old house in the historic center of Bremen, at the site of the medieval St. Johannis Church. Max joined his brother in the venture in 1974. Since then, they developed a complete brass line from piccolo trumpets to tubas, have produced thousands of instruments, and have won several prizes for superiority of design and craftsmanship. The Thein company exhibited their brass instruments for the first time at the International Brass Congress (1976) in Montreux, Switzerland.

As the company grew, a larger location was utilized starting in 1993. Besides Max and Heinrich, as many as ten other workers are employed. Thein rotary trumpets are now played in many symphony orchestras, including the New York Philharmonic, Vienna Philharmonic, and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra.

Theurer, Britton (b. Detroit, Michigan, 1953). American trumpeter and composer. Theurer studied with Donald Bullock and Stephen Jones at Western Michigan University, earning a bachelor of music degree. He also studied with Robert Gray. He earned his master of music degree at Bowling Green State University in Ohio where he studied with Edwin Betts, and his doctor of music degree under Bryan Goff at Florida State University. He studied composition with Ramon Zupko and Roy Johnson.

Theurer toured with the American Wind Symphony in 1976, and was principal trumpet of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra for four years. He taught at Odessa College, Delta State University, and the University of Wyoming before accepting his current position at East Carolina University where he is a member of the East Carolina Brass Quintet and New Music Camerata. He has performed throughout the United States, and has appeared in China, Japan, and Canada.

Theurer has published several trumpet compositions through Balquhidder Music, and has released the CD, Fantasia, (Capstone), which features him performing his own compositions. He also recorded with the Seattle Symphony under Gerard Schwarz (Hankyu Express, MMO) and the Meridian Arts Ensemble.

Theurillat, Olivier Anthony (b. La Chaux-de-Fonds, Switzerland, Oct. 18, 1971). Swiss trumpeter. Theurillat's father, Pierre-Yves Theurillat, was a professor of geography, and his mother, Marie-Hélène (Souiller) Theurillat, a homemaker. Olivier attended the Lycée Blaise-Cendrars in La Chaux-de-Fonds where he graduated in 1990. Concurrently with his general studies, he studied with Patrick Lehmann at La Chaux-de-Fonds Conservatoire from which he graduated in 1991. Additional studies were at the Versailles Conservatoire (1991-92 with Roger Delmotte), Paris Conservatoire CNSM (1992-95 with Antoine Curé), and The Juilliard School (1995-96 with Raymond Mase).

Theurillat has won numerous prizes at solo trumpet competitions including those in Munich (ARD), Geneva (CIEM), Albertville (Maurice André International Competition), Paris (Yamaha Music Foundation of Europe Scholarship), and the United States (National Trumpet Competition). He has appeared as a soloist throughout Europe and the United States, and has performed more than thirty different solo works with such ensembles as the Bavarian Radio Symphony, Suisse Romande Orchestra, Lausanne Chamber Orchestra, Virtuosi di Praga, Orchestre de Picardie, Orchestre Symphonique Français, Festival Strings Lucerne, Camerata Schweiz, Collegium Musicum Basel, Cornell Chamber Orchestra, and many others. As an active performer working with composers, Theurillat has premiered new works written by Jean Balissat, Emile de Ceuninck, Arturo Corrales, Xavier Dayer, Richard Dubugnon, Vivian Fung, Jacques Henry, Horatiu Radulescu, Jean-Claude Schlaepfer, and Julien-François Zbinden. Having been trained in jazz at the Paris Conservatoire, he has worked and performed with jazz artists such as pianist Antoine Hervé, vibraphonist Franck Tortiller, and saxophonist Daniel Schnyder.

Theurillat is currently principal trumpet of the Berne Symphony Orchestra and professor of trumpet at the Lausanne Conservatoire of Music. He also teaches orchestral playing at the Hochschule der Künste in Berne. He has appeared as guest professor, performer, and conductor at the 4th International Trumpet Festival in West Chester University (PA), Campos do Jordão International Winter Festival (São Paulo), Swiss Youth Orchestra, Junge Philharmonie Elbe-Weser, The Juilliard School, at the Strasbourg, Lyons, Geneva, Lucerne and Fribourg Conservatoires, and at Eurocuivres Summer Academy (France), Tibor Varga Summer Academy in Sion (Switzerland), Bitola (Macedonia), and Curitiba (Brazil). He conducts the ensemble "Brass & Rhythm", and has appeared as a guest conductor at numerous festivals and with symphony orchestras around the world. In addition, he has been a guest trumpeter with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Philharmonia Orchestra, Orchestre National de France, Ensemble InterContemporain, Orchestre National du Capitole de Toulouse, Mahler Chamber Orchestra, Lucerne Festival Orchestra, Camerata Salzburg, Klangforum Wien, and all the major Swiss orchestras. He has recorded as a soloist and orchestral player for numerous labels including Claves, Teldec, EuroArts, Deutsche Grammophon, Swiss Radio, Grammont, Arte Nova, Dabringhaus & Grimm, and Gallo-VDE.

Theurillat's solo CD, Nocturne, has received wide acclaim. Wynton Marsalis said of him, His eagerness and "vivre" for music and the trumpet quickly made an impression on me. ... With the 2002 release of this CD Nocturne, the trumpet community and musicians in general have a work that is a fine example of lyrical playing. In particular, Nocturne demonstrates the depth and humanity of Olivier's sound. It was soulful, too! Olivier's continual quest for a greater understanding of music and his strong musical goals set him apart from many other musicians. He seeks to reach an understanding in music that is pure and logical. Theurillat's hobbies include tennis, soccer, golf, skiing, traveling, cooking, and painting.

Thibaud, Pierre [Jacques] (b. Proissans, France, June 22, 1929; d. Paris, France, Oct. 29, 2004). French trumpeter. Thibaud's father conducted the municipal band in Sarlat in which Pierre played cornet, trombone, and tuba. Thibaud studied violin and brass instruments with his father, then studied violin (first prize) and cornet with the legendary Noël Laborie at the Bordeaux Conservatory (receiving his prize in 1949). Laborie was the favorite French cornet/trumpet player of Arturo Toscanini when he conducted in France.

Thibaud began his career as a trumpet and violin player in Bordeaux with the Londeix band (including the world famous Jean-Marie Londeix on saxophone). He served in the army in the 2nd "Region de l'Air" Band and attended the Paris Superior Conservatory of Music (1950-51), studying with Eugène Foveau, and after only one year of lessons, won the first cornet prize. He quickly became a lead trumpeter and soloist in jazz and popular music of the 1950s. Among others, Thibaud played with the Gruss Circus (1954-55), Jacques Hélian Orchestra (1955-57), Moustach & Son Rock'n Roll at Medrano Circus (1957), Aimé Barelli at the Sporting Club in Monaco, Quincy Jones (1957-58, and on the soundtrack for the popular television film, Les Cinq dernières minutes), at the Lido (1957-59) and Olympia, with Benny Bennett, and with his own orchestra at the Moulin-Rouge (1958). Thibaud made many recordings—some under his own name—the best being Terrific Trumpet (1958, boleros including Besame Mucho). During this period, Thibaud also performed a few serious works with the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (1957, along with Louis Menardi, from whom he received useful advice), Concerts Colonne, and Concerts Lamoureux Orchestras.

On Foveau's recommendation, Thibaud studied privately with Raymond Sabarich (1956-60) who sent him to Tel Aviv to play principal trumpet in the Israel Philharmonic (1960-63), in which he played under conductors such as Joseph Krips, John Barbirolli, Charles

Münch, and Lorin Maazel, among others. Thibaud made his first trip to the United States with the orchestra, and was introduced to important brass people such as Vincent Bach. Thibaud was very open-minded to the new methods and trumpets used in America, so when he returned to Paris, he began introducing these methods utilizing medium-large bore trumpets; the great French tradition of trumpet playing at the time utilized only small bore trumpets by French makers. Thibaud again studied with Raymond Sabarich (1963-66), and returned to the Concert Colonne Orchestra. He began to perform contemporary music under Marius Constant (from 1963, with the Ars Nova Ensemble), was a member of the Garde Républicaine band (1964-66), and cofounded the Ars Nova Brass Quintet with the noted hornist, Georges Barboteu (1966-74). In 1965, he began performing Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2, and worked with Karl Richter's Munich Bach Orchestra (1966). He established a reputation in Europe for his numerous performances and recordings of the Brandenburg, which led to several solo albums for Deutsche Grammophon, Philips, Harmonia Mundi, Erato, Disques Festival, Camerata, and other labels. But he became primarily known for performing contemporary music. He played at the Domaine Musical under Pierre Boulez and with Musique Vivante conducted by Diego Masson. As a soloist, Thibaud played with many French radio orchestras including Orchestre de Chambre de l'ORTF and Orchestre Philharmonique de l'ORTF.

Thibaud was principal cornet of the Paris Opera Orchestra from May 2, 1966 to 1984 (with Roger Delmotte, principal trumpet). He also toured and recorded as a member of Otto Sauter's Ten of the Best, an all-star trumpet ensemble consisting of some of Europe's leading players. Although a very nervous performer in live solo concerts, his innate musicianship and strong embouchure led to many highly successful concert appearances. He was a featured artist at the First International Brass Congress in Montreux, Switzerland (1976).

Thibaud is considered to have been one of Europe's finest teachers, having taught at the Superior Conservatory in Paris from October 1975 to 1994, as well as having been one of the instructors in Tokyo and at the Bremen Trumpet Academy in Germany. Among his many students are Gérard Hostein, Bruno Nouvion, Patrick Lagorce, Dominique Derasse, Antoine Illouz (his favorite), Pierre Gillet, Matthias Persson, Stephen Burns, Niklas Eklund, Reinhold Friedrich, Clément Garrec, Håkan Hardenberger, Philippe Hechler, David Lewis, Philippe Litzler, Mauro Maur, Bo Nilsson, Jean-Pierre Odasso, René Périnelli, Roy Poper, Frank Pulcini, Claude Rippas, Otto Sauter, Max Sommerhalder, Mineo Sugiki, Kenji Tamiya, Hiroki Yamashiro, Donald Green, and Frits Damrow. His stern style of teaching was reminiscent of Raymond Sabarich, Maurice André's former teacher at the conservatory. Although Thibaud was considered uncompromising and sometimes harsh, he could be equally gentle and loving to his students as people. Thibaud is important in the French trumpet history because he introduced all the American methods (Caruso, Spaulding, and Stamp–from whom he took lessons in Moudon in 1976), which broke the French tradition represented by Arban, Franquin, Foveau, Sabarich, and Delmotte. Thibaud oriented the evolution of French teaching toward an international playing concept. He very much liked jazz trumpet players, having been impressed by Miles Davis's Birth of the Cool album during the early part of his career. Along with Roger Delmotte and Maurice André, Thibaud is one of the more influential and important classical French trumpet players of the second half of the twentieth century.

Several method books and studies have been published that contain materials and pedagogical information from Thibaud's teachings: Technique nouvelle de la Trompette (Leduc), L'Abc du jeune trompettiste, vol.1, vol.2, vol.3 (Billaudot), Cahier de gammes (Billaudot), Douze études de virtuosité dans le style d'Arban (Billaudot), Exercices d'échauffement et vocalises (Orchestra Musician's CD Rom library), Method for the Advanced Trumpeter, Daily Routines and Vocalises for the Advanced Trumpeter, and Chromatic Exercises and Technical Studies for the Advanced Trumpeter (2002, Balquhidder Music)

Thibouville-Lamy, [Louis Emile] Jérôme (b. La Couture, France, Feb. 1, 1833; d. 1902). French instrument maker. The Thibouville-

Lamy family of instrument makers dates back to 1730 in La Couture-Boussey, France. The company became quite large and, at its zenith around 1850, had three factories: woodwinds in La Couture, brass in Grenelle, and strings in Mirecourt. Jérôme started off working in the Mirecourt plant, and around 1865 became the sole owner of the firm.

Thibouville-Lamy was the first firm to introduce machine-made instruments, which it began to exhibit in 1867, and over the years the company won medals in numerous countries. As early as 1878, Thibouville-Lamy produced a four-valve trumpet. Between 1880 and 1925, the company became the largest manufacturer of musical instruments in France, and by the turn of the nineteenth century had a 204-page catalog that also included percussion instruments. A New York distribution branch was opened in 1895.

From 1898 to 1925, Merri Franquin, professor of trumpet at the Paris Conservatory from 1894 to 1929, worked closely with the Thibouville-Lamy company to develop trumpets with four and five valves that could be played in two or more keys. The most popular version was the four-valve model that could be played in C or D. This instrument, revised by Franquin in 1915, was later made popular by Roger Voisin, a French trumpeter who played in the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1934 to 1973 (principal 1950-65). Franquin and Thibouville-Lamy also developed the "Franquin-model" five-valve trumpet in 1916, although Franquin had worked on the idea as early as 1888 (Thibouville-Lamy also made a six-valve trumpet.) Although the five-valve instrument became popular at the Paris Conservatory during Franquin's years there, Paris trumpeters outside the conservatory disliked the instrument, claiming that it was a "secret weapon," and that the conservatory students were "cheating." Trumpeters René Voisin and Julien Porret rejected the five- and six-valve models, and production ceased after Franquin's death. On the other hand, the four-valve model was quite successful in Paris with players like Julien Porret and Emmanuel Chaine, long before Roger Voisin's time. Other makers such as Millereau and Milliens produced similar four-valve models.

Thibouville-Lamy was awarded the Chevalier of the Legion of Honor ribbon in 1877. He died in 1902, and the company closed its brass factory in 1961. Other branches also eventually closed. The firm exists today in London, but manufactures only musical instrument accessories.

Thieck, William Adelbert (b. Naumburg, Germany, Mar. 27, 1883; d. Watertown, Wisconsin, Nov. 10, 1930). American trumpeter. Very little is known of Thieck's early life other than he was born in Naumburg, Germany (not Mecklenburg as is often written) and played in the Laube Orchestra in Hamburg. He was principal trumpet of the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York from 1906 to 1908, Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra (1908-12), principal of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (now the Minnesota Orchestra) from 1912 to 1920, Grauman's Symphony Orchestra (1920) in Los Angeles, and principal of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra from 1921 to 1922. He wrote Daily Studies for the Cornet or Trumpet in 1928, and a highly regarded method titled The Art of Trumpet Playing (reprinted by Colin Publications with preface by Mel Broiles).

William Thieck married Anthonea Thieck from Cedarburg, Wisconsin, in 1908. Both were accomplished on the violin and piano.

According to his granddaughter, Lori Brosh, whenever William returned home from a long trip, he would play a love song on his trumpet as he walked towards his house. His wife, a professional opera singer, would open a window and sing the song with him. Their neighbors taught their children that this was true love.

In 1922, Thieck became leader of the 150th Cavalry Band in Madison, Wisconsin. The Thieck family eventually settled in Cedarburg, Wisconsin, where his wife grew up. He and Anthonea had three daughters, each named after famous operas—Isolde (b. 1909), Mignon (b. 1914), and Bruennhilde (b. 1916).

Apparently distraught, William Thieck supposedly hanged himself on November 10, 1930 in Watertown, Wisconsin, but the family has always suspected foul play. Anthonea died in 1965 and is buried in Cedarburg, Wisconsin. William's ashes were placed in her coffin.

Thomas, Jay (b. Seattle, Washington, Oct. 27, 1949). American trumpeter, flugelhornist, and saxophonist. Thomas's father, Marvin, was a big band trumpeter in the Seattle area who later became a pharmacist. Jay began playing the trumpet in fourth grade. He added various saxophones to his repertoire of instruments while in high school and began gigging on sax within one month. After graduating from high school in 1967, he attended the Berklee School of Music in Boston for a short while, where he also began playing the flute. His trumpet teacher was Carmine Caruso.

One summer during his college years, Thomas played with Machito's Latin band in New York City. Unfortunately, being young and impressionable, he was influenced by the other band members who abused drugs, and by the end of the summer, Thomas was totally addicted.

Thomas moved to San Francisco in 1974 where he played with Slim Gaillard, John Stowell, Herb Ellis, and Jessica Williams. Still struggling with his drug addiction, he decided to return home to Seattle in 1978, and with the help of friends and family, was able to give up his drug habit for good.

Playing on over sixty albums to date, Jay Thomas has recorded with Gaillard, Ellis, James Moody, Dave Friesen, James Knapp, Jessica Williams, the Ramsay-Kleeb Orchestra, Elvin Jones, Phil Kelly, Brian Owen, Doug Miller, Kelly Harland, the Seattle

Repertory Jazz Orchestra, and his wife, singer Becca Duran. His albums as leader include Easy Does It (Discovery), 360 Degrees (Hep), Live at Tula's (McVonty), Blues for McVonty (Stash), 12th and Jackson Blues (McVonty), Rapture (Jazz Focus), Roll Call (Justice, with Herb Ellis), Jay (Focus, with Jessica Williams), and Jessica's Blues (Focus, with Jessica Williams). He also played with Mel Lewis, Harold Land, Zoot Sims, and Cedar Walton.

A highly versatile musician, Thomas was selected as one of the top ten players in the "Brass on Fire" search conducted by JAZZIT magazine. He is skilled at bop and swing, and plays trumpet and saxophone equally well.

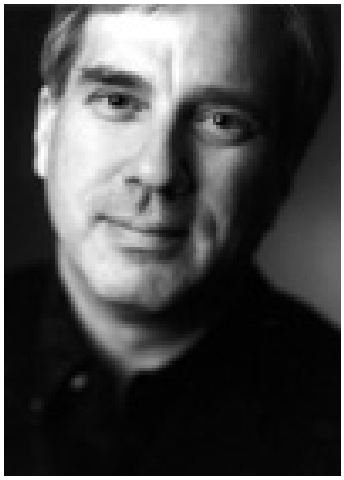
Thomas, John (b. Ft. Worth, Texas, Feb. 14, 1950). American trumpeter. Thomas began playing trumpet at age ten and graduated from Paschal High School in 1968. His teachers were Don Thomas, Don Jacoby, Bob Lanese, John Haynie, James Stamp, Boyde Hood, and Carmine Caruso. He earned a bachelor of music degree from North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) in 1984, and a master of music degree from the University of Southern California in 1987.



Thomas began his career at age seventeen when he joined the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra. He played lead trumpet with Woody Herman from 1971 to 1973, with the Count Basie Orchestra from 1975 to 1976, and with Chick Corea's band from 1976 to 1979. As a top jazz artist in Los Angeles, he has performed with Maria Schneider, Bill Holman, Joe Williams, Louis Bellson, Matt Catingub, Bob Florence, the Smithsonian Jazz Orchestra, Bobby Caldwell, Burt Bacharach, Elvis Costello, and many others. He has toured with Ella Fitzgerald, Frank Sinatra, Andy Williams, The Osmonds, Tom Jones, Lionel Hampton, Sammy Davis Jr., Nancy Wilson, Stevie Wonder, Dionne Warwick, Don Ellis, James Brown, and B.B. King. He is currently playing lead in the Harry James Orchestra and the Glenn Miller Orchestra. He can be heard on the soundtrack of the movie, Ray.

Thomas is a professor of jazz at the University of Southern California, and has released an instructional DVD titled Trumpet Secrets Revealed (Hal Leonard). He is a Senior Specialist for the Fulbright Scholarship Board, and has received many awards including a State Department Specialist Grant (to teach in Croatia), "Outstanding Jazz Studies Graduate" award from USC (1987), and a Fulbright Senior Specialist Award. He has served on the board of the International Association of Jazz Educators (California unit), and was voted into the trumpet section of the University of North Texas All Star Alumni One O'Clock Band in 1987 and 1997. He was a featured artist at the 2005 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Bangkok, Thailand.

John is married to Irène Gabriel-Thomas, a chiropractor. He has a daughter Celeste (b. 1981) from a former marriage, and a stepdaughter Mara Gabriel (b. 1992). His hobbies include motorcycle riding and hiking.

Thomas, John Charles (b. Springfield, Ohio, Feb. 24, 1959). American trumpeter. Thomas grew up in Springfield, Ohio, and graduated from Springfield North High School in 1977, studying trumpet with Lowell "Bud" Arthur. He attended the Jordan Conservatory at Butler University in Indianapolis, Indiana, from 1977 to 1979, studying with Marvin C. Perry II. He transferred to Indiana University during his junior year, completing his bachelor of music degree with distinction in 1981. His primary teacher at IU was Charles Gorham, but he also studied with Louis Davidson and William Adam.

Thomas moved to Europe in June of 1981 on a Rotary Graduate Fellowship, attending the Musikhochschule des Saarlandes and studying with Manfred Endres from October to December 1981. From January through May 1982, he studied music composition at the Hochschule für Musik und darstellende Kunst in Vienna. After completing school, he toured several European countries, performing Porgy and Bess with the New York Harlem Opera Company. From January 1983 through May 1984, he again attended Indiana University, earning a master of music degree with Allan Dean.

Thomas settled in the New York area in 1984, working with a wide variety of performers and ensembles such as Dave Brubeck, James Taylor, Nancy Wilson, the Temptations, New York Philharmonic, l'Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, Solisti New York, American Symphony Orchestra, Julie Taymor, Elliot Goldenthal, and others. He has also performed with the Vienna Symphony, San Francisco Symphony, and the Trier Bach Soloists in Germany. A highly versatile performer, Thomas has recorded numerous film scores and soundtracks, including Peace Love & Misunderstanding, S.W.A.T., Sphere, Highway, Titus, Juan Darién, and The Power of Myth. He is currently the principal trumpet of the Ridgefield Symphony Orchestra, Waterbury Symphony Orchestra, and assistant principal with the Queens Symphony Orchestra. He has been a member of the Grammy Award-winning quintet, The Chestnut Brass, since 2001, and is also a member of the Modern Brass Quintet. He is an active soloist, performing about fifteen recitals each year and appearing with various orchestras.

As a teacher, Thomas has served on the faculties of Ithaca College (2009), State University of New York-Stony Brook, Marist College, Packer Collegiate Institute, and The Parsons School. He received his doctor of musical arts degree from SUNY-Stony Brook in 1991, studying with Ronald K. Anderson. Thomas is currently teaching at Bard College.

Thomas's hobbies include hiking, bicycling, reading, international traveling, and visiting art museums, outdoor art installations, and cultural sites.

Thomas, Joseph ("Joe") Lewis (b. Webster Groves, Missouri, July 24, 1909; d. New York, Aug. 6, 1984). American trumpeter. Thomas studied trumpet with P.G. Lankford in St. Louis and began his career in several Midwest territorial bands including those of Cecil Scott (1928), Darrell Harris (1929), Eli Rice (1928-32), Shuffle Abernathy (1932-33), Harold Flood (1933), Ira Coffey (1933-34), Ferman Tapp (1934), and Charlie Turner (1934).

Thomas moved to New York City in late 1934 and soon played with Fletcher Henderson (1934), Fats Waller, Baron Lee (1934-35), Henderson again (1936-37), Willie Bryant (1937), Claude Hopkins (1938-39), and Benny Carter's big band (1939-40). During the 1940s, he tended to play in small groups such as those of James P. Johnson, Joe Sullivan, Teddy Wilson (1942-43), Barney Bigard (1944-45), Cozy Cole (1948), and Bud Freeman (1949).

Thomas recorded quite a bit during the 1940s. He led recording sessions for Keynote (1946) and Hot Record Society (HRS, 1946). He also recorded with Lil Armstrong, Red Norvo, Don Byas, and Art Tatum. Labels include Decca, Vocalion, Victor, Black and White, Famous Door, Emarcy, Trip, HRS, but mainly Keynote. His best solo album is Black Butterfly (Keynote).

Thomas was a fine swing player known for his large, dark, rich tone and ability to play staccato during slow melodic solos; his command of rhythmic space was intriguing. He was greatly influenced by Louis Armstrong, but as bebop music came to prominence during the 1950s, Thomas's style of playing became passé. He was often ignored in favor of younger bebop players and his reputation as a top soloist began to fade. He mostly freelanced in New York during the 1950s and '60s, but played traditional jazz with Henderson's reunion band (1957), Eddie Condon (1964), and Claude Hopkins (1966). His health became problematic during the 1970s and he retired. He died at the age of seventy-five.

Thompson, Emery ("Fats") [aka Umar Uthman Sharif] (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, 1927; d. Norcross, Georgia, Oct. 16, 1998). American trumpeter. It is amazing that Thompson's influence is still felt today, considering that he dropped out of professional music for twenty years of his life to become an Islamic minister (1955-74). His reputation as a trumpet player in New Orleans during the early 1940s rivaled that of the great Louis Armstrong.

Thompson began playing the trumpet at age five; his first teachers were his grandfather, Professor Jim B. Humphrey, and his cousin, Willie Humphrey. He attended the Gilbert Academy (currently De La Salle High School), and later graduated from Booker T. Washington High School in New Orleans (1943). His career began when he was only fourteen, performing with the local Music Masters (1941), and Luis Russell and Jimmie Lunceford's bands in 1942. From 1943 to 1944, he was a member of territory big bands led by Herbert Leary (1943) and Dooky Chase (1944). After graduating from high school, he attended Southern University in Baton Rouge, but left school in 1944 to join Snookum Russell's Band in Oklahoma City. He played with Louis Armstrong (1944-46, tours and recordings [the Armstrong discographies list him as Ernest Thompson, on baritone sax!]), Louis Jordan, Joe Turner, Lonnie Johnson (1947), Lionel Hampton (1947-48), and then toured with the road show, Bronze Manikins (that included Fletcher Henderson) until 1949. During Thompson's prime, he shared the stage with many great artists including Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald (both in New Orleans during 1979-80), and Sammy Green's Hot Harlem Review.

Thompson became interested in the Islamic faith during the early 1950s, and in 1954 was given the Muslin name Umar Uthman Sharif. He stopped playing professionally in 1954 in order to teach the Islamic religion in New Orleans. In 1974, he moved to Chicago where he managed a restaurant and began playing professionally again as a member of the house bands at the Blackstone Hotel and the Palmer House Hotel. He was later invited by Wynton Marsalis to perform with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra in New York City. Dizzy Gillespie once said of Thompson, Whenever Emery picked up his horn, everyone put theirs down and just listened.

Thompson [Umar Uthman Sharif] and Aidah Sharif were married in 1959, and had two sons and two daughters. One of their sons, Jamil Sharif, is a well-known trumpeter.

Thompson, James (b. Frankfurt, Germany, May 12, 1949). American trumpeter. Thompson grew up in Phoenix, Arizona, and began playing the trumpet at age ten. He heard a live performance of Rafael Méndez when he was eleven, which sparked his desire to become a professional trumpeter; other early influences were recordings of Maynard Ferguson, Doc Severinsen, and Maurice André. His first teacher was Rich Longfield.

Thompson began teaching while in high school, charging fifty cents per half-hour. After graduation, he studied in Boston with Roger Voisin; orchestral recordings by Adolph Herseth and Gilbert Johnson also influenced him. He became the principal trumpet of The Phoenix Symphony in 1970. Three years later, he moved to Mexico as principal trumpet of the Mexico State Orchestra (1973-74) and the National Orchestra of Mexico (1974-76). He also taught at the National Conservatory of Music in Mexico City. Thompson became the principal trumpet of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra in Canada (1976-90), and taught at McGill University before accepting the principal trumpet chair of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra in 1990. In 1979, he was a prize-winner in the Maurice André International Solo Competition in Paris.

After eight seasons with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, Thompson accepted a professorship at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York. Since starting there in 1998, he has toured the world as a guest soloist, recitalist, and clinician for the Yamaha Corporation. He has recorded solo CDs for Chandos and the International Trumpet Guild, toured with the Summit Brass ensemble, and performed with Chicago's Music of the Baroque. He has taught at the Bremen Trumpet Days in Germany and has been a guest principal of the New York Philharmonic, Los Angeles Philharmonic, Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Seattle Symphony Orchestra, and the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

During the opening ceremonies of the 1996 Olympic Games in Atlanta, Thompson was heard on worldwide television performing gospel music on his trumpet. He published two volumes of Buzzing Basics in 1995, which are now published by BIM as The Buzzing Book.

Thompson, Malachi Richard (b. Princeton, Kentucky, Aug. 21, 1949; d. Chicago, Illinois, July 16, 2006). American trumpeter. Thompson grew up in Chicago. He began playing the piano at age five, and the trumpet at eleven; he studied with William Brimfield. In 1966, he played in Troy Robinson's Jazz Workshop Ensemble, and joined the Association of Creative Musicians in 1967. An excellent early avant-garde jazz player, Thompson performed in Chicago with Muhal Richard Abrams, Henry Threadgill, John Stubblefield, Kalaparusha Maurice McIntyre, and various ensembles led by Lester Bowie. In 1968, he was a member of Dr. Martin Luther King's Operation Breadbasket Orchestra.

Thompson graduated from Governor's State University in 1974 with a degree in music composition. He then moved to New York City where he studied with Freddie Hubbard, Woody Shaw, and Joe Summerhill. He performed with the Collective Black Artists Orchestra, Jesse Jackson, Dick Gregory, Eddie Harris, Elvin Jones, the Temptations, Joe Henderson, Jackie McLean, Frank Foster, James Spaulding, Leon Thomas, Sam Rivers, Cecil Taylor, Billy Hart, Muse Big Band led by Reggie Workman, David Murray, Jackie McLean, Sam Rivers, Joe Henderson, Ken McIntyre, Roland Alexander (1975-79), Sam Wooding (1976), and Archie Shepp (on and off between 1979-88).

Thompson was diagnosed with T-cell lymphoma in 1989 and told that he had only one more year to live, but his illness went into remission after radiation treatment. He moved to Washington, D.C. for a short while, and then moved to Vienna, Austria. He was able to make a full comeback to trumpet playing, and moved to Chicago in 1991. He formed his group, Africa Brass, in 1991 and founded the Sutherland Community Arts Institution (a nonprofit organization) during that same year. He also led his own Freebop Band for many years, as well as his Brass Proud band.

Thompson recorded thirteen albums as leader, plus twenty-six other recordings. He toured the world and was selected as a 1995 Arts Midwest Jazz Master. He also was named "Chicagoan of the Year" by the Chicago Tribune newspaper in 1996. His albums include The Jaz Life (Delmark), Lift Every Voice (Delmark), New Standards (Delmark), Timeline (Delmark), Blue Jazz (Delmark), Spirit (Delmark), 47th Street (Delmark), Rising Daystar (Delmark), Freebop Now! (Delmark), The Seventh Son (Ra), and Legends and Heroes (Ra).

Thompson died of cancer, just one month before his fifty-seventh birthday. He was survived by his son, daughter, and two sisters.

Thompson, Michael ("Mike") R. (b. Des Moines, Iowa, May 17, 1959). American trumpeter. Thompson grew up in Earlham, Iowa, on his parents' dairy farm. He began playing trumpet at the age of eleven, and studied with Mark Wells until he entered high school, when he studied with Robert Weast. After graduating from Earlham Community High School in 1978, he enrolled in William Penn College in Oskaloosa, Iowa, studying with Stan Hahn and earning a bachelor of music education degree in 1982.

Thompson began teaching high school band in Tabor, Iowa, from 1982 to 1986, and in 1986 began teaching strings in the Omaha public schools in Nebraska, an activity he still enjoys. He attended the University of Nebraska in Lincoln, studying with Dennis L. Schneider, but completed his master of music degree in 1988 at the University of Nebraska-Omaha studying with Steven Erickson. Thompson was a member of the Omaha Symphony from 1983 to 2008 and second trumpet of the Lincoln Symphony from 1983 to 2004. Since 2004, he has been principal of the Lincoln Symphony, as well as performing as an extra with the San Diego Symphony Orchestra. He is a member and manager of the Palladium Brass Quintet (since 1986), the Omaha Brass Ensemble (since 1991), and the Plymouth Brass in Lincoln. He was president of the musicians' union of Omaha from 1995 to 2007. In 1997, he formed Mike Thompson Music Service out of the basement of his home, and in 2005, leased a building for what is now Thompson Music, one of the largest retail music stores in the nation.

Michael and Kristy Thompson, a florist, were married in 1979, and have two daughters: Anne (b. 1980) and Emily (b. 1983). He enjoys wine collecting and sports cars.

Thornburg, Lee R[ankin] (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Nov. 5, 1954). American trumpeter. As a boy, Thornburg took lessons in Syracuse, New York from Elliot Topalian (1970) and played in the Syracuse Youth Symphony. During high school, he studied with Harry Herforth of the Cleveland Orchestra. He later attended the Manhattan School of Music in New York City.

A top commercial performer with a wide range, Thornburg has been a member of such groups as Chicago, Supertramp, Tower of Power, John Mach and the Heart Attack, and The Tonight Show Band. He has also performed with Wayne Cochran and the C.C. Riders, Nicolette Larson's band, Lowell George, Tom Petty, Aaron Neville, Ray Charles, Jimmy Dorsey, Frankie Valli, Bonnie Raitt, Huey Lewis, Dwight Yoakam, and Clint Black.

In 2008, Thornburg played on Willy DeVille's Pistola album, and in 2009 performed at the Royal Albert Hall in London, a performance recorded on Joe Bonamassa's latest DVD release.

Thornburg also plays trombone, horn, and saxophone. He resides in the Los Angeles area. He is the older brother of Scott Thornburg (b. 1960), professor of trumpet at Western Michigan University.

Thornburg, Scott W. (b. Cleveland, Ohio, May 19, 1960). American trumpeter. Scott's father was a brass player, and his older brother Lee (b. 1954) also plays trumpet professionally; they influenced him to take up the trumpet at age nine. Scott's first teacher was a young band director named Jean Holley, and he soon took private lessons with Leroy Strickland, George Coble, and Elliot Topalian. After graduating from North Syracuse Central High School in Syracuse, New York in 1978, he attended the University of Miami under Gilbert Johnson from 1978 to 1982, receiving a bachelor of music degree. He then studied with William Vacchiano and Raymond Mase at The Juilliard School in New York City (1982-84), earning a master of music degree.

Thornburg began his impressive career by performing with the Orchestra of St. Luke's (1983-89), as well as other ensembles: Toccatas & Flourishes trumpet and organ duo (1984-88), Musica Sacra (1984-86), Philharmonic Virtuosi (1984-90), New York Trumpet Ensemble (1984-94), New York City Symphony (1985-89), Stamford Symphony Orchestra (1986-87), Hartford Symphony Orchestra (substitute principal, 1986), Canadian Brass (1987), New York Brass (1987-89), Brass Band of Battle Creek (1991 to present), American Brass Quintet (1997), and Boston Brass (2004-09). He has also performed with Summit Brass, Parnassus, Spectrum Brass Quintet, and many other groups.

Since 1989, Thornburg has been a trumpet professor at Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo. He is a member of the Western Brass Quintet, Kalamazoo Symphony Orchestra, and is an active soloist who released the CD, Music for Trumpet and Piano on the Centaur label. In 1996, he gave master classes in Spain and Russia.

Thornburg has been married to Sue Ruth Larsen, an elementary vocal music teacher, since 1986. Their children are Laura (b. 1988), Lee (b. 1993), and Eric (b. 1995). His hobbies include collecting cars.

Thornton, Clifford Edward III (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Sept. 6, 1936; d. Geneva, Switzerland, Nov. 25, 1983). American trumpeter, cornetist, and valve trombonist. Thornton studied at New York's High School of Music & Art and studied privately with jazz trumpeter Donald Byrd. He attended Temple University in Philadelphia in 1954-56, but dropped out to play tuba with Ray Draper's group (1956-57). After being drafted into the Army in 1958, Thornton spent the next four years playing in an Army band in Korea and Japan (1958-61). After his military obligations, he lived in New York City where he played free jazz with Sun Ra, Pharoah Sanders (1963-67), Marzette Watts, and John Tchicai, and also led the New Arts Ensemble (1967-68). During 1964-65, he studied in Würzburg at the Bavarian State Conservatory.

Thornton moved to Europe in 1969, and toured with Archie Shepp, Dave Burrell, Sunny Murray, and others. He became outspoken in his political views and was banned from France because he was thought to have been a member of the Black Panther Party. He returned to the U.S. in 1970 and joined the jazz faculty at Wesleyan University. He also performed with the Jazz Composers Orchestra in 1974.

Forming his own label, Third World Records, Thornton released Freedom and Unity and Communications Network. He also recorded The Panther and the Lash (American) and The Gardens of Harlem (JCOA). An excellent free jazz player on a variety of instruments, Thornton has been an underrated and often overlooked musician.

Thow, George A. ("Gus") (b. Cleveland, Ohio, July 8, 1908; d. California, Apr., 1987). American trumpeter. Thow was an honor student at West High School in Cleveland, Ohio. He received a scholarship to attend Harvard University (1925-30) where he received a bachelor's degree in French literature. He studied trumpet with Billy Hruby, and while in school, played in Johnny Green's big band. After graduating, he joined Isham Jones's band (1932-34), and played for a short while with the fledgling Benny Goodman band.

In 1934, Thow replaced Bunny Berigan in the Dorsey Brothers Band, and when the band broke up in 1935, Thow then played with the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra (until 1937), as well as the bands of Jack Teagarden (1955) and Artie Shaw. He also played with Gordon Jenkins (1937-56).

Thow moved to California and played at the Warner Bros. studios (1943-45), and became a member of the NBC Television staff orchestra. He is best known for his many television broadcasts as a member of the Lawrence Welk Orchestra (1956-62). He then became part of the production staff for the Welk organization, and occasionally appeared on televised performances with Welk in a short solo or Dixieland tune. His last years were spent as a private trumpet teacher, arranger, and composer.

Tison, Donald R[ex] (b. Pontiac, Michigan, Mar. 19, 1935). American trumpeter. Tison grew up in Pontiac, Michigan. He joined his seventh grade band in order to avoid taking a physical education class under a mean coach. His first lessons were with his band director, Donald Polosky, and while in high school, studied with Paul Wilwerth. After graduating from high school, he joined the Navy and played solo cornet in the Naval Academy Band in Fairfax, Virginia, from 1954 to 1957. He commuted to Washington, D.C. each week for lessons with Lloyd Geisler who was principal trumpet of the National Symphony Orchestra.

After his service years, Tison attended the University of Michigan from 1958 to 1962 where he studied with Clifford Lillya, and earned bachelor and master of music degrees. After graduating, he took a few lessons with Vincent Cichowicz in Chicago. His early inspirations came from listening to recordings of Harry James, Harry Glantz, Mannie Klein, Rafael Méndez, and Maurice André. During his junior year of college, he landed a summer job as soloist with Frank Bryan's municipal band at the Ann Arbor May Festival (summer of 1960), a position he held again from 1962 to 1966. During his last year of college, he was invited to audition for the principal chair of the New Orleans Philharmonic, a position he held from 1962 to 1969. He also played with the New Orleans Opera Orchestra.

Tison became principal of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra in 1969. During his thirty-eight years there, he made many recordings with the orchestra. During this period, he often subbed with the Philadelphia Orchestra and studied with Gilbert Johnson and Vincent Cichowicz (1974). He also gave numerous concerts for trumpet and organ. In 1981, he also premiered Donald Erb's Concerto for Trumpet and Orchestra at Carnegie Hall in New York City. He taught at the Peabody Conservatory of Music from 1971 to 1982. Tison retired in 2000. His hobbies include producing videos, juggling (his son is a champion juggler), playing mandolin, and motorcycling.

Tofanelli, Andrea ("Tofa") (b. Viareggio, Tuscany, Italy, July 26, 1965). Italian trumpeter. As a boy of eight, Tofanelli learned solfege from a retired music teacher, and at age eleven began taking trumpet lessons from Marino Peruzzi and Mauro Franceschi. At age sixteen, he attended the conservatory in Lucca, and studied languages at a high school for five years. He had additional trumpet lessons with Vincenzo Camaglia and Giuseppe Bodanza, and jazz lessons with Oscar Valdambrini and Sergio Fanni. His teacher at the conservatory changed his embouchure, leaving him unable to play for three years.

Fortunately, Tofanelli attended a ten-day master class with Armando Ghitalla, former principal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, who helped him straighten out his embouchure.

Tofanelli began playing lead trumpet in a big band when he was fourteen. After he received his diploma from the conservatory (cum laude), he embarked on a remarkable international career. He has performed with such artists as Maynard Ferguson, Randy Brecker, Claudio Roditi, Peter Erskine, Kenny Wheeler, Tom Harrell, Dave Liebman, Lee Konitz, Allen Vizzutti, Paul Anka, George Michael, Joe Cocker, Tom Jones, Burt Bacharach, Michael Bublè, New York Voices, Gloria Gaynor, Lew Soloff, Roger Ingram, and many others. He has worked in the Italian movie and television studios, recording hundreds of television commercials, over eighty CDs, and film soundtracks. His own albums include Mattia's Walk (Splasc(H)), Ricordo di...Napoli (Fonotec nica) and Flamingo (ACM). All this is possible because his superb high register is on a par with that of Maynard Ferguson or Arturo Sandoval.

Tofanelli is conductor of the L. Boccherini Institute of Music Jazz Orchestra in Lucca. He is professor of trumpet at Vecchi-Tonelli Conservatory in Modena, and since 2000 has been the artistic director of the Dean Benedetti Jazz Festival in Torre del Lago Puccini. He has been a featured artist at numerous international trumpet and jazz festivals, including the 2008, 2010, and 2012 conferences of the International Trumpet Guild. He has also received the Visa O-1 award for extraordinary ability in the arts.

In 2003, Tofanelli developed a serious lip infection from a broken cyst in the middle of his upper lip, leaving him unable to play. He had it surgically removed, but began playing again too soon, resulting in a new infection. In order to continue playing and financially support his family, he learned to play from the side of his mouth while the center of his lip healed properly. Six months later, he was successful in returning to his normal embouchure.

Tolley, Richard ("Dick") Earl (b. Pennsylvania, c1932). American trumpeter. Tolley grew up in Pennsylvania and Binghamton, New York. He studied cornet with Clarence W. Chase, and attended the University of Illinois, studying with Haskell O. Sexton and receiving bachelor and master of music degrees. He then served as a member of the 33rd US Army Band in Heidelberg, Germany, from 1956 to 1958.

Tolley became professor of trumpet at Texas Tech University in Lubbock in 1959. He played principal trumpet in the Lubbock Symphony Orchestra, and freelanced as a classical and jazz musician, often playing at clubs in a jazz combo with wife Betty. He released one self-produced solo album, Brass is Beautiful, for trumpet and piano. Tolley also composed Red Raider Fanfare and Ride Raider Ride (1961), the latter a school fight song performed by the Texas Tech Marching Band. He retired in 1991.

Tolliver, Charles (b. Jacksonville, Florida, Mar. 6, 1942). American trumpeter. Tolliver grew up in New York City. At age eight his grandmother gave him a cornet, which he taught himself to play. He attended Howard University where he studied to become a pharmacist, but his desire to play music fulltime was too strong, and he dropped out of school to play with Jackie McLean, Joe Henderson (1963-65), Archie Shepp (1964), Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1965), and Roy Haynes (1966).

Tolliver moved to Los Angeles in 1966, and played with Willie Bobo and the Gerald Wilson Orchestra for a year, but returned to New York in 1967. He performed and recorded with Max Roach (1966-69), the Horace Silver Quintet (1967), McCoy Tyner, Booker Ervin, Andrew Hill, Gary Bartz, Roy Ayers, Oliver Nelson, Sonny Rollins, Louis Hayes, and others, and played in Europe (1968-69: Paris, Hamburg, London). A skilled hard bopper and avant-garde performer, Tolliver and pianist Stanley Cowell formed a quartet called Music Inc. and also cofounded Strata East Records in 1971. In 1968, Tolliver formed a group called Charles Tolliver and His All Stars, and in the same year, was voted top trumpeter in Downbeat magazine's Critics Choice poll.

During the mid 1970s, Tolliver became a music teacher and was much less active as a performer. He later toured the United States, Europe, South America, Japan, and Scandinavia. He recorded many albums, a few of which are Grand Max (Black Lion), Live at Slugs (Strata East), Compassion (Strata East), Live in Tokyo (Strata East), Paper Man (Black Lion), The Ringer (Freedom), Impact (Enja), Action (Blue Note, with Jackie McLean), Dance With Death (Blue Note, with Andrew hill), Serenade to a Soul Sister (Blue Note, with Horace Silver), Jacknife (Blue Note), and It's Time (Blue Note, with Jackie McLean).

Törner, Gösta (b. Stockholm, Sweden, Oct. 27, 1912; d. Stockholm, Sweden, Nov. 11, 1982). Swedish trumpeter and bandleader. Törner became one of Sweden's leading swing and Dixieland trumpeters. He began playing professionally in the late 1920s and later worked with Sune Lundwall (1933-35), the Sonora Swing Singers (1936-38), Arne Hülphers (1937-40), Sven Fors (1940-42), and Thore Ehrling (1941-50). In 1949, Törner gave a brilliant performance with the Swedish All Stars at the Paris Jazz Festival.

Törner led his own group (1943-47) and made numerous recordings including a full LP album called Living Legend (Phontastic, 1964). The musical scores used by his band (several of which he composed) now reside in the Svensk Visarkiv in Stockholm. Much of his recorded music has been reissued on CDs such as Trumpet Player (Phontastic), Flash (Phontastic), and Parisorkestern 1949 (Dragon).

Tottle, William [Hamilton Jr.] (b. c1900; d. Oct. 27, 1976). American instrument maker. William Tottle Sr. was a German immigrant to Boston, and became the trumpet designer for the Vega Company. He also owned a retail music store in downtown Boston. When the Vega Company laid him off in 1931 because of financial difficulty during the Great Depression, he established the firm, Tottle, and began repairing and making custom modifications to trumpets. His son, William Jr., became a trumpeter who played with many big bands during the height of the swing era. William Jr. joined the firm, and it was renamed Tottle & Son. After William Sr. died, his son took over the business.

Tottle Jr. became a leader in improving standard trumpets. One of his innovations was a sliding bell trumpet based on the 1937 Conn "38A Victor" cornet that had a U-shaped crook in the bell that incorporated a tuning slide, but Tottle's design eliminated the tuning slide, and instead allowed the entire bell to move forward or backward. This instrument was made famous during the 1960s by Armando Ghitalla, principal of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and was dubbed the "Tottlephone." Several years later, Renold Schilke managed to patent the design. Tottle was also an excellent mouthpiece maker. He was one of the first to develop component mouthpieces (the first was Théo Charlier), as well as an adjustable-cup trumpet mouthpiece that was used by Ghitalla. Bill Chase also played on a (nonadjustable) custom Tottle mouthpiece.

Another important instrument made by Tottle was a C/D trumpet that was made for Ghitalla. Taking Ghitalla's standard Bach C trumpet, Tottle added a sliding bell and a fourth (rotary) valve located in the center of the main tuning slide crook. The instrument was shortened in various places so that it could play in C or D when the rotary valve was manipulated. The instrument's design was taken from the C/D trumpets made by the Thibouville-Lamy Company. [See biography on Jérôme Thibouville-Lamy.]

Tottle was a witty and personable man who loved to tell humorous stories. Bill Osmun said of him, He was a consummate craftsman with an incredibly fertile and inventive mind. His specialty was trumpet customizing: he developed the original bell tuning instruments. He was also a fine mouthpiece maker. Bill was a kind, generous, and very funny man who is missed by all who knew him. After Tottle died in 1976, the company was taken over by his nephew, Bill "Muzzy" Mazzocca, a jazz tenor saxophone player who wanted the company to focus on mouthpiece sales, but the company struggled to survive. After a serious motorcycle accident, Mazzocca's medical complications and expenses forced him to sell all rights, equipment, and inventory, which were purchased by Bob Osmun, who had apprenticed under Tottle for seven years.

Touvron, Guy [Michel] (b. Vichy, France, Feb. 15, 1950). French trumpeter. Touvron began playing the cornet at age ten, studying with André Relin, and playing in the Saint-Yorre Fanfare. At age sixteen, he studied with Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory (1967-69). He won first prize in the annual cornet competition (1969), and first prize in trumpet (1972). While in school, he was a member of the Lyons Opera Orchestra, known as Orchestre Rhône-Alpes (1969-72). He became principal trumpet of the Philharmonic Orchestra of French Radio-Television (1972-77). He formed the Guy Touvron Brass Ensemble in 1977.

Touvron began a highly successful career as a trumpet soloist, having won prizes in the international competitions in Munich (second prize, 1971), Geneva (second prize, 1975), Paris (Maurice André, first prize, 1975), and Prague (second prize, 1974). To date, he has performed over three thousand solo concerts, and appeared on over seventy recordings, dozens of which are solo albums. Among his CDs are Etudes Françaises du XXé Siècle, Sonnez Trompettes, Le Concert, Fantasia per tromba e organo, Pavane, Ragtime, Gershwin, De List à Nougaro, Touvron, Capricci armonici, and Splendor and Magnificence.

He has recorded for many labels, including RCA, EMI, Ligia, Forlane, BMG, Erato, and Philips.

Touvron was professor of trumpet at the Lyons Regional Conservatory (1974-90), and was appointed professor at the Paris Regional Conservatory (1990), replacing Pierre Pollin. Among his best-known students are Alexander Kastner, Simon Fournier, Stéphane Fyon, Eric Gallon, Ibrahim Maalouf, Balàzs Nemes, Shona Taylor, and members of Trompettes de Lyon (Pierre Ballester, André Bonnici, Didier Chaffard, Ludovic Roux, Jean-Luc Richard). He has written a biography on his mentor titled Maurice André: Une trompette pour la renommée (Trumpet of Fame) (Rocher, 2003). He premiered the Second Concerto for Trumpet by Charles Chaynes (1995), and has soloed with hundreds of symphony orchestras throughout the world, including the English Chamber Orchestra, Mozarteum Orchestra Salzburg, Prague Chamber Orchestra, Lucerne Festival Strings, Czech Philharmonic, National Orchestra of Lyons, Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, and the Dresden Philharmonic.

Touvron was a featured artist during the International Trumpet Guild Conferences in Albuquerque, New Mexico (1982), and Manchester, England (2002), and has served as a judge at numerous international solo competitions. He has presented master classes at schools and festivals around the world. Touvron has received the title of Officer of the Ordre National du Mérite of France.

Travis, Nick [Travascio, Nicholas Anthony] (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Nov. 16, 1925; d. New York, Oct. 7, 1964). American trumpeter. Travis attended the Mastbaum School of Music and played professionally by the age of fifteen. His early experiences were with Johnny McGhee, Mitchell Ayres, Vido Musso (1942), and Woody Herman (on and off, 1942-44). He was drafted during World War II and played in various military bands in Paris (1944-46).

After his service, Travis played in the big bands of Ray McKinley (on and off, 1946-49), Benny Goodman (1948-49), Jerry Wald, Gene Krupa, Ina Ray Hutton, Tommy Dorsey, Tex Beneke, Woody Herman again (1950-51), Jerry Gray, Bob Chester, Elliot Lawrence, and Jimmy Dorsey (1952). He was a star soloist with the Sauter-Finegan Orchestra (1953-56) and a staff musician in New York for NBC from 1957. He later played with Gerry Mulligan's concert jazz band (1960-62) and lead trumpet in Thelonious Monk's concerts at Lincoln Center and Carnegie Hall (1963).

Travis recorded with many jazz artists including Zoot Sims, Al Cohn, Bill Holman, Maynard Ferguson, Manny Albam, Tony Aless, Joe Morello, Stan Getz, Tom Talbert, Coleman Hawkins, Billy Byers, and Gerry Mulligan. He led one solo album, an LP recording titled The Picnic Is Over for RCA (1954).

Unfortunately, Travis became seriously ill with ulcers and died at the age of thirty-eight, ending his very promising career.

Treutel, Edward [Frazier] (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 27, 1913; d. Englewood, New Jersey, Oct. 17, 1997). American trumpeter. Treutel studied trumpet with Harold Rehrig and Herbert Clarke before taking lessons from Max Schlossberg of the New York Philharmonic (from 1934). He entered the Preparatory Division of The Juilliard School, and became a teacher there in 1937 while still a student; he was made a professor in 1946. He remained the Preparatory Division's only trumpet teacher until his retirement in 1995.

Although most of Treutel's career was devoted to teaching, he performed in the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and the New York City Center Opera Company orchestra in 1938. He also played in the 1939-40 World's Fair Band. He participated in the first performance of Copland's Billy the Kid ballet (conducted by Fritz Reiner), Moore's The Devil and Daniel Webster, and gave the first U.S. performance of Shostakovich's Piano Concerto No. 1.

In addition to being on the faculty at Juilliard, Treutel taught at various times at the Manhattan School of Music, Trenton State University, SUNY-Purchase, Long Island University, and the Teachers College of Columbia University. Of his legions of students are Philip Smith, Carole Dawn Reinhart, Vincent LaSelva, and Lew Soloff. Treutel was married to Helen Leonora Marsteller-Treutel. He died at the age of eighty-four.

Treybig, Joel (b. Berea, Ohio, Aug. 28, 1969). American trumpeter. Treybig began playing trumpet at age ten; his early teachers were Jim Fudale and Mary Squire. After graduating from Berea High School in 1987, he studied with James Darling and Mary Squire at Baldwin-Wallace College from 1987 to 1992, earning a bachelor of music degree. He then studied with Scott Johnston at the University of Akron from 1992 to 1994, earning a master of music degree. He continued his education studying with Murray Greig at the Royal Northern College of Music in Manchester, England in 1994-95, and completed his musical education studying with Raymond Crisara at the University of Texas in Austin from 1995 to 1999, earning a DMA degree. His doctoral dissertation is titled An Investigation and Analysis of Karel Husa's Concerto for Trumpet and Wind Orchestra.

Treybig began his teaching career at Bowling Green State University (1999-2000), and continued teaching at the University of Southern Mississippi (2000-05) before accepting his current position at Belmont University in Nashville in 2005. He is a member of the Belmont Brass Quintet, and an active recitalist and freelance performer. He has performed with the Nashville Symphony, Nashville Opera, and several early music ensembles (on Baroque trumpet).

Treybig and his wife, flutist Carolyn Treybig, have been married since 1994 and have two children, Paige (b. 2005) and Ivy (b. 2008). He enjoys music arranging, art, cinema, cooking, and spending time with his family.

Trigg, Dave. American trumpeter. Trigg began his career with the Ringling Brothers Show Band in Florida. He then toured with Holiday on Ice, and joined Woody Herman's band as lead trumpet during the summer of 1982. He returned to Florida where he played with bands at Disney World, Epcot Center, and MGM for ten years. He played two tours with Maynard Ferguson's band in 1991, recording the Hollywood album. He has backed such celebrities as Frank Sinatra, Mel Tormé, Ray Charles, Tony Bennett, Henry Mancini, Rosemary Clooney, Donna Summer, Whitney Houston, Aretha Franklin, and Chaka Khan. He joined Natalie Cole's band in 1992 and moved to Los Angeles where he was also a studio musician. His television credits include the Arsenio Hall Show, Late Night with David Letterman, Rosie O'Donnell Show, Today Show, The Tonight Show, and the 1994 Grammy Awards Show. He has also recorded soundtracks for films including Miracle on 34th Street, Private Parts, and Shaft.

Trigg moved to New York City in late 1992, and has been a studio player, Broadway show performer (Legally Blonde, Catch Me If You Can, Irving Berlin's White Christmas, Liza's at the Palace), and is currently in the house band for Fox Television's American Idol. He is a regular performer with Liza Minnelli's band, and has also played with the big bands of Bill Watrous, Bill Holman, Bob Florence, Roger Neumann, Med Flory, the West Coast Brass, and the Capp/Pierce Juggernaut.

Trimble, Sam (b. Coatsville, Pennsylvania, Mar. 12, 1942). American trumpeter and bandleader. Trimble began playing the trumpet on his ninth birthday after his father traded a spotlight from a 1938 DeSoto automobile for a used trumpet. After graduating from high school, he performed with a US Navy band for four years. He then received a scholarship to attend the University of South Florida. His master of music degree was from North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) where he served as a graduate trumpet teaching assistant under John J. Haynie.

During the late 1960s and early 1970s, Trimble embarked on a career with the touring big bands of Glenn Miller, Les Brown, Stan Kenton, and Les Elgart. He became music director of bands for celebrities such as Bob Hope, Red Skelton, Gladys Knight, James Taylor, and Danny Thomas. He also played lead trumpet in show bands backing Tony Bennett, Jack Jones, Sonny & Cher, and Bob Dylan. He has performed with many jazz greats including Clark Terry, Ed Shaughnessy, Chris Vadala, Dizzy Gillespie, Bobby Shew, Kai Winding, Carl Fontana, and Tony Campise.

Trimble became professor of trumpet and jazz bands at the University of Texas-El Paso in 1972. He also teaches at the El Paso Conservatory of Music. He is the founder and manager of the El Paso Brass, a quintet that has released two CDs, Happy Holidays and Effervescent Brass. In addition, he was principal trumpet of the El Paso Opera orchestra for fourteen seasons.

Trinkle, Steven Wayne (b. c1950). American trumpeter and conductor. Trinkle grew up in Silver Lake, Kansas. He attended Washburn University in Topeka, Kansas, where he earned a bachelor of music degree in 1972. He studied trumpet at the graduate level at Ithaca College (NY) with Herbert Mueller. He later studied with Roger Blackburn of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and then completed some coursework towards a DMA in trumpet at the University of Wisconsin-Madison. He studied conducting with David Becker, Donald Portnoy, Kirk Muspratt, Sam Jones, and Paul Vermel.

Trinkle's orchestral playing experience includes the Orchestra da Camera Italiana and Orchestra Sinfonica della RAI in Turin, Italy (1979), Missouri Symphony Orchestra (1981-82), Shreveport Symphony and Opera (1982-83), Dubuque (IA) Symphony Orchestra (1986-89), Greenville (SC) Symphony Orchestra (1993-97), Asheville (NC) Symphony Orchestra (1995-97), Augusta (GA) Symphony Orchestra (1992-97), and the Wyoming Symphony Orchestra (Casper, WY, 2004-06). He has also played as an extra or substitute trumpeter in the Kansas City Philharmonic, Houston Symphony Orchestra, Houston Grand Opera Orchestra, and the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra. In addition, he was assistant principal with the Orquestra Sinfónica de Maracaibo, Venezuela.

Trinkle is a founding member of the Chestnut Brass Company, with which he played in 1976-77 and 1983-84. He is founder and director of Trinkle Brass Works, Inc., a trio consisting of trumpet, marimba, and bass. He has presented many concerts in Brazil, and in 2000 was made an Honorary Member of the Association of Brazilian Trumpet Players. He has taught at Casper College and Shenandoah University, and has served as an adjunct faculty member at State University College at Cortland (NY), Edgewood University (Omaha, Nebraska), Fayetteville State University, University of North Carolina at Pembroke, University of South Carolina, and Lord Fairfax Community College in Middletown, Virginia. He is currently an adjunct associate professor at the University of Nevada-Las Vegas, and is the conductor of the Powder River Symphony.

Triscari, Joseph ("Joe") (b. June 25, 1914; d. Oct. 10, 1961). American trumpeter. Triscari began his career with Red Nichols (1941), Gene Krupa (1942-47), and the Victor Borge Show (1946-47). Like his brother Ray, Joe was a top trumpet player in Los Angeles during the 1950s and '60s, and is perhaps best known for his participation in the famous 1957 Tutti's Trumpets recording that also included trumpeters Conrad Gozzo, Uan Rasey, Mannie Klein, Shorty Sherock, and Pete Candoli. However, he also recorded hundreds of albums with such musical dignitaries as Bing Crosby, Harry Belafonte, Billy May, Gene Krupa, Bobby Darin, Gerry Mulligan, Dean Martin, Peggy Lee, Buddy De Franco, Benny Goodman, Anita O'Day, Mel Tormé, Pete Rugolo, the Four Freshmen, Johnny Mercer, Billy Eckstine, Ella Fitzgerald, Rosemary Clooney, Perez Prado, and Frankie Laine.

Triscari was first trumpet of the MGM studio orchestra during the 1950s. He recorded hundreds of soundtracks for films such as Ben Hur and An American in Paris.

His nephew, also named Joe Triscari, plays trumpet on the West Coast.

Trognée, Emile Joseph [Germanowitsch] ("Tronié") (b. Thirimont, Belgium, July 4, 1868; d. Leningrad, Russia, Aug. 15, 1942). Belgian trumpeter and cornetist. Trognée attended the Brussels Conservatory, and took a position with the Helsinki Orchestral Society during the 1899-1900 season. He was a reputed recital cornet soloist, and toured Germany and France. He also gave concerts in Prague, performed with the Shanghai Symphony Orchestra, and in 1902 won a European solo competition. He then immigrated to Russia where he became a member of the St. Petersburg/Leningrad Opera Orchestra at the famed Marinsky Theatre from 1902 to 1927. He taught at the Baltic Fleet music school from 1911 to 1917, and at the Rimsky-Korsakov Conservatory in Leningrad from 1928 to 1941.

Trognée composed and published Studies for Trumpet, a set of etudes dedicated to the great Russian trumpeter Mikhail Tabakov. He also composed many cornet solos, among them Valse Lente and Fantasie-Caprice, the latter appearing in Tabakov's Elementary Progressive Trumpet Tutor in 1946. Recently, Editions BIM published 30 Etudes mélodiques edited by Anatoly Selianin, part of a compilation of three volumes of previously unpublished etudes by Trognée. Trognée recorded works under his own name (wrongly spelled Tronne), such as Weber's Last Waltz and Carnival of Venice with piano accompaniment.

Trognée was also a fine conductor. His musicianship was described by Karl Eliasberg: Trognée had a unique feeling of ensemble; his playing was remarkable for accurate dynamics and for an infallible sensitivity towards the meaning and character of the musical phrase. His sound was never forced but was always bright, powerful, and even in all registers. He was a great master of very soft sound production (without using the tongue). He was noted for his performances of Wagner's Ring, Rienzi, Lohengrin, and of operas by Tchaikovsky and Verdi.

Trognée, a huge man with an exceptionally large vital capacity, died of starvation during the Siege of Leningrad. He was seventy-four.

Trottier, Nappy (b. Norway, Michigan, Oct. 3, 1915; d. Appleton, Wisconsin, Sept. 21, 1997). American trumpeter. Little is known about Trottier's early life other than that he began his career with Frank Gillis's Dixie 5 in Detroit. His early experience also included some work in Jack Teagarden's band.

Trottier moved to Chicago and played Dixieland music at the Jazz Ltd. with Miff Mole. He also played traditional jazz with Don Ewell (including an album recorded in 1959), Darnell Howard, George Brunies, Clancy Hayes, and recorded with the Al Capone Memorial Jazz Band in 1973.

Although he made his living as a real estate agent, Trottier was widely known for his performances and recordings with Art Hodes during the late 1960s. He also appeared on Hodes's live television show (later released on videotape in 1968 as Art Hodes' Jazz Alley, Vol. 2 on Storyville). Most of his recordings were made with Art Hodes's group on the Delmark label. One of his best Delmark CDs was made under the name Barney Bigard.

Truax, Bert (b. San Rafael, California, Feb. 5, 1954). American trumpeter and composer. Truax began playing trumpet at age seven, and at age ten, took lessons from Joseph Alessi Sr. A talented youth, he was selected at age thirteen to be a soloist with the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. He studied with Thomas Stevens, James Stamp, and William Adam before graduating from San Rafael High School in 1971. He attended the Curtis Institute from 1972 to 1976, where he studied with Gilbert Johnson and Frank Kaderabek.

Truax began his career in 1976 as second trumpet of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, a position he held until 2000. He took a year's leave of absence during the 1986-87 season to play second trumpet in the Philadelphia Orchestra. He is currently principal trumpet of the Richardson Symphony Orchestra (near Dallas) and is founder and instructor of The Bert Truax School of Trumpet (since 2000), a series of annual camps since 1995. He was on the faculty at Texas A&M University in Commerce from 2002 through 2010, and has released a tutorial DVD titled Bert's Basic Brass. His other DVD is titled Listen With Your Heart (both are self-published). In addition, he released the album Dallas Trumpets (Crystal) with fellow Dallas Symphony Orchestra trumpeters Richard Giangiulio and Thomas Booth, and a solo CD titled Sea of Treasures that features classical, jazz, and rock music. He has performed with the Dallas Bach Society, Memphis Symphony Orchestra, East Texas Symphony, Fort Worth Symphony, and the Lewisville Lake Symphony.

As a composer, Truax has written numerous works for trumpet including Fantasy for Trumpet and Orchestra, commissioned in 1995 by the Dallas Symphony Orchestra for David Bilger. Other trumpet works include Grace, In His Light, Hymn to Gil (for Gilbert Johnson), Praise the Lord, Adagio and Allegro (for three trumpets), Fanfare for Three Trumpets Organ and Timpani, and Listen to Your Heart.

During his free time, Truax enjoys scuba diving.

Trudell, John ("Johnny") R. (b. Detroit, Michigan, May 11, 1939). American trumpeter and bandleader. Trudell grew up in the Detroit area and learned to play the trombone at age six. A year later, he started playing trumpet and took lessons from his two uncles, Bob Kunst and Pete Bentz. As a boy, he listened to many of the big bands that performed at the Detroit Theater.

After graduating from Cass Technical High School in 1958, he attended the Detroit Institute of Technology from 1958 to 1959, but left school in order to tour with various professional big bands including those of Tommy Dorsey, Tex Beneke, Bob Crosby, Buddy Morrow, and Quincy Jones. He also performed with Dizzy Gillespie, Jon Faddis, Donald Byrd, Bob Hope, Wayne Newton, Sammy Davis Jr., Paul Anka, Tony Bennett, Johnny Carson, Red Skelton, Jerry Lewis, Bill Cosby, and many other celebrities. During his long and illustrious career, he has recorded with The Spinners, Diana Ross, The Temptations, Stevie Wonder, Marvin Gaye, the Four Tops, Smokey Robinson, Gladys Knight, and The Supremes.

Trudell formed his own big band in 1960, a group that has performed for Presidents George Bush and Ronald Reagan. His albums include Dream Dance and But Beautiful? In addition to playing trumpet and leading his band, he has been a musicians' contractor in Detroit for over fifty years. He has also served as conductor and/or contractor of the Detroit Lions Orchestra, Fox Theater, and the Meadow Brook Music Festival.

Johnny Trudell is married to Sharon Trudell, a former real estate agent. His children are Michael, Steve, Michelle, and Jeffrey. He enjoys boating, fishing, golf, and cooking.

Tunnell, Michael ("Mike") H. (b. Tucson, Arizona, Oct. 2, 1954). American trumpeter. Tunnell grew up in Powell, Tennessee (near Knoxville). He began playing the trumpet at age eleven; his first teacher was Dave Durham. After graduating from Powell High School in 1972, he attended the University of Tennessee (1972-76), studying with Horace Little and Edgar Niedens, and earning a bachelor of music degree. He studied with Leon Rapier at the University of Louisville (1976-78), earning a master of music degree. He also began doctoral work at the University of Southern Mississippi, studying with Allan Cox (1978-80) while serving as a graduate trumpet teaching assistant. He became an Instructor of trumpet there (1980-82), and completed his DMA in trumpet in 1982. Additionally, he studied with Arnold Jacobs, Armando Ghitalla, Adolph Herseth, Vincent Cichowicz, and William Vacchiano.

Tunnell taught at the State University of New York-Potsdam during the 1982-83 academic year before accepting a position at the University of Illinois (1983-88). Since 1988, he has been teaching at the University of Louisville, becoming a full professor in 1997. In July 2001, he worked as a visiting professor at Catholic University of Chile in Santiago. He received the Distinguished Teaching Award from the University of Louisville in 2003, and the Red Apple Award for Teaching from the University of Louisville Alumni Association in 2004. Tunnell was appointed a University Scholar in 2010 by the University of Louisville.

An active soloist and chamber musician, Tunnell has toured the Far East and South America. He has been a member of—or substitute with—the Meridian Symphony Orchestra, Pensacola Symphony Orchestra, Gulf Coast Symphony Orchestra, Sinfonia de Camera of Illinois, Champaign-Urbana Symphony, Louisville Orchestra, Derby City Brass Band, Louisville Bach Society (principal), Sonus Brass Quintet (founding member), Louisville Brass, Kentucky Baroque Trumpets, Illinois Brass Quintet, Southern Arts Brass Quintet, and New Louisville Brass Quintet. In addition, he was codirector of the Louisville Historic Brass Ensemble. Tunnell is a specialist on the modern corno da caccia, a horn-like instrument, and has made many recordings with it, both of older works for high horn as well as premiere performances of works he commissioned from leading contemporary composers. He was a member of the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild from 1983 to 1991, and 2000 to 2009. His solo CDs include The Morning Trumpet (Centaur), à la Chasse (Centaur), Passages (Centaur), Lumen (Coronet), Mixed Doubles (Coronet), and Melancholia (Coronet).

Tunnell and his wife Meme, a professional pianist, were married in 1978, and have two children, Morgan (b. 1983) and Robert (b. 1987). Michael's hobbies include history, baseball, and his dogs.

Turner, Virginia ("Ginger") S. (b. Austin, Texas, June 7, 1960). American trumpeter. Turner grew up in Las Cruces, New Mexico, and began playing the trumpet at age twelve under Sam Trimble. Her father Ralph was a biochemistry professor at New Mexico State University, and her mother Penny was a cornetist and public school band director. After graduating from Las Cruces High School in 1978, she attended New Mexico State University where she earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1983 under Sam Trimble. She then taught music in the public schools of Weslaco, Texas (1983-86), after which she continued graduate studies with David Hickman at Arizona State University (1986-90), earning a master of music degree and completing coursework towards a DMA in performance.

Turner won a position in the US Army Field Band in Washington, D.C. in 1990, and is currently a Sergeant Major and former principal trumpet of the Concert Band. She is the first woman to become a noncommissioned officer in charge of the band. She is active with the International Women's Brass Congress, and has served on its board of directors. Since 2004, she has hosted an annual holiday concert in Baltimore that raises funds for the IWBC. As part of her band duties, Turner was a member of the Embassy Brass Quintet, an ensemble that has performed at numerous brass conferences, music festivals, and summer music camps. They have appeared on television shows such as Good Morning America and CNN News. She has also studied with Anthony Plog, Edward Hoffman, Susan Slaughter, and Charles Geyer.

Türpe, [Georg] Hugo (b. Mohsdorf, Germany, Sept. 3, 1859; d. Diethensdorf [near Burgstädt], Germany, July 2, 1891). German cornetist. Hugo was the eighth child born to Ferdinand Türpe (a stocking maker and village band director) and Amalie (née Horn) Türpe (a pianist). He studied cornet despite his father's objections—he wished for his son also to become a stocking maker—and apprenticed with municipal music director Grau in Mittweida in 1874. A sponsor sent him to the Dresden Conservatory for half a year and made him a present of a French cornet. Hugo distinguished himself as a genius on the cornet at a young age, and by 1881 was called "The Master of the Pistons." He performed with Hermann Gustav Mannsfeldt (1880-81) in the Dresden Trade House Orchestra, and as cornet soloist (succeeding Theodor Hoch) in Benjamin Bilse's famous orchestra in Berlin (1881-85). Türpe toured Germany and Europe extensively with Bilse, even performing in Russia during the summer of 1882 for Tsar Alexander III, who gave him a golden cornet with silver garnishings. In 1883, he performed in Erfurt before Liszt, who declared that he would otherwise not have believed it possible to play in such a way. He often performed as many as fifty concerts in as many days, usually in sold-out auditoriums. In 1886, at the age of twenty-seven, he and his sixty-nine-year-old mother toured the United States to great acclaim. He composed a number of cornet solos, his most popular being Ocean Fantasy, Fantasy Virtuoso, Fantasy "Appassionata" for Cornet in A (the only one which has survived; an edition by Tarr with Spaeth & Schmid in Nagold, Germany is available), and Nocturne for Harp and Cornet. He returned to Europe in 1889. The strain of travel and concertizing began to exhaust Türpe. He died of tuberculosis at the age of thirty-one.

Turrentine, Tommy [Thomas Walter Jr.] (b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Apr. 22, 1928; d. New York, New York, May 13, 1997). American trumpeter. The son of a saxophone player, Turrentine was the second of four children in the family (all of whom were musical), the best known being Stanley. Tommy learned to play the violin as a young child and began playing the trumpet at age eleven when his Aunt Dolly gave him his first trumpet, which he taught himself to play. At age sixteen he studied theory and harmony with Cal Massey, but quit school at the age of sixteen and went on the road with Snookum Russell's Band (1945-46).

In 1946, Turrentine joined Benny Carter's band, but was fired because of his lack of sight-reading ability. He then played with George Hudson (1947-49), Count Basie (1951-52), a short while with Gay Crosse (1952), Earl Bostic (1952-53), Billy Eckstine, and one week with Dizzy Gillespie's band when subbing for someone. His most productive time was with Max Roach (1959-60), recording five albums and playing a European tour.

Turrentine recorded one solo album, Tommy Turrentine, for Time records in 1960. Over the years, he also recorded as a sideman with Horace Parlan, Paul Chambers, Abbey Lincoln, Booker Ervin, Jackie McLean, Sonny Clark, Dexter Gordon, Lou Donaldson, Big John Patton, Philly Joe Jones, and his brother Stanley. His playing style was influenced by Dizzy Gillespie, Fats Navarro, John Coltrane, and Freddie Hubbard.

Beginning in the mid 1960s, ill health made it difficult for Turrentine to maintain his abilities and performance schedule. He gradually lost prominence during the 1970s, but made a slight comeback in the early 1980s when he played with Clarence "C" Sharpe and Barry Harris, and with Sun Ra in 1988.

Tuscher, Peter (b. Munich, Germany, Dec. 19, 1954). German trumpeter. At age sixteen, Tuscher was influenced by the music of Louis Armstrong and started to play trumpet. In 1981, at age twenty-seven, he had the opportunity to learn from the great jazz trumpeter Marcus Belgrave in Detroit, Michigan. Tuscher has played with Paul Grabowsky's Clock, Albert Mangelsdorff's German-French Jazz Ensemble, Henri Texier, Dee Dee Bridgewater, Charly Antolini, Charlie Mariano, Al Cohn, Conte Candoli, Joe Nay's Message, and the big band of Harald Rüschenbaum. During the 1990s, Tuscher formed his own quartet, and was a member of The Quintet. He also played with Connexion Latina (a popular Salsa group) and a big band led by trumpeter Al Porcino, and in 1996, was with Gerd Baumann's jazz opera, NYX. Tuscher teaches at the Bruckner Conservatory of Music in Linz, and gives jazz workshops at the Bayerische Musikakademie.

Tyle, Chris (b. Vancouver, Washington, May 10, 1955). American trumpeter. Tyle grew up in Portland, Oregon. His father Axel (1912-81) was a professional jazz drummer who instilled in Chris an interest in music. As a teen, Chris played with Don Kinch's Conductors Ragtime Band and his father's Castle Jazz Band. After graduating from high school, he moved to San Francisco and worked with Turk Murphy's band (1979), and formed his own group called the Wholly Cats.

Tyle's career leaped forward after he moved to New Orleans in 1989. He played with all of the leading musicians of the city, including Hal Smith, Steve Pistorius's Mahogany Hall Stompers, John Gills's Crescent City Rhythm Kings, Jacques Gauthé's Creole Rice Jazz Band, New Orleans River Boys, The Minstrels of Annie Street, Arrowhead Jazz Band, and his own groups, Frisco Syncopators and the Silver Leaf Jazz Band.

Tyle is an expert in early jazz styles. He has recorded tributes to King Oliver, Jelly Roll Morton, Benny Strickler, Danny Barker, Freddie Keppard, Bunk Johnson, and others. He has recorded with the Down Home Five, John Gill, Jacques Gauthé, Duke Heitger, Hal Smith, Danny Barker, Tom Saunders, Andrew Hall, and many others. His CDs as leader include A Tribute to Benny Strickler (Stomp Off), The Smiles (Stomp Off), Sugar Blues (Stomp Off), A Natural High (Bainbridge), Jelly's Best Jam (Concord), Here Comes the Hot Tamales Man (Stomp Off), and New Orleans Wiggle (Jazzology).

Tyle is a versatile musician who plays trumpet, cornet, drums, clarinet (specialist of the Albert and Boehm systems), and saxophone. He has performed throughout the world at many leading jazz festivals such as Ascona (with Lars Edegran) and Marciac (with Jacques Gauthé), and is a member of the International Association of Jazz Educators and the Jazz Journalists Association. He has authored many articles and reviews for Riverwalkjazz.com and JazzStandards.com.

Tyle left New Orleans in 2002. From 2006 to 2007, he played in the orchestra for the show, A la Recherche de Joséphine in Paris, France. He now lives in Portland, Oregon, where he subs in several local groups, and is cornetist and musical director of the group, Combo de Luxe.

Tyzik, Jeff (b. Hyde Park, New York, Aug. 1, 1951). American trumpeter, composer, arranger, producer, and conductor. Tyzik began studying the trumpet at age nine with Elmer Musselman, a member of the Goldman Band during the 1920s, and continued studying with Gerald Conklin throughout junior and senior high school. After graduating from Franklin D. Roosevelt High School in Hyde Park, New York, in 1969, Tyzik enrolled at the Eastman School where he studied with Sidney Mear and Richard Jones from 1969 to 1973. In addition to his trumpet studies, Tyzik studied composition for three years with American composer Samuel Adler. After receiving his bachelor of music degree, he toured as lead trumpet with Chuck Mangione from 1975 to 1980, and in addition to performing, coproduced four albums with Mangione including Live at the Hollywood Bowl and Children of Sanchez. He began working with Doc Severinsen in 1978 as arranger, composer, and record producer. His skills as a composer and arranger soon drew a great deal of attention, and he was asked to contribute arrangements for The Tonight Show Band and the bands of Maynard Ferguson and Woody Herman. He also composed many television themes including those for HBO, NBC Olympics, and ABC Sunday Night at the Movies.

During the early 1980s, Tyzik and Allen Vizzutti developed a pops program for symphony orchestras, one result of which was a compact disc titled High Class Brass. Tyzik also produced four CDs with the Tonight Show Band (The Tonight Show Band with Doc Severinsen, Vols. 1 & 2, Once More with Feeling, and Merry Christmas from Doc Severinsen and The Tonight Show Band) for Amherst Records, some of which were either nominated for, or won a Grammy Award. He also produced (with Allen Vizzutti) his favorite Doc Severinsen album, FACETS (Grammy nominee).

Tyzik began conducting orchestras starting in 1983, and developed a reputation for unique pops programming, which led to his current position as Pops Conductor of the Rochester Philharmonic beginning in 1994. His ability to play and write in virtually all musical styles has placed him in demand by numerous orchestras throughout the world, including those of Detroit, Philadelphia, Los Angeles, Milwaukee, Dallas, Toronto, Vancouver, Seattle, Houston, Phoenix, Monte Carlo, and the Royal Scottish National Orchestra. He was a faculty member of the 1983 International Trumpet Guild Conference.

Tyzik recorded six solo albums between 1979 and 1990: Farthest Corner of My Mind (Amherst), Prophecy (self-produced), Radiance (Capitol), Jammin' in Manhattan (Polydor), Smile (Polydor), and Distant Dreams (Amherst). He has also played on, arranged or composed for, or produced over fifty other recordings for labels such as Summit, Telarc, VSO, De Haske, Firstline, A&M, Capitol, Amherst, Polydor, and Perelandra. A few of his best-known compositions are Blues Suite for String Quartet, Bravo! Colorado, Sonata for Trumpet and Piano, Transitions, Pleasant Valley, New York Cityscapes for Brass Quintet and Wind Ensemble, and Concerto for Trombone, the latter being the result of a National Endowment for the Arts Grant.

Tyzik received the first ever Distinguished Alumnus Award from the Eastman School in 2009, was given the Rotary International Fellowship for outstanding community service, and has served on the Board of Managers of the Eastman School of Music.

Jeff and his wife Jill have been married since 1972, and have a daughter, Jami (b. 1979), a mezzo-soprano who debuted with Doc Severinsen and the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, Buffalo Philharmonic, and the Minnesota Orchestra. His hobbies include cooking and exercising.

Uhle, Andreas (b. Haldensleben, Germany, Jan. 1, 1951). German trumpeter. Uhle began playing trumpet at age eight, and was a student of Ludwig Güttler. A specialist in early music for trumpet, Uhle is well known as a member of Ludwig Güttler's brass ensemble. He has also performed with Musici Medici and Telemannchor Magdeburg, and plays cornetto (zink) with Susato and the Baroque Ensemble of Hedwigs Cathedral. He often presents concerts for trumpet & organ. His son, Matthias, is a keyboardist.

Ullrich, Marc [François] (b. Mulhouse, France, Sept. 7, 1954). French trumpeter. Ullrich began his studies with René Christ at l'Ecole Nationale de Musique de Mulhouse before attending the Conservatory National de Région de Versailles where he studied with Roger Delmotte (1971). He also studied with Leon Rapier at the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Michigan (1972). Finally, he studied with Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory (1974), and Baroque (valveless) trumpet with Edward Tarr at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis in Basel, Switzerland.

Ullrich was principal trumpet of the Mulhouse Symphony Orchestra from 1971 to 1977, and played with the Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble (International Brass Congress, Montreux, Switzerland, 1976). He then moved to Switzerland to become principal of the Radio Symphony Orchestra Basel (1978). He was a substitute in Ensemble de Trompettes de Paris (International Trumpet Guild Conference, London, 1986, with P. Fabert, B. Nouvion, D. Collmar, P. Gillet, trumpets). He performed Bach's Christmas Oratorio (Regensburg, 1987, with Edward Tarr and Klaus Rehm on Baroque trumpets), and played with the Arcana Ensemble, Basel Sinfonietta (Milan, May 1987 in Jolivet's Second Concerto), and Boptett (a bebop group). Ullrich was principal of the Basel Symphony Orchestra and a member of the Basel Brass Quintet for many years, but in September of 2012 moved to assistant principal. He regularly performs with the Bach-Kollegium of Stuttgart, English Baroque Soloists in London, Zurich Chamber Orchestra, and the Edward Tarr Trumpet Ensemble.

A fantastic soloist on piccolo and Baroque trumpets, Ullrich can be heard on many recordings with Edward Tarr, Niklas Eklund, and others. He has recorded for the Archiv, Arion, and Naxos labels, and was a featured solo artist during the 1999 conference of the ITG in Sweden. He is also a skilled jazz (bebop) player.

Ulrich, Albert [Sr.] (b. Magdeburg, Germany, Feb. 15, 1857; d. Chicago, Illinois, Nov. 17, 1935). German trumpeter. Ulrich studied violin and trumpet in Berlin before immigrating to America in 1880 at the age of twenty-three; in 1881 he and his parents, brother, and sister moved to Chicago. He soon began playing occasionally with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra, which later became the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. In 1883, he participated in a lengthy tour of the U.S. with the Theodore Thomas Orchestra (New York to San Francisco), and became a regular member of the orchestra for eight years. When the orchestra became the CSO, Ulrich played for an additional thirty-four years.

Ulrich began contracting orchestra members for various concerts outside of the orchestra. However, the principal cornetist of the orchestra, Christian Rodenkirchen, was also a contractor, so it wasn't long before the two became rivals. Ulrich became more influential when he was hired as assistant conductor of the CSO under Frederick Stock; he was also personnel manager of the orchestra, so naturally, most of the musicians were politically tied to Ulrich. To end the rivalry, Ulrich fired Rodenkirchen. However, his heavy-handed tactics were too severe on other occasions. For instance, when he fired several CSO members in 1908 for performing concerts arranged by other contractors, his actions were called into serious question by the CSO administration. Then, in the same year he was brought before the local board of the American Federation of Musicians union because he had charged a venue a premium of seven dollars for each CSO musician, but had only paid these players four dollars.

Ulrich remained with the CSO until his retirement in 1925 at the age of sixty-eight. During his many years with the orchestra, he held the position of principal trumpet, principal cornet, second violin, assistant conductor, personnel contractor, and orchestra spokesperson. His son, Albert (Bruno) Jr., was a CSO violinist from 1919 to 1927. His nephew, Homer Ulrich, played cello and bassoon.

Ulrich, P. Bradley (b. Salina, Kansas, Dec. 30, 1961). American trumpeter. His father, Paul Andrew Ulrich, was in the US Air Force until retirement, after which he worked for the Social Security Administration. His mother, LaVerne Emily Ulrich, was a homemaker. Brad attended Winter Park High School in Winter Park, Florida, where he graduated in 1980.

Ulrich received his bachelor of music degree in 1984 from Florida State University, where he studied with Bryan Goff. He studied with Raymond Sasaki and Michael Tunnell at the University of Illinois, where he earned master (1986) and doctor (1989) of music degrees. Additionally, he has studied with Raymond Mase, George Vosburgh, Adolph Herseth, James Thompson, Vincent DiMartino, and Crispian Steele-Perkins.

Ulrich became professor of trumpet at Western Carolina University in 1989. He is also the second trumpet of the Asheville Symphony Orchestra. He is an active recitalist, and the director and first trumpeter of the Smoky Mountain Brass Quintet, which gave its

New York debut in Weill Recital Hall at Carnegie Hall (June 2007). He has previously performed with the Springfield (Illinois) Symphony Orchestra, Hendersonville Symphony Orchestra, Brevard (North Carolina) Chamber Orchestra, Champaign-Urbana (Illinois) Symphony, and the Cedar Falls-Waterloo Symphony in Iowa. He has published numerous articles in the International Trumpet Guild Journal and is the ITG Public Relations Director. Ulrich has presented master classes and concerts throughout the United States, Russia, Canada, England, Ireland, Wales, St. Barths, and Italy.

Bradley and his wife, Caroline Jane (Boden) Ulrich, a professional flutist, have two children, Paul Arthur and Katherine Helen. Ulrich's hobbies include hiking, boating, coaching youth sports teams, and making wooden pens.

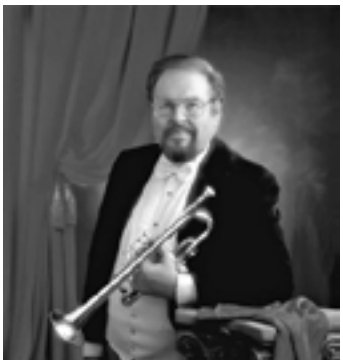
Underwood, James B. (b. Kokomo, Indiana, Aug. 19, 1948; d. Columbus, Ohio, Aug. 4, 2006). American trumpeter and cornetist. Underwood grew up in Garden City, Michigan. He began playing the trumpet in seventh grade under the guidance of Richard Kitzman. During several summers in high school and college, he attended the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, where he took lessons with Gordon Mathie, and was selected to play in the Michigan Youth Orchestra. He also began a longtime relationship with Frank Kadarabek, principal trumpet of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. He attended the University of Michigan where he studied with Clifford Lillya from 1966 to 1969.



After graduating from college, Underwood joined the US Marine Band, and soon became its cornet soloist (1969-73). After discharge, he won an audition to play in the Detroit Symphony Orchestra and the Michigan Theater Orchestra. He also performed with the Detroit Concert Brass (sextet) and the Detroit Concert Band. In 1975, Kaderabek became principal of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and when the Philadelphia Orchestra played a three-week tour of South America in 1988, Kaderabek invited Underwood to participate. Later that year, Kaderabek received a telephone call from the Columbus Symphony Orchestra in Ohio, asking for his recommendation for a principal trumpeter. Kaderabek did not hesitate to forward the name of Underwood. Subsequently, Underwood was hired as acting principal for the 1988-89 season; he won the permanent position and began playing in that capacity in the fall of 1989.

Underwood was considered to be a wonderful player throughout his career. Unfortunately, in 2002 he began to feel pain in the right side of his face that was diagnosed as salivary gland cancer. After six months of radiation treatments, doctors removed a large portion of his salivary glands that necessitated his being out of the orchestra during the 2002-03 season. A series of increasingly aggressive surgeries followed, until a large portion of Underwood's face had been removed. Undaunted and never complaining, Underwood struggled to continue playing as principal trumpet of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra. With the help of his dentist, Underwood designed a mouthpiece that had a one-inch diameter piece of wood next to it (held together with dental casting material), humorously referred to by Underwood as the "bongo outrigger." The wood prevented the right side of his embouchure from bulging from air pressure. He was able to successfully perform with this mouthpiece until his death on August 4, 2006, just two weeks before his fifty-eighth birthday.

Underwood was a very beloved musician and person. His four-year struggle with cancer was an inspiration to all who knew him. He was survived by his wife of nearly thirty years: Marty, and daughters Sonia and Jamie, and son Alvin.

Usov, Yury Alexeyevich (b. Moscow, Russia, Dec. 3, 1930; d. Moscow, Russia, Apr. 25, 1999). Russian trumpeter. Usov began as a violinist, but earned a diploma in trumpet from the Kaluga Music College in 1951, studying with Yuri Zhdanov. He attended the Moscow Conservatory from 1951 to 1959, studying with Sergey Yeryomin, and earning a master's degree. From 1955 to 1959, he taught at the Moscow Music College, the preparatory school for the Moscow Conservatory. In 1957, he won a prize at the Sixth International Youth Festival in Moscow. He earned two doctoral degrees: music performance in 1972, and musicology in 1980.

Usov was appointed trumpet teacher at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory in Moscow in 1959, becoming a full professor in 1981. He performed extensively as a soloist, touring Russia, Germany, Poland, Finland, Hungary, and Romania. He produced one LP album of solos by Russian composers, Music for Trumpet and Piano (1976, Melodiya), and premiered several new compositions. Among his best-known students are Vadim Novikov, Yury Vlasenko, Alexander Bevz, Igor Belov, Alexey Parshenkov, Ivan Maloshtanov, Leonid Gouriev, Aman Chakanov, Nestor Chobanu, Yevgeny Khlinov, Boris Panko, and A. Rapoport.

Usov died of a heart attack at the age of sixty-nine, and was survived by his wife, Irina Mikhailova Usova, a choral conducting faculty member at the Moscow Conservatory.

Utley, Joe Roy (b. Western Oklahoma, 1935; d. Jan. 15, 2001). American medical doctor and musical instrument collector. Utley was raised on a farm in Oklahoma, and played the trumpet in his school band. While in high school, he worked at a music store in Elk City, Oklahoma, and during his senior year, met Joella Faye Jordan. They were married in 1956 just after each graduated from Oklahoma City University. Joe was enrolled in premedicine, and Joella in piano and music education. The couple moved to St. Louis where Joe finished medical school at Washington University while Joella worked as a schoolteacher. In 1960, Joella began pursuing a medical degree.

Joe enlisted in the Air Force in 1960 and after his military service, the couple moved to San Francisco where Joe began working as a surgeon, while Joella fulfilled her medical residency requirements. They began collecting high brass musical instruments at about this time. In 1972, they moved to Lexington, Kentucky, where they both worked at the University of Kentucky Medical Center. After moving to California, they were on the faculty of the University of California-San Diego from 1977 until 1983.

In 1983, the Utleys moved to Spartanburg, South Carolina, and opened a private medical practice. By this time, their instrument collection was extensive enough for them to devote a large room to it. Many of the instruments they purchased did not have cases, so Joe built wood cases for them. Joe played in the Spartanburg Symphony Orchestra, served as president of the Spartanburg Music Foundation, was on the board of directors of the Greenville Symphony Orchestra, and was chairman of the board of the Brevard Music Center in North Carolina. He also earned a master of business administration (MBA) degree from Duke University.

The Utleys retired in 1995 and purchased a 175-acre cattle farm at the base of the Appalachian Mountains in southern South Carolina. They built their house around their huge instrument collection, which at the time contained more than five hundred rare trumpets, cornets, keyed bugles, echo cornets, keyed trumpets, and precision-made replicas of Baroque trumpets commissioned from leading brass instrument makers. They donated their entire collection, named the Joe R. and Joella F. Utley Collection of High Brass Instruments, to The National Music Museum at the University of South Dakota in Vermillion in 1999 and established the Utley Institute for Brass Studies within the museum.

Joe Utley was a respected surgeon and musician, and an avid arts supporter and administrator; he also learned to fly small planes. After a long struggle with cancer, he died on January 15, 2001. The Utleys' children include Jennifer and Ben.

Vacchiano, William Anthony (b. Portland, Maine, May 23, 1912; d. New York, New York, Sept. 19, 2005). American trumpeter. Vacchiano's career as an orchestral trumpeter and teacher was one of the longest, as well as one of the most important. He was the seventh child of eight born to Rafaello and Anna Vacchiano. At age six, he was taken by his father to a performance of Verdi's opera La Traviata at the Portland City Hall Auditorium, an experience that changed his life forever, for it was at that moment that he wanted to become a musician.

Vacchiano's first music studies were at age ten with Mr. DiNobile [DiNobili], his school band director. Two years later DiNobile introduced him to Frank Knapp, the solo cornetist of Liberati's band, who accepted Vacchiano as a student. Mr. Knapp had the most beautiful sound I ever heard, reported Vacchiano. Lessons cost two dollars each, a large sum at the time. Vacchiano also learned to play the piano and studied solfège. At age fourteen, he joined the 240th Artillery Coast Guard Band of Portland. The minimum age to become a member was eighteen. When I told the security officer I was 18, he let me play with the band, although he knew I was fibbing, said Vacchiano. Vacchiano took lessons from Del Staigers, Herbert L. Clarke (six lessons), and John Dolan (one lesson).

Vacchiano's high school band played at the start of each week's assembly, and Vacchiano was often featured as soloist. By the end of high school I knew approximately 60 solos. Knapp appointed Vacchiano as third trumpet in the Portland Municipal Orchestra (now the Portland Symphony Orchestra), where Knapp played principal. During his last two years of high school, Vacchiano traveled to Boston for occasional lessons with Georges Mager, Louis Kloepfel, Walter M. Smith, and Gustav Heim. Vacchiano credited Mager with helping him make the correct mouthpiece choice, and Heim as the person who introduced him to the use of smaller trumpets. I owe practically all of my success to Gustav Heim. I have attributed my long career to the ability to play all these different pitched trumpets and he taught me the proper way to do it. Vacchiano recorded the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach in 1949 (historically, it is the second American LP that included the work; Roger Voisin made the first American recording in 1946).

When Wall Street crashed in 1929, Vacchiano decided to pursue a more practical career, and chose to go to school to become a certified public accountant. He traveled to Brooklyn, New York, to apply at St. John's University, but was rejected because the grading system in Maine was different from the one used in New York. While in New York, Vacchiano went to see Times Square where he ran into an old friend from Portland, a cornetist named Oscar Jones, who was playing at Radio City Music Hall. Jones urged him to take a lesson with Max Schlossberg who was principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic. After the lesson, Schlossberg said, Vacchiano, you are very talented. I want you to stay here. I will give you a full scholarship to the Institute of Musical Art [now The Juilliard School]. Schlossberg had him work mainly from three books: Arban's Complete Conservatory Method, St. Jacome's Grand Method, and Sachse's 100 Studies in Transposition. Schlossberg also provided handwritten exercises that were later compiled by Schlossberg's son-in-law Harry Freistadt, and published as Schlossberg's Daily Drills and Technical Studies for Trumpet.

At school, Vacchiano met a piano major named Ethel Josephine LaParde. They married and had two children: Ralph (b. 1939; d. 1976) and Jo Ann (b. 1944; d. 2011). He worked as a freelance musician, and performed in several pickup orchestras in New York City including the George Barrere Symphony and the Chautauqua Orchestra. While still a student at the Institute, Vacchiano auditioned on the same day for first trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, and for third/assistant principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic. He won both auditions, but accepted the position with the New York Philharmonic where he began in 1935. The rest of the trumpet section comprised Harry Glantz (principal), Nat Prager (second), and Max Schlossberg (fourth). That same year, he was appointed to the faculty at The Juilliard School.

Making a nice salary, William and Josephine purchased a $6,000 home in Flushing, New York (a ninety minute commute from downtown Manhattan) where he lived until his death in 2005. He also joined the faculties of the Manhattan School of Music and the Mannes College of Music in 1937. In addition to duties with the Philharmonic, he continued to perform radio broadcasts and record with various orchestras in the city, eventually appearing on over four hundred albums. Some of the orchestras included the Columbia Orchestra, Stokowski & His Orchestra, Kostelanetz & His Orchestra, Longines Symphonette, Firestone Orchestra, Celanese Orchestra, Radio City Symphony Orchestra, and the RCA Orchestra.

After World War II, the G.I. Bill of Rights paid for many students to attend the schools where Vacchiano was teaching. I found myself teaching every spare hour of the week. As I look back on it, I wonder how I did it. I taught as many as 30 hours a week in addition to my regular orchestra duties. He advised students to find secure jobs. The ideal situation for the musician today is the one with a university position where he can play solos, give brass quintet concerts, and play in a local orchestra. To demonstrate to his students the importance of education, he went back to school and finished his bachelor of music and master of music degrees at the Manhattan School of Music in 1952 and 1953, respectively.

After thirty-eight years in the New York Philharmonic (thirty-one years as principal trumpet), Vacchiano retired from the orchestra, but continued playing in less stressful situations. Thirty-eight years with the Philharmonic was enough time—it was a tremendous strain. I was making more money on the outside anyway by teaching and playing radio dates. I was making fifty percent more and I didn't have to worry. I could now stay at home every night and relax. Most of these trumpet players when they retire, they don't retire at their peak. I wanted to retire at my peak. I played all around town, but I didn't have the strain. I didn't have to play "Zarathustra" on the broadcast. I began to take life easy by traveling with my wife and family; that is why I've lived so long.

Vacchiano published many books for trumpet including Advanced Etudes, The Art of Bel Canto, The Art of Double Tonguing, The Art of Triple Tonguing, The Art of Solo Playing, Trumpet Routines, A Study of Intervals, Necessary Technique for Trumpet, Graduate Studies, Moving Transpositions, and Comprehensive Trumpet Studies. He also codesigned the Alessi-Vacchiano trumpet straight mute manufactured by the Holton Company. He had a great knowledge of mouthpieces and the functions of their various shapes.

No other trumpet teacher in history has produced more leading professional students than William Vacchiano. Among his hundreds of students, the best-known are Mel Broiles, Armando Ghitalla, Gerard Schwarz, Philip Smith, Thomas Stevens, Donald Green, Steven Burns, Malcolm McNab, Richard Giangiulio, R. Chandler Goetting, Fred Mills, Ronald Romm, Stephen Chenette, Edward Carroll, Mario Guarneri, Knud Hovaldt, David Krauss, Manuel Laureano, Louis Ranger, Alan Rubin, Charles Schlueter, Adel Sanchez, John Ware, and Theodore Weis.

Vacchiano taught at The Juilliard School for sixty-seven years (1935-2002), the Manhattan School for sixty-two years (1937-1999), and the Mannes School for forty-six years (1937-83). During his thirty-eight years in the New York Philharmonic (thirty-one as principal), he premiered hundreds of orchestra works, and recorded over one hundred albums with it. He received an Honorary Doctorate from The Juilliard School in 2003, the Honorary Award from the International Trumpet Guild in 1984, and the New York Brass Conference for Scholarships Award in 1978.

As an orchestral trumpet player, Vacchiano had an international influence after World War II when the New York Philharmonic toured Europe because of the large sound he produced on his large-bore trumpet. (British and French trumpeters used small-bore instruments before that time). Vacchiano said, I consider myself to be a German trumpet player…A typical depth-of-sound; the vibrato is much slower.

In his retirement years, Vacchiano enjoyed reading, crossword puzzles, studying foreign languages, mathematics, and eating fine Italian food. He died at the age of ninety-three at the Cabrini Medical Center in New York City.

Vache, Warren Webster Jr. (b. Rahway, New Jersey, Feb. 21, 1951). American cornetist and composer. Vache's father, Warren Sr., was a bassist and jazz writer-author, his mother a secretary at Decca Records, and his brother Allan a clarinetist. Warren, Jr. began studying piano at age five, and began playing the trumpet at age nine under the guidance of Jim Fitzpatrick. By age fifteen, he was gigging with local dance bands.

Vache studied with Pee Wee Erwin at the Erwin-Griffin School (1970-80) and at Montclair State College in New Jersey (1970-75). His first professional job was with Billy Maxted's band in Detroit (1972). I failed miserably! said Vache, after being required to double on valve trombone. He returned to school after three weeks in Detroit. However, after graduating with a music education degree in 1975, Vache joined Benny Goodman's orchestra, playing with the group on and off for the next ten years. He also performed as a cornetist with New York Jazz Repertory Company (1975), Hank Jones, Gerry Mulligan, Woody Herman (1980), Bobby Short, Benny Carter, Eddie Condon (1976-79), Dick Hyman, Ruby Braff, Vic Dickenson, Scott Hamilton (1976-85), and Rosemary Clooney.

As a recording artist, Vache played on hundreds of albums, thirty-five as leader. His albums include Midtown Jazz (Concord Jazz), Easy Going (Concord Jazz), Blues Walk (Dreamstreet), First Time Out (Mammoth), Polished Brass (Concord Jazz), Horn of Plenty (Muse), Iridescence (Concord Jazz), Jullian (Concord Jazz), Warm Evenings (Concord Jazz), and Warren Plays Warren (Nagel-Heyer). He also worked as an actor in the 1986 film, The Gig. He recorded soundtracks for films such as Money Pays, Biloxi Blues, Simon, and The Dain Curse. He also coached actor Richard Gere to play the trumpet for his role in the movie, The Cotton Club. In 1989, Vache composed and played music for the movie soundtrack, The Luckiest Man in the World.

More recently, Vache has performed with Phil Woods, Jon Faddis, Terrell Stafford, the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra, and many others. He is a highly versatile musician capable of playing all styles of jazz trumpet and cornet. Pianist-composer Jim McNeely was heard to say, Every chorus he plays is like a lesson in the history of the trumpet.

Vache has two sons: Christopher (b. 1981) and Robert (b. 1986).

Vaillant, Ludovic (b. Liévin, France, Apr. 10, 1912; d. Paris, Aug. 6, 1974). French trumpeter. Vaillant attended the Paris Conservatory (1933), where he was a cornet student of Eugène Foveau, whom he later replaced as professor from 1957 to 1974. He studied first at the Lille Conservatory (1929), and then trumpet with Pierre Vignal at the Paris Conservatory.

Vaillant played in the Orchestre Symphonique de Paris (1933), and was principal trumpet at the famous National Orchestra of the Radio (from 1934 to 1958—the orchestra was briefly based in Marseilles during World War II). He also played at the Concerts Colonne, Concerts Pasdeloup, and briefly at the Paris Opéra (1951, alongside Roger Delmotte). He premiered a trumpet quartet, 1er Quatuor, composed by Roger Aureggi, on the radio in 1945. He performed the Parisian premiere of Henri Tomasi's Concerto for Trumpet on the radio on April 7, 1949 (this important work had been premiered by Jan Doets in Hilversum in 1948). Henri Tomasi dedicated this concerto to Vaillant.

Vaillant was a brilliant performer (with a curious embouchure, placing the mouthpiece very far on the right side of his mouth), and made one of the first recordings of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 on long-playing records (1954). Along with Roger Delmotte, he was a pioneer of the Baroque revival, and made numerous recordings of pieces by Bach (Mass in B minor, Suites in D), Telemann, Fux, Biscogli, Alberti, Purcell, Aldrovandini, and Bononcini. Before Maurice André recorded them, Vaillant played these works with Jean-François Paillard and recorded on the Erato label. In 1958, Vaillant recorded the Concerto No. 1 for Piano, Trumpet and Strings by Shostakovich with the National Orchestra under André Cluytens (most notably with Dmitry Shostakovich at the piano on the EMI label).

Vaillant taught many students including Maurice Benterfa, André Bernard, Jean-Charles de Ridder, Pierre Dutot, Jean-Jacques Gaudon, Alain Loustalot, René Périnelli, Jean-Pierre Pizzolato, Michel Ricquier, Louis Roquin, and Tony Russo. Vaillant was a well-known teacher, and one of the best orchestral trumpet players in France (in the 1940-50s), along with Pierre Pollin (1950-70s). He published Traité Pédagogique with Leduc.

Valdambrini, Oscar (b. Turin, Italy, May 11, 1924; d. Rome, Italy, Dec. 26, 1996). Italian trumpeter. Valdambrini studied the violin with his violinist father and also learned to play the trumpet as a child. He attended the Turin Conservatory of Music and studied classical violin and trumpet, graduating in 1941. He decided to switch to jazz and began to perform with various local groups, and played briefly with Rex Stewart when the cornetist visited Italy in 1948.

Valdambrini formed a quintet in 1952 with Gianni Basso called the Basso-Valdambrini Quintet, which soon became the foremost modern jazz ensemble in Italy, making Basso and Valdambrini two of the leading founders of bebop in Italy. During the second half of the 1950s, the group recorded extensively and backed touring American musicians such as Gerry Mulligan, Stan Getz, Chet Baker, and Miles Davis. The group also worked with Lars Gullin. Some of the labels it recorded for were RCA, Jolly, Music, Italian Columbia, Ricordi, Fonit, GTA, Verve, Dejavu, and Vedette.

Valdambrini was a member of Sestetto Italiano (1955-57) and worked with Armando Trovajoli's big band (1957-58). He visited New York in 1962 and worked (in Italy) with Gil Cuppin (1964-71), Giorgio Gaslini (1968-69), and played with several leading American big bands in Europe including those of Duke Ellington (1968-69), Maynard Ferguson (1970-71), and Lionel Hampton. He co-led a sextet with Basso (1972-74), but when Basso left the group, Valdambrini continued it as a quintet. From 1972, he worked with the Television Orchestra of Rome.

Valdambrini was a fine composer and arranger. Some of his best-known compositions include Gin Blues, Lo struzzo Oscar, and Lotar, and some of his albums are Basso-Valdambrini Quintet (Music), The Best Modern Jazz in Italy (RCA), Afrodite (Vedette), and Basso-Valdambrini plus Dino Piena (Dejavu).

Late in life, Valdambrini played with Dusko Goykovich and Kai Winding. He made one last visit to New York in 1993 before he died four years later at the age of seventy-three. He was a quiet and reserved man.

Valdor, Frank (b. Hamburg, Germany, May 27, 1937). German trumpeter. Valdor studied at the School of Music in Hamburg from 1953 to 1955, where he learned to play the trumpet and trombone. In 1955, he was a trombonist and arranger for the bands of Fred Adison and Lionel Hampton, which toured France, Spain, North Africa, and Canada. In 1959, he played trumpet in the dance bands of Werner Müller, Alfred Hause, Franz Thon, and Adalbert Luczkowski. He also arranged, produced, and recorded with the bands of Max Greger and Kurt Henkels in 1961, and with Benny Bailey.

Without doubt, Valdor was the king of popular trumpet playing in Germany during the 1960s and '70s, selling over sixteen million records. Disco and "go go" music were his specialty, and his skills as an arranger and producer brought him great financial success.

Valdor released over eighty LP albums, ten singles, and eight compact discs. Titles of albums include Scandinavian Party, Wonderful World of Trumpets (RCA), Dynamic Trumpet Party (Praline), Trumpet for Dancing (Somerset), Aktuell Trumpet Party (Somerset), 28 Trumpet Hits (Discotoon), and Happy Trumpet Party. Although his trumpet playing was not virtuosic, there was a strong market for his style of playing and arranging.

Valentine [Ballentine], Raymond ("Syd") (b. Indianapolis, Indiana, Nov. 1908; d. Indianapolis, Indiana, 1988). American trumpeter. Syd Valentine learned to play the trumpet from Frank Clay, and soon was playing in local bands. He worked in Kansas City with Fred Wisdom's Merrymakers, and in Terre Haute, Indiana, with Paul Stewart's Wee Hour Serenaders. After graduating from high school in Terre Haute, he toured in 1927 with The Ziegfield Follies, a colored variety show that took him to New York City. Then, he joined Horace Henderson's Collegians (1928) and Bernie Young's orchestra (1930).

In 1928, Valentine founded a ten-piece group called the Patent Leather Kids which were only moderately successful. In the following year, however, he reduced the Patent Leather Kids to a trio that became quite popular and recorded fourteen tunes for the Gannett label. He also played with the bands of Speed Webb, Lucky Millinder (1931), Elmer Calloway (1933), and Earl Hines.

Valentine married in 1935. The couple lived in Brooklyn, New York, for a few years, but moved to Michigan during the late 1930s. When World War II broke out for America in 1941, he returned to his hometown of Indianapolis. After that, he did less and less playing.

Valentine, ("Kid") Thomas (b. Reserve, Louisiana, Feb. 3, 1896; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, June 16, 1987). American trumpeter and bandleader. Valentine first learned to play the valve trombone from his father, Fernand "Pete" Valentine, a professional jazz trumpeter. He switched to trumpet at age ten, and studied with Manuel Manetta (1915-18) and Willie Pajeaud. He played in the Pickwick Brass Band (1910) and turned professional during his teens. From 1915 to 1919, he played in the Lawrence & Duhé Orchestra, and in 1921 moved to Algiers, a suburb of New Orleans, to join Elton Theodore's band where he became a star of the group. In 1922, he moved to New Orleans. Beginning in 1926, he led his own groups, and in 1951 made his first recordings under his own name.

Valentine developed an unusual style of playing that included a wide vibrato, staccato riffs, intense tone, explosive improvisations, highly charged rhythms, plenty of mutes (often used humorously), and great expression in his ballads. From 1951, his group was mostly known as The Algiers Stompers; it became quite popular, made numerous recordings, and toured the world. In 1959, he formed the Creole Jazz Band, which performed in the French Quarter for many decades. The band became a staple at the Preservation Hall, even after Valentine became quite old and had trouble playing the trumpet. During his later years, he performed slapstick with the group, and occasionally played second trumpet when he felt up to it. Unaffected by the influence of Louis Armstrong on the evolution of jazz, Valentine was perhaps the last of the "roughhouse" trumpet players who played in a loud, stomping, and exuberant style. During his prime years, he toured over twenty times with Big Bill Bissonnette's Easy Riders.

Valentine made numerous recordings, many of which are today available on CD. He recorded for AM Music, Center, Mono, "77", NOJS, Jazzology, River-side, Jazz Crusade, GHB, La Croix, Storyville, Shalom, Sonet, Smoky Mary, and the Maison Bourbon labels. He also played on the soundtrack for the movie, Pretty Baby, a film by Louis Malle (1977).

Valentine had two sons, two daughters, and over fifty grandchildren and great-grandchildren. He died at the age of ninety-one.

Välimäki, Aki (b. Kemiö [Kimito], Finland, Dec. 12, 1957). Finnish trumpeter. Välimäki's early trumpet studies were with Mauri Moilanen, Pentti Seppälä, and Heikki Vihanto. In 1967, he began studies with Raimo Sarmas at the Tampere Conservatory. He studied further with Reima Jaatinen, Erkki Karjalainen, Knud Hovaldt, and Henri Adelbrecht. He played in the City Orchestras of Pori and Turku, and also the Finnish Radio Orchestra, as well as in the orchestra of the Finnish National Opera; he is presently principal trumpet with the Tampere Philharmonic. He is the founder of the Finnish Brass Ensemble, Kinski Quintet, and the Finnish Brass Quintet. He also plays in the dance orchestra, Koivu, and with Avanti!, as well as with the Finnish Brass Symphony. Aki Välimäki was a featured artist at the 1999 Lieksa Brass Week, during which the world premiere of Leif Segerstam's trumpet concerto "Truths Felt," dedicated to him, too place.

Vance, Richard ("Dick") Thomas (b. Mayfield, Kentucky, Nov. 28, 1914; d. New York, New York, July 1, 1985). American trumpeter. Vance grew up in Cleveland, Ohio. He started playing violin as a child, but at age seventeen began playing the trumpet. Like most young African-American jazz trumpeters in the Midwest, he got his start in a territorial band. He toured with J. Frank Terry's band until joining Lil Hardin Armstrong's band in Chicago as lead trumpet (1934). He moved to New York City (1936), and played with the big bands of Willie Bryant, Kaiser Marshall, and Fletcher Henderson. He played with Chick Webb's band (1939), but when Webb died of tuberculosis, his vocalist, Ella Fitzgerald, fronted the band. The band eventually went bankrupt, so Vance joined Glen Gray's band as staff arranger.

Vance played with the Lucky Millinder Orchestra (1942), and was a member of the bands of Charlie Barnet (1943), Don Redman (1943), Ben Webster (1946), and the Eddie Heywood Sextet (replacing trumpeter Doc Cheatham in 1944-45). He also studied at The Juilliard School (1944-47), and did a great deal of work in Broadway pit orchestras. He became known as a top arranger, and was commissioned to write for Cab Calloway, Harry James, Earl Hines, Duke Ellington, and others. He rejoined the Henderson organization (1950), and played in Duke Ellington's band (1951-52). He again became a member of Don Redman's band (1953), and then performed mostly at the Savoy Ballroom in New York with his own groups (1954-58).

Vance made many recordings with the various bands he played in, but he mostly played lead trumpet. His solo spots were few, although he did record two LP albums under his own name during the 1960s. One album for the Sue label is quite obscure. However, his album Have Band Will Travel for the Strand label did gain some prominence. During his prime in the 1960s, he toured Europe with Eddie Barefield's band (1969) and played for a while with Cab Calloway (1966). His reputation as a jazz performer and arranger became widespread. When President Lyndon Johnson invited Ellington's band to perform at The White House for the King of Thailand, Ellington took the opportunity to introduce Vance to the King, but the King interrupted saying, Dick Vance? I know who Dick Vance is. He used to wail with Chick Webb.

During the early 1980s, Vance lived in New York City and did very little traveling. He died at the age of sixty-nine.

Van Cleave, Mark (b. Knox, Indiana, July 16, 1960). American trumpeter. Van Cleave grew up in Ft. Wayne, Indiana. He began playing trumpet at age eleven; his father was a band director who knew and brought Rafael Méndez in as a soloist for concerts, something that certainly inspired young Van Cleave. He took lessons from Max Greer, and as a high school student, won several awards at state jazz festivals. After graduating from R. Nelson Snider High School in 1978, he studied with Jerry Franks, who became his most influential teacher and mentor. In 1978, Van Cleave enrolled at Indiana University and began studying with William Adam. Unfortunately, he broke his leg the second week of classes, and due to all of the medical expenses, ran out of money by the end of the semester. He returned home where he enrolled at the Ft. Wayne campus of IU, but, disappointed with school, temporarily quit music and worked at a menial job for a year. In 1981, he went to work at the Vincent Bach Corporation where he learned much about trumpet and mouthpiece manufacturing and design. After leaving the Bach organization in 1982, he went on the road for eighteen months with a show band. He returned home and formed his own nine-piece horn band, which performed throughout the Midwest for two years.

Van Cleave then joined a circus band and toured for three months before he was offered the bandleader position—which he accepted—and toured the world with the circus for ten more years, after which he left the road and again enrolled at Indiana University.

Van Cleave performed with the Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra in Washington, D.C. (1992-96), succeeding Jon Faddis as lead trumpet. He then took a job as conductor of the Ringling Bros. Circus band (1996-98), and toured as lead trumpet and soloist with the Guy Lombardo Orchestra (1998-99).

Van Cleave lived in New York City from 1999 to 2002. While there, he performed with The Temptations, the Four Tops, Mel Tormé, Perry Como, The O'Jays, Robert Goulet, Bobby Vinton, Bobby Short, Patti Page, Frank Sinatra Jr., Martha Reeves and the Vandellas, Mary Wilson and the Supremes, and many others. After the attack of 9/11, he moved back to Ft. Wayne where he taught at the local IU campus from 2003 to 2008. He also toured with various artists, and was an active clinician at high schools and colleges around the country. In 2008, he formed the Mark Van Cleave Jazz Orchestra that features music of the great big bands, and which has performed several summer concert seasons. In late 2009, he started the first ever big band in a Chinese music conservatory at the Central Conservatory of Music in Beijing. During that same time, he also started the Beijing Jazz Orchestra with which he continues as artistic and music director. In 2011, he formed his Velocity Big Be-Bop Band that performs musical tribute concerts to the great Maynard Ferguson.

Van Cleave has recorded with the Maynard Ferguson Alumni and Friends Big Band, Guy Lombardo Orchestra, Zoé, Janice Jaffe, David Baker, the Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra, Randy Carmichael, and his own orchestra. He has published Maximizing Practice, vols. 1 & 2, Zen and the Art of Trumpet Playing, and Strategies for Jazz Improvisation. His former teachers include Jerry Franks, Bernard Adelstein, Allan Dean, Don Jacoby, Claude Gordon, William Adam, and Max Greer.

In 2004, Van Cleave founded Van Cleave Trumpets, a company that produces high quality instruments and mouthpieces. He also founded Trumpet Player Online in 1992, a website dedicated to information about trumpet players, recordings, concerts, and pedagogy. He is also the creator of rec.music.makers.trumpet, an Internet newsgroup for trumpet players. He continues to teach and perform at numerous jazz festivals.

Van Cleave and his wife Jennifer, a keyboard musician and ultrasound technician, have three children: Nick (b. 1995), Katie (b. 1996), and Alex (b. 2000)—all trumpeters. His hobbies include cooking and computers.

VanderCook, Hale A[scher] (b. Ann Arbor, Michigan, Sept. 3, 1864; d. Allegan, Michigan, Oct. 16, 1949). American cornetist. VanderCook's parents moved to Allegan, Michigan, from Holland, Michigan, when Hale was four years old. By age fourteen, he was playing cornet in several local bands, and in 1891 at the age of twenty-seven, became conductor of the J.H. LaPearl Circus Band. VanderCook studied in Chicago with A.F. Weldon, one of the leading teachers in the city.

VanderCook performed as a soloist throughout mid-America, and became a fine cornet teacher. In 1909, he purchased Weldon's home, school, and studios in order to open the VanderCook Cornet School. Many of the finest students attended, and in 1927 he purchased a larger residence and neighboring buildings to make room for the growing number of students. In order to expand the school to all band instruments, he hired several of the best-known teachers in Chicago. The following year, the school was incorporated as a nonprofit institution, and the name changed to the VanderCook School of Music. The Board of Examiners of the Illinois State Department of Public Instruction approved the curriculum, authorizing it as a certified school. The school was further expanded and moved to Michigan Avenue in 1953-54 when it was renamed the VanderCook College of Music. Since 1996, the college has been located on Federal Street in Chicago.

In 1916, VanderCook published a course text in band and orchestra directing. He composed dozens of educational solos for brass, most of which were published in progressively graded series such as the "Stars," "Flowers," and other series. VanderCook was an advocate of the nonpressure system of playing, and in 1922 published his Modern Method for Cornet Playing in twenty lessons. He also composed pieces for cornet and piano compiled by Rob Roy McGregor in The H.A. VanderCook Solo Collection (C. Fischer), originally published by Remick. His seventy marches include well-known works such as American Stride, Olevine, Pacific Fleet, Pageant of Columbia, and S.S. Theodore Rooseveldt.

VanderCook was beloved by his students. His criticisms were honest and straightforward, and he accepted nothing less than the best that each student could produce. He had a very deep voice and would often teach in a very dramatic way in order to help students retain information and musical concepts. Among his better-known students were Walter Henri Dyett and Clifford Lillya. When he retired in 1942, he and his wife Emily moved to his hometown of Allegan, Michigan. He died at the age of eighty-five. He is buried in Oakwood Cemetery.

Vanderhoeft, Arthur (b. Saint-Truiden, Belgium, Aug. 20, 1952). Belgian trumpeter. Vanderhoeft studied at the Royal Conservatories of Brussels and Antwerp, and earned a master of music degree at the California Institute of the Arts under Mario Guarneri. Additional study was with James Stamp and André Van Driessche. During his youth, he was a member of the Flemish National Youth Brass Band, Belgian Youth Orchestra, and the Jeunesses Musicales World Orchestra. In 1971, he was the first-prize winner of the National Competition Pro Civitate (now the Axion Classics).

Vanderhoeft, a freelance artist, has performed with the Antwerp Philharmonic Orchestra, Belgian Radio-Television Orchestra, Collegium Instrumentale Brugense, Theo Mertens Brass Ensemble, Gabrieli Brass Ensemble, Brabant Brass Band, Fred Van Hove Quintet, Brass Band Willebroek, and the Festival Brass Band. He is also a member of the Xenakis-ensemble, and teaches at the Antwerp Music Academy. An active soloist and conductor, Vanderhoeft also specializes in playing the modern corno-da-caccia.

Arthur married Greet Severens, a clarinetist. Together, they formed a duo that performs many new chamber works written especially for them.

Van Haeke, Henri (b. Tourcoing, France, May 6, 1923; d. Soisy-sous-Montmorency, France, Nov. 12, 1991). French trumpeter. Van Haeke's grandfather was a cornet player, and Henri began playing the bugle in a concert band (of which his grandfather was vice president in 1938) called Les Jutimus. Van Haeke studied piano (1930-38), then trumpet (from 1938) with Maurice Mouflard, Maurice Leclercq, Eugène Foveau (1943) at the Paris Conservatory (1943), and with Pierre Vignal and Raymond Sabarich (privately, 1952) in Paris.

As early as 1939, Van Haeke played in jazz bands such as the Hubert Valdray Orchestra (in Tourcoing). During his studies in Paris, he played occasional classical jobs at the Comédie Française (1943, subbing for Albert Adriano) and the Schola Cantorum. He joined the 43rd Infantry Regiment Band (1946-47) and then began a great jazz and commercial career with Bob Cockné (1947-48), Aimé Barelli (1952), and Camille Sauvage (1952). From 1955, he was active as a lead trumpeter in the Parisian studios (records, films, etc). Van Haeke was a gifted big band trumpeter, and along with Robert Fassin and Fred Gérard, was one of the greatest lead trumpeters in France during the 1950s-60s. Van Haeke made a reputation at the Moulin Rouge (1953-57), with the Claude Bolling Orchestra (1956-57), at the Casino de Paris (1962-64), Lido (1964-67), Jean-Claude Naude (1965, 1975), and Folies Bergères (1968-70), and with Slide Hampton (1970). He again joined Bolling's orchestra during most of the 1970s.

Van Haeke, Roger Delmotte, and Michel Laplace cofounded the Guilde Française des Trompettistes in 1978. After suffering from heart problems in 1982, Van Haeke stopped playing the trumpet.

Vannetelbosch, Louis [Emile] Julien (b. Meerbeek, Belgium, Dec. 5, 1920; d. Wolumé-Saint-Lambert, Belgium, Apr. 5, 2000). Belgian trumpeter. Vannetelbosch graduated from the Louvain Conservatory in 1938, and the Royal Conservatory of Brussels in 1942. In Brussels, he won prizes for theory, chamber music, and trumpet, as well as the Prix Spécial Alphonse Goeyens.

Vannetelbosch spent his career performing with the two orchestras of the Belgian television and radio (BRT and RTB), as well as at the Theatre La Monnaie in Brussels. He taught at the Royal Conservatory of Brussels (from 1960), possibly at the Royal Conservatory of Ghent, and at the Royal Conservatory of Liège. He is well known for his etude books, 23 Etudes de concours and 20 Etudes mélodiques et techniques. His son (first name unknown) was principal trumpet of the Lausanne Radio Orchestra.

Van Rooyen, Ack (b. Den Haag, Holland, Netherlands, Jan. 1, 1930). Dutch trumpeter and flugelhornist. Van Rooyen graduated from the Royal Conservatory at The Hague "cum laude" in 1949, and immediately joined the Arnhem Symphony Orchestra where he played until 1952. His attention turned to jazz, and he made his living for the next few years in the studios in Hilversum. He moved to Monaco for about three years, playing in the Aimé Barelli Orchestra (1957-60), and then moved to Germany where he joined the SFB Big Band in Berlin (1960-66). He toured and recorded as a featured soloist with the Bert Kaempfert Orchestra, toured Asia and South America with Wolfgang Dauner and Albert Mangelsdorff, and was a member of the United Jazz and Rock Ensemble. Van Rooyen played lead trumpet with the Erwin Lehn Orchestra (1967-79), Peter Herbolzheimer's Rhythm Combination & Brass (from 1970 until the present), and the South German Broadcasting Orchestra in Stuttgart. He also performed with Clark Terry, Gil Evans, Friedrich Gulda, Don Ellis, Clarke-Boland Big Band, and Stan Getz during each band's European tours. In 1980, he returned to Holland.

Van Rooyen is currently playing with his own jazz quintet, and leads the Dutch Jazz Orchestra, Jazz Orchestra of the Concertgebouw, and a duo with Joerg Reiter. He teaches at the Royal Conservatory of The Hague, and presents jazz workshops throughout Europe. He can be heard on over one hundred recordings for such labels as Mood, ECM, Music ELK, Challenge, Folkways, and Koala.

Vanryne, Robert (b. Oxhey, Buckinghamshire, England, June 6, 1963). British trumpeter. At age sixteen, Vanryne was a finalist in the all-England BBC Young Musician of the Year competition. He studied music history at Royal Holloway College at the University of London (1983-86), and continued his study as a trumpet performance major with Michael Laird at the Royal College of Music in London (1986-87). He is a specialist in many antique trumpets and cornets, and also performs on the natural and keyed trumpets. He has been a guest of the Gabrieli Consort, English Baroque Soloists, and the Academy of Ancient Music, among others. He is a member of the brass ensemble, Passion of Brass, a quintet that performs on nineteenth century brass instruments. He has recorded Virtuoso Trumpet Concertos (ARS Production), Haydn Concertos (DG Archiv), and an album of sonatas by Heinrich Biber with Musica Antique Köln.

Vanryne is an active freelance musician now living in Dresden. He is also a maker of replica Baroque and Classical trumpets. He is married to the singer Constanze Backes.

Varona, Jorge (b. Camagüey, Cuba, July 3, 1932; d. Havana, Cuba, late 1988). Cuban trumpeter. Varona came from a musical family that had lived in Camagüey since the mid nineteenth century. He studied with his father, and then at the Music Academy in Camagüey.

Varona played with Avance Juvenil (1945), Vitico Gonzales, Orquesta Hermanos Avilès (1952; Venezuela tour, 1956), Wolfredo de los Reyes Sr. (1957), and others. He moved to Havana in 1959 and began playing at the Conjunto Casino. He also played with Sabor de Cuba led by Bebo Valdès, Banda Gigante led by Beny Moré (until 1963), and the Orquesta Cubana de Música Moderna (1967). He was a founding member of the famous group known as Irakere (1973-88) that also included his protégé, trumpeter Arturo Sandoval. He made dozens of recordings, but his best-known ones are with Irakere. Varona was sometimes described as the "perfect trumpeter" because of his complete technical mastery.

Varona's son, Alvero, and daughter, Olga, are trumpeters.

Vasilyevsky, Ivan [Antonovich] (b. Selvzy, Russia [now in Lithuania], May 6, 1892; d. Moscow, Russia, Jan. 14, 1959). Russian trumpeter. Vasilyevsky first played in an amateur wind band (1907-08) and studied trumpet with Nikolay Zakharovich Podgorbunsky at the Kiev Music College from 1909 to 1912. While in Kiev, he played in the National Opera Orchestra, then the Taganrog Symphony Orchestra. From 1913 to 1916, he attended the Moscow Conservatory where he studied with Mikhail Prokofjevich Adamov, receiving his diploma in 1922.

Vasilyevsky played in the conductorless Persimfans and then in a private Moscow opera orchestra in 1919, and beginning in 1920 played principal trumpet in the Bolshoi Theatre Orchestra in Moscow until 1950. He taught at the Glazunov School of Music and the Moscow Conservatory, becoming the most influential teacher of the next generation that included the famous Timofei Dokshitser and his three brothers. According to Dokshitser's memoirs, he was a group leader. He played masterfully, brightly, and a small and slightly trembling vibrato. All of Tabakov's good pupils studied with him first. He was honored by the State in 1951. Every year on the anniversary of Vasilevsky's birth, the 6th of May, V. Peskin's Funeral Fanfares are performed in his honor at the Novodevichiye Cemetery, where Vasilyevsky is buried.

Vassallo, Jim Cates (b. Texas City, Texas, Aug. 20, 1954). American trumpeter. Vassallo grew up in Texas City, near Galveston. His first trumpet teacher was James Brannon. After graduating from Texas City High School in 1972, he attended the University of Houston where he studied with James Austin (1972-77) and earned a bachelor of music degree. He continued graduate work there (1977-80), and served as an instructor of trumpet. Since 1980, he has been principal trumpet of the Houston Ballet Orchestra, and since 1987 also principal of the Houston Grand Opera Orchestra. He teaches at the University of Houston as an adjunct professor.

During several summers, Vassallo served on the faculty of the Texas Music Festival. He has played with the Grand Teton Festival Orchestra, Colorado Music Festival, and the AIM Festival Orchestra in Graz, Austria. He is currently a member of the Moores Brass Quintet (faculty) at the University of Houston. His hobbies include cooking, fishing, and golf.

Vax, Michael ("Mike") N. (b. Oakland, California, Oct. 30, 1942). American trumpeter. Vax grew up in Oakland, California, near San Francisco. His father was in the refrigeration business and was a skilled amateur photographer. His mother was a top portrait artist. Vax learned to love big band music during the early 1950s while secretly listening to radio broadcasts of the Lucky Lager Dance Time Show after bedtime. As a child, he learned to play the recorder, but when his music teacher handed him a beat-up old school cornet, he immediately took to it; his early music teachers were Mrs. Aldridge, Norm Tompach, and Jewel Lord. His first trumpet lessons were during high school with Dick Lotter. Vax's idol was Rafael Méndez.

While attending Oakland High School (1956-60), Vax played in the Berkeley Young People's Symphony and planned to become a classical orchestral trumpet player. His career path changed dramatically when Don Jacoby came to his high school as a guest soloist and clinician for the Conn Company, and encouraged him to attend the Stan Kenton Clinic that summer (1960) at Indiana University. While there, Vax auditioned and was asked to sit in with Kenton's band as fourth trumpet. (The section included Conte Candoli and Jimmy Maxwell, who offered advice to Vax.) So, by the time Vax began his college studies at the University of the Pacific, he was hooked on jazz and big band playing. He also had trumpet lessons with John Coppola and played with the Stockton Symphony, Stockton Municipal Band, and Sacramento Opera.

Vax learned a great deal from Gordon Findlay (formerly with the US Navy Band in Washington, D.C.) during his college years (1960-65). However, since the school did not allow jazz music to be played, Vax and a few friends formed a jazz quintet on their own, even though they were not allowed to practice on campus. Vax studied recordings of all the great lead trumpet players including Maynard Ferguson, Al Porcino, and Buddy Childers, as well as Dixieland music and the jazz work of Clark Terry and Clifford Brown. He later had lessons in New York City with Carmine Caruso and Roy Stevens.

After graduating from college in 1965, Vax joined the US Navy and was assigned as the lead player of the Navy Show Band that spent three years (1966-69) in South America under a State Department goodwill tour. Upon his return, he was stationed at Treasure Island, California, where he worked as an arranger and dance band leader. He also volunteered much of his free time to working with patients in a local drug rehabilitation center, and convinced several of his musician friends to join him in playing jazz music at centers throughout California.

Through a jazz colleague, Vax had the opportunity to audition for Stan Kenton, who offered him a position in his band in 1970, and although Vax explained that he had several more months of military obligation, Kenton was able to convince military officials to release him early due to the importance to Vax's career, and because the Kenton band performed numerous concerts each year at military bases throughout the country. After two years as lead trumpet with Kenton, Vax also became Kenton's road manager. But Vax felt the urge to play in smaller groups and explore his improvisation skills, so he left the band after two and a half years on the road and became a clinician for the Conn Company, taking over his mentor's (Don Jacoby) duties by performing with high school bands throughout the United States.

Vax received a call from the manager of the Dukes of Dixieland in 1975, asking him to lead and play with the group. He accepted the offer, and performed and recorded with it for two years. He also formed his own jazz group at this time. During the spring of 1978, Vax accepted an offer to play lead in Clark Terry's Big Band, and also formed and led his own big band, which was very successful. He performed or recorded with many celebrity artists including Bob Hope, Red Skelton, Art Pepper, Freddy Hubbard, Joe Williams, Louie Bellson, Steve Allen, Bob Crosby, Randy Brecker, Cab Calloway, Glenn Miller Orchestra led by Buddy de Franco, Pee Wee Hunt, Ray McKinley, Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra, Don Ellis, Gene Krupa, Al Grey, The Four Freshmen, The Army Blues, Air Force Falconaires, The Navy Commodores, and others. He also formed a group consisting of four trumpets (Vax, Steve Campos, Warren Gale, Bob Doll) and rhythm called TRPTS. In addition, he formed the Mike Vax Big Band that consisted mostly of former members of the Kenton orchestra.

Vax became a clinician for Yamaha during the 1990s and helped design the Mike Vax-model trumpet. He participated in the Great American Jazz Band and released several solo albums including I Remember You (Master Communications Group), Live at Morningside College (MCG), The Draga/Vax Connection (Dragonwax Records), Transforming Traditions (TRPTS on The Jazz Alliance label), and Alternate Route (Sea Breeze). One of his latest CDs is with Clark Terry, entitled Creepin' with Clark (Summit), and another is Vaxuosity (Summit) with the Ohlone Wind Orchestra.

Vax is currently a clinician for Getzen Trumpets and is the codesigner of the Mike Vax-model Getzen trumpet. He continues to appear at virtually all of the leading international jazz festivals and is an active soloist and clinician throughout the world. He was elected the leader of the Stan Kenton Alumni Band, which has released the CD, Have Band Will Travel (Summit). He and wife Peggy, a trombonist, reside in Prescott, Arizona, and have a daughter, Leslie April, born in 1979.

Vega, Ray (b. New York, New York, Apr. 3, 1961). American trumpeter. Vega grew up in South Bronx, New York, and became obsessed with Latin jazz when he was in junior high school. He decided to play the trumpet after being inspired by Freddie Hubbard.

Vega graduated from New York's High School of Music and Art where he studied with Jerry Gonzalez. He also later studied trumpet with Sidney Baker, Henry Nowak, Mike Lawrence, Stan Shafran, Laurie Frink, and Richard Brezowski. He attended Long Island University-Brooklyn Center, studying jazz harmony and improvisation with Susan Winder, Bobby Rogovin, and Lonnie Hillyer.

Vega is a top Latin jazz trumpeter and a fine percussionist, arranger, and composer. He has performed and recorded with many of the leading Latin and jazz musicians of the world, including James Spaulding, Louis Ramirez (1985), Wessell Anderson, Luis "Perico" Ortiz, Hector Lavoc (1987), Mongo Santamaria (1987-92), Eddie Palmieri, Johnny Pacheco, Ray Barretto (1990-94), Joe Henderson, Pete Rodriguez (1991-92), Mario Bauza (including a tour of Europe), Tito Puente (1994-99), Chico O'Farrill, the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra, Arturo Sandoval, Mel Tormé, Paquito D'Rivera, The Spanish Harlem Orchestra, Paul Simon, John Santos, Simon Bolivar, The Duke Ellington Orchestra, The Vanguard Orchestra, Bebo Valdès, and Celia Cruz.

An exciting lead trumpeter and jazz soloist, Vega has released four CDs: Ray Vega (Concord Picante), Boperation (Concord Picante), Pa'lante (Palmetto), Squeeze Squeeze (Palmetto). He has given workshops and master classes around the world, and is on the faculty at the University of Vermont. He currently leads his own groups: Ray Vega Latin Jazz Quintet, Ray Vega Burlington Jazz Quintet, and East/West Trumpet Summit.

Vejvanovský, Pavel Josef (also spelled Weiwanowski or Paul Josep Wegwanowskij) (b. Hukvaldy, Bohemia, 1639; d. Kremsier, Sept. 22, 1693). Moravian trumpeter. He studied at the Jesuit college at Opava, and in 1664 was appointed principal trumpet and Kapellmeister to Prince-Bishop Karl Liechtenstein-Kastelkorn. He remained a field trumpeter his entire life.

Vejvanovský composed 137 works that included masses, motets, sonatas, serenades, etc., many of which include "solo clarino" parts that he probably performed himself. Many of his trumpet pieces contain nonharmonic pitches such as lowered 7ths, so he must have been quite skilled in the bending of notes.

Velenczei, Tamás (b. Esztergom, Hungary, June 15, 1962). Hungarian trumpeter. At the advice of his elementary school teacher, Velenczei's parents enrolled him in a school that favored the Kodály method of learning music. At age eight, he began studying trumpet with Joszef Mayer. In 1976 at age fourteen, he played in a local municipal orchestra, and attended the Franz Liszt Conservatory in Szeged where he studied with Gábor Huszár. Four years later, he enrolled in the Franz Liszt Conservatory in Budapest where he studied with Frigyes Varasdy. He graduated at the age of twenty-three (1985) with an artist diploma in trumpet, and a diploma in chamber music.

Velenczei's first professional experiences were with the Purcell Brass Quintet (beginning in 1980) and the Anonymous Brass Quintet (beginning in 1983), which in 1986 won first prize in the Narbonne (France) competition. He was an extra trumpet with the Symphony Orchestra of the Hungarian Radio, and became an unofficial understudy to coprincipals Ferenc Tárjani and Istvan Palotai. From 1983 to 1992, he was second trumpet of the Budapest Symphony Orchestra.

Valenczei spent several summers studying in the United States; he studied for six months with Boyde Hood at the International University in San Diego, California. In 1988, he was awarded a four-week scholarship by the Chicago Symphony Orchestra to study with Adolph Herseth, the principal trumpeter. He also received valuable advice from Arnold Jacobs concerning correct breathing.

After returning to Budapest and resuming the second trumpet position in the Budapest Symphony Orchestra, he became principal trumpet of the newly formed Budapest Festival Orchestra in 1992. In 1988, he began playing alongside Hans Gansch in Pro Brass, and began as a substitute trumpet with the Berlin Philharmonic, which invited him to audition for the principal chair in 1999. He and Sylvia Velenczei were married in 1998 and have a daughter, Dora Vanda.

Following a lengthy and strenuous audition process, Velenczei was hired as coprincipal trumpet of the Berlin Philharmonic (succeeding Konradin Groth), and was granted tenure in 2001. He also is currently teaching at the Karajan Orchestra Academy in Berlin.

Venezia, Frank (b. New York, New York, 1891; d. after 1937). American trumpeter. Venezia (sometimes listed incorrectly as Venezie) was born to Italian parents. He studied with Max Schlossberg. He was principal trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra for less than one season because Maestro Nikolai Sokoloff fired him for playing three times louder, after he had been asked to play softer; Sokoloff referred to him as a "dummy."

Venezia left Cleveland and joined the New York Symphony during the late 1920s. When the symphony merged with the New York Philharmonic, Venezia was included in the newly formed orchestra, playing second trumpet to Harry Glantz. (Max Schlossberg was the fourth player.) He left the Philharmonic to join the more lucrative CBS Radio Orchestra in New York (1930s), and was recruited in 1937 by Artur Rodzinski to play second trumpet to Benny Baker in Arturo Toscanini's newly formed NBC Symphony.

Verhaeghe, Eric (b. Brugge, Belgium, May 11, 1940). Belgian trumpeter. Verhaeghe studied with Théo Mertens, and at age twenty played lead trumpet with the Janot Morales Big Band and with Eddy Delatte. He soon played lead with the Belgian Radio and Television (BRT) Jazz Orchestra, BRT Big Band, Brussels Jazz Orchestra, and ACT Big Band. He was soloist with the Caravelli Grand Orchestra which toured Japan, and formed his own big band, the Eric Robin Band. During his career, he toured with bands backing Leo Martin, Julio Iglesias, Andy Williams, Frank Sinatra, Shirley Bassey, Aretha Franklin, Jaco Pastorius, and others. Since 1961, he has worked mainly as a studio musician.

Verhaert, Steven (b. Aartselaar, Belgium, May 7, 1969). Belgian trumpeter and conductor. Verhaert studied at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Brussels in 1987-93 where he received first prizes in solfeggio, trumpet, and chamber music. He then studied at the Staaliche Hochschule für Musik in Karlsruhe, Germany, under Reinhold Friedrich, graduating in 1996. Additional trumpet study was with Pierre Thibaud and Günter Beetz.

Since 1995, Verhaert has been a member of the Royal Flemish Philharmonic in Antwerp and artistic director of the royal band. He also teaches chamber music at the Royal Flemish Conservatory. In 2002, he became artistic director of the symphonic band project at the School of Music of the Johannes Getenberg University in Mainz. Verhaert composes and arranges for hr Brass, Worldbrass, andvarious other symphonic wind ensembles. He is a founding member of the Ottone Brass Quintet, and is an active player of the Baroque (valveless) trumpet with the Freiburg (Germany) Baroque Orchestra, and other groups. As a conductor, he has been a guest with dozens of orchestras and brass ensembles, including the Rotterdam Philharmonic.

Verstraete, Fernand ("Trumpet Boy") (b. Roubaix, France, Sept. 12, 1925; d. Germigny, France, July 24, 1992). French trumpeter, accordionist, and arranger. Verstraete's father Désiré was an accordion player. Fernand studied with noted accordion virtuosos like Albert Lestienne, Simone Bultiauw, and Arthur Lenglet. He also studied trumpet with Maurice Leclercq at the conservatory in Roubaix (1940). Verstraete toured with singer Jean Tranchant, and then with Jeannine & Ses Solistes (1946). He began a jazz career in Lille in 1947, and joined the groups of Fred Adison (1947-49) and Jacques Hélian (1949-51). Later, he played in Paris with Hubert Rostaing (1953-59), Michel Legrand (1956-57), Claude Bolling (1956-58; 1974-91), Tony Proteau, Christian Chevallier, Sidney Bechet, Benny Vasseur, Martial Solal, Henri Renaud, and many others. As a studio player, he joined the most in-demand trumpet section led by Fred Gérard, along with Robert Fassin and Roger Guérin (from 1954). He recorded with Bill Tamper (1952), Gigi Gryce (1953), Claude Bolling, Lucky Thompson, Clifford Brown, Clark Terry, Django Reinhardt, Fred Gérard, Charles Aznavour, and Eddie Barclay, among others.

Verstraete, also known as Frankie Verne and Frank Vernet, was a skilled arranger who led his own orchestra for many years. He recorded numerous pop albums under the nickname, Trumpet Boy (until 1969). His son, Jean-Claude Verstraete (b. 1953; d. 2011), was also a trumpet player.

Vetrov, Mikhail Semenovich (b. Tver, Russia, Nov. 14, 1908; d. Leningrad, Russia, Jan. 19, 1970). Russian trumpeter. Vetrov began his career playing in military bands from 1921 to 1928. He then attended the Moscow Conservatory where he studied with Mikhail Adamov, graduating in 1931. His orchestral career extended for more than fifteen years with the All-Union Radio Orchestra, Moscow Philharmonic, Variety Orchestra of Russia led by Leonid Utyesov, and as principal trumpet of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra. He was also a fine jazz trumpeter. It is said that he had a beautiful tone, expressive phrasing, and good musical taste.

Vetrov is considered to be one of the most important teachers in Russia, having made many arrangements and also editing Mitronov's trumpet method, and having taught at the St. Petersburg/ Leningrad Conservatory from 1945 until his death in 1970. He became a full professor in 1967, was head of the wind department, dean of the orchestra department, and Conservatory prorector. He also taught at a special music school. Among his many students were Veniamin Margolin, principal trumpet of the Leningrad Philharmonic from 1947 to 1974, and Yury Bolshiyanov, coprincipal in the same orchestra from 1946 to 1968 and teacher at the Leningrad/St. Petersburg Conservatory from 1953 until his death in 2004 (professor in 1973), head of the wind department, and rector in 1976-80. Vetrov was honored by the State in 1960.

Vezant, Louis ("Loulou") Jr. (b. Paris, France, Jan. 25, 1931). French trumpeter. Vezant studied piano with Raoul Gola, and trumpet with his father, Louis Vezant Sr. (1908-1991). He also studied with Raymond Sabarich at the Paris Conservatory (1953-56). He played with Fernand Bouillon (1948, along with his father and Jean Mauclaire, trumpet.), was a substitute for Georges Jouvin and Alex Renard (1953, Ile de France boat), played with Benny Bennet (1953), Georges Ross (L'Eléphant Blanc, 1953, with Lalo Schifrin on piano), at the Opéra (substitute to Roger Delmotte), ballets with Jean Crétal and Raymond Tournesac, (then with Bernard Gabel on trumpet), Alix Combelle (Poste Parisien, 1954), Antonio Picallo (1954-56, with Chico Cristobal, alto sax), at the Moulin Rouge (1957), Al Mone (Bruxelles, 1958, with Pierre Thibaud and Vincent Casino, trumpets), Camille Sauvage (as a lead trumpet), Benny Bennet again (1958), Quincy Jones (1959), at the Casino de Paris (1960-80), and the Association Guy Luypaerts. He also recorded a film soundtrack with Aimé Barelli in 1951.

Vezant played lead trumpet on television with Jean-Claude Pelletier, and later with Bob Quibel. He toured Japan five times with Raymond Lefèvre and also played in the big bands of Sonny Grey, Ivan Jullien, Jean-Claude Naude, Claude Bolling, and Gérard Badini (1986-94). He has taught at the Paul Beuscher School in Paris.

Vignal, Pierre [Joseph] (b. Isserteaux, France, Dec. 5, 1879; d. March 13,1943). French cornetist and trumpeter. Pierre Vignal studied under J.-J. Mellet at the Paris Conservatory where he received a first prize for cornet in 1902.

Vignal played cornet at the Sirène de Paris, the Casino in Vichy, and the Concerts Ganne in Monte Carlo. Later, he was solo trumpet at the Opéra in Paris and at the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (1920 to June 1937). Vignal was a powerful trumpet player who attained the peak of his celebrity from 1927 to 1937. Beginning in 1926, Vignal was the only French trumpet player to perform Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto as written. He also performed the Mass in B minor by Bach many times (1931 to 1936), and was the first in France to play Haydn's Concerto for Trumpet (circa 1930). Foreshadowing modern convention, he played the Haydn on an E-flat trumpet, and the Brandenburg on a Couesnon piccolo trumpet (very small bore at his request). He was recently identified by Michel Laplace as the highly probable trumpeter of the Brandenburg on the recording made by the Orchestre de l'Ecole Normale de Paris under Alfred Cortot in 1933 (the trumpet player is anonymous). His rendition is of the highest standard, and sounds very modern (reissued on CD by EMI 7243 5 67211 2 8). In the 1935-46 period, two previous pupils of Vignal performed that difficult work: Roger Aureggi (Monte Carlo, 1935), and Raymond Tournesac (Vichy, in the 1940s). Vignal also recorded under his own name (cornet pieces on the Odéon label), as well as in sessions alongside Eugène Foveau playing the Octuor by Igor Stravinsky, which was conducted by the composer (Columbia).

Vignal was professor of trumpet at the Paris Conservatory from November 1, 1925 to January 1, 1943. He taught René Voisin (father of Roger Voisin) and Louis Menardi (Sabarich's brother-in-law). His closest disciple, however, was Raymond Tournesac, who, like his teacher, also had a career in Monte Carlo and Vichy. Vignal has been underrated; his style was ahead of his time. His tone was similar to that of Raymond Sabarich (but without the vibrato).

Villanueva, Jari A. (b. Karhula, Finland, Aug. 14, 1955). Finnish-born American trumpeter and bugler. Villanueva grew up in Baltimore, Maryland. He began playing the trumpet at age twelve; his first teacher was Clarence Wroblewski. After graduating from Patterson High School in Baltimore, he attended the Peabody Conservatory from 1973 to 1978, studying with Donald Tison, principal trumpet of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. Villanueva led the jazz ensemble at Loyola University from 1976 to 1979, and taught musical theater and jazz history at Goucher College from 1979 to 1984 while also teaching in the Baltimore public schools from 1980 to 1983. From 1983 to 1984, he earned a master of music degree at Kent State University in Ohio, studying with Michael Chunn.

Villanueva was a member of the US Air Force Band in Washington, D.C. from 1985 to 2008, during which he served as a bugler and drum major, sounding Taps at Arlington National Cemetery over five thousand times. He has received numerous awards and medals from the US Air Force, and has performed with the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Annapolis Symphony, Baltimore Opera Company, and other organizations. He is America's foremost authority on US military calls, and has authored several articles and a book on the subject.

Villanueva was curator of the Taps exhibit at Arlington National Cemetery, and is responsible for moving the bugle used at President John F. Kennedy's funeral from the Smithsonian Institution for display at Arlington. In 2007, he was inducted into the Buglers' Hall of Fame, as the first active duty military bugler to be so honored. He wrote Twenty-four Notes That Tap Deep Emotions: The Story of America's Most Famous Bugle Call. His sounding of bugle calls can be heard on the soundtrack of the movie, Gods and Generals. An arranger for the US Air Force Band, he has also published extensively through Musicians Publications, Music Express, Ludwig Music Company, and JV Music.

Since 2008, Villanueva has worked for the Maryland Military Department, serving as Director of the Maryland National Guard Honor Guard, and as conductor and commander of the Maryland Defense Force Band. From 1998 to 2010, he was an adjunct professor at the University of Maryland, Baltimore County, serving as director of bands. He is a Civil War historian, re-enactor, the artistic director of the National Association for Civil War Brass Music, Inc., and directs and leads The Federal City Brass Band and the 26th North Carolina Regimental Band. In addition, he is music director for the National Civil War Field Music School.

Villanueva and his wife Heather Faust live in Cantonsville, Ohio. His hobbies include Civil War history, baseball, and the Kennedy assassination.

Vivar, Alejandro ("El Negro") (b. Manzanillo, Cuba, 1923; d. Miami, Florida, 1979). Cuban trumpeter. Vivar came from a musical family, and was considered the greatest jazz trumpeter in Cuba during the 1950s. He blended the style of Dizzy Gillespie with that of traditional Cuban music, and was an important part of the Cuban Jam Session albums on the Panart label.

Vivar made his debut with the Filarmónica de la Habana. In 1946, he played with the Conjunto Casino, then began playing jazz with a group called Cosmopolita, and gained recognition playing with Bebo Valdés & His Havana All Stars (1952-60). He also played with the famous singer Beny Moré, teamed with the Banda Kubavana, and jammed at the Tropicana with Conte Candoli and Bill Harris. Vivar worked in studios and performed at the Radio Progreso, but after the Cuban revolution, left for New York City in the early 1960s; he later established himself in Miami, Florida. He was a member of Ray Barretto's Cuban band, Latino '62, among others, and can be heard on dozens of recordings with many Cuban and American musicians such as Clark Terry, Cat Anderson, and Louie Bellson.

Vizzutti, Allen (b. Missoula, Montana, Sept. 13, 1952). American trumpeter and composer. Vizzutti possesses a special talent. He is one of the world's most versatile trumpet players, equally accomplished in performing jazz, lead, classical, and pop music. His father, Lido Vizzutti, was a self-taught trumpet player who was Allen's only trumpet teacher until Allen went to college. In 1967, Vizzutti received advice from Doc Severinsen, and at age sixteen, was first chair in the World Youth Orchestra and a concerto competition winner at Interlochen Music Camp in Michigan. After graduating from high school in Missoula, Montana, Vizzutti accepted a scholarship to study at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, where he earned bachelor and master of music degrees, studying with Sidney Mear (1970-76). He also earned a Performer's Certificate and was the first and only wind player to date to have been awarded an Artist's Diploma. While still a student, he was a member of the Rochester Philharmonic and Eastman Brass Quintet from 1971 to 1976 (along with Daniel Patrylak on trumpet). The EBQ toured the United States, Canada, and Israel, made several recordings, and performed at the National Trumpet Symposium in Denver in 1973.

Vizzutti's interest in composing music ignited in the fertile environment of the Eastman School. As a graduate student, he was commissioned to write and perform a solo work for himself and the Rochester Philharmonic. His numerous classical works include The Rising Sun, Three Winter Scenes, The Emerald Concerto, Prism: Shards of Color for Brass (commissioned by the Summit Brass), Five Episodes for Trumpet and Brass Ensemble (cocomposed with Jeff Tyzik), American Jazz Suite, Cascades for unaccompanied treumpet, Prelude and Presto for brass quintet, and Sonatas Nos. 1, 2 & 3 for trumpet and piano. His compositions have been premiered by such ensembles as the Los Angeles Philharmonic, London Symphony Orchestra, Royal Philharmonic of London, Syracuse Symphony, Rochester Philharmonic, Summit Brass, and the Nuremburg Symphony.

Vizzutti has performed with hundreds of leading ensembles and artists, making him one of the top trumpet soloists in the world. Among them are Chuck Mangione, Frank Sinatra, Barbra Streisand, Prince, Dizzy Gillespie, Dave Brubeck, Oliver Nelson, Stan Getz, Bill Watrous, Marian McPartland, Thad Jones, Chick Corea (1978, European tour), Doc Severinsen, Woody Herman (1976-77), Airmen of Note, Army Blues, New Tokyo Philharmonic, Budapest Radio Orchestra, Slovenian Radio Orchestra, Minnesota Orchestra, Leipzig Wind Symphony, NBC Tonight Show Band, St. Paul Chamber Orchestra, Summit Brass, Kosei Wind Orchestra, Japan's NHK Orchestra, and the Ten of the Best trumpet and rhythm ensemble. He has visited sixty countries to date, including appearances as guest artist with symphonies in Tokyo, St. Louis, Seattle, Syracuse, Rochester, Milwaukee, Buffalo, Phoenix, Edmonton, Vancouver, Winnipeg, and Honolulu. As a staunch proponent of music education, Vizzutti has presented hundreds of clinics and master classes around the world. His past artist residencies include the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute, Bremen Trumpet Academy, Banff Centre for the Arts, Skidmore Jazz Institute, Eastman School of Music, numerous European festivals, and myriad universities.

Vizzutti has recorded ten solo albums for Summit Records, Sony, Ludwig Music Publishing, and DeHaske Music Publishing. His published methods, New Concepts for Trumpet (Alfred Music Publishing) and The Allen Vizzutti Trumpet Method (Alfred) have become standard treatises for trumpet study. He has published over twenty books of etudes, duets, and jazz play-along books with DeHaske Publications/Hal Leonard, as well as two volumes of eight solos with piano, Excursions and Explorations, for young trumpet players. Vizzutti's rigorous publication: Advanced Etudes for Trumpet, is published by The Brass Press.

Famous locations where Vizzutti has performed include the Hollywood Bowl, Carnegie Hall, the Grand Teton Music Festival, Charles Ives Center, Lincoln Center, Leipzig Gewandhaus, Royal Albert Hall, Tokyo City Opera, Suntory Hall, the Breckenridge Music Festival, Newport Jazz Festival, and the Montreux Jazz Festival. He has also been a featured soloist at several annual conferences of the International Trumpet Guild, the 1995 International Brassfest, and many times at the Midwest Band and Orchestra Clinic in Chicago.

While living in Los Angeles during the 1980's, Vizzutti played in countless films, television programs, shows, and commercials. He can be heard on the soundtracks of over one hundred fifty movies, including Star Trek, Back to the Future, The Black Stallion, Rocky II, Fire Fox, Sudden Impact, 10, Under the Cherry Moon, Broadcast News, The Electric Horseman, and 1941.

Vizzutti and his wife, fellow Eastman graduate, Laura Vizzutti, have three children: Marcus Allen (b. 1987), Nicholas Jeffrey (b.1990), and Gabriella Joy (b. 1991), all of whom are musical. They live on Mercer Island, Washington. Allen was an Artist-in-Residence at the University of Washington for many years, is currently an artist-in-residence at the University of South Carolina, and maintains a busy touring and composing schedule. He was awarded the Montana Governor's Award in 2008. His hobby is collecting character watches.

Vlasák, František (b. Všenory [near Prague], Czech Republic, Nov. 26, 1945). Czech trumpeter. Vlasák studied at the Prague Conservatory with Václav Pařik from 1960 to 1966. He was a member of the Prague Chamber Orchestra from 1964 to 1966, and then until 1969 performed with the Czech Philharmonic. He was principal trumpet of the Basle Symphony Orchestra that toured Europe, America, and Japan from 1969 until his retirement in 2005.

Vloeimans, Eric (b. Huizen, Holland, Mar. 24, 1963). Dutch trumpeter. Vloeimans began his studies at the Rotterdam Academy of Music as a classical musician, but switched to jazz, graduating with distinction in 1988. He continued his studies in New York City with Donald Byrd, and started his career with the big bands of Frank Foster and Mercer Ellington. Since returning to Holland, he has been involved in numerous jazz projects that combine musicians from various countries. He received the Edison Award for his CD, Bitches and Fairy Tales, in 1999, and received the most prestigious Dutch jazz award, the VPRO/Boy Edgar Award in 2003. He also received Edison Awards for his albums Summersault (2006) and Gatecrashin' (2007). Known for his usage of electronic special effects, he was described in JazzTimes magazine, Vloeimans plays crisp and self-assured, embodying the articulate melodism of Clifford Brown plus many shades of Miles, without being imitative. Other CDs include No Realistics, First Floor, Bestiarium, Umai, Brutto Gusto, VoizNoiz 3, Hidden History, Boompetit, Hyper, Heavensabove!, Live at Yoshi's, and Live at the Concertgebouw.

Voisin, Peter G. (b. Boston, Massachusetts, Feb. 4, 1950). American trumpeter. Peter is the last of an important and famous family of trumpeters. His grandfather, René (1893-1952), came to America from France to join the Boston Symphony Orchestra under Sergey Koussevitzky in 1928. Peter's father was the famous Roger Voisin (1918-2008) who played principal trumpet in the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1950 to 1964. [See biographies on René and Roger Voisin.]

When Peter was nine and ten, he studied solfège with Marcel Lafosse, and at age eleven began playing the trumpet under the guidance of his father. From 1969 to 1971, he attended the Oberlin Conservatory of Music where he studied with Eugene Young, and because Peter had started playing C trumpet with his father, Young taught him how to play the B-flat trumpet as well. After completing his bachelor of music degree, Peter earned a master of music degree studying with his father at the New England Conservatory from 1971 to 1972. Upon graduation, he joined the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra as third trumpet, second trumpet in the SSO Brass Quintet, and Marketing Manager of the orchestra for one year. In 1983, he moved to Jacksonville, Florida, where he played third trumpet in the Jacksonville Symphony Orchestra for twenty years and later fourth trumpet for two years (2003-05). From 1983 to 1984, he also served as the orchestra's first Development Director.

Voisin founded the Premier Brass (quintet) in 1991. His wife Pamela, an office manager for Ameriprise Financial, plays second trumpet in the group. His children are Christine (b. 1973), Maria (b. 1974), and stepdaughter Candice Bassett (b. 1983). Voisin was also active in Jacksonville with the FAITH praise band at Southside United Methodist Church, playing trumpet, flugelhorn, and keyboard.

After retiring from fulltime orchestra playing, Voisin and his wife moved to Hendersonville, North Carolina, in 2005. He remains active with the Asheville First Baptist Church orchestra, Spartanburg Philharmonic, Brevard Community Orchestra, Brevard Chamber Orchestra, Premier Brass, Smokey Mountain Brass Band, and other area groups. He is a designated Chartered Retirement Planning Councilor and Financial Advisor with Ameriprise Financial (since 1984). His hobbies include cooking, landscaping, composing, coaching brass ensembles, and philosophy.

Voisin, René [Louis] (b. Angers, France, Nov. 18, 1893; d. Boston, Massachusetts, Jan. 16, 1952). American trumpeter. René was the oldest of the three Voisin trumpeters that included his famous son Roger, and grandson Peter.

René's father was Georges Gabriel Voisin, a respected businessman and music supporter. Georges founded the Angers-Doutre Wind Band and purchased instruments for a local orphanage. He taught René to love music and was able to secure him a place in Alexandre Petit's and Pierre Vignal's classes at the Paris Conservatory.

René graduated in 1916, earning a Prize of Excellence, and was awarded his first new cornet, which is now a special possession of the Voisin family.

During World War I, René was a freelance musician in many Parisian theaters together with trumpeters Auguste Mériguet and Bailleul (1914-18) and was briefly a stretcher-bearer in the military. In 1918, he and Anne-Marie Mace were married and had a son, Roger Louis, in that same year. After military service, René worked as solo cornet and second trumpeter at the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (1920-1928). He had a hectic schedule that left little time for home life. In the mid-1920s he began to have heart problems.

Voisin participated in the well-known Koussevitsky Concerts that occurred between 1921 and 1928 in Paris. Koussevitsky had become the conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and was recruiting musicians from France. He offered Voisin a position as fourth trumpet in the BSO. Thinking that it would be better for his health to make a living playing in only one orchestra, Voisin accepted the offer and moved the family to Boston in 1928.

Once in America, Voisin performed for many years in the BSO and began teaching his son Roger to play the trumpet, who eventually became the third trumpet in the orchestra at the age of sixteen, and later principal. However, heart problems finally ended René's life in 1952. Anne-Marie said that he was a very polite, kind-hearted, intelligent man with a wonderful sense of humor and great laughter. We had a very good marriage together. She attempted to lighten his household chores: I did everything I could to not let him do the hard work. Here I did my jobs and I did all the work. He was ashamed [that he could not help], so I do pretty much the same now that he is gone. Being a wonderful cook and hostess, Anne-Marie later opened a small restaurant in her home, "Chez Voisin."

Voisin, Roger Louis (b. Angers, France, June 26, 1918; d. Auburndale, Massachusetts, Feb. 13, 2008). American trumpeter. Roger was the most famous of a family of trumpeters, and one of the greatest orchestral players of all time. His unique personality and playing style were a marvel to all who knew him.

Roger's father René was a highly respected trumpeter who spent much of his early career in Paris working in various orchestras. In the 1920s, René began to have heart problems, possibly due to his hectic schedule from juggling numerous playing jobs in the city. During his boyhood years, Roger said that he hardly saw his father because René left each morning before Roger awoke, and he did not return until after Roger had gone to bed.

When Sergey Koussevitzky became conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he recruited numerous French musicians to come to Boston. René was offered a position as fourth trumpet in the BSO at a large salary and decided to take the offer, thinking that this would be less stressful and would allow him more time with the family. So in 1928, the Voisin family settled in Boston.

At this time, Roger was ten years old and of an age that he could begin playing the trumpet with his father's guidance. Although Roger had received some general music training in Paris, René arranged for him to take solfège lessons with Gaston Dufresne, a contrabassist in the BSO. Roger said of Dufresne, His teaching of rhythm was based on terror. However, Roger attributed his uncanny rhythmic precision and variety of articulations to his studies with Dufresne.

Roger had a large gap between his upper two front teeth that caused him to place the mouthpiece off to one side of his mouth. My father could not stand my embouchure...My father would chisel small pieces of wood and make me play with them between my teeth. It hurt like hell...and it bled! My father was killing me, absolutely. I had to endure that for nearly a year. Finally, he gave up and I played where it felt the best.

At age fifteen, René arranged for Roger to study with Marcel Lafosse, the second trumpet of the BSO. In the following year, Roger began studying with the principal trumpet of the BSO, Georges Mager. In order to try to improve Roger's upper register, René also asked Walter M. Smith to give Roger a few lessons. This proved to be quite helpful; Roger recorded the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach twice, first with Sergey Koussevitzky (1946) and later with Charles Münch (1961). No one before him, with the exception of Louis Davidson and William Vacchiano, played this difficult work in America as it was written.

Roger was a bugler for the Boy Scouts. His father taught him many French bugle calls because René felt that they were challenging rhythmic pieces. While waiting for his father to finish a rehearsal with the Boston Pops Orchestra, Roger was outside practicing his bugle calls, which caught the ear of conductor Arthur Fiedler who was impressed with the fifteen-year-old boy's playing. Fiedler asked Roger to play calls at the conclusion of the intermissions of the Pops concerts, which proved to be very beneficial to Roger's playing because he needed to play accurately and consistently each day. Soon, Fiedler invited Roger to play in the MacDowell Orchestra, one of Fiedler's orchestras at that time. Voisin's orchestral training had now begun in a real way.

In 1934, Fiedler encouraged Koussevitzky to audition Roger for an opening in the BSO, a position also attached to the principal chair in the Pops. Sixteen-year-old Roger was granted an audition that was played for Maestro Koussevitzky and several of the principal players of the BSO. Most committee members wanted to hear Roger play some difficult orchestral passages, but Koussevitzky preferred that he play a pianissimo A with a grand crescendo followed by a diminuendo to pianissimo. The request puzzled Roger, but he played it with perfect control. The committee was silent for a moment and then broke into applause; Koussevitzky congratulated Roger and offered him the position. Roger was stunned that he had won the job with one note! Excitedly, Roger found his father and told him of his good fortune. His father replied, Don't you understand, you little small fry? That was the famous solo from "Rienzi Overture" by Richard Wagner!

René did not feel that Roger had enough experience to join the BSO and became upset at the idea of his son joining the trumpet section at such a young age, and preferred that Roger attend the Paris Conservatory instead. However, Fiedler and BSO oboist Fernand Gillet came to Roger's defense, and after two days of negotiations, René surrendered to Koussevitzky's wishes, but with the stipulation that Roger take lessons on the contrabass should anything cause him to be unable to play the trumpet. Roger joined the Pops as principal trumpet during the summer of 1935, and the BSO as third and assistant principal trumpet the following season (where he succeeded the Belgian trumpeter Théo Grunday, a former pupil of the famous Théo Charlier).

Roger's first teaching position was in 1940 at the Tanglewood Institute in the Berkshires outside of Boston that was to be the summer home of the BSO, and during that summer, Roger performed the American premiere of Paul Hindemith's Sonata with Hindemith at the piano. The performance, however, was an informal one and was intended to be as much a reading session as it was a concert.

Mager was keenly aware of Roger's strengths, especially his ability to tongue difficult fast passages cleanly, and began to let Roger perform some of the overtures and concerto accompaniments. It seemed that Roger's career was really taking off. The early recording of Bach's Brandenburg mentioned above was made while he was assistant principal.

World War II interrupted Roger's career from 1942 through 1945; he was drafted into military service and required to report for induction into the Navy. At first, he was upset and did not want to leave his job with the BSO and Pops, but after speaking with several friends, he decided that he actually did want to serve his country. He reported as requested and passed the Navy's physical exam, but not the psychological test; it was determined that Roger's lack of association with friends of his own age caused some concern, and he was denied enlistment. Roger complained to the review board and was told that if he could get a letter from a licensed psychologist stating that he was fit for duty, they would reverse their decision. So, Roger went to Dr. Solomon, an avid BSO supporter and respected psychiatrist who gave Roger a satisfactory report, but added that Roger should be assigned to duty as a Special Agent and not be sent into combat.

Roger entered the US Navy in 1942 and was assigned the duty of forming an orchestra at the Naval Training Station at Newport, Rhode Island. He was later assigned to teach at the Navy School of Music at Anacostia, in Washington, D.C. (1943-45). In order to retain his position in the BSO, Roger was often granted leave to perform with the orchestra. It was only after military service that Roger learned that his commander had fought to keep him out of sonar training, which the Navy had thought would be valuable because of Roger's excellent sense of hearing as a musician.

Roger returned to the BSO and Pops in 1945. By this time, Mager was thinking of retiring, but his colleagues bitterly argued with him about this, claiming that no one could replace him as principal. Mager knew that Roger was capable of the job, so he decided to test Roger's ability and prove to his friends that a replacement was at hand. During a performance of Stravinsky's Petrouchka, Mager suddenly became "ill" and passed the difficult ending piccolo solo to Roger, saying Here, you must play the ending. I can't make it. Without time to ask questions, Roger picked up his C trumpet and nailed the ending. Afterwards, Mager told members of the orchestra that it was Roger that saved the day. This quieted all complaints about Mager's retirement, but unfortunately, he passed away before he could retire, so Roger became principal in 1950. His great reputation became international and mostly because of his style. The BSO was called the most French of the American orchestras.

In 1946 Roger began part-time teaching at the New England Conservatory where he taught trumpet and replaced Dufresne as the solfège teacher. Roger, a dashing and handsome man, began dating a graduate piano and harp student, Martha Moore Hayes, a southern belle from Charlotte, North Carolina. One of his students, conductor Kenneth Schermerhorn, stated: Roger lived well; he always had new cars, dressed well, ate well, and had pretty girlfriends. We all wanted to emulate Roger. As it turned out, the draft board was not entirely wrong about Roger's social inabilities with people of his age. After several dates, Martha asked Roger two questions: Do you know anybody your own age? and Do you know anyone that does not speak French?

Martha's father was not pleased with his daughter's new boyfriend, stating He's a union man, a "Yankee," a Catholic, and not to mention, he speaks with an accent. Her father even hired a private investigator to look into Roger's professional and personal background. Learning of this, Roger attempted to work things out with Martha's father, but to no avail. As Martha's relationship with Roger became serious, her parents cut her off financially. Nonetheless, Roger and Martha were married on April 9, 1949. Fortunately, Roger was eventually accepted into the Hayes family and became quite close with all of them, including Martha's father.

The Voisins had a son, Peter (b. 1950) and a daughter, Anne (b. 1952). In 1952, Roger's father and stand partner of seventeen years died at the age of fifty-nine. At the time of his father's death, Roger was on a tour of New York with the BSO. Conductor Ernest Ansermet told Roger to go home to attend the funeral but Roger felt that there were too many important trumpet parts in the program for him to be able to leave. He told Ansermet, No, I will play in New York [City]. I want to play my solo. I will play the way my father asked me to play. I will do that for him.

Voisin resigned his position with the Pops in 1951 in order to concentrate on his BSO job and teaching duties. Armando Ghitalla, a former student of William Vacchiano at Juilliard, left his position as principal of the Houston Symphony Orchestra and joined the Pops as principal as well as the BSO as second trumpet.

Voisin continued teaching each summer at Tanglewood and at NEC, and in addition to teaching trumpet, became the conductor of the conservatory's Repertory Orchestra. His reputation as a teacher grew and NEC became one of the nation's leading schools for trumpet. He gave the American premiere of Alexander Arutunian's Trumpet Concerto with the Pops in 1966 (performed on E-flat trumpet). He also formed the Boston Brass Ensemble in 1952 that consisted of members of the BSO. It made two recordings: The Golden Age of Brass and The Modern Age of Brass.

Voisin participated in many world premiere performances of well-known orchestral works. In 1946, he premiered Bartók's Concerto for Orchestra with the composer conducting. As it turns out, the difficult high trumpet part in the last movement was originally written in the trumpet part as clarinet cues. Not realizing that the notes were cues, Voisin played the passage. Stopping, Bartók told Voisin to leave it out, but after reading it a second time, he told Voisin to leave it in, as he preferred adding the trumpet. [The New Grove Dictionary states that the premiere of the Bartók was in 1944, but this may be an error. Voisin's interview with Michael Arndt states 1946, a date that makes sense because Voisin did not return to the BSO fulltime until after his military service ended in 1945.]

During most of Voisin's career, he played trumpets built by the French makers Couesnon and Thibouville-Lamy. The Thibouville-Lamy instrument was a C/D four-valve instrument made popular by the Paris Conservatory professor Merri Franquin. The advantages of an instrument that can quickly change from C to D are obvious. Voisin said that many trumpeters in Paris wanted to "blackball" Franquin's students because they were using "secret weapons." These small-bore trumpets produced an extremely focused sound that became Voisin's trademark, along with his rather unique style of a bleating vibrato that created great musical intensity.

From 1959 to 1963, Voisin pioneered a series of solo recordings for the Kapp label titled Music for Trumpet and Orchestra that included five LP albums. These, along with the recordings by the French trumpeter Roger Delmotte (beginning in 1952) and the German trumpeter Adolf Scherbaum, were the first to showcase trumpet concertos of the Baroque and Classical eras. Voisin's recordings were recently reissued as a two-CD set on MCA. Voisin's other solo album for Kapp is titled Trumpet Music and includes works by various Baroque composers. These recordings became very popular during the 1960s and influenced thousands of trumpeters.

In the early 1960s, Erich Leinsdorf became music director of the BSO. Everyone was aware of the huge differences in playing style between Voisin and Ghitalla, and the differences began to cause friction between the two of them. Voisin was starting to feel pressure to play perfectly on each concert, and finally in 1964, asked Leinsdorf if he could trade positions with Ghitalla. After much discussion this was approved, and Ghitalla was named the new principal, but before he could assume the new responsibilities, he developed lip cancer, no doubt stemming from his many years of pipe smoking. Voisin was asked to play principal while Ghitalla took time for lip surgery and recovery. To everyone's surprise, Ghitalla returned a year later and played better than before, and Voisin moved to an open position of third/assistant principal.

Voisin's wife had advised against his move to the section because she knew that he was a strong leader and that it would be difficult for him to adjust as a section player. After the first concert with Voisin on the third part, he sensed that something was wrong: After the first concert I played after moving to third, on the way home I was getting the cold shoulder from my wife. I asked "What did I do wrong?" and she said, "You know very well what you did wrong. It was really disgusting. All I could hear was the third trumpet part." I guess I hadn't cooled down to my third trumpet part. I really wasn't trying to be funny. After the concert, I went to Rayburn Music on Monday morning and I bought a "blender." I bought a Bach so I could blend!

In 1973, Voisin decided to resign from the BSO. He had performed in the orchestra for thirty-eight complete seasons and eighteen with the Pops. His career now focused on teaching and editing dozens of editions of trumpet music for the International Music Company. In 1975, Voisin approached the director of the New England Conservatory, Gunther Schuller, about being hired as a fulltime teacher, and was dismayed that Schuller needed time to think about it. A few days later, he met with Schuller and was surprised that Schuller had arranged for him to teach fulltime at Boston University. Voisin had taught there part-time since 1969, but in 1975 he relinquished his position at NEC to begin duties as Chair of the Winds, Percussion and Harp Division at Boston University, a position he held until 1998 when he decided to semiretire. Voisin retired completely in 1999 at the age of eighty-one. His students are too numerous to list, but among the best-known are Rolf Smedvig, Kenneth Schermerhorn, Edward Hoffman, Rodney Mack, Dennis Najoom, William Pfund, Joseph Foley, Timothy Morrison, David Hickman, Peter Chapman, James Thompson, Edward Tarr, and Michael Zonshine. Voisin also had a very strong influence on his previous pupil Edward H. Tarr, whom he taught during the summer of 1953.

Voisin was open-minded, and during his formative years liked to listen to Harry James. Later, he respected very much Bobby Hackett, a close friend of his, and Rafael Méndez. Last but not least, he requested Leroy Anderson to write a light music piece for trumpet. Voisin premiered Anderson's A Trumpeter's Lullaby on May 9, 1950 with the Pops under Arthur Fiedler.

After retirement, Voisin kept busy with numerous clinics and master classes at schools around the country including the Eastman School and the New World Symphony's training program. In 1977, an anonymous donor (now known to have been Robert King) endowed the Roger Voisin Principal Trumpet Chair with the BSO. Voisin continued with his hobbies of cooking and reading books. At age eighty-nine, he and his wife Martha Moore moved to a nursing home in Newton near the home they had owned for many years. The International Trumpet Guild bestowed its Honorary Award for highest artistic achievement on him, and in June of 2008 ITG presented a program in Voisin's honor, which he attended with his family. Voisin died a few months later on February 13 at his nursing home. Up to the very day of his death, he remained a witty and quick-minded man, full of life and passion for music.

Volkov, Vitaly Vasilyevich (b. Sverdlovsk, Urals, Russia, June 16, 1939; d. 2005). Russian trumpeter. Volkov graduated from the Urals Conservatory in Sverdlovsk in 1964, studying with Vyacheslav Shchylokov, and was a postgraduate student there until 1969. From 1963 to 1968, he was principal trumpet of the Sverdlovsk Philharmonic Orchestra, and from 1968 to 1979 held the same position with the Bielorussian Symphony Orchestra in Minsk. He taught for the Minsk Ministry of Culture from 1974 to 1978, as well as occupying teaching posts at the Bielorussian Conservatory in Minsk (1978-79 and again since 1987, professor in 1994), Cairo Conservatory (1979-80), and Baghdad School of Music and Dance (1984-87). He has written a trumpet method, as well as arranged works for trumpet and piano.

Volle, Bjarne (b. Høyanger, Norway, Aug. 20, 1943). Norwegian trumpeter and composer. Volle grew up playing in brass bands, and studied with Edward B. Nilsen at the Bergen Teacher Training College, and at the local music conservatory (1962-65). He also studied with Edward Tarr (Baroque trumpet and cornetto) in Basel, Switzerland, and with Vincent Cichowicz and Adolph Herseth in Chicago.

Volle taught at the Oslo Conservatory from 1969 to 1973. He earned a diploma from the University of Oslo in 1971, and was a member of the Oslo Pro Musica Antiqua from 1969 to 1977. Since his graduation, he undertook numerous concert and lecture tours through Norway and Sweden until 1994. Although specializing in lectures and performances on Baroque and Classical trumpets, he was among the first during the twentieth century to perform on the keyed trumpet; he gave the first performance worldwide of the Haydn Concerto on the keyed trumpet on March 30, 1973 in Norway. He played for radio and television studios, made an album titled Trumpet War Horses in 1969, and has published numerous editions, compositions, and arrangements for trumpet.

Volodin, Lev Vasilyevich (b. Ardatov, Mordovia, Russia, Aug. 25, 1930; d. Moscow, Russia, Aug. 6, 1996). Russian trumpeter. Volodin's early training was in a Russian army band from 1943 to 1952. In 1955, he finished studying at the Music College of the Moscow Conservatory (preparatory school), and in 1957 won first prize in the Sixth International Youth Festival in Moscow. He then studied at the Moscow Conservatory with Sergey Yeryomin, graduating in 1965.

Volodin became one of the leading orchestral trumpeters in Russia. He was known for his virtuosic technique, beautifully expressive tone quality, and passionate style of playing, particularly on such works as Scriabin's Poem of Ecstasy (which he recorded in 1966 under Evgeny Svetlanov, Melodiya 33S01351/2). He was principal of the Bolshoi Theatre orchestra from 1971 to 1976, principal of the Moscow Symphony Orchestra from 1976 to 1978, and principal of the USSR State Symphony Orchestra in Moscow from 1957 to 1971 and again from 1978 to 1993. He led a trumpet quartet in 1978 and toured France in 1987. Volodin taught at the Moscow Conservatory from 1979 until his death, and was made a full professor in 1991. He was honored by the State in 1980, and in 1986 was given the title Honored Artist of the RSFSR. He died in 1996. Among his many students are Andrei Ikov, Konstantin Moskvin, and Vadim Popov.

Vosburgh, George (b. Woodmere, Long Island, New York, Sept. 24, 1957). American trumpeter. Vosburgh grew up in Woodmere, Long Island. He began playing trumpet at age seven and first studied with Jack Brangan and Raymond Crisara. After graduating from Hewlett High School in 1975, he attended the Eastman School of Music (1975-79) where he studied with Sidney Mear and Richard Jones. While at Eastman, he served as third/assistant principal trumpet of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra. He has also studied with Robert Nagel and Adolph Herseth. Upon graduation, he became second trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and at age twenty-one, was the youngest member of the brass section. A performer with superior technique and incredible stamina, Vosburgh won a prize in the Bavarian Radio International (ARD) Music Competition in 1986.

Vosburgh was named principal of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra during the fall of 1992, replacing Charles Hois. Since that year, he has been an adjunct faculty member at Duquesne University and Carnegie Mellon University in Pittsburgh. He has performed at the Bonn Festival, Ravinia Festival, and Curs International Festival in Valencia, Spain. In 1994, he formed the Pittsburgh Symphony Brass, a sextet that has recorded extensively for the Four Winds label. He has lectured at Northwestern University, University of California-Los Angeles, and the University of Michigan, among many other universities.

Vosburgh has recorded solo CDs for Four Winds, including Trumpet Heritage, Trumpet Masterworks, and Four Trumpet Concertos. He has also recorded for Koss Classic, American Gramophone, and Reference Recordings. He was a Gold Record recipient for his work with the New Age ensemble, Mannheim Steamroller, and was awarded a Grammy for "Best New Classical Artist" in 1985 for his Reference Recording of Stravinsky's L'Histoire du Soldat with the Chicago Pro Musica ensemble.

Vosburgh recorded music for several television commercials over the course of his thirteen years in Chicago, including those for Coca-Cola, Black and Decker, McDonald's, and United Airlines. He has presented master classes around the world, and in 2003 was selected to be principal of the World Orchestra for Peace.

Vosburgh and his wife Joann Vosburgh have a daughter, Amanda. His hobbies include cars, wine, and powerlifting.

Vu, Cuong (b. Saigon, Vietnam, Sept. 19, 1969). Vietnamese trumpeter and singer. Vu's mother was a pop singer, and his father also a musician. At age six, Vu immigrated to the United States with his mother, settling in Bellevue, Washington (near Seattle). He began playing the trumpet when he was eleven. After graduating from Bellevue High School, he received a scholarship to attend the New England Conservatory where he earned a bachelor of music degree in jazz performance.

Vu moved to New York City in 1994. His interests have been in avant-garde jazz. He has performed with Dave Douglas, Chris Speed, Bobby Previte, Cibo Matto, David Bowie, Andy Laster, Myra Melford, Mitchell Froom, Gerry Hemingway, Mark Helias, and many others. The British magazine, Classic CD, named him as one of the top 50 jazz musicians of his generation. He has also received the Colbert Award for Excellence, The Downtown Arts Project Emerging Artist Award, and in 2006 was named "Best Instrumental Jazz Artist" by the Italian Jazz Critics Society.

Among Vu's many CDs are Bound (Knitting Factory Works), Pure (Knitting Factory Works), Come Play With Me (Knitting Factory Works), It's Mostly Residual (ArtistShare), Yeah No (Songlines, with Chris Speed), Deviantics (Songlines, with Chris Speed), and Emit (Songlines, with Chris Speed). Vu won Grammy Awards in 2002 and 2006 for "Best Contemporary Jazz Album."

During the early 1990s, Vu was a member of Jeff Song's Lowbrow, as well as Orange Then Blue. He has led the groups Scratcher, JACKhouse, and Vu-Tet. Currently, Vu is on the jazz faculty at the University of Washington and a member of the Pat Methany Group, and leads his own jazz trio.

Vukobratović, Laura (b. Novi Sad, Serbia, June 12, 1971). Serbian trumpeter. Vukobratović studied at a music school in Novi Sad with Kovács Kálmán. At age twenty, she spent the next three years as principal trumpet of the Serbian National Theater Orchestra in Novi Sad, and since 1994 has been teaching at the local School of Music. In 1995-2001, she had additional study at the Musikhochschule in Karlsruhe, Germany, with Reinhold Friedrich and Edward Tarr.

Vukobratović is a sought-after soloist. Orchestras that have accompanied her are Deutsches Kammerorchester Berlin, Cologne Chamber Orchestra, Ludwigsburg Festival Orchestra, Philharmonie Baden-Baden, Vienna Chamber Orchestra, radio symphony orchestras in Belgrade and Bukarest, and Freiburg Baroque Orchestra. Besides the countries mentioned, she has appeared in France, Italy, Portugal, Spain, Brazil, China (Shanghai Spring Music Festival 2005), et al. She performs on regular and Baroque (valveless) trumpets, and has recorded several CDs for the Naxos label. Each year she performs Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto between ten and twenty-five times, either on piccolo or Baroque trumpet.

During the 2001/2002 season, Vukobratović had a one-year contract as principal of the NDR-Sinfonieorchester Hamburg. Since 2002, she has been principal trumpet in the Mannheim National Theater Orchestra. In addition, she has performed as extra with symphony and chamber orchestras in Frankfurt, Munich, Bremen, Ludwigsburg, Cologne, and Belgrade, among others. As a chamber musician, she is a member of the Women of Brass ensemble, hr Brass, and Bach Blech and Blues.

For years Laura Vukobratović was one of four teachers in Reinhold Friedrich's trumpet class at the Karlsruhe University of Music. In spring 2013, she became professor of trumpet at the University of Music in Essen.

W

Wachs [Vaks], Julius Gustav (b. Yuryev [now Tartu], Estonia, Jan. 16, 1893; d. Suure-Janinn, Estonia, Jan. 27, 1952). Estonian trumpeter. Wachs studied under Alexander B. Gordon at the Petrograd Conservatory, graduating in 1917, and receiving a silver cornet as a special award called the Franz Schubert Prize. Between 1917 and 1919, he played with the Petrograd Symphony Orchestra, Moscow Symphony Orchestra, and the Yalta Symphony Orchestra. From 1919 until 1929, he was principal of the Tallinn Symphony Orchestra.

Wachs taught at the Tallinn Conservatory from 1929 until his death in 1952 (full professor in 1933). He also performed with the Radio Symphony Orchestra in Reval from 1929. He wrote a trumpet method book, published articles and books about Estonian folk songs, and conducted orchestras that performed Estonian folk songs.

Wallace, John [Williamson] (b. Mixthill, Fife, Scotland, Apr. 14, 1949). Scottish trumpeter. As a small boy, Wallace began taking cornet lessons from his father. At age fifteen, he became a member of the National Youth Orchestra of the United Kingdom, which gave him an opportunity to take a few lessons from Ernest Hall in London. He attended Cambridge University from 1967 to 1970 where he pursued an academic degree, while also taking trumpet lessons outside of school from Dennis Clift of the London Symphony Orchestra. From 1970 to 1972, he studied trumpet at the Royal Academy of Music with Albert Cochrane and Sidney Ellison, as well as taking music composition lessons. Wallace attended York University from 1972 to 1974 where he earned a PhD in composition. He also studied trumpet with Elgar Howarth.

Wallace's first playing job was as second trumpet in the Festival Ballet Orchestra in London. He later joined the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, but after six months moved to the London Symphony Orchestra as coprincipal trumpet. He also played with the Covent Garden Orchestra. From 1976 to 1995, he was principal trumpet of the Philharmonia Orchestra of London. Upon retiring from the Philharmonia, Wallace was awarded the Order of the British Empire.

Wallace founded the Wallace Collection in 1986, a chamber group devoted to music education. It recorded a series of successful CDs for Collins Classics, Nimbus, and Toshiba EMI. Wallace also recorded a great deal of trumpet repertoire for Nimbus, and premiered works by Malcolm Arnold, Tim Souster, Robert Saxton, Dominic Muldowney, James MacMillan, Mark Anthony Turnage, and Harrison Birtwistle. In 1988, he took on the additional duties as principal trumpet of the London Sinfonetta. He also taught at the University of London, and became head of the brass faculty at the Royal Academy of Music in 1992. He participated in Arts Council Network tours of the United Kingdom and Australia, and worked with the British Council in South Africa and Russia. With Trevor Herbert, he coedited a book titled the Cambridge University Press Companion to Brass Instruments.

A noted clinician throughout the world, Wallace served on the faculty of the 2002 conference of the International Trumpet Guild. A witty and humble man, Wallace on January 1, 2002 took on the administrative post as Principal of the Royal Conservatoire of Scotland (formerly the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama), Glasgow, and gave up trumpet playing a few years later. He and Alexander McGrattan, a freelance trumpeter who teaches natural trumpet and music history there, have coauthored the important book, The Trumpet (Yale University Press), which appeared in 2012.

Walp, Robert (b. c1956). American trumpeter. Walp grew up in Pasadena, California. His mother plays the violin, so Robert began to study the violin at an early age, but switched to trumpet and studied with Walter Laursen and Thomas Stevens. He attended the Music Academy of the West during the summer of 1976, and earned a bachelor of music degree in 1982 from Northwestern University, studying with Vincent Cichowicz. He also studied with Adolph Herseth and Arnold Jacobs while playing in the Civic Orchestra of Chicago. Additionally, he studied with Albert Calvayrac in France and Timofei Dokshitser at the Dijon Academy, France (August 1982).

Walp briefly substituted for Cichowicz at Northwestern University, and also taught for five years as an adjunct professor at Rice University. He became the assistant principal trumpet of the Houston Symphony Orchestra in 1983. He has performed at the Carmel Bach Festival, Rheingau Music Festival (Germany), Albi Festival (France), and other international festivals. Since 2006, he has been the director of the Houston Brass Band, and leads the brass ensemble, TOOT!

Walrath, Jack Arthur Jr. (b. Stuart, Florida, May 5, 1946). American trumpeter and composer. Walrath grew up in tiny Edgar, Montana (population 100). He wanted to play trumpet after hearing Clyde McCoy's Sugar Blues on the radio (age nine). After graduating from Joliet (Montana) High School in 1964, he attended the Berklee College of Music, earning a diploma in music composition in 1968. Walrath moved to Los Angeles and worked with various R&B bands, plus the groups, Change and Revival (1969-71). He also toured with Ray Charles in 1971.

Walrath moved to New York City around 1972 where he played with several Latin bands, the Paul Jeffrey Octet, Charles Mingus (1975-79), Charli Persip's Superband (1978-90), Danny Richmond (1979-81), Sam Rivers (1979-84), Carlos Ward, Muhal Richard Abrams (1988-91), Mingus Epitaph (1989-91), Mingus Dynasty (serving as leader from 1989-91), George Gruntz's Concert Jazz Band (1991), and Jazz Tribe. At various times, he has also performed with Ray Anthony, Ricky Ford, Joe Morello, Miles Davis, Quincy Jones, Craig Harris, Pete LaRoca, Mike Longo, Elvis Costello, Motown, Larry Willis, Gunther Schuller, Hal Galper, and others.

A highly versatile musician, Walrath states, I went from traditional jazz directly to avant-garde and went back through bebop and hard bop. I love the unpredictable, the new, and the eclectic. I have been influenced by unlikely and world music sources, and I have come to believe in "free music." He is a Grammy-nominated artist and has released twenty-two albums as leader, including In Montana (The Jazz Alliance), Master of Suspense (Blue Note), Neohippus (Blue Note), Heavy Mirth (Steeplechase), Ballroom (Steeplechase), Wholly Trinity (Muse), Changes One (Rhino/Atlantic, with Mingus), Changes Two (Rhino/Atlantic, with Mingus), The Next Step (Red, with Jazz Tribe), A Plea of Sanity (Stash), and Revenge of the Fat People (Stash).

As a composer, Walrath has written a great deal of film music. His television scores include Homicide: Life on the Street and Bill Cosby's NBC Mystery Movie. He has received composition grants from the National Endowment for the Arts, the Copland Fund, and the Mary Flagler Cary Trust. He has composed or arranged hundreds of works for other leading musicians, many of whom he has recorded with.

For over a year, Walrath authored a jazz record review column for The International Musician magazine. He is currently writing a book of his experiences with Charles Mingus and others. He is an active clinician and teacher at numerous jazz camps and music schools, and currently leads his own groups: The Jack Walrath Group, Wholly Trinity, Hard Corps, The Masters of Suspense, and a jazz quintet.

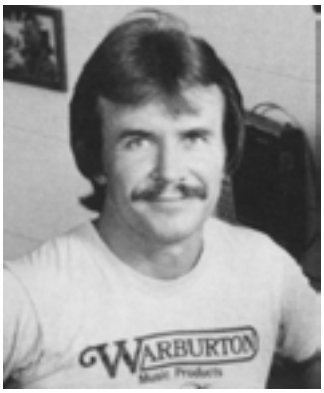
Warburton, Terry (b. Toronto, Ontario, Canada, May 15, 1950). Canadian manufacturer. Warburton began playing the trumpet at age fourteen, studying in Toronto with Robert Oades (1966-67) and Ted Warburton (no relation) in 1968-69. While still in high school, he was the featured trumpet soloist of the University of Toronto marching band. His first professional playing experiences were in polka bands and dance orchestras. During his early career, Warburton damaged his lower lip by playing with too much mouthpiece pressure, and switched to the bass trombone.



Warburton took a job at Long & McQuade, a large music store in Toronto. With his father's financial assistance, he formed Warburton Music Industries in 1974, because there were no mouthpiece makers in Canada. He moved his company to Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, in 1981, and eventually moved again to Hollywood (Florida) and Orlando. A devastating fire in June of 2005 totally destroyed his shop. However, most of his equipment stayed operational, and he set up a new shop in Oviedo, Florida. Warburton Industries is one of the world's leading mouthpiece companies, selling over five thousand mouthpieces each year.

Terry Warburton is married to Ann Warburton. She manages the office of the firm. Their children are Johan, Erika Lin, and TerriAnn. His hobbies include boating, shooting firearms, fishing, and raising rabbits.

Ware, John ("Johnny") R[osswork] (b. Atlantic City, New Jersey, Jan. 30, 1922). American trumpeter. As a small boy, Ware heard an older boy play hymns on trumpet at church, and was captivated by the sound of the instrument. At age eleven, he joined the school band and began studying with his band director, Clifford Geary. Two years later, Geary introduced him to his next teacher, Harold W. Rehrig of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Ware graduated from high school in 1939, at the end of the Depression. He worked for years to save enough money to attend The Juilliard School where he became a student of William Vacchiano in 1941. Additionally, he studied with Georges Mager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra.

After Ware had attended one semester at Juilliard, Japan attacked Pearl Harbor, bringing the U.S. into World War II. He decided to enlist in the Army, and was stationed in Plattsburg, New York, as part of the 36th Combat Engineers Band. The band was assigned to General Patton and sent to Africa, Sicily, and Germany before it returned to the U.S. three years later. After being released from service, Ware returned to Juilliard in 1945 where he met Frances Wilbur, a female trumpet student; they soon married.

About a year later, Ware auditioned for Maestro William Steinberg, and won a position as principal trumpet of the Buffalo Philharmonic. In 1947, he arranged a private audition with the conductor of the Dallas Symphony, and became principal trumpet. After twenty-two weeks in Dallas, Ware received a phone call from Vacchiano, and was offered a job in the New York Philharmonic as third and assistant principal trumpet. He accepted, and in 1948 began forty years there. When Leonard Bernstein became music director of the Philharmonic, Ware was promoted to third/associate principal. Then, when Vacchiano retired in 1973, Ware was promoted to coprincipal, and Gerard Schwarz was hired as the other coprincipal. Ware retained this position when Schwarz became a fulltime conductor, and Philip Smith was hired as Schwarz's replacement. Ware preferred to play the B-flat trumpet because of its deeper and richer tone than the C trumpet. But, at age fifty (around the time that Vacchiano retired from the orchestra), Ware began to use the C trumpet more frequently.

Ware was never tremendously enthusiastic about teaching because it had become very difficult to place students into orchestral jobs. He did teach, however, during various times at the Mannes College of Music and the Manhattan School of Music. He was very active in the musicians' union, even becoming a member of the 802 Union Executive Board during his last eight years in the Philharmonic. Earlier in his career, he played for a short while in the Carnegie Pops Orchestra, Lewisohn Stadium Orchestra, and the Broadway show, My Fair Lady. He took part in the Music for Brass recording (1956, Columbia) with the New York Philharmonic Brass Ensemble, and in other recordings on the Golden Crest and Composers labels.

Ware retired in 1988, and he and wife moved to Whitestone, Virginia, near Chesapeake Bay. His colleagues miss his dry sense of humor, cheerful smile, and positive attitude.

Warwick, [William] Carl ("Bama") (b. Brookside, Alabama, Oct. 27, 1917; d. Dec., 2003 or Jan, 2004). American trumpeter. Warwick grew up in Alabama, but moved to New Jersey in 1930 at age eighteen and acquired the nickname, Bama. He started working almost immediately in various big bands in New York City, playing with Don Redman (1937-39), Dizzy Gillespie, the Mills Blue Rhythm Band, and Bunny Berigan (1937-39). He led an Army band during World War II, and after the war toured with the bands of Woody Herman (1944-45) and Buddy Rich (1946-47).

Warwick moved to California where he led his own band during the 1950s, and played with Lucky Millinder, Brew Moore, and again with Dizzy Gillespie. He recorded with Gillespie in 1961, but returned to New York City during the early 1960s to freelance. He was hired as music director for the New York City Correctional Institution in 1966. Being a light-skinned black, he was sometimes able to get work playing in all-white bands, something that was frowned upon by the musicians' union at the time. He played with Benny Carter's band at the 1973 Newport Jazz Festival, but soon moved into retirement. He was inducted into the Alabama Music Hall of Fame.

Washburn, David ("Dave") (b. Pasadena, California, Nov. 20, 1958). American trumpeter. Washburn studied with Joan LaRue and Rob Roy McGregor, and received his bachelor of music degree in 1980, studying with John Clyman at the University of Southern California. He earned a master of music degree in 1982, studying with Robert Nagel at the New England Conservatory.

Washburn's orchestral experience includes the Hong Kong Philharmonic (1985-87), Redlands Symphony Orchestra (1988-98), New West Symphony Orchestra (1996-2001), and Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra (since 1993). He has also performed as a soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, San Diego Chamber Orchestra (1997 and 2003), Chapman Symphony Orchestra, Burbank Symphony Orchestra (1997), Bach Camerata (1997), Glendale Symphony Orchestra (1997 and 2000), Pasadena Pops Orchestra (1997 and 1998), and the California Philharmonic Orchestra (1998 and 2000). He is currently associate principal trumpet of the Los Angeles Opera Orchestra, and principal of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra. A leading studio player as well, he has recorded soundtracks for many films including All the King's Men, Troy, Deep Impact, The Legend of Zorro, Karate Kid, Avatar, Windtalkers, The Perfect Storm, Titanic, A Beautiful Mind, The Missing, Radio, The Grinch, Holes, and Jungle Book II. His television credits include the CBS News with Katie Couric.

Washburn has taught at California State University-Northridge, Chapman University, Biola University, California State University-Long Beach, Hong Kong Academy, Redlands University, and the University of California-Irvine.

Washburn and his wife Joyce have two sons, Timothy and Nicholas, and two daughters, Samantha, and Julia. His hobbies include boating, hiking, and bicycling.

Watkins, Derek ("Roy") (b. Reading, England, Mar. 2, 1945; d. Esher, Surrey, England, Mar. 22, 2013). British trumpeter and flugelhornist. Watkins came from a musical family of trumpeters going back to his great-grandfather. He learned to play at age six from his father, George Watkins, and soon became a member of the Spring Gardens Brass Band. He later joined his father's dance band, which performed at the Majestic Ballroom in Reading. At age seventeen, he played with the Jack Dorsey Band (1963-65).

Watkins played with Billy Ternent, Ted Heath, John Dankworth (1967), Harry South, Tubby Hayes, Stan Tracey, Clarke-Boland Big Band (in Cologne and Paris), Benny Goodman (1969-70, European tour), Bob Lamb-Ray Premru Orchestra (1971, at the Shaw Theatre), Mike Gibbs, and the Peter Herbolzheimer Rhythm & Brass Combination (Antibes, 1977).

Watkin's career included many studio recording dates in London and in the U.S. (during the 1970s with Louie Bellson, Phil Woods, and Michel Legrand). He backed celebrity artists such as Dizzy Gillespie, Maynard Ferguson, Tom Jones, Barbra Streisand, Frank Sinatra, Lena Horne, Natalie Cole, Oscar Peterson, Elton John, Eric Clapton, Henry Mancini, Leonard Bernstein, Count Basie, and The Beatles (Strawberry Fields Forever and Revolution). He also recorded with the London Symphony Orchestra on movie soundtracks including Goldfinger (at age nineteen), Superman, Superman 2, Mission Impossible, Chicago, Basic Instinct, Gladiator, The Mummy, Bridget Jones's Diary, and Indiana Jones, playing on the soundtracks of all the James Bond films between Dr. No in 1962 (with Denis Egan on trumpet) and The World is Not Enough in 1999. He was also a member of the big bands of Kenny Wheeler, Bert Kaempfer, James Last, and Julian Joseph. As a member of Echoes of Ellington, he was a guest soloist with the Royal Philharmonic.

Among his records are Stardust (as coleader with Warren Vaché), Stars in Brass (in October 1994 with Maurice Murphy and Guy Barker) and "MacArthur Park" with the Cory Band (National BB Championships 2003).

Watkins taught as a visiting professor at the Royal Academy of Music in London, and was lead trumpet with the BBC Big Band. He collaborated with acoustics expert Dr. Richard Smith in producing the Smith-Watkins line of trumpets and cornets in London.

Watkins died at his home from a sarcoma, a rare form of cancer. He was sixty-eight.

Watson, James (b. Market Bosworth, Lincolnshire, England, Sept. 4, 1951; d. London, England, Feb. 6, 2011). British trumpeter and conductor. Watson came from a musical family. He was trained to be a cornet soloist, and by age fifteen won the title of Champion Soloist at a national competition. As a teenager, he played principal cornet in the Destford Colliery Band (1966-67) and City of London Brass Band (1968-72), and studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London with Sidney Ellison (1968-72).

Watson began his orchestral career as principal trumpet of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra (1973-77), succeeding Edgar Howarth, and was a member of the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble (1974-81) which made many recordings and toured the world. He also served as principal of the Covent Garden Orchestra (1983-90) and performed with the London Sinfonietta, Nash Ensemble, and the Black Dyke Mills Band.

Watson did a great deal of studio work, recording numerous movie soundtracks including Star Wars Trilogy, Superman 1-4, Gladiator, and Harry Potter II. He also backed pop and rock artists Elton John, Paul McCartney, and Peter Gabriel. His solo albums include Trumpet Masterpieces (Deux-Elles) and James Watson Trumpet (Doyen). Composer Edward Gregson wrote and dedicated his Trumpet Concerto to Watson.

Watson taught at the Royal Academy of Music in London (1977-2011), as well as the Melos Brass Summer Academy, and served for six years as the artistic director of the National Youth Brass Band of Wales. He was vice president of the National Youth Wind Orchestra of England, and conducted the Black Dyke Mills Band (1992-2000). He was specially honored in 1989 by the RAM and 1997 by the RCM.

Watson was married to Julie Watson with whom he had two sons, William and Thomas. He died of a sudden heart attack at age fifty-nine.

Watson, Richard (b. New York, New York, July 22, 1970). American trumpeter. Watson moved with his family to Danvers, Massachusetts, when he was two years old, and began playing the violin at age four.

He switched to trumpet at age ten, and before college studied with David Dubinsky (Danvers public schools), Robert Elkjer (New England Conservatory Prep School), Robert Pettipaw (NEC Prep.), Russell DeVuyst (Northeast Music Camp), Jesse Levine, Scott Moore (Phillips Academy Summer Session), Daryl Robbins (Walnut Hill School), and Charles Schlueter (Walnut Hill School). A talented high school performer, he performed Manfredini's Concerto in D for Two Trumpets with Timothy Morrison and the Boston Symphony Orchestra. After graduating from Walnut Hill School for the Arts in 1988, he continued studies with Schlueter at NEC, earning a bachelor of music degree in 1992. After college, he spent three summers attending the Tanglewood Music Festival, studying with Roger Voisin. He also studied with Vincent Penzarella and James Pandolfi.

As a freelance musician, Watson has performed and recorded with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston Pops, Albany Symphony Orchestra, Boston Modern Orchestra Project, and Rhode Island Philharmonic. He has been a member of the Boston Philharmonic since 1990 (associate principal trumpet since 2009), and is also principal of the Granite State Symphony Orchestra and the Nashua Symphony. He has produced a solo CD for trumpet and organ titled Hope for the Gnu Music label. Watson teaches trumpet at Salem State University (since 2005), and is a coach for the Boston Youth Symphony Orchestra (since 2004), New England Conservatory Youth Philharmonic Orchestra (since 2002), and Empire State Youth Symphony (since 2003).

Watson and Jacqueline Watson were married in 1999, have a son, William (b. 2006), and reside in Peabody, Massachusetts. Richard's hobbies include yoga and teaching his son to skateboard.

Watters, Ken (b. Huntsville, Alabama, July 6, 1964). American trumpeter and composer. Watters grew up in Huntsville, Alabama. He spent his senior year of high school at the Interlochen Arts Academy (1983). He attended the University of North Texas (1986) and the Manhattan School of Music (1992). He lived in New York City for many years where he performed, toured, or recorded with Frank Sinatra, Natalie Cole, The Platters, Phyllis Diller, TLC, Mingus Big Band, Marc Anthony, Ravi Coltrane, John Abercrombie, Wyclif Jean, Terry Gibbs, Harry Connick Jr., Herbie Mann, Dave Holland, and many others. Among his teachers are Wynton Marsalis, Joe Lovano, Jack Walrath, Dave Liebman, Lew Soloff, Harold Lieberman, Leonard Candelaria, David Berger, Don Jacoby, and Kenny Wheeler.

Watters, along with brother Harry (trombone), have recorded several CDs for the Summit Records label including Brothers, Brothers II, Out of a Dream, The Jungle, Southern Exposure, and RIYEL. Ken performs with the Ken Watters Group. He and his wife Pamela, a professional pastel artist, now live in the Atlanta, Georgia, area.

Watters, Lu[cious] (b. Santa Cruz, California, Dec. 19, 1911; d. Santa Rosa, California, Nov. 5, 1989). American trumpeter. Watters began playing the trumpet at the age of eleven and later attended the St.

Joseph Military Academy. He formed his first jazz band in 1926. During the 1930s, he worked in various swing bands in the San Francisco area, and in the late 1930s, formed a large swing band that was based on Bob Crosby's band.

The new bebop style was not to Watters's liking, so he decided to form a traditional jazz band in the style of the earlier Chicago group, King Oliver's Creole Jazz Band, that utilized two trumpets (Oliver and Louis Armstrong). After various attempts from 1938, the Yerba Buena Jazz Band was created in 1939 and began playing at the Dawn Club, a speakeasy in San Francisco.

Watters was in the Navy from 1942 to 1945 during World War II and formed a twenty piece swing band stationed in Hawaii. In 1946, he returned to the Yerba band, making it one of the most popular groups in the country. The Yerba Buena Jazz Band became very influential in the worldwide traditional jazz revival. Watters was a fine composer and arranger, composing such tunes as Big Bear Stomp, Sage Hen Strut, and Emperor Norton's Hunch.

In 1947, the Yerba band left the Dawn Club and purchased a club in nearby El Cerrito, which it renamed Hambone Kelly's. It became a popular place for jazz lovers and musicians, further promoting the early jazz revival.

In 1950, Watters decided to abandon being a musician. He became a chef at several restaurants and attended college to earn a degree in geology. His knowledge of earthquake faults in California made him a leading lecturer at area colleges and other schools, and in 1963, when PG&E proposed the construction of a nuclear power plant in Bodega Bay on the San Andreas Fault, Watters became an activist against the building of the plant; he played with Turk Murphy's band during several protest rallies, and even composed two tunes for the occasion, Blues Over Bodega and San Andreas Fault; the protest campaign was successful. This was the last time Watters played in public. He died twenty-five years later at the age of seventy-seven.

Weast, Robert D. (b. Waukesha, Wisconsin, Oct. 11, 1929). American trumpeter. Weast began playing the trumpet at age eleven. Although he was mostly self-taught, by age fifteen he was playing hotel ballrooms and resorts throughout the country with touring big bands. Despite his time away from home, he was able to graduate from Waukesha High School in 1947. He was leader of his own band, Bob Weast and His Swingin' Big Band, and later played with several ghost bands, such as those for Jimmy Dorsey, Tommy Dorsey, and Tex Beneke.

Weast attended the University of Wisconsin in Madison from 1948 to 1951 as a music composition major. During his senior year, he transferred to the University of Arizona in Tucson, graduating in 1952. He returned to the University of Wisconsin for graduate studies, earning a master of music composition degree in 1954. He then joined the US Army Band in El Paso, Texas for two years, performing in the concert band and a USO Entertainment show band. In 1956, he accepted a professorship at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, where he taught all brass instruments, composition, theory, music education, conducting, band, jazz, and other subjects until he retired in 1992 after thirty-five years there. During a sabbatical leave in 1966, Weast studied for a year with Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory, where he had the only formal trumpet lessons in his life!

From 1968 to 1973, Weast was chairman of the National Trumpet Symposium hosted by Legh Burns at the University of Denver. He founded The Brass World magazine, the only American periodical devoted exclusively to brass when it began in 1965. (The magazine ceased publishing in 1975.) In addition to the dozens of articles he wrote for the magazine, Weast published the texts, Brass Performance: An Analytical Text (McGinnis & Marx), Keys to Natural Performance (The Brass World), Valuable Repetitions (The Brass World), and Famous Trumpet Players (The Brass World). He also published numerous compositions and arrangements for trumpet, including Sonata for Trumpet and Piano.

During his varied musical career, Weast served as principal trumpet of the Des Moines Symphony Orchestra for twenty years, and as a freelance musician backed dozens of celebrity performers. He was inducted into the Iowa Jazz Hall of Fame in 2008, and received the Drake Medal of Service in 2001. For several years, he served as a clinician and soloist for the firm, F.E. Olds & Son. One of the highlights of his life was playing a solo for Pope John II in Des Moines in front of 350,000 people.

Weast and his wife Janice have been married since 1954, and have two children: Janine (b. 1958) and Karen (b. 1959). His hobbies include beekeeping and raising silk moths. He enjoys writing articles about his hobbies, and remains a very active trumpet performer in the Des Moines area.

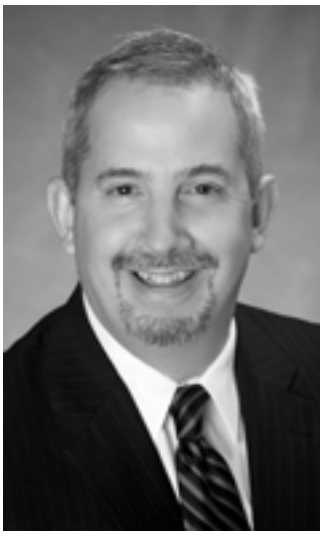
Weast, Wade (b. San Diego, California, Apr. 13, 1963). Weast's early trumpet teachers were Michael Moore, Kenneth Baird, and Grant Cooper. He attended the State University of New York in Fredonia from 1982 to 1985, earning a bachelor of music degree studying with Grant Cooper. He studied with Raymond Mase at the Manhattan School of Music in New York (master of music, 1985-87), and with Ronald Anderson at SUNY-Stony Brook (now Stony Brook University) (DMA, 1988-90). He also attended the Tanglewood Institute and Columbia University.



Weast has performed with the New Haven Symphony, New York City Opera National Touring Company, New York City Ballet, American Symphony Orchestra, Chautauqua Symphony, Buffalo Philharmonic, Buffalo Philharmonic Brass Quintet, National Orchestral Association New Music Project, New Jersey Composers Guild, Erick Hawkins Dance Company, and the rock group, YES. He has taught at SUNY-Fredonia (1993-2003), Mercyhurst College (1997-2000), University of Buffalo (1997), Pennsylvania Governor's School for the Arts (summers 1993 and 1994), Oklahoma Summer Arts Institute, and the Sewanee Summer Music Center. In addition, he has performed in pit orchestras for Broadway shows, and is a former member of the Goldman Memorial Band in New York City and Keith Brion's New Sousa Band. He has recorded a CD titled The Blue and Green Project for the Summit label.

As an arts administrator, Weast was Associate Director of the School of Music at SUNY-Fredonia (1998-2003), Director of the School of Music at the University of South Florida (2003-10), and is currently Dean of Music at the University of North Carolina School of the Arts (since July 2010).

Weast's hobbies include reading, cooking, traveling, bicycling, and raising Chihuahua dogs.

Webb, Gordon Arthur (b. Dunedin, New Zealand, Aug. 9, 1937). New Zealand trumpeter. At age fifteen, Webb played with the New Zealand Symphony Orchestra, and at sixteen played in Queen Alexandra's Band from about 1953 to around 1957. He then studied music in the United States at the Eastman School, The Juilliard School, and the Curtis Institute. He also studied with Armando Ghitalla. From 1964 to 1973, he was principal trumpet of the London Philharmonic Orchestra, toured with the London Symphony Orchestra, and performed with The Virtuosi of London. In the fall of 1974, he moved to Australia where he was principal of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra, and taught at the Sydney Conservatory of Music from 1990 to 1996. Among his best-known students are Brian Evans, Bruce Hellmers, James Blunt, Chris Perrin, Paul Terracini, Paul Goodchild, Josh Claire, Sean Priest, and Martin Phillipson.

Now retired, Webb lives in Thailand. In 2010, he received the International Trumpet Guild's prestigious Award of Merit for outstanding lifetime achievement.

Webster, Frederic ("Freddie") (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Oct. 7, 1916; d. Chicago, Illinois, Apr. 1, 1947). American trumpeter and composer. Webster grew up in Cleveland. He formed his first band when he was a teenager, and later played with Earl Hines (1938) and Erskine Tate (1938) before moving to New York in 1939 where he played with Benny Carter (1939-40), Eddie Durham (1940), Lucky Millinder (1941-42), Jimmy Lunceford (1942-43), Sabby Lewis, and Cab Calloway (1945).

Webster met a talented young trumpeter named John Birks "Dizzy" Gillespie with whom he formed a friendship, and would improvise at Dizzy's apartment after evening concerts. Webster's full, rich sound and ability to play around chords intrigued Gillespie. As they jammed for hours each night, bebop was born. Dizzy once said of Webster that he had the best sound on trumpet since the trumpet was invented...[his sound] was just alive and full of life.

About the time that Webster was becoming well known in New York, a musicians union strike with the recording companies put a temporary freeze on record dates. He didn't start to record until 1945, but the remaining three years of his career (and life) produced several excellent discs that included such tunes as You're Not the Kind with Sarah Vaughan (Musicraft), I Fell for You with Viola Wells (Savoy), If You Could See Me Now with Vaughan (Musicraft), and Reverse the Changes (recorded twice with Vaughan on Musicraft). Webster also composed many songs, including Reverse the Changes.

Webster participated in the first recording by Billy Eckstine's All-Star Band in 1944 (DeLuxe). He was also invited to become trumpet soloist with the Count Basie Orchestra, but when Basie asked him what salary he wanted, his reply was After you've paid the rest of the guys, you and I split 50-50! As a result, Basie never hired Webster again.

Webster died in 1947 while touring with Sonny Stitt's band. Several members of the band, including Stitt, were heroin addicts, and according to Miles Davis's autobiography, Stitt was always bullying the musicians to loan him money for drugs. Supposedly, one of the musicians was fed up with Stitt and laced some heroin with poison that he sold to Stitt, but which Stitt in turn sold to Webster. Webster died at the Strode Hotel in Chicago from a heart attack caused by the poison meant for his bandleader. He was thirty years old.

Webster was a highly gifted trumpeter and jazz player. He was one of the originators of bebop that his admirers Dizzy Gillespie and Miles Davis later developed. In 1942, critic Barry Ulanov wrote, Webster is a real find. He plays with a wonderful sense of structure giving all his choruses and half choruses a decidable beginning, middle and ending. His favorite range is a low register projected with boldness and deepness. He doesn't restrict himself to low notes but makes long scoops from the middle and high registers to the bottom and sails back up. He plays with an easy technique in perfect taste.

Webster, Gerald ("Jerry") B[est] (b. Antioch, California, Jan. 6, 1944). American trumpeter. After graduating from Dixon High School in 1961, Webster attended the University of the Pacific in Stockton, California, but transferred to Indiana University in 1962 where he earned a bachelor of music degree. He received a Ford Foundation Fellowship for graduate studies at IU, earning a master of music degree in 1966 with the highest distinction. From 1966 to 1969, he served in the US Military Academy Band at West Point. His primary teachers were William Hodge, Lloyd Gabbert, Herbert Mueller, Raymond Crisara, Gordon Finley, William Bell, Donald Kneeburg, and Abe Katz. He also studied with Edward Tarr, Louis Davidson, Gerard Schwarz, and Vincent Cichowicz. Webster played with the Hudson Valley Philharmonic (1966-69), Queen's Orchestra (NY), New York Brass Sextet (1966-69), Washington State University Brass Sextet (from 1970), Bob Hope, and Anita Kerr; and freelanced in New York City in Broadway shows such as Mame and Hello Dolly.

Webster joined the Spokane Symphony Orchestra (and Chamber Orchestra) in 1970, staying with the organization until 1977 when he went to Germany to study the Baroque (valveless) trumpet with Dr. Edward H. Tarr. He toured with the Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble from 1979 to 1983, even after returning to Spokane where he played with the Spokane Baroque Consort until 1993.

As an active soloist, Webster has performed concerts in the United States, Germany, Sweden, and Russia. His 1977 solo CD with organ is titled Gabriel's Choice (Pro Organo). He has published two volumes of Method for the Piccolo Trumpet (The Brass Press), as well as Improving Intonation, and When Will the Walls Come Tumbling Down?, which addresses difficulties women have experienced in the brass world. He has also published over thirty editions of music through Hoyt Editions in Seattle.

Webster's teaching career includes Western Illinois University (1976), Washington State University (three years), and Portland State University (beginning in 1994, but now retired).

Webster, Paul Frank [Francis] (b. Kansas City, Missouri, Aug. 24, 1909; d. New York, May 6, 1966). Webster learned to play the trumpet from his Uncle Sam Ford, and later attended Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee. While in college, he studied to become an embalmer, although he played on the side with a Memphis-based jazz combo known as the Boston Serenaders. He also played in Kansas City with George E. Lee (1930-31), Bennie Moten (1927-30), Jap Allen (1931), Tommy Douglas (c1931), and Eli Rice (1931, 1933-34). By the time he graduated, music had become his primary focus and he became a fulltime performer.

In 1931, Webster played for a short while with Jimmy Lunceford's orchestra and returned to Lunceford's band as a specialty high note artist from 1933 to 1944. His sound transformed the brass section and influenced many younger bandleaders such as Stan Kenton. After leaving Lunceford to play lead trumpet with Cab Calloway (on and off, 1944-47), Webster became a prominent scream trumpeter with later groups such as those led by Charlie Barnet (1946-47 and 1952-53), Sy Oliver (1947), Ed Wilcox (1948-49), Count Basie (1950), and Pérez Prado. However, lung disease diminished his playing ability starting in 1953, and he became a part-time trumpeter, although he managed to play as an occasional guest with Sy Oliver's band into the 1960s. He spent his last few years working for the US Immigration Service in New York. Compact discs of Webster's playing with Lunceford's band include Stomp It Off and For Dancers Only, both on GRP/Decca.

Webster, Roger B[arry] (b. Doncaster, Yorkshire, England, Dec. 16, 1960). British cornetist. Webster was raised in Brierly, England. He began playing the piano at age six, and at age ten, switched to cornet and played in a few top junior brass bands. Because cornet playing was his hobby, he became a laboratory technician and a coal miner before joining the famed Black Dyke Mills Brass Band as solo cornetist in 1988 when he decided to make music his career.

After playing in the Black Dyke organization for five years, Webster studied cornet with Alec Garbutt at the University of Leeds (1993-96), earning a bachelor of music degree. He later received a master of music degree and a PhD in psychology from the University of Leeds. He mainly toured worldwide as a cornet soloist during the late 1990s, but again joined the Black Dyke band in 2000. He has recorded solo CDs for the Polyphonic label, including Twilight Dreams, Pieces, Bandsman's Choice, Webster's Choice, and Passport—A Musical Journey, and has performed as a guest soloist on over twenty other recordings. More recently, he has been principal cornet of the Grimethorpe Colliery Band, and often plays with the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra. He is a professor at the Royal Northern College of Music, Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Dance, and the University of Leeds. He also lectures at the University of Leeds on performance psychology. He wrote a book titled Webster's PPP.

Webster is involved in designing cornets, and has codesigned a nontoxic valve oil called Eco-Lube.

Wecke, Conrad (b. Görlitz, Germany, May 14, 1976). German trumpeter. Wecke took trumpet lessons with Holger Gruhna Horka in his hometown of Görlitz. From 1989 to 1995, he studied with Günter Wilpert at the Sächsische Spezialschule für Musik in Dresden, and in 1993 won first prize in the national youth solo competition, "Jugend musiziert." From 1996 to 1998, he earned an undergraduate degree, studying with Peter Lohse at the Dresden Musikhochschule. Graduate work was with Peter-Michael Krämer at the Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy Musikhochschule in Leipzig (1998-2002).

Wecke has been a member of the Oberlausitzer Brass Band, and is a founding member of the Elbländer Blasmusikanten. In 2000, he substituted in the Jena Philharmonic, and often played with the Orchestra of the Saxon State Opera in Dresden, MDR Symphony Orchestra in Leipzig, and the Dresden Philharmonic. Since 2001, he has been principal trumpet of the Robert Schumann Philharmonic Orchestra in Chemnitz.

Weeks, Larry (b. Grand Rapids, Michigan, Oct. 6, 1947; d. Guelph, Canada, Sept. 13, 1997). American trumpeter. Weeks graduated from the Interlochen Arts Academy in 1966, and from the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia in 1971. He was a member of the Philadelphia Orchestra for a short while before becoming associate principal trumpet of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra (Canada) in 1976; he was promoted to principal in 1983. He taught at the University of Toronto, University of Western Ontario, and the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto. He had frequent soloistic performances, but was best known for his fiftieth appearance with his orchestra in "The Trumpet Shall Sound" from Handel's Messiah already in 1995.

Weeks was a licensed pilot and flight instructor. He was flying a new high performance single engine plane when the engine began having problems. He tried to land at the Brompton airfield, but the engine quit completely, the plane spun out of control and crashed, and he was killed instantly. He was forty-nine. The Toronto Symphony Orchestra performed Mahler's Symphony No. 8 in his memory.

Weichbrodt, Fritz (b. Lauenburg, Pomerania, Germany, July 17, 1919; d. Neu-Ehrenfeld, Germany, May 13, 2001). German trumpeter. Weichbrodt was a well-known ballad trumpeter, and began his career with various big bands, including that of Max Greger (1951-55), with whom he recorded the hit tunes Alabama Blues and Es wird immer wieder Tag (the latter the theme song of a film with the same name).

He toured Spain and Africa with Freddie Brocksieper and Lutz Templin, and was a soloist with the Kurt Edelhagen Orchestra in Cologne (1957-69). His fame stemmed mostly from his many single disc recordings of dance ballads with Edelhagen.

Weichbrodt played on various film soundtracks with the symphony orchestra conducted by Kurt Graunke. During the 1970s, he played with the bands of Adalbert Luczkowski, Werner Müller, Klaus Doldinger, James Last, and Sammy Davis Jr. Two of his LPs are Trumpet Classics (Hamilton) and Nabucco Melody (Vogue), which are actually the same recording.

Weidinger, Anton (b. Vienna, Austria, June 9, 1766; d. Vienna, Austria, Sept. 20, 1852). Austrian trumpeter. Weidinger was a student of Peter Neuhold, and was released early from apprenticeship on September 18, 1785. Neuhold said, Through good conduct and his own diligence he reduced his period of apprenticeship and became so skilled that he can give satisfaction not only in military service in the field, but also at great courts, wherever.

After apprenticeship, Weidinger was employed as a field trumpeter in Prince Adam Czartorisky's cuirassier regiment and left this service in July of 1787. In October of that year, he entered the dragoon regiment of Archduke Joseph of Tuscany and permanently left military service in April 1792.

Weidinger's concert career then began as a member of the Royal Imperial Theater orchestra in Vienna from 1792 to April 16, 1796. He was then in waiting for a court trumpeter's position until his installation on February 1, 1799, remaining until his retirement on August 1, 1819. He also performed in Haydn's orchestra at the Imperial Royal Court of the Esterhazy family just outside of Vienna. He married to Susanna Zeiss, herself a daughter of another court trumpeter, on February 6, 1797, with his close friend Haydn as one of the witnesses. He had two sons, Joseph, (1801-32), and Ferdinand (1818-95); they became a Landschaftstrompeter in Lower Austria and an Imperial timpanist, respectively.

Weidinger is widely credited with being the inventor of the keyed trumpet, an instrument with saxophone-like keys on its bell that could render the instrument chromatic. Although it's uncertain whether he was the actual inventor, he was indeed the greatest virtuoso of this instrument. Several highly significant concertos were written for Weidinger, including Franz Joseph Haydn's famous Concerto in E-flat (1796), Johann Nepomuk Hummel's Concerto in E (1803), as well as works by Kozeluch, Weigl, Neukomm, and others. In addition, Hummel composed a Trio Concertante for pianoforte, violin, and keyed trumpet which has not been discovered in our time. Its performance by Weidinger received a favorable review in a Vienna newspaper. Audiences and critics praised Weidinger for his masterful playing and newly invented instrument. In 1802, at the height of his career, a critic of the AMZ newspaper in Leipzig wrote a review of the trio as follows (translated): The Imperial Royal Court Trumpeter, Mr. Weidinger, of Vienna, gave us the opportunity of judging for ourselves his significant invention concerning the perfection of the trumpet...and at the same time of admiring his masterful playing. It is completely founded in fact that Mr. W. is fully conversant with all the half-tones lying within the compass of his instrument, and to such an extent that he plays running passages through them. Furthermore, the fear that we uttered...that this instrument might thereby have lost something of its pompous character, has been completely refuted by [his] public demonstrations. The instrument still possesses its full, penetrating tone, which is at the same time so gentle and delicate that not even a clarinet is capable of playing more mellowly...His crescendo, his diminuendo, his clear high register which penetrates to the very marrow...are truly incomparable and—in the literal sense of the word—unheard of. [It should be noted that Hummel's famous trumpet concerto has recently been reconstructed for the same instrumentation as the trio, but the original manuscript of the trio remains lost.]

In 1803, Weidinger embarked on a lengthy concert tour through Germany, England, and France. Upon his return, Hummel gave him the *Concerto in E, which he had only one month to learn for its premiere in Vienna on New Year's Day, 1804. Weidinger continued his solo performances and often featured his son, who played a keyed horn of Weidinger's own design. At he Vienna Congress on January 21, 1815, Anton Weidinger played a keyed trumpet part in a Requiem composed by Sigismund Neukomm, a performance that made Weidinger popular again. By 1819, however, audiences were not so interested in the keyed instruments any longer, and Weidinger played to half full halls. In 1829, Weidinger introduced a new and improved keyed trumpet, but without success. Weidinger returned to the Esterhazy orchestra and worked there until his retirement in 1850. He died two years later.

Although Weidinger was praised for his performances on the keyed trumpet, not everyone was pleased with the instrument when played by others. Felix Mendelssohn, in a letter dated February 14, 1831 said, All trumpeters here [in Italy at the time] play on those cursed keyed trumpets, which seem to me like a beautiful woman with a beard—or a man with a bosom—they don't even have the chromatic notes, and sound like a castrato trumpet, so weak and unnatural! (from 2009 edition of Hummel Concerto by Michael Kube, Breitkopf and Härtel).

Weinschenk, [Christian] Ferdinand (b. Ritteburg, Germany, Nov. 4, 1831; d. Leipzig, Germany, Jan. 29, 1910). German trumpeter. Weinschenk worked for several years with music director L. Schlenstedt in Sulza, and learned to play trumpet and cornet from the famous Ernst Sachse in Weimar. Weinschenk became a leading performer, and beginning in 1884, was the soloist in the opera, Der Trompeter von Säckingen, hundreds of times, over fifty times in the first year alone. He became principal trumpet of the Gewandhausorchester Leipzig in 1861, a position he held until 1899. He was one of the first to perform Bach's Mass in B Minor and other difficult Baroque works on the modern D trumpet. From 1882 until 1907, he was professor of trumpet at the Leipzig Conservatory (the very first trumpet teacher at this conservatory). His most famous pupil was the "infallible" Eduard Seifert, later principal trumpet in Dresden. Oskar Böhme, the Russian cornetist and composer, dedicated his Trumpet Concerto in E Minor to Weinschenk in 1907, reflecting a positive relationship between the two men, although it is not clear whether Böhme, as a composition major at the conservatory, studied with Weinschenk.

Weis, Theodore M. (b. c1920; d. Englewood, New Jersey, Feb. 14, 1987). American trumpeter. Weis was one of the leading freelance trumpeters in New York during the 1940s-70s. He was a founding member of the American Brass Quintet, and participated with Robert Nagel (trumpet) in several recordings of chamber works by Stravinsky with the composer conducting. He played first trumpet in the New York Chamber Symphony of the 92nd Street Y, American Symphony Orchestra, New York City Opera, and New York City Ballet (1964). He was also a member of the Burke-Phillips All-Star Concert Band.

Weis can be heard on Stravinsky's L'Histoire du Soldat conducted by Leopold Stokowski (Vanguard) and on Peter Schickele's Portrait of P.D.Q. Bach (Vanguard). Among the many other recordings he took part in are: Roger Voisin, Music for Trumpet and Orchestra, vol. 3, work by Altenburg (Kapp 9050); New York Brass Ensemble, with Robert Nagel and John Glasel, Three Italian Masques by Franchetti (CRI 125); Giovanni Gabrieli: Sacrae Symphoniae, conducted by Samuel Baron, with Robert Nagel, John Ware, Mel Broiles, Carl Fornarotto, Wilfred "Bob" Roberts, and John Glasel (Period LP 734); Seven Canzonas of Giovanni Gabrieli, conducted by Baron, with Armando Ghitalla, E. Sadowski, John Ware (Counterpoint/Esoteric LP 503), Columbia Brass & Percussion Ensemble, conducted by Maurice Peress in 1972, with E. Power Biggs on organ (Columbia LP 31193).

Weis and his wife Marie, had a son, Theodore Weis Jr., who died of a heart attack.

Weiss, David (b. Queens, New York, Oct. 21, 1964). American trumpeter, composer, and arranger. Weiss grew up in Queens and as a boy was interested in photography. He studied photography at the California Institute for the Arts for a few months but became interested in music. He returned to New York and took a course at The Creative Music Studio in Woodstock and took cornet lessons from John McNeil and Carmine Caruso. He learned jazz in the style of Don Cherry and then entered North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) as a jazz major, but quickly found that his style of playing and technical ability was behind that of his fellow students. Considered to be a late bloomer, Weiss soon developed his skills and graduated in 1986. He then returned to New York and studied with Tommy Turrentine and Bill Hardman. He also took Barry Harris's weekly jazz workshops. Soon, he was playing trumpet with Jaki Byard, Frank Foster, Jimmy Heath, Junior Cook, and Winard Harper. He later toured with Freddie Hubbard and Ray Charles.

Weiss is a self-taught composer and arranger. He helped write music for the NBC series The Cosby Mysteries, and arranged a great deal of music for leading jazz musicians including Freddie Hubbard. In 1990, with sax player Craig Handy, he co-led a band that performed regularly in clubs around New York City. In addition to recording with Freddie Hubbard, Bob Belden, Michel Blaise, Bop City, and Tom Harrell, Weiss led three recording sessions that produced the albums Breathing Room (Fresh Sound New Talent label), The Mirror (F. S. N. T.), and Point of Departure (Sunnyside), named after his new group. In 1996, he formed an additional group consisting of eight leading composer/performers called the New Jazz Composers Octet that has released two critically acclaimed albums for Fresh Sound, First Steps Into Reality and Walkin' the Line. He also performs in the Charles Tolliver Big Band.

Weiss, Kurt (b. Wilmington, Delaware, Nov. 21, 1961). American trumpeter. Weiss received his high school diploma studying with Raymond Mase at the North Carolina School for the Arts in 1980 before receiving a bachelor of music degree studying with Charles Geyer at the Eastman School of Music from 1980 to 1984. He then became a graduate teaching assistant in jazz at the Cincinnati College Conservatory of Music (1985-87) where he earned a master of music degree.

Weiss's professional career includes performing with the Glenn Miller Orchestra (1989-2001), Artie Shaw Orchestra (1991-92), Ray Charles Orchestra (1993-95), Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra (1996-2001), Aretha Franklin (1997-2001), Toshiko Akiyoshi (2001), Steve Grossman, Donna Summer, Rosemary Clooney, Bobby Short, Natalie Cole, Mel Tormé, Maria Schneider, Mario Bauzá, Andor Lukács's Jazz Band (2006), Bert van Erk, Noordpool Orkest, and the Holland Big Band. He has performed in over forty countries and is a skilled composer. Since 2001, he has been professor of trumpet, big band, and arranging at the Northern Netherlands Conservatory in Gronigen.

Weldon, Alfred Frederick (b. Hartford, Connecticut, June 14, 1862; d. Chicago, Illinois, May 5, 1914). American cornetist. Weldon's family moved to Chicago when he was twelve years old. It is reported that he studied cornet with Matthew Arbuckle and D.W. Reeves. He made excellent progress, and soon became a conductor and cornet soloist. His first playing job was with the Columbia Theatre in Chicago.

By the age of twenty-six, Weldon was one of the foremost musicians in Chicago. He took the Chicago Commandery Band, a leading professional group, to the St. Louis Conclave in 1888, and was the bandmaster of the Second Regiment Band of Chicago (often referred to as Weldon's Band) throughout the 1890s. He took the Second Regiment Band to state fairs in the Midwest and to New Orleans in 1900, while continuing to play in theatre orchestras in Chicago. He also conducted the First Brigade Band of Chicago.

Weldon composed several cornet solos with band accompaniment, the best known being Creanonian Polka (dedicated to Steve Crean), Cascade Polka, Coquette Polka, Elsie, Mon Ami, North Star Polka, Edelweiss Polka, and Souvenir Polka. He also composed band music including The First Brigade March and The Gate City March, which were published by his own music publishing business. As a player, he was a local favorite; one of his students, Jerry Cimera, said of him, He was a great cornet player, his tone the best. His vibrato made his tone beautiful, and of course he was a great teacher.

Weldon was the most noted brass teacher in the Midwest; he taught all of the brass instruments, and served on the faculties of the Chicago Music College and the Siegel-Myers School of Music in Chicago. He also established his own school at his home, which included a residence, school, and studios. The demand for his teaching became so great that he started the Weldon's Correspondence Course for Cornet. He published his famous Weldon Method for brass, which was widely used. He taught hundreds of students including Bohumir Kryl, H.A. VanderCook, Albert Cook, Frank Martin, Gardell Simons, and Charles Randall.

In 1910, Weldon sold his residence and school to H.A. VanderCook, and retired. VanderCook continued teaching Weldon's method, and renamed the school the VanderCook Cornet School that is today the VanderCook College of Music. Weldon died from cerebral apoplexy (stroke) at his home at the age of fifty-one. At his funeral, a one-hundred-piece band played the dirge, His Last Word. His body is buried at the Forest Home Cemetery in Chicago.

Welsh, Alex (b. Edinburgh, Scotland, July 9, 1929; d. Middlesex, England, June 25, 1982). Scottish trumpeter, singer, and bandleader. Welsh started on accordion but took up the cornet during high school. He then switched to trumpet and played with the teenage group, the Leith Silver Band. In 1951, he joined Archie Semple's Capital Jazz Band and later played with Sandy Brown's Blue Five (1953).

Welsh moved to London in 1954 and soon started his own band. It wasn't long before he discovered that his niche was in traditional jazz. His Dixieland-style music was broadcasted on London radio and he began to record in 1954 and '55. He turned down an offer to join Jack Teagarden's swing band in 1957.

During the late 1950s and 1960s, Welsh's band was the leading traditional jazz group in England. They often accompanied guest jazz soloists from America, including Red Allen (1964), Rex Stewart (1966), Ruby Braff (Newport, 1968), Wild Bill Davison (1967), Bud Freeman, Pee Wee Russell, Earl Hines, Dicky Wells, Ben Webster, Peanuts Hucko, and Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. They also recorded with Davison and Braff. The band appeared at international festivals including the 1967 Antibes Jazz Festival, 1968 Newport Jazz Festival, and the 1978 Nice Jazz Festival.

Poor health began to slow down Welsh's lifestyle during the 1970s but he continued playing until his death in 1982 at the age of fifty-two. During his career, he had four hit-single recordings, The Melrose Folio (Columbia), Strike One (Strike One), Echoes of Chicago (Columbia), and Vintage '69 (Columbia). His LP albums include Music of the Mauve Decade (Columbia), It's Right Here for You (Columbia), At Home with Alex Welsh (Dormouse), and If I Had a Talking Picture of You (Black Lion). He recorded for other record labels including Lake, Decca, Strike, Polydor, and Nixa. BBC commissioned the 1990s Lemonade King, a thirty-minute video documentary on the life of Alex Welsh.

Wendholt, Scott (b. Patuxant River, Maryland, July 21, 1965). American trumpeter. Wendholt grew up in Denver, Colorado. He began playing the trumpet in third grade. He attended Indiana University where he studied trumpet with Allan Dean and jazz with David Baker (1983-87). After graduating, he moved to Cincinnati, Ohio, and worked as a jazz musician for two years before settling in New York City in 1989. Wendholt is a hard bop player in the style of Miles Davis, Freddie Hubbard, and Woody Shaw.

Since moving to New York, Wendholt has performed with the Carnegie Hall Jazz Band, Vanguard Jazz Orchestra, and the Mingus Big Band. He has also performed with Maria Schneider, Toshiko Akiyoshi, Bob Mintzer, Vincent Herring, Don Braden, Louie Bellson, Woody Herman, Kevin Hays, Bruce Barth, Fred Hersch, Joe Herring, Daryl Grant, Roberta Piket, Bobby McFerrin, Joanne Brackeen, Bob Montgomery, and many others. He has played on over sixty CDs, including his own The Scheme of Things (Criss Cross), Through the Shadows (Criss Cross), From Now On (Criss Cross), Beyond Thursday (Double-Time), What Goes Unsaid (Double-Time), In Focus (Enja, with the Bruce Barth Quintet), and CrossRoad (Steeplechase, with the Kevin Hays Quintet).

Wendholt has toured the U.S., Europe, Japan, Scandinavia, and South America. He is on the faculty of the Manhattan School of Music, and teaches at the Jamey Aebersold summer jazz camps.

Wendling, Charlotte (b. Neunkirchen, Germany, June 20, 1953). German trumpeter. Wendling studied with Willi Thorn at the Saarbrücken Music School. She and her brother, Jürgen, formed a trumpet duo, which won four national competitions for young musicians, "Jugend musiziert," after which they performed together throughout Europe, Asia, America, and Australia, releasing several popular recordings including Unser Lied für Dich, Euro Melodies, Trumpet Melodies, and 2 Happy Trumpets. They are currently touring with a show titled Magic Trumpet.

Wendling, Jürgen (b. Neunkirchen, Germany, Aug. 23, 1955). German trumpeter. Wendling studied with Willi Thorn at the Saarbrücken Music School, and later with the famous Adolf Scherbaum in Saarbrücken. Along with his older sister Charlotte, Wendling formed the duo, Charlotte and Jürgen Wendling, which won four young talent shows, "Jugend musiziert." Their duo has since become a leading pop group in Germany, and has toured Europe, America, Asia, and Australia.

Wendling composed or arranged most of the music for albums such as Euro Melodies, 2 Happy Trumpets, Trumpet Melodies, and Unser Lied für Dich, and he also makes arrangements for colleagues. The duo's CDs were recorded in their own sound studio. He and Charlotte are currently touring with their show, Magic Trumpet.

Wenke, Otto (b. Sotterhausen, Sachsen-Anhalt, Germany, May 20, 1920). German trumpeter. Wenke began playing trumpet at the relatively late age of sixteen, but learned very quickly. After World War II, he played in dance bands at American military clubs in Garmish-Partenkirchen and Frankfurt. In March 1948, he began his long and distinguished career as principal trumpet of the City Opera and Museum Orchestra in Frankfurt, a position he retained until his retirement in 1983. Concurrently, he played for twenty-five years as a steady extra with the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra. He was given the title of Chamber Musician by the City of Frankfurt in 1955. He taught at the Hochschule für Musik in Frankfurt from 1960 to 1990 (professor in 1965), and also at Dr. Hoch's Conservatory in that city..

Werner, Friedrich ("Fritz") (b. Berlin, Germany, Mar. 1, 1871; d. Eichberg [near Erbach], Germany, Apr. 10, 1916). German cornetist. Werner was a cornet virtuoso who was first a soloist in 1895-96 in Karl Meyder's orchestra in the Berlin Konzert-Haus and then played in the Wiesbaden State Theatre Orchestra. He composed 40 Etudes for Trumpet and Cornet, and several composers wrote solos for him, including Concert-Fantasie in E-flat Minor by Gustav Cords, and Slavische Fantasie by Carl Höhne. Werner was the teacher of Vincent Bach (born Vincenz Schrotenbach) for half a year before Bach emigrated to the New World..

Wesenigk, Fritz (b. Kleinkrausnigk, Niederlausitz, Germany, Apr. 24, 1923; d. Mar. 7, 2009). German trumpeter. After finishing school in 1940, Wesenigk joined the military as a member of the trumpet choir of the Cavalry School in Potsdam. In 1946, after his service years, he studied with Karl Nierenz in Berlin and after his service years, became a music instructor near Berlin. He soon became principal for a season in the Berlin Symphony Orchestra, and afterwards played principal trumpet in the Berlin State Opera Orchestra "Unter den Linden" (1947-51). He also taught at the Berlin Municipal Conservatory from 1948 to 1950. Further teaching positions were at the Hochschule für Musik in East Berlin (1950-51) and West Berlin (1961-91), where he was appointed professor in 1964. He became a member of the Berlin Chamber Virtuosi in 1962. He was principal of the Berlin Philharmonic from 1951-74. One of his best-known students is Konradin Groth, who served as principal of the Berlin Philharmonic when Wesenigk retired in 1974.

West, James ("Jim") R. (b. East Chicago, Indiana, Nov. 30, 1946). American trumpeter. While growing up in East Chicago, Indiana, West began playing French horn at an early age, but switched to trumpet during seventh grade. His trumpet teacher was Bob Rzonka. After graduating from East Chicago Washington High School in 1964, he attended the VanderCook College of Music where he studied with Forrest L. Buchtel and Renold Schilke. He transferred to the American Conservatory of Music where he received bachelor of music and bachelor of music education degrees in 1969, studying with Charles Geyer. He accepted a job at Arkansas Polytechnic College in 1969, and earned his master of music degree at Northwestern University as a student of Vincent Cichowicz in 1972. He then accepted a position at the University of New Hampshire teaching brass instruments.

West joined the faculty at Louisiana State University in 1978, and is a member of the LSU Brass Quintet and Norem Faculty Brass Quintet. He is principal trumpet of the Baton Rouge Symphony Orchestra. He has also performed with the Acadiana Brass Quintet, New Hyperion Oriental Foxtrot Orchestra, and the Mos Eisley Chamber Orchestra. For many summers, he taught at the Blue Lake Fine Arts Camp in Twin Lake, Michigan. He served as editor of the "Trumpet in the Symphony Orchestra" column of the International Trumpet Guild Journal, and hosted the 1991 International Trumpet Guild Conference at LSU. West is also an active clinician who has lectured at numerous ITG conferences. He is retiring from LSU at the end of the 2012-13 academic year.

West and Annette Albert West, band director at University Lab School, have been married since 1988, and have a daughter, Kathryn (b. 1990).

Wetzel, Ray (b. Parkersburg, West Virginia, Sept. 22, 1924; d. Sedgwick, Colorado, Aug. 17, 1951). American trumpeter. Little is known about Wetzel's early life, but his career began with Teddy Powell (1942). He studied under Ernest Williams.

Wetzel made his name with Woody Herman's band (1943-45) and then with the Stan Kenton Orchestra (1945-48). He was a solid high note trumpeter who mostly played lead.

Wetzel recorded with Vido Musso, Eddie Safranski, Neal Hefti, and the Metronome All-Stars that consisted of a few players from Kenton's band, but he never recorded as leader. His solo playing is well represented in Over the Rainbow (1949). Also in 1949, he played in Charlie Barnet's incredible trumpet section that included Maynard Ferguson, Doc Severinsen, and Rolf Ericson. In the same year, he married bassist Bonnie Addleman.

In 1950, the Wetzels played with Henry Jerome and in Los Angeles with Tommy Dorsey. In 1951, they played again with Kenton, but later that year returned to the Dorsey orchestra. While on tour with Dorsey in Sedgewick, Colorado, Ray Wetzel died in an automobile accident, ending his brilliant career at the age of twenty-six.

Wetzel might have been another legendary lead player such as Ferguson, Brisbois, or Severinsen had he had more time to develop his career and reputation. He was an arranger for the Kenton band and also composed the Kenton tune, Intermission Riff.

Wetzel, Richard ("Rich") A. (b. Huntington Park, California, Dec. 11, 1961). American trumpeter and bandleader. Wetzel grew up in Garden Grove, California, near Los Angeles. He began playing trumpet at age eleven, and was self-taught until high school when he took two years of lessons from the well-known lead player, Walt Johnson. He played in The Velvet Knights drum and bugle corps in Anaheim, and later the Sacramento Freelancers corps. After graduating from Bolsa Grande High School in Garden Grove (1980), Wetzel went into the Army bands program and toured all over Europe. He then attended Orange Coast College in Costa Mesa, and California State University Long Beach where he studied with Burnette Dillon and Bob Valle. He also had occasional coaching from trumpeters and friends Bobby Shew, Wayne Bergeron, Roger Ingram, and Arturo Sandoval. Over the years, he has played on cruise ships and in various road bands, and played lead trumpet and contracted horn sections for groups and artists such as the Four Tops, The Spinners, The Temptations, The Coasters, The Platters, The Ojays, Wayne Newton, Charo, El Chicano, Al Martino, the Si Zentner Big Band, Smokey Robinson, the Marvelles, and others.

Wetzel moved from California to Tacoma, Washington, in 1991. In 2000, he formed his own band called Rich Wetzel's Groovin' Higher Jazz Orchestra, which has become very active. He remains a busy freelance performer, touring artist, and clinician. He is married to Starr Wetzel, a flute player, singer, and artist. His hobbies include running, lifting weights, swimming, and softball.

Weyerer, Franz (b. Munich, Germany, Aug. 16, 1959). German trumpeter. Weyerer began playing piano, but switched to trumpet while still a boy. He studied music at the Richard Strauss Conservatory in Munich (1975-78) and with Paul Lachenmeir at the Munich Musikhochschule (1980-83). His career began by playing in various casino bands in Monte Carlo, backing celebrity musicians such as Frank Sinatra, Sarah Vaughan, Sammy Davis Jr., and Michel Legrand. He soon played with the big bands of Peter Herbolzheimer, Harald Rüschenbaum, Al Porcino, and Bobby Burgess, as well as with the Vienna Art Orchestra. Since the 1990s, he has been a featured soloist with the Munich Jazz Orchestra, Thilo Wolf Big Band, and the Upper Austrian Jazz Orchestra (in Canada). He has also recorded and performed extensively with his own jazz quintet and various other small formations. Weyerer has toured with numerous Broadway shows including West Side Story, Anatovka, Can Can, and Cats.

Wheeler, ("Kenny") [Kenneth Vincent John] (b. Toronto, Ontario, Canada, Jan. 14, 1930). Canadian trumpeter and flugelhornist. Wheeler grew up in St. Catharines, Ontario, and began playing the cornet at age twelve. His father was a semiprofessional trombonist. Kenny learned music with Ross McClanathan and took harmony lessons at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto in 1950 but dropped out after one semester, never having been officially enrolled as a student. The following year, he attended McGill University as a music education major (one semester) but decided that teaching in the public schools was not what he wanted for a career. In 1952, he applied for a United States visa but was denied. He then moved to England and began working with various dance bands and jazz groups. He soon played with some of the leading performers, including Roy Fox (1953), Carl Barriteau (1954), Buddy Featherstonhaugh (1967-57), Vic Lewis (1958-59), Woody Herman (1959), the Clarke-Boland Orchestra, Friedrich Guida, and Johnny Dankworth (1959-65), with the latter as a main soloist. He began developing his skills as a composer and arranger with the Dankworth band, and, for the Fontana label, they released an all-Wheeler album titled Windmill Tilter that brought him great notoriety. He also did a great deal of studio work in London, but found this type of playing musically unsatisfying.

During the mid 1960s, Wheeler's style of playing gradually shifted from bop to avant-garde. He worked with Tubby Hayes, Joe Harriott, Ronnie Scott, Mike Gibbs, John Stevens (1966-70), Tony Oxley (1969-72), the Globe Unity Orchestra (starting in 1972), Anthony Braxton Quartet (1972-76), John Taylor's trio—Azimuth, John Surman, George Adams (1979), Hans Koller's International Brass Company (Frankfurt, 1980, with Ack Van Rooyen), Markus Stockhausen, Ack Van Rooyen (1980), Dave Holland, the United Jazz & Rock Ensemble, Jean-Louis Chautemps (1988), and Lee Konitz (1996). He began releasing a steady string of solo albums that now total over twenty, including Gnu High (ECM), Deer Wan (ECM), Around 6 (ECM), Double Double You (ECM), Flutter By Butterfly (Soul Note), Music for Large and Small Ensemble (ECM), *The Widow in the Window (*ECM), Live (Bluebird), Jumpin' In (ECM), Seeds of Time (ECM), The Razor's Edge (ECM), Still Waters (Hornblower), A Long Time Ago (ECM), All the More (Soul Note), Live at the Montreal Bistro (Justin Time), Siren's Song (Justin Time), Touché (Justin Time), Angel Song (ECM), California Daydream (Musicdisc), Song for Someone (Incus), Welcome (Soul Note), Visions (Justin Time), and Kayak (Ah Um).

Wheeler's favorite trumpeters are Miles Davis, (early) Dizzy Gillespie, and Booker Little. He enjoys teaching and has served on the summer faculty of the Banff Centre of the Arts in Canada for fifteen years. He has composed over one hundred works and is one of the most respected jazz artists in the world. A soft-spoken and humble man, Wheeler continues to make his home in England.

Whetsol, Artie [Arthur Parker Schiefe] (b. Punta Gorda, Florida, Oct. 15, 1905; d. New York, New York, Jan. 5, 1940). American trumpeter. Born Arthur Parker Schiefe, Whetsol assumed his mother's maiden name. He grew up in Washington, D.C. and was a childhood friend of Duke Ellington. He played with Ellington as early as 1920 and worked in the D.C. area with Claude Hopkins, Elmer Snowden, and the White Brothers Orchestra.

In 1923, Ellington invited Whetsol to join him in New York City in a newly formed group called the Washingtonians. After a few months, Whetsol left the band and began studying medicine at Howard University. (Bubber Miley took his spot in the Ellington band.) In March 1928, Whetsol returned to what was now Ellington's "jungle band." Ellington often featured Whetsol's lyrical playing, especially in slow numbers such as Mood Indigo and Black Beauty (the "mood" part of the Ellington repertory). Classically trained, Whetsol was a good sweet soloist and lead player in the Ellington band, leaving the hot stuff to Bubber Miley and then Cootie Williams (the "jungle" part of the Ellington repertory). It was Whetsol that played the wa-wa effects with the Harmon mute in the film Black and Tan by Dudley Murphy (1929) featuring Duke Ellington. He can also be seen in the films Check and Double Check (1930) and Symphony in Black (1935).

Whetsol played in Ellington's band until the summer of 1936 when a brain disease made trumpet playing difficult. Despite several attempts to return to music, Whetsol was unable to regain his trumpet skills. He died prior to reaching his thirty-fifth birthday.

Whitaker, Donald R. (b. c1930). American trumpeter. Whitaker spent most of his career as professor of trumpet at the University of Wisconsin in Madison (1959-81). He was the third president of the International Trumpet Guild (1979-81) and host of the annual ITG conference in 1978 at UW-M. He studied at Northwestern University (1950-51) and the Eastman School. He played with the Chicago Lyric Opera (1954-57), Schubert Theatre (Chicago, 1957-59), and in the Madison Symphony Orchestra and Madison Brass Quintet.

Whitaker's playing career was brought to an abrupt halt after he suffered a horrific bicycle accident in 1977. While coasting down a long and steep hill, his front wheel locked when a long bolt holding a headlight fell between the spokes and frame. The accident caused every bone in his face to be shattered. The severe tissue damage to his head and face nearly killed him, but his wife Marci, a medical doctor and cancer specialist who was riding next to him, was able to render enough first aid to keep him alive until he was taken to a nearby hospital.

After healing from the accident, Whitaker retired in 1981. He and his wife purchased a large home and estate in 1977 that was once a country club near Milwaukee, where they remain today. Whitaker devotes much of his time to teaching CPR and first aid for the Red Cross, American Heart Association, and National Ski Patrol. He also enjoys bowling, lawn bowling, golf, and playing bridge. He is on the advisory board of Summit Brass.

Whitaker, Liesl M. (b. Chicago, Illinois, June 4, 1969). American trumpeter. Whitaker hails from Burlington, North Carolina. She attended Appalachian State University under William Adam and Joseph Phelps (1987-90) and completed her bachelor of music degree at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music under Pat Harbison (1990-92).

Her career began in New York, playing lead trumpet with the Eddy Palerme Big Band. In 1992, she joined the all-female big band, DIVA, as lead trumpet, performing in many of the nation's most important venues. She freelanced in New York City and played in several Broadway pit orchestras, and in house bands on cruise ships. She also taught for the New York Pops Orchestra's Salute to Music Teaching Program.

In 2000, Whitaker won the lead trumpet chair in the US Army Blues, becoming the first female lead player in any U.S. military jazz group. Her husband is Shaun Whitaker. Her favorite players are Louis Armstrong, Conrad Gozzo, Snooky Young, Roger Ingram, and Pat Harbison.

Whitcomb, Arthur S. (b. Birmingham, England, date unknown; d. June 18, 1950). British cornetist. Whitcomb was born and grew up in Birmingham, England. At age twenty, he joined the Coldstream Guards Band. He played at Blenheim Palace under conductors such as Suck and Edward Elgar, and played at the coronation of King Edward VII (1901). Whitcomb performed in several leading orchestras and bands at various theaters until coming to the United States with the Coldstream band for several weeks of concerts at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904.

When the Fair performances were completed, Whitcomb did not return to England, but rather moved to Canada to become soloist and conductor of the Kilties Band in Belleville, Ontario. After one year, he returned to the United States, and joined the United States Marine Band as first chair and cornet soloist. He performed hundreds of concerts with this group until the end of 1911, when he left it briefly to become director of the 15th Cavalry Band. In 1913, he rejoined the Marine Band, and stayed with this organization until his retirement from the military in 1935. He is often considered to be the most brilliant cornet soloist that ever played in the Marine Band. In recognition, the Marine Band made him Second Leader in 1927.

After retiring from the military, Whitcomb continued to play in various orchestras and bands. He also taught many cornet and trumpet students. His tone was described as "rich and velvet-like." He recorded four cylinders with the Marine Band: Creanonian Polka by Weldon (1909), Premier Polka by Llewellyn, My Heart at thy Sweet Voice, and Endearing Young Charms. The Marine Band performed for his funeral on June 21, 1950 at Arlington Cemetery in Washington, D.C., where he received full military honors.

White, Darryl A. (b. Warren, Ohio, c1967). American trumpeter. White grew up in Warren, Ohio. He began playing the trumpet at age ten. He received his bachelor of music degree at Youngstown State University, master's at Northwestern University, and doctorate at the University of Colorado in Boulder. He taught at Mesa State College in Grand Junction, Colorado (1993-95), as well as the University of Denver, where he played in the Aries Brass Quintet and the Denver Brass. He is currently teaching at the University of Nebraska in Lincoln, where he is a member of the faculty brass quintet and Faculty Jazz Quartet.

A versatile performer, White has been a soloist with the Omaha Symphony, Lincoln Symphony, Mesa and Lake Forest Chamber Orchestras, Grand Junction Symphony, and at the Roaring Forks Jazz Festival. His CDs include Ancient Memories and In the Fullness of Time, the latter featuring several of his own compositions, one of which, Lil I, was featured on the PBS special, New Beginnings. His main influences are Miles Davis, Woody Shaw, and Freddie Hubbard. He has recorded for labels such as Capri, Centaur, and Delos.

As an educator, White is a Resource Member of the International Association of Jazz Educators, and an active soloist and clinician across the U.S. He is president of the National Association for Advancement in the Arts, is vice president and cofounder of the Nebraska Trumpet Ensemble, and a member of the Nebraska Arts Council.

White (née Richert), Edna (b. c1900; d. 1969). American manufacturer. Not to be confused with the well-known trumpet soloist of the same name, Edna Flora White (1892-1992), White became the third wife to Henderson N. White (1873-1940) on March 17, 1932. She had a daughter from her previous marriage named "Kay" (Cathryn, c1925-2005).

Edna White worked as a gown buyer for a department store in Cleveland when she met Henderson N. White, owner of the H.N. White Company that manufactured musical instruments. [For information concerning H.N. White, see the biography for Henderson N. White below.] After their marriage, Mr. White put Edna in charge of his real estate holdings, including the Henderson Apartments.

When Henderson White passed away in 1940, Edna was named president and leading stockholder of the H.N. White Company that employed nearly two hundred workers. Her business experience proved to be very valuable as she embarked on a career that made her the first woman executive in the musical instrument industry. She assumed duties as president on January 1, 1941.

White's mission was to increase productivity and sales through endorsements and advertising. She named her daughter Kay as vice president and director of advertising, and signed many celebrity artists such as Harry James, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, William Bell, Woody Herman, Stan Kenton, Wild Bill Davison, Donald Byrd, Red Allen, Ziggy Elman, Nat Adderley, Martin Morris, Mario Ricci, Kai Winding, Pee Wee Hunt, Ray Coniff, James Emde, J.J. Johnson, and Urbie Green. Many of these artists spent holidays at Edna's large home in Shaker Heights, Ohio. They referred to her as "mom." Out of respect to her former husband, and to keep the integrity of his name with the company, she signed all official documents and checks as "Mrs. H.N. White." She also had the company build one hundred "Mini-Liberty" trumpets that are half-sized copies of their famous "Liberty-model" trumpet. Although never manufactured for sale, these tiny instruments were given as trophies to famous trumpeters, such as Harry James and Rafael Méndez.

At the onset of World War II, the company had difficulty obtaining brass for the manufacturing of instruments. In order to keep her work force, she aggressively pursued two large government grants worth five million dollars to build radar equipment and assemble silver plated proximity switches. As the war ended, she introduced bonus programs that helped increase instrument production. However, when the Korean War broke out, there was again a shortage of brass, and she was forced to acquire another government grant to manufacture radar parts. Nonetheless, she was able to increase the number of employees to three hundred.

Having worked in the same facilities for over fifty years, White decided to build a new factory in 1964. She purchased 12.5 acres of land in Eastlake, Ohio near Cleveland and built the company's current production plant. Due to health problems and a desire to retire, she sold the company to Nate Dolan and partners in 1962. She retired completely in 1965, and died four years later, in 1969.

White, Edna [Flora] (b. Stamford, Connecticut, Oct. 23, 1892; d. Greenfield, Massachusetts, June 25, 1992). American trumpeter. White was a child prodigy on the cornet. On her seventh birthday, she received her first cornet from her father, an amateur cornetist. While she was still quite young, the family moved to Brooklyn, New York, where at the age of nine, she was soloist with an amateur band that performed at Carnegie Hall on May 3, 1902. Later that year, she was hired as soloist at a summer resort in Ocean Grove, New Jersey.

In 1904, Dr. Frank Damrosch recruited her to his newly established Institute of Musical Art (now The Juilliard School), waiving the minimum age requirement. From 1904 to 1908, she studied with Adolphe Dubois, principal trumpet of the New York Symphony Society who switched her to the trumpet. Dubois wrote, I am happy to testify to the real talent of my pupil, Edna White. Although but 14, she is already a brilliant performer. To a very original expression, she adds a truly remarkable technique. At the 1907 commencement, she was the only student selected to play a solo, but no diploma was given to her because she was too young. However, this situation was rectified in 1984 when a Juilliard representative awarded her an Artist's Diploma.

Female brass players were not hired as orchestral musicians in America during much of the twentieth century. (Wanda Lou Yates was the first American female orchestra trumpeter, serving with the Houston Symphony Orchestra from 1943 to 1946.) White managed to obtain bookings as a soloist as early as 1904; she was a guest soloist with the Pryor Band, and in 1907 performed Handel's aria, "The Trumpet Shall Sound" from The Messiah with the singer, Carl Dufft. In order to perform for a living, White formed the Aida Quartet, an all-female quartet (with one trumpet and three cornets) that was hired by the Redpath Chautauqua Company to tour the United States. After touring between 1908 and 1912, the group disbanded, and White returned to her family, now living in Indianapolis. Her mother urged her to marry a wealthy man twenty years her senior named Myron Chandler. Chandler disapproved of her trumpet playing, but White insisted that they move to New York, so that she could pursue her career. They moved to New York City, but by then World War I had weakened the economy, and Chandler's foreign bank accounts were frozen, so he was compelled to allow Edna to reestablish her trumpet quartet and become the breadwinner.

The Edna White Trumpeters played at the 1915 Panama Pacific Exposition in San Francisco where she was also featured as a soloist with the Mexican National Band. She became pregnant in 1916, leaving the trumpet quartet in that year, and gave birth to son Douglas ("Buddy") in 1917. (The quartet continued to use her name during her absence until 1919.) Her marriage failed, so she left Chandler in 1918, and was legally divorced in 1923. In 1919, White formed the Gloria Trumpeters that consisted of Edna and Julie Golden on trumpets, and Velma Howell and Ida Bisbee on trombones. They were highly successful from 1919 to 1929, touring to vacation resorts and on the Keith Vaudeville circuit. Between 1920 and 1926, White recorded solos for the Edison and Columbia labels. She also formed a professional and romantic partnership with Torcum Bézazian, a well-known operatic baritone. They toured and recorded together as a vaudeville act known as Bézazian & White. The two were married in 1923.

The 1920s were a happy time for White. In her book, The Night the Camel Sang (1990), she marks this as the best time of her life. In 1927 she, Bézazian, and Douglas moved to France to further Bézazian's career. However, soon after arriving in Europe her career stalled, so she and Douglas sailed back to the United States without Bézazian.

White lost all her life's savings in the stock market crash of 1929. The Depression all but killed vaudeville, depriving her of her main source of income. She also developed scarlet fever that led to heart problems. Her memoirs recall that she and her son subsisted for days on hard-boiled eggs. She managed to join two all-female orchestras, and scraped by financially with freelance work in New York and Boston. John Philip Sousa heard White solo with the Manhattan Symphony (performing Guy Ropartz's Andante and Allegro arranged for her with a full orchestra by Wallingford Riegger), and deemed her "a most gifted soloist." He engaged her to solo with his band, but he died before she could do so. White played on radio broadcasts on WABCV (1927), in WPA Bands (1934 to 1938), was one of the first to perform Flight of the Bumble Bee (in 1938 on WOR Radio), and was a guest soloist with the Creatore Orchestra.

White worked only occasionally throughout the 1940s, but appeared with B.A. Rolfe in 1943. She decided to revive her career by performing a recital at Carnegie Hall on February 9, 1949. Her program included works by Bach, Enesco, Branscombe, and a premiere of At the Beach, dedicated to her by Virgil Thomson. The New York Times praised her musicianship, good sense of pitch and powerful, brilliant tone. Also, The Herald Tribune stated, Miss White is a real virtuoso and the very first to give a trumpet recital in Carnegie Hall. There seems to be nothing she cannot attain with her instrument. Cornetist and bandmaster Edwin Franko Goldman deemed the recital a "triumphant success...very fine indeed." She soloed on two occasions with the Goldman Band, in 1949 and 1950.

White's efforts paid off. In 1949, she appeared on the CBS television show, We the People, playing Flight of the Bumble Bee. She performed in military hospitals during a thirty-seven-week tour, and in 1954 premiered George Antheil's Trumpet Sonata in New York. In 1957 at the age of sixty-five, she presented her "farewell recital" at Carnegie Hall.

After retiring from professional performing, White worked in public relations for Rinn Records, and was associate editor of Boxing World newspaper. Her son died in 1970. She composed her Suite for Solo Trumpet and Orchestra that was premiered in 1980 by Stephen Schaffner, and Gaétan Berton recorded it the following year. The work was also performed in Carnegie Hall in 1985 by trumpeter Richard San Filipo.

White's commercial recordings between 1920 and 1926 include the solos The Débutante, Recollections, Bluebells of Scotland, When You and I Were Young, Maggie, Then You'll Remember Me, Sweet Genevieve, Forgotten (with Bézazian), Agnus Dei, "Sempre Libre" from La Traviata, Ave Maria, and International Marches (with xylophone). She also made a private recording of Carnival of Venice with piano in 1957. Her trumpet method*, On Taming the Devil's Tongue*, was self-published in 1982. Her autobiography, The Night the Camel Sang: a true romance of vaudeville, was published by The New Amberola Phonograph Company, St. Johnsbury, Vermont, in 1990.

Edna White died at the age of ninety-nine.

White, Henderson N. (b. Romeo, Michigan, July 16, 1873; d. Mar. 26, 1940). American manufacturer. H.N. White lost his father, a building contractor, when he was five years old. He dropped out of school at the age of twelve to become a carpenter's apprentice. In 1887 (age fourteen), he moved to Detroit to learn musical instrument repair and engraving under O.F. Berdan, and then signed on as a repairman for the McMillan Music Store in Cleveland, Ohio. It was at this time that he built his first musical instrument, a violin made from a cigar box.

During the early 1890s, White founded White and Berg with the music publisher C.H. Berg, but the company quickly shut down because of a national financial crisis in America in 1892. In 1893, he devoted his time to instrument repair, and became friends with many of the leading musicians in Cleveland including Thomas H. King (1868-1926), principal trombonist of the Lyceum Theater Orchestra. White developed a "King-model" trombone that soon became popular with many trombonists.

On December 20, 1894 White married Elizabeth Berg, a relative of his former partner C.H. Berg. They had a son named Richard W. White. About this same time, he began importing instruments from Europe and built an effective distribution system. This inspired him to open his own manufacturing company called the H.N. White Company that started with the King-model trombone. The company quickly grew.

In 1904, White hired Foster A. Reynolds (1883-1960), an excellent craftsman who had learned his trade from John Warren York (1882-1940). They developed a complete line of King brass and woodwinds by 1907. Reynolds eventually left to form his own company in 1936. In 1909, White built a larger plant and employed twelve workers. In 1926, he purchased the Cleveland Musical Instrument Company. The 1930s saw a huge growth in production when he introduced several new models including the King "Liberty," "Silver Tone," and "Silver Sonic." For the growing school market, he also produced student model instruments, such as the "American Standard," "Gladiator," and "Student Prince," but did not put his name on them. King string instruments were launched in 1934, and in 1938 White developed a valve trombone called the "Trombonium." In 1934, the company had 152 craftsmen and was the first musical instrument company to provide group life insurance to all employees. By the time of White's death in 1940, the company had produced around 250,000 instruments.

After White's sudden death in 1940, his brother Hugh E. White took over as president to give the family time to decide who would control the company. Hugh had been working as vice president and was the first in the musical instrument business to establish a credit program for people desiring to purchase instruments. It was determined that White's third wife, Edna [Richert] (married on March 7, 1932), would assume duties as president on January 1 of 1941. Her daughter "Kay" (Cathryn, b. in the 1920s from a previous marriage) assisted her, and was named vice president and advertising director of the company. Edna had been Henderson's real estate manager, and was a savvy businesswoman. She developed the company's sales through a media blitz of endorsements by famous musicians of the day including Harry James, Stan Kenton, Ziggy Elman, Woody Herman, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, and others.

Edna White sold the H.N. White Company to a group of Cleveland businessmen in 1962. She retired in 1965. In January 1966, the company merged with The Seeburg Corporation, a huge maker of jukeboxes and other electronic entertainment equipment. Seeburg renamed the H.N. White Company as King Musical Instruments. King Musical Instruments purchased the Benge trumpet company in 1972. In 1983, the King company was purchased by Dan Henkin of C.G. Conn. Two years later, in 1985, Conn sold King Musical Instruments to a group of investors led by Bernhard Muskantor. The investors named the company United Musical Instruments (UMI).

By all accounts, Henderson N. White was a workaholic. He adhered to old-school standards of perfection and business ethics and was a well-liked and trusted man. He enjoyed fishing, card games, and listening to Cleveland Orchestra concerts. [For additional information, see biography of Edna White.]

White, Timothy ("Tim") (b. Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, date unknown). Canadian trumpeter. White grew up in Hamilton, Ontario, and played with the Hamilton Philharmonic Youth Orchestra. He studied with Ramon Parcells and Armando Ghitalla at the University of Michigan before studying with Stephen Chenette at the University of Toronto where he earned a bachelor of music education degree. He performed with the McMaster Symphony, Symphony Nova Scotia, and the Niagara Symphony before accepting his current position as principal of the Kennedy Center Opera House Orchestra in Washington, D.C. in 1994 (succeeding Fred Irby III). While in Canada, White formed the Rondeau Brass, and taught at Brock University and McMaster University.

Tim and his wife Lauren have three children: Ian, Alex, and Evan.

White, Walter (b. Detroit, Michigan, June 1, 1963). American trumpeter and composer. White grew up in a musical family in Oak Park, Michigan and was inspired at an early age by the music of Beethoven and Louis Armstrong. He began playing his brother's Boy Scout bugle at age five, and then took up the baritone and tuba until age nine when he switched to trumpet. He attended the National Music Camp at Interlochen during the summers from 1975 through 1979 and 1981, and studied at the Interlochen Arts Academy under John Lindenau from 1977 to 1981. He then studied with William Vacchiano at The Juilliard School in New York from 1981 to 1983, and transferred to the University of Miami from 1983 to 1986. Additional study was with Jerome Amend, Leon Rapier, Carmine Caruso, and Kenny Wheeler (at the Banff Centre of the Arts in Canada).

As a professional jazz trumpeter, White has played with Bob James (1981-84), Dave Holland (1985-88), the Woody Herman Orchestra (1988-present), Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra (2006), Gunther Schuller, the Detroit Symphony Orchestra, Jaco Pastorius Big Band, Mingus Big Band, Maynard Ferguson Band (1989-91), and others. He is currently playing lead with Dave Matthew's Manhattan Jazz Orchestra (fulltime since 1989) with whom he has recorded six award-winning CDs for the Japanese market. He has recorded film soundtracks and television shows such as Taxi and The Cosby Show, and has his own home recording studio in Oak Park. As a composer, he has written forty original works for large jazz ensembles and has been commissioned to write for choirs, woodwind and brass ensembles, and symphony orchestras. His play-along CD for music practice is titled Walter White Long-tone Accompaniment (Stentor).

White is married to Christine M. White who works at the Cornell Lab of Ornithology. Their children are Arianna (b. 1992) and Jasper (b. 1998). His hobbies include cooking and raised-bed gardening.

Whitted, Pharez (b. Indianapolis, Indiana, Aug. 26, 1960). American trumpeter. Whitted grew up in Indianapolis and began playing trumpet at age nine, and was influenced by Louis Armstrong. Slide Hampton is his uncle. He earned a bachelor of music education degree at DePauw University in 1982, and a master of music in jazz from Indiana University. His jazz style was later influenced by Freddie Hubbard's playing.

A producer, composer, arranger, educator, and performer, Pharez Whitted has worked with Slide Hampton, Elvin Jones, George Duke, Wynton Marsalis, Branford Marsalis, Lou Rawls, The Temptations, and David Baker. He has performed for the Arsenio Hall Show as well as for the Billboard Music Awards television broadcast. He has recorded with Kobie Watkins, Michael Månsson, Ari Brown, John Goldman, Eric Gould, Jimmy Cole, the Jazz Heritage Orchestra, John Mellencamp, MoJazz, and Gregg Bacon, among others. His solo CDs include Transient Journey (Owl, 2010), Mysterious Cargo (Motown, 1996), and Pharez Whitted (Motown, 1994). He is currently director of jazz studies at Chicago State University.

Wiame, Benny (b. Tienen, Belgium, Oct. 31, 1962). Belgian trumpeter and conductor. Wiame began playing flugelhorn at age ten, and later studied with Léon Petré at the Lemmens Institute in Leuven, Belgium, at age fifteen. He then studied with Jérôme de Brauwer at the Royal Conservatory of Brussels.

A highly talented and versatile performer, Wiame is comfortable with classical, jazz, chamber, and orchestral styles of playing. He is a former principal trumpet with the Royal Flemish Philharmonic (1984-92), Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestra, and is currently principal trumpet of the Limburg Symphony Orchestra. He has taught at the Maastricht Academy of Music, University College Ghent, and since 2008 is teaching at the Lemmens Institute. His two solo albums are titled Rendezvous and Take Your Pick, both with brass band accompaniment.

Wiame is a former conductor of the Schoonhoven Brass Band, and currently leads the Middle Brabant Brass Band and the Limburg Brass Band.

Wieprecht, Wilhelm Friedrich (b. Aschersleben, Germany, Aug. 10, 1802; d. Aug. 4, 1872). German instrument maker. Wieprecht learned to play nearly all wind instruments from his father, a town musician. In 1819, he went to Dresden where he studied composition. He was given a position in the city orchestra of Leipzig, and also played in the opera and the famous Gewandhaus. At this time, besides playing the violin and clarinet in the orchestra, he also gave solo performances on the trombone. In 1824, he went to Berlin where he became a member of the royal orchestra. He began to study acoustics in order to correct the deficiencies in military musical instruments. As a result, he succeeded in improving the valves of brass instruments by constructing them on sound acoustic principles, thus greatly increasing the volume and purity of tone of each instrument. He also invented the bass tuba, or bombardon, in order to give greater richness and power to the bass parts. In recognition of these inventions, he was honored by the Royal Academy of Berlin in 1835.

Wieprecht settled in Berlin in 1824. His first invention of note was a type of flugelhorn with a narrow bell that he designed and built in 1833. He intended that his instrument, known as the Sopran-Cornett, replace the B-flat trumpet in Prussian cavalry bands, but he was unsuccessful in his efforts.

In 1835, Wieprecht joined forces with instrument maker Johann Gottfried Moritz to develop an improved piston valve called the Berliner-Pumpe that had a large diameter, allowing room for its ports to be curved, thus eliminating the right angle shifts in ports of previous designs. Because of Wieprecht's personal connections with Prussian government officials, he and Moritz were successful in marketing this type of valve and their instruments to Prussian military bands. Adoption of their instruments became widespread throughout Europe, so much so that the Paris maker Adolphe Sax produced copies by the thousands.

In 1843, Wieprecht became director-general of the bands of the 10th Confederate Army Corps. He was the first to arrange orchestral symphonies and overtures of classical composers for military band, and later reorganized military music in Turkey and Guatemala. He composed marches and military songs, and became a champion of the modern wind band. He was known as a genial and kindly man with a generous nature, and was associated with several charitable foundations established for the benefit of poor musicians.

Wiggins, William Bramwell ("Bram") (b. Newcastle, England, Sept. 28, 1921). Bram Wiggins began playing cornet at age four. When he was a little older, he played in the local bands in Heilsarmee and took lessons from George Eskdale who was teaching at Trinity College at the time. He eventually switched to trumpet, and attended the Royal Academy of Music under Walter Stokes where he also studied composition. He apprenticed with the London Symphony Orchestra.

Wiggins was principal cornet and a member of the trumpet section of the London Symphony Orchestra from 1946 to 1957. Because of some unpleasant politics in the orchestra at the time, he decided to accept an offer to be music director of the Moose Jaw Junior Band Association in Saskatchewan, Canada. During his years there (1957-60), he kept his own playing up by performing with the Winnipeg Symphony Orchestra. However, the urge to play fulltime was too great, and while returning to London for a vacation, he decided to remain there. He was immediately given a position as principal trumpet of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra (1960-66) In 1967, he accepted the position of music master of the Stowe School where he stayed for about two decades. This job allowed him time to concentrate on composing, and he published dozens of trumpet and cornet tutors, solo collections, and brass band works including Mardi Gras, Mediterranean Holiday, and Celebration Overture.

Having retired several years ago, Bram Wiggins lives in Buckinghamshire, England. His hobby is painting.

Wiggs, Johnny [Hyman, John Wigginton] (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, July 25, 1899; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Oct. 9, 1977). American cornetist and bandleader. Wiggs used his birth name of John Hyman until he was about thirty or thirty-five years old. He started on mandolin and violin but switched to cornet after hearing King Oliver. He attended Loyola University in New Orleans as a musician, turning professional at the age of twenty. His early New Orleans period included working with Norman Brownlee (where he succeeded Emmett Hardy), the New Orleans Owls, Earl Crumb's Suburban Gardens Band (1920), Peck Kelly, Ellis Strakato's Hotel Jung Roof Band, Norman Brownlee again (1924-25), and Happy Schilling (1926). He recorded with the Bayou Stompers in 1927.

In 1927, Hyman toured with a vaudeville show before settling in New York. He recorded with Tony Perenti in 1928 but soon felt the financial pinch of the Depression. He returned to New Orleans and spent the 1930s and '40s playing part-time and working as a teacher. His most famous student was clarinetist Pete Fountain. It was when he began teaching that he took the name of Johnny Wiggs as a performer, supposedly because the school was critical of his moonlighting as a jazz musician.

Wiggs returned to fulltime performing in 1948 when he formed his own band. He worked steadily until 1974 when his declining health began to slow him down. Between 1948 and 1957, his band made numerous recordings for labels such as Commodore, Pearl, Victor, Southland, Golden Crest, Paramount, Jazzology, Fat Cat Jazz, New Orleans Records, and GHB. His albums include Congo Square (New Orleans Records) and Johnny Wiggs at Preservation Hall (Pearl). He also recorded with George Lewis and Lizzie Miles.

Johnny Wiggs was an important musician during the traditional jazz revival. He died at the age of seventy-eight.

Wilbraham, John ("Jumbo") (b. Bournemouth, England, Apr. 15, 1944; d. Wells, Somerset, England, Apr. 5, 1998). British trumpeter. Wilbraham attended the Raynes Park Grammar School before studying at the Royal Academy of Music in London from 1962 to 1965 where he won the Aubrey Brain Prize, the Frank James Prize, and the Silver Medal of the Worshipful Company of Musicians. His teacher was William Overton.

Together with Michael Laird (who studied under Walter Holy), Wilbraham experimented for a short time with the so-called clarino trumpet as early as 1965. They performed Bach's Cantata BWV 69 on them with the English Chamber Orchestra conducted by Paul Steinitz. (Iaan Wilson completed the clarino trumpet section).

In 1966, Wilbraham became a member of the New Philharmonia Orchestra, and two years later was named principal trumpet of the Royal Philharmonic. He moved to the BBC Symphony Orchestra in 1972 as principal trumpet, remaining there for nine years. During this time, he also played for many of the major orchestras in London, as well as playing as guest principal trumpet with the Vienna Philharmonic and the Munich Bach Orchestra under Karl Richter. On numerous occasions, he recorded as a member of the Academy of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, conducted by Sir Neville Marriner. He was also a regular member of the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble for many years.

Wilbraham studied for a while with the great Maurice André in Paris in order to learn to play the piccolo trumpet. This enabled him to become one of the first players of the instrument in England, and to record most of the standard Baroque and Classical trumpet concertos with orchestra. A performer of great versatility, Wilbraham was a leading studio musician who recorded things as varied as the Beatles' album, Magical Mystery Tour, the movie soundtrack, Diamonds are Forever, concertos by Hertel, Leopold Mozart, and others, as well as all of the orchestral repertoire.

Since he was a very large man, many of his friends affectionately called him by the nickname, Jumbo. However, if anyone not knowing him personally called him that, he would become outraged. He developed diabetes in the early 1980s, which began to affect his health and ability to play the trumpet. He stopped playing for a while, and although he made a short comeback in the late 1980s, he was resigned to give up professional playing, and instead concentrate on teaching. However, he did record extensively from 1966 to 1997 with the London Gabrieli Brass Ensemble, Joshua Rifkin, London Festival Brass (under Alan Civil and Elgar Howarth), English Chamber Orchestra, the Wilbraham Brass Soloists, Michael Gibbs, Scottish Chamber Orchestra, and Northern Sinfonia Orchestra, as well as under his own name.

Wilbraham taught at the Royal Academy of Music, the Birmingham School of Music, the Royal Military School of Music at Kneller Hall, and the Wells Cathedral School. He coached the trumpet players of the National Youth Orchestra, and gave many clinics and master classes throughout England. He was named a Fellow of the Royal Academy of Music, and was considered one of the finest teachers in Europe.

In 1991, Wilbraham left London for Wells, Somerset, in the hope of retiring to a more comfortable life. However, dogged by diabetes, kidney problems, and septicemia, his ability to perform and teach soon dwindled. His marriage to harpist Susan Drake ended in divorce.

All who knew Wilbraham remember him for his wit and good-natured personality. One story is that during a rehearsal of a Bruckner symphony, the last chair violist turned around and snarled at him saying, Can't you be a bit quieter? You're giving me a headache! His reply was, If only you had practised more, you would be sitting a bit nearer the front. Wilbraham died in 1998 at the age of fifty-three.

Wilder, Joseph ("Joe") Benjamin (b. Colwyn, Pennsylvania, Feb. 22, 1922). American trumpeter. Wilder grew up in a suburb of Philadelphia and began playing the cornet at the age of eleven. His father Curtis was a local bandleader. Joe took lessons from Henry Lowe and later attended the Mastbaum School of Music in Philadelphia as a trumpet student under Frederick D. Griffin. During this time, he was playing at night with Jimmy Gorham's band and was featured regularly on the local radio show, Parisian Tailor's Colored Kiddies of the Air. Wilder dropped out of school after two years in order to play with Les Hite's band in 1941. In this group, Wilder played first trumpet and Dizzy Gillespie played second. From 1942 to 1943, Wilder played with Lionel Hampton's band, but in 1943 was drafted into military service. He joined the Marines and eventually co-led a dance band in Montford Point at Camp LeJeune in North Carolina.

After his military service, Wilder returned to Hampton's band. He then played with Jimmy Lunceford's big band from 1946 to 1947. He also played for a short while with the bands of Lucky Millinder, Sam Donahue, and Herbie Fields before deciding to settle in New York City as a studio player and freelance artist. He enrolled part-time at the Manhattan School of Music and studied with Joseph Alessi and William Vacchiano, graduating in 1953. He began a master of music degree but soon left to join Count Basie's band. In 1954, he toured for four months with the Count Basie orchestra, and in 1962 toured the Soviet Union with Benny Goodman's band. From 1957 to 1973, he worked mostly for ABC Radio and Television, performing for such shows as The Dick Cavett Show, The Jack Parr Show, The Sid Caesar Show, Voice of Firestone, and Music for a Summer Night. He also played in the ABC Brass Quintet.

Joe Wilder was selected to become a member of the first racially integrated classical orchestra in America, the Symphony of the New World. He played with them from 1965 to 1971. This led to occasional performances as an extra or substitute player with the New York Philharmonic. He recorded a classical album of trumpet solos with piano for the Golden Crest label, although most of his recordings were in the jazz style for labels such as Savoy, Columbia, Concord, and Evening Star. Because of his beautifully lyrical style of playing, he was a favorite trumpeter of singers such as Billie Holiday, Lena Horne, Johnny Mathis, Harry Belafonte, Eileen Farrell, Tony Bennett, and others. He also performed and recorded with J.J. Johnson, Charlie Byrd, The Heath Brothers, Ruby Braff, Joe Newman, Duke Ellington, Earl Hines, Fletcher Henderson, Benny Carter, Tom Talbert, and The Statesmen of Jazz (2005).

For twenty-two years, Wilder performed in the television orchestra for the Miss America Pageant. He also performed for the Tony Awards for twelve years. But, as live television and radio studio work gradually decreased, he found himself performing in numerous Broadway show pit orchestras including the original cast of 42nd Street which ran for eight years. He continued to record jazz albums as leader, releasing Alone With Just My Dreams, Joe Wilder—No Greater Love, Wilder'n Wilder, and Among Friends. Wilder appeared in an episode of The Cosby Show in 1986, and performed the trumpet solo in the film, The Wild Party, starring James Coco and Raquel Welch. He also appeared in Malcolm X's orchestra in the Spike Lee film, Malcolm X (1992). In 1990, he was selected to join Gunther Schuller's Smithsonian Jazz Orchestra.

Wilder is known for his good humor, warm personality, and professional demeanor. A true gentleman, Lionel Hampton once offered him ten dollars if he would utter just one four-letter swear word, but Wilder refused to take the challenge. Wilder was awarded the Temple University Jazz Master's Hall of Fame Award in 2006, and in 2008 he received the National Endowment for the Arts's Jazz Master Award. He is also an avid photographer.

Wilfert, [Gottfried Hans] Hanne (b. Rodewisch, Germany, Mar. 26, 1921; d. Düren, Germany, May 25, 1994). German trumpeter. Considered by many to have been the German Cat Anderson because of his extraordinary high range, Wilfert is best known for his performances and recordings with the Kurt Edelhagen Orchestra during the late 1940s and 1960s.

Wilfert began playing the violin at age seven, and while at a music school in Lengenfeld, learned to play the tenor horn, trumpet, and saxophone. After his military service, he played in American nightclubs in Germany before joining the Joe Wick Big Band. He first joined Kurt Edelhagen's orchestra in 1948, and also played in the All Stars of Nuremberg. He participated in jazz festivals in Frankfurt and Paris, and played in the big band of Adalbert Laczkowski. He was a featured soloist with the Werner Müller Orchestra (1953-62), and played with the RIAS dance orchestra for the Berlin radio (1957-62). He rejoined the Edelhagen group in Cologne in 1962, staying with it until the orchestra disbanded in 1972, after which, he became a studio performer, and played with the big bands of Paul Kuhn (1982), Cliff Hardie, and Klaus Esser. He also taught music at the Rhine Music School. He was featured in many recordings and released the solo album, Lady Killer.

Willbrandt, Adolph [August] E. (b. Germany, Dec., 1845; d. date unknown). German trumpeter. Willbrandt immigrated to the United States in 1870 (age twenty-five). The city directory of St. Louis listed him as a musician in 1878. He became a member of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra (then called the St. Louis Choral Society) around 1889, and was principal trumpet from 1897 to 1903, although he was listed as coprincipal with William E. Leeder during the 1902-03 season. He performed as a freelance musician in St. Louis from 1903 to 1910. He retired around 1920 and continued living in St. Louis.

Willey, Rich[ard] Taylor (b. Orlando, Florida, Dec. 13, 1955). American trumpeter and composer. Willey grew up in Clearwater, Florida. The son of Leonard, an engineer, and Carolyn Willey, a school teacher, Rich came from a musical family. His siblings are Anne and Lou (twins, b. 1949) and John (b. 1954). Rich began playing the trumpet at age eleven, studying under Donald W. Hacker (a clarinetist) and later John Baker (a trumpeter). While in tenth grade, his band director (Hacker) took the stage band to hear the Count Basie Orchestra, an experience that changed Willey's life.

After graduating from Clearwater High School in 1973, Willey attended the University of South Florida. He enlisted in the US Army in 1974 and studied at the US Navy School of Music (Army element). Later studies were at Armstrong State College (Georgia) and North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas).

Willey moved to Philadelphia in 1981 in order to study with Dr. Donald Reinhardt. Due to an embouchure injury, he switched to bass trumpet and valve trombone under Reinhardt's guidance. After studying with Reinhardt for several years, Willey moved to New York City and worked as a freelance valve trombonist. He recorded The Great American Songbook with Mel Tormé (TelArc), and moved back to Florida in 1994. He earned an associates degree from St. Petersburg Junior College and gradually returned to the trumpet. He finished his bachelor of music education degree at the University of South Florida in 1999. Willey received a scholarship to attend the Manhattan School of Music in 1999 where he completed a master's degree in jazz performance in 2001, and then worked in New York as a freelance musician. His primary university music teachers were Rich Matteson, Jack Peterson, Dan Haerle, Bill Gardner, Ed Green, Don Owen, Mike Abene, and Byron Stripling.

Willey's early musical influences were Frank Zappa, Charlie Parker, Clifford Brown, Hank Mobley, and Kenny Dorham. He joined Maynard Ferguson's Big Bop Nouveau in the fall of 2001 for one tour, playing second trumpet. He leads two bands: The Rich Willey Jazz Band and his Afro-Cuban band Joe Mambo*,* and he is the sole proprietor of Boptism Music Publishing. Willey has authored a dozen music books and trumpet texts including The Ultimate Collection of Jazz Duets Complete, Trumpeters Guides to II-V-I's (major and minor), Focal Point, and Rhythm Madness.

Since 2002, Rich Willey has done many tours with the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra under the direction of Buddy Morrow. A current resident of Candler, North Carolina, he teaches at the University of North Carolina-Asheville and at Clemson University in Clemson, South Carolina, and is an active freelance trumpeter, bass trumpeter, and bandleader. He directed the jazz band for two summers at Brevard Music Center. Rich has performed with Lionel Hampton, Hank Mobley, Don Patterson, Bob Haggart, The Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra, The Cab Calloway Orchestra, Dick Hyman, Rosemary Clooney, John LaPorta, Claudio Roditi, Chris Potter, Conrad Herwig, Johnny Coles, Tim Hagans, Bob Belden, Paquito D'Rivera, Ray Vega, Scott Wendholt, Joel Frahm, Derek Smith, Johnny Varro, Bootsie Barnes, Larry McKenna, John Swana, Bob Mintzer, Kenny Drew Jr., John Bunch, Bobby Rosengarden, Jerry Jerome, John Lamb, Greg Gisbert, Brad Mehldau, Dave Stahl, Tommy Flanagan, Ed Palermo Big Band, John Eckert, Bobby Sanabria, and many others.

Rich has been married to Janet Willey since 2003, and together they operate Boptism Music Publishing. Their daughters are Jennifer (b. 1982), Julie (b. 1983), Adrienne (b. 1984), and Amanda (b. 1987). Rich's hobbies include U.S. history, current events, and politics. He also enjoys spending time with his Australian cattle dog, Charlie.

Williams, Bill M. (b. Waterbury, Connecticut, July 28, 1965). American trumpeter. Williams studied with Charles Geyer and Barbara Butler at the Eastman School of Music from 1983 to 1987, earning a bachelor of music degree and the performer's certificate. He has also studied with Bernard Adelstein and Armando Ghitalla. His early career included engagements as principal trumpet of the Syracuse Symphony, Rochester Philharmonic, and City of Barcelona (Spain) Symphony Orchestra, and as guest principal of the Tonhalle Orchestra in Germany, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, Malmö Symphony Orchestra in Sweden, and the Orchestre de Chambre de Lausanne in Switzerland.

Williams was principal of the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra during summers (1998-2006), principal of the Berne (Switzerland) Symphony Orchestra (1995-2001), and acting principal of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra (2004-08). He has also been a member of various chamber groups, including the Tafelmusik Baroque Orchestra, the Ensemble Modern of Frankfurt (Germany), and the American Bach Soloists. He served as a visiting professor at the University of Michigan and the Eastman School of Music during the 2003-04 academic year, and earned a master of arts in psychology degree at the New School for Social Research in New York City from 2001 to 2003. For many years, he collaborated with the well-known sports psychologist Don Greene in presenting lectures and master classes on managing performance anxiety.

Williams turned to a career in management, and was the artistic coordinator/consultant of the YouTube Symphony (2008-11), and is currently the senior vice president and Dean of Fellows at the New World Symphony in Ft. Lauderdale, Florida, where he, his wife Margot, and their young son reside.

Williams, Charles Melvin ("Cootie") (b. Mobile, Alabama, July 10, 1911; d. New York, Sept. 15, 1985). American trumpeter and bandleader. The commonly given birth date of July 24, 1910 for Williams is incorrect. The Social Security Death Index confirms July 10, 1911. His mother played piano. Williams began his music studies on trombone, tuba, and drums in his school band. He soon switched to trumpet and was mostly self-taught, but took some lessons from Charles Lipskine. By age thirteen, he was touring and recording with the Young Family Band that included Lester and Lee Young. He also played in Florida with Eagle-Eye Shields, and with Alonzo Ross's De Luxe Syncopators (1926-28).

In 1928, Williams moved to New York. Within a short time he recorded with James P. Johnson and worked with Chick Webb and Fletcher Henderson. He replaced alcoholic Bubber Miley in Duke Ellington's band in 1929 and had to learn quickly to play Miley's muted solos and growl effects, which he did successfully. Throughout the 1930s, Williams was one of the stars of the Ellington band. The Duke even composed Concerto for Cootie (later known as Do Nothin' Till You Hear from Me after lyrics were added) in 1940 to showcase Williams's artistry.

Cootie Williams participated in many recordings with Ellington's big band and also led eight small group sessions between 1937 and 1940 with a few members of the band, including Ellington on piano. But, in November of 1940, Williams left Ellington to accept a yearlong contract with the Benny Goodman Orchestra. Goodman gave Williams plenty of solo spots in his big band and also in the Goodman Sextet.

When the Goodman contract ended, Williams wanted to return to the Ellington orchestra but there were no positions available. At Ellington's advice Williams decided to start his own band. The Cootie Williams Big Band (sometimes billed as Cootie Williams and His Rug Cutters) began in 1942 and had several lengthy runs at the Savoy Ballroom in New York City. By the late 1940s, it became financially difficult to support the large orchestra, and Williams was forced to continue at the Savoy with a small group from 1948 into the 1950s.

After twenty-two years away from Ellington, Williams rejoined the Duke Ellington Orchestra in 1962. In celebration of his return, the Duke composed his New Concerto for Cootie, and featured Williams a great deal. Williams stayed with the band until Ellington died. He then recorded an album with the band under Ellington's son, Mercer Ellington, in 1975. Cootie Williams stayed with Mercer Ellington until 1980.

Williams retired in 1981, one of the greatest plunger mute specialists of all time. Although mainly known for his trumpet work, Williams was also a singer and composer who cocomposed 'Round Midnight with Thelonius Monk. Some of his albums include Typhoon (Swingtime), The Big Challenge with Rex Stewart (Fresh Sound), and Porgy and Bess Revisited (Warner Brothers). He also appears in the 1984 video, Duke Ellington: Memories of Duke (A*Vision).

Charles Melvin "Cootie" Williams passed away at the age of seventy-four. He was posthumously inducted into the Alabama Jazz Hall of Fame in 1991.

Williams, Ernest S. (b. New Richmond, Indiana, Sept. 27, 1881; d. Saugerties, New York, Feb. 8, 1947). American cornetist and trumpeter. Ernest achieved one of the brightest and most important careers of any cornet or trumpet player. His father, Samuel, was a professional cornetist who studied with Herman Bellstedt Jr., so by the age of five Ernest decided that he also wanted to play cornet.

Samuel Williams became a music teacher in the public schools of Winchester, Indiana, and founded the Williams' Family Orchestra, which often featured young Ernest as cornet soloist. At age fourteen, Ernest was appointed director of the Winchester High School Orchestra, and also played in the WhenBand, sponsored by the When Clothing Store of Indianapolis.

Ernest volunteered for military service at the outset of the Spanish-American War, and became a member, and then conductor, of the 158th Indiana Volunteer Regiment Band. He later was transferred to several other bands as leader, until his separation from the military in 1899. He moved to Boston and studied with Henry C. Brown and Gustave Strube. Brown advised him to go to New York City to acquire more professional playing experience. There, he studied with W. Paris Chambers and Herbert Clarke, who helped place him in Patrick Gilmore's band as soloist where he played for seven days.

In the fall of 1901, John Philip Sousa selected Williams to tour England with the Sousa Band. Williams was in demand as a soloist, and upon his return in 1903 to 1907, performed each summer as soloist with the Mace Gay Band at Nantasket Beach outside of Boston. During the winters, he served as bandmaster of the Boston Cadet Band (1903-11), and performed solos at each engagement. He reportedly often played as many as nine encores after his initial solo! In 1904, he founded his own publishing business and also became a celebrated teacher; one of his early students was Walter Smith Sr.

A former student of Mace Gay was Kitty Rankin, a popular woman soloist in the Boston area. Rankin began taking lessons from Williams, and they soon began dating. Kitty changed her name to Katherine Williams when they married in 1911. They performed hundreds of concerts together, each playing solos and duets. In 1913, they moved to Colorado Springs, where Ernest accepted a summer engagement with Herman Bellstedt's band. After that summer, they embarked on a yearlong tour of Australia that led to another tour, this time to England, France, Italy, Malta, Egypt, and India. Upon their return to the United States, they toured with various vaudeville shows.

In 1916, Ernest became the first trumpeter in Pierre Montreux's Ballet Russe Orchestra, and in the following year, soloist with Patrick Conway's band and Victor Herbert's orchestra. He also toured with the Russian Symphony Orchestra. In 1917, Williams became principal trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra, where he remained through 1923. He performed an arrangement of the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach (1921) with this orchestra. At that time, the orchestra's winter season was relatively short, so he had time to perform with the Goldman Band's series of concerts at Columbia University (1918 to 1922), as well as with several other bands.

Williams helped design the "Victor" cornet for the Conn Company, and endorsed a trumpet made by the Brua C. Keefer Company of Williamsport, Pennsylvania. During this time Williams's reputation as a performer was at its peak; Maestro Stokowski described Williams as "one of the greatest trumpeters of all time."

In 1923, Williams resigned his position with the Philadelphia Orchestra to record daily for the Victor Phonograph Company. He was also cornet soloist with the Plaza Band of Philadelphia. He moved to Brooklyn and began working as a teacher and conductor, and accepted numerous solo engagements. He was appointed Dean of the Conway Military Band School (now Ithaca College) in Ithaca, New York, in 1929. He also constructed a large building on land he owned at the foot of the Catskill Mountains near Saugerties, New York, only five miles from Woodstock, in order to start his own summer music camp, which became very popular. After a disagreement with the president of Ithaca College in 1931, Williams left, and began the year-round Ernest Williams School of Music at the camp facilities. He soon moved the school to Brooklyn.

Williams affiliated his school, which was patterned after Kneller Hall in England, with New York University. He played principal trumpet in the State Symphony Orchestra under Wilhelm Mengelberg and Siegfried Wagner, and subsequently became conductor of the New York University Symphonic Band from 1936 to 1943. From 1937 through 1946, he also taught at The Institute of Musical Art (then the undergraduate division of The Juilliard School).

Williams taught many cornet, trumpet, and brass students that went on to have illustrious careers, including Donald Jacoby, Leonard B. Smith, Ned Mahony, Frank Elsass, Robert Nagel, Roger Smith, Ray Wetzel, Gilbert Mitchell, Frank Scimonelli, John Yesualitis, Robert Lewis, Raymond Crisara, Robert Hoffman, Arthus Sussman, James Burke, Charles Colin, Louis & Milton Davidson, Jim Buffington, Bobby Hackett, Dale McMikle, Glenn Miller, Seymour Rosenfeld, and Harold Rehrig. The eminent bandmaster and cornetist Edwin Franko Goldman stated, There is no college or school of music in the world that has a man equal to Ernest Williams in his ability to impart knowledge to young musicians and to give them training and routine that they need. I say this because it is a fact.

Enrollment in the Williams School dropped significantly during World War II. Many of the students enlisted in the military; others transferred to The Juilliard School. Williams closed his School in 1944, and moved its library and equipment to the summer camp facilities in Saugerties.

Ernest Williams died at the age of sixty-five. His body is buried at the Fountain Park Cemetery in his hometown of Winchester, Indiana. After his death, Ernest's brother Jan (a clarinet teacher at the summer camp), assumed responsibilities for the camp; however, the main building was destroyed by fire on May 1, 1948, and the camp was closed. Much of Williams's library and memorabilia were destroyed in the fire, but former student Philip Lang, a representative of the Edwin H. Morris Company in New York City purchased what did survive in 1952. Since then, the library has been donated to the University of Maryland Library, and the contents cataloged as the Ernest Williams Collection under the umbrella of the American Bandmasters Association Research Center.

Williams was a prolific composer. He wrote dozens of band pieces and several works for cornet and trumpet. Among his compositions for trumpet are Orion, The Three Bluejackets, Sonata, Bolero, and Concertos Nos. 1-6. His best-known band compositions include Con. Dykema's March, The Captivator, Prelude and Scherzo, National Emblem Song, Symphony in C Minor, Revolution Fantasy, Hall of Fame, and America. He also wrote several books of studies and methods for trumpet including Modern Method for Transposition, Modern Method for Trumpet or Cornet, Supplementary Studies for Advanced Students of the Trumpet or Cornet, and Secrets of Technique Preservation. Nearly all of his works were published by his own music publishing business.

Williams, Franc[is] (b. McConnell's Mills, Pennsylvania, Sept. 20, 1910; d. Houston, Pennsylvania, Oct. 2, 1983). American trumpeter. Williams grew up in Toledo, Ohio. He began studying the piano there, but after hearing one of his neighbors, Art Tatum, play piano, he decided to switch to the trumpet instead. Williams played trumpet in his high school band.

Williams began his career with Frank Terry's Chicago Nightingales in 1930. He moved to New York in 1940 and became a member of Fats Waller's big band and later played with Claude Hopkins, Clyde Bernhardt, Edgar Hayes, Ella Fitzgerald (1941-42), Sabby Lewis (1943), and Machito (1944).

Williams's greatest fame came when he played lead trumpet with Duke Ellington from 1945-49 and again briefly in 1951. He had a pretty tone and a swing-oriented style. Because he played lead, he was not featured as a soloist all that often, but he can be heard in a solo on Ellington's Blue Skies (Musicraft) album of 1946 playing Trumpet No End.

Franc Williams toured Europe as a soloist in the late 1950s and between 1955 and 1975, earned a living by playing with various Latin bands (including Perez Prado and Tito Puente), and in theater orchestras in New York. He gained exposure in the mid to late 1970s when he was a member of the Harlem Blues and Jazz Band, and Panama Francis's Savoy Sultans. He also led his own group, Swing Four, between 1975 and 1976.

At the age of seventy-two, Franc Williams died from cancer. He is survived by a son, the actor Greg Morris, who is known for his television role in Mission Impossible, and by a niece, Florence Randolph of Houston.

Williams, Nelson ("Cadillac") (b. Montgomery [or Birmingham?], Alabama, Sept. 26, 1917; d. Voorburg, South Holland, Netherlands, Nov. 15, 1973). American trumpeter. Williams began playing piano at age thirteen and the trumpet a short while later. As a teen, he played with Cow Cow Davenport, and during the 1930s was in the territory bands, Trianon Crackerjacks and Brown Skin Models. He was also the musical director for the Dixie Rhythm Girls.

Williams moved to Philadelphia around 1939 and began playing with Tiny Bradshaw's group. He served in the US Army during World War II, after which Billy Eckstine hired him. He later played with the bands of John Kirby and Billy Kyle, and in 1949 began his first of several stints with the Duke Ellington Orchestra. Ellington joked about how protective Williams was of his Cadillac automobile, and gave him the nickname, Cadillac.

Williams moved to Paris, France, in 1951, and formed his own band that recorded for several French labels. He toured with the Ellington organization in 1956 (again in 1969), and freelanced in Europe with Marc Laferrière, Raymond Fonsèque, and Albert Nicholas. He then established himself in the Netherlands. In 1959, he performed with the Dutch Swing College Band.

Williams, Richard [Gene] (b. Galveston, Texas, May 4, 1931; d. Jamaica, New York, Nov. 5, 1985). American trumpeter. As a child, Williams learned to play the tenor saxophone, but was inspired by Fats Navarro and switched to trumpet during his teens. He gigged locally in Texas before attending Wiley College and earning a degree in music. He then spent four years in the Air Force (1952-56) and upon discharge played with Lionel Hampton's band in New York. During his two years as lead trumpet with Hampton, he toured Europe and made his first recordings.

After leaving Hampton's band, Williams attended the Manhattan School of Music where he received his master of music degree. He played with Charles Mingus

(on and off between 1959 and 1964), Gigi Gryce (1959-62), Lou Donaldson (1960), Quincy Jones (1961), Slide Hampton (1961-63), Yusef Lateef (1963-64), Orchestra USA (1964), Eric Dolphy, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Randy Weston, and Booker Ervin. He also performed and recorded in Paris in 1962, and joined Duke Ellington's orchestra in 1965 and again in 1971.

Williams was a member of the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra from 1966 to 1970. It toured Europe and Japan in addition to performing hundreds of concerts in the United States. He was with Gil Evans from 1972-73, Clark Terry's big band, Duke Jordan (1975), Lionel Hampton (again in 1975), Sam Jones (1979), and the Mingus Dynasty (1982). He also led his own quartet in Europe during the early 1970s. Williams spent most of the late 1970s and early 1980s playing in pit orchestras for Broadway musicals.

Although Williams made many recordings as a sideman, he only made one solo album, New Horn in Town, recorded in 1960 for Candid Records. He died at the age of fifty-four from kidney cancer.

Williams, Susan (b. Canberra, Australia, Apr. 17, 1960). Australian trumpeter. Williams studied with Don Johnson and Dan Mendelow at the Canberra School of Music from 1978 to 1982, and with John Taber and Peter Masseurs at the Royal Conservatory at The Hague from 1984 to 1988. She was a member of the Australian ABC Sinfonia Orchestra from 1982 to 1984.

Williams has been a major proponent of the Baroque (valveless) trumpet since the 1980s. In 1987, she performed on Baroque trumpet with several leading early music groups in Germany, the Netherlands, France, and Belgium, and has founded several early music ensembles, including Asterion (a natural trumpet ensemble), Clarincanto (natural trumpet, soprano voice, and basso continuo), and Clarini. She recorded a CD of Baroque cantatas with the Holland Boys Choir in 2000. In 1989, she began teaching Baroque trumpet at the Royal Conservatory at The Hague. She also teaches at the University of the Arts in Bremen, Germany, and since 2010 has taught at the Salzburg Summer Festival.

Williams, Tom (b. Baltimore, Maryland, Apr. 12, 1962). American trumpeter and drummer. The son of a music teacher, Williams began playing the trumpet at age five. While in high school, he also took up the drums. He was mostly influenced by the jazz trumpet playing of Kenny Dorham.

After attending Towson State University (now Towson University) for a while, Williams toured with the Broadway show, Sophisticated Ladies. He then played with Mercer Ellington's orchestra, Ray Charles, Bill Hardman, Larry Willis, Charlie Rouse, Dizzy Gillespie, Jackie McLean, Hank Jones, and others. He enlisted in the US Army and was assigned to the US Army Field Band's Jazz Ambassadors (1987-90) before being transferred to the US Army Band "Pershing's Own" in Washington, D.C.

While serving in the military, Tom Williams has been an active freelance musician on trumpet and jazz drums on the East Coast. He has performed with the Vanguard Jazz Orchestra, Jazz Masterworks Orchestra and the Smithsonian Jazz Orchestra, and with Philly Joe Jones, Art Taylor, Woody Herman, Slide Hampton, and many others. He has backed numerous celebrities including Mel Tormé, The Temptations, The Four Tops, Sid Caesar, Natalie Cole, Frankie Valli, Patti LaPage, Stevie Wonder, Liberace, Anita Baker, and others. He has also recorded with Jimmy Heath, Antonio Hart, Steve Wilson, Donald Brown, Ron Holloway, and Larry Willis.

Williams leads his own band, InterPlay, which has recorded albums entitled First Time and Pick Up The Pieces for JazzScapes. An excellent bop player, Williams has also released two solo albums for Criss Cross, Introducing Tom Williams and Straight Ahead.

Williamson, Stu[art Lee] (b. Brattleboro, Vermont, May 14, 1933; d. Studio City, California, Oct. 1, 1991). American trumpeter. The younger brother of pianist Claude Williamson, Stu moved to Los Angeles in 1949. He played with several big-name bands including those of Stan Kenton (1951 and 1954-55), Woody Herman (1952-53), Billy May, Charlie Barnet, Lighthouse All-Stars (1954-55), and Shelly Manne (1954-58).

Williamson began doubling on valve trombone in 1954. His impressive tone and range on trumpet, plus his smooth style on valve trombone, made him a valuable studio player in Los Angeles during the late 1950s and early 1960s. Most of his work in the studios was in the orchestras led by Marty Paich.

As a studio performer, Williamson recorded with dozens of celebrity artists including Zoot Sims, Art Pepper, Benny Carter, Elmo Hope, Clifford Brown, Terry Gibbs, Mel Tormé, and Lennie Niehaus. He recorded four solo albums for Bethlehem: Stu Williamson Plays (1955), Stu Williamson Quintet (1955), Sapphire (1956), and Pee Jay (1956).

Around the early 1960s, Williamson became addicted to drugs. His playing activities lessened after 1962, and he stopped playing and fell out of the music business in 1968 at the age of thirty-five. He struggled with his addictions until his death at the age of fifty-eight.

Willing, Ralf [aka Ralf Anthony] (b. Vreden, Germany, Feb. 25, 1949). German trumpeter and flugelhornist. Willing, whose father Gerd Willing was a trumpet player and conductor of a military band, won a prize in the national youth music competition "Jugend musiziert" in 1964, and attended the Conservatory in Münster, Westphalia, studying with Alfred Bertram, principal trumpeter in the Münster Symphony Orchestra. He played in Bertram's orchestra as a steady extra in 1968, was with the Teddy Stauber Orchestra from 1970 to 1972, conducted Tony Marshall's orchestra from 1972 to 1974, and was lead trumpet in Hugo Strasser's band from 1974 to 1979. He began working in the recording studios of Munich during the mid 1970s, and from 1979 to 1991 led his own Ralf Anthony (pseudonym) Show Band, which toured the United States and Canada, and frequently played on German television stations. After 1991, Willing was a studio musician with a recording studio of his own, working for large advertising firms in Germany and Austria. He is currently leader of the Büchlberg Big Band and a trainer for the Big Band Bavaria. He is an excellent jazz flugelhorn soloist, especially on ballads. In his studio, working as a one-man band, he also improvises full arrangements on all instruments, ending with fantastic trumpet solos à la Harry James or Horst Fischer.

Willis, Richard (b. Dublin, Ireland, c1790-95; d. West Point, New York, Feb. 1, 1830). American keyed bugler, bandmaster, and composer. Willis grew up in Dublin, Ireland, where he is said to have studied music and the keyed bugle with John Bernhard Logier (who published his Complete Instructions to the Keyed Bugle around 1820). He also seems to have collected folk melodies in the Irish countryside. Willis immigrated to Manhattan, New York, and gave his first performance there in September of 1816. He was the first professional keyed bugle soloist in America.

In 1817, Willis was named the first director of music at the Military Academy at West Point, but was allowed to retain his civilian status. Under his direction, the band, which numbered between eighteen and twenty-five players, acquired an excellent reputation. Ships on the Hudson River would anchor there, so that their passengers could listen to its evening concerts. The band gave concerts in many of the major cities in the east, and performed The Grand Canal March at the opening of the Erie Canal. In 1824, General E.A. Hitchcock said: Willis was the perfect master of that instrument [keyed bugle]. While he could send tones over the river and into the mountains, bringing back marvelous echoes, he could bring it into such moderation as to accompany the voice of a lady at her piano or even in a very small room. I have often heard him.

Willis's solo repertoire consisted mainly of operatic melodies with variations, such as Yankee Doodle with Variations, Eveleen's Bower, The Hunter's Horn in the Morning, Polonaise for the Bugle (Stumph), Jessy the Flow'r of Dunblane, and O Dulce Concento and Polacca. He also performed traditional trumpet pieces such as Handel's Let the Bright Seraphim from "Samson."

As he toured, Willis often taught lessons to young keyed bugle players in order to encourage the instrument's use and supplement his income. It is likely that he taught Francis Johnson, who later became the first black keyed bugle soloist and a famous Philadelphia bandleader. For Willis's funeral in 1830, Johnson composed The Death of Willis and dedicated the title page to him "for his unusual attention paid to him [Johnson] in the knowledge of the keyed bugle."

Willis was married and had three sons, all of whom became musicians, and three daughters. On June 30, 1830 friends from West Point and Manhattan held a benefit concert for his wife and children. This "Grand Concert of Vocal and Instrumental Music" was held at Niblo's Pleasure Gardens.

Willner, Tobias (b. Herzberg, Elster, Germany, Nov. 24, 1971). German trumpeter. Willner studied with Peter-Michael Krämer at the Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy Hochschule für Musik in Leipzig, earning a bachelor of music degree (1988-94) and a master of music degree (1997). From 1994 to 1997, he was also Krämer's assistant. He was first trumpet in the opera orchestra in Halle (Saale) for ten years before becoming principal trumpet of the Sächsische Staatskapelle Dresden in 2004, succeeding Kurt Sandau. He is also a member of the Dresden Trumpet Consort (which with its six trumpets and timpani was founded in 2003 by Mathias Schmutzler), and is a visiting lecturer at the Dresden Musikhochschule.

Wilpert, Günter (b. Dresden, Germany, Dec. 24, 1933; d. Radebeul, Germany, Sept. 7, 2006). German trumpeter. Wilpert studied from 1952 to 1957 with Erwin Wolf and Wilhelm Simon at the Dresden Musikhochschule. He then played until 1970 as an orchestral musician, mainly in Leipzig. He devoted his career to fulltime teaching in 1970, teaching at the Freital Music School. In 1980, he switched to the Dresden Musikhochschule, becoming a full professor in 1993 and simultaneously heading the brass department at the Dresden Special School of Music. He retired in 1999. He wrote a beginning trumpet method book in 1991, and in 2004 the second volume with the title Der junge Trompeter.

Wilson, Andrew L[oiry] (b. Mt. Vernon, Ohio, July 17, 1968). American trumpeter and cornetist. Wilson grew up in Gambier, Ohio.

His first trumpet lessons were with Garen Milton and David Eaton. From 1986 to 1991, he attended The Ohio State University where he studied with Thomas Battenberg and Richard Burkart, after which he joined the Air Combat Command Heartland of America Band in Omaha, Nebraska as principal solo cornet. In 1994, he took over the same positions with the US Air Force Concert Band in Washington, D.C., and became a member of the USAF Brass Quintet. He earned a master of music degree at Catholic University between 1994 and 1997, studying with Langston Fitzgerald III and James Stubbs.

Wilson has received several awards including the Meritorious Service Medal with two oak leaf clusters, National Defense Service Medal with bronze star, Global War on Terrorism Service Medal, and the USAF NCO PME Graduate Ribbon with one oak leaf cluster.

Wilson, Clive (b. London, England, Aug. 19, 1942). British trumpeter with U.S. citizenship. Wilson played piano as a child, and took up the cornet at age sixteen. He attended Newcastle University, earning a degree in physics. He also took trumpet lessons with Owen Bryce (1961). At age twenty-four, he made the decision to make New Orleans-style jazz his profession, so he moved permanently to New Orleans in 1964. He listened to and sat in with many of the city's leading bands. He also took jazz lessons from many of the leaders, including DeDe Pierce (1966), Alvin Alcorn (1967), Punch Miller (1964), Phil Parker Jr. (1968-70, in London), Frank Trapani (1970-72), John Nelson, and Mickey McCurdy (1973-74). During the early 1970s, Wilson studied music at the Loyola School of Music in New Orleans while performing jazz at night.

Wilson's early experience was with the Paragon Brass Band led by Mike Casimir (1965), after which he played with the Andrew Morgan Brass Band (Feb. 1966 with Kid Thomas, Andy Anderson, Reginald Koeller, and Milton Batiste, trumpets), Easy Riders Jazz Band (Connecticut, 1966, for two months), Capt. John Handy, coleader of the Louis James Orchestra (in New Orleans, 1967), Young Tuxedo Brass Band (1966-68), Olympia Brass Band, Barry Martyn's bands (1968-69 tour and New Orleans Jazz Festival), Albert Nicholas (1968), Paragon Brass Band (again, 1968), Emmanuel Sayles (1969), Raymond Ancar Big Band (1970), his own band in New Orleans, and the Young Tuxedo Brass Band (again, 1970-73). He played at Shrine Auditorium in Los Angeles for the Louis Armstrong Birthday (1970) and played with the Olympia Brass Band (Sept. 1972), Dave Williams (1973), Papa French's Original Tuxedo Jass Band (1974-77), Johnny Wiggs (1974), Alvin Alcorn's Imperial Brass Band (1976-77), Dave Williams Quartet (1977), Bob Greene's World of Jelly Roll Morton Show (1979-82), Teddy Riley's Brass Band, Chris Burke Quartet (1983), and with the Tulane Hot Jazz Classic Reunion (1983). Wilson is best known, however, as the founder, soloist, and leader of the Original Camellia Jazz Band (since 1979) with which he participated in a European tour with Herb Hall. Wilson also performed at jazz festivals in Berne, Switzerland (1987), and Ascona, Italy (with Bob Wilber in 1986).

Clive Wilson's albums include Original Camellia Jazz Band (GHB), That's My Home (Jazzology), Jazzology All Stars 50th Anniversary Jazz Bash (Jazzology), On Tour (Swift, with Barry Marytn), and Heart Full of Rhythm (Audiophile). Clive Wilson and the Camellia Jazz Band remain one of New Orleans's top attractions.

Wilson, Iaan J. (b. Huntington, England, Jan. 4, 1947). British trumpeter. Wilson was a pioneer of the Baroque (valveless) trumpet and cornetto in England. He began his orchestral career at age nineteen as principal trumpet of the Ulster Orchestra, and from 1972 to 1986 was with the BBC Symphony Orchestra. He has also been a member of the Royal Opera House Orchestra at Covent Garden and the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble.

Wilson taught modern trumpet, Baroque trumpet, and cornetto at the Trinity College of Music in London from 1980 to 1992. He then became professor of trumpet at the Royal Academy of Music. Currently, he is a professor at the University of Canterbury in New Zealand, and a member of the English National Opera Orchestra there. He can be heard on numerous recordings, and was the first to record Vivaldi's Concerto in C for Two Trumpets on Baroque trumpet.

Wilt, James ("Jim") G. (b. Mt. Clemens, Michigan, Jan. 9, 1962). American trumpeter. While growing up in Mt. Clemens, Michigan (near Detroit), Wilt began playing the trumpet at age nine; his teachers were John Chipurn and Gordon Smith. Wilt's father Hugh was a foreman for the Ford Motor Company, and his mother Catherine a homemaker. After graduating from Clintondale High School in 1980, he attended the Cincinnati Conservatory where he studied with Eugene Blee, and graduated magna cum laude in 1984. He then attended the Eastman School where he studied with Charles Geyer, and earned a performer's certificate in 1986. Additionally, he studied with Edward Treutel in New York.

Wilt's orchestral experience is vast. He was third trumpet of the Dayton Philharmonic (1983-84), third in the Rochester Philharmonic (1985-86), third/associate principal of the Denver Symphony—and principal in the DSO Pops (1986-89), fourth/associate principal of the Houston Symphony Orchestra (1989-94 and 1995-2003), and fourth in the New York Philharmonic (1994-95). In 2003, he won his current position as fourth/associate principal trumpet of the Los Angeles Philharmonic. He is also an adjunct professor at the Colburn Conservatory of Music. He has previously taught as an adjunct professor at Rice University, California State University-Long Beach, and the University of Northern Colorado.

An active soloist and chamber music performer, Wilt has performed with Da Camera, Greenbriar Consortium, and various chamber ensembles. He has performed at the Grand Teton Festival in Wyoming and the Colorado Music Festival in Boulder. In 2007, he was invited to be a guest principal trumpet of the Symphonica Toscanini under Maestro Lorin Maazel.

Wilt, and Allison Wilt, owner and president of RESMR, Inc., a market research consulting company, were married in 1988, and have two children, Colin (b. 1994) and Liam (b. 1996). Wilt's hobbies include audio equipment, automobiles, traveling, and golf.

Windhurst, John ("Johnny") Henry (b. Bronx, New York, Nov. 5, 1926; d. Poughkeepsie, New York, Oct. 2, 1981). American trumpeter. A self-taught musician who never learned to read music, Windhurst turned professional at the age of eighteen, having been influenced by the playing of Bix Beiderbecke. (His later influences were Wild Bill Davison, Billy Butterfield, and Bunny Berigan.) In the following year, he replaced Bunk Johnson in Sidney Bechet's band in Boston. He freelanced in the Boston area for a few years, spent some time playing in Chicago in 1946, and then traveled to California to play with Nappy Lamare (1947-48). He also recorded with Edmund Hall and Louis Armstrong in 1947-48 and with Ruby Braff in 1951. In 1950, he became a member of Eddie Condon's band.

From 1950 to 1952, Windhurst led his Riverboat Five in Ohio and Boston. He rejoined Condon's band in 1952, and in 1953 worked with George Wettling. He toured with Jack Teagarden's band in 1954 and led several Dixieland groups in the Midwest. From 1955 to 1960, Windhurst was again with Condon's band. He began to drink too much, but managed to record with Barbara Lea (1955-57), Jack Teagarden (1955), Walt Gifford's New Yorkers, Lee Wiley, and his own quartet that recorded an album, Jazz at Columbus Avenue for the Transition record label, in 1956. He appeared in an Art Ford television show playing Pennies from Heaven (1958). By the time he left Condon's band in 1960, he was a full-blown alcoholic.

Windhurst nearly quit playing after 1960 but still occasionally performed at Frivolous Sal's Last Chance Saloon, a local nightclub in Pooghkeepsie, New York. His drinking problem continued for twenty years until he died of a heart attack just one week before his fifty-fifth birthday.

Winfield, Charles ("Chuck") (b. Monessen, Pennsylvania, Feb. 5, 1943). American trumpeter. Winfield received a bachelor of science degree from The Juilliard School in 1965, and a master of science degree in 1966. He is also a graduate of Columbia University. Between 1968 and 1973, he was a member of the pop group, Blood Sweat & Tears (with trumpeter Lew Soloff), which sold millions of recordings including the hit singles, Spinning Wheel, And When I Die, and You've Made Me So Very Happy. He has also played with the Four Tops, the Supremes, Bobby Darrin, and Cab Calloway. In addition to trumpet, he plays flugelhorn, French horn, and baritone.

For the last several years, Winfield has been teaching at the University of Maine in Augusta. He founded the university jazz program and teaches a course titled The Dream Machine: The History of Rock and Roll.

Winick, Steven D[avid] (b. 1944; d. Jan. 23, 1996). American trumpeter. Winick earned degrees at the Eastman School of Music: masters in 1968, and doctorate in 1973. He taught trumpet at Georgia State University for many years, and was the interim department chair from 1975 to 1978. He served as chair from 1978 to 1985, and became director of the school of music from 1985-87. He formed the Peachtree Brass quintet in order to perform concerts in schools. He also published Rhythm: An Annotated Bibliography.

Winick was a respected and well-liked man. He and his wife, Sharon, had a daughter, Suellen, and a son, Jeffrey. He died at the age of approximately fifty-two after a long battle with cancer.

Winther, Jens (b. Næstved, Denmark, Oct. 29, 1960; d. Geneva, Switzerland, Feb. 24, 2011). Danish trumpeter, flugelhornist, composer, and bandleader. Winther began playing trumpet at age ten, and at age eighteen moved to Copenhagen to become a professional freelance musician. He played with the New Jungle Orchestra, Erling Kroner Tentet, Candentia Nova Danica, and Ernie Wilkins's Almost Big Band. From 1982 to 1989, he was soloist and composer with the Danish Radio (DR) Big Band.

Winther moved to New York City in 1989 to join the Jazz Composer's Workshop under the direction of Bob Brookmeyer. He also worked as a freelance trumpeter, playing in bands led by Toshiko Akiyoshi, Eddie Palmieri, Kenny Barron, Max Roach, Tito Puente, Mario Bauzá, George Mraz, and Xavier Cugat. After the workshop ended, he returned to Denmark in 1991 where he composed for numerous big bands in Scandinavia and Germany, and performed with various jazz orchestras including his own Jens Winther Group. On May 5, 1994 his Trumpet Concerto with symphony orchestra was premiered, and in 1998 he toured with George Gruntz's concert band. He was soloist on April 29, 1999 with the Århus Symphony Orchestra in his Second Trumpet Concerto ("The Eagle"). He also performed on many occasions with the famed Metropole Orchestra in the Netherlands.

In 2007, Winther founded his popular group, the JW European Quintet, that toured America, Canada, Australia, and China. In 2008, he formed JW Electrazz, a fusion band. In 2009, he moved to Berlin where he formed the JW Berlin Quintet. He received numerous awards including the Ben Webster Prize (1987), First Prize in the Monaco International Competition of Jazz Themes (1990 and 1991), Honorary Award from Danish Jazz Beat and Folk Authors (1995), Danish Grammy for Best Danish Jazz Recording, and a Lifelong Grant from the Danish Arts Foundation (2009).

Winther died in his sleep, reportedly from a stroke, in Geneva, Switzerland. He was fifty.

Wise, Alan (b. Alva, Oklahoma, Apr. 20, 1957). American trumpeter. Wise grew up in Loveland, Colorado, and started playing drums in elementary school. His father took him to hear a concert by Herb Alpert and The Tijuana Brass, after which he decided to switch to the trumpet just before eighth grade. He took lessons with Gil Garcia and studied the LP recordings of Bill Chase, Maynard Ferguson, Doc Severinsen, and Al Hirt. He attended Colorado State University, studying with Jacob Larson, and later studied at The Ohio State University.

Wise became the lead trumpet player for Maynard Ferguson's band from 1980 to 1986. He also taught trumpet at Cloud County Community College in Junction City, Kansas. He was a guest artist at the 1991 Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland, and is today active as a private teacher and clinician.

Wise, Wilmer (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Dec. 21, 1936). American trumpeter. Wise not only had one of the most interesting careers of any trumpeter, but was also one of the first black trumpeters to become a leading classical performer. While growing up in Philadelphia during the 1940s and '50s, he was no stranger to segregation and bigotry.

Wise began playing the trumpet at the age of eight, guided by a music teacher named Anthony DelCampo (four years). He later studied with Arthur Cohn, Sigmund Hering (five years), Samuel Krauss (four years), Nat Prager (two years), and briefly with Gilbert Johnson (one summer). While attending Edward Bok High School, he was a member of the Philadelphia Little Symphony, and performed the Piano Concerto No. 1 of Shostakovich with the then fourteen-year-old Andre Watts. Soon after graduating in 1955, he played second trumpet to James Burke in the Trenton Symphony in New Jersey. His final teacher was Arthur Cohen at the Manhattan School of Music (1958-59). As a young man, Wise performed with Dick Clark's Youth Band, the Intruders, the Club Harlem Band in Atlantic City (1962), and Quincy Jones's band (a few nights in 1960, on a trumpet in C).

In addition, he performed Haydn's Trumpet Concerto in E-flat with the Philadelphia Orchestra when he was twenty-six years old, the first trumpeter to perform a solo with the orchestra.

In 1960, Wise became the first black musician to perform at the Schubert Theater in Philadelphia. He also played the musical, Showgirl, at the Locust Theater in Philadelphia, and during the summer of 1960, at the Valley Forge Music Theater. He played principal trumpet in the Brooklyn Philharmonic under Lucas Foss and Leonard Bernstein. He was assistant principal of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra from 1965 to 1970, during a time when the city was struggling with the Civil Rights movement. In 1965, Wise was selected to become a member of the Symphony of the New World, a fully integrated orchestra funded by the Ford Foundation, which played a concert at Carnegie Hall in New York. (Joe Wilder was a member of the trumpet section.) Wise toured Europe with the Music of Marlboro Orchestra, led by Rudolf Serkin.

In 1970, Wise moved to New York City where his first job was with the American Symphony Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski. He participated as lead trumpet in the only recording of West Side Story under Leonard Bernstein, and later played the show on Broadway. This was one of over thirty large Broadway shows in which he would perform during his career. He recorded with Pablo Casals and Philip Glass, performed on occasion with the New York Philharmonic, and can be heard playing Purcell's Sonata on the soundtrack of the movie Kramer Versus Kramer. He also performed on the soundtracks of other films, including Into the Woods, Assassins, and Sunday in the Park with George.

Wise retired in 2003 after serving in the West Chester Symphony for fifteen years, and as principal trumpet in the Brooklyn Philharmonic for thirty-five years. He has taught at Brooklyn College (1975-77), Morgan State University, and the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. Wise is a humble man, willing to help others develop their trumpet playing and careers; he hosts several internet trumpet chat sites.

Wiseman, Larry F. (b. near Elkhart, Indiana, June 25, 1943; d. Indianapolis, Indiana, Mar. 3, 2002). American trumpeter. Wiseman was the son of Laurel Wiseman, trumpeter and C.G. Conn Company representative based in Elkhart, Indiana. In addition to studying trumpet with his father, he took lessons from Carmine Caruso, Vincent Cichowicz, and Raymond Crisara.

Wiseman was one of the Midwest's top lead and jazz trumpet players. He toured and recorded with various Broadway musicals, as well as with Frank Sinatra, Andy Williams, Dionne Warwick, The Temptations, Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra, and the Al Cobine orchestra. He taught as an adjunct professor at DePauw University in Greencastle, Indiana, from 1993. He died at the age of fifty-eight after a lengthy struggle with pancreatic cancer.

Wiseman and his wife Delores ("Dolly"), maker of DollyBags trumpet cases, had two sons, Steve and Jason, who are professional trumpeters in the New York area. He is also survived by a daughter-in-law Josie and granddaughter Lia.

Witchey, Frank W. (b. Kansas City, Missouri, Nov. 11, 1891; d. Arlington, Virginia, Sept. 30, 1945). American trumpeter and bugler. Witchey began playing trumpet and bugle at age nine. His entire career was in the 3rd Cavalry Regiment, in which he eventually became a Technical Sergeant. He was the chief bugler at Arlington National Cemetery for decades, performing Taps at hundreds of funerals including those for Presidents Woodrow Wilson and William Howard Taft. He also performed at the interment ceremonies of the Unknown Soldier, President Harding presiding (Nov. 11, 1921). Witchey purchased his military bugle when he retired in 1938, and had it gold plated and engraved with all of the important dates at which he per-formed. It is now on display in the 3rd Cavalry Museum in Ft. Carson, Colorado.

Witchey died of heart disease at the age of fifty-three. His infant son Francis died in 1922.

Wobisch, Helmut (b. Vienna, Austria, Oct. 25, 1912; d. Vienna, Austria, Feb. 20, 1980). Austrian trumpeter. Wobisch was an important figure in the activities and repertoire of the trumpet. He studied with Avraham Honigsberg and Franz Dengler in Vienna. He played in the Vienna Brass Choir conducted by Hans-Heinz Scholtys (active 1934-44), a group that increasingly came under the influence of Nazism. For example, Richard Strauss wrote his last large brass ensemble work, Festmusik der Stadt Wien, in 1943 for the fifth anniversary of Austria's annexation into Nazi Germany, even conducting the premiere performance on April 9 himself. The composer Karl Pilss wrote the majority of his brass works for the group.

Wobisch also played principal trumpet in the Vienna Philharmonic (1939-45), after having performed for three years in the Opera Orchestra. It must be said that he was one of four musicians released from the orchestra at the end of the war because of Nazi connections (he was fired without notice on May 1, 1945); he had joined the National Socialist party in 1933 and a year later became a member of the SS. He led the wind instrument training of the Hitler Youth and also functioned as an informer, writing reports – some of which survive – about certain orchestral colleagues.

After some post war time to allow his Nazi connections to be ignored, the very skilled Wobisch reappeared at the highest Austrian musical functions. He was reinstated on April 1, 1951 as second trumpet in the Volksoper, and then was the coprincipal trumpet of the Vienna Philharmonic until 1978, even becoming its manager from 1952 to 1969. He also played in the ORF Austrian Radio Orchestra (along with Hans Gansch). In 1966, Wobisch negotiated to bring Maestro Leonard Bernstein to guest conduct the Opera in 1966 for a production of Verdi's Falstaff, and a year later to conduct the Philharmonic with Mahler's Symphony No. 3, quite a feat considering the recent political climate and Bernstein's Jewish birth. Bernstein returned to Vienna many times and did not hold Wobisch's past against him, even referring to him humorously as his "SS man" or his "Nazi friend." It was the association between the two that led to Wobisch's organization of the annual Carinthian Summer music festival in 1969.

Wobisch played under conductors Wilhelm Fürtwangler, Karl Böhm, Erich Kleiber, Clemens Krauss, and Hermann Scherchen. He was very respected in the Vienna Philharmonic. He had taught at the Vienna Conservatory before the war and was a professor at the Vienna Music Academy for many years (1954-80). His best-known student is Carole Dawn Reinhart.

In 1950, Wobisch made the first complete recording on long-playing records of the Haydn Trumpet Concerto in E-flat with orchestra (Vienna State Opera). (He performed it on a Heckel B-flat trumpet without a water key.) This was after Harry Mortimer (1945) and Harry Sevenstern (1948) had made partial recordings, and just before one made by Roger Delmotte (1952) who praised Wobisch's interpretation of the work. Wobisch also recorded the difficult trumpet parts of Bach; in 1952 he recorded Cantata BWV 51 with singer Teresa Stich-Randall and in 1954, the Second Brandenburg Concerto under Felix Prohaska with the Vienna State Opera Chamber Orchestra (produced in March 1956). (Wobisch performed the work on a long-bell piccolo B-flat trumpet built by Franz Cizek around 1947-48, and used an anonymous assistant to play the lower notes.)

Wobisch had a great enthusiasm for promoting the trumpet as a solo instrument, and had a keen interest in learning about old repertoire, instruments and styles of playing. Like Roger Delmotte, Adolf Scherbaum, and Roger Voisin, Wobisch was a pioneer of the Baroque revival, and made historic recordings with the I Solisti di Zagreb in Vienna—including some rarely played works by Perti, Torelli, and Alberti, among others (1962-64).

Wobisch played the Heckel trumpet and, with Cizek, codesigned a new type of fanfare trumpet in D with four independent valves, making it playable in the keys of D, E-flat, E, F, and F-sharp. Only forty such fanfare trumpets were made, and a set of them saw use by the Hitler Youth of Vienna.

Wöggel, Michael (b. Rastatt, Germany, 1748; d. Karlsruhe, Germany, Jan. 9, 1811). German trumpeter. Wöggel became a court trumpeter in Karlsruhe in 1772. Taking as a point of departure the hand-stopping technique for horn invented by Anton Joseph Hampel, Wöggel invented a natural trumpet bent in the form of a half moon that allowed the player to insert three fingers of the right hand into the bell far enough to effectively "stop" the bell, creating pitches a half or whole step lower than the notes of the harmonic series. When he performed in 1773 at the royal court in Paris, he was praised for a tone so soft and mellow that even one of the greatest experts thought his instrument was a flute until he saw the player. Wöggel was also a violinist and an expert watchmaker.

Wohlgemuth, Heinrich [Heinz, Henry Edward] (b. Bremen, Germany, June 1, 1890; d. Miami, Florida, Aug. 28, 1974). German trumpeter. Wohlgemuth was principal trumpet of the Charlottenburg Opera orchestra in Berlin from 1912 to 1925, and was succeeded by Willi Liebe. He immigrated to the United States, and became principal of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra from 1925 to 1956. (Eugene Blee succeeded him.) He was the teacher of Louis Davidson and Gene Young. Wohlgemuth, who was an advocate of the so-called pivot system later expounded by Donald S. Reinhardt, retired to Miami, Florida, where he enjoyed playing in local dance bands.

Wohlwender, Thomas (b. Cincinnati, Ohio, c1934). American trumpeter. Wohlwender's father was a salesman, and his mother sang in a church choir. He began learning to play the trumpet at age eight by taking lessons from a Mr. Hathaway in Cincinnati. Two years later, he took lessons from Herbert Tiemeyer (second trumpet of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra), and continued taking lessons from him through high school; Tiemeyer advised him to learn the piano, too. Wohlwender was an exceptional soloist, who by age fourteen performed the Haydn concerto with the Cincinnati Civic Orchestra in front of nearly five thousand people. After being accepted to several leading schools of music, Wohlwender decided to study with Samuel Krauss at the Curtis Institute where he also minored in piano.

After graduating from Curtis, Wohlwender played as solo cornetist with the US Army Band in Washington, D.C. from 1954 to 1957. He received an early discharge when he won the principal trumpet position with the Denver Symphony Orchestra. During his one year with the DSO, Wohlwender played everything on a Chicago-made Benge B-flat trumpet; he used a B-flat trumpet throughout most of his career. He then moved to New Orleans to assume duties as the principal trumpet of the New Orleans Symphony from 1958 to 1960.

George Szell hired Wohlwender as second trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra in 1960, a position he retained through the spring of 1972. He participated in the famous Gabrieli recording that combined the brass sections of the Philadelphia, Cleveland, and Chicago orchestras, an experience he remembers as being the highlight of his musical life.

In 1970, Wohlwender and his wife were leaving a Cleveland Browns football game when a pickpocket attempted to steal his wallet. A fight ensued, and Wohlwender was struck in the mouth with brass knuckles, tearing his lips to pieces; he fell, and when his head hit the pavement, he suffered a concussion that rendered him unconscious. Wohlwender was taken to the Browns locker room where the team surgeon sewed his lip back together. The wound healed properly, but nerve damage caused him to lose the fine motor skills needed to play softly. He developed a stutter on pianissimo entrances that would not go away.

Adolph Herseth called Wohlwender to ask how he was recovering, and invited him to his home in Chicago to play duets. Herseth's playing, advice, and encouragement inspired him a great deal, but the physical problems could not be overcome. He later took a few lessons with Arnold Jacobs, tubist of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, but nothing could be done to improve his soft playing. As a result, Szell did not renew Wohlwender's contract for the 1972-73 season.

Fortunately, Wohlwender had saved some money, and was able to move to Florida where friends from the Bach Corporation introduced him to the owners of Bandwagon Music, a new music store in Orlando. He became a part owner in the company, and began working as a salesman in the store. He also taught trumpet lessons in his home, as well as part-time at the University of Central Florida in Orlando. Within a short time, however, Wohlwender sold his shares of the company, and he and his wife obtained their real estate licenses; Walt Disney World had recently opened in Orlando, and real estate was booming in the city. They were quite successful in the real estate business, and later became co-owners of Daniel and Wohlwender Real Estate.

Although Wohlwender's orchestral career was cut short by a tragic accident, his influence has continued through his students; among his finest are Rob Smith, David Trigg, Charlie Peshek, and John Almeida. Trumpet players that Wohlwender most admires are Wynton Marsalis, Doc Severinsen, Timofei Dokshitser, and Bernard Adelstein.

Wolf, Erwin (Plauen, Vogtland, Germany, Dec. 7, 1919; d. Münster, Germany, Sept. 30, 1994). German trumpeter. Wolf began his career with the Plauen Theater Orchestra under Eugen Jochum. During World War II, he joined the military and was assigned to the Dresden Radio Orchestra. From 1946 to 1957, he played principal trumpet in the Dresden Staatskapelle, and taught for a while at the Dresden Conservatory. During the 1950s, he was an active soloist and performer of the cantatas of Johann Sebastian Bach. Among his many premieres was the trumpet concerto by Siegfried Kurz in 1953. After 1957, Wolf was a member of the Hannover State Theatre and taught at the Academy of Music and Theatre in Hannover, and starting in 1961 was principal of the Bayreuth Festival Orchestra. He died at the age of seventy-four.

Wolf, Hans (b. Neumarkt, Upper Palatinate, Germany, July 29, 1938). German trumpeter. Wolf studied at the City Conservatory of Nuremberg, Trapp Conservatory, and the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Munich. His orchestral career includes being principal trumpet of the Nuremberg Symphony (1961-64), Dortmund Philharmonic Orchestra (1964-69), Württemberg State Orchestra (1969-73), and Stuttgart Radio Orchestra (since 1973). He taught in Dortmund during the late 1960s, and from 1978 to 1992 taught at the Staatliche Hochschule for Music and the Performing Arts in Stuttgart. He has performed with numerous German opera and festival orchestras in Germany, for example in Bayreuth, as well as the Bach Collegium Stuttgart, Brass Philharmonic Stuttgart, and the Stuttgart Trumpet Quintet. He also made many solo appearances worldwide. From 1985 to 1991, he was a member of the famed large brass ensemble, German Brass.

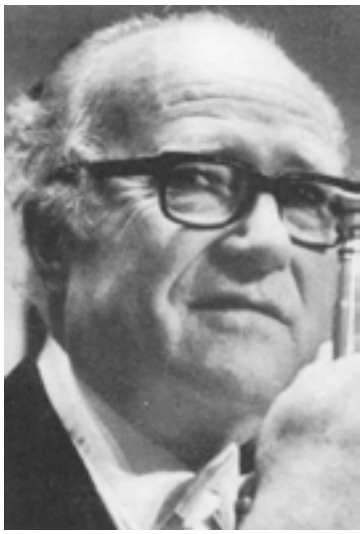
Woodbury, Max St. Clair (b. 1907; d. 2002). American trumpeter. Little is known of Woodbury's early life. He played in the trumpet section of the Cleveland Orchestra from 1929 to 1934. He was principal trumpet of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1937 to 1968, played in another position in the trumpet section from 1968 to 1975, and served as the orchestra's personnel manager from 1968 to 1976.



Woodbury taught at the Arthur Jordan Conservatory of Music and at Indiana University from 1939 to 1946. Among his students were Freddie Hubbard and Edmund Cord. He also taught at the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, during the summers of 1940 and 1941.

Woolf, Vance (b. Motueka, New Zealand, Dec. 5, 1970). New Zealand trumpeter. Woolf earned a bachelor of music degree at the Victoria University of Wellington, where as a student he served as a cornetist in the Central Band of the Royal New Zealand Air Force. He also performed as a member of the New Zealand Symphony and Auckland Philharmonic.

Woolf immigrated to the United States in 1992, and studied with Mario Guarneri at the San Francisco Conservatory, where he earned a master of music degree. He played for one year with the Westwind Brass and Stockton Symphony Orchestra, and was twice selected to participate in the Pacific Music Festival in Japan. He spent two summers at the Academy of the West in Los Angeles, and won the Maurice Faulkner Award, which enabled him to study briefly in Chicago with Adolph Herseth. Woolf spent one year working towards a doctorate in music at the University of Miami where he was a teaching assistant to Gilbert Johnson. While in Florida, Woolf worked as a substitute trumpeter with the New World Symphony and the Palm Beach Opera Orchestra.

In 2000, Woolf won the principal trumpet chair of the Louisiana Philharmonic Orchestra in New Orleans. He taught as an adjunct faculty member at Southeastern Louisiana University, and often performed as an extra or substitute with the Houston Symphony Orchestra. However, in August of 2005, Hurricane Katrina devastated the city of New Orleans, which forced him and other members of the orchestra to leave the area. He and his wife Samantha (a horn player in the Louisiana Philharmonic) moved to Seattle where they found temporary work as studio musicians. The Seattle Symphony invited him and other LPO members to join it in a benefit concert to raise funds for the LPO. Soon, the Nashville Symphony held a similar concert, followed by the New York Philharmonic's benefit concert that raised over $400,000. The LPO was reorganized, and its members returned to New Orleans in December of 2005.

Today, Woolf continues his position with the Louisiana Philharmonic Orchestra, and is a member of the New Orleans Uptown Brass quintet. He is an adjunct faculty member at Tulane University.

Woolworth, [William] Neal (b. Sioux City, Iowa, Oct. 26, 1963). American trumpeter. After graduating from North High School in Sioux City, Iowa, Woolworth attended Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, where he studied with Robert Weast, and graduated in 1986. He then did graduate work at Arizona State University with professor David Hickman, receiving a master of music degree in 1989. He served as one of Hickman's graduate teaching assistants (1988-90), and worked towards a DMA degree in trumpet performance, which he completed in 1993.

Woolworth filled a one-year sabbatical replacement position as instructor of trumpet at Brigham Young University (1991-92), and another one-year appointment at Youngstown State University in Ohio (1993-94). He was also a finalist for the first Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition held in Columbus, Ohio, where he received a recognition award.

Woolworth's fulltime orchestral career began in 1994 when he became principal trumpet of a symphony orchestra in Mexico. After several years there, he returned to the U.S. to fill a one-year position as trumpet teacher at the University of Arkansas. He returned to Mexico around 2002, and has performed as principal in several other symphony and chamber orchestras. He was also a professor and principal trumpet of the Orquesta Sinfónica Nacional del Ecuador, and is now working in Mexico City.

Woomert, Barton R. (b. Lancaster, Pennsylvania, July 29, 1952). American trumpeter. Woomert began his professional career immediately after high school when he joined the US Marine Band in Washington, D.C. After four years of service, he earned a bachelor of music degree at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore. His teachers were James Hustis, Donald Tison, and Seymour Rosenfeld. After graduating, he accepted his first orchestral position as principal trumpet of the Orquestra Sinfónica Venezuela and the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra of Caracas. He then moved to Canada to become principal of the Hamilton Philharmonic Orchestra.

In 1982, Woomert was appointed associate principal trumpet of the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. There, he founded the Toronto Symphony Brass Quintet. Concurrently, he was the trumpet instructor at the University of Toronto. He is also a Brass Musician-in-Residence at Wilfrid Laurier University, and teaches during the summers at several music camps including the Interprovincial Music Camp and the Lancaster County Music Camp in Pennsylvania.

Woomert and his wife have three sons. His hobbies are long-distance running, rowing, and sailing.

Work, Jeffrey ("Jeff") (b. Hastings-on-Hudson, New York, Dec. 23, 1965). American trumpeter. Work began lessons at age eight with Peter Crino, but after a year he and his family moved to the Northern Virginia suburbs of Washington, D.C. There, he took lessons from Sgt. Major Robert Ferguson and, for one year, David Flowers. After graduating from J.E.B. Stuart High School in 1983, Work attended the New England Conservatory, studying with Charles Schlueter and earning a bachelor of music degree in 1987. He then studied with Armando Ghitalla at the University of Michigan, earning a master of music degree in 1989.

Work stayed in Michigan and began his freelance career there, but returned to Boston in 1993 to pursue an Artist Diploma at the New England Conservatory, and in 1995, became the first trumpeter to be so honored by that institution. At NEC, he resumed half-time studies with Charles Schlueter, and took the rest of his lessons from a variety of nontrumpeters on NEC's faculty. During these formative years, Work's career included a few notable solo engagements and competition successes, two of which resulted in appearances with the National Symphony Orchestra (1985 and 1992) and subsequent concerts at the Rencontres Musicales d'Evian (1993 and 1997). He won Second Prize at the 1992 Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition. Radio France sponsored his 1994 Paris solo debut. Work has given two important world premieres, Eric Ewazen's Concerto for Trumpet and String Orchestra (1998, the string orchestra version of the composer's Quintet for Trumpet and Strings) and James Stephenson's Concerto for Trumpet (2003, as well as the later version with band accompaniment, 2007). He recorded Haydn's Trumpet Concerto with the Missouri Chamber Orchestra (private label) in 1997.

Work's active freelance career in Boston, spanning 1993-2006, primarily focused on orchestral playing. In addition to regular substitute and extra work with the city's major performing groups, Work served as principal trumpet of the Boston Philharmonic under Benjamin Zander. He can be heard on its recordings of Mahler's Symphony No. 6, Shostakovich's Symphony No. 5, and Stravinsky's Petrouchka (Carlton Classics). He can also be heard on Boston Modern Orchestra Project, Emmanuel Music, Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra, and Boston Symphony Orchestra recordings. Each summer since 1999, Work has been principal trumpet of the Colorado Music Festival in Boulder, and moved to Portland in 2006 to begin duties as principal trumpet of the Oregon Symphony Orchestra.

Work's hobbies include golfing, hiking, and making stained glass decorative art works.

Worley, John L[eonard] Jr. (b. San Francisco, California, Nov. 15, 1955). American trumpeter. Worley grew up in the San Francisco area. He began playing trumpet at age nine; his early teachers were Owen

Bruce, John Coppola, Al Molina, Bill Resch, Allen Smith, and Joyce Johnson-Hamilton. After graduating from Jefferson High School in Daly City, California in 1973, he attended Skyline College (in San Bruno), the College of San Mateo, De Anza College (in Cupertino), and California State University (in Los Angeles). His college trumpet teachers were Herb Patnoe and Fred Berry. Worley also studied briefly with Woody Shaw.

Worley is a highly versatile musician who has performed with the Carla Bley/Steve Swallow Big Band, The Jon Jang Seven (2005), San Jose Jazz Orchestra, Ed Johnson's Novo Tempo, Maria Schneider, Ingrid Jensen, Don Bryon (2002), Stanley Clarke, Wayne Shorter Sextet, Monterey Jazz Festival Chamber Orchestra, Richie Cole and the Alto Madness Orchestra, Boz Scaggs, Jon Jang, Asian American Orchestra, Rebeca Mauleon, Wayne Wallace, Louie Bellson, Ella Fitzgerald, Joe Henderson Big Band, Dizzy Gillespie, Woody Herman, Quincy Jones, Pete Escovedo, Brilliant Corners Tentet, Bay Area Jazz Composers Orchestra, and the Turtle Island String Quartet. His debut CD, WorlView, was released in 2003 on his own Dancing Sumo Records label (established 2003). Worley is currently the founder and leader of the Mo-Chi Quartet, Bari Bari, and coleader (with saxophonist Oscar Pangillinan) of the Red Dragon Quintet. He has taught at San Francisco State University (1996-2002) and is currently teaching at Stanford University (since 2008).

Worley and Susan Clare Worley (a ceramic artist, art instructor, and art entertainer) have been married since 1997. His hobbies include ceramics, hiking, tennis, antiques, enology, and researching and collecting trumpets.

Wright, Benjamin ("Ben") (b. Evansville, Indiana, Dec. 1974). American trumpeter. Wright began playing the violin at age three, and the trumpet when he was ten. He comes from a long line of musicians going back to his great-great-great grandfather, a bandleader and cornetist in Buffalo Bill Cody's circus band. During his senior year of high school, he attended the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan where he studied with John Lindenau. After graduating in 1993, he earned a bachelor of music degree at the Cleveland Institute of Music (CIM) in 1997, studying with Michael Sachs. His final studies were in New York City with Mark Gould, in Maryland with Chris Gekker, in Chicago with Charles Geyer, and two summers at the Tanglewood Institute (summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra). In 1995, he won first prize in the International Trumpet Guild's annual solo competition and the Scholarship Competition in St. Louis, as well as the CIM Solo Competition.

Wright's first orchestra job was with the Kennedy Center Opera in Washington, D.C. (1998-2000). In 2000, he became the fourth/utility trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and in July of 2002 was selected as fourth trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. From 2006-08, he was acting assistant principal of the BSO, and in February of 2010 was named the permanent second trumpet of the orchestra. He is also a member of the Boston Pops Orchestra, and has performed as a guest with the New York Philharmonic, San Francisco Symphony, and the National Symphony Orchestra. Wright currently teaches at the New England Conservatory of Music and the Tanglewood Institute. He previously taught at the Boston Conservatory.

Wright married cellist Miriam Bolkosky in 2000. Their twin sons are Samuel and Ethan, born in 2009. He enjoys woodworking (cabinet making) and woodturning (trumpet stands, pens, etc.).

Wright, Elbridge G. (b. Ashby, Massachusetts, Mar. 1, 1811; d. Boston, Massachusetts, Mar. 15, 1871). American manufacturer. Elbridge was one of at least eight children born to Elijah Wright and Levina Lawrence Wright, farmers. He may have worked at other trades for a while, because evidence of his earliest attempts at making brass instruments comes from the late 1830s, his oldest known instrument being an ophicleide from about 1839. At that time, he lived in Roxbury, Massachusetts, now part of Boston. His son, George C. Wright, was born in Roxbury in that same year.

Wright opened a shop in Boston in 1841, and soon became well known for his excellent keyed bugles in E-flat (nine keys). He entered a keyed trumpet in the exhibit of the Massachusetts Charitable Mechanic Association in 1841, but the entry arrived too late to be judged. By the mid 1840s, he was considered the leading maker of keyed bugles in America. In 1845, he formed a partnership with a Mr. Baldwin, but it lasted only one year. In 1847, he entered a keyed bugle for exhibit, but again it was deemed to have arrived too late to be evaluated. From 1858 to 1859, he worked in Lowell, Massachusetts, but returned to Boston in 1860.

With the surge in sales of keyed bugles during the Civil War, Wright formed a partnership with J. Lathrop Allen in the 1860s. Together, they produced many brass instruments of various sizes ranging from E-flat bass (probably an ophicleide) to E-flat soprano (keyed bugle). Around 1864, they began manufacturing instruments with valves (mainly Vienna and rotary) and even produced several rather curious soprano instruments with valves and keys together (!). He entered a full set of brass instruments for exhibit in 1865, and was awarded the first silver prize for superior tone and workmanship. Wright was an active performer who played dance music nightly during the early 1860s. He was also the director of the Wright & McDonald Quadrille Band and the Wright & Newcombe Quadrille Band from 1860 to 1861. Which instrument he played is not known.

In 1869, Wright merged with Samuel Graves & Company to form the Boston Musical Instrument Manufactory. However, he withdrew from this partnership in 1870, and began working with Hall & Quinby until his death in 1871. Wright was known as the finest keyed bugle maker in the world, his most famous instrument being a solid gold E-flat presentation bugle given to David C. Hall by members of the Lowell Brass Band in 1850. This beautiful instrument is currently in the Henry Ford Museum in Dearborn, Michigan.

Wright, Elmon (b. Kansas City, Missouri, Oct. 27, 1929; d. 1984). American trumpeter. Wright's father and teacher, Lammar Wright Sr., was a professional trumpeter who played lead with Cab Calloway and other bandleaders. Elmon's older brother Lamar Jr. was also a well-known trumpet player with the orchestras of Lionel Hampton, Dizzy Gillespie, and Charlie Barnet.

Elmon Wright played with Dizzy Gillespie's big band at the age of seventeen (1946-50). He also played with Roy Eldridge in 1946 and toured with Earl Bostic from 1954 to 1955. He then freelanced in New York with various rhythm and blues bands and rock bands at the Apollo Theatre. In 1959, he played with the big bands of Buddy Rich and Earle Warren, and in 1963 recorded with Milt Jackson. He recorded on the Decca, Musicraft, and King labels.

Wright, Lammar [Lamar] Jr. (b. Kansas City, Missouri, Sept. 26, 1927; d. Los Angeles, California, July 8, 1983). American trumpeter.

The son of trumpeter Lammar Wright Sr. and the older brother of Elmon Wright, Lamar Jr. was a big band trumpeter during the swing era. Like his brother, he studied trumpet with his father and became a professional at the age of sixteen when he joined Lionel Hampton's band (1943-46). He later played with Dizzy Gillespie's big band (European tour, 1948) and Charlie Barnet's band where he was a featured soloist from 1947 to 1948. He also played a short while with the Stan Kenton Orchestra.

Wright recorded with all of the name bands with which he played; his playing was recorded on the Decca, Victor, and Capitol labels. He also recorded with rhythm and blues artists such as Wynonie Harris and Esther Phillips as well as pop groups such as The Coasters and Otis Redding's Bar-Kays.

Wright, Lammar [Sr.] (b. Texarkana, Texas, June 20, 1905; d. New York, New York, Apr. 13, 1973). American trumpeter. His application for social security gives 1905 as his birth year, although most sources incorrectly list 1907. Wright grew up in Kansas City and attended Lincoln High School. He was influenced by King Oliver. At the age of sixteen, he joined Bennie Moten's orchestra (1923-27). He then moved to New York and joined the Missourians where he made his recording debut. The band was taken over by Cab Calloway (1939) and went on to become famous. Wright, gifted with a strong high register and technique, played lead trumpet with Calloway until 1942.

Wright played lead trumpet with several other big bands including those of Don Redman (1943), Cootie Williams (1944), Claude Hopkins (1944-46), Lucky Millinder (on and off between 1946 and 1952), Sy Oliver (1947), and Louis Armstrong. He also occasionally led his own band and in 1959 performed and recorded with George Shearing's big band.

Although Wright made no solo albums, he recorded many discs as a sideman with Arnett Cobb (1951), Count Basie (1951), and the Sauter-Finegan Orchestra (1957). He became a studio player and music teacher around 1960. Among his students were his two sons, Lammar Jr. and Elmon. Lammar Jr. was a trumpeter with the big bands of Lionel Hampton, Charlie Barnet, and Dizzy Gillespie. Elmon was also a fine trumpeter who played with Roy Eldridge, Eric Bostic, Buddy Rich, and Dizzy Gillespie.

Wülker, Nils (b. Bonn, Germany, Aug. 17, 1977). German trumpeter, flugelhornist, and composer.

Wülker began playing piano at age six, and switched to the trumpet at age ten. While visiting New York City in 1994, he was influenced by the jazz trumpet playing of Miles Davis. He took lessons from Klaus Osterloh, Andy Haderer, Ack van Rooyen, Thorsten Benkenstein, Bobby Shew, and Till Brönner, and studied with Gerard Presencer (trumpet) and Steve Gray (composition) at the Hanns Eisler Music School in Berlin from 1998 to 2002. He has since performed with Peter Herbolzheimer's Youth Jazz Orchestra, Gene Calderazzo, Nicolai Thärichen's Tentet, Al Porcino, Judy Niemack, Marc Secara's Berlin Jazz Orchestra, and the RIAS Big Band. He was also a trumpet player with the West Berlin production of the Broadway musical, Chicago.

Wülker is best known for his many concerts and recordings with his ensemble, the Nils Wülker Group. His CDs include High Spirits, Space Night 10, My Game, Turning the Page, and Safely Falling, all on his own label, Ear Treat Music.

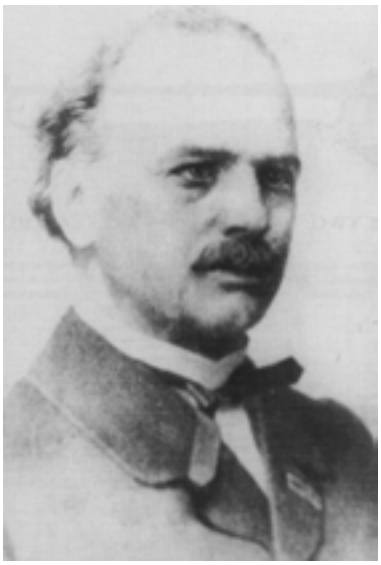
Wurm, [Daniel] Wilhelm [Vasily Vasilyevich] (b. Braunschweig, Germany, Aug. 28, 1826; d. St. Petersburg, Russia, June 7, 1904). German cornetist. Wilhelm's father, who was bandmaster of the Black Hussars of the Grand Duke of Brunswick (Braunschweig) in Germany, taught cornet to Wilhelm. Wilhelm attended the Brunswick Musical College, and at age twenty-one went to St. Petersburg, where he received a position with the Imperial Theater Orchestras on October 8, 1847. He was assigned to the ballet orchestra of the Mariinsky Theater, and performed with it until 1878.



Wurm was Russia's first cornet virtuoso, and performed concert tours throughout much of the country (1869 to 1889). Tsar Alexander II conferred the title of "Soloist of His Imperial Majesty" on him, and changed his German name to the Orthodox Christian name, Vasily Vasilyevich Wurm.

Wurm's career somewhat paralleled that of the great cornetist Arban in France, in that Wurm was the first in his country to establish the cornet as a solo instrument. Wurm's style of playing, however, was not focused on technical display, as was Arban's. Rather, his repertoire centered on romances, arias, and cantabile songs. A famous critic wrote of Wurm's playing, He had a very special soft, warm sound and displayed amazing breath control. When Arban played concert tours in Russia, he became aware of Wurm's prominent reputation, and dedicated his solo, Caprice et Variations, to Wurm.

From 1869 to 1889, Wurm was appointed chief bandmaster of all Guards' military bands; he wrote a method for military trumpeters and buglers, and helped design better military instruments. He also taught at the St. Petersburg Conservatory from 1868 to 1904, and became Russia's first cornet professor. Among his pupils were Prince Alexander Alexandrovich (later becoming Tsar Alexander III), Alexander Gordon, and Alexander Schmidt. Wurm's Method for Cornet was widely used throughout Russia, Finland, and Sweden. He also wrote 40 Studies (edited by Voisin, International Music Co., 1963), 41 Duets (edited by R. Schauer), and pieces for the Cornet Quartet of Prince Alexander. Like Joseph Fröhlich in 1811, he advocated lip and mouthpiece buzzing as a means of developing the embouchure.

From 1875 to 1885, Wurm conducted an amateur brass band for Prince Alexander III, one of his cornet students. Alexander II often rewarded Wurm with numerous decorations and awards for his abilities. Wurm's students presented him with a heavy gold chain and jewel-embedded pendant in the form of a miniature mouthpiece.

Wurm toured with many of Russia's most celebrated musicians, and performed a great deal of chamber music, which helped him establish chamber music as part of the curriculum at the conservatory. He also composed a vast number of works for cornet duet, trio, brass quartet, brass band, and concert band. In addition, he wrote many cornet etudes, a cornet method book (1879), and Necessary Scales for Cornet for young players.

Along with German-born Vasily Brandt and Oskar Böhme, Wurm is today considered one of the greatest Russian artists of the cornet; he pioneered and established it as a solo and chamber musical instrument. He died in St. Petersburg at the age of seventy-seven.

Würsch, Markus (b. Emmetten, Nidwalden, Switzerland, May 29, 1955). Swiss trumpeter. Würsch studied at the Luzern Conservatory and at Zurich Conservatory with Henri Adelbrecht, and graduated with honors. He then won a competition in Migros that provided grant money to study at the Paris Conservatory for one year. He later studied in the U.S. with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University, Adolph Herseth in Chicago, and Charles Geyer at the Eastman School.

From 1981 to 1995, Würsch was principal trumpet of the Tonhalle Orchestra in Zurich. In 1995, he studied in London at the Royal Academy with Michael Laird and Crispian Steele-Perkins (Baroque trumpet), Jeremy West (zink), and Philip Jones (brass chamber music). Würsch has toured with the Camerata Bern as a soloist playing Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto, has toured as a soloist with the Lucerne Festival Strings (U.S., Canada, Austria), and has played with the Luzern Chamber Brass. He is now a professor at the University of Art in Bern (Switzerland) and a performer of the Baroque (valveless) trumpet in the ensembles La Cetra and I Barocchisti. He has recently played principal trumpet in the Basel Symphony, Southwest German Philharmonic, and the Symphony Orchestra of Recite (Brazil). In addition, he has recorded several albums and videos on trumpet and corno da caccia with organ.

Xanthoulis, Nikos (b. Larissa, Greece, Aug. 7, 1962). Greek trumpeter and composer. Xanthoulis grew up in Palio Faliro, Greece, and began playing the trumpet at age eleven. He attended the Athens Conservatory of Music in 1978, and graduated in 1983 with top honors and a first prize for performance. He later earned a political science degree from Padion University and a doctorate in music in Sofia, Bulgaria.

Immediately after graduation from the Athens Conservatory in 1983, Xanthoulis was hired to teach harmony and counterpoint at the conservatory. In 1984, he also became the principal trumpet of the Greek National Opera Orchestra, a position he still holds. He is an active soloist and composer and has released three solo CDs. His compositions have been performed by leading orchestras and chamber ensembles throughout the world, including the Greek National Opera which premiered two of his operas for children.

Xanthoulis is a teacher at the Greek Open University and is head of education for the Greek National Opera. He is also director of the conservatory of music in Kalamata, Greece. His books for trumpet include Trumpet Technic (1985) and The Art of Breathing (1996). He has also composed a concerto for trumpet and orchestra.

Yablonsky [Jablonski], Wilhelm [Maryanovich] (b. Chechelnik, Ukraine, Apr. 20, 1889; d. Kiev, Ukraine, Apr. 14, 1977). Ukrainian trumpeter. Yablonski began playing in a regimental band. He studied with Nikolay Podgorbunsky at the Kiev Musical College (now the Kiev Conservatory), graduating in 1912, and was also a student of Wilhelm Wurm, whose etudes were Yablonsky's favorites for teaching and practicing. His career began in 1906 while a student, by performing in a summer band in Cherkassy and with several symphony orchestras. From 1913 to 1918, he was a member of Sergey Koussevitsky's handpicked symphony orchestra that also included trumpeter Mikhail Tabakov. Yablonski returned to Kiev in 1919 to perform with several symphony orchestras. From 1920 to 1925, he founded and directed a band at a sugar factory, and in 1926 founded a conductor-less orchestra in which he played first trumpet until 1932. In addition, he was principal of the Ukrainian Radio Symphony Orchestra, and from 1932 to 1957, was principal trumpet of the Ukrainian National Opera-Ballet "Shevchenko" Orchestra.

Yablonsky is considered the most influential of all trumpeters from Kiev. He was known for playing in a highly romantic style with deep emotions. After performing under Alexander Glazunov, he was given an autographed photo with the inscription, "to the best trumpet player in Russia." He also successfully performed the D trumpet part of Stravinsky's Rite of Spring on his regular B-flat trumpet.

Yablonsky taught at the Kiev Musical College from 1924 to 1927, the Kiev Conservatory from 1927 to 1969 (chair of the winds beginning in 1934), and was made a full professor in 1935. Among his more than three hundred students were Naum E. Polonsky, Grigory N. Samokhualov, Sergey Popov, Nikolay V. Rudoy, Nikolay V. Berdiyev, Isaac M. Kobets, Fyodor B. Rigin, and Valery T. Posvaliuk. As a performer, he was described as a musician of remarkably expressed romantic character, a poet and impassioned knight of the trumpet... with his inspired, agitated, expressive playing he left none of his listeners indifferent, forcing them to feel the emotional experience with him. His tone was described as bright and sonorous, but without a touch of the cornet timbre.

Yablonsky died one week prior to his eighty-eighth birthday.

Yamamoto, Eisuke (b. Shitzuoka, Japan, 1952). Japanese trumpeter. Yamamoto studied music in Tokyo, London, and Berlin, graduating from the Berlin Musikhochschule. His teachers include Hosei Soken (Tokyo), Philip Jones (1975), Fritz Wesenigk, and Armando Ghitalla (1985). His fifteen years of orchestral playing experience includes being a member of the Tokyo City Philharmonic and principal trumpet of the Southwest German Philharmonic. He has performed on occasion with the NHK Symphony Orchestra and the Saito Kinen Orchestra. He has also led the Fata-Morugana Ensemble, and is currently an active chamber music performer and soloist.

Yamamoto has taught at Obirin University and the Senzoku Gekuen Music School, and is currently an associate professor at the Kunitachi College of Music. He has released a CD with organ titled Windows, and is executive director of the Japan Trumpeters Association.

Yates, Wanda Lou [Pitman] (b. Ranger, Texas, Oct. 12, 1920; d. Morrilton, Arkansas, Dec. 29, 1996). American trumpeter. Yates was the daughter of Armon Siebert Pitman and Geneva Viola Whitmill Pitman. The family moved to Port Clinton, Ohio, where Yates finished high school. In 1939, she entered the Oberlin College Conservatory of Music, from which she graduated in 1943 with a bachelor of music education degree, studying with Louis Davidson. Upon graduation from Oberlin, Yates was offered a position with the Houston Symphony Orchestra, under the baton of Ernst Hoffman. During the 1943-44 season, she was listed as second trumpet (as Pitman, her maiden name at the time); she then moved to the position of principal trumpet for the 1944-45 and 1945-46 seasons, making her, perhaps, the first woman to hold a fulltime trumpet position in a major symphony orchestra.

After her years with the Houston Symphony, Yates moved back to Ohio, and entered the University of Michigan, where she earned a master of music degree, studying with Clifford Lillya. She also spent some time in the Boston area, studying briefly with Georges Mager. She taught in the music department at Bowling Green State University in Ohio for a short time, where she met her husband, Wilber Clay Hadley Yates (1911-88), who was teaching piano there. The couple married on June 16, 1951, and moved to Bloomington, Indiana, where he pursued a doctorate in music history at Indiana University. The couple moved to Conway, Arkansas, in 1961, when she joined the music faculty of Hendrix College, teaching music theory and piano. Upon his retirement, the couple moved to Little Rock.

Wanda gave up playing the trumpet professionally when she and Wilbur moved to Bloomington, but she occasionally played in college ensembles when needed. An Oberlin classmate remembered that in the 1940's in northern Ohio, she was the solution to the problem of the high trumpet parts whenever anyone wanted to perform a work by J.S. Bach. Wanda and Wilber had three children: Sandra, Sherry, and Michael.

Yavorsky, Nikolay Nikolayevich (b. Archangelsk, Russia, Aug. 30, 1917; d. Moscow, Russia, Jan. 19, 1994). Russian trumpeter. Yavorsky studied with Pyotr Lyamin at the Ippolitov-Ivanov Music College in Moscow, graduating in 1937. He then did graduate work with the famous Mikhail Tabakov at the Moscow Conservatory, graduating in 1943.

Yavorsky began his playing career as early as 1934 at age seventeen as a member of the Central House of the Red Army Symphony Orchestra where he played until 1941. From 1945 to 1947, he played in the Cinematography Committee Orchestra, and from 1945 to 1961 was principal trumpet of the Stanislavsky & Nemirovich-Danchenko Theater Orchestra. He taught at the Gnesin Music College from 1947 to 1968, and was then transferred to the Gnesin Institute in Moscow (full professor in 1987) where he taught until his death in 1994 at age seventy-six. He also taught at the Ippolitov-Ivanov Music College from 1947 to 1968. He published the text, First Steps in Playing Brass Instruments (1959).

Yeh, Shu-Han (b. Taipei, Taiwan, June 9, 1957). Taiwanese trumpeter, composer, and conductor. Yeh began playing the trumpet at age sixteen, studying with Shu De-Ju, and played with the Taipei Century Orchestra. He graduated from the National Taiwan Normal University in 1980. He received a scholarship to study at the Paris Conservatory with Marcel Lagorce and graduated in 1984. While in Paris, he performed with the Orchestre de Prix du CNSMP and the Orchestre des Concerts Pasdeloup.

In 1984, Yeh became principal trumpet of the Singapore Symphony Orchestra and trumpet teacher at National Singapore University. He also coached the trumpet section of the Singapore Youth Orchestra. In 1986, he moved back to his native country of Taiwan to become principal trumpet of the National Symphony Orchestra of Taiwan and conductor of the China Youth Corps Band. He also teaches at National Taiwan Normal University and the National Institute of the Arts, positions he has held for over twenty-five years.

Yeh's six CDs have received numerous awards, including "Best Instrumental Performance," "Best Recording," and the National Jin-Ding Prize. He is a former board member of the International Trumpet Guild, and is president of the Asia and Pacific Band Directors Association. As a soloist, he has toured the Pacific Rim, United States, Austria, Kazakhstan, and other countries. Composer Alfred Reed scored his Concerto for Trumpet and Band for Yeh who—a composer himself—has published many compositions and arrangements through Robert Martin in France, and Schorer in Germany. He is founder and leader of the Yeh [Shu-Han] Brass Quintet, which has released four CD recordings.

Yeriomin, Sergey [Nikolayevich] (b. Nagornij, Ukraine, May 22, 1903; d. Moscow, Russia, June 13, 1975). Ukrainian trumpeter. Yeriomin attended the Moscow Conservatory where he studied with Mikhail Adamov and Mikhail Tabakov, graduating in 1930. In 1929, the composer/pianist Alexander Goedicke dedicated his Concerto in B-flat, op. 41 (published in 1930) to him; Yeriomin recorded the work in 1936, and in that same year Goedicke also composed Concert Etude, op. 49 for him. Interestingly, this piece was originally conceived as a moderate speed, lyrical work, but when the two read it together, they agreed that it would be better at double speed with lots of double-tongued sixteenth notes rather than with a predominately eighth-note melodic line; the work has become universally known and popular. Goedicke called Yeriomin a "rare exception." Yeriomin was the first trumpeter to have his name engraved on the marble plaque on the wall of the Moscow Conservatory, which lists the very finest graduates of the school.

Yeriomin played with the Red Army Band, the Conservatory Students' Orchestra (1927), and as principal trumpet in several Moscow orchestras including the USSR State Symphony Orchestra (1937-41) and the Bolshoi Theatre Orchestra (1928-47). He was the first person in Moscow to perform on a (Vincent Bach) piston trumpet (1936).

Yeriomin taught at the Moscow Conservatory for thirty-seven years (1932-70); among his pupils are Sergey Bolotin, Anatoly Maksimenko, Yury Usov, and Lev Volodin. In 1960, he published an edition of Oskar Böhme's trumpet concerto a half step higher (in F minor) than first written. He also wrote a four-part trumpet method (1958-64).

Young, Eugene Edward ("Snooky") (b. Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 3, 1919; d. May 11, 2011). American trumpeter. Young grew up in a musical family. As a boy, his nickname was "Snookum." He began playing the trumpet at age five, and by seven he was winning local music contests. His biggest musical influence was Louis Armstrong.

Snooky Young played with Graham Jackson, Eddie Heywood Sr., and Clarence Carter (1937-39), and began his professional career in 1939 (age twenty) when he joined Jimmy Lunceford's orchestra. In 1942, he played with Count Basie and Lionel Hampton, and moved to Los Angeles late in the year. He worked with Les Hite, Benny Carter (1943), Gerald Wilson, and again with Hampton. Young toured for a second time with Basie in 1945-47, but decided to return to his hometown of Dayton, Ohio, for the next ten years. In 1957, he joined Basie for the third time, playing lead trumpet for the next five years.

After leaving the Basie band in 1962, Young moved to Los Angeles where he played with Charlie Mingus (late 1962) and became a fulltime studio musician for NBC. He played with The Tonight Show Band from 1972 to 1992 and also with Jaco Pastorius's Word of Mouth Orchestra, Benny Goodman (1964), the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra (1966-67, 1969), Clarke-Boland Big Band (Lugano, 1965), Lionel Hampton (Newport, 1967), Clark Terry (1967), and Charlie Barnet (1967). He premiered Concerto for Trumpet, Saxophone and Orchestra by Charlie Mingus (Philharmonic Hall, NYC) in 1971. During the 1990s, he played lead with Gerald Wilson's organization, as well as the Clayton-Hamilton Jazz Orchestra. Young is known for his magnificent lead trumpet playing and his distinctive growl effects when using a plunger or cup mute. His recordings include Snooky and Marshall's Album (Concord Jazz), The Boys from Dayton (Master Jazz), and Horn of Plenty (Concord Jazz).

Snooky Young ghosted the trumpet solos for Jack Carson in the 1941 film, Blues in the Night. He received the Los Angeles Jazz Treasure Award, and was given the National Endowment for the Arts Masters Award.

Young, Gene [Eugene] (b. Middletown, Ohio, Aug. 23, 1938). American trumpeter, conductor, and composer. Young studied cornet with Frank Simon, and trumpet with Heinrich Wohlgemuth. He attended the Oberlin Conservatory from 1956 to 1960, studying trumpet, conducting, and composition. Additional trumpet study was with William Vacchiano of the New York Philharmonic, and conducting with Maestro Erich Leinsdorf in Salzburg, Austria, at the Mozarteum.

Young has served as first trumpet of the US Academy Band at West Point, principal of the American Shakespeare Theater orchestra, principal of the New Orleans Philharmonic, and trumpet in the Saint Louis Sinfonietta and Santa Fe Opera orchestra. He taught trumpet in the Oberlin Conservatory during the 1960s and early '70s, but moved to Madison, Wisconsin, around 1975 to assume duties as director of wind bands at the University of Wisconsin. He continued his career as conductor of the Goldman Band (ten years), Hartt Symphony Orchestra, Hartt Sinfonietta, and the Connecticut Youth Symphony. He is founder and conductor of The Peabody Camerata, The Peabody Sinfonietta, Peabody Institute Chamber Orchestra, and the Contemporary Chamber Orchestra. He has held conducting residencies at the New England Conservatory and the Eastman School of Music.

Young published The Trum-pets of Edgar Verèse and Embouchure Enlightenment (Tromba Publications). In 1994, he served as an assistant to Maestro Mstislav Rostropovich at the Evian Festival.

Young, Graham (b. c1919; d. 2011). American trumpeter. Young began playing cornet in ninth grade in 1934, but switched to trumpet in 1937. His first lessons were with Forrest Nicola. During high school, he played in a clinic band at Northwestern University and in local semi-pro bands in the area. His career started in 1939, when he played jazz with Barry Hodges, and later with Gene Krupa and Raymond Scott.

During World War II, Young led an Air Force dance band for two years. He was then transferred to the US Air Force Band in Washington, D.C., and while there, studied with Charles Colin and Benny Baker in New York City. After the war, he joined the Glenn Miller Orchestra led by Tex Beneke (1946-47), and then attended the University of Michigan where he studied with Clifford Lillya.

In 1953, Young moved to the Los Angeles area and began teaching junior high school vocal music in Burbank (until 1968). During this time, he played at Disneyland and in various local big bands. He retired from teaching in 1968 in order to pursue a career as a studio artist and record with Henry Mancini. He played for dozens of television shows and was active in the movie soundtrack business, recording for such films as 10, The Great Waldo Pepper, Swashbuckler, Airplane, Towering Inferno, Star Trek, and Rocky II. He made records with Tex Beneke and Frankie Carle (The 40s Era on Dot).

Young, Webster [English] (b. Columbia, South Carolina, Dec. 3, 1932; d. Vancouver, Washington, Dec. 13, 2003). American trumpeter and cornetist. Young was raised by his mother. He began playing cornet at age three. At age ten, he heard Louis Armstrong in concert and received a brief lesson from him. While in his teens, Young was able to jam with Dizzy Gillespie, thus earning the nickname "Little Diz." He graduated from Louis Armstrong High School.

After a stint in the Air Force during World War II and the Korean War, Young took the advice of Miles Davis and moved to New York City during the late 1950s. He toured the "Chitlin Circuit" with other black entertainers, forming a jazz trio with Hampton Hawes (piano) and Rick Henderson (sax). He also played with Lester Young, Bud Powell, John Coltrane, Dexter Gordon, Jackie McLean, Ike and Tina Turner, Ray Draper, Miles Davis, and many others. He reached his musical prime during the late 1950s and early '60s, recording albums such as For Lady (Prestige), Webster Young Plays the Miles Davis Songbook (VGM), and Interplay for 2 Trumpets and 2 Tenors (Prestige/OJC).

Young moved to Washington, D.C. in the mid 1960s where he worked mostly as an educator, teaching at the University of the District of Columbia, and conducting a jazz workshop band at the District of Columbia Music Center. He played on the soundtrack for the play, The Day of Absence, performed by Robert Hook's D.C. Black Repertory Company during the mid 1970s and on the soundtrack for the documentary, 7th and T (1987). During the 1980s, he toured Europe with a trio that included pianist Rein DeGraaff.

Young moved to Portland, Oregon, in 2002 where he continued performing in jazz clubs until about eight months before he died from a brain tumor. He was survived by his wife Gretchen and their son, Dorian, as well as two children from a previous marriage: John Wardell Young and Terry Ann Powell.

Zapf, Gerd (b. Munich, Germany, Dec. 4, 1933). German trumpeter. Zapf was inspired to play the trumpet at age sixteen after seeing a Harry James film. He studied with Willi Brem and Walter Uhlemann, and won a prize in a 1954 music competition sponsored by BRD Radio. He then began his career in theater orchestras in Munich (1956-59), and later in Freiburg and Breisgau (1959-61). He spent most of his career as a member of the Bayerische Kammervirtuosen (1961-99), and since 1970 has been an active soloist throughout Europe and America. He founded the Bavaria Brass Soloists Munich (a large ensemble) in 1974, and has released a CD titled Musikalische Miniaturen with organist Franz-Leo Matzerath.

Zarchy, Rubin ("Zeke") (b. New York, New York, June 12, 1915; d. Irvine, California, Apr. 11, 2009). American trumpeter. "Zeke" Zarchy was perhaps the greatest lead trumpet player during the swing era. The son of Russian immigrants, he began playing the trumpet at age eleven. His idol was Louis Armstrong.

Zarchy played professionally during his teen years, but his career took off at age twenty when he joined Joe Haynes's Orchestra (1934-36) after which he played with a "who's who" of top big bands such as those led by Benny Goodman (1936), Artie Shaw (1936-37), Bob Crosby (1937 and 1939), Red Norvo, Tommy Dorsey (1939-40), Glenn Miller (1940), Jerry Gray, Sarah Vaughn, Ray Anthony, Mildred Bailey, Frank Sinatra, Judy Garland, Helen Ward, Ella Fitzgerald, and others. He became a staff musician for the NBC studios in New York (1940-42), but was drafted into the military in 1942. He was assigned to Glenn Miller's Army Air Force Band from 1944 to 1945. He and Miller were best friends and golfing buddies. Supposedly, Zarchy was the last person Miller talked to before Miller's military plane crashed, ending the famed bandleader's life.

Upon release from the military, Frank Sinatra convinced Zarchy to move to Los Angeles in order to play with his band. Zarchy also worked as a studio musician for NBC (nine years), playing in house bands for various television shows including The Smothers Brothers Comedy Hour, The Danny Kaye Show, and The Jonathan

Winters Show. In addition, he recorded movie soundtracks including West Side Story, Dr. Zhivago, The Glenn Miller Story, and Rocky II. Zarchy backed numerous celebrity vocalists in recordings including Louis Armstrong, Frank Sinatra, Tony Bennett, Dinah Shore, and The Mills Brothers. He also recorded with Boyd Raeburn (1945), Benny Goodman (1947), Woody Herman (1947), Bob Crosby (1950-51), Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey, Harry James, and Peggy Lee.

Zeke Zarchy toured the world many times, including an impressive thirty-two trips to Japan. Although he never improvised jazz, he was often a featured soloist. During the 1980s and '90s, he played Dixieland trumpet in the Great Pacific Jazz Band.

Zarchy died on April 11, 2009 at the age of ninety-three. Margaret, his wife of fifty-three years, predeceased him in 2007. He is survived by daughters Carol, Amy, and Laura, and son Andrew.

Zauder, David (b. Krakow, Poland, 1929; d. Pine, Colorado, Apr. 15, 2013). Polish trumpeter. Zauder grew up in Krakow, Poland. At the age of ten (1939), he watched German troops enter and take control of the city; he and his family were forced to live in the Jewish ghetto for two years. In 1941, the family was sent to the Plaszow concentration camp where his mother and father were killed (this is the location at which film director Steven Spielberg made the movie Schindler's List). Zauder was sent to Auschwitz (in Poland) in 1943, and near the end of 1944 he and others were forced to march half way across Germany when he was reunited with his brother. Of the four thousand or so people that made the march, only about twelve hundred survived the trip. Fortunately, General Patton's Third Army liberated him near the end of World War II.

Zauder followed the Army and served as a shoeshine boy and barber. He became friends with one of the trumpeters in the band, a G.I. named Frank Bond who allowed him to play his trumpet, which sparked Zauder's interest in music and the trumpet. Zauder told the American Red Cross that he knew he had an aunt in Detroit, Michigan, so it arranged for his aunt to purchase the fare for him to get to America in 1945.

As his interest in the trumpet grew, Zauder was introduced to the famous cornetist and trumpeter Leonard B. Smith who took a keen interest in the sixteen-year-old boy, and helped him acquire an instrument. Smith gave him free lessons with the aid of a German-English dictionary. He also helped him get a scholarship to the New York Military Academy in Cornwall, New York, where Zauder studied with Major Walter Kenny. After graduating from the academy, Zauder auditioned for, and was accepted in the West Point Band. During his four years in the band, he studied in New York City with Harry Glantz, paying him ten dollars per lesson each week.

After his release from military duties in 1955, Zauder returned to Detroit, and played in Leonard Smith's Detroit Concert Band as a substitute. He then moved to New York City and began freelancing. He played at Radio City Music Hall and on Broadway, as well as in churches. In 1956 (and continuing in 1957), he joined the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler. The orchestra did a great deal of touring during the winter seasons, but Zauder returned to Detroit during the summers to play in Smith's band. In the fall of 1957, Zauder moved to Detroit where he planned to enter Wayne State University as an engineering major, but the math requirements were too difficult for him. He auditioned for Maestro George Szell of the Cleveland Orchestra, and was eventually hired in October of 1958 as third trumpet to Dick Smith; he soon moved to second trumpet where he played the B-flat trumpet and cornet exclusively.

In 1970, Zauder was appointed personnel manager of the Cleveland Orchestra. He continued in this capacity and as second trumpet/principal cornet until he retired from playing in 1997. He stayed on as personnel manager for one more year, and retired completely in 1998. He recorded with the Cleveland Brass Ensemble and has taught at the Detroit Institute of Music (three years), as well as the Cleveland Institute of Music for seventeen years. He published 100 Embouchure and Technique Studies.

Zell, Johnny (b. Ft. Benning, Georgia, Nov. 24, 1947). American trumpeter. Zell grew up in Los Angeles. He began playing the violin, but switched to the trumpet at age thirteen. His career started when he played in the show bands of Freddy Martin, Walter Valentino Liberace, and Russ Morgan. He was drafted into military service in 1965, and played in the North American Defense Command Band's (NORAD) "The Commanders" show band. In 1968, Lawrence Welk invited the NORAD band to send a musician to Hollywood to perform in a salute to the military television commercial during his weekly television program. Zell was selected, and impressed Welk with his excellent trumpet playing. Welk invited him to audition for his band when he was out of the military, and a year later, Zell was hired as a featured member of the Lawrence Welk Orchestra.

Zell played with Welk from 1968 to 1982 when the band went off the air. Since then, Zell has performed his own religious shows for audiences throughout the Northwest. He was recently ordained as a pastor and continues to hold religious/musical concerts each week.

Zell and his wife Laura live in Oregon, and have four children: John Jr., Lisa, Collette, and Nick. He has released four self-produced CDs: Play That Trumpet, Trumpeter's Delight, Trumpet-Trumpet-Trumpet, and At the Cross.

Zeyer, Adam (b. Thüngersheim, Germany, Nov. 13, 1911; d. Thüngersheim, Germany, Aug. 19, 1995). German trumpeter. Zeyer studied with Richard Stegmann (1927-34) and Hans Bode. He was a trumpeter in the music corp of the Luftwaffe before joining the Munich Philharmonic. He then played principal in the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra, Berlin Opera, and from 1949 to 1976 was a member of the Kölner Gürzenich-Orchester. During these years, he taught at the state music school and was given the title of professor in 1969.

Zeyer spent eighteen summers playing in the Bayreuth Festival Orchestra, and made a well-known recording of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto with the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis orchestra (1953, Archiv Produktion). He was one of the first to play the piccolo trumpet in B-flat in that work (from 1950). He retired in 1976.

Zickler, Heinz (b. Schmiedeberg, Germany, Mar. 25, 1920). German trumpeter. Zickler was one of the first trumpeters to perform and record Baroque music for trumpet. From 1961 to 1968, he released over two dozen solo albums on modern trumpets for labels such as Vox, Cantate, EXL, Madacy, and Excelsior, which were reissued on CDs during the 1980s.

As a boy, Zickler learned to play piano from his father, and later studied organ in college. At age fourteen, he began playing the flugelhorn, studying with Heinz Chorknabe, and trumpet with Alfons Patolla. The early part of his career was spent playing in the Staatliches Sinfonieorchester Halle/Saale (1951-53) and the Gewandhausorchester Leipzig (1951-53). He left Germany in 1956, but returned to perform at the Wiesbaden Theatre (1959-83) and Stuttgart Bach Collegium. He also taught at the Peter-Cornelius Music School in Mainz, and often played and recorded with the Mainz Chamber Orchestra under Gunther Kehr. He had an easy upper register and played and recorded the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach during the 1960s, as well as the difficult Servizio di Tavola by Reutter.

Zimmerman, Tim (b. Kansas City, Missouri, May 9, 1956). American trumpeter. Zimmerman grew up in Stockholm, Sweden and Detroit, Michigan. As a boy, he suffered from asthma, so his doctor recommended he play a wind instrument to improve his breathing. He began playing the trumpet at age twelve after having already learned to play the piano under his mother's guidance. His first trumpet teacher was his uncle, Don Elmore, and during high school he studied with Bill Beger. After graduating from L'Anse Creuse High School in Mt. Clemens (an eastern suburb of Detroit) in 1973, Zimmerman attended Bob Jones University in Greenville, South Carolina, from 1973 to 1978, earning a bachelor of science in music education degree. His teachers during college were Argyle Paddock and Gordon Mason. He also studied with Irving Sarin and William Knevitt. From 1979 to 1982, he studied with Donald Tison at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore, Maryland, earning a master of music degree.

Early in Zimmerman's career, he was a member of the Annapolis Symphony (1980-88). In 1988, he became an artist-in-residence and chair of the music department at Grace College in Winona Lake, Indiana (until 2011). During the early 1980s in Detroit, he formed The King's Brass, a group that performed mostly at churches. A few years later, he discovered that Robert Nagel had formed a brass quintet with the same name. Zimmerman and Nagel agreed that having the groups share the same name would not cause any problems. In order to distinguish between the two ensembles, Zimmerman began calling his group Tim Zimmerman and The King's Brass, which—now over thirty years old—performs 140 concerts each year, and recently released its fifteenth recording, Praise & Celebration, on the Summit Records label.

Zimmerman and his wife Gina were married in 1985, and reside in Ft. Wayne, Indiana. They have three children: Brad (b. 1987), Greg (b. 1989), and Stephanie (b. 1990). He enjoys snowboarding, sailing, and visiting art museums.

Bibl.: The King's Brass official website: www.kingsbrass.org; personal interview, Sept. 7, 2011.

Zimmermann, Stephan (b. Offenburg, Germany, May 29, 1963). German trumpeter. Zimmermann studied at the Cologne Music School with Manfred Schoof and Jon Eardley, and with Bobby Shew. Since 1990, he has been a member of the Frankfurt Jazz Big Band and the big bands of the WDR, HR, NDR, SDR, Rias Berlin, SWF Radio Orchestra, Musical Starlight Express, Köln Musik, Vienna Art Orchestra (since 2007), and Paul Kuhn, Peter Herbolzheimer, and Shirley Bassey. He is also a member of Wolfgang Dauner's United Jazz and Rock Ensemble Second Generation.

As a jazz soloist, Zimmermann has worked with many jazz artists including Bud Shank, Bobby Shew, Max Greger, Manhattan Transfer, Kenny Wheeler, Randy Brecker, Don Menza, Al Porcino, Claudio Roditi, and Bob Mintzer. He has toured the world and recorded with the Vienna Art Orchestra, HR Big Band, Bobby Burgess Big Band Explosion, Peter Herbolzheimer, Allotria Jazz Band München, Thilo Berg Big Band, Sunday Night Orchestra, and many others. His solo albums include Healing Forces, My Kind of People, Quiet Time, and First Take.

Zimmermann is a professor of jazz trumpet and jazz ensembles at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik und Darstellende Kunst Mannheim. In his spare time, he enjoys playing golf and cooking.

Zollar, James Delano (b. Kansas City, Missouri, July 24, 1959). American trumpeter. Growing up in San Diego, Zollar played the bugle at age nine, and switched to trumpet at twelve. He studied for a while at both San Diego State College and the University of California-San Diego. He moved to San Francisco where he took improvisation lessons from Woody Shaw before permanently moving to New York City in 1984.

An extremely versatile player, Zollar performs blues, bebop, swing, Afro-Cuban, and avant-garde jazz. He has worked with Jay Turner, Eddie Vinson, Jimmy Cheatham (1982-84), Big Joe Turner, Roger Newmann's Rather Large Band, Cecil McBee (1984-89), Claude Williams, Panama Francis, Lester Bowie, Sunny Murray, Craig Harris, Cab Calloway, Charli Persip, Henry Threadgill, Hilton Ruiz, Sam Rivers, Don Byron, David Murray, Bob Stewart (European tours in 1987 and 1991), Steve Coleman (Japan tour in 1988), Joe Haider, Jon Faddis, Wynton Marsalis's Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra, Ray Charles, Illinois Jacquet, Charles McPherson, Mongo Santamaria, Tom Harrell, and Weldon Erving.

Zollar's albums include Soaring with Bird (Naxos), Dark Star (Astor Place, with David Murray), Goin' Home (JMT, with Bob Stewart), and Zollar Systems (JZAZ). He has appeared in the films Kansas City and The Best Man, and Madonna's music video My Baby's Got A Secret.

James Zollar is currently residing and performing in New York City. He is a member of the New York City Blues Devils.

Zonshine, Michael ("Mike") (b. Los Angeles, California, Aug. 15, 1977). American trumpeter. Zonshine grew up in Agoura Hills, California. He began playing the trumpet at age nine or ten; his first teacher was his middle school band director, Harry Leff. While attending Agoura High School, he studied with Boyde Hood. After graduating from high school in 1995, Zonshine enrolled at Boston University where he was one of the last students of Roger Voisin, who became ill and retired during Zonshine's senior year, after which the trumpet studio was taken over by Thomas Rolfs, then fourth trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. Zonshine also studied with Malcolm McNab.

After completing his bachelor of music degree in 1999, Zonshine began a master of music degree at the Eastman School of Music, studying with James Thompson and Douglas Prosser, but during his first year there, he won the position of principal trumpet of the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra. He joined the HSO in 2000, and cofounded the University of Hawaii Trumpet Ensemble with Mark Schubert.

Zonshine taught at the Boston University Tanglewood Institute for five summers. He currently performs each summer at the Breckenridge Music Festival in Colorado. His hobbies include road cycling.

Zottola, Frank (b. Naples, Italy, Feb. 7, 1916; d. May 13, 1999) Italian-born American trumpeter and mouthpiece maker. Zottola produced trumpet mouthpieces in Stamford, New York, and then Port Chester, New York, during the middle part of the twentieth century (beginning in 1954). An important feature of his mouthpieces is a stepped backbore. He was also an accomplished arranger and conductor.

Zottola sold his mouthpiece company to Dick Akright of Oakland, California, and retired. His wife Maria was a pianist; his sons Bob and Glenn are professional trumpeters, and his daughter Yvonne a vocalist.

Zottola, Glenn [Paul] (b. Port Chester, New York, Apr. 28, 1947). American trumpeter. Glenn's father, Frank Zottola, was a trumpeter and mouthpiece maker. He started Glenn on trumpet at the age of three, and by eight young Glenn was appearing in public. At age twelve, Glenn performed on television and made an appearance at the Atlantic City Jazz Festival. In the early 1960s, he played a leading role in the documentary film, Come Back.

In 1967, Glenn Zottola played in the Glenn Miller Orchestra under Buddy De Franco. In 1970, he briefly played with Lionel Hampton, and during the next decade performed in show bands for Bob Hope, Al Martino, Patti Page, Tony Martin, Robert Merrill, and Mel Tormé. In the late 1970s, he played lead trumpet with the touring show, Chicago. He also played with Tex Beneke in 1979, and from 1977 to 1979 was a member of the Benny Goodman Sextet that toured the United States.

Zottola played, acted, and sang in the Broadway musical, Swing, when it was performed at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. during the early 1980s. He spent much of the 1980s in pit orchestras on Broadway, in productions of Evita, Annie, and Barnum, and was selected to play with the show, Anything Goes, starring Ginger Rogers.

In the early 1980s, Zottola joined Bob Wilber's Bechet Legacy Band. He also recorded with Butch Miles, George Masso, Keith Ingham, and Maxine Sullivan. In the mid '80s, he toured overseas with Wilber and Bobby Rosengardens. He was a featured soloist in the 1988 recreation of Benny Goodman's 1938 Carnegie Hall concert, and in 1990 appeared at the Clearwater (Florida) Jazz Festival. In late 1991, Zottola toured England and Europe with a band led by Peanuts Hucko.

Zottola is a highly versatile trumpeter who can play solid swing and bop. He can also double on saxophone. His albums include Live at Eddie Condon's (Dreamstreet), Streamin' Mainstream (Dreamstreet), Secret Love (Famous Door), Stardust (Famous Door), and Christmas in Jazz-time (Dreamstreet). He can be seen in the 1982 Tribute to Bechet with Bob Wilber and the Smithsonian Jazz Repertory Orchestra (Kultur Films).

Zvolánek, Marek (b. Prague, Czech Republic, Feb. 14, 1974). Czech trumpeter. Zvolánek is not only one of Europe's foremost orchestral players, but is also a world-class soloist. He studied at the Prague Conservatory with Antonin Vaigl, with Hans Gansch at the Mozarteum in Salzburg, and with Konradin Groth at the Berlin Music Academy.

Zvolánek became a member of the Czech Philharmonic at the age of eighteen. He began to be featured as a soloist, and soon appeared with the Prague Chamber Orchestra, Prague Symphony Orchestra, Suk Chamber Orchestra, Prague Philharmonia, Virtuosi di Praga, Moravian Philharmonic in Olomouc (2011: J. Filas, Concerto for Piccolo Trumpet), Teplice Philharmonic, Neue Lausitzer Philharmonic, Basel Symphony Orchestra, Lisbon Philharmonic, and other ensembles. He has been a member of Otto Sauter's Ten of the Best trumpet ensemble, which has toured internationally, and has released a series of solo CDs of difficult Classical and Baroque concertos for trumpet including those by Hertel, Bach, Michael Haydn, Tartini, and Richter. He has also recorded a CD with the Prague Brass Soloists. Zvolánek has served as the principal trumpet of the Czech Radio Orchestra, and is currently principal of the Prague Symphony Orchestra.

Zvolánek has been married to Martina Zvolankova, a professor of the French language, since 2001. Together they have three daughters, Ema Zvolankova (b. 2002), Marie Zvolankova (b. 2003), and Marketa Zvolankova (b. 2008). His hobbies include golf, tennis, and fishing.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Sècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Marek Zvolánek—trumpet" (www.festivalkrumlov.cz/en/current-year/artitsts-2/marek-zvolanek-trumpet/searchfor/concerts); personal interview, Nov. 30, 2012.
