Trumpet Greats

A Biographical Dictionary

© 2013 Hickman Music Editions
PO Box 11370
Chandler, Arizona 85248
All Rights Reserved

First Printing (2013)

Page Layout and Design by Miriam Hickman
Printing by The Alternative (Tempe, Arizona)
Binding by Roswell Bookbinders (Phoenix, Arizona)

www.HickmanMusicEditions.com

David R. Hickman

Trumpet Greats

A Biographical Dictionary

Content Editors
Michel Laplace
Edward H. Tarr

General Editors:

Mr. Richard Beauchamp
Dr. Miriam Hickman

Assistant Editors:

Ms. Carolyn Ball
Dr. Brian Shook

Foreword by

Dr. Leonard A. Candelaria

Dedication

To my longtime friend, Gerald Endsley.

Foreword

The history of the trumpet as an instrument of war is a long and storied one extending back as far as the Middle Ages. Girolamo Fantini, in the preface of his famous treatise of 1638, calls to mind the ability of the sound of the trumpet to make helmet crests shake and fierce steeds tremble in anticipation of battle. As an instrument of love, however, the trumpet's more recent history is brief, but no less important to the evolution of Western music. Fantini, recognized as the first true trumpet soloist, also describes a well-played trumpet's capacity to make both knights and ladies languish with joy at the beautiful sound. Presumably, Maestro Fantini speaks of his own formidable abilities and, if credible, surely merits respect and an enduring place in trumpet history.

Respect for the music of the past, and a reverence for those players who went before us, is part and parcel to the concept of any performance practice. Today's trumpeters are indebted to the countless legions of players who have come and have gone before them. As the inheritors of a rich and diverse history of performance practice spanning more than four hundred years and a myriad of musical genres, present-day trumpeters recognize that performance practices are directly shaped by those personages who contributed through their playing, their teaching, their writings, and their lives to the history and the current state of trumpet performance.

David Hickman, the author of Trumpet Greats: A Biographical Dictionary, personifies this ideal of respect for one's predecessors. Recognized internationally as an artist-teacher of formidable abilities, he has expressed throughout his long and illustrious career a deep and abiding respect for those who have come before. Whether it be the American virtuoso cornetist—Herbert L. Clarke, the Mexican "Heifetz of the Trumpet"—Rafael Méndez, the French author of the "trumpeter's bible"—Jean-Baptiste Arban, the father of American orchestral trumpet playing—Max Schlossberg, or his own teachers and mentors, David has continued to afford all of them, throughout the many years I have known him, just attribution, credit, and utmost respect for all that he personally inherited from their playing and teachings.

Professor Hickman's desire to inform and share with his trumpet brethren all things historical and pedagogical for the advancement of the trumpet, its music, and its players, is evident from his many recordings, books, and editions of music and his involvement with such notable projects as the Summit Brass—America's premier large brass ensemble, the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute, the Rafael Méndez Library at Arizona State University, his early leadership in the International Trumpet Guild, his establishment of Summit Records, and most recently, Hickman Music Editions. It would be a grievous omission were it not mentioned that David's deep respect and sincere admiration of his contemporaries in the trumpet and brass playing and teaching fields, has always been and remains a central element of his entrepreneurial endeavors. His prodigious efforts have, in a way natural to him, invited the input and welcomed the participation of many of his most respected trumpeter friends and brass colleagues. In the manner of a true mentor, this respect and inclusion have often been extended to his own students—all with significant results benefitting the world of brass playing.

*Trumpet Greats…*is perhaps the ultimate tribute to the many individuals who in so many diverse ways contributed to the advancement of all things concerning the trumpet and its music. More than just a biographical dictionary, this book chronicles the genesis of a style that transcends narrow historical categorization—a style that was commonly referred to in its application to Baroque music as "trumpet style." The trumpet was frequently emulated by all other instruments in the Baroque era, and to this day is still called upon to herald such significant human events as the crowning of kings and queens, weddings, military actions, and the deaths of embattled warriors. To sound the trumpet is to communicate life's emotions in a musical way that moves the listener. Whether one is a jazz player, a classical soloist, a military musician, or an orchestral trumpeter, the musical intent has always been to stimulate, inspire, and elevate the human spirit to new heights.

Now, for the first time, trumpeters and researchers have available to them in English the single most comprehensive biographical volume regarding the trumpet and its players. With its more than 1,100 pages and some 2,200 biographical entries of trumpeters of all nationalities who have lived and performed from circa 1600 to the present day, Hickman's tome provides the trumpet and brass worlds with another significant contribution previously unmatched in any language in scope and detail. Many useful appendices and extensive cross referencing by era, nationality, musical genre, and playing style, among other categories, allow the "student" of the trumpet quick and accurate access to information about important players, teachers, writers, and innovators that can pique the mind and stimulate the imagination. With the significant and expert assistance of his content editors—Dr. Edward H. Tarr, the world's foremost authority on trumpet history and performance, and Dr. Michel Laplace, Europe's leading chronicler of all brass-related activities, along with a group of dedicated general and assistant editors—Hickman offers interested readers a resource of immeasurable value.

Bravo David, Ed, and Michel for giving to the world of trumpet playing an extensive and detailed overview of the long and varied history of our trumpet ancestors and our trumpet brethren. Trumpet Greats: A Biographical Dictionary is a monumental compilation, and the value of your good and dedicated work will endure for decades.

Whether one is a trumpet player, a lover of trumpet music, a lover of trumpet players or a trumpet player's lover, this paean to the long and distinguished history of our instrument, and more particularly its players, is sure to inform, inspire, and delight the reader.

Dr. Leonard A. Candelaria
Regents Professor of Trumpet, emeritus
University of North Texas
1993-95 President, International Trumpet Guild

Preface

The connections among trumpet players are important in many ways. We are who we are as musicians because of the influences of others; how we sound, the styles of music we perform, the methods we use to learn, and the equipment we use are all products of those whom we have heard or learned from. A trumpeter's art is, quite simply, based on the talents and influences of others who have made strong impressions on the intellectual and emotional thoughts we have developed throughout our trumpet-playing careers.

In working diligently on this book for the last four years, I have been continuously amazed and inspired by these connections. Rather than becoming weary of the research and writing processes involved in completing each individual biography, I found the experience positively addictive! It seemed that the entire universe of trumpet playing was unfolding, and that a better understanding of each person's role in its creation was being revealed to me. I was further inspired as I sensed the same reaction from my expert content editors, Michel Laplace and Edward Tarr.

In order to facilitate identifying the connections among the biographies, I have included an extensive Index that lists the names of individuals, learning institutions, and musical groups mentioned in the biographies, which can be helpful when researching potential places to study, people with whom to study, or ensembles with which to perform. Also included are appendices that include female trumpet and cornet players, trumpeters who have had serious accidents, illnesses, or birth defects with which to contend, countries of birth of trumpeters, and a calendar of known birth dates (and years) for each individual. Additional categories list: Baroque, Classical, and Romantic era trumpeters; Cornetists, Jazz, Mariachi, Orchestra, and Band performers; Soloists, Teachers, Authors, Publishers, Historians, Designers and Manufacturers; and Commercial/Pop, Studio, Freelance, and Chamber musicians. Many of the entries are listed in more than one category.

A book of this type will never be complete; it is merely a "snapshot" in time. Great trumpeters will come and go, each leaving his or her own legacy. I wish it were possible to include more of them, but many were not included because of the lack of biographical information, or because they were not old or experienced enough at this time to be considered "great." It appears, however, that the next generation of trumpeters will have many more inspiring and influential people to add to the book. My apologies if any of the biographical facts are incorrect, but the editors and I used the best source materials available. Whenever possible, personal interviews were conducted, and most living persons included were given the opportunity to proofread their biographies before publication.

David R. Hickman

Author's Comments

Criteria for Inclusion

Admittedly, the criteria used for the selection of entries featured in this book are subjective. However, the author and content editors limited the inclusion to those which 1) have acquired a national or international reputation, 2) have demonstrated an output of the highest quality and at a large quantity, 3) have had a successful career spanning many years, 4) are considered leaders in their particular area of expertise, and 5) are of an age at which their significance to the profession is assured. Although the author is aware of numerous young performers with potentials of becoming superstar trumpeters, people born after 1980 are generally not represented here.

In some cases, particularly of notable persons who died long ago, too little information is obtainable to construct biographies of reasonable length. It is regrettable that some of them have been left out (although many of their names are mentioned, and are included in the Index).

Not all entries are of trumpeters. Several brass teachers, instrument designers and manufacturers, authors, and others are included that have had an indisputably positive impact on the trumpet.

Categories

Lists of individuals of importance are included to facilitate researching particular areas of interest (see Appendices section). Many of the 2,212 entries representing sixty-four countries are listed in two or more categories. These eighteen categories appear just prior to the Index, and are listed in the Contents page.

Interviews

Whenever practical, in-person, telephone, or email interviews were conducted so that current and accurate information could be obtained. Approximately four hundred such interviews were completed by the author over the past four years; Laplace and Tarr completed many as well. Dr. Laplace also relied on his notes taken at interviews during the past fifty years, many of which form the basis of the most currently available source materials. Persons recently interviewed had the opportunity to proof their biographies prior to publication.

Source Materials

Although thousands of articles, books, and Internet sites were consulted to acquire as much biographical information as possible, certain sources proved to be extremely valuable in preparing the biographies. The main ones include (in alphabetical order—see next page):

Bolotin, Sergey. Biograficheskiy slovar muzykantov-ispolniteley na dukhovykh Instrumentakh (enlarged edition 1995, Moscow).
Brass Bulletin magazine (various articles, Switzerland, 1971-2003).
Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood, 1965).
Historic Brass Society Journal (various articles, U.S., 1989-2013).
International Trumpet Guild Journal (various articles, U.S., 1975-2013).
Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete: Instrument, Geschichte, Trompeterlexikon (Schott, 2005).
Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete: Instrument, Geschichte, Trompeterlexikon, Bk. 2 (Schott, 2009).
Kernfeld, Barry. (Edit.) The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press, (1994).
Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom with mp3 tracks, 2008).
Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West: The Russian Trumpet Tradition from the Time of Peter the Great to the October Revolution (Pendragon Press, 2003).
Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition, Hickman Music Editions, 2008).
The Brass Herald magazine (various articles, England, 2001-13).
The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians (www.OxfordMusic Online.com).
Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings: The Players Who Shaped the Sound of Jazz Trumpet (Backbeat Books, 2001).

Other important resources include:

Anabale, Ed. Trumpeters Galore: An Encyclopedia of Trumpet Players and More (Trafford Publishing, 2011).
Baines, Anthony. Brass Instruments: Their History and Development (Faber and Faber, 1976).
Bate, Philip. The Trumpet and Trombone: An Outline of Their History, Development, and Construction (E. Benn, 1978).
Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. trans. Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editore, 2009).
Davidson, Louis. Trumpet Profiles (self-published, 1975).
Dudgeon, Ralph T. The Keyed Bugle, Second Edition (Scarecrow Press, 2004).
Eliason, Robert E. Early American Brass Instrument Makers (The Brass Press, 1979).
Eliason, Robert E. Keyed Bugles in the United States (Smithsonian Institution Press, 1972).
Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium: The History and Development of the Nineteenth Century Cornet (self-published, 2001).
Schwartz, Richard I. Supplement to The Cornet Compendium (self-published, 2002).
Wallace, John and Alexander McGrattan. The Trumpet (Yale University Press, 2011).

Photographs, Paintings, and Sketches

Every attempt has been made to include at least one visual image with each entry. In many cases, no known photographs, paintings, or sketches exist, and in several other cases permission was not granted to include them. The book contains 2,513 images, 118 of which are in color.

The majority of images are in the public domain. In nearly all other instances, they have been provided by the artists depicted, who own the copyrights. Photographers are credited whenever requested. Numerous celebrity photos are ubiquitous publicity prints used in magazines, newspapers, and other media, and are used here under the Fair Use Act.

The author thanks the International Trumpet Guild for allowing the use of numerous photographs taken at conferences and/or published with articles appearing in its journals.

Spellings of Names

Biographies are listed under each person's legal name. Aliases and alternative spellings of names are provided in square brackets, and nicknames are within quotation marks with parentheses.

Many names are spelled differently in various countries (i.e. Böhme = German, whereas Boehme = English). The editors have listed names under the spellings primarily associated with each person's country of origin.

Alphabetical Order

Names within the biographical section have been alphabetized in accordance with Webster's New World Dictionary of American Language, Third College Edition. (Simon & Schuster, 1991). This system ignores the use of apostrophes and spaces. For example, John D'Earth is listed in the D section between Dean and De Boer, and de Saint-Jacome appears in the S section. Likewise, names such as Dominic LaRocca appear in the L section. Also, names with Van (van) or Von (von) are listed in alphabetical sections according to how names are commonly referred to (i.e. Mark Van Cleave and Bernd Von Hösslin appear in the V section, whereas a name such as Ludwig van Beethoven would appear in the B section).

Diacritical marks are also ignored in terms of alphabetical listings. For instance, Matthias Höfs is not listed as "Hoefs."

Job and Position Titles

Job and position titles have not been capitalized because of the numerous terms used in various countries. As an example, in Europe it is common for the first chair (principal) trumpeter in a symphony orchestra to be referred to as the "solo trumpeter," and the second player as "subprincipal." In America the word "professor" often refers to a fulltime teacher at a university, not always making any distinction as to rankings such as assistant professor, associate professor, or full professor.

Music Degrees

Music degrees such as bachelor of music, master of music, doctor of music, and bachelor of science in music education, are not capitalized. This is due to the general lack of specific clarity and accuracy found on many websites, in magazine articles, and among institutions.

Designation of Conservatories in France

The Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique et de Danse de Paris is often referred to simply as the Paris Conservatory. When other French music conservatories are discussed, they are listed by their correct names, such as the Conservatoire National de Région in Lyons and the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique de Lyon. There are more than forty music conservatories in France.

US vs. U.S.

Official entities of the United States such as the US Marine Band, US Army, US Embassy, and US President do not appear with periods. However, whenever the abbreviation for the United States stands alone, such as in the phrase "returning from a tour of the U.S. and Europe," periods are used.

Use of Index

The Index lists names of individuals, educational institutions, and ensembles found in the biographical texts. It does not list names of instruments, award titles, songs, or titles of record albums. When names of individuals are used within the title of an album, those names are not included. Names of authors and photographers appearing in the brief bibliographies accompanying each biography are also not listed in the Index.

A bold-faced page number appearing after an index entry refers to that individual's biography.

Whenever an index entry appears in multiple biographies on the same page, the page number will indicate how many with the addition of a number in superscript. For example, 157^{2} indicates that the entry is located within two separate biographies on page 157.

Octave Designations

Octave designations such as "pedal C," "high C," and "double high C," are listed in the following manner: C = double pedal C (two ledger lines below the bass clef), c = pedal C (second space of bass clef), c' = low C, c'' = third-space C, c''' = high C, c'''' = double high C, and c''''' = triple high C.

Acknowledgements

It would be impossible to individually thank each person who provided assistance with this book. However, certain persons have been instrumental in helping complete the project.

First, the author thanks Drs. Michel Laplace and Edward H. Tarr for their expert knowledge and long-term commitment to researching and/or interviewing all of the "trumpet greats" contained in this dictionary. Their contributions to the biographies in this book are truly monumental. Laplace is considered the world's foremost writer on trumpet players, having interviewed thousands of professionals over the past fifty years and published hundreds of articles concerning them. Likewise, Tarr is incomparable for his historical research and writings on all facets of the trumpet, its repertoire, and the most important musicians associated with it. Better content editors could not have been selected.

The general editors, Richard Beauchamp and Miriam Hickman, spent thousands of hours detailing each biography so that a consistent and flowing style of writing was used throughout. Likewise, assistant editors Carolyn Ball and Brian Shook contributed greatly to the overall accuracy of the writing style, spelling, and punctuation. Indexing assistance from Christopher Albrecht, Bryan Ewing, Jared Hunt, Garrett Klein, Karen Koger, Tyler Richardson, Jean-Paul Stanek, and Oswaldo Zapata is also appreciated.

Thanks to the hundreds of people interviewed for information contained in this book. In many cases, the trumpet players found within these pages gave personal interviews, and in some instances where subjects were deceased, relatives were contacted and were able to provide information. Special thanks go to Friedel Keim for his assistance, particularly with birth and death information. The author acknowledges the International Trumpet Guild for allowing the inclusion of many of the photographs contained in the book. Lastly, but by no means least, the author sincerely thanks his wife, pianist Miriam Hickman, for doing an excellent job in laying out each page of this book. Her attention to detail and patience with the hundreds of last minute edits, additions, and changes were remarkable and greatly appreciated.

Contents

Dedication i

Foreword iii

Preface v

Author's Comments vii

Acknowledgements xi

Biographies (in alphabetical order):
- A through M 1
- Color Photos 567
- N through Z 587

Appendix A: Trumpeters by Category:
- Baroque Era 909
- Classical Era 909
- Romantic Era 909
- Authors 909
- Band Musicians 910
- Chamber Music Performers 911
- Cornetists 914
- Designers and Manufacturers 914
- Freelance Players 915
- Historians and Players of Historical Instruments 917
- Jazz Musicians 917
- Mariachi Performers 924
- Modern Classical Soloists 924
- Music Publishers 926
- Orchestral Players 926
- Pop and Commercial Soloists 932
- Studio and Recording Artists 932
- Teachers and Pedagogues 934

Appendix B: Female Trumpet and Cornet Players 943

Appendix C: Known Birthdates of Trumpeters 945

Appendix D: Trumpeters by Country of Birth 969

Appendix E: Trumpeters Who Overcame Birth Defects, Injuries, or Serious Illnesses . . 993

Index 995

A

Aarons, Al[bert] N. (b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Mar. 23, 1932). American trumpeter. Aarons began playing the trumpet at the age of eight. His main teacher was his high school band director McVickers. He then attended Wright State University in Detroit, earning a bachelor of music degree. Aarons's early influences were Harry James, Dizzy Gillespie, Clifford Brown, Freddie Hubbard, and Kenny Durham.

Aarons's career developed when he began working with Yusef Lateef (1956-57), Barry Harris (Detroit, 1957), and Wild Bill Davison (1961). He then moved to New York City, and joined the Count Basie Orchestra (1961-69). He also worked with Frank Wess (1962) and Frank Foster (1963).

Quincy Jones recommended that Aarons move to Los Angeles. After moving there in 1969, Aarons worked with several of the television shows Jones produced, including The Music Scene. Aarons became a very active studio player who recorded or worked with Sarah Vaughan (1971-72, 1974), Ella Fitzgerald (1972, 1978, 1982), Henry Mancini (from 1971), Buddy Collette (from 1973), Capp-Pierce Juggernaut (1978, 1981), Zoot Sims (1979), Gene Ammons, Bobby Bryant, and Gerald Wilson (1985-86), among others. During the 1980s and '90s, Aarons was a member of the Frank Wess/Harry Edison Orchestra and played with Hank Jones in Tokyo (1987). He was heavily involved with his wife's (Terri Merrill-Aarons) Los Angeles Jazz Society. Aarons can be seen in the video, Count Basie—Whirlybird (Vintage Jazz Classics), and can be heard on several jazz albums on his own record label, Legend.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Al Aarons" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Abdullah, Ahmed (b. Harlem, New York, May 10, 1947). American trumpeter. Born as Leroy Bland, Abdullah began playing the trumpet at the age of thirteen. He later attended Queens College (1965-67) and Kingsborough Community College (1979-81). Abdullah's influences were from Miles Davis, Joe Gordon, Kenny Dorham, Lee Morgan, Booker Little, and Don Cherry. He began playing professionally in 1968.

From 1970 to '74, Abdullah played in the Melodic Artet in New York. He has also performed with Arthur Blythe, Ed Blackwell, Sam Rivers, The Group (1986-87), Rashied Ali, Hamiet Bluiett, and Sun Ra (on and off between 1975 and 1993). In 1972, he formed his own avant-garde group called Abdullah. In 1987, he led the Solomonic Quartet which later expanded to a quintet, and then sextet. More recently, Abdullah's groups have included Diaspora and his current group Ebonic Tones.

Abdullah has recorded for various labels, but mostly for Cadence, About Time, Silkheart, and CIMP. Among his albums are Tara's Song, Traveling the Spaceways, Song of the NAM, Actual Proof, Diaspora Dedication, Liquid Magic, Ahmed Abdullah's Solomonic Quintet, and Abdullah Life's Force. He has worked for the Carnegie Hall Department of Education, taught in the schools of Brooklyn, and is an adjunct faculty member at The New School in Manhattan. He and his wife Monique Ngozi Nri cofounded the Central Brooklyn Jazz Consortium, and often produce concerts together.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Ahmed Abdullah" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ackley, James (b. Cincinnati, Ohio, May 28, 1969). American trumpeter. Ackley grew up in Cincinnati, Ohio. He began playing the trumpet around the age of fourteen; his first teachers were John Fecker, Perry Landmeyer, and Eugene Blee. After graduating from Turpin High School in 1987, he attended the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory in Cleveland, Ohio, studying with James Darling and Mary Squire (1987-91). After receiving his bachelor of music degree, Ackley earned a master of music degree at the Cleveland Institute of Music, studying with Michael Sachs and David Zauder (1991-93). While at CIM, he served as an adjunct faculty member at Youngstown State University. Additionally, he studied with Alan Siebert at the Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music (CCM).

From 1994 to 1996, Ackley performed with numerous orchestras throughout Mexico. He joined the Bogotá Philharmonic in Colombia from 1996 to 2001, and established the National Trumpet Conference there. He began doctoral studies at CCM while on a sabbatical from the orchestra in 1999 (degree never completed), and returned to the United States in 2001 as professor of trumpet at the University of Connecticut, a position he held until accepting a similar post at the University of South Carolina in 2007. During his career, Ackley has performed with the Dayton Philharmonic, Ohio Chamber Orchestra, American Ballet Theater Orchestra, Moscow State Radio Symphony, Youngstown Symphony, New Haven Symphony, New Britain Symphony, Charleston Symphony, Cincinnati Symphony, Augusta Symphony, and South Carolina Philharmonic Orchestra. He has also performed with Placido Domingo, James Levine, Zubin Mehta, Leonard Bernstein, and Jesus Lopez-Cobo. He has recorded two solo CDs: Recital Music for Trumpet (Claronade) and Lirico Latino (MSR). He has also recorded more than thirty CDs with various orchestras and ensembles.

Ackley received the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory Alumni Achievement Award as well as several other commendations. He is an accomplished composer and arranger, and has published several works through Cimarron Music Press. He is a member of the professional trumpet ensemble, Tromba Mundi, and is on the Board of Directors of the International Trumpet Guild.

Ackley and his wife Maricela Yesenia Ackley have two children: Kevin Alejandro (b. 1998) and Joshua Antonio (b. 2003). His hobbies include martial arts and golf.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "James Ackley" (www.atlantatrumpetfestival.com/artists.htm); personal interview, Mar. 13, 2011.

Acquisto, Antoine (b. Mons, Belgium, Jan. 13, 1972). Belgian trumpeter. Acquisto's first lessons were with Oswald Dehaut, a tuba player. At age eighteen, he studied with Pierre Cox at the Royal Conservatory in Liège, Belgium, with Guy Touvron at the Conservatory of the City of Paris (1994), and with Luc Capouillez. A gifted soloist, Acquisto won first prizes in the Axion Classics, National OSE, and the Bendux Jean Darlier competitions, as well as third prizes at the Toulon International Trumpet Competition in 2000 and the Selmer Competition of Paris.

Acquisto was principal trumpet of the Chamber Orchestra of Wallonie in Belgium from 1992 to 1996, and played at the Flemish Opera Orchestra from 1996 to 1997. In 1998, he was appointed principal of the Royal Opera of Wallonia, a position he still holds. He is a strong promoter of modern music by Belgian composers, and teaches at the Institut Supérieur de Musique et de Pédagogie in Namur. He is also founder and director of the Rencontre Internationale de Cuivres de la Communauté de Belgique. Acquisto's CDs include Couleurs XXe siècle and Equivoque.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Adam, William ("Bill") A. (b. Kansas City, Missouri, Oct. 21 (25?), 1917). American trumpeter. Adam grew up in Ft. Collins, Colorado, and graduated from Ft. Collins High School at age sixteen. He attended Pasadena Junior College in California and the University of Southern California. He moved to Denver, Colorado, where he attended the University of Denver, but completed his bachelor of music degree at the University of Colorado in Boulder in 1941. His teachers in Colorado were John Leick, Mabel Keith Leick, and Hyrum Lammers, and in California, Herbert L. Clarke, Harold Mitchell, and Louis Maggio.

Adam taught in the public schools of Rifle, Colorado, and Englewood, Colorado, as well as at San Francisco State College and Appalachian State University. His early career included performing in Los Angeles and Denver as a freelance player, subbing with the Los Angeles Philharmonic and the Denver Symphony Orchestra, and playing with various dance orchestras such as the Don Macs Orchestra. He continued his education at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, graduating in 1947 with master's degrees in theory and composition. He also studied with William Vacchiano.

Adam accepted a trumpet teaching position at Indiana University in 1946, and by the time he retired in 1988, he had taught a legion of trumpeters with a rather unique approach—a completely aural method of having each student imitate Adam's own playing. Rather than discussing the mechanics of playing with students, he would require them to carefully repeat phrases that he played. By gradually altering the sound and articulations, he would lead students to correct musical results. He also had students play on the mouthpiece and leadpipe only, encouraging a relaxed approach to sound production. He produced hundreds of successful students, among them such distinguished performers as Chris Botti, Patrick Harbison, Lynn Nicholson, Liesl Whitaker, Jerry Hey, John Head, Susan Slaughter, John McNeil, Mark Van Cleave, and Randy Brecker. Although Adam never published a trumpet method book, his pedagogical ideas are documented in a series of three videotapes titled A New and Different Way of Getting More Music Out of Trumpet (University of Alaska-Fairbanks).

Adam received the International Trumpet Guild's Award of Merit in 2004. Although now an Emeritus Professor at Indiana University (since 1988), he continues to teach and inspire classical, jazz, and commercial trumpet students.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bks. 1 & 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "William Adam" (http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/tpin/great_teachers2.html); "William Adam" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "William Adam Tribute Page" (http://everythingtrumpet.com/Bill-Adam).

Adamov, Mikhail Prokofjewitch (b. Lopatkov, Russia, Oct. 27, 1874; d. Moscow, Russia, Oct. 27, 1946). Russian cornetist and trumpeter. Adamov studied with August Marquardt at the Music School of the Moscow Philharmonic Society, graduating in 1896. From 1897 to 1898, he taught at the Music School in Odessa. He also had an orchestral career, becoming principal trumpet of the Mariinsky Theater Orchestra from 1898 to 1902. He joined the opera portion of the Imperial Theater Orchestra in Moscow as principal trumpet in 1902, and again from 1908 to 1911. His main performing career was as principal cornet of the Bolshoi Theater Orchestra from 1903 to 1946.

Adamov is best remembered as an important teacher, being the first Russian-born trumpeter to become a professor at the Moscow Conservatory in 1912 until 1932 (replacing German-born Willy Brandt). Adamov became a full professor in 1918 and was honored by the State in 1924. Among his best-known students were Sergey V. Bolotin, Ostrov Vasilevsky, Sergey N. Yeriomin, Valentin Alexandrovich Kalashnikov, and Mikhail Vetrov. Adamav died on his seventy-second birthday.

Bibl.: Bolotin, Sergey. Biographical Dictionary of Russian and Soviet Wind Players (Muzyka); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD Rom; Oct. 2008).

Adams, Greg (b. Billings, Montana, Feb. 2, 1952). American trumpeter, flugelhornist, and arranger. Adams grew up in the San Francisco Bay area, graduating from Westmoor High School in Daly City in 1970. Although he was accepted to the Berklee School of Music, he decided to become a charter member of the group, Tower of Power, with which he stayed as a trumpeter and arranger for twenty-five years. He also performed on national radio with the Stephanie Miller Show, and with Tom Scott.

Adams has released several solo CDs of cool or smooth jazz, including Midnight Morning (Ripa; Blue Note), Cool to the Touch (Ripa), Firefly (215), Hidden Agenda (Epic), East Bay Soul (Ripa), and the DVD, Big Band Brass. He can be heard on over five hundred other recordings with such artists as Rod Stewart, Lyle Lovett, Linda Ronstedt, Quincy Jones, Ray Charles, The Rolling Stones, Céline Dion, Chicago, B.B. King, Dionne Warwick, and Madonna. As an arranger, he scored for films such as Top Gun, Mask, Saving Silverman, and Duets. Along with Paul Shaffer, he was nominated for an Emmy Award for his musical arrangements for the television show, Late Night with David Letterman.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Greg Adams's official website: www.gregadamsmusic.com.

Adderley, Nat[haniel Sr.] (b. Tampa, Florida, Nov. 25, 1931; d. Lakeland, Florida, Jan. 2, 2000). American cornetist. Adderley began playing the trumpet at age fifteen, but permanently switched to cornet when he was nineteen. He was the younger brother of the more famous Cannonball Adderley, a jazz alto sax player. Both boys played with various jazz groups in Florida while in high school.

Nat attended Florida State University where he majored in sociology and minored in music. He then joined the military where he served in the Army from 1951-53, playing part of the time in an Army band. After leaving the Army, he taught in the public schools of Florida, as did his brother. For a while, Nat played with Lionel Hampton in 1954-55, and made a European tour with him.

Nat and Cannonball took a summer trip to New York in 1955. They were invited to sit in with Oscar Pettiford's group at the Café Bohemia, and were so popular that they stayed in New York, performing and recording until forming their own group under Cannonball's leadership. They recorded for Emarcy Records in 1956-57, but the group could not find enough work to stay together. Cannonball joined Miles Davis's group, and Nat worked with J. J. Johnson (1957-58) and the Woody Herman Sextet (1959). In 1958, he took part in an Art Ford television show with Cannonball and Coleman Hawkins. During the years 1955 to 1960, Nat recorded for various record labels including Emarcy, Atlantic, Jazzland, Capitol, Riverside, Savoy, Wing, Milestone, A&M, and Prestige.

In October of 1959, the new Cannonball Adderley Quintet was formed, and had great success. The group was a leader in soul and hard bop styles of music. Nat was often featured as soloist during the first half of the 1960s, but his range and endurance diminished after 1965. When Cannonball died in 1975, Nat assumed leadership of the group. It recorded for Steeplechase, Little David, Timeless, Challenge, Landmark, Enja, Galaxy, Theresa, Evidence, and In & Out.

Nat Adderley appeared in a 1978 off-Broadway play called Mahalia, where he acted, sang, and played cornet. He was known for his good humor, and wrote excellent compositions such as Work Song, Jive Samba, Hummin', and The Old Country. He had a son, Nat Jr., who was born in 1955. Nat Jr. played piano and keyboards with Luther Vandross and Aretha Franklin. In 1986, Nat Sr.'s musical, Shout up a Morning (about the folk hero John Henry), played on Broadway. Nat also ghosted the trumpet solos for Sammy Davis Jr. in the movie, A Man Called Adam (1966). In addition, he led seminars at Harvard University.

Some of Nat's best recordings include Sophisticated Swing (Emarcy), Cannonball Adderley Quintet in San Francisco (Original Jazz Classics), Dizzy's Business (Milestone), Mercy Mercy Mercy (Capital). Introducing Nat Adderley (Verve), Work Song (Original Jazz Classics), That's Right (Original Jazz Classics), Autumn Leaves (Evidence), Branching Out (Original Jazz Classics), and Live at the 1994 Floating Jazz Festival (Chiaroscuro).

When Nat developed diabetes in the mid 1990s, he was no longer able to play the cornet. He retired in 1997, and died on January 2, 2000 at the age of sixty-eight.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Addinall, Patrick ("Paddy") (b. Northern England, c1960). British trumpeter. Addinall studied with John Dickenson, Howard Snell, and Sir Philip Jones at the Royal Northern College of Music. Immediately after graduation, he assumed duties in 1982 as principal trumpet of the BBC Philharmonic. He later studied with Boyde Hood of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Addinall is known for his full, powerful tone and incredible endurance. His performance of Ivor Hodgson's Concerto for Trumpet with the Dallas Wind Symphony during the 2003 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Ft. Worth, Texas, certainly proved this to be true. In addition to his duties with the BBC Philharmonic, Addinall teaches at the Royal Northern Academy of Music.

Bibl.: "Patrick Addinall" (www.trumpetguild.org/2003 conference/bios.htm).

Adelbrecht, Henri ("Riton") (b. Mulhouse, Alsace, France, Apr. 3, 1926). French trumpeter. Adelbrecht studied in Straßburg and Paris with Eugène Foveau and Raymond Sabarich, and in Algiers with Clément Perrin. Aldelbrecht began his career playing jazz and various types of music in Algiers, after which he played for French Radio and Television and the Orchestre Radio-Symphonique. From 1967 to 1991, he was principal trumpet of the Tonhalle and Opera Orchestra in Zurich, Switzerland. He was also a well-known soloist who performed in Germany, France, Italy, Israel, America, and Canada. He taught at the Zurich Hochschule for many years; many of his important students include Max Sommerhalder, Jouko Harjanne, Claude Rippas, Dirceu Braz, Jörg Schneider, and Bernhard Schmid.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Adelstein, Bernard ("Bernie") (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Apr. 24, 1928). American trumpeter. One of the world's greatest orchestral trumpeters, Adelstein began playing the trumpet at age eight because his doctor recommended it as therapy for his asthma. At age ten, he began studying with Louis Davidson, principal trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra. At age fifteen, Adelstein became second trumpet in the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo orchestra, and in the following year became the youngest member of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra (second trumpet) under Maestro Fritz Reiner. Bernard's older brother, Rovin, joined the Pittsburgh Symphony on bass at about the same time.

Adelstein played in Pittsburgh from 1944 to 1948, spending summers in the Chautauqua Orchestra. His mentor was principal trumpeter Irving Sarin, who advised him to study with Georges Mager of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. It was Mager who influenced Adelstein to play the C trumpet. Adelstein also studied with Harry Glantz of the NBC Symphony during the summer of 1948.

In the fall of 1948, Adelstein assumed duties as principal of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, and two years later became principal of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. During the years 1950 to 1960, he also taught at the University of Minnesota. Adelstein assumed his final orchestral position in 1960 as principal of the Cleveland Orchestra where he remained until 1988. He also taught for a few years at the Oberlin Conservatory of Music, and was on the faculty of the Cleveland Institute of Music from 1963 to 1988, and the faculty of Indiana University from 1988 to 1994; his students occupy dozens of positions in orchestras around the world. Adelstein has presented international master classes, and participated in hundreds of orchestral recordings. He also played on the famous Philadelphia-Cleveland-Chicago orchestra brass sections recording, The Antiphonal Music of Gabrieli (Columbia), which won a Grammy Award in 1970.

After retiring from Indiana University in 1994, he and his wife Constance ("Connie") retired to Sarasota, Florida.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Bernard Adelstein's official website: www.bernardadelstein.com.

Adilifu, Kamau Muata [Sullivan, Charles Henry] (b. New York, New York, Nov. 8, 1944). American trumpeter. Charles Sullivan, who changed his name to Kamau Muata Adilifu in 1980 when he became a Muslim, took his first trumpet lessons from his uncle, Hubie James. He later studied at the Manhattan School of Music with Cecil Collins and graduated in 1967 with a bachelor of music degree. As a student, he played in pit orchestras for various Broadway shows, and after finishing school worked with Lionel Hampton (1968), Roy Haynes's Hip Ensemble (1969), Count Basie's orchestra (playing lead in 1970), Lonnie Liston Smith, Sy Oliver, Norman Connors, Clark Terry, New York Jazz Repertory Co., Abdullah Ibrahim, the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra (1974), Sonny Fortune, Carlos Garnett, Bennie Maupin, Ricky Ford, Eddie Jefferson, Woody Shaw, Kenny Barron (1974), Charles Greelee (1975), Walter Davis (1977), and many others. He led the Black Legacy Big Band from 1975 to 1980 and toured with George Gruntz's Concert Jazz Band (1980-82). Sullivan played in the Mercer Ellington Orchestra (1981) and McCoy Tyner's Big Band (1985-92), and he taught at Bennington College.

An excellent but underrated post-bop player, Adilifu has released several albums, including Kamau (Arabesque), Genesis (Strata-East), Loxodonta Africana (New World, with Ricky Ford), Salvation (Capitol), and Re-Entry (Whynot).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charles Sullivan" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Agnas, Joakim (b. Leksand, Sweden, June 26, 1969). Swedish trumpeter. Agnas grew up in Leksand, Sweden. He studied with Claes Strömblad at the Royal Academy of Music in Stockholm, after which he played in the Swedish Radio Symphony Orchestra for a number of years. Since 2003 Agns has been principal trumpet of the Royal Stockholm Philharmonic Orchestra. He is a founding member of the Stockholm Chamber Brass and is an active studio player. He is also a skilled composer and arranger.

Agnas has two brothers, Thomas and Urban. Urban is a well-known professional trumpeter (see biography below).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Agnas, Urban (b. Leksand, Sweden, Sept. 20, 1961). Swedish trumpeter. Agnas studied at the Ingesund College of Music in Arvika, Sweden. He won a prize at the international trumpet competitions in Munich, Germany (1986), and Toulon, France (1987). He was principal trumpet of the Gothenburg Symphony Orchestra before commencing his current position as principal of the Royal Stockholm Philharmonic Orchestra. He is a founding member of the Stockholm Chamber Brass, and has performed as a soloist with several orchestras around the world including the Helsinki Philharmonic, Bavarian Radio Orchestra, Norwegian Chamber Orchestra, and London Mozart Players. He has recorded the Hummel Trumpet Concerto for the Chandos label, as well as Fingerprints (includes Castérède's 6 pièces brèves en duo with brother Joachim Agnas, trumpet), Enesco's Légende, and Hindemith's Sonata. Since 2001, he has taught at the conservatory in Cologne, Germany.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Urban Agnas's official website: www.urbanagnas.com.

Agraz, Raul (b. Villa de Cura, Venezuela, Nov. 26, 1967). Venezuelan trumpeter. Agraz began his musical career at age seven when he sang in the internationally known Ninos Cantores de Villa de Cura that toured countries such as Spain, France, Belgium, Austria, and the United States. He began playing the flute, then the horn, but by age nine settled on the trumpet. He began his formal classical education at the José Angel Lamas School of Music, studying with Albreth Egon, and at age seventeen, was selected to be a member of the Venezuela Symphony "Simon Bolivar". He had a successful career as a freelance and studio performer in Venezuela, performing with all of the leading classical, jazz, and pop musicians of his country.

Agraz moved to New York City in 1996 where he studied with Victor Paz and Laurie Frink. During the past fifteen years, he has become one of the best lead trumpet players in the city, performing as lead for the Broadway musicals A Chorus Line, The Full Monty, Movin' Out, The Wedding Singer, Curtains, and In the Heights. He has backed dozens of celebrity artists including Franki Valli, Vanesa Williams, Tito Puente, Ray Santos, Chico O'Farrill, Vikki Carr, Jennifer Lopez, Mark Anthony, Arturo Sandoval, Paquito D'Rivera, Billy Joel, Herb Alpert, and Natalie Cole. Equally comfortable in jazz, Afro-Cuban jazz, and classical music, he has performed with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra, Mingus Big Band, and the New York Philharmonic. His television credits include the Rosie O'Donnell Show, Saturday Night Live, and Good Morning America.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Raul Agraz's official website: www.raulagraz.com.

Ahn, Hee-Chan (b. Korea, c1963). Korean trumpeter. Ahn graduated from the Yongnam University School of Music and continued his studies at the Rotterdam Conservatory in the Netherlands under Theo Mertens and Edward Carroll. He was a member of the Theo Mertens Brass Ensemble in Belgium, and returned to his native country in 1991 to join the Korean Symphony Orchestra. He was a member of the Korean Symphony brass ensemble, the Pentatone Brass Quintet.

Ahn has performed with the Euro-Asia Philharmonic (1997-98), Asia Philharmonic (1998), K. B. S. Symphony, Pusan Philharmonic, Suwon Philharmonic, Cheju Philharmonic, Masan Philharmonic, and has appeared as a soloist with numerous orchestras. He is currently principal trumpet of the Korean Symphony and Seoul Brass Quintet, and is a member of the Korean Festival Ensemble. He is also a professor at the Chugye College of Arts.

Bibl.: http://jiwef.org/english/jiwef/im_view.php?im_no=39&im_14&PHPSESSID=4286274c36becc9b5acf2ade26d68ea2

Ahola, Sylvester ("Hooley") (b. Gloucester, Massachusetts, May 24, 1902; d. Gloucester, Massachusetts, Feb. 13, 1995). American trumpeter. Ahola learned to play the drums when he was six, but by age eight switched to the cornet. He took lessons from Walter M. Smith. Because his family came from Finland, Ahola earned the nickname "Hooley," which means embouchure in Finnish. From 1921 to 1924, he worked with Frank Ward in Boston, as well as several other local groups.

Ahola moved to New York City in 1925, and won a position in Paul Specht's orchestra. He played in Specht's group for over a year, including a two-month European tour. He then played with the California Ramblers that recorded only ten tunes. He also played with Bert Lown and Peter Van Steeden. In 1927, Ahola was invited to join Adrian Rollin's all-star band that included Bix Beiderbecke. The band, however, was short-lived and made no recordings. When the band broke up in late 1927, Ahola went to England to play with the New Savoy Orpheans and in Bert Ambrose's orchestra (1928-31). He was soon working as a studio musician, making as many as three thousand record tracks between 1927 and 1931. This caused the English trumpeters to petition the British Musicians Union because Ahola, a foreigner, was getting most of the work. The petition was successful, and Ahola was banned from working any recordings other than those with Ambrose.

Hooley Ahola stayed in England until August of 1931 when he returned to New York. He played with Ray Noble, Peter Van Steeden, and the NBC staff orchestra. He also made a few recordings with Van Steeden, San Remo's Dance Orchestra (1932), the A.R.C. Brunswick Band (1932), Al Bowlly (1935), and Lud Gluskin (1935). In 1940, he moved back to his hometown of Gloucester, Massachusetts, where he played with the Cape Ann Civic Symphony into the 1980s. Ahola died in 1995 at the age of ninety-two.

Bibl.: Hill, Dick. Sylvester Ahola—The Glouchester Gabriel (Scarecrow Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Akhmadullin, Iskander (b. Kazan, Republic of Tatarstan, Russia, Aug. 2, 1969). Russian trumpeter. He started playing the recorder at age ten and the trumpet at age eleven. He attended the Kazan Children Music School No. 3 under Ildus Almazov, and then studied at the Kazan Music College with Abbas Slashkin (1984-88). He did additional work with Vadim Novikov at the Moscow State Conservatory (1988-96) before coming to America. He studied with Leonard Candelaria and Keith Johnson at the University of North Texas, where he earned master of music (1998) and doctor of music (2003) degrees; he became the first Russian brass player to earn a doctorate from an American university. While in Texas, he performed with the orchestras of Las Colinas, Irving, Richardson, Garland, San Angelo, and Allen. He also appeared with the Dallas Brass and the Bluebonnet Brass.

Akhmadullin is a former member of the Moscow Radio Orchestra. He played the world premiere of Andrei Eshpai's Concerto for Trumpet, Trombone and Orchestra with the Russian Philharmonic Orchestra in December 1995. As a soloist, Akhmadullin has performed throughout Europe and the United States. He has taught as an assistant or adjunct professor at the Moscow State Conservatory, University of North Texas, and Southwestern Oklahoma State University. He is currently a professor at the University of Missouri in Columbia (since 2004), and is coprincipal of the Missouri Symphony Orchestra.

Iskander Akhmadullin and his wife, pianist Natalia Bolshakova, have a daughter, Anna Sophia (b. 2007). He is an active member of the International Trumpet Guild and has served as a faculty member at the annual National Trumpet Competition. His hobby is photography.

Bibl.: "Iskander Akhmadullin to University of Missouri" (News Item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2005). "Iskander Akhmadullin" (http://music.missouri.edu/faculty); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, Apr. 6, 2010.

Akinmusire, Ambrose (b. Nigeria, May 1, 1982). American trumpeter. Akinmusire is one of the young generation's stars of jazz. Raised in Oakland, California, he attended Berkeley High School and was discovered by Steve Coleman. Immediately after high school graduation, Coleman hired him for a European tour, during which time the young and impressionable Akinmusire began to develop his distinctive style of playing. Akinmusire then earned a bachelor of music degree at the Manhattan School of Music in New York, followed by a master of music degree from the University of Southern California's Thelonious Monk Institute of Jazz, where he studied jazz with Terence Blanchard, Herbie Hancock, and Wayne Shorter. His trumpet teachers are Vince Penzarella, Lew Soloff, Laurie Frink, Terence Blanchard, Billy Childs, and Gary Grant.

2007 was a pivotal year for Akinmusire. He won the Thelonious Monk International Jazz Competition and the Carmine Caruso International Jazz Trumpet Solo Competition, and released his debut album, Prelude...To Cora, on the Fresh Sound New Talent label. After moving back to New York City, he began performing and recording with Steve Coleman, Aaron Parks, Vijay Iyer, Mike Ladd, David Binney, John Escreet, the Le Boeuf Brothers, Josh Roseman, Joe Henderson, Billy Higgins, Jimmy Heath, Jason Moran, Hal Crook, Bob Hurst, Terri Lyne Carrington, Ron Carter, Wallace Roney, Alan Pasqua, Sara Gazarek, Walter Smith III, and others. He played at the international festival, Jazz in Marciac, in 2010 and signed with Blue Note in that same year, releasing the 2011 CD, When The Heart Emerges Glistening, which has received wide critical acclaim.

Bibl.: "Ambrose Akinmusire" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Ambrose Akinmusire" (www.downbeat.com); Ambrose Akinmusire's official website: www.ambroseakinmusire.com); "Ambrose Akinmusire (http://fr.wikipedia.org).

Albert [Gargallo], Jordi (b. Alcora, Spain, May 7, 1981). Spanish trumpeter. Albert grew up in Alcora, Spain. His father is Toni Albert, his mother is Araceli Gargallo, and his sister is Anna Albert. He began playing trumpet at age eight; his first teacher was Juan Serra. After graduating from the Conservatorio "Francisco Tárrega" de Castellón and the Instituto Francisco Ribalta in 1999, Albert earned a degree in pedagogy at the Universitat Jaume I Castellón (1999-2003), and a degree in trumpet, studying with Vicente Campos at the Conservatorio Superior de Castellón (2002-06). He also studied with Pierre Thibaud, Maurice André, Eric Aubier, Urban Agnas, Damon Brown, Kevin Dean, and Claudio Roditi. In 2010, he earned a master of music degree at the Instituto Superior de Arte de Cuba.

Albert's early career began when he taught trumpet in the public schools of Spain. He also worked as a music producer. He served as artistic and pedagogical coordinator of the music class of SASC in the Universitat Jaume I Castellón (2003-06). He later taught at the High Conservatory of the "Ollín Yolitzly" Cultural Center of Mexico City, a position he has held since 2006. He has performed with the Ramon Cardo Big Band, Big Band Jazz of Mexico, Mexico National Orchestra, as well as with artists such as Perico Sambeat, Max Sommerhalder, and Christine Fawson. His solo albums include Seusatez—"Duende y Aire" (La Seta Azul) and Growin' Up—"Jove Dixieland Band" (self-produced).

At age seventeen, Albert developed a terrible pain in his neck whenever he triple-tongued. This strange problem became serious, but he was able to cure it through lessons on the Alexander Technique, and has subsequently become a leading teacher of the Alexander Technique in Mexico. He has also been a guest lecturer in the United States, Guatemala, Spain, Honduras, Cuba, and Ghana, and has performed at numerous jazz festivals around the world.

Albert and Jannete Medina Gomez were married in 2007, and have a son, Leonard Albert Medina (b. 2008). Albert's hobbies include collecting all types of musical instruments, studying pedagogy, and playing ping-pong.

Bibl.: "Jordi Albert" (program booklet for the Third Annual International Trumpet Festival "Rafael Méndez," 2010); Jordi Albert's official website: www.jordialbert.com; personal interview, Nov. 16, 2010.

Alcorn, Alvin [Elmore Sr.] (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Sept. 7, 1912; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, July 10, 2003). American trumpeter. Alcorn's early music lessons began by learning trumpet under George McCullum Jr., and theory under Alvin's brother Oliver (a reed player who later performed with Lee Collins). Alvin's playing closely mimicked that of McCullum (a part-time musician who worked as a cotton buyer), so he was able to substitute for McCullum whenever his teacher couldn't get away from work. Alcorn's first steady playing job was touring for a summer with Clarence Desdune's Joyland Revelers (1928). He then returned to New Orleans, and began working for Armand J. Piron's Sunny South Syncopators (1930-31) and with Henry Allen Sr.'s group.

From 1932 to 1937, Alcorn played and recorded with Don Albert's band. He later worked with Paul Barbarin and Sidney Desvignes (on and off between 1941 and 1950). Alcorn also served in the Army during the later part of World War II. He then played with Oscar Celestin (1951), George Lewis (1958), and Octave Crosby (1951-54). In 1954, he moved to Los Angeles to join Kid Ory's band. Alcorn played on four of Ory's records for the Good Time Jazz label. He also toured Europe with Kid Ory (1956) and appears with Ory's band in the film, The Benny Goodman Story, starring Steve Allen. (Alcorn's later films include *Un Homme qui me plaît (*1969) and the James Bond movie, Live and Let Die (1973), in which he had a speaking role.

Alcorn returned to New Orleans in 1956, staying there the rest of his life, save for tours of Europe in 1966 (New Orleans All Stars), 1973, 1974, 1976 (these three years as a soloist), and 1978 (as a member of Chris Barber's London group). In addition, he made a solo tour of Australia in 1973. Alcorn performed in New Orleans with the Onward Brass Band, Paul Barbarin, and others, and he recorded with Sweet Emma Barrett, Capt. John Handy, Eagle Brass Band, George Lewis, Louis Nelson, Louis Cottrell, and others. Among his albums is An Original New Orleans Jazz Brunch (Sandcastle).

Alvin Alcorn married his childhood sweetheart Lulsbia Joseph in 1931. They had seven children of whom one of them, Sam Alcorn, was a good trumpet player. He was a distant relative of Henry "Red" Allen, the famous jazz trumpeter, and worked as a successful realtor during the 1950s. Late in his career, Alcorn became the vice president and director of the local Musicians Union. He was known for his beautiful tone, uncanny accuracy, and effective use of mutes.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Wilson, Clive and Paige Van Vorst. "The Alvin Alcorn Story" (www.jazzology.com); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Alessi, Joseph (b. Italy, Mar. 4, 1876, d. New York City, Nov. 28, 1961). Italian-American trumpeter. Alessi's son, Joseph Alessi Sr. [II]

(1915-2004), was a trumpeter with the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra in New York, cornet soloist with the Rialto Theater, and first trumpet with the NBC Staff Orchestra. His grandsons are Joseph Alessi III (b. 1959, principal trombone of the New York Philharmonic) and Ralph Alessi (b. 1963, a prominent jazz trumpeter). Alessi immigrated to the United States in 1890. In 1901, he and Josephine Interrante were married, and in 1910 lived in Brooklyn, New York, but eventually moved to Norwood, New Jersey. Alessi was coprincipal (along with John Nappi and Philip de Blasi) in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra during the 1920-21 season. He also taught at the Manhattan School of Music. His students included Joseph Wilder, Joseph Shepley, and Donald Byrd.

Alessi was killed after stepping off a bus and being struck by an automobile.

Bibl.: "Principal Musicians of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra" (www.stokowski.org); personal interview with Joseph Alessi III, July 29, 2010.

Alessi, Joseph Sr. [II] (b. Brooklyn, New York, Sept. 2, 1915; d. San Rafael, California, Dec. 24, 2004). American trumpeter. Alessi's father, also named Joseph Alessi (1876-1961), was a trumpet player and teacher of some distinction. Alessi Sr. is the father of Ralph Alessi, jazz artist/trumpeter, and Joseph Alessi III, the principal trombone of the New York Philharmonic.

Alessi grew up in Norwood, New Jersey, and at age eleven studied trumpet with his father. He later attended The Juilliard School where he studied with Max Schlossberg. When Schlossberg died in 1936, Alessi continued his studies with William Vacchiano. The Ossip Gabrilowitch Memorial Scholarship also enabled him to study with Harry Glantz for two years. His orchestral training experience was gained through the National Orchestral Association in New York City under conductor Leon Barzin. Alessi eventually received his bachelor of music degree from the Manhattan School of Music.

Alessi served in the Navy during World War II, and after being discharged in 1945, played in the Radio City Music Hall Orchestra, and with the New York City Symphony and Opera under Maestro Leonard Bernstein. He became coprincipal (with Ben Grauer and then Leonard Henkle) of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra (1946-59), and played with the Edwin Franko Goldman Band. About this time, he married his wife Maria Leone, a soprano in the Metropolitan Opera; they had two sons, Joseph III (b. 1959) and Ralph (b. 1963).

In 1959, the Alessi family moved to Las Vegas where Alessi performed at various hotels in the well-known "Relief Band." The family eventually moved to San Rafael, California (near San Francisco), where Alessi taught at Aptos Junior High School, and gave private trumpet instruction to numerous students. He earned a master of arts degree at California State University-San Francisco where he eventually became professor of trumpet.

Alessi was an avid golfer and storyteller, had a fine sense of humor, and had many friends. He designed the well-known Alessi-Vacchiano trumpet straight mute, as well as the Jo-Ral series of mutes for brass. Alessi died in 2004 at the age of eighty-nine. His sisters Martha and Vivian, and brother Nicholas predeceased him.

Bibl.: "Joseph Alessi Sr." (www.josephalessi.com); "Principal Musicians of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra" (www.stokowski.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview with Joseph Alessi III, July 29, 2010.

Alessi, Ralph (b. San Rafael, California, Mar. 5, 1963). American trumpeter. Ralph Alessi is from a family of musicians. His grandfather Joseph (1876-1961) was coprincipal trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, and his father Joseph II (1915-2004) played trumpet in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra and New York Symphony, and cornet in Edwin Franko Goldman's band. Ralph's mother sang with the Metropolitan Opera Chorus, and his younger brother Joseph III is principal trombone of the New York Philharmonic.

Ralph began playing the trumpet at age six, under the guidance of his father. He attended the California Institute for the Arts where he studied with Charlie Haden and James Newton. Alessi received a bachelor of music degree in jazz trumpet, and a master's degree in jazz bass.

Alessi moved to New York City in 1991. During the past twenty years, he has performed or recorded with Steve Coleman, Ravi Coltrane, Uri Caine, Drew Gress, Don Byron, Dafnis Prieto, Brad Shepik, Scott Colley, Michael Cain, Chris Potter, Bill Frisell, Fred Hersch, Jason Moran, the Sam Rivers big band, and James Carney, among others. Jazz Times magazine states that Alessi has drop-dead trumpet chops and calls his music as clean and airy and sophisticated and disciplined as postmodern progressive jazz gets.

As leader, Alessi has released several acclaimed albums including Hissy Fit (his debut album in 1999 on the Love Slave label), Open Season (RKM), Look (Between the Lines), This Against That (RKM), Vice and Virtue (RKM), and Cognitive Dissonance (CAMjazz). He also made records with Ravi Coltrane and Uri Caine (The Sidewalks of New York in 1999). He taught fulltime at the Eastman School of Music and at Five Towns College, and is currently on the faculty of New York University (since 2002). He is founder and director of Brooklyn's School for Improvisational Music (SIM).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Ralph Alessi's official website: www.ralphalessi.com; "Ralph Alessi" (www.allaboutjazz.com); personal interview, July 28, 2010.

Aley, John E[dwin] (b. Topeka, Kansas, Mar. 8, 1952). American trumpeter. Aley grew up in Wichita, Kansas. He began playing the trumpet at age nine, studying with Vernon Hayes. He graduated from Wichita West High School in 1971 and attended Wichita State University, studying with Dr. Walter J. Myers and earning a bachelor of music degree in 1975. While an undergraduate, he was a member of the Wichita Symphony Orchestra, and performed summer seasons with the American Wind Symphony and at the Music Academy of the West. Aley continued his education at Yale University (1975-78), studying with Robert Nagel, but left for one semester in the fall of 1976 to teach at Wichita State University. While in graduate school, he studied an additional summer with Thomas Stevens (Music Academy of the West), won the Yale University School of Music Sprague Hall concerto competition, and was winner of an International Trumpet Competition sponsored by the M.S. Renaissance Music Festival. After graduation, he became a member of the American Brass Quintet (1978-81) and taught at the Aspen Music Festival. He has performed and recorded with the Orpheus Chamber Ensemble, American Symphony Orchestra, American Composers Orchestra, P. D. Q. Bach, American Brass Quintet, and the Wisconsin Brass Quintet. His solo CD, Autumn, features American composers James Stephenson, John Stevens, and Eric Ewazen.

Aley taught at Western Connecticut University (1977-81) and the Brooklyn College of Music (1978-81) before accepting a fulltime position at the University of Wisconsin-Madison in the fall of 1981. He is a member of the Wisconsin Brass Quintet, is principal trumpet of the Madison Symphony Orchestra, and has performed as guest principal trumpet with the St. Louis and Milwaukee symphony orchestras. He has been an artist/teacher at the Yale Summer School of Music and the Hot Springs Festival, and teaches summers at the Interlochen Arts Camp in Michigan. He has appeared as a soloist with ensembles including the Vienna Chamber Orchestra (with Maurice André), the English Chamber Orchestra, and has been featured at International Trumpet Guild and National Trumpet Competition events as performer and clinician.

Aley and his wife Anne, a program manager and horn player in the Madison Symphony and Oakwood Chamber Players, have two children, Ian (b. 1985) and Megan (b. 1990). His hobbies include reading, computers, camping, and bicycling.

Bibl.: "John E. Aley" (www.music.wisc.edu/faculty/bio?faculty_id=1); personal interview, Mar. 26, 2011; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo credit: Katrin Talbot

Alguire, Reuben Dan ("Danny") (b. Chickasha, Oklahoma, Aug. 30, 1912; d. Portland, Oregon, July 8, 1992). American trumpeter and cornetist. Alguire learned the basics of music from his father, a professional drummer. As a boy, he played mellophone in the Ft. Worth Rotary Club Boys Band (1921) and the Kansas City Rotary Band in 1923. He took up the trumpet and soon joined a local dance band in his hometown of Chickasha, Oklahoma (1928-30). He attended the University of Oklahoma from 1930 to 1933, and became a fulltime musician when he discovered that the only way for him to make a living during the Great Depression (while living in the Dustbowl) was by playing in local bars for two dollars per night. He also played in Jimmie Thornhill's band (1934-35) in West Texas and freelanced in Los Angeles.

Alguire switched to cornet in 1937. He played in Bill Norris's quartet in Bakersfield, California (1938-40), joined a big band led by Bob Wills (1941), recorded with the Texas Playboys, and played with T. Texas Tyler's Western Swing Band (1946-48). His big break came in 1949, when he subbed for a cornetist in the Firehouse

Five Plus Two. The group became extremely popular, and recorded twelve albums for the Good Time Jazz label. Their costumes, siren sound effects, and slapstick humor (similar to the later Spike Jones Band) made them a popular attraction at Disneyland in Annaheim, California. During Alguire's many years with Disney, he also worked as an assistant director in their animation department (1955-75).

Alguire once stated that his style was influenced by Benny Strickler (who was a fellow musician in Bob Wills's band), Louis Armstrong, Harry James, Red Nichols, Bix Beiderbecke, Don Finch, and Mannie Klein. He is featured in videos of the F5+2 including Grounds for Marriage (1950) and Hit Parade of 1951. Albums by the F5+2 include The Firehouse Five Plus Two Story (Good Time Jazz), The Firehouse Five Plus Two Goes South (Good Time Jazz), and 16 Dixieland Favorites (Good Time Jazz).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Alguire (lower right) and the Firehouse 5+2.

Allan, Jan [Bertil] (b. Falun, Sweden, Nov. 7, 1934). Swedish trumpeter and composer. Allan's father was a bassist and violinist. Jan studied the piano at age six, and took up the trumpet at age fourteen. When he was eighteen (1951), he moved to Stockholm, and began working as a jazz musician with Arne Domnerus, Bengt Hallberg, George Riedel, the Modern Swedes (1954), Lars Gullin-Rolf Billberg band (1954-55), and Carl-Henrik Norin (1955-57).

Allan led his own groups during the 1960s, and also performed as a regular with the Swedish Radio Jazz Band (1968-75). He appeared at numerous European jazz festivals, becoming one of Sweden's greatest jazz artists. Along the way, he performed or recorded with Thad Jones, Bobby Shew, Bob Brookmeyer, Warne Marsh, Roger Kellaway, George Russell, Dorothy Donegan, Benny Carter, Lee Konitz, Boss Broberg, and others.

Jan Allan led his own recording dates for the Leaf Clover and Phono Suecia labels, resulting in albums such as Jan Allan '70 (which won the "Best Swedish Jazz Recording of the Year" award), Sweet and Loverly, and Software. He also composes music for films. Parallel to his career as a jazz trumpeter and composer, Allan is also a professor of physics at Stockholm University!

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Jan Allan" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Allemano, Lina (b. Edmonton, Alberta, Canada, Oct. 20, 1973). Canadian trumpeter. Allemano began playing the piano at age four, and took up the trumpet at age ten. Her first teacher was William Dimmer. After graduating from Paul Kane High School in St. Albert, Alberta, in 1991, she attended Grant MacEwan Community College in Edmonton, again under William Dimmer, and then the University of Toronto where her teacher was Kevin Turcotte. She also studied at the Banff Centre for the Arts, and in New York with Laurie Frink.

Allemano is based in Toronto where she plays with two groups she formed— Lina Allemano Four, and "N." Her jazz playing is often avant-garde. The Canadian Independent Music Awards nominated Lina Allemano Four as the 2005 "Favorite Jazz Artist/Group," and the National Jazz Awards nominated Allemano for "Trumpeter of the Year" many years running. Downbeat magazine has listed her as one of the top innovative trumpeters for the future. In addition, Allemano won the CBC Galaxie Rising Star Award.

Having collaborated on over thirty recordings, Lina Allemano has also released three CDs as leader—Gridjam, Pinkeye, and Concentric, all on her own Lumo Records label. As a composer, she was nominated for the SOCAN "Composer of the Year" award. Her hobby is gardening.

Bibl.: "Dreams are Reality for Allemano" (International Musician, June 2010); Lina Allemano website (www.linaallemano.com); personal interview, June 3, 2010.

Allen, Charlie (b. Jackson, Mississippi, Sept. 25, 1908; d. Chicago, Illinois, Nov. 19, 1972). American trumpeter. Allen grew up Chicago and began playing trumpet professionally just after high school. He studied at Wendell Phillips Academy High School and received trumpet lessons from Reuben Reeves. At age seventeen, he played with Hugh Swift (1925), followed by Dave Peyton (1927), Doc Cook (1927, and later again), Clifford King (1928), Johnny Long (1928), Earl Hines (1932-34 and 1937), Duke Ellington (1935), and Fletcher Butler (1936). During the 1940s and '50s, he performed with various groups in Chicago.

Allen became a music educator later in life, worked for the Chicago Musicians Union, and also developed a brand of custom trumpet mouthpieces (used by Cat Anderson, Louis Armstrong, Roy Eldridge, and Rex Stewart, among others).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charlie Allen" (http://en.wikipedia.com/wiki/Charlie_Allen).

Allen, Eddie (b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 12, 1957). American trumpeter. Allen comes from a musical family. His mother was a fine singer in her church choir, and several of his siblings play musical instruments. He started on guitar when he was ten years old, but switched to trumpet in junior high school. Eddie attended the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music in Milwaukee for a short while, but transferred to the University of Wisconsin-Green Bay. He moved to the East Coast in 1981, and finished his bachelor of music degree at William Paterson University in New Jersey. There, he studied jazz with Rufus Reid, and trumpet with Chris Albert.

Allen's career as a jazz trumpeter and arranger moved quickly. He was a member of Charli Persip's Superband from 1982 to 1989, and recorded with Mahal Richard Abrams, Vanessa Rubin, Bobby Previte, Cyrus Chestnut, Mongo Santamaria, Chico Freeman, Louis Hayes, and Craig Harris. He also played with Dizzy Gillespie, Benny Carter, Art Blakey, Houston Person, and Mongo Santamaria. He did extensive arranging for Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy, of which he later became musical director (1988-94).

As a jazz musician, Allen has recorded for many labels including DIW, RCA/Novus, Muse, Atlantic, SteepleChase, JTM

Records, Venus Records, Mapleshade, High Note, Milestone, By-Mor, Consolidated Artists, Candid, Chesky, Koch, Guajiro, JazzManiacs, In & Out, Winter and Winter, Black Saint, Enja, Soul Note Records, New World/ Crossroads, and Tropical Buddah Records. His four solo albums include Summer Days (Enja), R'n'B (Enja), Remembrances (Venus Records), and Another's Point of View (Enja).

Recently, Allen has been performing a great deal in Broadway pit orchestras in New York for musicals such as Ain't Misbehavin', Black & Blue, Side Show, Jelly's Last Jam, Five Guys Named Mo', and Rollin' on the T. O. B. A. Many groups perform his compositions and arrangements.

Bibl.: Erdman, Thomas. "Learning to Do It All: An Interview with Eddie Allen" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2008); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Allen, Edward Clifton ("Ed" "Eddie") (b. Nashville, Tennessee, Dec. 15, 1897; d. New York, New York, Jan. 28, 1974). American cornetist. Allen grew up in St. Louis. He began playing the cornet and piano at the age of ten, and was playing professionally in local honky tonks at sixteen. In 1916, he traveled to Seattle, Washington, to play with Ralph Stevenson's band, but returned to St. Louis a short time later. He worked on various Mississippi riverboats, notably with Charlie Creath's band, but led his own group called the Whispering Gold Band upon the SS Capitol (1921-22) and the SS Paul (1923). Upon landing in New Orleans during a trip in 1923, Allen decided to stay, and played with various jazz groups.

Allen moved to Chicago in late 1924 to play in Joe Jordan's Sharps and Flats. He also played for a year with Ed Daily's Black and White Show. During the late 1920s, he played with Allie Ross's band, which later became the Leroy Tibbs Orchestra. Allen is most noted for his work with pianist Clarence Williams from 1927 to 1937. (See photo.) Williams's group made numerous recordings and accompanied many jazz singers, such as Anna Bell, Clara Smith, Mary Dixon, Laura Bryant, Bertha Idaho, Sara Martin, Eva Taylor, Katherine Henderson, and Bessie Smith. Allen also recorded with the Barrelhouse Five, Alabama Jug Band, Blue Grass Foot Warmers, Birmingham Serenaders, Dixie Washboard Band, Gallon Jug Band, Larry Tibbs, Willie "the Lion" Smith, and Joe Jordan.

After leaving Williams in 1937, Allen's career slowed a great deal. He spent the next forty years in near obscurity by playing in dive dance bands (including Barton Heath's band for eighteen years, in 1945-63), and retiring in 1963 due to ill health. He never made a recording as leader, but many of the records he appears on with Clarence Williams have been reissued on various CDs, such as 1927, 1928-1929, 1929-30, 1933 1934, and 1934-1937, by Classics.

Ed Allen was known for his muted wah-wah playing, perhaps due in part to his poor open sound on the cornet.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. Mp3 excerpt; Oct. 2008); "Ed Allen" (www.answers.com).

Allen, Henry ("Red") [Jr.] (b. Algiers, Louisiana, Jan. 7, 1906; d. New York, New York, Apr. 17, 1967). American trumpeter. Allen's father, Henry Allen Sr. (1877-1952), was a bandleader in Algiers near New Orleans. Prior to taking up the trumpet, Red began learning the drums, ukulele, and violin under Peter Bocage, and also played alto horn. He took trumpet lessons from his father, and Manuel Manetta, Amos White, and Punch Miller. Even as a boy, he enjoyed marching in the streets with his father's brass band. He co-led a kid's band, and by the early 1920s was playing with some of the best musicians in New Orleans including Barney Bigard (1922), Sidney Desvigne's Southern Syncopators, George Lewis (1923), Sam Morgan (1924), Capt. John Handy (1925), Kid Rena, Chris Kelly, Albert Walters (at the Radio Cafe, 1926-27), Sidney Desvigne (on the SS Island, 1927), and Walter Pichon (1927). While playing on a riverboat with Fate Marable, Allen was listed as the featured cornetist, melophone [sic] and entertainer (1928). John Chilton wrote, from the age of ten he often listened admiringly to King Oliver, and a little later he became a fan of Oliver's protégé, Louis Armstrong…But Armstrong was not the only source of inspiration in a city area that boasted dozens of fine trumpet players. Red listened to, and admired, Chris Kelly, Buddy Petit, Emile 'Manuel' Perez [sic], Henry 'Kid' Rena and Ernest 'Punch' Miller… he admired the work of another white cornetist, Emmett Hardy...His coaching was supplemented by what was known as 'bandstand tuition' which Red willingly took from Punch Miller and others.

Allen joined King Oliver's Band in late 1928, which brought him to New York. After becoming homesick, Allen returned to Louisiana, and was soon offered jobs with Duke Ellington and Luis Russell. In the summer of 1929, he decided to join Russell's band because he knew several members in the group. It didn't take long for him to become the star of the band. Three of his best-recorded solos with Russell were Jersey Lightning, Saratoga Shout, and Louisiana Swing. Later, Allen recorded with Oliver between 1930-32.

Allen signed with Victor Records in 1929. Tunes such as It Should Be You and Biff'ly Blues helped launch his career. He also recorded with Victoria Spivey (1929), Fats Waller (1929), Jelly Roll Morton (1929, then in 1940), Don Redman (1931), Spike Hughes (1933), Billy Banks, and others. His personal style of playing took shape, marked by many effects such as growls, flutter-tonguing, trills, bends, smears, glissandi, etc. Many of Allen's solos bordered on the wild or avant-garde side.

The years 1931-32 were spent with Luis Russell's band. He then teamed up with Charlie Johnson before becoming a featured soloist in Fletcher Henderson's orchestra (1933-34). He left Henderson to join the Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1934-37), then Duke Ellington (February 1937), the Louis Armstrong Orchestra led by Luis Russell (1937-40), and Benny Goodman (1940). During the 1930s, he also recorded with J.C. Higginbotham, Dicky Wells, Tab Smith, Buster Bailey, and Coleman Hawkins.

The Armstrong-Russell band was laid off in 1940, but Allen was able to work steadily thanks to the New Orleans music revival. In 1941, he formed a sextet with Sidney Bechet that played at the Café Society in New York for a year. He spent the next four years leading his own band at the Down Beat in Chicago where he met a young washroom attendant named Ruth Jones. Because of her strong voice, he had her sit in with the band. This lovely lady was soon hired as the star vocalist for Lionel Hampton's band, where she assumed the stage name Dinah Washington.

It was during the early 1940s that Allen developed his magnetic stage personality and energetic bandleader style. He led the band at the Metropole from 1954 to 1965, and recorded several albums. In 1957, he appeared on the television show, Sound of Jazz, where he performed Wild Man Blues and Rosetta. He toured Europe with Kid Ory in 1959, and returned several times with his quartet during the 1960s. He stole the show at the 1965 Monterey Jazz Festival when he was featured alongside Clark Terry, Rex Stewart, and Dizzy Gillespie.

Red Allen led a charmed life. He did not use drugs or alcohol, did not smoke, and was always a reliable musician and bandleader. He was happily married for thirty-seven years. Even when his health began to deteriorate in his late fifties, he made a successful tour of England just weeks prior to his death on April 17, 1967.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Chilton, John. Ride, Red, Ride (Cassell & Co); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Allen, Joseph Lathrop (b. Holland, Massachusetts, Sept. 24, 1815; d. 1905). American designer and manufacturer. Allen's parents were Captain Ezra Allen and Lucena Fuller Allen, both farmers. J. Lathrop married Phebe S. Partridge in 1839, the same year in which he manufactured his earliest known brass instrument—a keyed E-flat bugle with nine keys (Sturbridge, Mass.). His earliest known valve instrument is a B-flat trumpet with three Vienna-valves (c1842, Boston). Although Boston was a leading center for instrument making during the mid 1840s, Allen moved his company to Norwich, Connecticut, in about 1845. Business must not have been any better there, for in 1847 he returned to Boston and mortgaged his tools and equipment for one hundred fifty dollars to George P. Reed and opened a retail music shop where he sold pianos and other musical instruments by various makers.

Sometime between 1847 and 1852, Allen designed a very efficient rotary valve that possessed oval-shaped ports, allowing the valve body to be much narrower than the conventional round port design. His invention was called the "flat windway valve," but it generated little commercial success. The Civil War, however, brought much business to his company. He manufactured hundreds of various over-the-shoulder instruments for military bands, and became the leading brass instrument maker in Boston. A valve cornet of his make was entered in the 15th Exhibition of the Mechanics' Institute in Cincinnati in 1857. The judges' report stated, The instrument made by J. L. Allen we find of superior workmanship, correct in its intonations, and the mechanical part admirably adapted for quick and rapid execution, the maker having, in a considerable degree in this instance, overcome the difficulty heretofore existing in this class of instrument... in accordance with his established reputation for making instruments superior to all others in this country.

Allen expanded his business in the late 1850s, changing its name to the Allen Manufacturing Company. During 1852-53, he took on a partner named Benjamin F. Richardson and, a few years later, added another partner, David C. Hall, a well-known bandleader and keyed bugle soloist. After the Civil War, he moved his business to New York City (1862-72), but returned once more to Boston in 1873. From 1880 to 1897, his business was once again in New York. Allen lived to be approximately ninety years old.

Bibl.: Eliason, Robert E. Early American Brass Makers (Brass Press).

Allier, Pierre (b. Grenoble, France, Feb. 25, 1908; d. Paris, France, Dec. 14, 1968). French trumpeter. Allier's father Gabriel Allier was a noted composer, and his brother Roger a saxophone player. Pierre studied music theory with his father, and received advice on trumpet playing from Julien Porret. His professional career began in 1925, in various dance orchestras and early jazz bands including Tom Waltham's Ad Libs that performed at the Folies-Bergère. He played at the Casino de Paris in 1926, and in Monte Carlo in 1929. In 1930, he recorded a few times with Ray Ventura's Collegians, and succeeded Philippe Brun in Gregor's Gregorians. In 1935, he played at the Olympia, as well as toured.

Allier left France in 1941 to perform with Ray Ventura in South America where he lived in Buenos Aires and played in a Latin band until November of 1945. He returned to France to lead his own band in Cannes (1946-47), after which he joined the Paris Radio (1950-62). He was considered to be one of the finest French jazz trumpeters before World War II, and although he stopped playing trumpet in 1948, during his prime, he made some historic recordings with Coleman Hawkins (1935), Django Reinhardt (1935), Alix Combelle (1940), and Guy Paquinet (1941).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Allison, Robert ("Bob") (b. Chattanooga, Tennessee, Sept. 30, 1955). American trumpeter. Allison grew up in the Memphis area where he studied with Perry Wilson, Ralph Hale, and Dick Steff. He studied with David Hickman, Ray Sasaki, and Michael Tunnell at the University of Illinois where he earned a bachelor of music degree in 1978, a master of music degree in 1979, and a doctor of music degree in 1989. He has also studied extensively with jazz trumpeter Willie Thomas.

A versatile performer in classical and jazz styles, Allison began his career teaching at Millikin University from 1980 to 1982, and since 1982 has taught at Southern Illinois University in Carbondale. He also taught at the Latvian National Conservatory in Riga during the spring of 1990 and 1993. He has performed with the New Arts Jazztet

(since 1982), Chicago Chamber Orchestra (since 2000), SIUC Faculty Brass Trio (1982-99), the SIUC Faculty Brass Quintet (since 2000), and with jazz artists such as James Williams, Willie Thomas, and Stanley Clarke.

Allison and his wife Crystal G. Allison have three children: Seth (b. 1989), Sarah (b. 1991), and Annika (b. 2010). His hobbies include woodworking and N-scale model railroading.

Bibl.: "Robert Allison" (http://music.siuc.edu/facultystaff/allison.html); personal interview, July 1, 2010.

Allums, Tim Weldon (b. Fort Worth, Texas, Jan. 28, 1971). American trumpeter. Allums is the son of John (a Baptist music minister and vocalist) and Jan (an organist, pianist and elementary music teacher) Allums; his sister is Ann (b. 1969). Tim's first musical experience was as a boy soprano in church choirs. He learned to play the guitar before taking up the trumpet at age eleven. His first music teachers were Charlie Moresi and James Wood. Allums grew up in Winnsboro, Texas, and after graduating from Klamath Union High School in 1989, he attended the University of Oregon (1989-95) under George Recker and David Bender, earning bachelor and master of music degrees. He also studied for a while with William Pfund, Jens Lindemann, and Daniel Kuehn.

Allums's early career was as a freelance musician in Warsaw, Indiana, in 1995 where he performed Broadway shows. In late 1995 and 1996, he served as a trumpeter on two cruise ships, and in 1997 joined the US Air Force Academy Band in Colorado Springs, Colorado. His primary duty with the band is to perform with the Stellar Brass, a brass quintet with percussion. He has also performed and recorded rock and salsa music with various groups, including Caliente (Eugene, Oregon) and Bighorn (Colorado Springs). His playing is featured on a CD with Conjunto Colores (Denver, Colorado).

Tim Allums has been married to Melanie Allums since 2005, and they have a son, Matthew, born in 2004. His hobbies include being a building contractor and handyman, bicycling, and hiking. He has recorded several CDs with the Stellar Brass, and has appeared at the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute.

Bibl.: "Tim Allums" (www.usafacademyband.com); personal interview, Aug. 6, 2010.

Almeida, John A. (b. Newport, Rhode Island, June 4, 1951). American trumpeter. Almeida grew up in Newport, Rhode Island. He began playing the trumpet at age ten, and while attending Rogers High School, took lessons from Julio Tancredi and played in a dance band with Art Dennis, who had a big influence on Almeida's playing. After graduating in 1970, Almeida attended the University of Alabama from 1970 to 1975 where he earned a bachelor of music degree and studied with several important teachers including Al Spangler, Daniel Drill, and Marvin "Chappy" Perry III. From 1975 to 1977, he studied with Joe F. Phelps at Appalachian State University where he received his master of music degree. He has also studied with William Adam and Thomas Wohlwender.

In November 1977, Almeida moved to Florida where he landed a job playing in the Walt Disney World Band. He also subbed at Ringling Bros. & Barnum Bailey Circus World where he played alongside trumpeters Stan Mark and Jerry Tyree. He formed a brass quintet that played freelance jobs, and various musicals and shows in the Orlando area. Almeida taught at Daytona State College and Valencia Community College, and in 1989 was hired by the late Rich Matteson to teach at the University of North Florida.

Almeida has been teaching at the University of Central Florida since 1993, and during many summers taught at the Cannon Music Camp at Appalachian State University. He was principal trumpet of the Brevard (Florida) Symphony Orchestra and the Winter Park Bach Orchestra from 1993 to 2002, and is a founding member of The Brass Works quintet and director of the Horns and Pipes large brass ensemble. A highlight in his career was performing for Adolph Herseth during a master class at DePaul University.

Almeida is married to Dr. Artie Almeida, a music specialist and clinician at Bear Lake Elementary School in Apopka, Florida. His hobbies include traveling, listening to music, and reading.

Bibl.: "John Almeida" (http://music.ucf.edu/staff.php?id=239); personal interview, May 10, 2011.

Alpert, Herb (b. Los Angeles, California, Mar. 31, 1935). American trumpeter, record producer, composer. A giant in the pop music world, Alpert's name is perhaps as recognizable as that of Louis Armstrong. His father was from Russia and, like many members of the family, had an interest in music. Herb began playing the trumpet at the age of eight, and soon studied with Harold "Pappy" Mitchell, John Clyman, and Benjamin Klatzkin, and during high school, with Louis Maggio. After graduating from Fairfax High School in 1952, Alpert was drafted into the Army and assigned to an army music school in Ft. Knox, Kentucky. He was later transferred to the 6th Army Band in San Francisco where he served as solo trumpeter. While in San Francisco, he listened to many great jazz artists including Miles Davis, and became interested in jazz music. He also studied the recordings of Clifford Brown and Chet Baker.

After he was discharged from the military, Alpert worked as a staff composer for Keen Records in 1957. He composed What A Wonderful World and All of My Life for singer Sam Cooke, both of which became top hits. He began his own singing career with RCA in 1959 under the name of Dore Alpert. He recorded a few of his own tunes, and wanted to overdub his trumpet over his voice, but the producers at RCA told him that it was against union rules for a musician to do that, so Alpert left RCA in 1962 to work for Madison Records. His partner Lou Adler introduced him to Jerry Moss, the head of promotion at Madison. They soon became friends and decided to form their own label called Carnival. With two hundred dollars in their checking account, they recorded in Alpert's garage and produced a single disc with a tune by Alpert called Tell It To The Birds, and a tune by Moss. When they discovered that there was already a label called Carnival, they changed the name of their label to A&M Records.

Alpert composed and recorded The Lonely Bull in 1962. A small quantity of 45-rpm discs were manufactured and sent to disc jockeys around the country. The tune became extremely popular and climbed the charts, selling millions of copies. He quickly formed Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass, although all of the parts had been overdubbed by Alpert and a few other musicians. A steady stream of hit tunes followed, including Tijuana Taxi, Casino Royale, A Taste of Honey, This Guy's in Love with You, and What Now My Love. Full albums followed such as Herb Alpert's Tijuana Brass (1963), South of the Border (1964), Whipped Cream and Other Delights (1965), Going Places (1965), S.R.O. (1966), Sounds Like...(1967), Herb Alpert's Ninth (1967), Beat the Brass (1968), Herb Alpert and the Tijuana Brass Christmas Album (1968), Warm (1969), and The Brass Are Comin' (1969). Alpert became a household name, selling more albums and remaining number one on the charts longer than The Beatles. To date, he has released over thirty solo albums.

The popularity of The Tijuana Brass brought about a demand for live appearances, so Alpert auditioned musicians in Los Angeles and hired the best players possible to form a full ensemble that sounded like his overdubbed recordings. The group toured for several years, but disbanded in 1969, although it continued to record albums every year or so until the mid 1970s. About the time the group began touring, Alpert began developing playing problems due to the stress and rigors of being on the road, which also resulted in his divorce. It wasn't until the mid 1970s that he was able to correct his problems with the help of Carmine Caruso in New York (and Bob Findley, a Caruso student).

Alpert continued to release recordings throughout the 1970s and early 1980s, although most of them were solo jazz albums without The Tijuana Brass. A&M Records also launched the careers of many famous artists including The Carpenters, Sting, Barry White, Sergio Mendes, Janet Jackson, Cat Stevens, Joe Jackson, Soundgarden, Quincy Jones, Suzanne Vega, The Police, Sheryl Crow, The Brothers Jackson, and others. Alpert recorded with such artists as Smokey Robinson, The Pulsars, Janet Jackson, Angel Corpus Christi, Gato Barbieri, Chayanne, Kris Kristofferson, Sonny James, David Lanz, Harvey Mason, Luis Maguel, Victor DiLorenzo, Ry Cooder, Paulinho DaCosta, Rita Coolidge, Airto Moreira, Harry Nilsson, Brian Culbertson, Jim Brickman, Varnell Brown Jr., Lani Hall, and Garland Jeffreys. A&M Records became the largest independent record label in the world.

Alpert's awards are numerous: he won seven Grammy Awards and sixteen nominations, was named Record Man of the Year by Billboard magazine in 1966 for selling 13.7 million albums in that year alone, was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame in 2006, and has received the Grammy Trustee Award (1997) and the Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award (2007). He released fifteen gold and fourteen platinum albums, and two gold singles. He starred in four television specials, is listed in the Guinness Book of World Records for selling the most record albums ever (over seventy-two million!). His music is heard in numerous product commercials, television shows (including The Dating Game), and movies. He performed the National Anthem during Super Bowl XXII in San Diego (1988).

A strong supporter of the arts, Alpert formed The Herb Alpert Foundation in the early 1980s. In 1990, he and partner Moss sold A&M Records to PolyGram for an estimated $500 million, and in 1994 formed a new and successful label called Almo Sounds. Alpert donated $24 million to The California Institute of the Arts (CalArts) to launch the Alpert Awards in the Arts program that supports talented young artists. He also donated $30 million to the University of California-Los Angeles (UC LA) to establish the Herb Alpert School of Music. In addition, he is the main contributor to the annual Carmine Caruso International Jazz Trumpet Competition hosted by the International Trumpet Guild. In 1989, when the famed Russian trumpeter Timofei Dokshitser needed funds for a quadruple heart bypass, Alpert contributed a sizable donation to the International Trumpet Guild to help fund the operation, which saved Dokshitser's life.

Since the early 1970s, Alpert has been a practicing painter and sculptor who regularly exhibits his works at various art shows and galleries. He is also a Broadway producer who presented the show, Angels in America. He lives in Malibu, California, with his second wife, singer Lani Hall. He has three children.

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "A Passion for Creativity: An Interview with Herb Alpert" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2005); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Herb Alpert" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Official Herb Alpert Biography" (www.onamrecords.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Alston, Overton ("Ovie") (b. Washington, District of Columbia, Dec. 14, 1905; d. July 5, 1989). American trumpeter and vocalist. Alston was one of the few trumpeters during the early history of jazz that did not imitate Louis Armstrong. Although he occasionally played outgoing "hot" licks and solos, Alston's style was smooth and laid-back. He had a big sound, and used very little vibrato.

He began his career with Bill Brown's Brownies (1928-30), recording a few 78-rpm discs for the Brunswick label. In 1931, he co-led an eleven-piece band with Charlie Skeete, but the band was soon taken over by Claude Hopkins. Hopkins retained Alston as his trumpet soloist and occasional vocalist (1931-36). With Hopkins, he composed several tunes including Chasing All the Blues Away, Swingin' and Jivin', Washington Squabble, and Everybody Shuffle. The Hopkins band recorded several discs, some of which featured Alston's cool trumpet and vocals.

In 1937, Alston formed his own band that recorded a total of twelve tunes. The band performed regularly at the Apollo Theater, Plantation Club, Ubangi Club, Roseland Ballroom (1939-47), and the Baby Grand Café (1948-52). The band also made some USO tours for the military in 1941-42. Ovie was known for his cool style of playing, singing, and expert use of the wah-wah mute. As the big band era faded away during the 1950s, Alston also gradually disappeared from the New York music scene. He stopped playing professionally in 1960, and retired in 1971. He spent his last years performing mostly for private functions, such as weddings and dances.

Bibl.: Schuller, Gunther. The Swing Era: the development of jazz 1930-45 (Oxford University Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ovie Alston" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Altenburg, Detlef (b. Bad Hersfeld, Germany, 1947). German author. Altenburg studied musicology, Protestant theology, religious studies, and philosophy in Marburg and Cologne. His teachers were Siegfried Heinrich (musicology), Martin Weyer (organ), and Walter Holy (Baroque trumpet). He received his doctorate from the University of Cologne in 1973; his thesis is titled Untersuchungen zur Geschichte der Trompete in Zeitalter der Clarinblaskunst.

Altenburg worked as a research assistant at the University of Cologne before becoming a professor at the University of Göttingen (1980-81), visiting professor at the Universidade Nova in Lisbon (1983), University-GH-Paderhorn (1983-94), and the Detmold School of Music. He was a professor and director of the Institute of Musicology at the University of Regensburg (1994-99), and dean of faculty (1995-97). He was chair of the Academy of Music (1999-2000), and since 1999 has been director of the Institute of Musicology. Since 2001, Altenburg has been president of the Society for Music Research and a member of the Senate of the Academy of Public Sciences in Erfurt. Since 2002, he has been a member of the Presidum of the German Music Council.

Most of Altenburg's many publications concentrate on music of the seventeenth and eighteenth centuries. He was editor of the magazine, The Music Research, from 1985 to 1989.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Detlef Altenburg" (www.hfm-weimar.de/v1/musikwissenschaft/Personal/Professoren/altenburg.php).

Altenburg, Johann Caspar (b. Alach, Germany, 1689; d. Weissenfels, Germany, 1761). With his parents' permission, Altenburg went to Weissenfels in 1707 to become an apprentice under the court trumpeter Röbock. Upon completion of his apprenticeship, the Saxon prince Johann Adolph enlisted him into Hessian war service and engaged him in his own cavalry regiment for two years. Upon completing his journeyman period, he was accepted as a court trumpeter by Duke Johann George where he received a special recommendation. In 1714, he married for the first time.

After Johann George's death in 1715, the next duke, Christian, retained him, appointing him Chamber Trumpeter in 1722 with a raise in salary, then drawing him into the orchestra. His wife, with whom he had fathered five children, died in 1730. In 1731, he was invited to perform in public for the King of Poland, Friedrich August I, in Leipzig. Here, he was offered a court position in the orchestra with a large salary, but could not obtain leave from his employer. In 1732-33, he traveled to many courts, receiving considerable applause for his performances. Not only were lavish gifts conferred on him at several courts, but he was also offered other court positions, resulting in Duke Christian giving him a large salary raise. He married a second time in 1733.

When Duke Christian died in 1738, he was succeeded by his third brother, Johann Adolph, and the orchestra was disbanded. Altenburg was retained as Court, Chamber, and Traveling Quartermaster. In 1746, after the death of Duke Johann Adolph, the entire Weissenfels court ceased to exist. Prime Minister Brühl gave him the choice of either a court position in Dresden, or a retirement pension. He chose to retire, having spent thirty-five years in court service. He died at the age of seventy-three.

Three of Altenburg's sons became professional trumpeters. The youngest of these three was Johann Ernst Altenburg, well known today for his treatise, Versuch einer Anleitung zur heroisch-musikalischen Trompeter- und Pauker-Kunst (Essay on an Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettledrummers' Art), published in 1795. According to J. E. Altenburg, writing of his father (translated), His tone in clarino playing and the various modulations thereof, which he was able to join skillfully with a singing, flowing character, his ease in the high and low [registers], his expression of the manifold ornaments, and his execution were, without false praise, something ingenuous and outstanding. Clarino playing was not at all difficult for him, and he was capable of delivering it so softly that it could scarcely be heard, yet each individual tone was clearly audible. He was generally much better in clarino playing than in the playing of field pieces or in the principale register, and therefore not every composition for trumpet was suitable for him. He valued particularly highly the pieces by composers of that time, Telemann, Förster, Linicke, Fasch and Schreck. In his musical instruction he was, as usual, more practical than theoretical, and in dealing with people he was very sociable, friendly and obliging.

Bibl.: Altenburg, Johann Ernst (Eng. Trans. Edward Tarr). Essay on an Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettledrummers' Art (The Brass Press); Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. trans. Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editore).

Altenburg, Johann Ernst (b. Weissenfels, Germany, June 15, 1734; d. Bitterfeld, Germany, May 14, 1801). Johann Ernst apprenticed under his father, Johann Caspar Altenburg, and passed his exam on April 14, 1752 at the age of seventeen. He immediately served as a field trumpeter in the French Army during the Seven Years' War. Upon returning to Germany, he found that many courts had closed, thus eliminating many positions for trumpeters. He briefly studied law and began to learn to play the organ, accepting his first organist post at a church in Landsberg.

Altenburg was bitter about not being able to find employment as a trumpeter. He became careless in his organ duties and often slept during the sermons. He was also known to play tricks on the chorus by playing the introduction of a hymn in one key, then changing to another key when the chorus began singing. He accepted his final position as organist at a church in Bitterfeld in 1769.

Today, Altenburg is best known for his important treatise, Versuch einer Anleitung zur heroisch-musikalischen Trompeter- und Pauker-Kunst (Essay on an Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettledrummers' Art), nearly completed in 1770 and published in Halle in 1795. This book details all aspects of the trumpet and training of court musicians under the Imperial Privilege (guild) during the late Baroque and Early Classic eras. Altenburg was also a skilled composer, and included several short works for trumpets as an appendix to his treatise. The Concerto for Seven Trumpets and Tympani that appears there is a work often performed and recorded today. However, there is speculation that this work may have actually been composed by Heinrich Biber.

Altenburg's book brought little esteem or professional satisfaction to him, and his poor attitude worsened. He was involved in several local revolutionary schemes, and was fined so heavily that he was placed in the poorhouse where he died in 1801. He had no living family at that time, and received a pauper's burial.

Bibl.: Altenburg, Johann Ernst (Eng. Trans. Edward Tarr). Essay on an Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettledrummers' Art (The Brass Press); Rasmussen, Mary. "Notes" to Concerto for Seven Trumpets and Tympani (Robert King Music); Tarr, Edward, "Notes" to the same concerto (The Brass Press); Laubhold, Lars E. Magie der Macht: Eine quellenkitische Stuie zu Johann Ernst Altenburgs Versuch einer Anleitung zur heroisch-musikalischen Trompeter-und Pauker-Kunst (Königshausen & Neumann).

Alvarez, [Alfred] Chico (b. Montreal, Canada, Feb. 3, 1920; d. Las Vegas, Nevada, Aug. 1, 1992). American trumpeter. Alvarez grew up near Los Angeles in the suburb of Inglewood. He studied piano and violin for ten years before taking up the trumpet after hearing a recording of Bunny Berigan playing I Can't Get Started.

In 1941, Alvarez became a charter member of the Stan Kenton Orchestra, and was Kenton's leading soloist for two years. In 1943, he joined the Army, after which he rejoined Kenton in 1946. Alvarez did a television show with Stan Kenton in 1947, where he can be seen alongside Ray Wetzel and Buddy Childers (in Swing, Vol.1

on Storyville Video). When Kenton's band temporarily disbanded in 1949, Alvarez freelanced in Los Angeles and played with Red Norvo, Benny Carter, and Charlie Barnet. From 1950 to 1951, he performed with Kenton's newly formed Innovations Orchestra. Among his featured trumpet solos were Machito and Harlem Holiday.

Alvarez left the Kenton band in 1951 and opened a music store in Hermosa Beach, California. He also studied music at the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music and Art, and worked as a trumpeter and arranger for local Latin bands. He moved to Las Vegas in 1958, working for the next twenty-four years as a show band sideman and as leader of his own jazz group. Although he made no recordings during these years, he did perform with numerous celebrity artists including Ella Fitzgerald and Sarah Vaughn. Alvarez died of cancer at the age of seventy-two.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.) The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ambros, Reinhold (b. Klagenfurt, Austria, Nov. 24, 1957). Austrian trumpeter. Ambros began playing trumpet at age thirteen under the guidance of his father. From 1970 to 1977, he studied with Herbert Wassermann and Josef Rupp at the Carinthian State Conservatory in Klagenfurt, and later with Josef Levora and Josef Pomberger at the University of Music and Dramatic Arts in Vienna.

Ambros became a member of the Vienna State Opera and Vienna Philharmonic Orchestras in 1982, and since 1995 has also been a member of the Vienna Court Orchestra. Since 1990, he has taught at the Joseph Haydn Conservatory in Eisenstadt.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Reinhold Ambros" (www.haydnkons.at/index.php?id=63).

Ambrosetti, Franco (b. Lugano, Switzerland, Dec. 10, 1941). Swiss trumpeter. Although he studied classical piano from age eleven to eighteen, and trumpet from age seventeen (self-taught), Franco Ambrosetti had the ambition of pursuing a career in his family's company that manufactured steel wheels for several European automobile manufacturers. He majored in economics at the University of Basel, while dabbling in jazz. After graduating, he became an executive with the wheel company, but also began playing the trumpet professionally. He played with Romano Mussolini (1961), later joining his father's jazz group (1963-70, and also the Monterey Festival in 1972).

During this time, he won first prize in trumpet during the 1966 Vienna Jazz Competition. In 1972, he and his father Flavio (sax) formed The Band, a group that has made many recordings and performed at jazz festivals all over the world. He has led recording dates for the Enja label since 1965.

Now a fulltime performer, Franco Ambrosetti has led a trio with René Urtreger and Daniel Humair (1981), a Tentet (1985), and played with a myriad of jazz musicians including Phil Woods, Joe Henderson, Cannonball Adderley, Dave Holland, Victor Lewis, Bennie Wallace, Dexter Gordon, Daniel Humair, Hal Galper, Michael Brecker, Kenny Barron, John Scofield, Kenny Kirkland, Ron Carter, George Gruntz (from 1963), Benny Bailey (1972), Jean-François Jenny-Clarke, Mike Stern, and many others. Ambrosetti has appeared on radio and television many times, and has released numerous albums as leader, including Lyric Moment, Invenzioni a piú voci, The Word, Riviera Cocktail, European Legacy, A Jazz Portrait of Franco Ambrosetti, Jazz at Prague Castle, Light Breeze, Live at Blue Note, and Grazie Italia.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Franco Ambrosetti" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Franco Ambrosetti's official website: www.francoambrosetti.com.

Amend, J. Jerome (b. c1944). American trumpeter. Amend attended Amarillo College, but completed his bachelor of music education degree at the University of Houston, and later a master of music degree at the University of Louisville. He taught music in the Spring Branch Independent School District in Houston (1966-68) and the Galveston Public Schools (1967-68). He served in the 564th Tactical Air Command Band at Langley Air Force Base in Virginia for four years.

Amend has been principal trumpet of the Louisville Orchestra since 1972, occupying the Leon Rapier Chair, endowed by the musicians of the Louisville Orchestra. He also plays with the Kentucky Opera and Louisville Ballet orchestras. He was codirector of the Twentieth-Century Series at the University of Louisville from 1975 to 1977, and conductor of the Louisville Contemporary Chamber Consort from 1973 to 1975. More recently, he has conducted the Musicians Union Summer Band (1986), Louisville Festival Symphony, and since 1989 has been director of the Commonwealth Brass Band.

Amend has taught at the National Music Camp at Interlochen (1974-79), Belkmine College, Campbellsville College, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary, Indiana University Southeast (fifteen years), and the University of Louisville (adjunct in trumpet and theory for twenty-eight years).

Bibl.: "J. Jerome Amend" (www.ius.edu/music/ja.htm).

Amstutz, A. Keith (b. c1942). American trumpeter. Amstutz earned bachelor and master of music degrees, studying with Byron L. Autrey at Michigan State University from 1959 to 1964. He then taught brass instruments at the University of Texas-Arlington from 1964 to 1967. From 1967 to 1970, he attended the University of Oklahoma where he received a doctorate in music education; his dissertation, A Videofluorographic Study of the Teeth Aperture, Instrument Pivot and Tongue Arch and Their Influence on Trumpet Performance is widely studied. Besides Autrey, his teachers include Earle D. Irons and John Haynie.

Amstutz spent his entire career teaching. He taught at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) from 1967 to 1970, University of Kansas from 1970 to 1973, and the University of South Carolina from 1973 until his retirement in 2006. He was principal trumpet of the South Carolina Philharmonic, South Carolina Chamber Orchestra, USC Brass Quintet, Columbia Lyric Theater Orchestra, and the Jimmy Farr Big Band for fourteen years. He was an active recitalist and released two LP albums of solos for trumpet and piano.

Amstutz is the inventor of Braceguard, an orthodontic shield for instrumentalists with braces (patented in 1983). He continues to play as a freelance musician in the Columbia, South Carolina, area.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "A. Keith Amstutz" (www.music.sc.edu/fs/amstutz); "A. Keith Amstutz (www.linkedin.com/pub/a-keith-amstutz/b/970/59a).

Anderson, Bernard Hartwell ("Step-Buddy") (b. Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, Oct. 14, 1919; d. Kansas City, Missouri, May 9, 1997). American trumpeter. Anderson came from a musical family, and began playing bugle while a Boy Scout. He began taking violin lessons at age seven, but soon switched to trumpet. He attended Douglas High School in Oklahoma City under band director Zelia M. Breaux, and at age fifteen began playing professionally when he joined Ted Armstrong's band in Clinton, Oklahoma, in 1934. During the late 1930s, he played in the Xavier University jazz band in New Orleans, but moved back to Oklahoma City in 1940 to join Leslie Sheffield's band.

Anderson became a member of Jay McShann's band in Kansas City in 1940. He played with this group until many of the band's members were drafted into military service during World War II, resulting in the group disbanding. He then moved to New York City, and played with various bands led by Benny Carter, Sabby Lewis, Roy Eldridge, and others during the early 1940s, and joined Billy Eckstine's orchestra in 1944. He was a significant influence on trumpeters Dizzy Gillespie and Fats Navarro.

Anderson contracted tuberculosis during the late 1940s, making trumpet playing very difficult, so he began learning piano. He moved back to his hometown of Oklahoma City where he gigged mostly on piano, and served as president of the Oklahoma City Musicians Union. During his sixties, he moved to Kansas City, but was unable to sustain himself as a working musician. He played on street corners for handouts, and was given some relief money from the local musicians union, which sponsored several concerts for needy musicians. He faded from the music scene during the 1980s and '90s, spending much of his time at home writing poetry.

After Anderson's death at age seventy-seven, an archive called The Bernard Hartwell "Step-Buddy" Anderson Collection was established as part of the Dr. Kenneth J. LaBudde Department of Special Collections at the University of Missouri-Kansas City.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Bernard Anderson" (http://digital.library.okstate.edu/encyclopedia/entries/A/AN004.html).

Anderson, John (b. c1920). American trumpeter. Anderson studied at the Los Angeles Conservatory of Music and at Westlake College. After serving in the Navy for four years during World War II, he played in the big bands of Stan Kenton (1945-47), Jerry Felding, Perez Prado, Anderson, John Jr. (b. Birmingham, Alabama, Jan. 31, 1921; d. Birmingham, Alabama, Aug. 18, 1974). American trumpeter. The Afro-American trumpeter John Anderson Jr. learned to play alto horn and trumpet while in high school. In 1941, he joined Tiny Bradshaw's band, and then joined the bands of Benny Carter, Earl Bostic (1946-57), and Count Basie (1959). He also recorded with Johnny Otis (1947, 1950), Dee Williams (1949), Amos Milburn, Big Jay McNeeley, and Sam Cooke. He is featured with the Modern Afro-American Jazz on DIG in 1954 with Buddy Collette (ten. sax, clar.) and Chico Hamilton (drums) (record produced by Johnny Otis). [Note: Much available information on John Anderson Jr. is confused with the white trumpeter, John Anderson (b. c1920, and listed above.]

Anita O'Day, Doc Severinsen (1970), and Mike Pittsley (1987), among others. He also recorded with George Auld (1946), Ricky Nelson, Max Albright (1956), and Jimmy Witherspoon. [Note: Much of the available information on Anderson is confused with the Afro-American trumpeter John Anderson Jr. (b. 1921; d. 1974), see below.]

Bibl.; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: 1947 Stan Kenton Band trumpet section: (l to r) John Anderson, Buddy Childers, Ray Wetzel, Chico Alvarez, Ken Henna

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Anderson, Michael (b. Fairfield, California, June 22, 1959). American trumpeter. Anderson grew up in Fairbury, Illinois, and attended Fairbury-Cropsey High School where his trumpet teacher was Kirby Reese, a graduate teaching assistant at Illinois State University. After graduating from high school in 1977, Anderson studied with Herbert Koerselman at Illinois State University, where he received his bachelor's degree in 1981. He then studied with Dennis Schneider at the University of Nebraska, where he earned his master's degree in 1985. Additionally, he has studied with Arnold Jacobs, William Adam, Vincent DiMartino, Ronald Romm, Michael Ewald, Karl Sievers, and William Pfund.

Anderson's first teaching post was in 1986 at Dana College in Blair, Nebraska. While teaching there, he was a member of the Lincoln Symphony Orchestra (twenty-one years), and occasionally performed with the Omaha Symphony and Opera Omaha. He was a member of the Palladium Brass Quintet, Nebraska Brass, and was a founding member of the Omaha Brass Ensemble. In addition, Anderson was musical director of the Omaha Big Band and the Omaha Jazz Youth Project.

Anderson was appointed trumpet professor at Oklahoma City University in 2004, and is a tenured member of the Oklahoma City Philharmonic, a member of Lyric Theater Orchestra, and a trumpeter with the New Covenant Methodist Church Band. He is a member of the Board of Directors of the International Trumpet Guild, and a member of the Editorial Committee of the ITG Journal; he is Column Editor of the Journal's Trumpet Technology column. Additionally, he is founder and administrator of the Trumpet Players' International Network (TPIN), the first Internet discussion site devoted to the trumpet.

As a recitalist, clinician and lecturer, Anderson has played performances and given talks at ITG conferences, as well as playing numerous concerts with OCU organist Timothy Olsen. He and his wife, Jeanmarie Nielsen, have two children, Colin Anderson (b. 1990) and Maren Anderson (b. 1991). His hobbies include fly-fishing and fly-tying.

Bibl.: "Michael Anderson" (www.trumpetguild.com); personal interview, Jan. 2, 2010.

Anderson, Ronald K. (b. 1934). American trumpeter. Anderson grew up in Kansas City, Missouri. Since childhood, he has suffered from a stutter, but has proven himself to be an effective teacher and performer who has championed contemporary music.

Anderson studied with Herbert Mueller at Central Missouri State University where he received a bachelor of music education degree. He then moved to New York to attend The Juilliard School, studying with William Vacchiano (bachelor and master of music degrees). He later earned a doctorate in education degree from Columbia University. He was one of the earliest members of the American Brass Quintet (1962-65), played with the Da Capo Chamber Players, and was a pioneer recitalist of new music for trumpet. Many works were composed for him by Emmanual Grant, Stefan Wolpe, Charles Wuorinen, Ralph Shapey, Justin Connolly, Harvey Sollberger, John Lessand, Charles Dodge, Karl Korte, and others. He was a prolific recording artist in the U.S. and Europe, recording dozens of new works for various labels. He spent many summers playing and recording during the Composers Conference at Wellesley College, and was the first wind artist to teach and perform Western music in China.

Anderson was a charter member of the Group for Contemporary Music, a prototype for many new music ensembles. He was also principal trumpet of the New York City Ballet Orchestra from 1976 to 1993. He taught at the State University of New York-Purchase, SUNY-Stony Brook, Brooklyn College, New York University, Columbia University, and Bennington College. He has received grants from the M. B. Rockefeller Foundation, and has served as a member of the National Screening Committee for Fulbright music scholarships. He was a board member of the International Society for Contemporary Music, as well as the Stefan Wolpe Society.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ronald Anderson" (www.americanbrassquintet.org/Familytree1.htm).

Anderson, Stephen M. (b. Havana, Illinois, Mar. 11, 1961). American trumpeter. Anderson grew up in New Bern, North Carolina. He learned to play the trumpet at age thirteen; his first trumpet teachers were Rick Chapman, Guyte Cotton, and Bill Frazier. He attended the University of Illinois, studying with David Hickman and receiving his bachelor of music degree in 1983. When Hickman accepted a position at Arizona State University, Anderson followed him to Tempe, Arizona, earning a master of music degree in 1985.

Anderson occasionally played with the San Diego Symphony in 1984, and from 1985 to 1988 was a member of the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra. During the summers of 1986 through 1988, he played as an extra with the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra, and studied with Adolph Herseth as a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago during the summers of 1987 and 1988. He was a member of the Chicago Chamber Brass from 1988 to 1990, and served as principal trumpet of the Spoleto Festival Orchestra in the summer of 1988. In 1990, he moved to Dayton, Ohio, to join the Dayton Philharmonic. In Dayton, he also played with the Carillon Brass Quintet and taught at Wittenberg University.

Anderson was named assistant principal of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra in 1992, and in 2011 was made acting principal (following the retirement of Ramon Parcells). He is also a member of the Detroit Chamber Winds & Strings. His hobbies include playing tennis, watching movies, landscaping, and traveling.

Bibl.: "Stephen Anderson" (www.detroitsymphony.com/pages.aspx_id=390); personal interview, May 11, 2011.

Anderson, William Alonzo ("Cat") (b. Greenville, South Carolina, Sept. 12, 1916; d. Norwalk, California, Apr. 29, 1981). American trumpeter. Anderson is considered to be the greatest high note trumpet artist of all time. With seemingly little effort, he was able to produce his extraordinary upper register, reaching triple-high c"'' and beyond, for hours.

Anderson lost his parents when he was four years old, and he was placed in the Jenkin's Orphanage in Charleston, South Carolina. The orphanage was known for its fine kid's band, and people often donated musical instruments to it. He joined the band at age seven, and played valve trombone and drums. When a couple of the trumpet players in the band ran away, he took up the trumpet. It was said that he taught himself to play but, in fact, he got lessons under Alonzo Mills. He developed an unorthodox embouchure that clenched his molar teeth together. This allowed him to play more easily in the upper register. He received the nickname "Cat" when he won a schoolyard fight with a bully. One of the boys yelled, "Hey, you fight like a cat!"

While in his teens, he became a member of a cooperative group, the Carolina Cotton Pickers, that performed around the Charleston area (1932-35). After leaving the orphanage at age eighteen, he played in several professional big bands led by Hartley Toots, Claude Hopkins, Doc Wheeler (1936-42), Lionel Hampton (two stints in 1942-44), Erskine Hawkins, Lucky Millinder, and others. In September 1944, Duke Ellington hired him as a member of his band. When the lead trumpeter in the band was late for a concert, Anderson was asked to play his feature solo. To everyone's surprise, he performed it an octave higher than usual, and afterwards he was given many opportunities to solo with the band. With the Ellington band, Cat performed several command performances, including ones for Queen Elizabeth, Princess Grace, King Hussein, President John Kennedy, and President Lyndon Johnson.

In 1947, Cat formed his own band, but it folded after two years. He returned to Ellington's band in 1950, and toured with that organization through 1959. In 1960, he attempted to form another band but it, too, was not successful. He played intermittently with the Ellington band from 1961 to 1971, and then moved to Los Angeles to work as a studio musician. He can be heard on television reruns of Ironside, Laugh-In, Longstreet, and Mission Impossible. He also performed occasionally with Benny Carter (Tribute to Satchmo in 1971), Count Basie (1974), toured with his own group (Tribute to Duke in 1978), and with Lionel Hampton (1980 and 1981).

Anderson published his book, The Cat Anderson Trumpet Method, in 1973. It is interesting that it does not mention the trick embouchure he used to produce his amazing upper register. His highly skilled virtuoso high notes are best heard in recordings with Duke Ellington, such as Satin Doll, El Gato, Happy Go Lucky Local, (he performs the "train whistles"), Jam with Sam, The Eighth Veil, Sugar Loaf, Cat's Boogie, and Swingin' the Cat. One of the best records under his own name was Plays W.C. Handy in 1976, on the Black & Blue label. He was also a fine jazz soloist in the middle register, but his skills in this area are greatly overshadowed by his upper register pyrotechnics.

Cat Anderson was a fun-loving man with a good sense of humor. He was an active clinician for the Conn Company. At one time, he played mouthpieces made by Burt Herrick, and by Charlie Allen from Chicago. He died of a brain tumor in 1981 at the age of sixty-four.

Bibl.: Anderson, William "Cat." The Cat Anderson Trumpet Method (Gwyn Pub. Co.); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, incl. extracts on mp3; Oct. 2008).

André, Maurice Jean (b. Alés, France, May 21, 1933; d. Bayonne, France, Feb. 25, 2012). French trumpeter. Without question André was considered to be one of the greatest classical trumpeters of all time, and perhaps the best-known classical trumpet soloist. He recorded over three hundred albums, toured the world many times, and performed with all of the leading conductors of the twentieth century. He was one of only a handful of trumpeters to be considered a true celebrity.

André was born into a miner's family. His father, named Marcel-Jean, was an amateur trumpeter who enjoyed playing dance music and listening to recordings of Harry James. His uncle Jean was a professional trumpeter and professor at the Nîmes Conservatory. Maurice learned solfège from his father at the age of ten, and began playing an old Couesnon cornet at the age of twelve. At the age of fourteen, Maurice began working as an apprentice in the coal mine where he worked until the age of eighteen. During this time, he learned to play the cornet from his father. Dad gave me "Lily Lily Bye Bye" and other love songs to play...after five days I could play these melodies (they were quarter notes followed by half notes). He got me hooked onto this, then he taught me popular songs. As young Maurice improved, his father sent him to study with Leon Barthélémy, who had graduated from the Paris Conservatory studying with Merri Franquin. André said, the great method I practiced with Mr. Barthélémy, that of Merri Franquin. Yes, the method...the question of soft and loud attacks, all kinds of tonguing. He stuffed me full of these tonguing exercises, pianissimo without forcing the high register or the low. You know, looking back I look on Franquin's method as one of the best. After two years of study with his father, and four years with Barthélémy, it was decided that young Maurice should attend the Paris Conservatory, but he could not afford it. Barthélémy suggested that Maurice join a military band because the conservatory automatically provided scholarships for students that were serving in military bands. So, in 1951 at the age of eighteen, Maurice left the mine and attended the Paris Conservatory while serving in the 8th Regiment Band in Mont-Valérien.

André studied with Raymond Sabarich at the conservatory (1951-53), but the beginning of their relationship was a bit rocky. André recalls, Three months after my arrival in Paris, a good lad from the south and all that, Sabarich gave me a real piece of his mind. He had felt straight away that I was gifted, as is said, and so he loaded me with work... and I didn't deliver the goods as he wished. After three months he threw abuse at me and chucked me out of the class. André returned to the barracks and practiced diligently for three months. He then played all fourteen Characteristic Etudes by Arban for Sabarach without making a single mistake, and was allowed back into the conservatory. Six months later, André won first prize in the annual cornet competition, and the following year won first prize in the trumpet competition and graduated. While André was still a student at the Conservatory, Sabarich sent him to record the second trumpet part (in C) along with Roger Delmotte on the Concerto P75 by Vivaldi under Roland Douatte (1952). As far as is known, it's the first recording ever made of this major work.

André performed as a member of several orchestras including the Paris Radio Orchestra (1953-62), Orchestre des Concerts Lamoureux (1953-60), and the Opéra-Comique in Paris (1962-67). At the same time, André played every kind of music (notably as a substitute to Sabarich at the Medrano Circus) and recorded extensively in studios (Charles Trenet in 1955, Duke Ellington in 1963, film soundtracks, and so on). During this time, too, he also began his career as a soloist, winning first prize in the Geneva International Competition (1955) and the Munich Competition (1963). In the latter competition, André was initially asked to be a judge, but discovered that he was eligible to compete (and that the amount of money for the first prize was significantly higher than what he would have earned as a juror!). In 1955, he began making his first classical recordings under his own name, and became a clinician for Selmer (of Paris) trumpets. He once received an urgent call from composer André Jolivet asking if he could perform and record Jolivet's two trumpet concertos a few days later. The recording is among André's best (1964). André also recorded two solo albums for Selmer on ten-inch discs that included pops style versions of old cornet solos, as well as arrangements by Henrik Lützen of Le Canari, Katrina, Good Night Mister Johnny, The Trout, and others. André's musicianship, range, and technique set a new standard in trumpet playing in France in much the same way that Harry James and Rafael Méndez had done in America a decade earlier.

In 1956, André met his future wife, Liliane Arnoult, in Montreux, Switzerland, and they married six months later. She became his manager, setting up an average of 180 solo concerts per year, and arranging for him to record six to ten albums each year. He decided that the trumpet repertoire needed to be expanded, so he began transcribing Baroque music for oboe or violin, which required him to use the piccolo trumpet. He worked with Selmer to design a piccolo trumpet model (1958-60); his four-valve piccolo A/B-flat combination trumpet became very popular worldwide from 1967, and with the help of Jean Thilde, André transcribed more than 130 works. André credited the early recordings of Adolf Scherbaum for his own love of Baroque trumpet music.

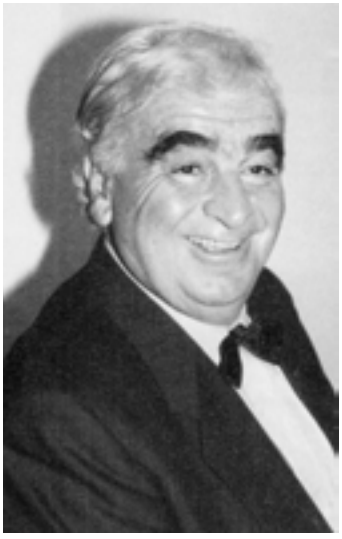
When André's conservatory teacher Sabarich died in 1966, André was named his successor in 1967. André continued touring, and made his United States debut tour with twenty recitals in 1971, ending with a spectacular performance at Town Hall in New York City.



The City of Paris honored André by establishing the annual "Maurice André Day" and the Maurice André International Trumpet Solo Competition, which began in 1975. André was also featured on a French television musical show in his honor (Le Grand Echiquier) where he performed live before millions of viewers. He retired from teaching at the conservatory in 1978, and eventually decreased the number of yearly solo appearances to about forty. Many famous soloists have been André's students, among the best-known being Guy Touvron, Bernard Soustrot, Eric Aubier, and Thierry Caens. He began playing trumpets made by the Spanish company Stomvi in the 1990s.

André received many additional awards and distinctions during his illustrious career: in 2000, he received the Gold Medal for Arts, Sciences, and Letters of the French Academy; he was awarded the National Order of the Legion of Merit from France; he was made a Member of the Royal Academy in England; he was voted the "Greatest Brass Player of the 20th Century" by subscribers of Brass Bulletin magazine; and the city of Alés hosted a celebration of his seventy-fifth birthday on May 21, 2008. André gave his last concert in Béziers in October 2008. The following month, French Television FR3 made a one-hour documentary about him, Maurice André intime by Frank Chaudemanche. The great trumpeter of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Adolph Herseth, said, Well, let's face it, André is...he's "it" in terms of solo playing. The guy sounds fabulous, that's all...that's all I can say. I heard him play live a couple of times, once in Amsterdam, and also in this area. I have nothing but the greatest admiration for the man's playing—fabulous.

André retired to the Basque region of France in the early 1990s, but occasionally performed as a soloist. Maurice and Liliane had two sons, Lionel and Nicolas, and a daughter, Béatrice. Nicolas is a professional trumpeter, and Béatrice a professional oboist. They sometimes performed trio concerts with their father. Tragically, Lionel was killed in a ski avalanche as a young man. André enjoyed woodcarving as a hobby.

Bibl.: Chenette, Stephen. "It's My Greatest Joy: An Interview with Maurice André" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Vol. 30, 2001); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Neidig, Kenneth. "Man Alive, What a Kick This Is!" (The Instrumentalist, Apr. 1977); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Utnes, Ole J. "Maurice André" (O. J.'s Trumpet Page: http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/andre); Michel Laplace, Trompette, Cuivres & XXe siècle (including an interview and a discography; CD-Rom, Oct. 2008); Maurice André Tribute Website (www.maurice-andre.com).

Angelovski, Blagoj (b. Bitola, Macedonia, Oct. 24, 1947; d. Ohrid, Macedonia, Aug. 20, 2000). Macedonian trumpeter. Angelovski is considered to be the greatest Macedonian trumpeter of all time. He began his musical training in his hometown of Bitola, and in 1971 completed his studies at a music academy in Belgrade. He studied with Maurice André at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique de Paris from 1975 to 1978, and with Pierre Thibaud at the International Music School in Nizza (Nice) in 1979. In 1997, he earned a doctorate in music at the music academy in Sofia, Macedonia.

Much of Angelovski's career was spent as principal trumpet of the Radio Symphony Orchestra of Belgrade (1973-93) and the Belgrade Philharmonic (1981). He was also a professor at the conservatory in Skopje (1994-2000). However, he is best known today for his recordings of pop arrangements of Baroque works recorded with trumpet and organ. He performed in over one thousand concerts as a soloist, and could play a large repertoire of over two hundred works.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Anthis, Socrates (b. Corfu, Greece, July 31, 1952). Greek trumpeter. Anthis's early studies were with Thanassis Voyiatzpoylos; he later studied with Dimitris Kafiris at the Hellenic Conservatory. He has also attended seminars with James Stamp, Bo Nilsson, Paul Archibald, and Denis Wick.

Anthis was principal trumpet of the Athens Lyric Theater Orchestra (1975-90), and has performed with the Radio Symphony of Leipzig, Camerata of Stuttgart, Athens Opera Orchestra (1980-91), and Orchestra ALEA III of Boston. He is currently principal trumpet of both the Greek Radio and Television Orchestra (since 1990) and the Orchestra of Colors. He is a founding member of the Melos Brass Quintet, the leading brass ensemble in Greece. Since 1994, he has been a professor at the Nakas Conservatory, and also teaches at Ionian University.

Bibl.: Jones, Gregory and Nikos Xanthoulis. "The New Greek Trumpet School" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2000); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Anthony, Raymond ("Ray") [Antonini] (b. Bentleyville, Pennsylvania, Jan. 20, 1922). American trumpeter. Anthony began playing the trumpet at age five under his father's guidance. Along with his five brothers, he played in the Antonini Family Orchestra. He grew up in Cleveland, and was leader of his own high school dance band. He turned professional in 1938 when he joined Al Donahue's dance band. In November 1940, he was hired by Glenn Miller, but Miller found young Anthony too cocky and dismissed him after six months. He played for a short while with Jimmy Dorsey's band (1942) before founding his own group with the unique instrumentation of one trumpet, one horn, five saxophones, and three rhythm players. They recorded for the Sonora and Signature labels.

During World War II, Anthony joined the Navy and served as a bandleader in the Pacific. He left the Navy in 1946, and formed a new group that signed with Capitol Records. Anthony's big band style of music was quickly going out of fashion, so he found a nice mix of dance, pop, and swing that Capitol was able to effectively market, making him a very popular artist, and his handsome good looks made him a star during the 1950s. His trumpet playing was heavily influenced by Harry James. The Ray Anthony Orchestra released several hit recordings including Harlem Nocturne, Slaughter on Tenth Avenue, Bunny Hop, Peter Gunn, Harbor Lights, Hokey Pokey, theme from Dragnet, and a remake of Glenn Miller's At Last. In 1953-54, he hosted his own television series, TVs Top Tunes.

Anthony married movie star Mamie Van Doren in 1955. This added to his popularity, and opened doors for him to appear in fifteen movies including This Could Be The Night, Daddy Long Legs, The Girl Can't Help It, Sun Valley Serenade, The Five Pennies, Girls Town, and High School Confidential. In 1956-57, he starred in his own television show, The Ray Anthony Show. Unfortunately, Anthony and Van Doren were divorced in 1961.

Anthony had a knack for business, and ran several commercial enterprises. He owned his own music publishing business, a big band contracting company, a nightclub in Hollywood, and a record label called Aerospace. He eventually broke up his big band and formed a sextet that performed regularly in Las Vegas as well as playing the lounge circuit. During the 1960s, he expanded his sextet to include a vocal duo called the Bookends, and later he expanded even more to ten instrumentalists and six female singers.

During the 1980s, Anthony formed a big band and an organization called Big Bands 80s that provided big band music to schools, radio stations, and other venues. His tireless energy and promotional skills continue to this day. Altogether, Anthony has released fifty-six albums on the Sonora, Signature, Capitol, Ranwood, Blue Heaven, and Aerospace labels. Some of his own hit compositions include Thunderbird, Bunny Hop, Trumpet Boogie, Big Band Boogie, and Mr. Anthony's Boogie. Being a personal friend of Hugh Heffner, he has appeared on several episodes of The Girls Next Door, and has received a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Ray Anthony" (All About Jazz: www.allaboutjazz.com); "Ray Anthony" (Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Anthony, Ryan (b. Whittier, California, May 17, 1969). American trumpeter. Anthony began playing trumpet in Whittier, California, at age seven, guided by his father, a band director. At age eight, he and his family moved to San Diego, California, where at age eleven, he began formal lessons with Charlie Lauer. A prodigious talent, at age sixteen he won the General Motors National Concerto Competition sponsored by Seventeen Magazine/General Motors that led to solo appearances with the Cleveland Orchestra, Detroit Symphony Orchestra, and at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C. He spent his first three years of high school at Grossmont High School in San Diego, but transferred to Mt. Miguel High School during his senior year. After graduating in 1987, he was named a Presidential Scholar and attended the Cleveland Institute of Music from 1987 to 1991, studying with Bernard Adelstein (one year) and David Zauder (last three years), and earning a bachelor of music degree. He continued his studies at C.I.M. with David Zauder from 1991 to 1993, receiving a master of music degree.

For several years, Anthony performed with the Center City Brass Quintet, and the Burning River Brass. He has also played with the Brass Band of Battle Creek, International Celebrity Trumpet Ensemble, All-Star Brass, and the duo Anthony & Beard (trumpet and piano/organ). He taught at the Oberlin College-Conservatory from 1998 to 2000, and the North Carolina School of the Arts from 2004 to 2005. He toured with the Canadian Brass from 2000 to 2003, and frequently as a member of the Canadian Brass "Dream Team" between 2005 and 2006.

Anthony was appointed principal trumpet of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra in 2006. He has served as a guest principal of the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, and has played in the trumpet sections of the New York Philharmonic, Cleveland Orchestra, and the Israel Philharmonic. He is also an active soloist and clinician, and has recorded as a studio player for NBC, ABC, CBS, Fox, TBS, WGN, TNT, HBO, Disney, Paramount, and Columbia Motion Pictures.

Anthony and his wife Niki, a marketing executive, have two children: Elizabeth ("Lili," b. 2001) and Rowan (b. 2005). His hobbies include traveling, good food, and movies.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Ryan Anthony's official website: www.ryananthony.com; personal interview, Aug. 10, 2011.

Antonsen, Ole Edvard (b. Hamar, Norway, Apr. 25, 1962). Norwegian trumpeter and composer. Although known worldwide for his brilliant trumpet artistry, Antonsen is a popular star in his own country of Norway, due to the huge success of his crossover albums of New Age-style music compositions and performances.

Antonsen began playing the piano at the age of three, but began playing the cornet at the age of five under the guidance of his father Odd R. Antonsen, a local woodwind player and dance band leader in Hamar. At age six, Ole performed his first public solo with his father's band in front of 1,200 people. Showing great talent by age ten, he was accepted as a student of Norway's leading trumpet teacher, Harry Kvebæk. Listening to recordings by Herb Alpert, Clark Terry, Chet Baker, Freddy Hubbard, Maurice André, and Timofei Dokshitser also influenced him.

At age seventeen, Antonsen entered the State Academy of Music in Oslo, graduating in only three years. His first job was as a member of the Oslo Philharmonic (1982-90). He also freelanced, toured with several rock groups, and gigged at various nightclubs. After eight years in the orchestra, he decided to focus on solo playing, and won the Geneva Competition in 1987, and the 1989 UNESCO Competition in Bratislava. He appeared on various television shows in Norway, and in 1989 released his first solo album, The Virtuoso Trumpet, which was nominated for a Norwegian Grammy.

Antonsen's big break came in 1992 when he released a crossover album titled Tour de Force, which became a hit in Norway, selling over 150,000 copies, occupying a great deal of radio time, and leading to a contract with EMI for five recordings. His second crossover CD, Read My Lips, also became a hit in 1997. His compositions comprise most of the music on his crossover albums. Other albums include Trumpet Concertos, Popular Pieces for Trumpet and Organ, The Apprentice Trumpet, Twentieth Century Trumpet, New Sound of Baroque, Nordic Trumpet Concertos, Pulling Out All the Stops!, Landscapes, and The Golden Age of the Cornet. However, his biggest selling album is December Moods, a double-CD set of Christmas music. He will soon record an album of French trumpet concertos with the São Paulo State Symphony Orchestra.

Antonsen performs over three hundred concerts each year. His crossover (New Age) show employs the use of foot pedals, electronic media and an extensive lighting system, and requires him to play seven different trumpets. He is also in demand worldwide as a guest soloist with symphony orchestras, and tours twelve to fifteen weeks each year as a guest conductor with orchestras and bands. He is a professor at the Norwegian State Academy of Music, and is conductor and music director of the Royal Norwegian Air Force Band. In 2009, he debuted with the London Symphony Orchestra by performing James MacMillan's difficult concerto, Epiclesis.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Morgan, Huw. "Ole Edvard Antonsen" (The Brass Herald, May 2010); Ole Edvard Antonsen's website (www.oleedvardantonsen.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Appleby-Wineberg, Bryan K[ent] (b. Alabama, Feb. 11, 1969). American trumpeter. Appleby-Wineberg grew up in Ann Arbor, Michigan, where he studied for four summers with Armando Ghitalla. He studied with Anthony Plog and Jean Moorehead-Libs at the Oberlin Conservatory, earning bachelor of music and education degrees. He then studied with James Darling at the Cleveland Institute (with additional lessons with Michael Sachs, Charles Couch, and David Zauder) where he earned a master of music degree and received the 1994 Bernard Adelstein Award. He earned a doctor of music degree studying with Peter Bond at Rutgers University.

Appleby-Wineberg began his teaching career as trumpet professor and assistant band director at the University of Evansville in Indiana for three years before assuming his current teaching position at Rowan University in Glassboro, New Jersey. He performs with the Bay-Atlantic Symphony Orchestra (principal trumpet), Riverside Symphonia, and the Atlantic Brass Band (cornetist). He is a founding member of Tromba Mundi, and has performed on occasion with the Cleveland Orchestra and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra. He was principal of the Jupiter Symphony Orchestra in New York, Evansville Philharmonic (1994-97), and the Haddonfield Symphony Orchestra (2001-05). He cohosted of the 2006 International Trumpet Guild Conference at Rowan University.

While on a yearlong sabbatical from Rowan University, Appleby-Wineberg lived in the United Kingdom during the 2009-10 academic year, and played solo cornet with the Brighouse and Rastrick Band, and The Lindley Band. He and his wife Sarah, a midwife and nurse-practitioner in women's health, have two daughters: Hannah and Kathryn.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Bryan Appleby-Wineberg" (www.rowan.edu/music/assets/facultyinfo.cfm?id=76).

Araujo, Manuel ("Manny") (b. Providence, Rhode Island, June 27, 1933). American trumpeter. Araujo made the decision to play the trumpet when he heard a jazz concert in which his uncle played trumpet. His first teacher was Julio Tancredi. He also studied piano and theory for two years. After graduating from Hope High School in 1951, he attended the Tanglewood Institute and Boston University where he studied with John Coffey, bass trombonist of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, and Roger Voisin. Araujo transferred to the Curtis Institute in 1952, where he studied with Samuel Krauss, graduating in 1956.

Araujo was a member of the US Army Band in Washington, D.C. from 1956 to 1959. Upon discharge, he won a position as third/assistant principal trumpet of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra from 1959 to 1960. He became principal of the Denver Symphony Orchestra from 1960 to 2000 (the DSO was renamed the Colorado Symphony Orchestra in 1989). He also played for many summers as principal of the Central City Opera orchestra in Colorado. He is the current principal trumpet of the Denver Philharmonic Orchestra. Always wanting to improve his playing and teaching techniques, Araujo enjoyed having coaching sessions from many of the world's greatest trumpeters, including William Vacchiano, Armando Ghitalla, Adolph Herseth, Maurice André, and Philip Smith.

Retired since 2000, Araujo enjoys playing golf and teaching trumpet privately. He has been married to his wife Avis since 2000. He has an adopted son, Manny James Araujo, from a previous marriage.

Bibl.: personal interview, Jan. 11, 2011.

Arban, Joseph Jean-Baptist Laurent (b. Lyons, France, Feb. 28, 1825; d. Paris, France, Apr. 9, 1889). French cornetist and composer. Little is known of Arban prior to his acceptance into Dauverné's (natural) trumpet class at the Paris Conservatory in 1841. Upon graduation in 1845, he spent ten years in the navy and conducted salon orchestras. He then became one of the conductors of the Paris Opera Orchestra, and in 1857 began teaching saxhorn at the École Militaire, the military annex to the conservatory. He was one of the first to perform on the newly invented cornet.

In 1862, Arban attempted to establish a cornet class at the conservatory, but his proposal was dismissed, because there was no method for the instrument. For the next two years, he wrote his Grand Method for Cornet, which when completed, was approved by the conservatory. Thus, Arban became the first cornet professor in history (1869).

Arban's career as a cornet soloist brought him fame and opportunities to perform throughout Europe and Russia. He resigned his teaching post in 1874 in order to perform and conduct during extended tours of Russia. He adapted double and triple tonguing techniques from flute methods, and incorporated them into his solos, thus establishing himself and the cornet as prominent musical entities.

Arban became tired of touring, and returned to Paris in 1880 in hopes of again teaching at the conservatory. Henri Maury, Arban's cornet successor there, died in that same year, so Arban was immediately hired as his replacement. By this time, Arban was playing the "Cornet-Arban," also known as Arban's "compensator" cornet. It was a four-valve instrument built by Adolphe Sax, and played in two keys (usually B-flat and alto G). He composed a set of etudes for this instrument, Nouveau Cornet-Arban: Enseignement du Conservatoire, which became his second method book. The Cornet-Arban never caught on outside of Paris, and his second method quickly fell out of use. However, his Grand Method became the leading technique book, and remains a staple in trumpet and cornet pedagogy.

Arban received many honors during his distinguished career: Officer of the Academy; Knight of the Order of Leopold of Belgium, of Christ of Portugal, of Isabella the Catholic, and of the Cross of Russia. He was always elegantly dressed and became a prominent figure in Paris' high society. Paris newspapers often published caricatures of him with baton and cornet in hand, sometimes with ladies surrounding him. He died in 1889 at the age of sixty-four.

Bibl.: Clarke, Herbert L. "Great Cornetists Past and Present" (series of articles in Jacobs' Band and Orchestra Monthly magazine, reprinted in Glenn Bridges's Pioneers in Brass); Kelly, Daniel. "The Competition Solos of J. B. Arban" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2006); Mathez, Jean-Pierre. Joseph Jean-Baptist Laurent Arban (1825-1889) (Editions BIM); Tarr, Edward H. "Arban, (Joseph) Jean-Baptist (Laurent)" (New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians).

Arbuckle, Matthew (b. Lockside, Scotland, 1828; d. New York, New York, May 23, 1883). American cornetist. Arbuckle was born into a musical family. He joined the British army as a musician, but deserted and moved to Canada in 1853. He performed solos there, and then moved to Troy, New York, in order to become conductor and cornet soloist of the local band. After about six months, he accepted a similar position in Worchester, Massachusetts, where he worked for three years.

Arbuckle volunteered for military service as a musician during the Civil War, and joined the 24th Massachusetts Volunteer Regiment Band; he later became a member of the Boston Brigade Band. T.H. Rollinson wrote about Arbuckle stating, Probably no musician in Boston has ever been closer to the hearts of the people and his fellow musicians than Matthew Arbuckle. All of the older musicians expressed admiration for him, both as a soloist and a fine gentleman.

Arbuckle was an imposing man, very tall and handsome with a large moustache. He was a fine singer, which surely facilitated his excellent renditions of vocal arias on cornet. His solos were always purely musical, as opposed to the flashy solos often played by other cornetists. Herbert L. Clarke said, I never had the pleasure of hearing Arbuckle play, but in my younger days I heard much about him through the early musicians. I will remember sitting in my room practicing, when a certain well-known musician dropped in and, after listening to me play certain exercises and solos, would interrupt to say "Arbuckle used to play it thusly." I was a young man just getting started, so you can bet I listened.

In 1872, Arbuckle became a cornet soloist, along with Jules Levy, Walter Emerson, and Alessandro Liberati, with Patrick S. Gilmore's New York 22nd Regimental Band. When Arbuckle and Levy first met, Arbuckle is reported to have said, Well, the Two Kings are here today, to which Levy replied, There is only one King, and it is I. Competition between them grew over the years, much to Gilmore's pleasure. Gilmore often promoted concerts featuring the two in cornet battles, billing Levy as "The Greatest Cornet Player Living," and Arbuckle as "The Great Favorite American Cornet Player." Their infamous rivalry peaked at the band's opening concert of the 1879 season at Madison Square Garden when the audience could not decide on a clear winner. During a later concert, the two men broke into a fistfight that was broken up by Gilmore. Levy was so furious at Gilmore, that he challenged him to a pistol duel to the death. Friends convinced Levy to compete in a target shooting match instead, which Gilmore won. As the loser, Levy was obliged to take the entire band to dinner.

Perhaps because of Arbuckle's strained relationship with Levy, and his refusal to perform tours of England and Europe (possibly due to his earlier military desertion), Arbuckle resigned from the Gilmore band and began playing in Downing's Band in Brighton Beach in 1880. He joined Cappa's band in the following year. In early 1883, he organized his own band, but there were no concerts due to his sudden death in May of that year.

Arbuckle composed and arranged numerous solos, and wrote a cornet method that was published by the Oliver Distin Company. Unfortunately, it has been out of print for over a century. Many other cornet solos were written in his honor, including John Hartmann's Arbucklenian Polka, Grand Concert Valse, and West Brighton Polka, as well as F. M. Steinhauser's Culver Polka, Fantasie on "le Desir." and Surf Polka.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published).

Archer, Billie Rogers (b. North Plains, Oregon, May 31, 1917). Billie Rogers moved with her family to Rainier, Washington, shortly after she was born. She began playing trumpet around eight years of age, but only had a handful of lessons. Her family had a band of amateur musicians that performed for area dances and programs, which gave her a start in becoming a professional musician. Billie attended high schools in four Washington cities—Rainier, Eatonville, Snoqualmie, and Renton—graduating from Renton High School (suburb of Seattle) in 1933 the day after her sixteenth birthday. She then moved to Missoula where her older brother Les was attending the University of Montana. She played trumpet and handled the vocalist's duties in Les's big band until 1936.

For several years, following the sudden death of her brother, Billie worked with local musicians in Montana. Her idol was Roy Eldridge. She moved to the Los Angeles area during the summer of 1941, but was informed by the local musicians union that she would not be able to take steady work as a musician for six months; however, this rule could be suspended if she were to join a "girl" band. She and three other ladies formed a group that played in a Culver City bar, which caused a great deal of publicity; the bar's nightly business increased dramatically. One of the customers was Jack Archer, road manager for the Woody Herman Band. He arranged for an audition, and she soon joined the Woody Herman organization (1941-43). For publicity purposes, she was asked to perform a number with Gene Krupa's band at the Palladium. She described the situation: This was probably the scariest thing I have ever done. Roy Eldridge, my favorite trumpet player of all time, was sitting in the brass section, and singer Anita O'Day was sitting in front of the band. (I was also a vocalist, although this was often overlooked.) We did get a picture with Roy on the front page of the popular big band magazines of the day, but it was an experience which still haunts me!

During the late '40s, Billie Rogers Archer (married Jack Archer in 1944) played with Tommy Pedersen's Monday Nite Relief Band at the Hollywood Palladium, and in 1945 was a member of the Jerry Wald Orchestra. She and Jack had a daughter, Joan Denise ("Dee," b. 1949), who became a well-known singer and songwriter. The Archer family moved to Hastings-on-Hudson, New York. Jack passed away in 1962.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Dee Archer's official website: www.deearcher.com; personal interviews with Billie Rogers Archer, Feb. 8 and Aug. 29, 2012.

Photo: Billie Rogers Archer with Woody Herman and the trumpet section.

Archibald, Paul (b. Leeds, Yorkshire, England, May 31, 1956). British trumpeter. Archibald studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London with William Overton and James Watson (1974-77), and also attended the Claredon College for Further Education. His first professional position was as coprincipal trumpet of the Royal Opera House Orchestra at Covent Garden, a position he held until leaving in 1978 to join the Philharmonia Orchestra. He has toured with his own English Brass Consort and the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble, and played in the London Sinfonietta.

Archibald won a prize at the 1984 international trumpet solo competition in Toulon. He has also performed with the London Philharmonic Orchestra, Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra, Chamber Orchestra of Europe, London Mozart Players, Britten Sinfonia, and the Orchestra of St. John's. From 1995 to October 1997, he was principal trumpet of the BBC National Orchestra in Wales. He occasionally performs on film soundtracks. His solo albums include Joie de Vivre, Divertissement, and Proclamation, all on his own Brass Classics label (formed with Juliet Edwards).

As one of England's leading teachers, Archibald is a professor at the Royal Academy of Music, Royal Welsh College of Music and Drama, Bath Spa University, and the National Academy of Performing Arts, Port of Spain. He has taught at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London, and has taught courses for the Dartington International Summer School and the Benslow Music Trust. He has served as a judge at several international solo competitions, and in 2003 was given the Award of Fellow at the Royal Academy of Music.

Archibald is currently performing with several groups, including Trio d'ART, English Brass, Carnyx Brass Trio, Fibonacci Sequence, Chaconia Brass, and Brass Monkey. He has published three volumes of Breathe!, and also wrote a book titled Playing the Trumpet and Brass.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Paul Archibald's official website: www.paularchibald.co.uk.

Arisi, Enrico (b. Bishop, Italy, Aug. 10, 1899; d. Bologna, Italy, Oct.16, 1960). Italian trumpeter. Remembered as "The trumpeter of [Arturo] Toscanini," Arisi played first trumpet in the orchestras of the Teatro alla Scala in Milan and the Arena di Verona. He was one of the first trumpet players in Italy to perform Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 (beginning in 1950), and adapted Georg Kopprasch's 60 Etudes (for horn) for the trumpet. He taught trumpet and trombone at the Giovanni Battista Martini Conservatory of Music in Bologna for many years. In 1994, his hometown of Bishop established the annual Enrico Arisi Music Competition in his honor.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Enrico Arisi Competition" (www.popolis.it/abmusvescovatopagine/b_Arisi.html).

Armenteros, Alfredo ("Chocolate") (b. Ranchuelo, Santa Clara, Las Villas Province, Cuba, Apr. 4, 1928). Cuban trumpeter. Armenteros comes from a musical family in which his father Lazaro Alfredo Armenteros played trombone, and his cousin was no less than the famous singer and bandleader Beny Moré. He got his nickname when a woman thought that he was Kid Chocolate, the 1932 featherweight boxing champion.

Armenteros began playing cornet at the age of eleven, and was soon playing in a local Orquesta Municipal. He moved to Havana and became a professional with Septeto Habanero. He also recorded with Arsenio Rodriguez (February 1949 to January 1950) and Rene Alvarez y Su Conjunto Los Astros (May 1949). Once in the Rodriguez Conjunto, he played alongside two Cuban legends, Felix Chappottin

(lead trumpet) and "Florecita" Oscar Velazco O'Farrill (third trumpet). Armenteros often said he was influenced by Florecita. He then played with Sonora Matancera (1951) and Beny Moré (1953 to 1955 with Domingo Corbacho and Nilo Argudin on trumpets) with whom he also appeared in films. As a studio musician in Havana, he recorded with Nat "King" Cole (Cole Español). In 1956, he recorded with Chico O'Farrill on the Cuban Jazz Kings album, along with trumpet stars such as Luis Escalante, Nilo Argudin, and Leonardo Timor.

Armenteros made his first trip to New York in 1957, where he jammed with Coleman Hawkins. After returning to Cuba, he played with the Puerto Rican trumpeter, César Concepción, the Banda Kubavana (1958-59, along with El Negro Vivar on trumpet), Chico O'Farrill (Havana, 1959, with Vivar and Corbacho), and Bebo Valdès. He then left Cuba to New York and joined Machito (1960), and made records with Generoso Jiménez (Tribute to Benny Moré-El Barbaro del ritmo on the Suave label), Clark Terry (Eso Es Latin Jazz…Man!), and La Lupe (1963, Mongo introduces La Lupe on the Milestone label).

Armenteros worked with Machito (Japan tour with Doc Cheatham on trumpet), Mongo Santamaria, Charlie Palmieri, Ismael Rivera, Israel Lopez, Eddie Palmieri, Tito Puente, Johnny Pacheco, Grupo Folklorico y Experimental Nuevayorquino (1975), Sonora Matancera (1977 with the legendary Calixto Leicea on trumpet), Cachao Lopez, Alfredo Valdès, Tico All-Stars, and a Dizzy Gillespie-Machito group (European tour in 1982). He took part in several Bill Cosby Shows, appeared with Wynton Marsalis at Lincoln Center (1999), and with Manny Duran at the New York Brass Conference for Scholarships (2003). He also participated in a tribute to the Puerto Rican trumpet star, Juancito Torres, in 2003 together with Luis Ortiz, Charles Sepúlveda, and Eddie Feyjoo (Guajira en Sol Menor). Armenteros made his recording debut as leader in 1974 (age forty-six).

Although Armenteros has never been a stand-up soloist, he is a legend in the Afro-Cuban jazz world. His style is closer to the traditional Cuban trumpet style than to the traditional jazz style of improvising. Armenteros must be listed among the Cuban legends with Lazaro Herrera, Florecita, Felix Chappottin, Luis Escalante, El Negro Vivar, Manuel Mirabal, and Inaudis Paisan.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Davies, R. Trompeta; Chappotin, Chocolate and Afro-Cuban Trumpet Style (2003, Lanham, MD); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. video clip; Oct. 2008).

Armstrong, Gary (b. Sheffield, Alabama, 1951). American trumpeter. Armstrong received his bachelor of music education degree from Murray State University, studying with Patrick McGuffey. He served in the US Army Band "Pershing's Own" in Washington, D.C., and was a frequent performer at The White House. He also played in the US Army Herald Trumpets and Army Brass Quintet. While in the military, he studied trumpet and conducting with Lloyd Geisler, earning master of music and doctor of music degrees at Catholic University of America.

Armstrong has taught at Mars Hill College, the University of West Alabama, Trevecca Nazarene College, Vanderbilt University, and Belmont University in Tennessee. His recording credits include a diversity of styles, performing with the Jack Daniel's Silver Cornet Band, Amy Grant, Etta James, and Lyle Lovett. He has been a member (third trumpet) of the Nashville Symphony Orchestra since 1988, also serving as personnel manager for four years.

Armstrong and his wife Beth have three children: Ashley, John (a trumpeter in the US Navy Band), and Allison. His hobbies include repairing and custom building trumpets, and restoring old cars. He also holds a bachelor of science degree in computer science from Middle Tennessee State University.

Bibl.: "Gary Armstrong" (www.nashvillesymphony.org/about/orchestra/GaryArmstrong).

Armstrong, Louis [Daniel] ("Satchmo") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Aug. 4, 1901; d. Corona (Queens), New York, July 6, 1971). American trumpeter and singer. Armstrong was born into a poor family. His father, William Armstrong (1881-1922), took up with another woman and abandoned the family when Louis was an infant. Louis's mother, Mayann Albert (1886-1942), was a prostitute in the seedy part of New Orleans. She left Louis and his younger sister Beatrice in the care of Louis's paternal grandmother Josephine Armstrong, and at times with his Uncle Isaac.

When Louis was five years old, he moved back in with his mother even though she continued to work as a prostitute. He attended the Fisk Elementary School for Boys where he studied music theory under Leontine M. Vignes and Naomi Spriggins. From c1908 to 1912, Louis joined The Singing Fools, a barbershop quartet made up of young boys willing to sing in the streets for pocket change. Louis said, I figure singing and playing is the same. Louis was impressed by the playing of Bunk Johnson (Eagle Band), Joe Oliver, and the legit player Andrew Kimball (Manuel Perez's Imperial Band), and by the saxophone playing of Sidney Bechet (Allen Brass Band in 1911-12).

Wanting to play the cornet, Louis saved some money toward the purchase of an instrument. The Russian-Jewish family, Karnofsky, took an interest in Louis and gave him odd jobs and financial help. They assisted him in acquiring a cornet, an act that Louis never forgot. So, Louis got a cornet in c1911-12, and was able to play Home, Sweet Home before being sent to the Colored Waifs' Home for Boys from January 1913 to June 1914 after an incident in which he fired his stepfather's pistol in the air during a New Year celebration. There, he received strict discipline. Fortunately, the Home had a music teacher, Mr. Peter Davis, who taught Louis the basics of cornet playing. Eventually, Davis made Louis the leader of the boys' brass band, which played small pieces by Bach and Haydn as well as Maryland My Maryland. Louis was taught to play the bugle, alto horn, and the cornet. Joe Howard helped Louis improve his music-reading skills.

When Armstrong turned fourteen, he was released from the Home, and lived with his biological father and new stepmother. Soon, however, he moved back in with his real mother. Louis earned a bit of money as a paperboy and from odd jobs. He spent his free time hanging out at the Funky Butt dance hall where the Eagle Band played (1915). His first playing job was at Henry Ponce's dance hall. One of the band's members, Black Benny, helped Armstrong find a day job shoveling coal while he earned money playing cornet at night. On many occasions, Louis and Kid Rena played together in brass bands. Bunk Johnson said that in 1915, Louis was really good. In 1914-1916, Louis took lessons from Joe "King" Oliver. He was also influenced by the clarinet playing of Eddie Cherie. He played his "clarinet style" on the cornet with a trio at Matranga's (1916-17). Louis had a Victrola and listened to records by operatic singers such as Enrico Caruso and Tetrazzini, as well as hit records by the Original Dixieland Jazz Band. When Oliver left New Orleans, Louis replaced him in the Kid Ory Band (1918-19). From 1919 to 1921, Louis worked on riverboats with Fate Marable. On these occasions, Louis studied under Davey Jones for phrasing, then under Norman Mason. Between these jobs, Louis played in New Orleans with Punch Miller's Zulu Band that introduced up-tempo blues playing in the streets (1919), and he substituted for Lee Collins in the Zutty Singleton orchestra and in the Buddy Petit Brass Band. Petit also had a large influence on Louis's playing.

Armstrong married Daisy Parker from Gretna, Louisiana. They adopted a three-year-old mentally handicapped boy, and named him Clarence Armstrong. Although Louis faithfully took care of Clarence all of his life, the marriage failed in a short time.

In addition to being hired as Oliver's replacement, Armstrong also played second cornet in the Tuxedo Brass Band. Oliver called Kid Rena to join him in Chicago. Rena declined the offer, so Oliver offered Louis the position. Louis played his last parade in New Orleans with the Onward Brass Band on August 8, 1922 and joined Oliver's Creole Jazz Band at the Lincoln (Royal) Gardens in Chicago. After joining Oliver in Chicago, Armstrong fell in love with, and soon married Oliver's pianist, Lillian Hardin.

Oliver's band was the best jazz music group in Chicago. Armstrong was given many opportunities to solo on cornet. It didn't take long for him to develop his unique audience rapport and musical style. He earned the nickname "Satchelmouth" because of his wide smile, but band members often referred to him as "Dippermouth" because he often drank from the bucket of sugar water that King Oliver had on stage for the band. Armstrong was now making good money and was able to afford his own apartment with a private bath. It was at this time that he made his first recordings as a member of Oliver's band for the Gennett, Paramount, and Okeh labels.

Lillian encouraged Louis to seek opportunities away from Oliver, partly because she wanted Louis to have freedom to develop his own style of music, and partly because she suspected that Oliver was withholding money from his players. So, Armstrong accepted a position in New York with Fletcher Henderson's band. He and Henderson made many recordings together, and from November 1924, Louis began to sing on stage and on records (Everybody Loves My Baby). Louis exchanged ideas with Red Nichols at the Roseland (1925) and also took notice of B.A. Rolfe's upper register during a job in Oakmont. Louis's playing on Sugar Foot Stomp with Henderson was a big success. During this first stay in New York, Louis also extensively recorded with blues singers and among others, the great Bessie Smith. But after a few months, Louis returned to Chicago where he and Lillian formed the Hot Five and the Hot Seven. Lillian became his manager and billed him as the "The Greatest Jazz Cornetist in the World" (at the Dreamland in 1925). Hit recordings such as Potato Head Blues, Hotter

Than That, and Struttin' with Some Barbecue brought much attention to Louis, Lillian, Kid Ory (trombone), Johnny Dodds (clarinet), and Johnny St. Cyr (banjo).

In addition to his own groups, Louis played with Erskine Tate's Symphonic Orchestra at the Vendome Theatre (from December 1925). Armstrong switched from cornet to trumpet, testing the trumpet on Jazz Lips. With this group, he developed his singing style more fully, producing the hit recording Heebie Jeebies in 1926. He also formed the group Louis Armstrong and his Stompers that played at the Sunset Café. In 1928, Louis Armstrong made history with records such as West End Blues, Tight Like This, Muggles, and a duet with Earl Hines on piano, Weather Bird.

In 1929, Armstrong went to New York City to play in the all-black music revue Hot Chocolate, written by Andy Razaf and Fats Waller. Armstrong's recorded vocal solo Ain't Misbehavin' was the biggest-selling hit single of the day. Working at Connie's Inn in Harlem, he made another hit single with Hoagy Carmichael's Stardust. Satchmo's vocals often imitated his jazz improvisations, making him the most influential singer in American music from his record of I Can't Give You Anything but Love in 1929. His raspy voice (due to cigarette smoking) was instantly recognizable and often imitated. His phrasing influenced many singers including Ethel Waters, Bing Crosby, Billie Holiday, Ella Fitzgerald, and Frank Sinatra.

The Great Depression forced many big bands to break up during the 1930s, and Armstrong's band was no exception. In 1930, Louis moved to Los Angeles to seek new opportunities. He played at the New Cotton Club with Lionel Hampton, and in 1931 appeared in the movie, Ex-Flame. Armstrong was arrested on marijuana charges, but was given a suspended sentence. He returned to Chicago in 1931, but ran into difficulties with several mob members and was forced to leave town. The final incident occurred when he was performing at a club that had several mob members in the audience. At closing time, the band began to pack up, but the men wanted to stay longer. They told the band to continue playing. After several more tunes, the band again tried to leave. Infuriated, one of the mob members placed a pistol to Louis's head and told him to keep playing, forcing him to play higher and higher until blood gushed out of his top lip from a rupture of the obicularis oris (now medically referred to as "Satchmo's syndrome"). But in fact, Louis began having lip troubles in 1927. These troubles increased from 1933-35. The fact that he cut sharp grooves into the rim of his cornet mouthpiece, and twisted the horn when ascending, may have contributed to the deformity of his lips.

In 1931, Armstrong returned to his hometown of New Orleans and was given a hero's welcome. He sponsored a local baseball team, Armstrong's Secret Nine, and had a cigar named after him. He set out on several tours throughout the United States, but the mob dogged him everywhere he went. In order to let things cool down, Armstrong went to Europe for a while. He toured England in 1932, appeared in a film in Copenhagen (1933), and played in France (1934).

By this time, Armstrong had hired an agent named Johnny Collins. Collins had not always acted in Louis's best interest, and Armstrong's lavish spending left him short of money. Armstrong fired Collins and hired Joe Glaser as his new manager (in 1935). Glaser was able to straighten out both Louis's finances and his mob problems.

During the mid 1930s, Armstrong began to lose some of the coordination in his fingers. He began expanding his vocal solos, and encouraged Glaser to find him guest appearances in movies and on television shows. As a result, Armstrong appeared in Pennies from Heaven (1936), Artists and Models (1937), Going Places (1938), and Every Day's a Holiday (1938). He substituted for Rudy Vallee on CBS Radio in 1937, making him the first black host sponsored for a national broadcast. In 1938, Louis and Lillian divorced, and Louis soon married his third wife, Alpha.

After several more years on the road, Armstrong settled permanently in Queens, New York in 1943. Traveling had taken a toll on his marriage, and he divorced Alpha in 1942. He then married his fourth wife, Lucille. During the next twenty-eight years, he performed approximately three hundred times annually, becoming the biggest name in jazz. His happy personality made him a celebrity among both black and white people. However, the public's change in taste made big bands less popular, and Glaser was forced to dissolve his band shortly after their successful 1947 Town Hall concert in New York. Armstrong formed a small group with Jack Teagarden called The All-Stars, that played at Billy Berg's Supper Club. They were a huge success, and on February 21, 1949 Armstrong was the first jazz musician to appear on the cover of Time magazine.

Armstrong's fame skyrocketed through his appearances in many movies during the 1940s, '50s, and '60s: Cabin in the Sky (1942), Jam Session (1944), Atlantic City (1944), Pillow to Post (1945), A Song Is Born (1948), Botte e Risposta (1951), Here Comes the Groom (1951), The Strip (1951), Glory Alley (1952), The Glenn Miller Story (1953), High Society (1956), Satchmo the Great (1956), Die Nacht vor der Premiere (1959), The Best Generation (1959), The Five Pennies (1959), Kaerlightedens Melodi (1959), Auf Wiedersehn (1961), Paris Blues (1961), When the Boys Meet the Girls (1965), and A Man Called Adam (1966). Armstrong's biggest hit single was Hello, Dolly! in 1964; it appeared as number one on the pop charts for fourteen weeks, even dislodging The Beatles during the height of their fame. He also appeared in the movie of the same name in 1969.

Louis Armstrong kept a busy schedule until his death in 1971. He made several tours of Africa, Europe, and Asia sponsored by the US State Department, earning him the nickname "Ambassador Satch." His gregarious and outgoing personality made him a favorite among all people of the world, but his acceptance by whites sometimes drew criticism from his own race. He was called an "Uncle Tom" by those who felt that he was not taking an aggressive stand for equal rights in America. But in reality he was one of the biggest financial supporters of Dr. Martin Luther King Jr., as well as being an outspoken civil rights activist bold enough to call President Eisenhower "two-faced" and "gutless" for taking too little action during the conflict on school desegregation in Little Rock, Arkansas in 1957. Armstrong even cancelled a planned State Department tour of the Soviet Union saying, The way they're treating my people in the South, the government can go to hell. Because of his statements, the FBI kept files on Armstrong.

Armstrong was a very generous man who gave away about half of the money he earned. He was baptized as a Catholic at the Sacred Heart of Jesus Church in New Orleans, and even met with popes Pius XII and Paul VI during their visits to New Orleans. Out of friendship with the Karnofsky family, he wore a pendant of the Star of David his whole life.

Armstrong loved food, and often signed the ends of letters to friends "Red beans and ricely yours." His weight problems led to him writing the book Lose Weight the Satchmo Way that suggests taking laxatives daily. He loved writing letters from the road, telling details about food, concerts, sex, drinking, use of marijuana, childhood memories, and even bowel movements! He enjoyed lewd jokes and dirty limericks. Although he was not known to have any children, he loved kids and went out of his way to entertain them. He owned a huge record collection and took records and tapes on the road with him. He was also a member of the Freemasons Montgomery Lodge No. 18 in New York.

Dear Bob, take my advice, and leave it all behind you.

-Satch

Louis Armstrong had a heart attack on July 6, 1971, and died later that day at his home in Queens, New York. Shortly before his death he stated, I think I had a beautiful life. I didn't wish for anything I couldn't get and I got pretty much everything I wanted because I worked for it. He was interred at the Flushing Cemetery in Queens. Honorary pallbearers included Governor Rockefeller, Mayor Lindsey, Bing Crosby, Ella Fitzgerald, Guy Lombardo, Duke Ellington, Dizzy Gillespie, Pearl Bailey, Count Basie, Harry James, Frank Sinatra, Ed Sullivan, Earl Wilson, Alan King, Johnny Carson, David Frost, Merv Griffin, Dick Cavett, and Bobby Hackett. Peggy Lee sang The Lord's Prayer, Al Hibbler sang Nobody Knows the Trouble I've Seen, and Fred Robbins gave the eulogy.

Today, many people feel that Armstrong was the most important musician of the twentieth century. Certainly, he was the most influential jazz musician who ever lived. André Jolivet wrote his Concertino for Trumpet with Armstrong in mind. Louis Armstrong's influence as a trumpet player is enormous. He had many imitators around the world (Teddy Buckner, Irakli De Davrichewy, Theis Jensen,…), as well as many artists who opened up new ways of jazz trumpet playing, such as Red Allen, Jabbo Smith, Bill Coleman, and Roy Eldridge. All of the jazz trumpeters of the 1930s were under Armstrong's spell: Valaida Snow, Buck Clayton, Jonah Jones, Bunny Berigan, Harry James, and so many more. Among the Louisiana trumpeters, he remains a model even today: Lee Collins, Kid Howard, DeDe Pierce, Wingy Manone, Sharkey Bonano, Louis Prima, Thomas Jefferson, Wallace Davenport, Joe Newman, Kermit Ruffins, Wynton Marsalis, Nicholas Payton, Dwayne Burns, and Troy Andrews, just to name a few. Wendell Brunious said, With Louis Armstrong and Clifford Brown, I knew how we can make a trumpet sound…they summarize everything.

Louis Armstrong played an H.B. Jay Columbia long-model cornet in 1922-23, then a small bore Buescher in A/B-flat in 1925-26, and a 56B Conn in A/B-flat in 1929-32. In 1932, he switched to Selmer. His balanced-action model was produced by Selmer from 1933 to 1962. Louis Armstrong used many types of mouthpieces made by Rudy Mück, Al Cass, John Parduba (in 1943), and finally a Giardinelli 1SW.

His recordings are too numerous to list, but among his biggest hit singles were Stardust, What a Wonderful World, When the Saints go Marchin' In, Dream a Little Dream of Me, Ain't Misbehavin', Stompin' at the Savoy, We Have All the Time in the World, Hello, Dolly! and Blueberry Hill. His best-selling albums include Ella and Louis, Ella and Louis Again, Porgy and Bess, A Musical Autobiography, The Good Book, Satch Plays Fats, Louis Armstrong Plays W. C. Handy, and The Real Ambassador.

Armstrong made countless television appearances, and was featured in dozens of movies. His music is heard in several movies in which he did not appear, in video games and computer games, and is included on the Voyager Golden Record sent into outer space to represent the greatest achievements of mankind. He was posthumously awarded the Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award in 1972, having also received individual Grammy Awards in 1925, 1926, 1928, 1929, 1930, 1932, 1958, 1964, and 1968. The US Postal Service issued a Louis Armstrong commemorative stamp in 1995. His home in Queens, New York, was declared a National Landmark in 1977. In 2001, the City of New Orleans renamed their airport the Louis Armstrong International Airport.

Among Armstrong's many awards are a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame and the Honorary Award from the International Trumpet Guild. He was inducted into the Louisiana Music Hall of Fame (2007), Gannett Records Walk of Fame (2007), Long Island Music Hall of Fame (2007), Nesuhi Ertegün Jazz Hall of Fame (2004), Rock and Roll Hall of Fame (1990), Big Band and Jazz Hall of Fame (1978), and the Down Beat Jazz Hall of Fame (1958). In addition, the U.S. Open Tennis Tournament's main stadium was named the Louis Armstrong Stadium in his honor.

Bibl.: Armstrong, Louis. Satchmo: My Life in New Orleans (Da Capo Press); Giddins, Gary. Satchmo: The Genius of Louis Armstrong (Da Capo Press); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Louis Armstrong" (Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. A full study, La Chanson de Louis, excerpts on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2009); Laplace, Michel. Louis Armstrong & Billie Holiday, Voix de l'Amérique (2009, Jazz Hot).

Arndt, Michael ("Mike") John (b. Norfolk, Nebraska, Feb. 26, 1973). American trumpeter. Arndt grew up in the Kansas City, Missouri, area and studied trumpet with Philip Clark and Gary Schutza. At age fourteen, he participated in the Kansas City Youth Symphony, and later graduated from Truman High School in Independence, Missouri, in 1991. He attended the University of Missouri-Kansas City (1991-95) under Dr. Keith Benjamin, earning a bachelor of music degree. He then earned a master of music degree with Gary Bordner and David Baldwin at the University of Minnesota (1996-98), and a performer's certificate from DePaul University in Chicago under John Hagstrom of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (1998-2000). Final studies were with David Hickman at Arizona State University where he served as a graduate teaching assistant and completed a doctor of musical arts degree (2000-02). His dissertation is a comprehensive biography on Roger Voisin, and he presented a lecture on the life and career of Voisin during the 2005 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Bangkok, Thailand.

Dr. Arndt has performed with the Breckenridge Music Institute Orchestra in Colorado, Nashville Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Huntsville Symphony, Orchestra Nashville, Chattanooga Symphony, and is a founding member of the Evolution Ensemble (new music group), Trés Elements, and the Arndt/Loucky Trio. He is also a member of the Stone River Chamber Players, MTSU Faculty Brass Quintet, and is principal of Orchestra Kentucky. He has been a professor of trumpet at Middle Tennessee State University since August of 2002.

Mike has been married to pianist Sandra ("Sandy") Arndt since 1996. Their children are Braeden (b. 2005), Camden (b. 2008), Riley (b. 2010), and Keegan (b. 2012). His hobbies include photography and running.

Bibl.: Arndt, Michael John. Roger Voisin: His Extraordinary Life and Contributions to Trumpet Performance, Repertoire, and Pedagogy (unpublished DMA dissertation, Arizona State University, May 2004); personal interview, Jan 31, 2012.

Arnold, [Sir] Malcolm Henry (b. Northampton, England, Oct. 21, 1921; d. Norwich, England, Sept. 23, 2006). British trumpeter, composer, and conductor. Arnold was the youngest of five children in a family of shoemakers. He began playing the trumpet at age twelve, after hearing a live concert by Louis Armstrong, and during his teens became interested in jazz. His improvement on the instrument was rapid, and at age sixteen he was awarded a scholarship to attend the Royal College of Music where he studied trumpet with Ernest Hall and composition with Gordon Jacob.

In 1941, during World War II, Arnold registered as a conscientious objector to military service, but agreed to serve part-time with the National Fire Service. He became second trumpet of the London Philharmonic Orchestra in 1942, and was promoted to principal in 1943. After one of his brothers died in the Royal Air Force, Arnold volunteered for active military duty. He was assigned to an army band, which he found to be a horrible experience, so in desperation he shot himself in the foot, and returned to civilian life. He played one season with the BBC Symphony, and then resumed his position with the London Philharmonic for two more years (1946-48).

Arnold quit playing the trumpet in 1948 in order to devote his career to composing and conducting. He composed hundreds of works including nine symphonies and 130 film scores, one of which, the score for the 1957 film, The Bridge on the River Kwai, earned him an Academy Award. He credited Hector Berlioz with being his most influential composer.

Arnold was a fun-loving and humorous man. He was close friends with humorist-cartoonist Gerard Hoffnung, and was known for telling jokes and laughing aloud. However, his personal life was filled with stress and sadness. In 1941, he married Shella Nicholson with whom he had one son and two daughters (one daughter died rather young), but they divorced in 1962. He remarried in 1963 to Isobel Grey with whom he had one son, but they divorced in 1975. In 1966, he moved to the small rural town of Cornwall to get away from the pressures of London life, but his health and finances soon suffered. In 1978, he was hospitalized for months in the psychiatric ward of the Royal Free Hospital. In the following year, he was treated for depression and alcoholism at a hospital in his hometown of Northampton. He overcame these illnesses, and returned to composing and conducting.

Arnold received many awards and honors including six honorary doctorates. He was knighted in 1993, made Honorary President of the Victoria College of Music in London in 1994, and given several recognition awards for his contributions to music in England. His health declined rapidly during the last years of his life, and Anthony Day, his longtime companion since the mid 1980s, cared for him.

Arnold died of a chest infection on September 23, 2006 at the age of eighty-four. Each October since 2006, the annual Malcolm Arnold Festival has been held in Northampton, and the Malcolm Arnold Academy in Northampton was named in his honor on September 3, 2010. Since his death, several television documentaries have been made about his life and music.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Sir Malcolm Arnold" (obituary, The Independent, Sept. 25, 2006); "Malcolm Arnold" (http://enwikipedia.org).

Arnold, Stanko [Stanislav] (b. Ravne, Yugoslavia, Aug. 23, 1949). Yugoslavian trumpeter. Arnold earned his diploma from the Ljubljana Academy of Music where he studied with Anton Grĕar. While still a student at age twenty, he became principal of the Ljubljana Philharmonic Orchestra, a position he held until 1990. Arnold won first prize in a national competition of young artists in Zagreb, which allowed him to study in Paris with Roger Delmotte. In 1976, he won first prize in the Toulon Competition, and second prize in 1979 in the European division of the Maurice André International Solo Competition in Paris. In that same year, he formed the Slovenian Brass Quintet.

Arnold was named professor of trumpet at the Ljubljana Academy in 1981, and has taught in Graz. He has developed an international career as a trumpet soloist and clinician, and often tours with an organist. He is known for his elegant style and flawless technique.

Bibl.: Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Stanko Arnold" (Brass Bulletin, No. 66, 1989); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Artero, Patrick (b. Hanoi, Vietnam, Apr. 26, 1950). French trumpeter. Born in Vietnam, Artero moved to France when he was a child. He took an interest in the trumpet after listening to many of his father's recordings of Louis Armstrong. At about age seventeen, he briefly studied at a Versailles conservatory with Roger Delmotte (1967-68). He formed his first group in 1964.

Artero's first professional gig was with sax player Roger Simon. He joined the Famous Melody Boys (1966-67) and was a member of the popular French jazz band, Les Haricots Rouges (literally "Red Beans", 1969-73), which gave him opportunities to play with New Orleans legends such as Jim Robinson, Albert Burbank, and Louis Nelson. He also made a trip to New Orleans (1971) where he played with Mike Casimir. He joined the great jump band, Michel Attenoux Jazz Group (1973-78), and played with Benny Waters at the Newport Jazz Festival (1975). He also participated in a television production about the great jazz cornetist, Bix Beiderbecke. Artero played with Raymond Fol (1976-78) and worked in Latin bands such as those of Conjunto Querido (Nice, 1985), Chocolate Armenteros, and Patato Valdès. He was also active in the popular music field with Sacha Distel, Eddie Mitchell, Henri Salvador, Michel Legrand, and Ray Charles.

Artero became a member of the Anachronic Jazz Band (1976-78), which played bop tunes in the traditional jazz style, and won the Sidney Bechet Prize. He also played in the trumpet sections of several big bands led by Claude Bolling (1974, 1987, regular member from 2004), Gérard Badini, and Paul Mauriat's Memorial Orchestra (Japan, 2009). Artero backed numerous American jazz musicians, such as Clark Terry, Dizzy Gillespie, Wild Bill Davison, Stan Getz, Lionel Hampton, Bill Coleman, Joe Newman, Cat Anderson, Illinois Jacquet, Harry Edison, Eddie Davis (1975), Sam Woodyard, Milt Buckner, Carrie Smith, Harold Ashby, Eddie Bert, Eddie Hubble, Peanuts Hucko, George Benson, Cab Calloway (1983), Buddy Tate, Bud Freeman, Benny Carter, Eddie Daniels, Carmen McRae, and Jimmy McPartland.

Today, Artero stays very active—mostly in Germany and France. He has recently played with Michel Pastre, Matthias Seuffert, JazzAscona Big Band (as lead trumpet), Warren Vaché (cornet, 2004), André Villéger (Marciac, 2004), Claude Tissendier Septet, David Paquette (Ascona, 2006), Daniel Huck (Paris, 2006), Peter Meyer-Don Vappie (2007), Artero Vaudoo (Oct. 2008), and Attilio Troiano (Ascona, 2010).

Artero has recorded many albums including 2 Bix But Not Too Bix (2002), Artero-Brel (2006, Nocturne), Patrick Artero: Vaudoo (2008, Plus Loin), and Patrick Artero-Villeger Jazz Five. He has appeared on dozens of recordings with Claude Bolling, Stan Getz, Paul Horn, Martial Solal, Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, Papa Wemba, Alpha Blondy, Henri Salvador, and others. Artero is one of the best French jazz soloists, who can play traditional jazz, as well as bop and post-bop styles.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Patrick Artero's official website: http://patrickartero.com.

Ascari, Ivano (b. Guastalla, Italy, July 4, 1958). Italian trumpeter. Ascari studied with Renzo Robuschi at the Arrigo Boito Conservatory in Parma, graduating in 1977. He also studied with Pierre Thibaud in Paris. Ascari began his career playing with the Haydn Symphony Orchestra in Bozen for fourteen years, and during the 1977-78 season played in the Theater Orchestra of Milan. He has also played in the Budapest Symphony Orchestra and the Teatro Comunale in Bologna.

Ascari has been a professor of trumpet at the F. A. Bonporti Conservatory in Trent, Italy (a branch of the Riva del Garda State Conservatory) since 1992. He has become a leading soloist of new music for trumpet, and has toured many countries including the United States, where he participated in conferences of the International Trumpet Guild. He has commissioned over one hundred works, and premiered pieces by Franco D'Andrea and Giorgio Gaslini. He received the Orpheus Award for promoting new music, and has released five solo CDs. He is the leader of The Brass Verona, which has made numerous recordings and toured the world.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ashcroft, Norman (b. 1919; d. Llandudno, North Wales, England, July 6, 2009). British cornetist, trumpeter, and conductor. Ashcroft started on tenor horn, changed to flugelhorn, and settled on cornet at age eleven. He was self-taught, having only one formal lesson from the time he started playing, and became principal cornet of the Harton Colliery Band. He also played trumpet in various local orchestras and Bach societies. In 1947, he joined the Carl Rosa Opera Company orchestra, and played for a while in the Halle Orchestra during the late 1940s. In 1950, he was appointed principal cornet of the Fairey Aviation Band, a position he held until 1967. (Phillip McCann succeeded him in 1967.)

Nearly deaf in his right ear since a boy, Ashcroft retired from cornet and trumpet playing in 1967. He became conductor of the Mirrlees Works Band in 1959, and taught for the National Youth Brass Band from 1950 to 1959. He was awarded the Insignia of Honour at the Royal Albert Hall, and is remembered as a quiet and modest man who was well respected by all of the great cornet soloists in Great Brittan.

Bibl.: "Norman Ashcroft" (www.faireybrassband.comarticles/normanaskcroftvirtuoso.html).

Ashton, Graham John (b. London, England, Jan. 23, 1956). British trumpeter and composer (acquired U.S. citizenship in 2011). Ashton studied with William Overton and James Watson at the Royal Academy of Music in London from 1974 to 1977. He then joined the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra as coprincipal trumpet from 1978 to 1981. He was hired as coprincipal trumpet by the BBC Symphony Orchestra to tour China, Korea, and Japan in 1981, and frequently played as guest principal with the London Symphony, Philharmonia, and BBC Symphony during the 1980s and '90s. He was a member of the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble from 1981 to 1984, and was director of the Albany Brass Ensemble from 1974 to 1984. In addition, he worked as a studio player in London, where he recorded soundtracks for over eighty films including Yentil, Octopussy, Never Say Never Again, Cry Freedom, The Russia House, Batman, and Dangerous Liaisons. He also recorded with celebrities such as Barbra Streisand, Phil Collins, Boy George, Van Morrison, Kate Bush, and Paul McCartney.

Ashton founded the Graham Ashton Brass Ensemble in 1992, a group that has toured and recorded numerous CDs. He was Dean of Music at the Western Australian Academy of Performing Arts from 1995 to 1998, a guest professor at the Queensland Conservatory in Australia in 1998-99, and accepted the position of Chair of Brass and Professor of Trumpet at the State University of New York at Purchase in 1999. He has been a member of the New York Chamber Brass since 2008, and is director of FIRES-New York.

An active soloist, Ashton premiered David Sawer's Concerto for Trumpet with the BBC Symphony conducted by Sir Andrew Davies, at the Royal Festival Hall, London in 1996. He also played as a soloist with the English Chamber Orchestra, London Philharmonic, New York Virtuosi, Australian Chamber Orchestra, and Irish Chamber Orchestra. He has released several CDs including The Contemporary Trumpet (Virgin Classics), Baroque Concertos and Sonatas (Virgin Classics), and Music for Trumpet and Organ (IMP). He has recorded for Signum Classics, RCA, Virgin Classics, Koch, Nimbus, IMP, and Claves. His compositions are published exclusively by Editions BIM in Switzerland. He is a codirector of the Granite Springs Music Society, which hosts an annual international summer music festival.

Ashton and his wife Fiona Guthrie have two daughters—Isobella (b. 1989) and Madeleine (b. 1991). He enjoys fine food and wine, and is an avid art fan, especially for the paintings of Picasso, Hopper, Matisse, and Dali.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Graham Ashton's official website: www.grahamashton.com; personal interview, Oct. 2, 2011.

Assunto, Frank [Joseph] (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Jan. 29, 1932; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Feb. 25, 1974). American trumpeter. Born into a musical family, Frank Assunto learned to play the trumpet from his father, Papa Jac Assunto, a professional banjo and trombone player. Frank played in the Redemptorist High School Marching Band, and at age thirteen jammed with George Lewis at Mama Lou's. Frank and his older brother Fred (a trombonist) formed the Basin Street Five while in high school, and began working at various clubs. In January of 1949, they formed the Junior Dixie Band (with Pete Fountain), and won the Horace Heidt talent show that allowed them to tour with Heidt for two weeks. They then renamed the group the Dukes of Dixieland, and began a forty-four-month run at the Famous Door in New Orleans. Their first recordings were in 1951 for the Band Wagon, Imperial, and Okey labels.

In 1955, the Dukes received a boost when both their father Jac and clarinetist Pete Fountain joined them. They recorded fourteen albums for the Audio Fidelity label between 1956 and 1960, two of which included Louis Armstrong (1959 and 1960). Their fame would grow even more when they recorded six albums for Columbia between 1961 and 1964. Frank Assunto was an excellent leader of the group. His trumpet solos were exciting, and his beautiful tone and good vocals were a highlight of the group.

Frank's brother Fred developed cancer in 1965, and had to drop out of the group, passing away in 1966. It was during these years that the group made their last recordings (Decca label), but the group had lost some of its musical punch. Frank kept the group going until he developed cancer in 1974, and died at the age of forty-two. The Dukes of Dixieland name is still used today, but by a completely different group of lesser interest. Some of the original group's best albums include Struttin' at the World's Fair (Columbia), Now Hear This (Columbia), and Breakin' It Up on Broadway (Columbia).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Asté, [John Asbury] Jean-Hilaire (b. c1775; d. c1840). French designer and manufacturer. Asté, also known as Halary, established his shop in Paris in 1804. Having seen a public demonstration of Haliday's keyed bugle in Ireland, he set out to build a family of keyed brass instruments. He submitted such instruments to the Académie des Beaux-Arts in 1817, and was officially granted a French patent for them in 1821. He was commissioned by Grand Duke Konstantin of Russia to build a keyed bugle, and was awarded a medal by the Athenée des Arts. Asté's most important contribution was his invention of the bass ophicléide, a keyed bass bugle in bassoon form. This instrument was the precursor of the modern tuba. His instruments were adopted by the Royal Guard in 1823.

Asté was a music professor in Paris, and served as a committee member with other important instrument designers and manufacturers given the task of reorganizing the instrumentation of French army bands. He was the first maker to successfully apply valves to the trumpet, although his early designs only incorporated two valves instead of the usual three as seen today. In 1835, he introduced the disc-valve (plaques mobiles). His company was sold to Jean Louis Antoine in 1824, and was renamed Antoine dit Halary (or Halari).

Bibl.: Dudgeon, Ralph T. The Keyed Trumpet (Second Edition) (The Scarecrow Press); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); "Halary" (www.horn-u-copia.net).

Aszodi, Ferenc (b. Budapest, Hungary, Aug. 6, 1929; d. Los Angeles, California, July 2, 2005). Hungarian trumpeter and flugelhornist. After studying at the Franz Liszt Music Academy in Budapest, Aszodi played with the big bands of Max Greger (1956-69), James Last, Sammy Davis Jr., Rolf Hans Müller (Südwestfunk Dance Orchestra), Hans Koller, Werner Baumgartner, and Kurt Edelhagen. However, he was best known for playing lead trumpet for Ernst Mosch for nearly thirty years.

Aszodi authored the trumpet method book, Intensive Trumpet Technique (Schott). He died while visiting his son in Los Angeles.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ferenc Aszodi" (www.schott-musik.de/shop/artists/3/ferenc-aszodi).

Photo: Aszodi on far right.

Aubier, Eric (b. Paris, France, May 7, 1960). French trumpeter. Aubier grew up near Paris. He learned to play the trumpet when a friend of the family gave an old instrument to Eric and his two brothers Thierry and Francis. Eric studied with André Presle at the Aubervilliers Conservatory (1967-74). His talent was obvious from an early age, and by thirteen he passed the audition for admission to the Paris Conservatory. However, the minimum age to attend was fourteen, so he was required to wait a year. At the time of his entrance into Maurice André's trumpet class in 1974, Aubier was the youngest trumpet student ever enrolled. Within two years, he won first prizes in the annual cornet, trumpet, and chamber music competitions.

After graduating from the conservatory at age seventeen, Aubier played in the Concerts Colonne Orchestra (1976-77) before being named principal trumpet of the Paris Opera Orchestra where he stayed until 1995. He won fourth prize in the 1979 Maurice André International Trumpet Solo Competition (Paris), third prize in the Toulon International Competition (1981), and second prize in the Prague International Trumpet Competition (1987). Since the late 1980s, he has developed an impressive career and worldwide reputation as a trumpet soloist. He performed with Roger Delmotte at the International Trumpet Guild Conference (Albuquerque, 1982) and with the Paul Kuentz Orchestra (1988). He has recorded over one hundred works, and is a specialist in the French trumpet repertoire. He has recorded for labels such as Sony Classical, Arion, Pierre Vérany, Calliope, Mandela, BIS, Accord, and Universal. He has commissioned numerous works, and many compositions have been dedicated to him.

Aubier is a professor at the National Conservatory in Rueil-Malmaison. He is in demand throughout the world for concerts and master classes, and has served on numerous juries at international trumpet competitions. Competitions in Argentina and Columbia are named after him. Aubier and his wife Yuriko have three children; Charlotte, Sophie, and Arthur.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Eric Aubier, Unveiling of a Great Talent" (Brass Bulletin, Vol. 66, 1989); Eric Aubier's website (www.ericaubier.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, Dec. 19, 2012.

Audino, John ("Johnny") (b. Chicago, Illinois, 1934). American trumpeter. Audino grew up in Chicago and began playing the trumpet at age thirteen. His first lessons were with Tarquino Mazzeri (two years). During high school, he studied with bandleader Ralph Martiere (three years). Audino developed into a professional lead player at an early age, and played in the big bands of Horace Heidt and Dick Jurgens before moving to Los Angeles to play with Harry James, Gerald Wilson, Jerry Fielding, and Jack Daugherty. He also played with Charlie Barnet, Les Brown, Terry Gibbs (on the Steve Allen Show), and Bob Florence. He recorded with Billy May, Allyn Ferguson (Pictures at an Exhibition Framed in Jazz), and a Salute to Harry James with Nick Buono, Ollie Mitchell, and Bob Rolfe on trumpets.

In 1959, Audino joined the ABC staff orchestra. Five years later, he moved to the NBC studio orchestra, and was soon hired as lead trumpeter in Doc Severinsen's The Tonight Show orchestra. He held this position from 1972 until 1992 when Johnny Carson retired, although the band toured and recorded for a few more years. Audino's studio work can also be heard on numerous television programs including Charlie's Angels, Cannon, The Hollywood Palace, The Carol Burnett Show, Sonny and Cher, the Academy Awards, Andy Williams Show, and a Liza Minelli special. Always trying to improve his playing and versatility, Audino also studied with Sidney Baker, Hyrum Lammers, Vladimir Drucker, Louis Maggio, and John Clyman.

Bibl.: Hood, Boyde. "Ten Outstanding Trumpet Players in the Los Angeles Area" (Brass Bulletin, no. 41, 1983); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Auerbach, Rainer (b. Zwickau, Germany, Mar. 24, 1956). German trumpeter. Auerbach's first trumpet lessons were with Günter Haubold. He later studied with Kurt Ramm at the Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy Music School in Leipzig. From 1977 to 1979, he was principal trumpet of the Städtischen Orchestra Chemitz and the Robert Schumann Philharmonic. Since 1979, he has been principal of the Berlin State Opera orchestra.

An active teacher, Auerbach has taught at the Barenboim Academy of Music in Berlin since 1969. He has presented master classes in various countries, and in 2004 published the book, Introduction to Trumpet. One of his former students, Christian Batzdorf, is the current principal trumpet of the Staatskapelle Berlin.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Austin, James Lyle (b. Ann Arbor, Michigan, Nov. 29, 1937). American trumpeter. Austin grew up in Michigan. He attended the Eastman School of Music, where he studied with Sidney Mear from 1955 to 1960, graduating with distinction and often being featured as soloist on recordings of the Eastman Wind Ensemble. Before finishing his degree, he was offered a position in the Houston Symphony Orchestra by Maestro Leopold Stokowski, effective immediately after graduation. Austin served as principal trumpet of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, Houston Grand Opera Orchestra, and the Houston Chamber Orchestra from 1960 to 1977. He played under Leopold Stokowski, John Barbirolli, André Previn, and many others. He played the premiere of Fisher Tull's Trumpet Concerto No. 1 with the Houston Symphony Orchestra in April 1973.

Austin taught at the University of Houston from 1960 to 2009, first as an affiliate artist, and then as professor of trumpet. He cofounded the Symphonic Brass Quintet at the University of Houston, and also taught at Houston Baptist University and the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan. He currently holds the title of Professor Emeritus from the University of Houston.

Now retired, Austin lives in Houston with his wife Lynne, an attorney, and his stepson Michael; his children Mark (b. 1965) and Amy (b. 1967) reside in the greater Houston area. Austin continues to teach privately in his home studio.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "James Austin" (http://en.wikipedia.org); James Austin's official website: www.jamesaustintrumpet.com; personal interview, Nov. 29, 2010.

Autrey, Byron Lee (b. Mexia, Texas, Dec. 10, 1924). American trumpeter and cornetist. While growing up in Kermit, Texas, Autrey studied with his band director, H.H. Copeland. After graduating from Kermit High School in 1942, he went into the Navy's officer training program and earned a bachelor's degree. After his release from service in 1947, he became a junior high school band director, holding positions in several small towns in Texas. In 1948, he auditioned for the principal trumpet chair in the Houston Symphony Orchestra, but declined it because it did not pay as well as public school teaching. (The position was subsequently awarded to Armando Ghitalla.) Autrey continued teaching while playing in the Amarillo Symphony Orchestra (five years). He also studied methods classes for all instruments with Dr. William Revelli at the University of Michigan (summers of 1952 and 1953), and earned a master of music degree at West Texas State University. Throughout his career, he only took formal trumpet lessons from one man—Dean Neilson (c1950-51).

Autrey was professor of trumpet at Michigan State University from 1953 to 1990. He was solo cornet in the Leonard B. Smith Concert Band and Detroit Concert Band for nearly forty years. He was also the first salesman and clinician for Elden Benge. His insatiable quest for knowledge about the acoustics of the trumpet led to his assistance in designing trumpets for Kanstul, Getzen, Yamaha, Severinsen, and others. Zig Kanstul called Autrey "the finest in the world for mating a mouthpiece to a horn to make it play the best."

Byron and Elinor Autrey have been married since 1949, and have two children, Robert (b. 1960) and John (b. 1966). Now retired from teaching, Autrey spends most of his time adjusting and modifying trumpets in his home repair shop in Lansing, Michigan.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Byron Autrey" (www.kanstul.net/artistsClinicians.php?metaPage=ArtistsClinicians); personal interview, Apr. 25, 2011.

Autrey, Herman (b. Evergreen, Alabama, Dec. 4, 1904; d. New York, New York, June 14, 1980). American trumpeter and singer. Autrey was born into a musical family—his father and two brothers were musicians. At age five, Herman began playing his father's tuba, and at age eight he played the alto horn. He took up the trumpet at age thirteen, and began playing in local groups in the South. In 1923, Autrey moved to Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, where he performed in various theater orchestras, show bands, and territory bands. One of the bands he was in toured to Florida, and Autrey stayed there as a bandleader for a while. From Florida, he moved first to Boston, then Washington, D.C., and finally Philadelphia, where he joined George "Doc" Hyder's band (1929-32).

In 1933, Autrey moved to New York City and landed his first meaningful job as a member of Charlie Johnson's orchestra. His playing caught the attention of pianist Fats Waller, who hired Autrey in 1934. Autrey was a key player in Waller's band from 1934 to 1939, and again from 1941 to 1942. He appears on nearly all of Waller's recordings for the Victor Company (over 200 tunes) and appeared in a few short sound-films with Waller during the early 1940s. During times that Waller was away, Autrey played with Charlie Turner, Fletcher Henderson (1935), Luis Russell, and Claude Hopkins (1938 and 1940).

Autrey left Waller in 1942, and began playing with Stuff Smith, Sammy Price, and Una Mae Carlisle. He also led his own band on the West Coast in the late 1940s, touring the U.S. and Canada. Unfortunately, a serious car accident in 1954 put Autrey out of commission as a trumpeter for nearly a year. After recovering, he continued playing, and later joined Red Richards's Saints and Sinners (1965-69) that toured Europe in 1968 and 1969. He then played in Buzzy Drootin's Jazz Family (1969). By the early 1970s, Autrey was unable to maintain his once powerful tone, so he gradually began to sing (in the style of Fats Waller) more and more, until dropping the trumpet entirely. He retired during the mid 1970s, and died three years later at the age of seventy-four.

Autrey was influenced a great deal by Louis Armstrong and Fats Waller. He was known for his good sense of humor and love of life. Although he recorded hundreds of tunes, his only album as leader was Finger Poppin' on the Jezebel label. He was posthumously inducted into the Alabama Music Hall of Fame.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Herman Autrey" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Photo: Herman Autrey with the Fats Waller Band.

B

Baca, Robert J. (b. Lockport, Illinois, Jan. 3, 1958). American trumpeter. Baca grew up in Lockport, Illinois, where his father John worked at a Texaco oil refinery, and his mother Jean worked as a housewife. Robert began playing the trumpet at age eight, and while in high school, studied with Jerry Lewis. After graduating from Lockport High School in 1976, he attended Indiana University (1977-82), studying with William Adam and receiving bachelor of music education and master of music degrees.

Baca has played with the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, Minnesota Orchestra, and with celebrities such as Frank Sinatra, Buddy Rich, Tony Bennett, and Mel Tormé. He was a member of the radio ensemble for Garrison Keillor's A Prairie Home Companion national radio show, and appears regularly with Phillip Brunelles's Plymouth Music Series Orchestra. A prominent clinician and conductor at state high school and college jazz festivals, Baca has served on the executive board of the International Association of Jazz Educators, and is on the advisory board of the Edwin Franko Goldman Band. He is a member of the IAJE resource team for postsecondary pedagogy, and leads the Robert Baca Jazz Orchestra. He has been a guest soloist in China, Europe, England, and Costa Rica.

Baca has taught trumpet and jazz at the University of Wisconsin-Eau Claire since 1986, and the university's Ensemble I has won Downbeat magazine's "Best College Big Band Award" six times. He is on the faculty at "Conn-Selmer University," a summer seminar for teachers. He continues being an active freelance performer in the Minneapolis/St. Paul area, and has played over forty Broadway shows and over one hundred fifty recording sessions.

Baca and his wife Jodie, an elementary music teacher, have two children, Alec (b. 1995) and Nicole (b. 1998). His hobbies include running, skiing, snowmobiling, and driving automobiles.

Bibl.: Frink, Laurie. "ITG Profile: Robert Baca" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2006); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Robert Baca" (www.bachbrass.com); personal interview, Mar. 25, 2011.

Bach, Vincent [Vincenz Schrottenbach] (b. Baden [near Vienna], Austria, Mar. 24, 1890; d. Bronxville, New York, Jan. 8, 1976). Austrian-born American cornetist and brass instrument manufacturer. Vincent Bach is a legend in the brass world, known for manufacturing the highest quality instruments and mouthpieces since the 1920s. Bach came from a musical family. His mother played piano and was a singer, and his father played flute and was also a singer. He and his two brothers, Hans and Heinrich, played the E-flat fanfare trumpet. He began learning the violin at the age of six, and at the age of fourteen studied trumpet under Georg Stellwagen, principal trumpeter at the Vienna Opera House. Later, Bach took cornet lessons from Josef Weiss and Fritz Werner.

Bach had a gift for music and engineering and decided to major in mechanical engineering in college. After his university years, he joined the Austrian navy as an officer and engineer and was assigned to work as a construction engineer at an elevator factory in Vienna. During his free time, he played cornet in various theaters and performed numerous recitals, making more money than he earned in the military. At the end of his military service in Austria, he toured throughout Europe and Russia as a cornet soloist.

Vincent Bach moved to the United States in September 1914, when World War I broke out in Europe. He soon joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as a section player under Maestro Karl Muck. During the summer of 1915, he was a featured trumpet soloist at the San Francisco Exposition. He then moved to New York City and became a member of the world-famous Diaghilev Ballet orchestra at the Metropolitan Opera House. This orchestra made several U.S. tours. In 1917, the United States entered the war. Bach enlisted in the army and was given the position of bandleader of the 306th Field Artillery Regiment Band (1916-18).

Following his military service, Bach opened a small brass repair shop in New York City while continuing his career as a soloist in several music theaters. He began designing his own mouthpieces and, by 1919, was able to manufacture one mouthpiece per day. Many trumpet and cornet players wanted to purchase his mouthpieces, so he opened a small factory in 1922. Two years later, he began designing his own trumpets and cornets. The first V. Bach trumpet was modeled after a French Besson B-flat instrument. These, too, became quite popular, and in 1928 he began the Vincent Bach Corporation in New York City. It was at this time that he began producing tenor and bass trombones.

When Bach was a boy, he had developed a severe ear infection after swimming in a spa in Austria. By the early 1920s, he noticed that he had lost some of his hearing. His hearing loss gradually increased throughout his life. This, plus the increasing demands of his corporation, curbed his devotion to solo playing. By 1928, he was producing two or three instruments per month.

In 1925, Bach married Esther Helen Staab from Ohio. Bach and Esther were unable to conceive a child. They visited numerous hospitals and fertility clinics, but doctors were unable to determine the reasons for Esther's failure to become pregnant. In 1946, they formally adopted a daughter whom they named Nancy. At this time, Vincent was fifty-six years old, an age at which he began pondering to whom he would leave his company after his death.

Bach moved his factory to Mount Vernon, New York, in 1953, and continued working long and hard hours. He opened the business each day at 7:30 AM and oversaw all aspects of production, as well as taking on the responsibilities of sales and advertising. He was full of energy, well dressed, and an inspiration to all of his workers.

Finally deciding that he could not leave the business to his wife or daughter, Bach elected to sell the Vincent Bach Corporation to Henri and Alexandre Selmer, Inc. in October of 1961 for $750,000. The plant was moved to Elkhart, Indiana, in 1964. Although Bach no longer owned the company, he worked on designing student-model instruments such as the Bundy and the Mercedes. His hearing continued to fail, and by 1966 he was totally deaf. The corporation continued to grow, however, and by 1983 it was producing over 200,000 instruments each year.

Charles Colin invited Vincent Bach to be a featured guest at the 1975 New York Brass Conference for Scholarships. By this time, Bach's health was failing. His daughter helped him during the visit, but his deafness, poor eyesight (near total blindness), and frail body made it a difficult trip for him. Within a year, he was bound to a wheelchair.

On January 6, 1976, Bach had a stroke and was placed in the Lawrence Hospital in Bronxville, New York. He died two days later, and is buried at the Kensico Cemetery in Valhalla, New York.

Bibl.: Bach, Vincent. Embouchure and Mouthpiece Manual (V. Bach Corp., 1953); Bach, Vincent. The Art of Trumpet Playing (1916, rev. version 1969); Fladmoe, G. G. The Contributions to Brass Instrument Manufacturing of Vincent Bach, Carl Geyer, and Renold Schilke (Ed. D. thesis, Univ. of Illinois 1975); The Selmer Company. "A Tribute to Vincent Bach" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 1976); Smith, André M. "The Life and Work of Vincent Bach (né Vincenz Schrottenbach) 1890-1976: The Early Years to World War II" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1994); Smith, André M. "The Life and Work of Vincent Bach (1890-1976): 1941-1976 (and Beyond)" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1995); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Bachelder, Allen (b. Minneapolis, Minnesota, Nov. 27, 1939). American trumpeter. Bachelder studied with Stephen Chenette at the University of Minnesota, earning bachelor and master of music degrees. He then studied with Sidney Mear at the Eastman School of Music, receiving a doctor of music degree. He also studied with Vincent Cichowicz and Arnold Jacobs in Chicago. He was an active recitalist during the 1960s, performing broadcasts on National Public Radio's Music from Rochester series and on the Public Broadcasting Service (PBS). As an ensemble player, he has performed with the Rochester Philharmonic, Minnesota Orchestra, Eastman Wind Ensemble, West Virginia Symphony, Pittsburgh Opera Theatre orchestra, and for six years was principal trumpet of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra.

Bachelder served as principal trumpet of Opera Roanoke for twenty-eight years from 1965 to 1993 and principal of the Roanoke Symphony from 1978 to 1993. He also taught at the College of St. Benedict and St. John's University in Collegeville, Minnesota, from 1974 to 1977. From 1977 to 2006, he was professor of trumpet at Virginia Tech University.

Now retired and living in Harbor Beach, Michigan, Bachelder devotes time to restoring vintage British automobiles and playing in the Bill Denbrock Big Band.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

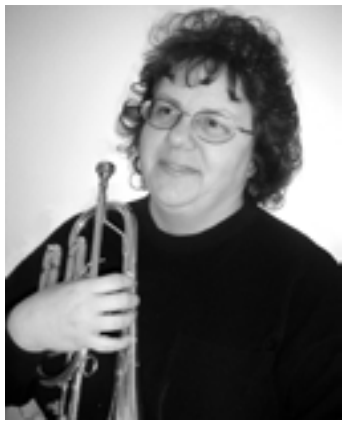
Backhaus, Patricia Dawn (b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, July 16, 1959). American trumpeter, cornetist, and conductor. Backhaus attended Carroll College (now Carroll University) in Waukesha, Wisconsin, where she earned a bachelor of arts degree in 1981. She also earned master and doctorate degrees from the University of Minnesota where she studied with David Baldwin. Her other trumpet teachers include Manny Laureano, Dennis Najoom, Mel Broiles, and Byron Autrey. She also studied conducting with Dr. Paul E. Bierley.



Backhaus has taught trumpet and band at every level, from elementary school to college. In 2003, she taught at VanderCook College of Music in Chicago, operated a successful private trumpet studio for approximately forty years, and received the Certificate of Excellence in music instruction (1997) from the Milwaukee Civic Music Association. She is a past president of Women Band Directors International, and is a past council member of the Wisconsin Music Educators Association. She is also a successful composer who has published numerous works for band.

As a trumpet and cornet player, Backhaus has performed with the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, Milwaukee Ballet orchestra, Florentine Opera, Pamiro Opera, Waukesha Symphony, and the Racine Symphony. As a conductor, she leads the Milwaukee Festival Brass, Milwaukee Festival Youth Band, Sherwood Concert Band, and Soli Deo Gloria Brass. She is also the musical director of The Studio Orchestra. Backhaus is a past president of Women Band Directors International.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Patricia Backhaus" (www.wfbrass.org/Director/director.htm).

Bacon, Louis (b. Louisville, Kentucky, Nov. 1, 1904; d. New York, New York, Dec. 8, 1967). American trumpeter and vocalist. Bacon was raised in Chicago by a widow. By age twenty-two, he began playing trumpet professionally when he joined Zinky Cohn's combo. He moved to New York City, where he played a short while with Bingie Madison before joining Lt. J. Brymnn's band in 1929. From 1930 to 1934, he was a member of Chick Webb's band, and then joined Duke Ellington's orchestra. From 1935 to 1939, he was a member of a band made up of members of the orchestras led by Louis Armstrong and Luis Russell, but he developed tuberculosis and had to leave the group. In 1939, as his health improved, he played with Benny Carter at the Savoy Ballroom.

Bacon toured Europe for two years (1940-41) with the Willie Lewis Band, and in 1942 returned to New York City to play in a band led by Cootie Williams, a former trumpet colleague in the Ellington band. He became ill again, but in the summer of 1944 was able to play with Garvin Bushell's band. During the late 1940s, he performed in a USO tour of Asia with the Jesse Stone Orchestra, but during the 1950s his trumpet career all but stopped due to his illness. Having also been a fine vocalist, he worked mostly as a vocal coach. Throughout the 1960s, his main occupation was driving an ambulance. He died of tuberculosis at the relatively young age of sixty-five.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Louis Bacon" (www.allmusic.com/artist/lewis-bacon-p53391/biography).

Baerwind, Christoph (b. Lübeck, Germany, Sept. 21, 1966). German trumpeter. Baerwind began playing trumpet at age nine, studying with Manfred Amrein. He attended college in Lübeck (1978-85), where he studied with Peter Kallensee, and then followed Kallensee to Hamburg for further study (1985-87). In 1988, he joined the Niedersächsischers Staat-theater Hanover, and in the following year became a member of the Hamburg State Opera Orchestra. He has been a member of the ensemble, German Brass, since 1992 and is also a member of the trumpet group, Spitze.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Christoph Baerwind" (www.german-brass.de).

Bagley, Ezra Mahon (b. Albany, Vermont, Jan. 3, 1853; d. Liverpool, England, July 8, 1886). American cornetist. Bagley was the seventh son of a large family of eight boys and two girls. He was a fine boy soprano who sang in various choirs. At age thirteen, he toured with Leavitt's Concert Company (later named Leavitt's Swiss Bell Ringers).

His brass-playing career began on an upright alto horn, but he soon switched to cornet. He studied with L.S. Batchelder in Boston and performed his first cornet solo at the age of sixteen. Musicians were impressed with his clear tone and ease of playing. The following year, he was a featured soloist with the well-known Germania Band of Boston conducted by D.C. Hall.

Patrick Sarsfield Gilmore engaged Bagley to play first chair cornet for his European tour of 1878, replacing Benjamin Bent who was unable to go because of his desertion from the British army some years earlier. In 1880, Bagley became the principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a position he held for four years. T.H. Rollinson said of Bagley, He was the most modest performer I ever knew, even when he was playing the exacting job of first trumpet with the Boston Symphony Orchestra. With the possible exception of Walter Emerson, he had the most facile tongue of any cornetist I ever heard around Boston in those days. It is lamentable that he had to die so young [age thirty-three], for there is little doubt that he would soon have attained an international reputation along with Emerson, Levy, Arbuckle, and others. Unlike many artists, he had a mild disposition, and professional jealousy was to him an unknown quality. He seemed to prefer remaining in the background to branching out as a specialist, probably because of his naturally retiring personality.

Bagley composed a number of marches for band, many of which were published by the Cundy-Bettoney Company. His marches are not to be confused with those, such as National Emblem March, written by his brother, Edwin E. Bagley.

Ezra Bagley took his own concert company to Europe in 1886. During the tour, he was hospitalized for nervous prostration in Liverpool, where he died shortly after.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published).

Bai, Lin (b. Qiqihaer, China, 1935). Chinese trumpeter. Bai studied at the Northeast LuXun Art and Music College from 1951 to 1954. He then studied trumpet with Imre Lubik and composition with André Szervanszky at the Franz Liszt Academy of Music in Hungary from 1955 to 1962. After returning to China, he became professor of trumpet at the Central Conservatory of Music in Beijing, and soon became chair of the winds and percussion department.

Bai has performed with the Chinese Modern Peking Opera Orchestra and has served as a judge at the 22nd Budapest International Trumpet Competition (1984) and the Barcs International Brass Chamber Music competition in Hungary. He has made exchange-teaching visits to the Debrecen Conservatory in Hungary and the Tokyo Arts University. He is best known for his brass ensemble compositions, Selected Trumpet Solos, and especially his book, Lip Flexibilities. Now retired, Lin Bai is considered to be one of the most influential teachers in China.

Bibl.: Bai, Lin. Lip Flexibilities (Balquhidder Music).

Bailey, Benny ("Bennie") [Ernest Harold] (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Aug. 13, 1925; d. Amsterdam, the Netherlands, Apr. 14, 2005). American trumpeter. As a child, Bailey studied flute and piano, but he switched to trumpet while attending Central High School in Cleveland. After graduating, he studied at the Cleveland Conservatory of Music. Bailey's professional career began in 1941 with Bull Moose Jackson (1941). He also played with Scatman Crothers (1944), Jay McShann, Lionel Hampton (Nov. 1947), Teddy Edwards, Dizzy Gillespie's big band (1947-48, including a European tour), and Lionel Hampton again (1948-51 and 1955). He left Hampton during a European tour, and after that only occasionally visited the United States to tour or record (such as making an album called Big Brass in 1960 for Candid Records).

Bailey settled in Amsterdam, the Netherlands. He was a soloist with Quincy Jones (1959-60 in the show Free & Easy), and recorded with Eric Dolphy in 1961, SFB Orchestra (late 1961), Clarke-Boland Big Band (1963, 1967-76), Lionel Hampton again (Antibes Festival, 1963), Max Greger (1963-68), Donald Byrd (1964), Boy Edgar (1968), Nathan Davis and Mal Waldron (1968), Don Menza (1968), Georges Arvanitas (1969), Les McCann (1969), Dizzy Gillespie (1970), JPJ Quartet & Guests (Ljubljana, 1971, with Hal Singer, Budd Johnson, and Oliver Jackson), Jazz Group de la Radio Suisse Romande (Ljubljiana, 1971 with Slide Hampton on trombone), International Jazz Big Band directed by Jerry Van Rooyen (Holland, 1971), Trumpet Workshop in Zurich (September 1971), Kurt Edelhagen (1972), George Gruntz (Lugano, 1972, with trumpeters Virgil Jones, Woody Shaw, Dusko Gojkovic, and Franco Ambrosetti; again in 1976, 1978), Slide Hampton (1973-74), Francy Boland (1974-76), Dexter Gordon (1974), and Jack Diéval-Roger Guérin (1975).

Bailey returned to New York for a while, and in 1980 cofounded the Upper Manhattan Jazz Society with Charlie Rouse. Bailey moved back to Amsterdam in 1983, and played in the Metropole Orchestra of the Dutch Radio and the BBC Big Band, as well as with Illinois Jacquet (Nice, 1981), Lionel Hampton (Nice, 1981, with trumpeters Roy Roman, Wallace Davenport, Barry Ries), Trumpet Gallor (Nice, 1981), Jay McShann (1982), Dizzy Gillespie (Nice, 1982), Lionel Hampton again (Nice, 1982), Gianni Basso (1983), Paris Reunion (1985-86), Grenoble Big Band directed by Andre Anelli (1986), Roger Guérin Big Band (1986), Monk Big Band directed by Don Sickler (May 1987), Tony Coe (London, 1988), his own quintet (1990's), Philippe Milanta (1994 in Marciac: Tribute to Armstrong), and the Trumpet Summit in Marciac (1995, with Clark Terry, Jon Faddis, Wynton Marsalis, Roy Hargrove, and Nicholas Payton).

Bailey made many recordings as leader for labels such as Sonet, Ego, Hot House, TBC, Freedom, Metronome, MPS, Saba, Argo, Rhino, Gemini, Laika, Storyville, and Mons. His albums include Big Brass (Candid), Grand Slam (Storyville), The Satchmo Legacy (Enja), Bennie Bailey Plays (Argo), Stockholm Sojourn (Concord), Soul Eyes: Jazz Live at the Domicile Munich (MPS), Islands (Enja). Angel Eyes (Laika), I Thought About You (Laika), Peruvian Nights (TBC), While My Lady Sleeps (Gemini), East of Isar (Ego), Serenade to a Planet (Ego), Mirrors (Freedom), and No Refill (TBC).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Benny Bailey" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Benny Bailey" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bailey, Jeffrey ("Jeff") (b. Kingsport, Tennessee, Jan. 27, 1959). American trumpeter. Bailey grew up in Church Hill, Tennessee. He began playing trumpet at age ten; his first teacher was Karl Zimmerman. After graduating from Church Hill High School in 1977, he attended the George Peabody College of Music at Vanderbilt University, studying with Patrick McGuffey, and earning a bachelor of music education degree in 1981. He also studied with William Adam and Louis Ranger.

Bailey was a member of the Nashville Contemporary Brass Quintet from 1980 to 1988. He is an adjunct professor at the Blair School of Music at Vanderbilt University, and a member of the Blair Brass Quintet. He is an active soloist and freelance artist, and frequently performs with the Chris McDonald Orchestra, Nashville Jazz Machine, and other leading groups in the Nashville area. He has been a member of The Nashville Symphony since 1983, serving in every position of the trumpet section, and is the current principal trumpet. His recording credits include working with Amy Grant, Michael W. Smith, Peter Cetera, Matchbox 20, Point of Grace, Billy Gilman, Shelby Lynne, Garth Brooks, and the Neville Brothers.

Bailey and his wife Carolyn Wann Bailey, principal second violin with The Nashville Symphony, have been married since 1999, and have two children: Preston (b. 1986) and Elizabeth (b. 1988). His hobbies include cycling, motorcycles, and raising caprines (goats).

Bibl.: "Jeff Bailey" (http://nashvillestudioorchestra.com/musiciansvocalists/trumpets/jeff-bailey); personal interview, July 29, 2012.

Photo by Amy Dickerson

Bailey, Norman ("Norm") (b. Worchester, Massachusetts, Feb. 6, 1913; d. Los Angeles, California, July 11, 1984). American trumpeter. Bailey began playing the trumpet at age thirteen. After graduating from Becker Junior College, he worked as a freelance musician before joining Freddy Martin's band as first trumpet in 1934. After seventeen years with Martin, he left music to work for Northrup Aircraft for a year, but in 1955 returned to music as a member of the Lawrence Welk Orchestra. During his years with the Welk organization (1955-73), he was often featured as a soloist in recordings and on television shows. His colleagues gave him the nickname "Iron Lips" because he practiced little, yet never seemed to become tired.

One of Bailey's daughters, Janice, was a featured guest vocalist on The Lawrence Welk Show.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Norman Bailey" (www.welkmusicalfamily.com/welkbios5.html).

Baines, Anthony C. (b. London, England, Oct. 6, 1912; d. Feb. 3, 1997). British author and organologist. Baines played bassoon and was an important collector of old musical instruments. He was one of the founding members of the Galpin Society, which since 1999 has awarded the annual Anthony Baines Memorial Award. Baines's major books include Brass Instruments: Their History and Development (1976, Faber & Faber), Bagpipes (1960), European and American Musical Instruments (1983), The Oxford Companion to Musical Instruments, and Woodwind Instruments and Their History.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Anthony C. Baines" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Baird, Frank W[illiam] (b. 1918; d. Apr. 3, 2004). American trumpeter. Baird attended the Joliet Township High School in Joliet, Illinois. His high school concert band performed at Madison Square Garden and at Radio City Music Hall in New York. His teachers were Jesse Fields and Frank Simon.

In 1936, Baird received a full scholarship to attend Western Kentucky Teachers College (now Western Kentucky University) in Bowling Green. He received his bachelor of science in music education degree in 1940, and then became the band director at North High School in Nashville, Tennessee. During World War II, he served as chief officer and director of the 231st Army Ground Forces Band, which performed shows with Bob Hope. He also played lead trumpet in a show band that backed Martha Raye, and performed in a live radio broadcast with Al Jolson.

After the service, Baird attended the University of Michigan where he studied trumpet with Haskell O. Sexton and conducting with William Revelli. He received his master of music degree in 1948, and accepted a position as instructor of high brass and associate director of bands at the University of Colorado in Boulder. His thirty-five-year career there included hosting the 1981 International Trumpet Guild Conference and presenting numerous clinics at state and regional music conventions.

Baird developed stomach ulcers during his early career, which prevented him from becoming a concert performer. Nonetheless, he was a highly effective teacher who taught several well-known students including David Hickman, W. Ritchie Clendenin, Bryan Goff, Walter Myers, Donald Bullock, and Gerald Endsley. On January 26, 2001 he was inducted into the Colorado Music Educators Association Hall of Fame.

Baird worked for decades to complete his Ph.D. degree at the University of Michigan. He finally graduated in 1983, the same year that he retired. His dissertation is titled A History and Annotated Bibliography of Tutors for Trumpet and Cornet. He was married to JoAnn Baird, a well-known music educator and former president of the Music Educators National Conference.

Bibl.: Colorado Music Educators Association (www.cmeaonline.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Baker, Bernard ("Benny") (b. Feb. 28, 1896; d. Jan. 1963). American trumpeter. Baker, who became known as the "Daddy of the Trumpeters," studied in New York with Max Schlossberg. He began his career as a studio player for various radio programs during the late 1920s and early 1930s. He worked as a staff musician for NBC during the early 1930s, and became first trumpet in Toscanini's NBC Symphony from 1937 to 1941 (he was succeeded by Harry Glantz.) Baker was a highly versatile musician who performed live broadcasts of everything from Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 to swing band music.

During Baker's career, he performed with Paul Lavalle's Band of America, Xavier Cugat's show band, the Voice of Firestone orchestra, and many other groups. He was a well-known teacher who taught Maynard Ferguson, Carl "Doc" Severinsen, Jimmy Maxwell, and Fred Pasqualoni. Severinsen said of him, He was Toscanini's first trumpet player. Benny was legendary. And the sound that he got was just incredible. When Toscanini couldn't get the fiddles to understand how he wanted something to sound, he'd ask Benny to play it for them.

Baker had a stroke during the early 1960s, and decided to stop playing and teaching. He died shortly before his sixty-seventh birthday.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Doc Severinsen Interview" (Aug./Sept., 1998 with Kansas City Jazz Ambassadors: www.uen.org/utahlink/tours/tourViewCategory.cgi?category_id=17736&tour_id=13381).

Baker, Chet [Jr.] [Chester Henry] (Yale, Oklahoma, Dec. 23, 1929; d. Amsterdam, May 13, 1988). American trumpeter. Baker was a legend of cool jazz during the 1950s and '60s. His father, Chet Sr., was a guitarist who played in country music groups. When young Chet was ten years of age, the Baker family moved to Los Angeles. Three years later, Chet (Jr.) took up the trumpet.

Baker dropped out of school at the age of sixteen, and managed to join the Army where he was stationed in Germany as a jazz musician from 1946 to 1948. After returning to Los Angeles, he occasionally performed jazz music, but rejoined the Army in 1950. This time, he was stationed in the Arizona desert. He became bored, and deserted from the military. After much difficulty, he managed to obtain a legal discharge and returned to Los Angeles in 1951.

Baker won an audition to play in Charlie Parker's group in Los Angeles (1952). In late 1952, he played in a quartet (without a traditional rhythm section) with Gerry Mulligan. Chet's solo recording of My Funny Valentine became a hit, and established his reputation as a cool jazz performer. His tone was dark, dynamics were moderate, and he played without the typical trumpet acrobatics of range and technique that many others displayed. His vocal solos were equally compelling.

When Mulligan went to prison in 1953 for drug-related charges, Baker formed his own group but he, too, became addicted to heroin in 1956, and performed inconsistently. In 1955-56, Baker's group made an extensive tour of Europe. He was arrested for drug possession, and sentenced to two months in jail. In 1959, Baker moved to Italy and stayed in Europe until 1964. He was placed in an Italian prison in 1961-62 for drug charges, and was kicked out of Germany in 1962 for the same reason.

Baker returned to the United States in 1964. Although still on heroin, he recorded five successful albums for the Prestige label during three days of sessions in 1965. In the following year, drug dealers beat him so severely that all of his teeth were knocked out. From 1966 to 1968, his trumpet playing suffered, and the albums made during that time were not successful. After years of drug usage, his vocal solos could not carry his career. He obtained a set of dentures in 1973, but it would be three years before his playing would return to normal. His comeback was sparked when Dizzy Gillespie invited him to play with him in New York.

Mulligan and Baker reunited in 1974 with great success. Baker moved to Europe in 1975, but was essentially homeless, traveling from place to place and playing and recording jazz music wherever he went. By this time, his drug usage was out of control.

Baker's death during the early morning hours of May 13, 1988 is as mysterious as his life. He "fell" out of the second story window of his hotel room in Amsterdam. He was sixty-one years old.

Some of Chet Baker's best albums are Grey December, The Chet Baker Quartet with Russ Freeman, The Route, Chet in Paris, Vol. 2*, The Italian Sessions, Live at Nick's, Chet's Choice, The Last Great Concert, Lonely Star,* and The Original Quartet with Chet Baker. He was featured in an Oscar-winning film titled Let's Get Lost in which he portrays a washed-up singer. He appears as a trumpeter in two other films, Hell's Horizon (1955) and Stolen Hours (1963).

Bibl.: Baker, Chet. As Though I Had Wings (St. Martin's Press); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Baker, Clint (b. Mountain View, California, Jan. 27, 1971). American cornetist. Baker started playing the trombone and tuba before taking up the cornet. Although basically self-taught, he considers Jim Borkenhagen to be his first jazz mentor and instructor. At age seventeen, he joined the Zenith Jazz Band. After graduating from high school, Baker took a few music courses at a community college, but dropped out in order to form his own band. Playing mostly New Orleans classic and revivalist jazz, Baker's main influences were from recordings of Willie "Bunk" Johnson and Kid Valentine.

A versatile musician, Baker is capable of playing cornet, trombone, tuba, alto sax, string bass, guitar, and drums. He has played various instruments with Jim Cullum, Caparone's Elysian Fields Orchestra, the Boilermaker Jazz Band, Rebecca Kilgore, Hal Smith's Roadrunners, Tom Sharpesteen, the Yerba Buena Stompers, The Delta Stompers, The Reynold Brothers Rhythm Rascals, the Ray Skjebred Quartet, the Hot Club of San Francisco band, the Café Borrona All-Stars, the Grand Dominion Jazz Band, Usonia Jazz, and the New Orleans Rascals. Baker has appeared at dozens of leading classic jazz festivals throughout the world. In 1998, he was voted one of the top three emerging traditional jazz musicians in the country by Mississippi Rag magazine.

Baker led his own Greasy Kid Stuff band from 1984 to 1989, and in 1990 formed Clint Baker's Gentlemen of Jazz. A few of his albums include In the Groove (Burgundy Street), Sugar Blues (Stomp Off), In the Gutter (Jazz Crusade), Ninety and Still Delivering (DanSun), Going Huge, Clint Baker's New Orleans Jazz Band featuring Jim Klippert, Tears, and Who's Foolin' Who. He is also heard in the Woody Allen film, Whatever Works (2008).

Clint Baker has taught at several San Francisco-area colleges and summer jazz camps. He is a lifetime member of the Stanford University music library, and is currently serving as staff archivist for the San Francisco Traditional Jazz Foundation.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct., 2008); "Clint Baker" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Baker, Harold J. ("Shorty") (b. St. Louis, Missouri, May 26, 1914; d. New York, New York, Nov. 8, 1966). American trumpeter. Baker started on the drums as a boy, and switched to the trumpet when a teenager. During the late 1920s, he joined his brother, trombonist Winfield Baker, in a jazz band before embarking on a series of professional concert and recording years with Fate Marable and Erskine Tate. He also played with Eddie Johnson (1932-33), Don Redman (1936-38), Duke Ellington (briefly in 1938), Teddy Wilson (1939-40), Andy Kirk (1940-42), and Mary Lou Williams (whom he married in 1940).

Baker's most important years came when he returned to the Ellington band intermittently between 1942 and 1962. His cool-style solos were a nice complement to the fiery solo work of Clark Terry and Ray Nance. Ellington said of Baker, With his phenomenal phrasing and tone control he was an immense asset. He ad-libbed hot or blues... His way of playing a melody was absolutely personal, and he had no bad notes at all.

During those times between dates with Ellington, Baker freelanced and performed with other bands such as those of Teddy Wilson (1952), Johnny Hodges (1954-55), his own quartet at the Metropole (1959), Doc Cheatham, and Bud Freeman. He also served in the military between 1944 and 1946. Ill health forced his retirement in 1964, and he died two years later on November 8, 1966 at the age of fifty-two.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Baker, Kenneth ("Kenny") (b. Withernsea, Yorkshire, England, Mar. 1, 1921; d. Chichester, West Sussex 7, Dec. 7, 1999). British trumpeter and cornetist. Baker's father played saxophone and clarinet, and his mother played the piano. Kenny began his music studies with the violin, saxophone, accordion, piano, and tenor horn (in 1933) before switching to cornet at the age of fourteen. He listened to recordings of Bix Beiderbecke, Louis Armstrong, and Bunny Berigan in his youth, and later listened to Harry James and Dizzy Gillespie. His early playing experiences were with local brass bands including the West Hull Silver Band, the Manley Orchestra, Lou Watson's orchestra, and two tours with comedian Sandy Powell.

Baker moved to London in 1936, and began playing with Lew Stone at the Palace Theatre. He then played the Jack Buchanan show, Top Hat and Tails (1940), and played with Bert Ambrose, Maurice Winnick, Tito Burns (1941), George Chisholm, and Jack Hylton. He served in the Royal Air Force from 1942-44, and played in the famous military band called The Squadronaires. After his service years, he played with Harry Hayes (1945), and became an important soloist and arranger in Ted Heath's new orchestra (April 1945 to December 1948). His most popular solo was Bakerloo Non-Stop. From late 1948 to the summer of 1949, Baker was back with Ambrose, and then he worked with Robert Farnon (December 1950 to March 1951). Baker worked as a studio musician in London during the 1950s, and was leader of his own group called Baker's Dozen that was often featured on the BBC radio show, Let's Settle for Music, airing from 1951 to 1959. The show made him a household name throughout England. Baker was also a member of the Melody Maker Allstars from 1957 to 1958, and is known for ghosting the hot trumpet solo for actress Kay Kendall in the 1954 film, Genevieve.

After the radio show run, Baker continued with other studio work and various jazz projects. In the early 1960s, he played with Jack Powell. In 1969, he recorded with Benny Goodman, and in 1971 and 1973 recorded with trombonist George Chrisholm. In 1976, he took part in a recording project that recreated many of Harry James's solos. Baker also formed the Best of British Jazz group in the same year.

Although most of Baker's career was spent playing the trumpet, he returned to the cornet during the 1980s in order to appear on two British television series, The Beiderbecke Affair and The Beiderbecke Tapes. He also participated in a fifteen-CD project to recreate the solos of Louis Armstrong. Again, Baker was an immensely popular musician in England, but his reputation did not seem to spread that much outside of the U.K.

In 1946, Baker appeared with Ted Heath in the film, The Small Back Room. He also recorded many albums for labels such as Oriole (1946), Parlophone (1951-54), Polygon (1955), Nixa (1955-58), Columbia (1959), Decca (1968), and 77 (1974). He felt that his favorite album was After Hours (Polygon, 1955).

When Harry James died in 1983, the James Foundation approached Baker about taking over the James band. He turned down the offer in order to tour with a British all-star band called The Best of British Jazz. He remained active all of his life. During his latter years, he reformed the Baker's Dozen band.

Kenny Baker received the Order of the British Empire from Queen Elizabeth II, and was three times voted "Best Trumpet Player" by the British Jazz Awards. His official biography is written by Robert Crosby in a book titled Kenny Baker: the life and times of a jazz musician (1998). After being hospitalized for three weeks because of a viral infection, Baker died in 1999 at the age of seventy-eight. He is survived by his third wife, Sue, and daughter Julie.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Voce, Steve. "Obituary: Kenny Baker" (The Independent, Dec. 11, 1999).

Baker, Sydney [Sidney Beckerman] (b. New York, New York, July 25, 1921; d. Sept. 8, 2010). American trumpeter. Baker enrolled in The Juilliard School at age fifteen. His teachers were Max Schlossberg, Ernest Williams, and William Vacchiano. In 1939, he changed his birth name of Sidney Beckerman to Sydney Baker. He played with the New Friends of Music (1938-39), Chautauqua Orchestra (1939), and joined Leopold Stokowski's All-American Youth Orchestra, touring South America (1940). Baker played in the Civic Orchestra of Chicago (1940-41), and at the age of nineteen, became the principal trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (1941), perhaps the youngest trumpeter to date to attain that position in a top tier American orchestra. During World War II, he joined the military, performing in various Army corps bands and the Air Force Symphony Orchestra (1942-43), and then rejoined the CSO as principal (1946 to 1948). He was replaced by Adolph Herseth during the summer of 1948.

Baker moved to New York City in 1948 and began working with the Radio City Music Hall Orchestra, NBC Symphony, and in various Broadway show bands and pit orchestras. He later played with the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra (1965-75). He also recorded Vincent Persichetti's The Hollow Men for MGM. During the late 1960s, Baker performed with the Goldman Band, and freelanced in New York City. He went back to college and earned a music education degree, so that he could teach at the High School of Music and Arts in New York. He taught at LaGuardia High School (1966-89), Manhattan School of Music, and New York University. Among his students were Marvin Cardo, Manuel Laureano, Ray Vega, and Egalement Cantor.

He was married to Wendy Baker for forty-six years. He died in 2010 after a long illness.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Sydney Baker" (www.stokowski.org/Principal_Musicians_Chicago Symphony.htm); "Sydney Baker" (http://cso.org/uploadFiles/8_About/Performers/Chicago_Symphony_Orchestra/Alumni/Newsletter_2010_July.pdf).

Baker, Tom [John Thomas] (b. Oakdale, California, Sept. 14, 1952; d. Breda, Holland, Oct. 23, 2001). American cornetist, trumpeter, saxophonist, clarinetist, and trombonist. Baker was a 1969 graduate of Escalon High School, and continued his education at Modesto Junior College and the University of the Pacific. He played piano as a boy, but switched to trumpet in high school. He also played tuba while in college. At age nineteen (1972), he left college and moved with his family to Sydney, Australia, where he began playing professionally at jazz clubs. He played with Dave Banham's Northside Jazzmen, Abbey Jazz Band, Ray Price Qintet [sic], and other groups. He also played tuba in Nick Boston's Colonial Jazz Band, recording two LPs.

Baker formed his first band in 1975—Tom Baker's San Francisco Jazz Band—which became quite popular in Australia. In 1979, he returned to the United States to perform for a couple of years (he left his former band in Australia, which was taken over by Paul Furniss), played with jazz giants Helen Forrest, Jay McShann, Arnett Cobb, Doc Cheatham, Cab Calloway, among others, and returned to Sydney in 1981. He formed a new group called Groove City that backed Australian tours by Oscar Peterson and Anita O'Day. He also became a member of the Morrison Brothers Big Bad Band (playing baritone sax) and played with Bob Barnard, Don Burrows, Geoff Bull (1989), Topsy Chapman (1990, Australian tour), and David Paquette (1991).

Tom Baker became an Australian citizen during the mid 1990s. From 1998, he often played with Dan Barrett. Although his favorite style of playing stemmed from early New Orleans and Chicago jazz, he was also adept at bebop and swing. New York Times jazz critic John S. Wilson described him as a "young genius." He recorded numerous CDs and LPs under his own name. His 1991 CD, Absolutely Positively, was described by Arts West magazine as "a treasure trove of timeless jazz."

A regular at the Breda Jazz Festival in Holland, Baker often toured European countries such as Germany, France, Norway, Switzerland, and Greece. He performed with Franz Jackson (1998), Leroy Jones (1998), Eddie Bo (1998), and Ed Polcer (2001). In Australia, he performed with his own groups, Chicago Seven and Swing Street Orchestra. In October of 2001, he was making a major tour of Germany and Holland with the Swingcats, when he suddenly died in a hospital in Breda (Holland) following a heart attack. He was forty-nine years old.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "The Tom Baker Story" (www.bakertrom.bravepages.com/life.html).

Balay, Guillaume (b. Crozon, France, April 30, 1871; d. Dec. 13, 1943). French cornetist. Balay won first prize in the 1894 cornet award competition at the Conservatory of Music in Paris. He was a cornet pupil of J.-J. Mellet. Balay also studied harmony and composition under Paul Vidal and Vincent d'Indy. He made his debuts on the alto horn in the Music Corp at Châteauneuf-du-Faou (1883), then served as a cornet player with the 19th Infantry Regiment, and in 1894 became head of music for the 119th Infantry Regiment in Courbevois. He replaced Papaïx as cohead at the Garde Républicaine and succeeded Gabriel Parès as the head of music of that prestigious band in 1911 (until 1927).

Balay composed numerous works for the cornet including Prelude et Ballade, Petite Pièce Concertante, Andante et Allegretto, Pièce du Concours, 15 Etudes, and a method book for cornet (1914) that has been extensively used in France. In addition, he composed works for woodwind ensemble, horn, piano, and orchestra, as well as numerous works for band, such as Armorique (Rapsodie Bretonne) and Aurore sur la Foret. Balay was a well-respected teacher, composer, and performer. He retired in 1927.

Bibl: Laplace, Michel.Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Baldauf, Rüdiger (b. Bensberg, Germany, Jan. 31, 1961). German trumpeter. Baldauf graduated from the Nicolaus Cusanus Gymnasium high school in Bergisch Gladbach in 1980. From 1981 to 1985, he studied at the Cologne Conservatory, and from 1985 to 1988 took lessons from Robert Platt and Ack Van Rooyen at the Herbert von Karajan School in Berlin. A highly versatile performer in classical and jazz styles, he has performed new music with Mauricio Kagel, as well as jazz with James Brown, Liza Minelli, Seal, Shirley Bassey, Michael Bablé, Marceo Parker, Joe Zawinul, Bob Brookmeyer, and Udo Jürgens.

Baldauf taught jazz trumpet at the Cologne Conservatory from 1989 to 1999. He was a member of the United Jazz + Rock Ensemble in 1999 and 2002, the Paul Kühn Orchestra from 1992 to 2010, and was a prominent guest soloist with many German big bands between 1992 and 2010. Since 2003, he has been with Stefan Raab's television show band, Heavytones. In 2010, Baldauf released his first solo CD, Own Style. He is also a fine composer and arranger.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Rüdiger Baldauf" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Baldwin, David (b. Alliance, Ohio, Dec. 6, 1946). American trumpeter. While growing up in Alliance, Ohio, Baldwin began playing the cornet at age twelve under the guidance of Eric Duro. After graduating from Alliance High School in 1964, he attended the Baldwin-Wallace College-Conservatory, earning a bachelor of music degree studying with Charles Gorham. From 1969 to 1971, he served in the US Military Band at West Point, and studied with Robert Nagel at Yale University where he eventually received master of music and doctor of music degrees. Additionally, he studied with Bernard Adelstein, Raymond Crisara, and William Vacchiano. While on the East Coast, he had opportunities to substitute in the New York Brass Quintet, and was a regular member of the New Haven Brass Quintet.

Baldwin began his teaching career in 1974 at the University of Minnesota. He is a member of, or has performed with the Minnesota Brass Quintet, the Bach Chamber Players of St. Paul, St. Paul Chamber Orchestra, and the Minnesota Orchestra. He is the leader of the Summit Hill Brass Quintet, a group active since 1977 with nine CDs to their credit. Among his former students are Patricia Backhaus, Philip Norris, Thomas Rolfs, and Robert Kase.

Baldwin is a well-known composer and arranger, and has published works with G. Schirmer, Shawnee Press, the Theodore Presser Company, and others. He authored the book, Lips of Steel: 22 Endurance Etudes (T. Presser), and has released several LPs and CDs of unaccompanied etudes by Théo Charlier, Marcel Bitsch, Reginaldo Caffarelli, Walter M. Smith, J. L. Small, and Louis-Antoine St. Jacome.

Baldwin is married to Dr. Christine Baldwin, a clinical psychologist. His hobby is calligraphy.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivre & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "David Baldwin" (www.music.umn.edu); "David Baldwin Interview" (http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/baldwin); personal interview, Feb. 3, 2011.

Balio, Andrew (b. Oberlin, Ohio, Oct. 1, 1965). American trumpeter Balio grew up in Madison, Wisconsin, and graduated from Madison West High School in 1983, where he played in its renowned band under John Rafoth. Balio's foundation was established by his trumpet teacher Gene Young. Balio was a member of the Wisconsin Youth Symphony Orchestra for four years. During high school, while playing in Gene Young's band (made up of area band directors), he met Adolph Herseth (who was on a fishing trip), and started taking lessons from him, which continued over the next few years. Balio spent summers at the Tanglewood Institute where he studied with Charles Schlueter (Balio's lifelong mentor) and Roger Voisin (solfege). At age fifteen, he won a concerto competition with the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, and debuted with it playing Haydn's Concerto in E-flat. The following year, he won a similar competition with the Madison Symphony Orchestra.

At age nineteen, Balio dropped out of the New England Conservatory (where he was on full scholarship) to study yogic meditation for the next four years. Instrument maker David Monette, who shared a lifelong affinity for yoga practices, offered to build a custom trumpet for Balio that reflected an Eastern approach. This motivated Balio to unexpectedly return to trumpet playing. He again briefly attended NEC in 1990, and while principal of Ben Zander's Boston Philharmonic, was invited to play principal with Orquesta Sinfonica del Estado de Mexico in Toluca, Mexico, where he also taught at the local conservatory. In 1993, while playing in a youth festival in Israel, he won the principal chair of the Israel Philharmonic, a position he held until 2001 when Yuri Temirkanov named him principal of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. In 1999, he was a guest principal of the Bergen Philharmonic in Norway (three months). He has also performed as an active soloist under such conductors as Mehta, Temirkanov, Herbig, Venzago, and Nagano, and regularly presents master classes throughout the world. In 2006, Balio established Futuresymphony.org, an online think tank devoted to examining innovative ways to make symphony orchestras financially viable, artistically enhanced, and relevant to their communities.

Balio is an Ironman triathlete who enjoys cooking and collecting old maps as a hobby.

Bibl.: Engelke, Luis. "Andrew Balio's Journey to Baltimore" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2005); "Musician Biography: Andrew Balio" (www.bsomusic.org); personal interview, May 20, 2010.

Ball, Kenneth ("Kenny") Daniel (b. Ilford, Essex, England, May 22, 1931, d. Basildon, Essex, England, Mar. 7, 2013). British trumpeter and bandleader. Ball was born on May 22, 1931 (although some sources indicate 1930) and took up the trumpet at age fifteen. During his early career, he worked as a salesman for an advertising agency and played music as a sideman on a part-time basis. He performed with Charlie Galbraith (1949-53), Eric Delaney (1953-54), Sid Phillips (1954-57), and Terry Lightfoot (1959-58). He also led a Dixieland band in England during the late 1950s, and made his first recording as leader in 1957.

Ball formed Kenny Ball and His Jazzmen in 1958, just at the start of the traditional jazz movement in Europe. The group became very popular in 1961 when their recording of Midnight in Moscow climbed to number one on the U.K. hit charts, and ultimately sold over one million copies. The band followed up with another hit, Samantha, in the same year, and released the hit So Do I in 1962. Ball's popularity prompted the City of New Orleans to award him honorary citizenship in 1963. He appeared in the films, It's Trad Dad! (1962), Live It Up (1963), and And All That Jazz (1973). A few of his best albums are Kenny Ball in Concert in the USA, Vols. 1-2 (Jazzology), The Big Ones Kenny Ball Style (Kapp), Kenny Ball Hit Parade (Pye), Brazil (Pye), Acapoluco 1922 (Pye), King of the Swingers (Fontana), and The Best of Ball, Barber and Bilk (which reached number one in the UK).

Kenny Ball's celebrity spread throughout the world in the 1960s. He and his group have toured extensively, appeared on Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show (New York, 1963), and produced fourteen "Top 50" hit singles in the U.K. He also published an autobiography titled Blowing My Own Horn (John Blake Publishing). Kenny Ball and His Jazzmen managed to remain popular even when The Beatles took England by storm in the 1960s.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Kenny Ball" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Kenny Ball's official website: www.kennyball.co.uk; "Kenny Ball" (www.rockability.nl/references/messages/kenny_ball.htm).

Ballester, Pierre (b. Annonay, France, Apr. 23, 1969). French trumpeter. Ballester began his trumpet studies with Claude Corbin at the Bourgoin-Jallieu Conservatory, and later studied with Guy Touvron at the Conservatorie National de Région de Lyon, graduating in 1990. He has been a member of the trumpet ensemble, Les Trompettes de Lyon, since its inception in 1997. The group of five trumpeters (including André Bonnici, Didier Chaffard, Ludovic Roux, and Jean-Luc Richard) has earned a reputation as one of the finest musical entertainment acts in the world.

Ballester has two children: Leopold (b. 2002) and Victoria (b. 2005). He enjoys soccer, squash, and all motor sports.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); www.lestrompettesdelyon.com; personal interview, Sept. 26, 2012.

Ballou, David ("Dave") L. (b. Warwick, Rhode Island, Apr. 22, 1963). American trumpeter, composer, and arranger. Ballou grew up in Peace Dale, Rhode Island. He began playing trumpet at age eleven, and played in the middle school band program; his first formal teacher was Julio Tancredi. After graduating from Bishop Hendricken High School in 1981, he enrolled at the University of Rhode Island (1981-83), but transferred to the Berklee College of Music in Boston, earning a bachelor of music degree with honors in 1986, having studied with Herb Pomeroy, Greg Hopkins, Jeff Stout, Greg Fritze, Phil Wilson, and Jimmy Mosher. His master of arts in music degree was earned at the University of New Hampshire in 1992 where he studied with Robert Stibler, Neil Sir, Keith Polk, Dave Sieler, Paul Verrette and Clark Terry. He also attended the Sandpoint Music Festival in Idaho during the summers of 2003 and 2005. In addition, he has studied with Paul Caputo, Laurie Frink, Tim Hagans, Arturo Sandoval, Charles Schlueter, Vincent Penzarella, Bobby Shew, Fred Sautter, Jon Faddis, Neil Balm, and Ralph Alessi.

Ballou's career includes teaching at the University of New Hampshire (teaching assistant, 1989-92), Berklee College of Music (substitute professor, 1991-94), Algonquin Regional High School (trumpet instructor, 1991-94), Lexington High School (trumpet instructor, 1991-94), Brooks Academy (trumpet instructor, 1991-94), Banff (Canada) Centre for the Arts (recording artist, summer 1992), Ankara Conservatory of Music (Turkey, 1994), Manhattan School of Music (summer workshops in Europe, 1996-97), Society for Ethical Culture School (trumpet, 1997-99), Boys & Girls Harbor (trumpet, 1997-99), New York Pops preparatory music program (trumpet, 1997-99), Banff Centre for the Arts (jazz program, 1999-2000), Georgia State University (2000), Amherst College (Massachusetts, 2001), and serving as a clinician or artist-in-residence at numerous schools, camps, and workshops. Since 2004, he has been on the faculty at Towson University in Towson, Maryland, teaching jazz trumpet, composition, improvisation, jazz arranging, jazz theory, and jazz ensembles. He also serves as coordinator of the jazz and commercial music program.

Ballou began his professional performing career at age sixteen, playing with various society jazz bands. After graduating from Berklee, he toured with the big bands of Tommy Dorsey (led by Buddy Morrow) and Woody Herman (led by Frank Tiberi). He also played with the groups Orange Then Blue and the Either/Orchestra. In 1994, he moved to New York City and settled in Brooklyn. He played numerous Broadway musicals and recorded with such artists as Joe Lovano, Sheila Jordan, Billy Hart, Dewey Redman, Michael Formanek, Andrew Hill, Maria Schneider, Wayne Shorter, and Dave Liebman. His CDs as leader include Each Part a Whole co-led with Herb Robertson (Ruby Flower), Insistence (SteepleChase), Regards (SteepleChase), Dancing Foot (SteepleChase), Rothko (SteepleChase), On This Day (SteepleChase), The Floating World (SteepleChase), Volition (SteepleChase), and Amongst Ourselves (SteepleChase). In 2009, he received an Individual Artist Award for Music Composition from the Maryland State Arts Council.

Ballou and Leise Anschuetz, a French horn player and Hoshino therapist, were married in 2006; he has two stepsons: Nathan (b. 1991) and Jeffrey Paer (b. 1993). His hobbies include bird watching, wildlife photography, and yoga.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Dave Ballou's official website: www.dave ballou.com; Dave Ballou's Curriculum Vita (www.daveballou.com); personal interview, July 22, 2012. Photo (left col.) by Russell Carson.

Balm, Neil (b. Hamilton, Ontario, Canada, June 9, 1957). Canadian trumpeter. Balm grew up in Hamilton, Ontario, where he studied with Ronald Romm and Fred Mills of the Canadian Brass. After graduating from Parkside High School in Dundas, Ontario in 1975, he attended The Juilliard School in New York City, studying with William Vacchiano and Gerard Schwarz, and earning bachelor and master of music degrees. In 1979, he toured with Peter Frampton's rock band, and in 1980 with Louie Bellson's big band. He was a member of the New York Trumpet Ensemble from 1979 to 1984, and has played with Chamber Music at the Y, Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, Canadian Brass, and the Canadian Opera Company Orchestra (coprincipal trumpet, 1989-91). Balm is currently principal of the Mostly Mozart Festival Orchestra, New York Pops, and coprincipal of the New York City Ballet Orchestra (with Raymond Mase).

As a freelance artist, Balm has performed many Broadway shows including Into the Woods, Blood Brothers, The Secret Garden, A Catered Affair, Cyrano—The Musical, and Beauty and the Beast (thirteen years). He has performed at numerous summer festivals, such as at Banff, Caramoor, Wolftrap, Great Woods, Tanglewood, Saratoga, and Ravinia. His made his solo debut at the Kennedy Center in Washington, D.C., performing Leopold Mozart's Trumpet Concerto in D, and has appeared twice as soloist on the PBS television show, Live From Lincoln Center, performing Stölzel's Trumpet Concerto, as well as appearing with soprano Renee Fleming. He has also performed Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 over one hundred times in dozens of cities across America.

Balm is a founding member and former codirector of the Music Today contemporary music ensemble. He gave the New York premiere of Ellen Taafe Zwilich's Concerto for Trumpet, and performed a recital of Karlheinz Stockhausen's music at Merkin Hall in New York. He has recorded with the New York Trumpet Ensemble, Canadian Brass, Teresa Stratas, Arlene Auger, Carolyn Blackwell, Gerard Schwarz, Eos Ensemble, and various orchestras. His movie soundtracks include Age of Innocence, Aladdin, Armageddon, She-Devil, Queen, Beauty and the Beast, Hercules, In and Out, This Boy's Life, Marvin's Room, The Cradle Will Rock, Doc Hollywood, and many others. Together with timpanist Jonathan Haas, he is owner of Gemini Music Productions, the largest employer of freelance musicians in New York City.

Balm and his wife Michele Balm, an operations manager at the New York Philharmonic, have two daughters, Nicole (b. 1994) and Julia (b. 1997). His hobbies include tennis, arranging for brass, and collecting wine.

Bibl.: Neil Balm's official website: www.neilbalm.com; personal interview, Nov. 28, 2010.

Balmain, Ian (b. Wrexham, England, 1963). British trumpeter. Balmain's first music study was with John Duckett. He played in the Wrexham Orchestral Society, and participated in the Welsh National Youth Orchestra. He won a scholarship to study with David Mason at the Royal College of Music in London, and during his second year there, was selected to perform Malcolm Arnold's Trumpet Concerto during a televised concert celebrating the centenary of the Royal College of Music in 1982.

After graduating from the Royal College of Music, Balmain freelanced in London. In 1984, he joined the Royal Liverpool Philharmonic Orchestra as coprincipal trumpet, and in 1997 became principal of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. In 2002, he was selected to play in the Superworld Symphony Orchestra in Japan, an invitational orchestra made up of many of the world's leading musicians. He accepted the position of principal of the Royal Opera House Orchestra at Covent Garden in 2003. He teaches at the Royal Academy of Music and at the Trinity College of Music, both in London.

As a top studio trumpeter, Balmain has performed on soundtracks to many films, including Gladiator, Shrek, Moulin Rouge, Milk, 25th Hour, and Topsy-Turvy. He was a featured artist during the 2002 International Trumpet Guild Conference. He recorded the Haydn Concerto with Royal Liverpool Philharmonic for the EMI label.

Bibl.: "Ian Balmain" (www.edwards-instruments.co.uk).

Balsom, Alison (b. Hertford, England, Oct. 7, 1978). British trumpeter. Balsom fell in love with the sound of the trumpet at age seven, and studied in Royston, Hertfordshire, at the Tannery Drift Primary School (with Bill Thompson), Greneway Middle School, and Meridian School. She also played in a local brass band. From age eight, she played cornet and flugelhorn in the Royston Town Band, and at age thirteen studied in the junior division of the Guildhall School of Music and Drama with John Miller. From age fifteen to eighteen, she played in the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain.

Balsom enrolled as a regular student of the Guildhall School (1997-2001) where she studied with Paul Benniston. She also studied with Antoine Curé at the Paris Conservatory (1999). Her final studies were with Håkan Hardenberger (2001-04) and John Wallace at the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama (2001). She received a 4th Prize ex-aequo and the Feeling Musique prize for quality of sound in the 4th Maurice André International Trumpet Competition in Paris (2000).

Balsom's career took off when she was taken on as a new solo artist by the Young Concert Artists Trust in England. It promoted her striking good looks and musical abilities to their fullest, booking her with numerous orchestras and as a recitalist. She signed a multi-record contract with EMI Records, which has so far led to the release of the solo albums Italian Concertos, Haydn and Hummel Concertos, Caprice, Bach, and Music for Trumpet and Organ. She has also recorded an album with Crispian-Steele Perkins titled The Fam'd Italian Masters (Hyperion). She plays with a light and precise manner, and has become the undisputed queen of the trumpet.

Balsom has received numerous honors in Britain. She was named Best Young British Performer at the Classical BRITs (2006), and in the following year was chosen Rising Artist of the Year by the Echo Klassik Awards. She was also named Female Artist of the Year at the Classical BRITs (2009). She has appeared as soloist worldwide, and has performed with the Hong Kong Philharmonic, Los Angeles Philharmonic, San Francisco Symphony, Konzerthausorchester Berlin, Royal Liverpool Philharmonic, City of Birmingham Symphony, Queensland Symphony Orchestra, Melbourne Symphony Orchestra, Brazil Symphony Orchestra, Irish Chamber Orchestra, Orchestre de Paris (2009), and many others. She is a visiting professor at the Guildhall School (since 2001), and has served as principal trumpet of the London Chamber Orchestra.

Since 2009, Balsom has been in a relationship with British conductor Edward Gardner; they have a son, Charlie (b. 2010). She enjoys yachting,

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Alison Balsom" (www.answers.com); "Alison Balsom" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Alison Balsom's official website: www.alisonbalsom.com.

Photo (lower right) by Keith Saunders.

Bamonte, David ("Dave") (b. Syracuse, New York, Jan. 23, 1960). American trumpeter. Bamonte grew up in Mattydale, New York, and began playing trumpet at the age of nine. After graduation from North Syracuse Central High School in 1978, he attended Onondaga Community College as a student of George Coble, graduating with an AAS with honors in 1981. Continuing his education at the State University of New York-Potsdam under the guidance of Gordon Mathie and Michael Tunnell, he earned a bachelor of music degree (magna cum laude) in 1984. Subsequently, Bamonte studied with Charles Schlueter at the New England Conservatory of Music, earning a master of music degree with distinction in performance two years later. Doctoral work followed at the Eastman School of Music from 1986-88, studying with Charles Geyer, and back at the New England Conservatory from 1988-89 where he again studied with Schlueter.

Bamonte's orchestral career includes over a decade of regular extra/substitute work with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops, including several tours and recordings. As a freelance musician, he also performed with the New York and Vienna Philharmonics. From October 1992 through March 1994, Bamonte held the principal trumpet position of the Israel Philharmonic under Maestro Zubin Mehta and can be heard on the conductor's recording of Mahler's Symphony No. 2. In the fall of 1994, he joined the Oregon Symphony Orchestra in Portland where he currently serves as assistant principal trumpet. Active both as performer and teacher, he has taught at Portland State University since 2007.

Bamonte maintains his home in Portland with his wife Wendy and their young daughter Emily (b. 2007). His hobbies include yoga, gardening, and a love of sports—especially Boston Red Sox baseball.

Bibl.: "David Bamonte" (http://www.orsymphony.org/bios/musicians/bio_bamonte.aspx); personal interview, Aug. 25, 2011.

Banks, Martin (b. Austin, Texas, June 21, 1936; Austin, Texas, Aug. 20, 2004). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Banks came from a musical family. He began playing trombone as a child under the guidance of his father, Buford, a trombonist who once played in a band with the young John Coltrane. When Martin discovered that his arms were not long enough to reach all of the positions on the trombone, he switched to trumpet in sixth grade. He was inspired to play the trumpet after hearing a radio broadcast of Kenny Dorham. After graduating from Anderson High School in 1953 (the same school that Kenny Dorham had attended a few years earlier), he moved to San Francisco to work as a jazz musician. While there, he earned a bachelor of arts degree at the City College of San Francisco. He moved to Los Angeles a short time later and was hired to play with the Ray Charles touring orchestra, which ended up in New York City during the mid 1950s. Banks remained in New York through the 1960s, working with the bands of Duke Ellington, Count Basie, B.B. King, James Brown, Lionel Hampton, Dizzy Gillespie, Sun Ra, Sam Rivers, and others. He also recorded with Dexter Gordon (1961), Ray Charles, Archie Shepp, Harold Land, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, and Freddie King. He was a regular member of the house band at the Apollo Theater, and also worked as a staff band member for Motown Records.

During the late 1980s, Banks returned to his hometown of Austin, Texas. Despite his considerable talent and experience, he had difficulty finding work there, and became somewhat bitter about it. He eventually worked with several bands and helped young musicians. He died of a heart attack on August 20, 2004 at the age of sixty-eight. Posthumously, he was inducted into the Texas Music Hall of Fame, and in 2005 the Austin City Council honored his memory by naming a pavilion in Givens Park after him.

Banks was married to Leslie Banks with whom he had five children.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Martin Banks" (www.austinchronicle.com/gyrobase/AMDB/Profile?oid=oid:36372); "Martin Banks" (www.legacy.com/obituaries/statesman/obituary.aspx?n=martin-banks&pid=2543411).

Baptist, Rick (b. Alamedo, California, Sept. 7, 1948). American trumpeter. Baptist was born with asthma, a respiratory condition he has had his entire life. While running a track race during elementary school, his left lung collapsed; the doctors were able to save half of his left lung, but advised him to play a wind instrument to help improve respiration. After hearing Harry James on television, Baptist decided at age ten that he wanted to play the trumpet. His early teachers were Juanito Silva, Leo DeMers, and Victor Kress. Baptist was attracted to the trumpet immediately, and at age twelve was playing with a local Latin band called The Pan Americans. At age fifteen, he substituted with the San Francisco Symphony and the Oakland Symphony Orchestra. His career began in 1968 at age twenty when he played in a casino band for pop singer Bobby Darin in Reno, Nevada.

Baptist moved to Las Vegas in 1971. He played in several relief bands, eventually performing six nights per week in six different hotel-casino orchestras. He kept this pace up until November of 1979, when he moved to Los Angeles to work in the movie and television industries. During the past thirty years, Baptist has been one of the top studio players in the world, having recorded soundtracks for over one thousand films and one thousand television shows, and having played lead trumpet for the Academy Awards (twenty-two years) and Emmy Awards (eleven years) television specials. He has recorded hundreds of albums supporting celebrity musicians, over fifty of which have become Gold or Platinum CDs. A few of the films he has played for are The Bourne Supremacy, Bubble Boy, Eight Legged Freaks, Rocky Balboa, Rush Hour 2, Superman Returns, and XXX. Baptist has also done fine jazz work with Bob Florence, Mercer Ellington, Pat Longo, Gerald Wilson, and Les Hooper.

In his spare time, Baptist enjoys playing golf. He is also an avid antique collector.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Rick Baptist" (www.r-o-d-d-y-t-r-u-m-p-e-t.cc/baptist.html).

Bär, Bernhard (b. Egg, Vorarlberg, Austria, Jan. 5, 1974). Austrian trumpeter. Bär's father and brother are trumpeters. He studied with Lothar Hilbrand at the Vorarlberger Landeskonservatorium in Feldkirch, and with Hans Gansch at the Mozarteum in Salzburg. Since 2001, he has been principal trumpet of the Bruckner Orchestra in Linz (replacing Josef Eidenberger) and has performed trumpet and organ concerts with Elisabeth Zawadke. He has also occasionally performed with the ensemble, Pro Brass. He is the trumpet professor at the conservatory in Linz, and is a skilled player of the natural (valveless) trumpet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Baranger, Louise (b. Hollywood, California, Mar. 30, 1958). American trumpeter. While growing up in Southern California, Baranger attended Saddleback College where she studied with Harold "Pappy" Mitchell and Uan Rasey. Her jazz mentor was Bobby Shew, with whom she studied from 1975 to 1981. Classical studies were with William Vacchiano in New York City from 1995 to 1996.

Baranger joined the Harry James Orchestra in 1982, and played with it until James died in 1983. She then performed in Las Vegas with the show, Sugar. She also played with the Nelson Riddle Orchestra and Ray Anthony's band. Moving to Los Angeles, she was active during the 1980s and early 90s with the Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey band, Los Angeles Rams Band, Disneyland Big Band, big band for the Olympic Jazz Festival in 1984 (led by Shelly Manne and Louie Bellson), and Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show band.

As a studio player, Baranger recorded soundtracks for television shows such as Dallas, Falcon Crest, The Flash, and Brain Donors, in addition to specials for Steve Allen and Bobby Vinton. Her film credits include Mickey and Maude, Dream for an Insomniac, and For the Boys. She can also be heard in music videos for Joe Cocker, Bobby Womack, the Pat Lingo Big Band, Holly Near, Kit McClure, and the Ladd McIntosh Big Band. She has also backed celebrity artists such as Sammy Davis, Jr., Steve Allen, George Burns, Clark Terry, Vic

Damone, Bob Hope, Peggy Lee, Candice Bergen, Dionne Warwick, Joan Rivers, and Milton Berle. She has performed with J. J. Johnson, Plas Johnson, Buddy Collette, Barney Kessel, Mel Powell, Alan

Broadbent, and Angeles Brass (a female quintet with Marissa Benedict, trumpet). Baranger also appeared as a guest artist at the 1989, 2000, and 2010 International Trumpet Guild Conferences..

Baranger moved to New York in the mid 90s. She played numerous Broadway shows including Carousel, Ragtime, and Les Miserables. She also performed at Carnegie Hall with John Pizzarelli, and with Skitch Henderson's New York Pops orchestra (1996). In 1999, she was a featured soloist during a Sammy Nestico seminar with the Cleveland Jazz Orchestra, and at the New York Brass Conference For Scholarships.

Summit Records released Trumpeter's Prayer, a Baranger CD, which has received critical acclaim. She has also recorded for various labels with Bobby Womack, Holly Near, the Ladd McIntosh Big Band, the Stan Kenton Alumni Tribute Band, and with her own nine-piece band.

Baranger was married to trumpeter Fred Mills (1935-2009) from 1991 to 2000. After divorcing him, she performed with her band, as well as toured with vocalist Jeannie Dennis in a tribute show to Harry James called Trumpet Blues, the Life and Music of Harry James. After Mills's death, Baranger produced a tribute to Mills CD set titled To Fred With Love that featured numerous celebrity trumpeters.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Louise Baranger official website: www.trumpetblues.com.

Baratto, Paolo (b. Untersiggenthal, Switzerland, Oct. 30, 1926; d. Mar. 2008). Swiss trumpeter and composer. Baratto began playing trumpet at age seven under the guidance of his father, Alois. He studied with Paul Spörri before attending the Zurich Conservatory from 1941 to 1943. While a student, he subbed with the Zurich Tonhalle and Opera orchestras. From 1943 to 1953, he was principal trumpet of the Swiss-Italian Radio Orchestra, and from 1943 to 1961 was also a member of the Swiss Festival Orchestra in Lucerne. He became a band conductor, and played with the Tonhalle Orchestra from 1956 to 1983.

Baratto was a prominent composer who penned 168 works, most of which were for trumpet and piano or organ. Several of his works for trumpet are published by Editions BIM in Switzerland.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Paolo Barletto" (www.editions-bim.com/composers/baratto-paolo).

Barbara, Benny (b. Buenos Aires, Argentina, May 15, 1922). Argentine trumpeter and bandleader. A handsome and charismatic soloist who played in the pop style, Barbara was a guest on many radio and television shows including The Ed Sullivan Show, The Jackie Gleason Show, and the Jerry Lewis Muscular Dystrophy Benefit Gala. He performed throughout the world in countries such as Argentina, Germany, Cuba, United States, and Canada. His playing combined the full, rich tone and lyric style of Ray Anthony with the technical skills of the legendary soloist Rafael Méndez, who was his friend and for whom he would sometimes substitute during concerts when Méndez was ill. He performed at Radio City Music Hall in New York, and was invited to perform at the United Nations in Washington, D.C.

Barbara wrote a method book, Expert Modern Trumpet, and manufactured a device called the Lip Pressure Equalizer, also known as the Lippe System. He made numerous pop recordings during the 1950s and '60s, some of which are still available on a composite CD.

Barbara, now retired, lives in Canada. Although in his late eighties, he continues to practice his trumpet every day.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Benny Barbara's official website: www.expert-trumpet.com; various discussions at www.TrumpetHerald.com.

Barber, Danny (b. Clinton, Indiana, Oct. 18, 1953). American trumpeter. While growing up in South Bend, Indiana, Barber started playing trumpet at age nine, studying mostly with his father, Andrew Barber. He began his professional career at age fifteen with the Eddie Knight Quintet and local big bands. After graduating from Clay Senior High School in 1972, he studied under William Adam at Indiana University. At age nineteen, he successfully auditioned for the US Army Jazz Ensemble at Fort Meade near Washington, D.C., and a year later assumed duties as lead trumpet. He received the Meritorious Service Award for his military service (1973-76) and, after leaving the service, moved to Chicago where he joined the Tommy Dorsey Band under the direction of Murray McCeaceran. He toured the U.S. and Canada with this organization from 1976 through 1977. Barber joined the Maynard Ferguson band (1977-79) and then freelanced in Chicago. He is currently living in Notre Dame, Indiana.

Barber has performed or recorded with numerous legends of the music world including Doc Severinsen, Clark Terry, Tony Bennett, Pete Candoli, Frank Sinatra, Frank Sinatra Jr., Kenny Rogers, Johnny Mathis, Dionne Warwick, Conte Candoli, Phil Woods, Benny Goodman, Rosemary Clooney, The Temptations, The O'Jays, Maynard Ferguson, Johnny Carson, Ray Anthony, Mel Tormé, Harry Belafonte, Ann-Margret, The Moody Blues, Tom Jones, Jon Faddis, Perry Como, and dozens of others. He has also played lead trumpet for many Broadway touring shows such as Fiddler on the Roof, Man of La Mancha, Les Misérables, Chicago, Grease, Too Hot to Handle, Annie, West Side Story, Phantom of the Opera, 42nd Street, Bye Bye Birdie, and Sunset Boulevard. He is also an active soloist, private teacher, and clinician in the Midwest area, and is currently playing with the Danny Barber JAZZ Quartet, The Dick Judson Orchestra, Chicago Jazz Orchestra, City Lights Orchestra, Danny Barber's Jazz Cats, and the Dennis Keith Band.

Danny is married to Kathleen Barber, a prospect analyst for development at the University of Notre Dame. He and his former wife Benita have a son, Jesse (b. 1988), and a daughter (Willa Lynn, b. 1991; d. 2005) who was killed by a drunk driver. His hobbies include automobiles, mechanics, outdoor activities, biking, and running.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Danny Barber" (www.bachbrass.com/artists/profile.php?pic2=1&aid=35); Danny Barber's official website: www.dannybarber.com; personal interview, May 22, 2012; personal interview, June 18, 2012. Photo credit: Portrait by Gary Mester, Master Photographer.

Barclay, John (b. Manchester, England, c1960). British trumpeter. As soon as Barclay arrived in London at the age of nineteen, he became one of that nation's top trumpeters. He started his career as lead trumpet in the BBC Radio Big Band and principal trumpet of the National Philharmonic. Much of his career during the past thirty years has been devoted to studio work and performing as a backup musician with celebrity artists such as Elton John, Phil Collins, Dave Brubeck, The Moody Blues, The Spice Girls, Paul McCartney, and Tom Jones. He has performed live with numerous groups including Sting, James Last Orchestra, Jack Sharpe Big Band, Dankworth Generation Band, and the Stan Tracy Big Band, and musicians including Ray Charles, Mike Gibbs, Kenny Wheeler, Natalie Cole, Dudley Moore, Nancy Wilson, Sheena Easton, Andrew Lloyd-Webber, Billy Byers, Michel Legrand, and Mel Tormé. Film credits include Supergirl, 13th Warrior, Gods & Generals, Total Recall, Basic Instinct, Highlander, Tombstone, Mission Impossible, The Saint, Superman, Evita, The Odyssey, Rugrats in Paris, The Avengers, Stargate, The Mummy 1 and 2, Lost in Space, Sleepy Hollow, Frankenstein, and the last six James Bond movies.

An active pit orchestra lead trumpeter, Barclay has performed Broadway shows in London for City of Angels, Jesus Christ Superstar, Witches of Eastwick, Kiss Me Kate, and Love Never Dies. He is a member of the London Brass, London Metropolitan Orchestra, and teaches jazz trumpet at the Royal College of Music and the Royal Academy of Music. His hobby is photography.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "John Barclay" (www.londonbrass.net/playerdetails.php?id=2).

Barelli, Aimé (b. Loda de Lantosque, France, May 1, 1917; d. Monte Carlo, Monaco, July 13, 1995). French trumpeter. Although not well known in the United States, Barelli was one of the top jazz trumpeters during the 1940s and '50s. His swing style was similar to that of Louis Armstrong and Harry James.

Barelli began learning drums under a Mr. Simon, later switching to valve trombone, alto horn, and flugelhorn. He took trumpet lessons from Mr. Gauthier. In Paris, he received information about breath control from the great trombonist Guy Paquinet (1940). Barelli made his debuts in dance bands led by Mr. Simon, then the accordionist Rosconi (1933). In 1935, Barelli was a professional working at the Savoy in Nice. A year later, he jammed with Big Boy Goudie, Herman Chittison, and Benny Carter. After his army time in the Chasseurs Alpins band known as the Blue Devils (1937), he headed to Paris, with only a mouthpiece in his pocket (1940). For a time, he had to borrow Arthur Briggs's trumpet. Barelli made his Parisian debut in the orchestra of trumpet virtuoso Maurice Mouflard. He then joined (as third trumpet) the orchestra led by Raymond Legrand (father of Michel). He was the chorus man playing alongside Raymond Sabarich and Al Piguilem on trumpets, and Guy Paquinet on trombone.

Barelli was with the bands of Fred Adison, Raymond Wraskoff (1940-41), Hubert Rostaing (1940), Alix Combelle (1940-41), Jacques Metehen (1941), Django Reinhardt (1941), Maceo Jefferson (1943-45), and Andre Ekyan. He began to lead his own orchestra in 1941. He recorded for the Swing label from 1940 to 1943, and also on various other labels as a sideman to Charles Trenet (miraculous trumpet break on Verlaine in 1941 which made him an instant star) and his wife, singer Lucienne Delyle (from 1943). From 1943 to 1946, he also headed his own jazz nonet, consisting of trumpet, five saxophones, and rhythm section. This group recorded for the Pathé label, but the recordings were not well distributed outside of France. In 1947-48, he led an orchestra at the Ambassadors in Paris. Dizzy Gillespie (in town with his own big band) sat in with Barelli. Gillespie loved Barelli's playing, and from 1948-49 Barelli was under Dizzy's spell.

Barelli performed with many famous jazz musicians including Rex Stewart (1949), Charlie Parker, Miles Davis, and Sidney Bechet (1949 at the Paris Jazz Festival). He was also a guest soloist with the Wal-Berg Orchestra, and extensively recorded on the Pathé label from 1943 to 1958. He also recorded several film soundtracks.

In 1966, Barelli moved to Monte Carlo, and worked as a bandleader for many years at the Sporting Club, backing stars such as

Frank Sinatra, Maurice Chevalier, Benny Goodman, Lena Horne, Billy Eckstine, Danny Kaye, Ella Fitzgerald, Nat King Cole, Paul Anka, Peggy Lee, Harry Belafonte, Andy Williams, Tony Bennett, Sarah Vaughan, Jerry Lewis, Johnny Mathis, and dozens more. His daughter Minouche was a good singer, and Aimé Barelli was himself an able singer.

Barelli was a model in the jazz-oriented popular trumpet style. His smooth playing with a beautiful tone (at times with a Robinson mute) was very impressive. Most of the French trumpeters of high standard such as Fred Gérard, Roger Guérin, and Pierre Dutour list Aimé Barelli among the greatest trumpet players of all times. He died in Monte Carlo in 1995 at the age of seventy-eight.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Laplace, Michel. "Aimé Barelli" (Brass Bulletin, no. 50, 1985); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extracts on mp3, video clip, discography; Oct. 2008).

Barker, Guy (b. London, England, Dec. 26, 1957). British trumpeter. Barker began playing the trumpet at age twelve, and a year later became a member of Bill Ashton's National Youth Jazz Orchestra. He continued playing in the group for another nine years. At age seventeen, Barker was given the opportunity to sit in with Clark Terry and to take a few lessons from the master. He attended the Royal College of Music in 1975, but left school before finishing his degree in order to play professionally. At age twenty-one, Barker went to New York City for six weeks where he worked with many leading musicians. There, he even formed his own band that toured England for a short while.

During Barker's career, he performed with John Dankworth (from 1979), Mike Westbrook, Chris Hunter, Stan Tracey, Gil Evans, Carla Bley, Keith Nichols (late 1980s), Julian Joseph, Lena Horne, Bobby Watson, and participated in Ornette Coleman's Skies of America tour. Barker also backed numerous pop and jazz singers including Sting, Frank Sinatra, Liza Minnelli, Cleo Laine, Mel Tormé, George Benson, and Grace Jones.

As a jazz soloist, Guy Barker has recorded for labels such as Miles Music, Spotlite, Portraits Plus, and Verve. His albums include Isn't It?, Into the Blue, What Love Is, The Talented Mr. Ripley (soundtrack), Timeswing, Soundtrack, and The Amadeus Project. He was given the "Best Trumpeter" award during the British Jazz Awards in 1994 and 1996. Barker is also a fine classical soloist who has performed with the London Symphony Orchestra and the Hong Kong Philharmonic (the latter, performing a trumpet concerto written for him by Jamshied Sharifi).

Since 1996, Barker has led the Guy Barker Quintet. He has also taught at the Royal College of Music since 1994, and is active throughout the world as a concert artist and clinician.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Guy Barker" (www.gmn.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

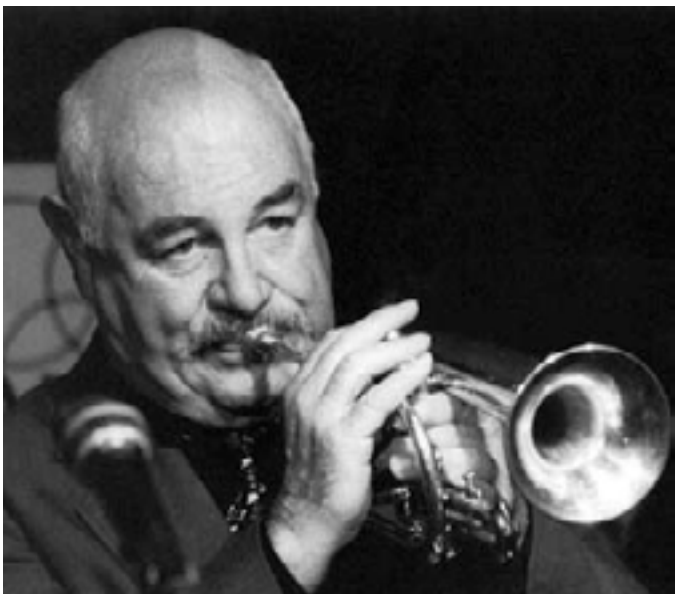
Barmaz, Claude-Alain (b. Vétroz, Switzerland, 1976). Swiss trumpeter. Barmaz began playing the cornet at age five under the direction of his father, an excellent amateur musician. At age ten, he began taking lessons from Géo-Pierre Moren. In 1995, he won a second prize at the Erroll Mason Memorial Trust Competition. He studied with Gérard Métrailler, and received his professional certificate from the Geneva Conservatory in May of 1996. He recorded his first CD, Kamikaze, with the 13 Etoiles Brass Band in the same year.

Barmaz won First Prize in the 1998 Concours d'Exécution Musicales of Riddes (Valais, Switzerland), and in January of 1999 (while still a student at the conservatory) won a position with the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande. He graduated in June of 2000. In January of that year, he also won a prize (Honorable Mention) at the Maurice André Competition in Paris. Since September of 2001, he has been the trumpet professor at the Sion Conservatory of Music in the Valais region of Switzerland. He became the conductor of the Concordia (Nendaz) Brass Band in October 2007. Barmaz made a recording under his own name with pianist/organist Lionel Monnet.

Bibl.: Hardin, Anne. "Orchestra de la Suisse Romande Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2010).

Barnard, Robert ("Bob") Graeme (b. Melbourne, Australia, Nov. 24, 1933). Australian trumpeter and bandleader. Barnard comes from a musical family. He began taking cornet lessons at age eleven, and performed in a local brass band. At age fourteen, he joined his parents' dance band. His early influences were Louis Armstrong, Bobby Hackett, Jack Teagarden, and Bunny Berigan.



Barnard joined his older brother Lew's band in 1947, making his recording debut with the band in that same year. He continued with the group until 1955. In 1962, he moved to Sydney and worked with Graeme Bell (1962-67), and as a studio player (1967-77). He has performed or recorded with Peanuts Hucko, Ralph Sutton, Wild Bill Davison, Warren Vaché, Jim Cullum, Milt Hinton, John Sangster, Bud Freeman, and many others. Among his albums as leader are New York Notes (Sackville), What's New (Sackville), Bob Barnard and Friends (Swaggie), Drop Me Off At Harlem (Wea), and The Joint is Jumpin' (La Brown).

Bob Barnard is considered to be one of Australia's finest traditional jazz performers. He has toured the world many times, and has received the Order of Australia (1990), Queen Elizabeth II Jubilee Medal (1977), Advance Australia (1991), Jazz Performer of the Year by the Australian Music & Entertainment Awards (1993, 1997), Critics Award at the Gold Coast International Jazz Festival (1990, 1991, 1992), and is an Honorary Life Member of the Victorian Jazz Archive (2008). He was also inducted into the Australian Hall of Fame in 1993.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books), "Bob Barnard" (www.dingocreek.com.au).

Barnhart, William Terrell ("Scotty") (b. Atlanta, Georgia, Oct. 27, 1964). American trumpeter. Barnhart took up the trumpet at age nine, showed excellent progress, and became hooked on jazz when his parents took him to hear a Count Basie Orchestra concert at the age of twelve. As a teen, he played in numerous all-star youth groups, as well as becoming first trumpet and soloist with the Atlanta Falcon Band (National Football League) and the Atlanta Community Orchestra. However, problems resulting from oral surgery caused him to lose bone material and several teeth. After a second surgery, he was able to play again about eleven months later.

Barnhart received a Count Basie Scholarship and an Alberta Williams King Scholarship for Music, making it possible to attend Florida A&M University in Tallahassee. After receiving a music education degree, he joined Marcus Roberts's band (1989). Barnhart freelanced for a few years, and played with Delfeayo Marsalis (1992) before joining Count Basie's orchestra in 1993. The band toured the world and made several recordings, two of which received Grammy awards. Barnhart has also performed or recorded with Frank Sinatra, Clark Terry, Tito Puente, Freddie Hubbard, Diana Kroll, Ray Charles, Tony Bennett, Wynton Marsalis, Lou Rawls, Nancy Wilson, The Mills Brothers, Jon Faddis, Natalie Cole, Harry "Sweets" Edison, Melissa Walker, Nat Adderley, and the Frank Capp Orchestra.

Scotty Barnhart, who lives in Los Angeles, is on the faculty at Florida State University where he teaches jazz. He leads his own quintet (or sextet) that has made several recordings such as Say It Plain (Unity Music) and Deep in the Shed (Unity Music). Barnhart is a recognized authority on the history of jazz trumpet, and has published the 2005 text, The World of Jazz Trumpet—A Comprehensive History and Practical Philosophy (Hal Leonard). He is also a composer and arranger. Of him, Wynton Marsalis said, "[Barnhart has] one of the fattest and prettiest trumpet tones I have ever heard." Scotty Barnhart was a featured artist during the 2003 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Ft. Worth, Texas.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Scotty Barnhart" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Scotty Barnhart's official website: www.scottybarnhart.com.

Barone, Gary Anthony (b. Detroit, Michigan, Dec. 12, 1941). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Barone grew up mostly in Cleveland, Ohio. He began playing the trumpet at age six, studying with his father, Joe Barone, a professional big band trumpeter. Gigging at night as a jazz trumpet player, Gary attended Purdue University in 1959 as an engineering student, but graduated from Michigan State University with an economics degree in 1964. In 1965, he moved to Southern California and enrolled at San Fernando Valley State College (1965-67) while performing with San Kenton's Los Angeles Neophonic Orchestra. He also played with the bands of Gerald Wilson (1967-69), Mike Barone (his older brother and trombonist, 1967-70), Bud Shank (1968-69), Shelly Manne (1969-73), Terry Gibbs (1967), Bill Holman, and others.

During the 1970s and most of the 1980s, Barone worked as a freelance musician in Los Angeles, performing film music by Henry Mancini, Lalo Schifrin, John Williams, Michel Legrand, Dave Grusin, and others. He also played in the bands of Frank Zappa (1972; 2002 tour), Willie Bobo (1974), Frank Strazzeri (c1975), and with other groups such as Supersax and Canned Heat. His television credits include New York, New York, Starsky and Hutch, and Barney Miller. He also played lead trumpet in his brother's band during the late 1970s. In the mid 1980s, he took composition and arranging lessons from Dick Grove.

Barone settled in Portland, Oregon, in 1988 where he taught music classes at Mount Hood Community College, and earned a master's degree in economics from Portland State University while serving on the music faculty there. He became a member of Space

Band, and recorded several CDs with it including Gary and the Space Band. Other Barone CDs are The Gary Barone Quintet, Barone Brothers: Blues and Other Happy Moments, Open Fields, Live at the Bird's Eye, and Gary Barone and Ro Kuijpers: Ta Ta Boom!

In 1995, Barone accepted a teaching position at a jazz and rock school in Freiburg, Germany, where he continues to live and work. He published a trumpet book titled Modern Studies.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Gary Barone" (www.jazz.com/encyclopedia/barone-gary-anthony).

Barrett, Darren [Winston] (b. Manchester, England, June 19, 1967). British trumpeter. Although born in England, Barrett grew up in Toronto, Canada. He was born to Jamaican parents; his father was an auto mechanic and part-time jazz saxophonist. Darren began playing the trumpet in seventh grade after hearing his father's recording of Miles Davis playing 'Round About Midnight. His first trumpet teacher was Dan Moyer. During high school he studied with Ron Botnick.

After graduating from high school, Barrett attended Humber College in Toronto for one year, studying with Reinard Schmidt and Don Johnson. He then won a four-year scholarship to the Berklee College of Music in Boston (1986-90) and studied with William Fielder, William Vacchiano, and Joseph Alessi. After graduating in 1990, he attended Queens College of New York where he received master of arts and master of science degrees (Donald Byrd, teacher). He later earned an Artist's Diploma from the Thelonious Monk Institute of Jazz Performance where he participated in master classes with Clark Terry and Wynton Marsalis. Wanting to become an educator, Barrett started a PhD at the Copland School of Music at Columbia University, studying composition with Donald Byrd and Jimmy Heath. He also took classical lessons from Charles Schlueter in Boston.

Barrett won first prize in the prestigious Thelonious Monk International Jazz Competition in 1997. Prior to this, he performed with Queen's College Orchestra (1991-94), Antonio Hart (1990-95), Elvin Jones, Slide Hampton (1993), Roy Hargrove (1995), Jackie McLean (1998), Robin Eubanks, Steve Turre, and Marcus Miller. He released his first solo album, First One Up, in 1999 (J Curve). He followed up with a second album, Deelings (J Curve), in 2001. He also performed or recorded with Elvin Jones, Jackie McLean, Jimmy Greene, Barbara Dennerlein, Pamela Hines, and Antonio Hart. Later albums include The Attack of Wren and Wrenaissance, Vol. 1 (2004). Barrett is also a composer, and is currently an associate professor at the Berklee College of Music.

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "The Education of Darren Barrett" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2003); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Darren Barrett" (www.allabountjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Barrie, Bruce C. (b. Bayshore, New York, Apr. 10, 1954). American trumpeter. Barrie grew up in Patchogue (Long Island), New York. He began playing the trumpet at age nine; his first private teachers were Joel Sands (one year) and the great cornetist James Burke (five years). He received a bachelor of music degree from the Philadelphia Musical Academy (now the University of the Arts) in 1976, a master of music degree from West Chester University (Pennsylvania) in 2003, and a doctor of musical arts from the University of Colorado-Boulder in 2008. His teachers were Samuel Krauss, Mel Broiles, Frank Kaderabek, Terry Sawchuk, and Allan Dean.

Barrie was a founding member of The Chestnut Brass Company in 1977, a quintet that performs on dozens of antique instruments including cornetto, natural trumpet, keyed bugle, saxhorn, serpent, and sackbut. The group has toured extensively, and released nearly a dozen CDs on labels such as CBS, Naxos, Newport, Sony Classical, Albany, Crystal, and Musical Heritage Society. The Newport recording of Hornsmoke received a Grammy Award in 2000 for best "Classical Crossover" album. Barrie has also recorded with the Philadelphia Virtuosi, Boulder Brass, Anthony Newman, Sarum Consort, and the Ama Deus Ensemble.

Barrie has taught at Temple University (1987-2002), West Chester University (Spring 2002), has given master classes throughout the country, and has served as a judge for the Jeju International Brass Competition (South Korea) several times. He has also performed with the Colorado Symphony Orchestra, Colorado Ballet Orchestra, Boulder Philharmonic, Mount Alto Silent Movie Orchestra, Colorado Music Festival Orchestra, Denver Brass, Ama Deus Ensemble, Kansas City Symphony, Peter Britt Festival Orchestra, Concerto Soloists of Philadelphia, Reading Symphony Orchestra, Pennsylvania Pro Musica, and the Pro Musica Colorado Chamber Orchestra. He can be heard on soundtracks for several PBS documentaries.

Barrie is married to Marian Hesse, who plays horn in The Chestnut Brass Company and teaches horn at the University of Northern Colorado in Greeley. His hobbies include golf, cooking, collecting historical brass instruments, and making functional pottery.

Bibl.: "Bruce Barrie" (www.chestnutbrass.com/artist.php?view=bio&bid=1821); personal interview, Mar. 15, 2011.

Bartels, Justin (b. Fort Wayne, Indiana, Aug. 11, 1978). American trumpeter. Bartels grew up in Birmingham, Alabama, and began playing the trumpet at age twelve. His early teachers were Joseph Ardovino and John McElroy. After graduating from Pelham High School in 1996, he attended the University of Alabama for one year, continued his degree at the University of Cincinnati (1997-2000), and finally completed his bachelor of music degree under Marie Speziale at Indiana University (2000-03). He became a member of the New World Symphony in South Beach, Florida (2003-06), was principal trumpet of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra in Ohio (2007-08), and played with the Augusta Symphony (2006-07) and the Central City Opera Orchestra (summers of 2006, 2007, and 2009-12). Since July of 2008, he has been principal trumpet of the Colorado Symphony Orchestra in Denver. He also serves as an adjunct professor at Regis University and University of Colorado in Boulder, and has taught at the University of Denver (sabbatical replacement for Alan Hood, Fall 2012). In addition, he has performed with the New York Philharmonic, Houston Symphony Orchestra, Los Angeles Philharmonic, Saint Louis Symphony, Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, Alabama Symphony Orchestra, Virginia Symphony, and the Charleston Symphony Orchestra.

Bartels is married to violinist Myroslava Bartels, a member of the Colorado Symphony Orchestra. They have a daughter, Sophia (b. 2008). His hobbies include snow skiing and following the University of Alabama football team.

Bibl.: "Justin Bartels" (http://coloradosymphony.org/meet-the-orchestra/musicians/justin-bartels); "Justin Bartels" (www.regis.edu/regis.asp?sctn=rcrc&p2=fam&p3=fac&p4=jbartels); Justin Bartels's official website: www.justinbartels.com; personal interview, Sept. 19, 2012.

Bartholomew, David ("Dave") (b. Edgard, Louisiana, Dec. 24, 1920). American trumpeter and songwriter. Known mostly for his songwriting and recordings with Antoine "Fats" Domino during the 1950s and '60s, Bartholomew is a famed trumpeter who helped define early rock and roll. His trumpet playing, big band, and composing/arranging are important parts of New Orleans music history.

Bartholomew's father, Louis Bartholomew, was a jazz tuba player and bandleader (also a hairdresser by day) who taught his son to play the tuba, but Dave soon switched to the trumpet. By age fourteen, he was touring the South with the bands of Papa Celestin, Joe Robicheaux, and Claiborne Williams. In 1939, he joined Fats Pichon's group aboard the riverboat, SS Capitol, which traveled up and down the Mississippi River between Minneapolis and New Orleans.

After touring with Jimmy Lunceford's Orchestra for six weeks, Bartholomew was drafted into the Army. During World War II, he played in an Army band and began composing and arranging. When the war ended, he returned to New Orleans where he formed his own jazz band and began recording for De Luxe Records in 1947 until the label folded. In 1949, he met Lew Chudd in Houston, and signed with Imperial Records. Chudd introduced him to singer/pianist Antoine "Fats" Domino, and they began collaborating on writing songs. Their first hit was titled The Fat Man, which sold over a million copies. During the next two decades, they recorded other hit records such as Ain't It A Shame, I'm in Love Again, Blue Monday, I'm Walkin', Valley of Tears, Blueberry Hill, My Ding-a-Ling, and Red Sails in the Sunset. Bartholomew also wrote songs for other artists: Let the Good Times Roll (Shirley & Lee), Lawdy Miss Claudy (Lloyd Price), One Night, and I Hear You Knockin' (but you can't come in) (Smiley Lewis).

Several of Bartholomew's hit songs were also recorded by other artists, including Elvis Presley, Bob Seger, Joe Cocker, The Rolling Stones, George Benson, The Thunderbirds, Elton John, Hank Williams Jr., Dave Edmunds, and Pat Boone. Altogether, his songs have sold hundreds of millions of copies. He founded his own record label, Broadmoor Records, during the mid 1960s.

Bartholomew and his band became very popular. He was known for his strict discipline (a self-proclaimed "slave driver"), and his band members were always expected to play and act professionally on and off stage. He was inducted into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame (1991), The Louisiana Music Hall of Fame, and the Songwriters Hall of Fame.

Now semiretired, Bartholomew enjoys composing and producing records for other artists. Despite his multimillionaire status, he is often seen playing trumpet with various groups at Preservation Hall in New Orleans.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Dave Bartholomew" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Dave_Bartholomew); "Dave Bartholomew" (www.allaboutjazz.com/php/musician.php?id=3668).

Bartold, Gabriel (b. Hollywood, California, Sept. 30, 1919; d. Oct. 31, 1980). American trumpeter. Bartold began playing the trumpet at age six, and at age sixteen was the conductor of the Veterans of Foreign Wars Band. He studied trumpet with Hyrum Lammers and later with Georges Mager. He played in the Meremblum Youth Orchestra before becoming principal of the National Symphony Orchestra (1942-43), Kansas City Philharmonic (1943-48), and Houston Symphony Orchestra (1948-49). He also played in the Boston Symphony Orchestra (coprincipal, 1950) and the Boston Pops Orchestra (coprincipal, 1950).

Bartold was principal trumpet and cofounder of the San Diego Symphony (1950-58). He played with the Hollywood Bowl Symphony, Glendale (California) Symphony, Los Angeles Concert Band (until September 1980) and the MGM studio orchestra. Bartold taught at Hollywood High School (1951-54). He edited five volumes of orchestral excerpt books for the International Music Company.

Bartold was a salesman for Locke Music Company in Southern California. Later, he was a recording engineer for Century Records, a service that recorded live concerts by school organizations. He was also a life insurance salesman for the John Hancock Company (1963-75), and the entertainment director for the Los Angeles Rams football team (1975-80). In 1979, he was the musical director of the Listen America Television Pageant.

Bartold and his wife Gloria were killed in an auto accident when he was sixty-one and she fifty-four.

Bibl: Bartold, Warren and Norman Bartold. "Gabe Bartold and Wife Killed in Auto Accident" (article in Overture magazine, reprinted in ITG Newsletter, May 1981); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Barton, Leland Stanford (b. Fresno, California, July 4, 1884; d. Sullivan, Illinois, Nov. 1977). American trumpeter. Barton's father Robert immigrated to America from Germany, but died when Leland was very young. Leland studied with A. F. Weldon. In 1910, he played in the theaters at Palace Music Hall in Chicago. He was principal trumpet of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra from 1916 to 1918 under Maestro Max Zach, principal of the Cleveland Orchestra during the 1924-25 season, principal of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra from 1927 to 1928, and second trumpet in the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra from 1928 to 1930 (the principal was Vladimir Drucker). During the 1930-31 season, Barton served as principal of the San Francisco Symphony, but he returned to the second position from 1931 until at least 1947. He died at the age of ninety-three.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Leland S. Barton" (www.stokwski.org/Principal_Musicians_St._Louis_Symphony.htm).

Basch, Wolfgang (b. Wiesbaden, Germany, Aug. 20, 1947). German trumpeter. Basch studied with his father, Eugen Basch, and with Heinz Zickler and Reinhold Lösch. A brilliant and prodigious soloist, he has recorded dozens of albums, concentrating on music of the Baroque and Classical eras, for labels such as BMG, RCA, Etcetera, Koch, DHM, and Decca. His Wolfgang Basch Trumpet Ensemble has recorded for Naxos.

Basch was a member of the State Theater Orchestra in Saarbrücken from 1966 to 1968, and principal trumpet of the Wuppertal Symphony Orchestra from 1968 to 1976. He has been principal of the Opera and Museum Orchestras in Frankfurt since 1975, and has served as principal of the Carmel Festival Orchestra in California since 1985.

Basch has performed as soloist at many leading festivals in Europe, including the London Bach Festival. He has been a guest soloist with the German Bach Soloists, Orpheus Chamber Orchestra in New York, Israel Chamber Orchestra, Bamberg Symphony Orchestra, Jerusalem Symphony, New World Symphony Orchestra, Berlin Radio Orchestra, and many others. He has also been associated with the Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Milan Symphony Orchestra, and Chamber Orchestra of the St. Petersburg Philharmonic.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Wolfgang Basch" (www.bachfestival.org/index.cfm/P_Wolfgang_Basch_5.html); "Wolfgang Basch" (www.orchestrazentrum.de/dozent-details/id/32/basch.html).

Bascomb, Wilbur Odell ("Dud") (b. Birmingham, Alabama, May 16, 1916; d. New York, New York, Dec. 25, 1972). American trumpeter. Bascomb came from a musical family, and was the youngest of ten children. His father was a drummer, his mother a pianist, and his brother (Paul, 1912-1986) a tenor sax player. Wilbur began playing the piano at age ten, but switched to the trumpet a little later. He and his brother played in the Alabama State Teachers College jazz band while still in high school. The group, led by trumpeter Erskine Hawkins, eventually became known as the Erskine Hawkins Orchestra.

The Bascomb brothers' careers began when they dropped out of high school to tour fulltime with Hawkins's orchestra which had broken away from its school affiliation. "Dud," as he was nicknamed by then, was an important part of the group from 1934 to 1944. They made many recordings, several of which (most famously, Tuxedo Junction, on Savoy) were instrumental in building the orchestra's reputation. However, Bascomb's finely improvised solos were thought by the public to have been played by the band's leader, Hawkins. Bascomb can be seen in the film, Deviled Hams, with Erskine Hawkins (1937).

In 1944, Wilbur and Paul Bascomb formed a sextet that enjoyed moderate success. In 1947, Dud played on two occasions with the Duke Ellington Orchestra. From 1947 to 1965, Bascomb led various combos in the New York area, and worked as a studio and Broadway pit orchestra musician. He also toured with Sam "The Man" Taylor, Earl Hines, and Buddy Tate (1968-70).

Dud Bascomb was an early influence on Dizzy Gillespie and others. He was good at using mutes, and was a skilled soloist. He also composed Country Boy, which he recorded with Hawkins's band in 1942. Bascomb was inducted into the Alabama Music Hall of Fame in 1989. His son, Wilbur Odell Jr. is a jazz bass player. The two of them performed on stage together during a 1972 television broadcast of the David Frost Show, just a short time before the trumpeter's death on Christmas Day at the age of fifty-six.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Basse, Herman (b. Goslar, Germany, Feb. 18, 1866; d. after 1937). German trumpeter. Basse studied with Julius Kosleck, and played in St. Petersburg under Anton Rubinstein. He, along with his wife Johannah and their baby daughter, immigrated to the United States in 1893. They arrived in New York City, where he began working as a trumpeter. He became a U.S. citizen in 1902. After a short time in the Pittsburgh Orchestra (1896-97), he was principal trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra and Philharmonic Society of New York (1899-1904). In 1904, he was principal of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Maestro Fritz Scheel.

Basse moved back to New York in 1905 to resume his position as principal trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, a post he held through the 1911-12 season. During the 1905-06 season, he also played in the New York Philharmonic, and was principal, then second trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra, this time under Leopold Stokowski (1914-17). In the fall of 1917, he was replaced by Harry Glantz. Basse then moved to Detroit, and played in the section of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra. He later retired to Florida.

Bibl.: www.Stokowski.org/Philadelphia_Orchestra_Musicians.htm; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Basso, Guido ("Giusto") (b. Montreal, Quebec, Canada, Sept. 27, 1937). Canadian flugelhornist. Born into a musical family, Basso was considered a musical prodigy by the age of eleven. His first lessons were with his father, but after one year he studied with Johnny Mariano, and learned to play Harry James solos by ear. At age eleven, he entered the conservatory in Montreal under Jacques Lecompete, studying for two years. Because of his age and smallness in comparison with the older students, he was nicknamed "Stubby" Basso. By age thirteen, he was playing jazz in an amateur group. During his teen years, he performed at clubs with musicians such as Al Nichols, Maury Kaye, and others.

Basso's big break occurred when he was eighteen. He toured for a short while with Vic Damone, and was later discovered by Pearl Bailey and Louis Bellson. They hired Basso immediately, and toured together for two and a half years (1957-60). Basso decided to leave the road and move to Toronto in order to make a living as a studio player. He formed his own jazz quintet that was very active throughout the 1960s. By 1968, he was a top musician in the city, serving as music director for numerous radio and television shows including Nightcap, Barris and Company, Mallets and Brass, After Hours, Bandwagon, and In the Mood. He also led his own big band on television in 1971 (with guests such as Dizzy Gillespie, Doc Severinsen, Stan Kenton, Benny Goodman), and performed and recorded with Rob McConnell's Boss Brass (1972-79), Nimmons "N" Nine Plus Six, and Ron Collier. On a Johnny Cash Show he can be seen playing a contest with Al Hirt (both dressed as Western gunslingers). He also performed occasionally on the harmonica.

Basso recorded five albums with Boss Brass, plus many others as a sideman. His first solo album, Guido Basso (on the Innovation label), was recorded in 1986. Other albums include All That Latin Jazz (Pickwick), The Jazz Album (Attic), A Lazy Afternoon (Jazz Portraits), and Lost in the Stars (CBC) that won a 2004 Juno Award for best traditional jazz. In 1994, Basso received the Order of Canada.

Bibl.: Keim, Freidel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); La Barbera, John. "Guido 'Giusto' Basso" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1995); "Guido Basso" (The Canadian Encyclopedia: www.thecanadianencyclopedia.com); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bate, Philip [Argall Turner] (b. Glasgow, Scotland, Mar. 26, 1909; d. Islington, England, Nov. 3, 1999). British historian and author. Bate's father, Percy Herbert Bate, served as secretary of the Glasgow Museum of Art; he died when Philip was four. Bate's mother, Mary Turner Bate, was a violinist, pianist, and singer. Philip attended Aberdeen Grammar School before attending the University of Aberdeen on a Carnegie Award. He received his honors degree in pure science in 1932.

From 1934 to 1939, Bate worked as a broadcaster for BBC Radio and in the BBC recording studios where he developed a keen interest in music. He and Sheila Glassford Begg were married in 1936, but were later divorced. During World War II, he served in the military, and after the war returned to BBC Television where he worked as a producer from 1946 to 1956. He was one of the first to produce musical ballets for television. He and his second wife, Yvonne Mary Leigh-Pollitt, were married in 1959.

Bate began collecting old musical instruments during the late 1950s. He became friends with musicologist Canon Francis Galpin, who encouraged him to study the mechanics and history of all musical instruments, so Bate and a group of friends founded the Galpin Society. Bate served as the first chairman, and was president in 1977.

Bate wrote articles for the Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians and various music journals, and authored the books The Oboe (1956), The Trumpet and Trombone (1966), and The Flute (1969), which have become widely used. His book on the trumpet (above) was the first major text on the design and history of the instrument.

In 1968, Bate donated his collection of musical instruments to Oxford University, which made him an honorary Master of Arts in 1973. Bate died in 1999 at the age of ninety; his cremated remains are in the music faculty garden at Oxford University, near The Bate Collection.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Bate, Philip. The Trumpet and Trombone (W. W. Norton); "Philip Bate" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Batiste, Milton J. ("Bat") Jr. (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Sept. 5, 1935; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Mar. 29, 2001). American trumpeter and vocalist. Batiste grew up in the Creole part of New Orleans, one of twelve children in his family. He began playing the trumpet one year before attending Joseph S. Clarke High School (1949-52). He studied trumpet with his uncle, a military musician (1948), and received playing advice from Teddy Riley and Wallace Davenport (1956-57). As a teenager, he formed the Shuffling Hungarians and the House Rockers (1952), two rhythm and blues bands. In 1963, he joined Harold Dejan's reformed Olympia Brass Band, which toured Europe several times and was a popular group in New Orleans during the 1960s and '70s.

Batiste was a popular musician who played in an over-the-top style, both as a trumpeter and a vocalist. He played trumpet one-handed while beating a tambourine with the other hand. He performed with many leading musicians including Little Richard, P. Longhair, Ruth Brown, Della Reese, LaVern Baker, Joe Liggins, Lloyd Price, Jimmy Witherspoon, Brook Benton, Jimmy Reed, Freddie King, Fats Domino, Eddie Bo, Clarence "Frogman" Henry, Smiley Lewis, and Big Joe Turner. He recorded with Champion Jack Dupree, and also formed a group called the Town Toppers. He performed thousands of funeral parades in the Crescent City, and was a regular performer at Preservation Hall.

Batiste recorded several albums as leader, including Milton Batiste with the Rue Conti Jazz Band, Milton Batiste and La Vida Jazz, and Milton Batiste—The Gentle Giant of New Orleans Jazz, all on his own label, Dubat Records. Other albums that feature him are New Orleans Jazz Funerals From Inside (interspersed with spoken commentary by Batiste), Gospel Soul Children, and Best of Bourbon Street Jazz, some of which feature him performing jazz solos on mouthpiece only.

A year before his death, Batiste was sidelined from music due to diabetes and heart problems. He died at age sixty-six, leaving behind his wife Ruth and two children. Because of his popularity among musicians and citizens of New Orleans, over three thousand people attended his funeral.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Vacher, Peter. "Milton Batiste, Jazz Trumpeter with Endless Energy and Charisma" (obituary, The Guardian, Apr. 10, 2001); "Milton Batiste" (www.allmusic.com/artist/milton-batiste-p10105/biography); Laplace, Michel. "Larmes, Milton Batiste" (Jazz Hot, No. 583, 2001).

Battenberg, Thomas ("Tom") (b. Dayton, Ohio, July 30, 1941). American trumpeter. Battenberg grew up in Kettering, Ohio. He began playing the piano at age four, and trumpet at age eight; his first trumpet teacher was Willard Neff, a French horn player. During junior and senior high schools, he studied with Paul Blagg of the Dayton Philharmonic. After graduating from Kettering High School in 1959, he earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1963 at The Ohio State University, studying with Richard Suddendorf. He then taught upper division trumpet students as a graduate trumpet teaching assistant at Arizona State University (1963-65) where he studied with horn professor Eugene Chausow, and completed his master of music degree. He also studied with John Ware of the New York Philharmonic during the summers of 1964 and 1965.

A highly versatile musician, Battenberg was a member of The Phoenix Symphony (1963-65) and the Dallas Symphony Orchestra (second trumpet, 1965-66). He joined the faculty at The Ohio State University in 1966, founded the OSU Faculty Jazz Sextet, and played with the OSU Brass Quintet. He formed the High Street Stompers (a Dixieland group) and also leads the Tom Battenberg Trio. He has been a member of the ProMusica Chamber Orchestra since its founding in 1978, and the Columbus Symphony Orchestra since 1966 where he has been acting principal trumpet since 2006. He has released a CD titled Just A Closer Walk With Thee (private label).

Battenburg and his wife Helen Liebman, a retired attorney, have two children: Erik (b. 1966) and Kurt (b. 1968). His hobbies include golf, cooking, and travel.

Bibl.: "Thomas Battenberg" (www.promusicacolumbus.org); "Thomas Battenberg" (www.columbussymphony.com); "Thomas Battenberg" (www.westervillebands.org/guestArtists.html); personal interview, Aug. 15, 2011.

Bâty, Alexandre (b. Saint Hilaire de Voust, France, 1983). French trumpeter. Bâty is a star of the younger generation of trumpet soloists. He began playing at age eight in the Saint Hilaire Band, and studied at the Fontenay-le-Comte School of Music. He graduated from the Nantes Conservatory (2002), studying with Jean-Jacques Metz, and graduated from the Conservatory of Ruell Malmaison (2004), studying with Eric Aubier. He then studied with Clement Garrec at the Paris Conservatory (2005).

Bâty won the 43rd International Music Competition in Budapest, the 62nd International Competition of the Prague Spring (2010), and second prize at the Munich Competition (2011). He was principal trumpet at the Orchestre des Pays de la Loire (2006-08) and Orchestre Philharmonique de Radio France (Paris, 2008-11), and since October of 2011 has been principal of the Concertgebouw Amsterdam. He has been a soloist with orchestras around the world, including the Orchestre de Paris, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, Seoul Philharmonic, Opera Orchestra of Paris, Orchestre National de Paris, and Orchestre Philharmonique de Radio France, Pleven Philharmonic Orchestra, and Philharmonic Orchestra Hradec Kralove.

Bibl.: Alexandre Bâty's official website: www.alexandrebaty.com.

Bauchinger, Diana (b. Bad Krozingen, Germany, June 21, 1974). German trumpeter. Bauchinger studied at the Musikhochschule in Basel, Switzerland, with Mario Populin, Jeffrey Segal, and Edward H. Tarr, graduating in 1998. She also studied with Reinhold Friedrich in Karlsruhe, Germany, and with Allen Vizzutti, Claude Rippas, James Thompson, Markus Stockhausen, and Anthony Plog. From 1996 to 1997, she was a member of the Basel Symphony Orchestra, and has played with the Basel Sinfonietta, Nürnberg Philharmonic, and Ludwigsburg Festival Orchestra. She is a member of the all-female ensemble, Velvet Brass.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Diana Bauchinger" (www.velvetbrass.de).

Baudrier, Emile (b. Heville Pont, France, July 18, 1899; d. Angers, France, Oct. 10, 1986). French trumpeter and composer. Baudrier studied with Henri Tissier at the Tours Conservatory (1923-24) and received guidance from Eugène Foveau. Baudrier was cornet soloist of the Municipal Band at Tours from 1916 to 1930, and of the Theatre there until 1930. He also played on slide trumpet in a jazz band. From 1930 to 1969, he played in theater orchestras of Mulhouse, Cologne, and Mainz, and was principal trumpet at the Societé des Concerts Orchestra in Le Mans. He performed the Concerto for Trumpet by Louis Maingueneau with the Concerts Populaires d'Angers conducted by Louis Fourestier, and recorded Haydn's Concerto in E-flat accompanied by Pierre Cochereau on piano. He also played many concerts with the Schola Cantorum Orchestra under Pierre Dervaux in Nantes. In 1980-82, he was still playing in the Trumpet Workshop led by Michel Laplace.

From 1930 to 1969, Baudrier taught trumpet at the Le Mans Conservatory where his best pupil was Pierre Sellin, a famous French trumpet soloist in the popular genre. Baudrier composed numerous works, several of which were for brass ensemble or trumpet. The works for trumpet and piano include Suite For Trumpet & Piano (premiered in London by Denis Egan), Andante/Allegro Commodo, Espoirs, Aspirant Trompettiste, and Tout a cinq temps.

Baudrier's daughter was a professional violin player.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photos by Lisiane Laplace: Baudrier and M. Laplace (Apr. 16, 1980); M. Laplace, Baudrier, Denis Egan (Apr. 16, 1980).

Bauer, Wolfgang (b. Heilbronn am Neckar, Germany, Jan. 13, 1965). German trumpeter. Bauer studied with Konradin Groth at the orchestral academy of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. He also worked with Lutz Köhler and Edward Tarr. Bauer was a prizewinner in the International "Prague Spring" Competition, and began his solo career when he won first place in the German Music Competition in Bonn (1993) and the ARD International Competition in Munich (1993). He also received a bursary award from the Brüder Busch Gesellschaft.

Bauer combines the beautifully warm and perfect piccolo trumpet playing of Maurice André with the historically informed interpretations of Edward Tarr. He has soloed with many orchestras throughout the world, including the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra, London Philharmonic Orchestra (with which he gave his London debut at the Royal Festival Hall), Stuttgart Radio Symphony Orchestra, Hamburg Radio Symphony Orchestra, West German Radio Symphony Orchestra, Beethovenhalle Orchestra (Bonn), Westphalian Philharmonic, and the National Orchestra of France.

Since 1987, Bauer has been principal of the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra. He has been teaching at the Frankfurt Hochschule für Musik since 1996, and also teaches at the Music Academy in Basel, Switzerland. He formed the ensemble, hr-brass (hr stands for Hessischer Rundfunks [Hessian Broadcasting]), and also the City Brass Stuttgart. In addition, he tours and records with the Wolfgang Bauer Consort, a Baroque ensemble. He was selected by ECHO Klassik as the 2009 Instrumentalist of the Year.

Wolfgang Bauer has recorded ten chamber music CDs, as well as the solo albums Haydn Trumpet Concertos (MDG), Hertel Trumpet Concertos (MDG), Works for Trumpet and Piano (MDG), Wolfgang Bauer Consort Live, Wolfgang Bauer—Trumpet (Ars Musini), Concerti a Clarino solo (Koch-Schwann), Music for Children (Edition Seeigel), and Musique Baroque à la Cour royale (K & K Verlagsanstalt).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Wolfgang Bauer" (CD booklet to Concerti a Clarino solo on Koch-Schwann label); Wolfgang Bauer's official website: www.wolfgang-bauer-trompetye.de.

Bauguess, Barry (b. Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Oct. 11, 1956). American trumpeter. Bauguess began playing trumpet at age thirteen.

His first teacher was Eddie Bass. After graduating from North Forsyth High School in 1974, he attended the University of North Carolina in Greensboro where he studied with Bass. In 1975, he transferred to the North Carolina School of the Arts where he studied with Allan Dean and Raymond Mase. During his junior year in 1977, he withdrew from school and founded the Matrix Brass Quintet. In 1978, he was also appointed principal trumpet of the Winston-Salem Symphony and the trumpet instructor at Wake Forest University. In 1984, he returned to school to complete his bachelor of music degree (1984) and a master of music degree (1991).

Bauguess became interested in the natural (valveless) trumpet, and has performed with the Portland Baroque Orchestra, Apollo's Fire, Washington Bach Consort, Magnolia Baroque Orchestra, Opera Lafayette, Tempesta di Mare, and Atlanta Baroque Orchestra. He was also a member of the Philharmonia Baroque Orchestra from 1987 to 1999, and the American Baroque Soloists. He has recorded for numerous labels including Koch, Harmonia Mundi, Teldec, Conifer Classics, Nonesuch, and Sine Qua Non. He has also performed on radio and television broadcasts for the Public Broadcasting System, Canadian Broadcasting Corporation, and National Public Radio. In 2004, he opened The Baroque Trumpet Shop in New Bern, North Carolina. Bauguess teaches at the Baroque Performance Institute of the Oberlin Conservatory, and is a visiting artist at the Historic Performance Department of Case Western Reserve University in Cleveland.

Bauguess and Paige Whitley-Bauguess, a Baroque dancer and dance historian, have been married since 1985. His hobbies include cooking and bicycle racing.

Bibl.: Barry Bauguess official website: www.baroquetrumpet.com; personal interview, July 24, 2011.

Bauzá, Mario (b. Cayo Hueso, Cuba, Apr. 28, 1911; d. New York, July 11, 1993). Cuban trumpeter. Bauzá was born in Cuba, and began studying music at age five. From 1918, he attended the Municipal Conservatory where he learned to play clarinet and oboe. At age nine, he sometimes played clarinet in the Havana Philharmonic Orchestra, and by age twelve, was a regular member on bass clarinet. When he was fifteen, he visited New York as a member of Maria Romeu's orchestra. It was then that he discovered American jazz. After returning to Cuba, he graduated from the conservatory in 1927 (age seventeen) and began playing clarinet with Los Jovenes Rendencion's Latin band.

Bauzá decided to move to the United States in 1930. While on the ship to New York, he met a Cuban musician named Antonio Machin, who offered him a job in his group if he would switch to trumpet. Inspired to become a professional musician in America, Bauzá learned to play the trumpet in only two weeks! He recorded quite a bit with Machin and also performed with Vicente Sigler, Noble Sissle (1931-32, on saxophone!) and Hi Clark's Missourians at the Savoy Ballroom. He then played lead trumpet in Chick Webb's orchestra (1933-38) and later played with Don Redman (1938-39) and Cab Calloway (1939-40).

In January of 1941, Bauzá joined his brother-in-law Frank Grillo (better known as Machito) and became his musical director. Bauzá helped the band combine traditional jazz with Cuban rhythms, forming the first Afro-Cuban jazz band. Bauzá helped make Machito's band a leading force in the Afro-Cuban jazz movement. He remained Machito's musical director for thirty-five years (until 1976). Bauzá also composed and arranged music for the band. His compositions Tanga and Mambo Inn were big hits.

During the 1970s, Bauzá gradually stopped playing the trumpet and focused on music writing. After a dispute concerning a proposed European tour, Bauzá left Machito and worked as a freelance musician and arranger. He led record dates in 1977 and 1986, and commissioned Chico O'Farrill to expand his Tanga into a four-movement Tanga Suite. Bauzá also led his own band, Mario Bauzá's Afro-Cuban Jazz Concert Orchestra, during the last years of his life. They recorded three albums for the Messidor label: The Tanga Suite, My Time Is Now, and 944 Columbus. Bauzá died from cancer at the age of eighty-two. Today, he is considered to be the founder of Afro-Cuban jazz.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bayer, Johann Ernst (b. c1710; d. Vienna, Mar. 28, 1773). Austrian trumpeter. Bayer became Heinisch's colleague in the Roman Imperial Court at the Vienna Hofkapelle from April 1, 1730 (with the title of Musical Imperial Court Trumpeter in 1733-56). He was noted for his extraordinarily high register and performances of Michael Haydn's difficult trumpet concertos.

Bibl.: Altenburg, Johann Ernst (Eng. Trans. Edward Tarr). Essay on the Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettledrummers' Art (The Brass Press); Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. Trans. Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editore); Tarr, Edward H. "1995—An Anniversary Year for Trumpeters" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Sept. 1995). Lindner, Andreas. Die kaiserlichen Hoftrompeter und Hofpauker im 18. Und 19. Jahrhundert (Hans Schneider).

Beach, Frank F. (b. Los Angeles, California, Sept. 15, 1922; d. Long Beach, California, Jan. 11, 1973). American trumpeter. Beach was a top lead trumpeter with many big bands, and became prominent in 1941 when he was hired as the lead trumpet for Stan Kenton's orchestra. During World War II, he served in the Navy big bands of Artie Shaw and Sam Donahue, and later played in the big bands of Les Brown, Tex Beneke, Benny Goodman, Billy May, Dennis Farnon, Frankie Capp, Marty Paich, and Stanley Wilson. During much of the 1950s and '60s, Beach worked as a studio musician in Los Angeles for NBC and Twentieth Century Fox, recording numerous film soundtracks, and recording albums backing artists such as Henry Mancini, Al Hirt, Bing Crosby, Nat "King" Cole, Frank Sinatra, Glen Gray, Jerry Fielding, Louis Armstrong, and Ella Fitzgerald.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Photo: Stan Kenton Band. Beach is second from right.

Beacraft, [Orton] Ross (b. Pottstown, Pennsylvania, Nov. 11, 1947). American trumpeter. Beacraft began playing piano at age four, and trumpet at age eight. In 1955, he and his family moved to Miami, Florida, where he took lessons from Bower Murphy before graduating from Miami Edison High School in 1965. He attended the Eastman School of Music, studying with Sidney Mear (1965-69), and also studied with Harry Glantz in Miami, Charles Hois at the Chautauqua Institute (summers of 1966 and '67), Adolph Herseth (1971-74 and late 1970s), Arnold Jacobs, and Vincent Cichowicz.

Beacraft was a member of the North Carolina Symphony (1969-70), Civic Orchestra of Chicago (1971-74), Norwegian Opera & Ballet Orchestra (1974-75), and has been a member of the Chicago Brass Quintet since 1977, Chicago Opera Theater Orchestra since 1976, and Elgin Symphony Orchestra since 1984. He has performed with various ballet companies in Chicago's theaters, studio orchestras, subbed with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (1976-96), and in many stage bands for the Lyric Opera of Chicago (since 1976). He joined the faculty at DePaul University in 1976, and became director of admissions of the School of Music in 1996.

Beacraft and his wife Diane Vera Beacraft, a former teacher, have two children: Jennifer (b. 1980) and Ian (b. 1984). His hobbies include reading, movies, hiking, bird watching, and Tai Chi.

Bibl.: "Ross Beacraft" (http://music.depaul.edu/Faculty AndStaff/B/rbeacraft.asp); personal interview, Aug. 25, 2011.

Beal, Jeff (b. Hayward, California, June 20, 1963). American trumpeter, flugelhornist, and composer. Beal began playing the piano at age six, and the trumpet at age eight. When he was ten, his piano-playing grandmother introduced him to jazz through the album Sketches of Spain by Miles Davis. His early trumpet lessons were under Tony Caviglia. He later studied at the Eastman School of Music (1981-85) where he took trumpet lessons with Barbara Butler. He also took jazz composition lessons with Bill Dobbins and classical compositions lessons with Rayburn Wright. While at Eastman, he gained national attention by receiving eleven Downbeat student awards for trumpet, arranging, composing, and other musical activities.

At Eastman, Beal met his wife Joan, an operatic soprano. They moved to New York City in 1985 where Jeff worked as a producer, composer, arranger, studio trumpeter, recording engineer, and pianist. He performed on soundtracks for films such as Predator, Roadside Prophets, and Woman Undone. He purchased the recording studio where he worked, and began a career as a top producer.

Now with son Henry, the Beal family moved to Los Angeles in 1992 where Jeff has worked as a leading film composer. Since that year, his movie scores have included Crazy Jones, Pollock, Showdown, Appaloosa, Ring of Steel, The Fence, He Was a Quiet Man, Cheap Shots, Love Is All There Is, Guy, Mambo Café, A Gentleman's Game, Imposter, Harlem Aria, and Spirit of the Marathon. His television scores include Monk, Family Law, Power 98, Joe and Max, Door to Door, Rome, Ugly Betty, The Passion of Ayn Rand, The Lies He Told, Undue Influence, L. A. Doctors, From the Earth to the Moon, and Nothing Sacred. He also performs as a jazz trumpeter, and has recorded with such artists as Linda Ronstadt (1992), Jay Azzolina, Philippe Saisse, John Williams, Dave Weckl, Jeff Richman, Brent Bourgeois, Ricardo Silveria, Harvey Wainapel, Larry Steen, Jay Beckenstein, Tim Timmermans, Spyro Gyra, Dave Samuels, Pamela Polland, Fred Horn, Jimmy Earl, Alex de Grassi, Aaron Neville, Kalani, Donny Heines, Vinnie Colaiuta, and Brandon Fields.

As a classical composer, Beal has received commissions from Eddie Daniels, Larry Combs, Dave Samuels, Wynton Marsalis, Bobby Shew, Patitucci, Turtle Island String Quartet, Spyro Gyra, Ying String Quartet, and others. His solo piano recording was listed by CD Review in "Best 100 CDs of 1994." His solo trumpet albums include Liberation (his first, on Island Records), Alternate Route (Unitone), Contemplations (Triloka), Three Graces (Triloka), Objects in the Mirror (Triloka), Perpetual Motion (Antilles), and Red Shift (Koch Jazz).

The multitalented Jeff Beal has won three Emmy Awards and was nominated for five others. His compositions have been performed by numerous symphony orchestras including the Saint Louis Symphony, Detroit Symphony, Munich Philharmonic, Rochester Philharmonic, Frankfurt Symphony Orchestra, and the Pacific Symphony. He resides in Agoura, California, near Malibu.

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "The Many Hats of Jeff Beal" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2003); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Jeff Beal's official website (www.jeffbeal.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Beale, Simon (fl. 1640-80). English trumpeter and instrument maker. Beale was one of Oliver Cromwell's trumpeters during the 1640s and '50s. He performed at Cromwell's funeral in 1658. Beale was one of the finest British makers of trumpets and trombones. One of his trumpets, from 1667, survives in the Bate Collection at Oxford University.

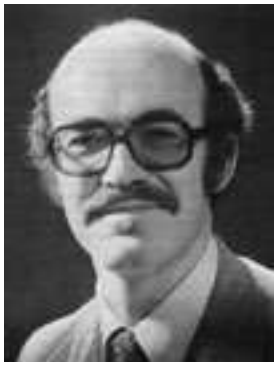
Bibl.: "Simon Beale" (www.pepysdiary.com/p/1694.php).

Bean, George C[lifford] (b. c1932). American trumpeter and cornetist. Bean learned to play the trumpet by sitting in with jazz musicians who were friends of his father. He played lead in his high school and college big bands before joining the Navy for four years where he also played lead in a service band. During the 1950s, he toured with the bands of Stan Kenton, Harry James, Count Basie, and others. During the 1960s, he performed as a trumpeter in shows featuring celebrity vocalists such as Barbra Streisand, Nat "King" Cole, Sarah Vaughan, Mel Tormé, and Tony Bennett.

During the 1970s, Bean had a long ponytail, wore a one-piece aviator jumpsuit, and freelanced in Chicago. He also played with Quincy Jones, Ralph Marterie, Louie Bellson, and recorded with Cy Touff. He recorded many radio and television jingles, backed many recording artists, and was a member of Bobby Lewis's Forefront, a trumpet quartet with rhythm section. Since the 1980s, Bean has played swing, bop, and traditional jazz. He currently leads his own Dixieland band in Chicago.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); George Bean's official website: www.jazzcornet.com.

Beck, Frederick Allan (b. Newport, Vermont, July 3, 1946). American trumpeter. Beck received his bachelor of music education degree at the University of Vermont in Burlington in 1969. He continued studies at the Eastman School of Music, earning a master of music degree in 1973 and a doctor of music degree in 1979. While at Eastman, he was a member of the Portland (Maine) Symphony Orchestra (1973-76) and taught at the Mt. Ararat School in Topsham, Maine (1973-76).



Beck began teaching fulltime in 1979 when he accepted a teaching position at Mansfield State College (now Mansfield State University) in Pennsylvania (1979-80). Beginning in 1980, he spent many years as a professor of trumpet at the University of North Carolina in Greensboro, and as a member of the Greensboro Symphony Orchestra. He is now retired.

Bibl.: www.composers-classical-music.com/b/BeckFrederickA.htm

Becker, Heinz (b. Dresden, Germany, May 28, 1938). German trumpeter. Although Becker's main instrument is trumpet, he has also learned to play piano, flugelhorn, French horn, euphonium, and pan-flute. He began his career in 1962 by playing in various dance orchestras, and with the Manfred Ludwig Sextet (1962-65), Gunther Gollasch Big Band (1965), and by 1965 was a member of the Berlin Radio Dance Orchestra. He formed the Heinz Becker Quintet during the 1980s, and has also performed with the Global Unity Orchestra, London Jazz Composers Orchestra, Anthony Braxton Creative Orchestra, Louis Sclavis, and in various pit orchestras for theater and Broadway musicals. His albums include Transition (Westwind), Dance of the Altar Figures (with organist Bernd Köppen), and Pearls of Brass (with Kenny Wheeler and Paul Rutherford).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Heinz Becker" (www.multilingualarchive.com/ma/dewiki/en/Heinz_Becker_(Musiker).

Beckett, Harry [Harold Winston] (b. Michael Parish, Barbados, May 30, 1935; d. London, July 22, 2010). West Indian trumpeter and flugelhornist. Beckett learned to play the trumpet in Barbados before moving to England in 1954 (age nineteen). It was not easy for him to break into the London jazz scene, but he played with Jiver Hutchinson (1955) and several rock groups, and by 1960 was playing with Graham Collier's band (until 1977). In 1961, he began performing with Charles Mingus, appearing in the obscure film, All Night Long (1961). Beckett's natural talent did not go unnoticed, and during the next couple of decades, he worked with Mike Westbrook, Ian Carr, Ray Russell, Memphis Slim (1971), Mike Gibbs, the New Jazz Orchestra, Stan Tracey Octet (from 1974), Ronnie Scott, Chris MacGregor's Brotherhood of Breath, John Surman, Elton Dean, John Dankworth, the London Jazz Composers' Orchestra, the Jazz Warriors (1986-91), Neil Ardley, John Warren, Charlie Watts, and many others.

Among Beckett's albums are All Four One (Spotlite) and The Modern Sound of Harry Beckett (On-U). He has also recorded for other labels including Philips, RCA, Cadillac, Ogun, Paladin, and ITM. In 1972, Beckett won the Melody Makers jazz poll as "Top Trumpeter in Britain." From 1997 to 2000, he was a member of the Orchestra National de Jazz. He was known for his lyrical playing that occasionally broke into dazzling outbursts of fire. He died from a stroke at the age of seventy-five.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Harry Beckett" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "RIP Harry Beckett (1935-2010)" (LondonJazz: http://londonjazz.blogspot.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Beer, John (b. Sept. 4, 1928; d. Ames, Iowa, Dec. 3, 1978). American trumpeter. Beer attended the University of Iowa and received a bachelor of music degree in 1950 and a master of arts degree in 1951. After graduation, he became a member of the US Navy Band in Washington, D.C. in which he served as soloist and first trumpet until 1955. After his military service, he played principal in the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra and taught music in the Atlanta public schools until 1960, when he accepted a position as professor of trumpet at the University of Iowa. While in Iowa, he performed with the Iowa Brass Quintet, and was principal of the Tri-Cities Symphony Orchestra. He was an active clinician and freelance player, who was capable of playing all styles including jazz. After his untimely death in 1978 at the age of fifty, the University of Iowa established the John Beer Memorial Scholarship Fund.

Bibl.: Hill, John D. "John Beer 1928-1978" (news item, ITG Newsletter, Feb. 1979).

Beetz, Günther (b. Kronach, Germany, Aug. 5, 1954). German trumpeter. Beetz studied with Horst-Dieter Bolz (1981-85), and is one of Germany's leading trumpet soloists. He has performed as a guest soloist with numerous orchestras throughout Germany, such as the Munich Philharmonic (conducted by Sergiu Celibidache), Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra (conducted by Karl Münchinger), Südwestdeutsches Kammerorchester, Berlin Baroque Orchestra, and the Münchner Kammersolisten. He has toured several countries, and from 1984 to 1992 was a member of German Brass, a well-known touring brass ensemble. Among his recordings is a solo CD entitled Trompeten=Konzert on the Amati label. Since 1990, Beetz has been a highly successful professor at the State University of Music and Performing Arts in Mannheim.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Beiderbecke, Leon ("Bix") (b. Davenport, Iowa, Mar. 10, 1903; d. New York, New York, Aug. 6, 1931). American cornetist. Beiderbecke received the nickname "Bix" from his parents. His father and grandfather also shared this moniker. As a child, Beiderbecke learned to play the piano by listening to recordings and then picking out the notes on the keyboard. He fell in love with the cornet and eventually saved enough money to purchase one. He was self-taught and somehow managed to play well, but he often used unconventional fingerings, giving the instrument a somewhat unique quality of sound from note to note.

Beiderbecke's parents did not approve of Bix's cornet playing and felt that he needed more discipline and training for a career other than music. They sent him to the Lake Forest Military Academy near Chicago where he often snuck away in the evenings to listen to jazz in various clubs and bars in Chicago. His tardiness to daily classes caused him to be expelled within a short time. He returned to Davenport and tried his hand at his father's business, but quickly made the decision to move to Chicago and start a career as a cornetist. There, he found work playing in a jazz group called the Wolverines.

In 1924, Beiderbecke began a lifelong musical relationship with Frankie Trumbauer. They went to New York City and played in various clubs. Later that year, Beiderbecke joined Jean Goldkette's dance band. After two months, Goldkette fired him because he had trouble reading music and did not play in the band's style. Beiderbecke's solos were in the free-improvisation style, whereas Goldkette preferred a stricter jazz style that was often written down. He then joined Charlie Straight's band but was fired after four months for the same reasons. He worked in New York City, playing numerous radio shows, and performing for a short time with the Dorsey brothers band, Casa Loma Band, and Benny Goodman's band. Beiderbecke formed his own Dixieland band under the name Bix and His Gang, in which he was featured in the recordings Jazz Me Blues, Royal Garden Blues, and At the Jazz Band Ball.

Beiderbecke and Trumbauer joined Paul Whiteman's band in 1927, making numerous recordings and performing hundreds of concerts. His featured solos included Clementine, Davenport Blues, Singin' the Blues, I'm Coming Virginia, Way Down Yonder in New Orleans, Ostrich Walk, and Riverboat Shuffle. His recording with Whiteman's band of Gershwin's Piano Concerto in F is considered a classic. In 1928, he recorded extended solos in selections such as There Ain't No Sweet Man That's Worth the Salt of My Tears, San, Dardanella, You Took Advantage of Me, and Sweet Sue. He also composed jazz works for the piano, such as In a Mist, Flashes, Candlelights, and In the Dark.

In 1927, alcoholism began to affect Beiderbecke's health and performances. His drinking persisted despite several attempts to stop. In late 1928, he was hospitalized with pneumonia, resulting from the heavy touring schedule and the poisonous liquor sold during the Prohibition years. Whiteman kept him on the payroll and sent him to a hospital. After returning to the band, Beiderbecke's playing showed noticeable signs of continued alcoholism. He suffered a nervous breakdown in January of 1929. Finally, he collapsed from exhaustion during a recording session on September 13, 1929. His last recorded solo was made in 1930. He died the following year from pneumonia at the age of twenty-eight.

Bix Beiderbecke's playing influenced many cornetists included Jimmy McPartland, Dick Sudhalter, Bobby Hackett, Red Nichols, Bunny Berigan, and Tom Pletcher. The great singer Bing Crosby considered Bix a strong influence on his phrasing, and composer Hoagy Carmichael said that his work, Stardust, was inspired by Bix Beiderbecke's blues style. Furthermore, Bix's life story formed the basis of Dorothy Baker's novel, Young Man With a Horn, that was later made into a movie starring Kirk Douglas and Doris Day (soundtrack trumpet solos performed by Harry James).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Sudhalter, Richard. Bix—Man and Legend (Schirmer Books); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Belck, Scott (b. Morgantown, West Virginia, Feb. 25, 1966). American trumpeter. Belck grew up in Morgantown, West Virginia. He began playing the trumpet at age twelve; his first teacher was John Winkler. He attended the University of Tennessee in Knoxville (1987-89) where he completed his bachelor of music degree studying with Cathy Leach. He received his master of music degree from the University of North Texas (1993-95) studying with Keith Johnson, and a doctor of musical arts degree from the Cincinnati Conservatory (1998-2008) studying with Alan Siebert. He has also studied with Vincent DiMartino.

A versatile performer, Belck has performed with the Glenn Miller Orchestra, UNT One O'Clock Lab Band, Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati Pops, Minnesota Ballet's Festival Orchestra, Dayton Philharmonic, Lexington Philharmonic, Richmond Symphony Orchestra, Top Brass, and other ensembles. He has played lead trumpet for celebrities including the Manhattan Transfer, Woody Herman, Aretha Franklin, Linda Ronstadt, Maureen McGovern, Doc Severinsen, Lou Rawls, the Ink Spots, the Four Freshmen, and Neil Sedaka. He served with the US Air Force Band of Flight at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base in Dayton, Ohio, from 1995 to 1999, and is currently a member of the trumpet ensemble, Tromba Mundi, UpBeat Brass, and the Detroit Jazz Festival Orchestra (lead trumpet).

Belck has taught at Capital University, University of Minnesota-Duluth, Miami University, University of Dayton, Marshall University, Sinclair Community College, and St. Frances Xavier University in Canada. He joined the faculty at the University of Cincinnati in 2010 where he serves as director of jazz studies at the Cincinnati Conservatory.

Belck and his wife Elisa Vaughan Belck, second horn of the Dayton Philharmonic, have two children, John Elliott Belck (b. 2004) and Nicholas Carson Belck (b. 2007). His hobbies include golf and reading.

Bibl.: Scott Belck's official website: www.scottbelck.com; personal interview, Mar. 26, 2011.

Belgrave, Marcus (b. Chester, Pennsylvania, June 12, 1936). American trumpeter. Belgrave is one of the giants of jazz. He was one of ten children in his family; his father, a steel mill worker, was a baritone saxhorn and bugle player who taught him to play the bugle when Marcus was three years old. He began playing the trumpet at age six, and was inspired by recordings of Louis Armstrong. Marcus also studied under Don Ramus and Boysie Lowery, and even received advice from young Clifford Brown when they played together in a concert band. During his teens, he was recognized by Dizzy Gillespie and Ray Charles, both of whom became personal mentors. His brother Milton plays clarinet, and his cousin Cecil Payne was a baritone saxophone player.

After serving in the Air Force, Belgrave, at age twenty-one, joined the Ray Charles orchestra (1955-59, 1960-63, 1971) as a charter member. He played on the 1958 recording, Ray Charles at Newport, and continued playing with the band until 1963 when he moved to Detroit to become a member of Gordy's Motown Record Corporation studio orchestra. In that same year, he became leader of the Oakland University Jazz Study Program, and founder of the Jazz Development Workshop. He played with Charlie Mingus (1959-60), Max Roach (replacing Booker Little), and has maintained an active career in Detroit since 1963, performing and recording with a veritable lexicon of jazz musicians that include Ella Fitzgerald, Dinah Washington, Charlie Gabriel (from 1989), then Aretha Franklin, Joe Cocker & BB King (1999), Sammy Davis Jr., Eric Dolphy, Sarah Vaughan, McCoy Tyner, Wynton Marsalis, Dizzy Gillespie, and Joe Henderson. He was selected by Marsalis to be one of the initial members of the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra (1986-94). He has also performed at Lincoln Center with the Motor City Jazz Masters.

Belgrave's recordings as leader include Gemini II (on the Tribe label he cofounded in 1974), Working Together (Detroit Jazz), Live at Kerrytone Concert House (Detroit Jazz), In the Tradition (GHB), You Don't Know Me (DJMC), and Marcus, Charlie and Joan (DJMC). He can also be heard in Ken Burns's historic film, Jazz, shown on PBS Television. His many awards include the Louis Armstrong Award for Jazz Excellence (Detroit Institute of the Arts, 1992), Jazz Guardian Award for Artistry (2009), the Michigan Governor's Award, and the Kresge Eminent Artist award (Kresge Foundation, Detroit, 2009, including a $50,000 grant). He was also named Jazz Master Laureate of Detroit in 2008, and became a member of the Detroit Jazz Hall of Fame in 1987.

Between 2000 and 2007, Belgrave toured fifty American cities with a show called Tribute to Louis Armstrong. He has been a staunch advocate of jazz education since the 1960s, and has been a frequent faculty member of the Stanford Jazz Workshop, and a visiting professor at the Oberlin College-Conservatory (2001-10). He is a cofounder of the Jazz Studies Program at the Detroit Metro Arts Complex, and has mentored numerous young jazz performers. As an indication of his popularity and respect, when he was hospitalized in Montreal in 1970 for a serious thyroid condition, musicians around the world helped raise money for his medical expenses.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Marcus Belgrave" (www.marcusbelgrave.net); "Marcus Belgrave" (http://kresge.org/news/profile-artist-marcus-belgrave-master-jazz-trumpet-player); "Marcus Belgrave" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Bell, Roger Emerson (b. Melbourne, Victoria, Australia, Jan. 4, 1919; d. June 17, 2008). Australian cornetist and trumpeter. Bell starting playing the drums in 1935, and took up the cornet in 1938. He switched to trumpet during his early career, but later went back to the mellow tones of the cornet. Bell's older brother Graeme (b. 1914) played classical piano, but Roger's interest in jazz converted him to jazz as well. They formed a band in 1947, and worked together on and off until the band broke up in 1952. Roger and Graeme Bell are considered pioneers of jazz in Australia.

When the Bell band broke up, Roger left jazz music for a while. He later joined Max Collie's Rhythm Aces, and worked with the Melbourne Jazz Club house band starting in June of 1958. The band evolved into Frank Traynor's Jazz Preachers, which lasted until 1967. During the 1970s, Bell worked primarily as a freelancer, but also played overseas in 1976 and 1981. He recorded a series of albums for Swaggie Records, including Roger Bell and His Pagan Pipers, Czechoslovak Journey 1947, Paris, Melbourne 1949, and Roger Bell and His Australian Jazz Band. In addition to playing cornet, Bell occasionally sang and played drums. His composition*, The Wombat,* has become a jazz standard.

Roger Bell was most famous for his group the Pagan Pipers, which stayed together until 1980. The band died when Bell began having health problems. Although he performed through the late 1990s, Roger Bell's health gradually declined until his death on June 17, 2008 at the age of eighty-nine.

Bibl.: Haesler, Bill. "Vale Roger Bell" (orbituary notice: www.okom.com); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Roger Bell" (www.talktalk.co.uk); "Graeme Bell" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Bellstedt, Hermann Jr. (b. Bremen, Germany, Feb. 12, 1858; d. San Francisco, California, June 8, 1926). American cornetist. His family immigrated to America when he was about nine years old, and eventually moved to Cincinnati in 1872. Bellstedt's early musical training was with his father, then with Mylius Weigand in Cincinnati. At the age of fifteen, Bellstedt was billed as the "Boy Wonder" and performed his first public cornet solo. His first professional playing job was with the Arctic Gardens Orchestra as second trumpet, but he soon advanced to principal trumpet and soloist. In 1879 at the age of twenty-one, he was engaged as soloist with the Red Hussar Band at Manhattan Beach, Coney Island, a position which gave him much public exposure. He was now beginning to compose his own cornet solos. In 1883, he returned to Brighton Beach to play with the Cincinnati Reed Band.

Patrick Gilmore hired Bellstedt in 1889 to be assistant to the famed Benjamin Bent. Bellstedt often performed as soloist with the Gilmore Band during the late 1890s. In 1892, Bellstedt formed his own band in which he served as conductor and soloist. For years, the band toured throughout the United States.

Bellstedt was a founding member (principal trumpet) of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra (1895-97), and from 1902-05 and 1906-07, he was a section member (trumpet and cornet). He joined the Sousa Band in 1904, and shared solo honors with Herbert Clarke and Walter Rogers. He remained with the band until 1906 when he joined the Innes Band as cornet soloist and assistant conductor. In 1909, he accepted leadership of the Denver Municipal Band and remained with it until 1912.

In 1913, Bellstedt was back in Cincinnati, this time as professor of wind instruments at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music.

He became a prolific composer of cornet solos and works for band. His best-known solos include Napoli, La Mandolinata, Princess Alice, Carnival of Venice, and The American Boy. He was known for his distinctive playing style and facile tonguing. Bellstedt was also a successful teacher; his most noted pupil was Frank Simon. Simon said of Bellstedt that he was a very strict, exacting, but terrific teacher...When he played for me, I was transported into another world...I doubt very much that I would have met with one-half the success that good fortune has bestowed upon me if it were not for [Bellstedt's] masterful teaching and friendly guidance.

Although Bellstedt made no solo recordings, he did record Friendly Rivals with Clarke in 1905, and Three Solitaires with Clarke, Rogers, and the Sousa Band. He died in San Francisco at the home of his son.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); information given to Edward Tarr from Friedel Keim.

Belmondo, Stéphane (b. Saliès-en-Toucas, France, July 8, 1967). French trumpeter, flugelhornist, and drummer. Belmondo comes from a musical family; his father Yvan was a jazz saxophonist, and his brother Lionel is a well-known jazz saxophonist. Stéphane began playing drums at age six, accordion at eight, and the cornet at age ten. He studied cornet at the Aix-en-Provence Conservatory (1982-84) and was then admitted to the Marseille Conservatory at age sixteen, eventually winning first prize in trumpet. His trumpet teachers were Marcel Boyer, René Périnelli, Jean-Jacques Greffin, and Pierre Thibaud.

Belmondo formed a jazz quintet with his brother in 1982. Around 1986, he moved to Paris where he began playing professionally with groups led by René Urtreger, Niels-Henning Ørsted Petersen, Pierre Michelot, and Al Levitt. In 1987, he played with Chet Baker and joined Laurent Cugny's big band called Lumière, with which he recorded two albums. From 1987 to 1990, he played with pianist Kirk Lightsey's quartet and bassist Pierre Boussaguet's quintet, and with the latter, recorded an album that also featured one of Belmondo's idols, trumpeter Tom Harrell. In 1992, Belmondo became a member of Michel Legrand's big band, which recorded an album titled Legrand/Grappelli and toured the world. In 1994, Belmondo played in Dee Dee Bridgewater's trio, which recorded an album called Love and Peace in 1995. He then moved to New York City where he continued to tour with Bridgewater, as well as perform with musicians such as Lew Tabackin and Al Foster.

Belmondo returned to Paris, where in 2004, he recorded his first solo CD, Wonderland, which won two Victoires du Jazz awards in France in 2005, and also in 2005, he recorded an album with Yusef Lateef called Influence. Belmondo's group toured Europe and the world until 2008, when Belmondo toured and recorded with the great Brazilian singer, Milton Nascimento. Other albums include The Same As It Never Was Before (Verve/Universal), Infinity Live (B-flat), Hymne au Soleil (B-flat), Live au Plana (B-flat), Endless Love (CAE Vulkan), Ameskery (Shaï), For All Friends (Challenge), and Quintet (with Lionel Belmondo, self-released). He has also recorded over fifty CDs as a sideman.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Stéphane Belmondo" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Stéphane_Belmondo).

Bendinelli, Cesare (b. in or near Verona, Italy, c1542; d. ?Munich, Germany, 1617). Italian trumpeter. He was active at the Schwerin court from 1562 to 1565; in Vienna in 1567; and worked as chief court trumpeter at the Munich court from 1580 until his death. His monumental method, Tutti l'arte della Trombetta (The Complete Art of the Trumpet) of 1614 is the first known trumpet method. It provides a significant insight into the early Baroque trumpet and its proper playing style. Although not published until recently, the currently available facsimile edition has received a great deal of attention and study.

A votive painting donated by Bendinelli to his church contains his portrait. Below the painting, words tell a story (translated): While traveling to Vienna in 1582 on the Danube River, Bendinelli's boat was pulled into a whirlpool. The rudder broke and he and his companions faced certain death. Bendinelli kneeled and prayed for their safety. Miraculously, an image of Our Lady of Aufkirchen appeared in a halo and saved their lives. (See color pages for full painting.)

Bendinelli played on a magnificent pretzel-shaped trumpet made by Anton Schnitzer in 1585. It contained two gold-layered medallions that are engraved with the Munich court's coat of arms. (It is unfortunate that one of the medallions was lost or stolen at a later date.) Bendinelli donated the instrument, together with his method, to the Accademia Filarmonica in Verona in 1614. (A new revised facsimile edition of Bendinelli's method with detailed commentary appeared in print with Editions BIM in 2011.)

Bibl.: Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. Trans., Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editorie); Tarr, Edward H. "Cesare Bendinelli" (Brass Bulletin, Vol. 17, 1977); Tarr, Edward H. "Cesare Bendinelli" (Oxford Music Online).

Bendzko, Thomas (b. Lüneburg, Germany, Mar. 10, 1957). German trumpeter and bandleader. Bendzko's father Eberhard was a legendary Dixieland and swing trumpeter who taught Thomas to play the trumpet starting at age nine. Thomas later studied classical trumpet at the Bremen Conservatory from 1977 to 1980, but completed his education in jazz performance at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) after studying on and off between 1980 and 1983, and 1986 and 1990. His teachers include Don Jacoby, John Haynie, Donald Byrd, and Rich Matteson. He returned to Germany in 1990.

Bendzko has performed with a large variety of ensembles including Salza Picante, Lo Chevere, Dallas Jazz Orchestra, Dallas Brass & Electric, Thilo Berg Big Band, Frankfurt Jazz Big Band, hr Bigband, Dusko Gojkovic Big Band, Conexion Latina, Albert Mangelsdorff Big Band (1984), Harald Rüschenbaum Jazz Orchestra, Bongo Tropical, Aquarelas do Brasil, the O'Jays, and Brazil Connection. He has also played with Clark Terry, Bobby Shew, Lou Marini, Arturo Sandoval, Mel Lewis, and many others. In 1992, he moved to Munich to again become lead trumpet for Dusko Gojkovic. He formed his own groups that include Circle, Hiphouse, and Time Counts, and in February of 2003, formed the Thomas Bendzko Big Band. During the summer of 2006, he formed his own record label, Under The House Music Productions. His first CD is titled The Thomas Bendzko Big Band Live.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. *Das gro*ße Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Thomas Bendzko's official website: www.thomasbendzko.com. Photo by Thomas Tietz.

Benedetti, Donald ("Don") (b. c1935-36). American trumpeter. Benedetti attended the Music Academy of the West during the summer of 1955. He studied with William Vacchiano at The Juilliard School In New York City where he received a bachelor of science degree (1960) and a master of music degree at Columbia University. He later studied with Carmine Caruso, becoming a well-known teacher of the Caruso calisthenic embouchure method.

In 1963, Benedetti joined the famed Goldman Band. He has taught at Trenton State University in New Jersey where he was a member of the Trenton Brass Quintet for many years. During the late 1960s, he taught at Ball State University in Muncie, Indiana, but returned to New York where he has been a freelance performer and teacher. He was principal trumpet of the American Symphony Orchestra led by Maestro Leopold Stokowski, the Brooklyn Philharmonic, Martha Graham Ballet Orchestra, American Ballet Theater Orchestra, and the Westchester Philharmonic. He has performed with the New York City Opera Orchestra and the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, and has played numerous Broadway shows. He has recorded with the Modern Brass Ensemble, has released a solo album titled Donald Benedetti Trumpet on the Golden Crest label, and is the author of Magic Lip Conditioners (self-published).

Benedetti is married to cellist Evangeline ("Van") Benedetti, the first female member of the New York Philharmonic.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Benedict, Marissa (b. San Francisco, California, July 7, 1962). American trumpeter. Benedict is a leading studio trumpeter in Los Angeles. While growing up in Marin County (near San Francisco), she was taught to play the piano and violin at age seven by her mother. She switched to trumpet at age eleven, and took lessons with John Coppola and Joseph Alessi Sr. After graduating from Terra Linda High School in 1980, she attended the University of Southern California in Los Angeles, studying with Boyde Hood, and earned a bachelor of music degree a few years later. She began her career as a freelance artist, performing on occasion with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Los Angeles Opera Orchestra, Long Beach Symphony, Santa Barbara Symphony, and other leading groups in Southern California. She is the current principal of the Pasadena Symphony Orchestra.

As a studio player, Benedict has recorded on the soundtracks of a long list of movies, including WALL-E, Shooter, X-Men 2, War of the Worlds, Flight of the Phoenix, The Terminal, Hildago, Tale of Despereaux, Indiana Jones IV, Polar Express, Spiderman 2, Lemony Snicket, Monsters Inc., The Hulk, Mission Impossible I & II, and XXX. Her television credits include Star Trek Enterprise, Jag, Star Trek Voyager, and Commander in Chief.

Benedict and her husband, Mike Benedict, have been married since 1986, and have children: Katelyn (b. 1988), Andrew (b. 1990), and Cori (b. 1995). Marissa's hobbies include gardening, cooking, tennis, and traveling to see friends and family.

Bibl.: "Marissa Benedict" (www.artistsdirect.com); "Mar issa Benedict" (http://megintymusic.com/performers.php); personal interview, Sept. 17, 2010.

Benge, Elden [Eugene] (b. Winterset, Iowa, July 12, 1904; d. Burbank, California, Dec. 13, 1960). American trumpeter and manufacturer. Benge grew up in Glendale, California, and studied cornet with Walter Eby and later under Vladimir Drucker and Harold "Pappy" Mitchell. He was a classmate of Marion Morrison, who later became the movie star, John Wayne. While in high school and in his early twenties, he played in dance bands (as a "hot" soloist), theaters (in Pasadena), variety shows, did some studio playing in California, and joined the Chicago Civic Orchestra as a principal trumpet player.

Benge became principal trumpet of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra in 1928 at the age of twenty-four. He held this position until replacing Edward Llewellyn as principal in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in 1933. The CSO's second trumpet was Renold Schilke. The two men became friends, and began experimenting with trumpet modifications in Schilke's home shop located a short distance from Benge's home. They began to design instruments patterned after a French (Paris) Besson trumpet owned by Benge. He built his first trumpet in 1935 from spare parts and a few homemade pieces. His first trumpet built from scratch was made in 1937. By 1939, he was advertising for the Benge Company, and worked out of his home until 1953.

After leaving the CSO during the summer of 1939, Benge became the principal trumpeter of the WGN Radio Orchestra in Chicago, a position he held from 1940 to 1952. Because of a severe case of spinal arthritis, he decided to move to Burbank, California, in August of 1953 where he opened a shop in his home and began selling trumpets to many of the Los Angeles professionals. His instruments were highly regarded. After he died in an automobile accident in 1960, his son Donald took over the company, ultimately selling it to Leisure Time Industries in December of 1970. The company was later sold to the H. N. White Company in 1972, and is now owned by Conn-Selmer.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Elden Benge" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Crown, Thomas (et al). "The Chicago Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section 1933-1948" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2013); Lill, Joseph William. Elden Benge and the Chicago Benge Trumpet (D.M. Diss., Northwestern University, 2007).

Bengtsson, Leif (b. Göteborg, Sweden, Apr. 24, 1941). Swedish trumpeter. Bengtsson began playing trumpet at age thirteen. He studied with Åke Williamson at the Göteborg Conservatory, graduating in 1963, and with Knud Hovaldt and Palmer Traulsen at the Malmö Conservatory, graduating in 1964. He also studied with John Glasel and Gerard Schwarz in New York in 1973, with Adolph Herseth, Vincent Cichowicz, and Arnold Jacobs in Chicago in 1978, and with Pierre Thibaud in Paris in 1983.

Bengtsson founded the Malmö Brass Quintet in 1976, and was selected as a member of the Paris touring groups, l'Orchestre de Champs Elysées and La Chapelle Royale. A specialist on historical trumpets, he is a member of Concerto Copenhagen and Collegium Vocale. He has taught at the Malmö Academy of Music since 1979 and the Vilnius Academy since 1996, and was awarded the Lund University Pedagogy Prize in 1986.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Leif Bengtsson" (www.lu.se/o.o.i.s/26831).

Beniston, Paul (b. Chatham, Kent, England, 1966). English trumpeter. Beniston began playing cornet at the age of eight, and played in the Gillingham Salvation Army Brass Band. Two years later, he started playing the trumpet. At age fourteen, he received a diploma as an associate of the Royal College of Music in London, and at age sixteen became a fellow of Trinity College. Further playing experiences were in the Kent County Youth Orchestra and the European Community Youth Orchestra. He then studied at Bristol University (1984-87) where he earned a bachelor of music degree. In 1988, he earned a master of music degree from the Royal College of Music where he studied with Crispian Steele-Perkins.

Beniston became the principal of the English National Opera Orchestra (1989-93), and since 1994 has been principal of the London Philharmonic Orchestra. He was also a member of the London Brass (1996-2002). He teaches at the Royal College of Music (since 1995) and the Guildhall School (since 1999).

An avid fisherman, Beniston nearly lost his life on August 14, 2003 when his boat (named High Seas) was struck by a fishing trawler, and sank within five minutes. The accident occurred eight miles from land, so he was lucky that he, daughter Auriol, son Nathan, and two LPO colleagues were quickly rescued.

Bibl.: Mortenson, Gary. "The Trumpet Section of the London Philharmonic Orchestra" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2005).

Benitez, James ("Jim") (b. Phoenix, Arizona, July 13, 1958). American trumpeter. Benitez began playing trumpet at age nine. His early teachers were John Thrasher (summer 1970 at Northern Arizona University Music Camp), Walter Tholl (1970-73), James Thompson (summers 1971, 1972 at NAU Music Camp), Edward Hoffman (summers 1973, 1974 at NAU Music Camp), and Russell Plylar (1973-76). Additional study was with David Hickman, John McElroy, Leon Rapier, James Stamp, Thomas Stevens, Charles Schlueter, and Vincent Cichowicz.

Benitez began his professional orchestral career while in high school, serving as a first call extra trumpet with The Phoenix Symphony (1975-76). He was accepted into William Vacchiano's studio at The Juilliard School for the fall of 1976, but was then offered a fulltime section position with The Phoenix Symphony after an audition in August of that same year. Vacchiano recommended that he take the job in Arizona, which he did. After graduating from Cortez High School in Phoenix in 1976, Benitez began his tenure as second trumpet in the PSO which lasted until 1993. He also played principal trumpet in the Flagstaff Summer Music Festival Orchestra at NAU from 1985 to 1993. While working in The Phoenix Symphony, he attended Arizona State University from January 1977 to 1981, studying with Harold Hines.

After leaving The Phoenix Symphony in 1993, Benitez held several orchestral positions: Malmö (Sweden) Symphony Orchestra (principal, 1993-95), Bergen (Norway) Philharmonic Orchestra (guest principal, 1995-97), Norrköping (Sweden) Symphony Orchestra (principal, 1995-98), Arizona Opera Orchestra (coprincipal since 1998), Monterrey (Mexico) Symphony Orchestra (guest principal, 1999-2001), Orquesta Sinaloa de las Artes (Mexico) (principal, 2001-02), West Valley Symphony (Arizona) (principal since 2008), and Honolulu Symphony Orchestra (now the Hawaii Symphony Orchestra) (guest principal, 2009). In addition, he is an active freelance musician in the Phoenix metro area.

Since 1978, James has been married to Priscilla Benitez, violinist with the Arizona Opera Orchestra and Allegro String Quartet, and orchestra teacher at Connolly Middle School in Tempe, Arizona. Their children are Christopher (b. 1979), Timothy (b. 1983), Sarah (b. 1986), Rebecca (b. 1988), Daniel (b. 1990), James Jr. (b. 1993), Phillip (b. 1995), and Nathan (b. 1997). They also have four grandsons and one granddaughter.

Bibl.: personal interview, May 30, 2012.

Benjamin, Keith (b. Estherville, Iowa, Aug. 31, 1960). American trumpeter. Benjamin grew up in Dolliver, a small town (population of one hundred) in Northwest Iowa. At about age five, he began playing the trumpet, which he learned from his father and brother. He later studied with Bill Redman and Jack Rembold. After graduating from Lincoln Central High School in 1978, he earned a bachelor of music degree from Morningside College, studying with Gary Slechta. He attended the University of Northern Iowa with Keith Johnson, earning a master of music degree in 1984, and completed a DMA degree and Performer's Certificate at the Eastman School of Music in 1989, studying with Charles Geyer and Barbara Butler.

Benjamin began teaching at the University of Missouri-Kansas City in 1989. He is principal trumpet of the Colorado Mahlerfest and a member of the Missouri Brass Quintet. He has also performed with the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, Kansas City Symphony, and the Rochester Philharmonic. His solo CDs include New Vintage (Gothic) and Clarion (Gothic), both with organ.

Benjamin and his wife Jennifer, a choral director and elementary music teacher, have children Cameron (b. 2003; d. 2010) and Duncan (b. 2006). His hobbies include reading, baseball, computer gaming, home improvements, and Scottish history.

Bibl.: "Keith Benjamin" (http://conservatory.umkc.edu/faculty-profile.cfm?id=20); personal interview, July 17, 2011.

Benkenstein, Thorsten (b. Bremen, Germany, June 1, 1968). German trumpeter and flugelhornist. Benkenstein studied jazz trumpet with

Wolfgang Kröger, Dieter Schulz, Bob Lanese, Don Jacoby, and Bobby Shew. He also studied classical trumpet with Stanko Selak in Cologne. He has performed with Peter Herbolzheimer's Rhythm Combination & Brass, Vienna Art Orchestra, Thilo Berg Big Band, Sunday Night Orchestra, Bobby Burgess Big Band Explosion, Frank Reinshager's Big Band, Jeff Cascaro's Enterprise Big Band, Al Porcino's Big Band, and Bob Brookmeyer's New Art Orchestra. He has also recorded with Frank Sinatra, Donna Summer, Paul Anka, Sarah Vaughan, Sammy Davis Jr., Whitney Houston, Shirley Bassey, the United Jazz & Rock Ensemble, Julia Migenes, and Ute Lemper. He is a member of the North German Broadcast Big Band in Hamburg, Katharina Herz's band, and until 2004 was a lead trumpeter with Gansch & Roses.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Bennett, Mark (b. London, England, Sept. 23, 1962). British trumpeter. Bennett received a scholarship to the Royal College of Music in London where he studied with Michael Laird, and received the Royal College Brass Prize. In addition to playing modern trumpets, he has become one of the world's leading performers of the keyed and natural (valveless) trumpets. He has performed on historical instruments with the English Consort, Baroque Brass of London, Orchestra of the Age of Enlightenment, The English Baroque Soloists, Norwegian Baroque Orchestra, and the Oslo Baroque Orchestra. He has performed on modern trumpet as a member of the London Philharmonic Orchestra, Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, London Brass (ten years), and the London Symphony Orchestra (principal trumpet).

A highly versatile player, Bennett was lead trumpet in the Broadway show, Cats, for two years (London). He taught at the Royal College of Music from 1990 to 2000, and has been an active studio musician in London. He has recorded solo albums for the DGG and Hyperion labels.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Mark Bennett" (http://mbtrump.com/cv.htm).

Bent, Benjamin C. (b. Barnesley, England, Aug. 31, 1847; d. New York, New York, Dec. 30, 1898). British cornetist. Bent's early musical training was with his father, a fine cornetist. At the age of ten, he ran away to play with a circus band. At the age of twenty, he became cornet soloist with the Royal Artillery Band, and four years later, a special soloist with Howe's Great London Circus Band. In 1872, Bent joined Harvey Dodworth's 13th Regiment Band of New York and Dodworth's 9th Regiment Band. Finally, in 1875, he joined the famed Gilmore Band as assistant to Arbuckle.

In 1878, Bent married Louise Linden, a prominent saxophonist. His relationship with Arbuckle was often strained due to some animosity between the two cornetists. Nonetheless, Bent stayed with the Gilmore organization for nearly sixteen years, but resigned when Gilmore refused to give him the pay raise he requested. He then joined Innes's band as first chair and cornet soloist.

Bent retired from Innes's band in 1894. He worked as a teacher and formed the Bent Brothers Military Band with his three brothers Arthur, Fred, and Tom—all fine cornetists. Tom soon became assistant to Herbert Clarke in Innes's band, and later, conductor of the Old Guard Regiment Band of New York.

Benjamin Bent was one of the finest soloists of his day, an amazing feat, considering that for many years he played with false teeth. Clarke said that Bent was one of the finest soloists he had ever heard, and that he admired Bent's artistic playing, singing tone, clean technique, and serious attitude. Bent was an astute investor and died a wealthy man at the age of fifty.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Clarke, Herbert L. A Cornet-Playing Pilgrim's Progress (Hickman Music Editions); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published).

Benterfa, Maurice (b. Toulouse, France, Feb. 9, 1937). French trumpeter. As a boy, Benterfa fell in love with the trumpet after hearing recordings of Harry James. He studied with Ludovic Vaillant at the Paris Conservatory (1960-64). He became principal trumpet of the Rhône-Alpes Philharmonic Orchestra, and soon joined the Lyons Opera Orchestra as principal. He taught at the Conservatorie National de Région de Lyon and at the Perpignan National Conservatory (until 1975), and served as pedagogical advisor to the French Ministry of Culture. During his illustrious career, he has also performed with the Concerts Pasdeloup, Orchestre Philharmonique de l'ORTF, and Concerts Lamoureux. In addition, he has worked as a studio musician in Paris, playing on soundtracks for film and television.

Benterfa is a composer, and has published Tonalités (Editions BIM) for unaccompanied trumpet, and a beginning method for trumpet, Le Site des Vibrations (Editions BIM). He is well known for manufacturing wooden mouthpieces, and has served as a judge for the Maurice André International Trumpet Competition in Paris, and the Narbonne International Brass Quintet Competition. His hobbies include tennis and fly-fishing. His son Maurice (b. 1964) is a trumpet player.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2006); "Maurice Benterfa" (www.editions-bim.com/composers/benterfa-maurice).

Berdiyev [Berdyiev], Nikolay [Vladimirovich] (b. Ashkadab, Turkmenistan, Russia, Dec. 19, 1922; d. Kiev, Ukraine, July 15, 1989). Ukrainian trumpeter and composer. Berdiyev graduated from the Moscow Music College in 1940, studying with Ivan Antonovich Vasilyevsky, and from the Kiev Conservatory in 1949, studying with Wilhelm Maryanovich Yablonsky. He also studied composition with Georgy Mayboroda.

Berdiyev was principal trumpet of the Kiev Opera Orchestra from 1944 to 1972. Known for his clear tone, accurate execution, and expressiveness, he was an active soloist who made several recordings. He composed several trumpet concertos and etudes, and received the title of Verdienter Künstler der USSR. As a teacher, he is considered the successor to Yablonsky, and taught at the Glière School in Kiev beginning in 1948, and at the Tchaikovsky Conservatory in Kiev.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Bergalli, Gustavo (b. Buenos Aires, Argentina, Dec. 14, 1940). Argentine trumpeter and bandleader. Bergalli began playing trumpet at age twelve. During his twenties, he formed two groups, the Royal Garden Jazz Band and the Dixieland Smugglers, both styled after his idol, Louis Armstrong. As he grew older, he developed playing styles more closely associated with those of Dizzy Gillespie, Roy Eldridge, Clifford Brown, Chet Baker, and Miles Davis. By 1970, he was considered one of South America's finest jazz trumpeters.

He played with numerous bands including those of Gato Barbieri, Santiago Giacobbe (1964), Rodolfo Alchourron (1965), Big Band Jorge Anders (1971), and Michel Legrand, and with Quinteplus and the Buenos Aires Jazz Quartet.

Bergalli moved to Stockholm, Sweden, in 1975 where he earned a similar reputation. He led his own quintet, played with the Swedish Radio Jazz Group and the Stockholm Jazz Orchestra, and backed numerous celebrity jazz artists such as Bob Brookmeyer, Phil Woods, Jimmy Heath, Maria Schneider, Bob Mintzer, and Joe Lovano. He toured Europe many times and recorded dozens of albums, four of them as leader. In 1992, he received a grant from the Laila and Charles Gavatin Foundation for Jazz Music, and recently moved back to his home city of Buenos Aires.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Gustavo Bergalli" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gustavo_Bergalli).

Bergcrantz, Anders (b. Malmö, Sweden, Dec. 5, 1961). Swedish trumpeter. Bergcrantz comes from a musical family. He began playing the trumpet at age fifteen, studying with Tim Hagans, and studied music at the Malmö High School for Music (1977-80) before attending the Berklee College of Music in Boston (1981-83). After freelancing for a while in Boston, he joined a jazz quintet led by his father Sven (1931-98) that included his two brothers Thomas (drums) and Håkan (tenor sax). Within a few years, Anders began to work as a guest trumpet soloist with various jazz groups, and with jazz artists such as Dave Liebman, Richie Beirach, and Michael Brecker.

Bergcrantz was named "Jazz Musician of the Year" in Sweden (1993), performed as featured soloist at Carnegie Hall in New York (2000), and received "The Golden Record" award for best jazz record of the year (2008), "The Jazzcat" award for best jazz player of the year (2008), Swedish Radio's "Best Record of the Year" award for his 2008 CD, About Time, and the French/Swedish jazz award "Django d'Or" in the Contemporary Star of Jazz category. His other CDs include Opinions (1985), Touch (1986), Live at Sweet Basil (1992), In This Together (1994), C (1997), and Twenty-four Hours (1999). He has performed at leading jazz festivals around the world, and has also performed with Randy Brecker, Carla Bley, Dizzy Gillespie, Billy Harper, Lee Konitz, Paquito D'Rivera, McCoy Tyner, and Kenny Wheeler, to name a few.

Bergcrantz and his wife—singer, pianist, and composer Anna-Lena Laurin (b. 1962)—often perform together, many times playing her compositions. They have four children: Lin, Leon, Rebecca, and Iris.

Bibl.: "Anders Bergcrantz" (www.jazz.com/encyclopedia/bergcrantz-anders); Anders Bergcrantz's official website: www.andersbergcrantz.com.

Berger, Anna Teresa (b. Baltimore, Maryland, May 16, 1853; d. Jackson, Michigan, Feb. 25, 1925). American cornetist. Female professional brass players were a rarity during the nineteenth century, because playing a brass instrument then was considered unladylike; great soloists were often dismissed as mere novelties, receiving little serious attention or written review. This perhaps explains why so little is known about Anna Teresa Berger, one of the most prominent cornet soloists of the late nineteenth century.

Her father was a builder of church organs. He taught his four children to play musical instruments and to entertain audiences with dancing and acting. Anna started playing the violin, but at age ten switched to cornet. Her early teachers were Matthew Arbuckle and Jules Levy, two of the world's greatest soloists. In 1862, she was a member of the Carter Zouave Troupe (possibly the first female brass band). When her father died during the 1860s, the children began earning a living by touring the country as a family act. P.T. Barnum gave them a set of hand bells that they incorporated into their performances. Anna's older sister Louisa married a man who became the manager for the group. They continued performing as a family through May 8, 1881, but disbanded when Anna married Leigh S. Lynch around 1881.

Anna toured with various vaudeville shows and performed as a guest soloist with numerous bands. A review in the New York Mirror stated, Miss Berger played a cornet solo exquisitely. There is no doubt that this lady is by far the best female cornet player that ever blew sweet music out of "sounding brass." Her execution is equal to that of the great masters of the instrument.

In 1889, Berger Lynch appeared in a lengthy series of concerts at the Covent Garden Promenade Concerts in London. Each night she performed solos such as Polka Mazurka (Levy), Grand Russian Fantasia (Levy), Maud Valse (Levy), Young America (Levy), The Levyathan Polka (Levy), Lizzie Polka (Hartmann), and others. She also performed in France, Germany, and Russia, and was awarded a gold medal for her performances. In 1891, she toured with the Blumenberg Concert Club, and in 1892, formed her own concert company.

Berger Lynch had five children: Nani, Leigh (who pitched for the New York Giants), Dorothy, Eugene, and William. She died on February 25, 1925 at the age of seventy-one, without ever having made any recordings. She was beloved by all who knew her. There is a plaque on the wall of the public library in her hometown of Jackson, Michigan. It reads: Though she played before Emperors and Queens of Europe and before the silent Sphinx of Egypt, as before the plain people of her native land, prince and peasant were to her alike. This was her home; here she lived her gentle modest life; sympathetic, charitable, lovable to all, and to commemorate her genius and life work, the people of Jackson affectionately dedicate this tablet to perpetuate her memory.

Bibl.: Keim, Freidel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Miller, Betsy G. "Anna Teresa Berger, Cornet Virtuoso" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1998); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Berger, Florian (b. Munich?, Germany, Apr. 8, 1976). German trumpeter. Berger began his trumpet studies in 1994 at the Richard Strauss Konservatorium München with Wolfgang Guggenberger, continuing in 1996 at the Hochschule für Musik und Theater with Hannes Läubin where he received a pedagogical diploma in 1998 and an artistic diploma in 1999. He also earned a master class diploma there in 2000. Berger was principal trumpet of the symphony orchestra in Aachen from 1999 to 2001, and has since been principal in the orchestra of the Gärtnerplaz theater in Munich.

Bibl.: personal information received from Hannes Läubin on Jan. 6, 2013.

Berger, Günter (b. Ludwigshafen am Rhein, Germany, Aug. 10, 1948). German trumpeter. Berger studied with Karl Reichert from 1961 to 1963, with Reinhold Lösch in Mannheim from 1964 to 1967, with Oskar Barth in Heidelberg from 1967 to 1968, and with Adam Zeyer in Cologne from 1968 to 1975. He served as principal trumpet of the State Theater Orchestra in Mainz from 1975 to 1990, as well as solo trumpet in the Bad Herfelden Festspiele. He began playing with the Mainz Brass Ensemble in 1979, and in 1982 became leader of the Mainz Brass Quintet. He continued his private study with Günther Beetz from 1997 to 1998, and participated in seminars with Edward H. Tarr and Gerald Webster. In 1977, he began teaching at the Kreismusikschuh Alemy-Worms, and since 1990 has been teaching at the Peter Cornelius Conservatory.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bergeron, Wayne (b. Hartford, Connecticut, Jan. 16, 1958). American trumpeter. Bergeron grew up in Southern California. He began playing French horn, but switched to trumpet at age twelve; his first trumpet teacher was his junior high school band teacher, Ron Savitt. While attending Lynwood High School, he displayed a natural ability to play in the upper register of the trumpet, and continued studying with Bobby Shew, Boyde Hood (1978-79), Uan Rasey, and Burnett Dillon. It didn't take long for Bergeron to start playing professionally, touring with the bands of Buddy Miles (1980) Helen Reddy (1981-82), and Bobby Womack (1983-84). He also recorded with the bands of Quincy Jones, Arturo Sandoval, Sammy Nestico, Gordon Goodwin, Bob Florence, Pat Williams, Ray Anthony, Jack Sheldon, Tom Kubis, Chris Walden, Lou Rawls, Paul Anka, Céline Dion, Bob O'Donnell, Frank Sinatra Jr., Anita O'Day, Bill Watrous, and many others.

Bergeron was Maynard Ferguson's lead trumpet player from 1986 to 1988. His impressive upper register solos earned him the nickname "Waynard." He also toured with Paul Anka's band on and off from 1990 to 1993. He has since became a top Los Angeles studio musician, recording hundreds of CDs with artists such as Michel Buble, Natalie Cole, Christina Aguilera, Barry Manilow, Rosemary Clooney, Chicago, Dianne Reeves, Celine Dion, Billy Joel, Mel Tormé, Bette Midler, Tito Puente, Beyoncé, Seal, Michael Bolton, and others. His television credits include the Tony Bennett Special, Frank Sinatra's 80th Birthday Special, Jeopardy, Buzz Lightyear, Entertainment Tonight, and Promised Land. He also performed solos featured on King of the Hill, Profilers, Boston Public, and Sabrina the Teenage Witch. He has played for the Emmy Awards, Grammy Awards, and Academy Awards. Among his over three hundred film credits are The Incredibles, Toy Story 3, Despicable Me, The Informant, Get Smart, Hancock, Superman Returns, Pirates of the Caribbean, Ice Age 2, Spiderman 1 & 2, Anchorman, Catch Me If You Can, and Ratatouille.

Bergeron has been a very active guest soloist and clinician throughout the world, and has appeared at hundreds of college campuses and jazz festivals. His 2004 CD, You Call This A Living?, was nominated for a Grammy Award, and his 2007 CD on the Concord Jazz label, Plays Well With Others, has earned critical acclaim.

Bergeron has two daughters: Dorian Bergeron (b. 1981) and Ella Grace Bergeron (b. 2004).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Wayne Bergeron's official website: www.waynebergeron.com; personal interview, June 20, 2011.

Berginc, Charles ("Chuck") (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Feb. 6, 1952). American trumpeter. Berginc grew up in Cleveland, and started playing horn in fourth grade, but traded it for a trumpet a year later. His father, Frank Berginc, was a factory worker for General Motors, and his mother, Mary, a retail clerk at a local general store. After graduating from West Technical High School (1970), Berginc attended the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory where he studied with James Darling and Mary Squires (1970-76). In 1972, he also played with the rock group, Wild Cherry, and recorded the tune Play That Funky Music, which won a Grammy Award in the same year. He attended the Tanglewood Institute during the summer of 1976, and that fall went to graduate school at Boston University (1976-77), where he studied with Roger Voisin and earned a master of music degree.

Berginc's first orchestra job was as second trumpet in the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra (1977-79). He then became principal of the State Orchestra of Mexico in Toluca (1979-81). He moved to Dallas, Texas, in 1981 where he played fourth trumpet in the Dallas Symphony Orchestra (noncontracted position). Since September of 1982, Berginc has been principal of The Phoenix Symphony as well as the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra. He has also performed on occasion with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston Pops, and the Cleveland Orchestra. In early 2010, he was invited to serve as guest principal trumpet (two months) of the Helsingborg Symphony Orchestra in Sweden. Berginc has taught at Arizona State University (sabbatical replacement for David Hickman).

Since 2005, Berginc has been a professional financial advisor. He and his wife Cynthia, a longtime violinist in The Phoenix Symphony, have two daughters: Jasmine (b. 1988) and Heather (b. 1991). His hobbies include bicycling, bird watching, home remodeling, and wine collecting.

Bibl.: "Charles Berginc" (www.phoenixsymphony.org); personal interview, Feb. 22, 2010.

Bergmann, Matthias (b. Emden, Germany, Mar. 7, 1972). German trumpeter and flugelhornist. Bergmann studied at the Hilversum Conservatory in Amsterdam (1992-97) before moving to Cologne, Germany, in 1997. He performs in a jazz duo called Duo Settings with both Oliver Schroer (organ) and Jürgen Friedrich (piano), as well as with his other groups: Paul Heller/Matthias Bergmann Quintet and the Marcus Bartelt/Matthias Bergmann NDW Project. He is a regular member of the Cologne Contemporary Jazz Orchestra, Peter Herbolzheimer Rhythm Combination & Brass Big Band, and has performed with the North German Broadcasting (NDR) Big Band, Cologne Concert Big Band, Bobby Burgess Big Band Explosion, and Summit Jazz Orchestra. He has also played with dozens of leading jazz musicians including James Morrison and Lee Konitz.

Bergmann is currently teaching at the Glen Buschmann Jazz Academy in Dortmund and the Cologne Music School. He can be heard on over thirty CDs as a sideman, and has released a solo CD titled Still Time for the Jazz4ever label. He has toured the world, and is a frequent artist at various jazz festivals.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Matthias Bergmann" (www.last.fm/music/Matthias+Bergmann).

Berigan, Rowland Bernart ("Bunny") (b. Hilbert, Wisconsin, Nov. 2, 1908; d. New York, New York, June 2, 1942). American trumpeter.

Berigan came from a musical family. He played the violin as a child, but soon switched to the trumpet. He made his debuts in the Fox Lake Junior Band in 1919. While in high school, he played in the University of Wisconsin jazz band as well as other area groups. He improved his sound by listening to recordings of Louis Armstrong. He was not a self-taught trumpeter, but studied under Clarence H. Wagner. He later studied with Forrest Nicola in Chicago (the non-pressure system, 1925), and took some lessons with Nat Natoli in 1928.

In 1928, Berigan moved to New York City and played alongside Bix Beiderbecke in the Dorsey Brothers Orchestra (1930). He joined Hal Kemp's orchestra the same year. They toured Europe and made a few recordings. After returning to New York, Berigan worked as a studio musician but accepted several brief stays with the bands of Paul Whiteman (1932-34), Benny Goodman (1935-36), Fred Rich (1936, with whom he made a few films including a great rendition of Until Today), and Tommy Dorsey (1936-37). As a studio player, he appeared on countless recordings (most of them anonymously), and from 1935 made solo recordings under his own name.

Berigan started his own big band in 1937, and signed with Victor Records. Whereas Goodman and the Dorseys were rigid businessmen with strict control over the members of their bands, Bunny was much more relaxed and a "loveable alcoholic." His band was known for showing up late, being less sober than they should be, and even arriving to jobs in the wrong city. By 1940, Berigan declared bankruptcy and disbanded the group. He rejoined the Tommy Dorsey band, but his drinking was out of control (February to July 1940). He sometimes fell off of the bandstand at the start of feature solos, and was fired after six months. He made two attempts to reform his own band, but both were unsuccessful.

Due to complications from drinking and pneumonia, Berigan died on June 2, 1942. He was only thirty-three years old. He is remembered for his beautiful big tone (especially in his low register), excellent technique, and excellent vocal solos. His best recordings are with the Tommy Dorsey band, playing such tunes as Marie, Song of India, I'm Nobody's Fool, and East of the Sun. His greatest success, recorded twice under his own name, is I Can't Get Started (the 1937 version is considered the best, and was copied verbatim by many trumpet stars from Ray Anthony to Doc Severinsen). Paul Eduard Miller said of him, As an instrumental virtuoso, Bunny Berigan was to jazz what…Horowitz or Menuhin are to classic music. He was admired by Mannie Klein (who did many recording sessions with him), and also by Rex Stewart, Bill Coleman, Wallace Davenport, and Louis Armstrong.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Dupuis, Robert. Bunny Berigan. Elusive Legend of Jazz (Louisiana State University Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Berinbaum, Martin Carl (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June 14, 1942). American trumpeter. Berinbaum grew up in California. He studied piano at an early age, but switched to trumpet at age eight, and by age fourteen was soloing with various bands and orchestras in the area. He attended the University of Southern California (1962-66) where he studied with James Stamp. He also attended the Aspen Music Festival during the summer of 1962 (studying with Robert Nagel) and the Tanglewood Institute during the following summer (studying with Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin).

Berinbaum's professional career began in 1966 when he toured Europe as first trumpet with the Roger Wagner Chorale. He was in the West Point Military Academy Band for three years, and earned a master of music degree at The Juilliard School where he studied with William Vacchiano and Robert Nagel. He was an exceptional soloist who toured with the trumpet and organ duo, Toccatas & Flourishes. He also released two solo albums for the Vanguard label: Martin Berinbaum—Introducing the Great Young American Trumpet Virtuoso and Martin Berinbaum Plays Trumpet Concertos. He began performing as guest soloist with several orchestras, and appeared on NBC Television's Today Show during the mid 1970s.

Just as Berinbaum's solo career was taking off, he made a dramatic career shift by accepting an offer to teach trumpet at the University of British Columbia in Vancouver in 1976. Having studied conducting with Ingolf Dahl in California, and with Seiji Ozawa at the Tanglewood Institute, Berinbaum also became conductor of the university wind ensemble. Much of his focus there was on guest conducting and serving as an adjudicator at various band competitions. He continued to perform on trumpet, performing as soloist with the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra, Calgary Philharmonic, National Arts Center Orchestra, Seattle Symphony, Edmonton Symphony, and others. As a soloist and conductor, he toured the Ukraine in 2001, and Hong Kong and Taiwan in 2005.

Berinbaum became head of the brass and wind faculty at the University of British Columbia, and received the Leadership in Music Education Award from the British Columbia Coalition for Music Education in 2004. For several years, he was head of the UBC Summer Institute. He is now retired.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Martin Berinbaum (www.bodwell.edu/summer/musiccamp).

Berlin, Eric Matthew (b. Lancaster, Pennsylvania, May 15, 1969). American trumpeter. Berlin grew up in Manheim, Pennsylvania. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his main teachers were James Metzger and David Rentshler until his senior year in high school when he studied with Frank Kaderabek. He enrolled at the New England Conservatory in Boston, studying with Charles Schlueter and Robert Nagel, and graduated in 1991. During the summers of his college years, he attended the Music Academy of the West (studying with Mario Guarneri) and the Tanglewood Music Center. Additionally, he studied with Thomas Rolfs and Vincent Penzerella.

Berlin founded, and since 1988, has performed with the Majestic Brass Quintet, a group in residence at Northeast University from 1993 to 2001. He was an adjunct faculty member at the Massachusetts Institute of Technology (MIT) and the Longy School of Music from 1997 to 2001. Since 2001, he has been teaching at the University of Massachusetts in Amherst and is active in several orchestras including the Albany Symphony Orchestra (principal since 1998), Boston Philharmonic (principal since 2006), and the Boston Modern Orchestra Project. He has also played on occasion with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston Pops, New York Philharmonic, Los Angeles Philharmonic, and Baltimore Symphony Orchestra. He is a member of the New England Brass.

Berlin hosted the 2007 International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Massachusetts, has presented master classes throughout the United States and Europe, and has released a solo CD titled End of the Matter on the MSR label. He has been a featured soloist with several leading ensembles including the Albany Symphony, Brooklyn Symphony, Hartford Symphony, and US Coast Guard Band. He has served on the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild.

Berlin has been married to Alison Berlin (whom he describes as a scientist, physical therapist, librarian, dog trainer, and saint) since December of 2010. His hobbies include running, bicycling, mountain climbing, and golf.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Eric Berlin" (http://umasstrumpets.org); Eric Berlin's official website: ericmberlin.com; personal interview, Mar. 12. 2011.

Berlin, Richard M[errill] (b. Baltimore, Maryland, Mar. 10, 1947). American trumpeter. Berlin received his bachelor of science in music education degree from the University of Maryland where he studied with Emerson Head, and his master of music degree from the Catholic University of America, where he studied with Lloyd Geisler and Adel Sanchez. He also studied with Vincent Cichowicz and William Vacchiano.

Berlin joined the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra in 1976, serving most of the years since as principal trumpet. He has performed with the Haifa Symphony Orchestra, Israel Sinfonietta, Israel Philharmonic, Israel Chamber Orchestra, Jerusalem Brass Quintet, Piedmont Brass Quintet, and the Jerusalem Brass Trio. He is the founder of the Jerusalem Brass Ensemble, and taught at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro (1972-76) and the North Carolina

School of the Arts in Winston-Salem (1973-74). He currently teaches at the Rubin Academy of Music and Dance in Jerusalem.

Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Berman, Fred (b. 1905 or 1908; d. 1954). American trumpeter. Berman was one of the finest trumpet players and teachers in Boston during the 1940s and early '50s. He played with the Paul Whiteman Orchestra, and was a leading studio player in Boston. Berman taught at the Lawrence Berk School from 1945, and jazz and commercial music at the New England Conservatory. He was one of the founders of the Berklee School of Music (now the Berklee College of Music). The Berklee School's name was derived from a suggestion by Berman to the board of founders that the name be changed to honor Larry Berk and Berman's newborn son, Lee.

Berman's daughter Rhoda (Berman) Sapers (a retired nursing administrator) has recently been a member of the Berklee Board of Trustees, and arranged for the establishment of the Fred Berman Memorial Scholarship. Her father taught many students, including Herb Pomeroy (in 1948), Bill Chase, Patrick Hession, Joe Gordon, and Bobby Hackett. Berman was a member of the committee for the Martin trumpet called the "Committee" (1940).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Rhoda Sapers" (www.berklee.edu/trustees/bios/sapers.html); www.hessionssessions.com/gb/indez.php?show=17.

Berman, Josh (b. c1973). American cornetist. Although Berman did not begin playing the trumpet (later switching to cornet) until his senior year (1989-90) at York High School in Elmhurst, Illinois, he had intently studied the jazz recordings of Miles Davis and Dexter Gordon. He enrolled at Columbia College in Chicago as a film major, but quickly turned his energies to playing in an amateur jazz group. After his freshman year, he quit school and took a part-time job at a café next to the Bop Shop where he met trumpeter Brad Goode, who took Berman under his wing, became his trumpet instructor, and even gave him his first real trumpet. Goode suggested that he take music theory lessons, so Berman studied with Tom Tallman at the College of DuPage in nearby Glen Ellyn.

Berman took a job at Jazz Record Mart in Chicago, and struggled to play well enough to work with professional musicians, but in a couple years decided that a career in jazz was unattainable. He moved to Macomb, Illinois, in 1994, and enrolled at Western Illinois University, intending to become a social worker. On his third day at WIU, he met Dr. Bruce Briney, the WIU trumpet professor. Berman was now convinced that he could develop a career in music, so he majored in music and completed his degree in 1998.

After returning to Chicago during the summer of 1998, Berman resumed his day job at Jazz Record Mart, and practiced at the store each evening after it closed. He began playing jazz with various musicians such as Bill Dixon, Ab Baars, Ken Vandermark, Rob Mazurck, Jeb Bishop, Keefe Jackson, Jason Adasiewicz, Aram Shelton, Bobby Conor, and Steve Dawson, often composing the pieces he performed. By 2007, he was ready to release his first album, Old Idea, for the Delmark label. Subsequent albums include Several Lights (Delmark), Live at WIST (self-produced), and Last Distractions (Delmark). He has also performed on many other albums for various artists, and has appeared at New York's Festival of New Trumpet Music, organized by Dave Douglas. Berman is a frequent collaborator with dance artists in Europe, Canada, and the United States.

Berman is a cofounder of Umbrella Music Group, and is vice president of the Emerging Improvisors' Organization. He leads the Chicago Luzern Exchange ensemble and his own groups, Josh Berman's Old Idea, and Josh Berman and His Gang.

Bibl.: Margasak, Peter. "Josh Berman's Old Idea" (Chicago Reader, June 4, 2009); "Josh Berman" (http://joshberman.net).

Berman, Sonny [Saul] (b. New Haven, Connecticut, Apr. 21, 1925; d. New York, New York, Jan. 16, 1947). American trumpeter. Berman was a student of Charles Colin, and joined Louis Prima's band at the age of fifteen. He later played with the bands of Sonny Dunham, Tommy Dorsey, Harry James, Boyd Raeburn, George Auld, and Benny Goodman. He was rarely featured as a soloist until joining Woody Herman's First Herd in 1945 at the age of nineteen. There, he shared the solo spot with Pete Candoli.

Berman was a fan of Louis Armstrong, but was mostly influenced by Roy Eldridge and Dizzy Gillespie. He developed his solo skills in Herman's Woodchoppers, a nonet consisting of players from the big band. Some of his finest solos were Sidewalks of Cuba, Let It Snow! Let It Snow! Let It Snow!, Your Father's Mustache, and Nocturne. He was heard quite a bit on the radio and through recordings for Eso, Joyce, Dial, Esoteric, Onyx, and Columbia. His most representative album is Jazz Immortal (Eso, 1946).

Like many jazz musicians during the 1940s, Berman was a heroin addict. After the Herman band broke up in 1946, little was heard of Berman. Unfortunately, drugs caused him to have a fatal heart attack while playing an all-night jam session. He was twenty-one years old.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XX e Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bernard, André (b. Gap, France, Apr. 6, 1946). French trumpeter and conductor. Bernard studied at the conservatory in Grenoble, receiving first prize in trumpet in 1964. He then attended the conservatory in Marseille before studying with Ludovic Vaillant at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize in trumpet in 1969. He embarked on a very successful career as soloist, specializing on piccolo trumpet and recording many albums of Baroque and Classical solos. He formed trumpet and organ duos with Edgar Krapp and Jean-Louis Gil.

During the early 1980s, Bernard decided to become a conductor, having studied Italian opera with Bruno Bartoletti, and German repertoire with Carlo Maria Giulini. In 1982, he became the principal conductor of the New Symphony Orchestra in London, as well as the conductor of the London Chamber Orchestra. He has served as a guest conductor with such organizations as the London Symphony Orchestra, Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, London Philharmonic Orchestra, Mozarteum Orchestra Salzburg, Orchestre de la Suisse Romande, and Prague State Opera orchestra, and has conducted concerts in leading venues around the world. He is the principal guest conductor of the Hungarian Symphony Orchestra, Irish Chamber Orchestra in Dublin, Sinfonica Abruzzen in Italy, and the Janáček Philharmonic Orchestra.

Bernard has released over twenty albums as trumpeter and conductor for such labels as Sony Classical, CBS, Philips, and Decca.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); André Bernard's official website: http://andre-bernard.com.

Bernstein, Steven [Michael] (b. Washington, District of Columbia, Oct. 8, 1961). American trumpeter and slide trumpeter. Bernstein's first trumpet teacher was Peter Hanson. While attending Berkeley High School in the San Francisco Bay area, he studied with Warren Gale and John Coppola. His first professional experience as a jazz musician was with Peter Appelbaum's band Realization that played at bars, parties, and similar occasions.

Bernstein moved to New York City after graduating from high school. He attended Columbia University and played in various Haitian and Latin bands for ten years. He also studied at New York University for a while under the legendary lead player, Jimmy Maxwell. In addition, he studied arranging for two semesters with Jim McNeely.

Steven Bernstein's career skyrocketed when he became the musical director of The Lounge Lizards and played in a trio known as Spanish Fly. Since 1995, his own group, Sex Mob, has become quite well known and has released numerous recordings. His playing of trumpet, slide trumpet, alto horn, and mellophone can be heard on over one hundred recordings, including the solo albums Diaspora Suite (Tzadik), Big Four Live (Hatology), Diaspora Hollywood (Tzadik), Diaspora Blues (Tzadik), Big Four (Bob Blumenthal), and Diaspora Soul (Tzadik).

As an arranger, Bernstein's music can be heard on the movie soundtracks of Kansas City and Get Shorty, among others. He also composes and arranges for children's television shows, and artists such as Aretha Franklin, Mel Tormé, Sting, Linda Ronstadt, Courtney Love, Don Byron, Bootsy Collins, and many others. Currently, he is also a member of Levon Helm's Midnight Ramble group (since 1992), the Millennial Territory Orchestra, and is a leading jazz trumpeter in the New York area.

Bibl.: Erdman, Thomas. "Steve Bernstein Talks About Life As A Chameleon" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2010); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Steven Bernstein" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Berntsen, Neal (b. Tacoma, Washington, Oct. 29, 1959). American trumpeter. Berntsen grew up in Tacoma. His mother first started him on violin at age five; he began playing the trumpet at age eight. He studied trumpet with David Leavens, (who married Berntsen's oldest sister and was a student of Joseph Alessi Sr.) from age eight until graduating from Washington High School in 1978. He then studied with Manny Laureano from 1978 to 1982 at the University of Puget Sound, where he received his bachelor of music degree and earned a master of music degree studying with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University in 1983. He also studied with Adolph Herseth and Arnold Jacobs.

Berntsen is a former member of the Grant Park Symphony Orchestra (1989-97), Lyric Opera Orchestra of Chicago (1991-97), Ravinia Festival Orchestra (principal, 1994-97), Bamberg Sinfoniker (principal, 1992), and has been a member of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra since March of 1997. He has performed and recorded with the Pittsburgh Symphony Brass and is a member of the award-winning Asbury Brass Quintet. In 2005, he toured Japan with members of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra brass section (Chicago Brass Soloists), and has been a featured trumpet soloist with the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra and the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra. In 1988, he was a finalist at the Maurice André International Trumpet Solo Competition, as well as the Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition.

As an educator, Berntsen has taught at Valparaiso University of Indiana (1990), Duquesne University (1996-2006), and is currently chair of the brass division at Carnegie Mellon University where he has taught since 2005. He began an association with the Brevard Music Center in Brevard, North Carolina (summers since 2009), and is principal trumpet of the Brevard Music Center Orchestra. He has also been an active studio player. His solo CD of overdubbed trumpet ensemble music is titled Trumpet Voices (Four Winds).

Berntsen and his wife Karen (Principal Information Architect, Carnegie Mellon University) have three children: Molly (b. 1991), Jacob (b. 1994), and Charles (b. 1997). His hobbies include gardening. He is also a certified Pennsylvania Interscholastic Athletic Association basketball official.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); personal interview, Apr. 22, 2012.

Berry, Emmett (b. Macon, Georgia, July 23, 1915; d. Cleveland, Ohio, June 22, 1993). American trumpeter. Berry grew up in Cleveland, Ohio, and was strongly influenced by Louis Armstrong. The youngest of three children of a factory laborer, he turned professional in 1932 when he went on the road with The Chicago Nightingales. He moved to New York City the following year and freelanced, mostly in the Albany area. His big break came when he replaced Roy Eldridge in Fletcher Henderson's orchestra in 1936, performing as Henderson's main soloist until June 1939. After leaving Henderson, Berry became a staff arranger for the Benny Goodman band. He also played for a while with Horace Henderson (1940), Earl Hines (1940), Teddy Wilson (1941-42, 1943-44), Raymond Scott's CBS Orchestra (1942-43), Lionel Hampton (1943-45), Don Redman, Benny Carter (1943), John Kirby's Sextet (June 1944), Eddie Heywood (1944), and Count Basie (1944-50) where he shared solos with Harry "Sweets" Edison. Berry recorded with Benny Carter (1941), Billie Holiday (1942), Edmund Hall (1943), and Don Byas (1944).

After Basie died in 1950, Berry found temporary work in New York City as an elevator operator. However, it wasn't long before he performed and recorded with Buck Clayton (1951, 1959, 1961), Jimmy Rushing, Johnny Hodges (1951-54), Earl Hines, Cootie Williams (1955), Sammy Price (touring Europe and North Africa in 1955), Fletcher Henderson Reunion Orchestra (1957), Jo Jones, Al Sears, and Coleman Hawkins. Berry also recorded on some of the Count Basie reunion sessions. He recorded for Savoy (1944), Columbia (1956, 1959), Steplechase, TBC, and Storyville. He opened a retail music store in New York City in 1958. During the 1960s, he worked mostly in Los Angeles as a Dixieland player with Wilbur de Paris, Peanuts Hucko, Big Chief Moore, Earl Hines (1966), and Buddy Tate (1969). He also toured Europe with Buck Clayton (1961).

Berry appeared with Teddy Wilson's Sextet in a film titled Boogie Woogie Dream (1941). He can also be seen in a video called The Sound of Jazz (Vintage Jazz Classics) from footage taken in 1957. Another video is called Buck Clayton All-Stars (1961, Shanachie). In 1970, Berry began having health problems. He retired to his hometown of Cleveland where he lived quietly for twenty-three years. He passed away just one month before his seventy-eighth birthday.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Morbrook, Joe. "Jazzed in Cleveland" (www.cleveland.oh.us/wmv_news/jazz106.htm); "Emmett Berry" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Berry, William Richard ("Bill" "Beez") (b. Benton Harbor, Michigan, Sept. 14, 1930; d. Los Angeles, California, Nov. 13, 2002). American trumpeter and cornetist. Berry's parents were traveling dance band musicians who happened to be performing in Benton Harbor, Michigan, when Bill was born. Bill began playing the piano at age five, and took up the trumpet at age fourteen. He was a professional jazz player by age seventeen, touring the Midwest with various territorial dance bands. Trumpet players that influenced him included Bunny Berigan, Roy Eldridge, Charlie Shavers, Clifford Brown, and Buck Clayton.

Berry joined the Army in 1951. When his service obligation was completed, he studied at the Cincinnati Conservatory (1954) and the Berklee College of Music (1955 and 1957). His first lessons were with trombonist John Coffey at Berklee. He joined the big bands of Herb Pomeroy (1956), Woody Herman (1957-58, 1960), Maynard Ferguson (1961), Duke Ellington (1961-63) and Thad Jones-Mel Lewis (1965-68). He was also Duke Ellington's librarian.

Bill Berry moved to New York City where he joined NBC's staff of musicians (1964-71). He played first trumpet in the television house band for The Merv Griffin Show (1965-80) and led his own big band. When Griffin moved to Los Angeles in 1971, Berry relocated to California in order to continue with the show. In Los Angeles, he organized the Los Angeles Big Band, an all-star group that included Cat Anderson and several other former Ellington band musicians. Having kept copies of many of Ellington's charts, Berry's band became almost a ghost band for the Duke, recording several albums for various labels. Berry also worked with the bands of Louie Bellson and Benny Carter, played in the Los Angeles studios, and performed jazz in combo settings. He was also the head of the Monterey Jazz Festival education program. He and his wife Betty often organized Jazz Party, a jam session that united Japanese and American musicians.

During his long career, Bill Berry performed and recorded with top musicians including Woody Herman, Maynard Ferguson, Duke Ellington, Johnny Hodges, Thad Jones, Mel Lewis, Coleman Hawkins, Earl Jones, Jake Hanna, Scott Hamilton, the Juggernaut, Dave Pell, and Jack Sheldon. He formed a partnership with Mundell Lowe to start their own record label. Some of Berry's albums include Hello Rev (Concord Jazz), Shortcake (Concord Jazz), For Duke (Miramar), Halloween Party (Columbia River), The Ellington All-Stars (Drive Archives), and Man With A Horn (Parade). He also ghosted the trumpet solos for Frank Sinatra Jr. in the 1966 film, A Man Called Adam.

Bill Berry died at the age of seventy-two on November 13, 2002 from lung cancer. He was survived by his wife Betty, son William, and daughter Lisa. He always stated that he preferred the cornet over the longer trumpet because his arms were short, and he could use a plunger mute more easily. He was a leading figure in the world of big bands, and one of its finest trumpet and cornet soloists.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bill Berry" (www.jazzprofessional.com).

Berton, Gaétan (b. Esves-le-Moutier, France, Mar. 7, 1936). French trumpeter. Berton, an exceptionally versatile performer, studied with Marcel Papaïx, and at the Paris Conservatory with Raymond Sabarich. Beginning in 1960, he was professor of trumpet at the Tours Conservatory, and since 1970 has been the leader of the Beriella Trumpet Quartet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Berwaerts, Jeroen (b. Hasselt, Belgium, Feb. 23, 1975). Belgian trumpeter. Berwaerts studied in Belgium with Benny Wiame before enrolling in the Academy of Music in Karlsruhe, Germany, where he studied with Reinhold Friedrich (1996-2000). He embarked on a series of successful solo competitions during the late 1980s and early 1990s, winning prizes in Brussels, Paris, and Prague. Subsequently, he became a featured soloist throughout Europe.

Berwaerts's solo CD is titled In the Limelight. He has also performed and recorded with the Canadian Brass. He became principal trumpet of the NDR-Radio Symphony Orchestra in Hamburg in 1999. Since 2008, he has taught at the High School of Music and Theater in Hannover. He is also an accomplished jazz singer, having taken voice lessons in Prague.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Jeroen Berwaerts's official website: www.jeroen-berwaerts.de.

Besançon, André (b. Lausanne, Switzerland, Feb. 26, 1946). Swiss trumpeter and composer. Besançon studied at the Heimastadt Conservatory, and from 1967 to 1969 was a member of the Symphony Orchestra of St. Gallen. Since 1969, he has been principal trumpet of the Lausanne Chamber Orchestra. He was a member of the Saint Jean Brass Quartet, and has performed with Maurice André and Joszef Molnar. He taught at the Collège de Cuivres de Suisse Romande from its inception in 1985. Besançon has composed works for trumpet including Philosolo for trumpet and brass octet or piano (Editions BIM), 70 Progressive Etudes (United Music Publishers), Spot for trumpet and piano (UMP), and 15 Etudes éclectiques (UMP).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "André Besançon" (www.editions-bim.com/composers/besancon-andre).

Besson, Gustave Auguste (b. near Paris, France, 1820; d. Paris, France, 1874). French manufacturer. Besson first worked at the Dujarier (or Dujariez) shop (1831), and in 1837 opened his own workshop. Besson produced his first cornet at the age of eighteen. He opened a branch of his factory in 1851. After a series of lawsuits with rival Adolphe Sax, Besson left Paris and moved to London where he opened another factory in 1853. The Paris and London factories had distribution warehouses in Brussels, Charleroi, Madrid, and Barcelona. He standardized trumpet conception in 1856 by making several parts of the instrument uniform in design. He improved the Périnet valve, then continually made improvements on valve mechanisms, and was the first to develop steel mandrels for standardizing various component shapes such as leadpipes and bells. The history of the Besson company after Gustave's death in 1874 is worth discussing because several Besson names are associated with it, and much confusion exists.

When Besson died, the London firm was taken over by his widow Florentine [Ridoux] Besson. Florentine Besson trumpets were produced between 1873 and June of 1895, when the London factory passed into British ownership and separated from the French Besson firm. Florentine died in 1877. From 1877 to 1895, both firms were managed by Marthe Josephine Besson, daughter of Gustave and Florentine.

In 1880, Marthe married Adolphe Fontaine but kept her maiden name of Besson. Through common-law marriage rights, Fontaine became an equal owner of the Besson company that included both factories. The company was renamed Fontaine-Besson. He managed the Paris branch and helped Marthe run the London branch. However, marriage difficulties prompted Marthe to sell the London factory to an employee named Arthur Bryans on May 15, 1895. When Bryans attempted to sell the London factory to another firm, Fontaine entered into litigation against his wife, claiming that she had no authority to sell the London factory without his consent. A judge determined that the sale was legal, but required that Fontaine be paid for the English rights to a patent on G. Besson's contrabass clarinet. From mid 1895 on, the original Besson company was split into two separate companies: Fontaine-Besson (French) and Besson & Company (English).

Both the Paris and London companies flourished for decades. The French firm produced two popular trumpet models, the "Meha" and the "Brevetée" which became the leading instruments during the 1930s and early 1940s. After the Paris factory was destroyed during World War II, several American trumpet makers, including Vincent Bach, Renold Schilke, Elden Benge, F. E. Olds, and Dominic Calicchio, attempted to copy the Meha trumpet, but none were completely successful. The Meha remains a popular trumpet today, although it is increasingly difficult to obtain.

During his life, Gustave Auguste Besson had over fifty original inventions, including the double-bass clarinet and a family of cornophones. The London-based Besson company was acquired by Boosey & Hawkes in 1948.

Bibl.: www.besson.com; "Gustave Auguste Besson" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Myers, Arnold and Niles Eldredge. "The Brasswind Production of Marthe Besson's London Factory" (The Galpin Society Journal, LIX).

Best, Johnny [John McClanian Best Jr.] (b. Shelby, North Carolina, Oct. 20, 1913; d. La Jolla, California, Sept. 19, 2002). American trumpeter. Although never a big name soloist such as Louis Armstrong, Harry James, or Ray Anthony, Johnny Best was one of the top big band trumpeters during the swing era. He started on piano, but switched to trumpet at the age of thirteen. His first paying job came two years later, with a local jazz band led by a barber.

After graduating from high school in 1932, Best enrolled at the University of North Carolina, playing with the Duke Blue Devils (for six months) and the university dance band. Struggling to earn enough money to stay in school, he moved to New York City and joined the musicians' union. He worked odd jobs during the required six-month residency requirement, but was offered a position with the Artie Shaw band after only three months. Shaw promised him that touring with the band would not cause him to lose his first three months residency, and that Shaw could fix things with the president of the union. But, during a recording session a few months later, Shaw expressed dissatisfaction with Best's solo work. After being fired, Best returned to New York and found that the union had dropped his membership.

Best found work with Hank Biagnini (1933-34) and the Les Brown Orchestra (1934-37). He played briefly with Charlie Barnet, and then joined the Glenn Miller band (1939-42), recording many of Miller's hits during the pinnacle of Miller's success. When Miller joined the Army, Best played for a short while with Bob Crosby, performing hundreds of live radio broadcasts. Then, in 1942, Best joined the Navy where he was assigned to play with his former boss, Artie Shaw (1942-43). Best was reassigned to Sam Donahue's band from 1944-45.

After discharge from his military duties, Johnny Best became a member of the Benny Goodman Orchestra (1945-46). After leaving the band, he moved to Hollywood and became a studio musician and member of Bob Crosby's band. Best also played with Billy May's orchestra in 1950-55, recorded with Ray Anthony (1954), and recorded and toured throughout Europe and South America with the Ray Conniff Orchestra. Best always said that his finest work was done while with Conniff. Best toured Japan with singer Bob Crosby in 1964. He also led his own band during much of the 1960s. From 1969 on, he took part in the Pasadena Jazz Party. Throughout the 1970s, Best played on and off with the World's Greatest Jazz Band.

Best had a serious fall in 1982 that broke his back. He was paralyzed from the waist down and confined to a wheelchair for the rest of his life. Although his right arm was somewhat numb at times, he managed to continue playing on a part-time basis, mostly with Glenn Miller reunion bands, Bob Crosby, and at Dixieland festivals. During an Australian tour in 1996, he lost his beautiful wife Mary Lou due to a ruptured appendix. He moved to San Diego where he purchased an orchard, and continued playing for fun.

Johnny Best was an affable and modest man. He once described his own playing as "mediocre Louis Armstrong." Although he did not record any albums as leader, he is considered a champion of the big band era. He listed Stardust by Hoagy Carmichael as his personal favorite trumpet solo. Best died at the age of eighty-eight.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Johnny Best" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Johnny Best Tribute Page: www.johnnybest.org; "Johnny Best" (www.jazzconnectionmag.com).

Betancor, Ismael (Moya, Palmas, Grand Canary Islands, Spain, Oct. 12, 1976). Spanish trumpeter. Betancor attended the Conservatorio Superior de Musica in Las Palmas and the Academia des Gran Canaria

Philharmonic Foundation. His teachers were Alejandro Castañeda Martinez and Santiago Luri. After receiving his diploma at age eighteen, he became acting principal trumpet of the Gran Canaria Philharmonic Orchestra. He later studied with Huug Steketee in Holland, Guy Touvron and Eric Aubier in France, George Vosburgh and Raymond Mase in the U.S., and Tamás Velenczei in Germany.

Since 1997, Betancor has been principal of the Gran Canaria Philharmonic Orchestra, and since 2003 has also been a member of the Chromos Trio, consisting of trumpet, piano, and cello. The trio has released a CD on the Crystal Records label titled Trumpet Colors, which includes a variety of styles such as free jazz, blues, boogie, etc. Betancor is a fine soloist who has won several prizes in competitions in Spain and Finland.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Trumpet Colors (www.crystalrecords.com).

Betts, Nicholas ("Nick") (b. c1969). British trumpeter. Betts was a member of the Young Musicians Symphony Orchestra and the European Community Youth Orchestra. He received a scholarship to attend the junior department of the Guildhall School of Music and Drama, and at age seventeen became a fulltime student there. In 1989, he won the Barry Kerry and Leonard Rice Memorial Prize for Trumpet, as well as the Philip Jones Prize for Brass. He studied with Ray Simmonds, Rod Franks, and James Watson.

After graduating, Betts began freelancing in London, where he worked with several major orchestras, musical pit orchestras, and in television and film. In 1995, he became the principal of the Bergen Philharmonic Orchestra in Norway. He returned to London in 1997 to become the principal of the City of London Sinfonia, and in 2002 was also named coprincipal of the London Philharmonic Orchestra. In addition, he is an active soloist.

Bibl.: Mortenson, Gary. "The Trumpet Section of the London Philharmonic Orchestra" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2005); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bierlmeier, Josef (b. Waldmünchen, Germany, Sept. 28, 1958). German trumpeter. Bierlmeier's first lessons were with his father, and from 1974 to 1976 with Rolf Quinque at the Richard Strauss Conservatory. He continued his studies with Walter Uhlemann from 1977 to 1979.

Bierlmerer began his career with the Philharmonisches Staatorchester Hamburg, and since 1984 has been principal trumpet of the Rundfunkorchester des Bayerischen Runkfunks. He is also a member of the Munich Brass and the German Brass ensembles.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Biggs, Philip (b. Cambridge, England, Apr. 28, 1954). British cornetist, author and publisher. Philip's father Clifford was a railway man, nursing attendant, security officer, and fine amateur euphonium player who instilled a love of brass music in his son. At age six, Philip began playing cornet, taking lessons from his father and uncle until he entered high school, when he studied with Bill Speller. His band director and mentor was David Read, a person who greatly influenced Biggs from age eighteen to thirty.

After graduating from high school in 1970, Biggs attended the Cambridge College of Arts and Technology as an electronics major, graduating in 1974. He performed with several brass bands including the Cambridge Brass Band. His desire was to promote brass music throughout Europe, and to unify the various brass bands on the continent. In 1996, he founded and directed Philip Biggs Brass Festivals, which organized numerous competitions and concerts. He was also named the manager of the 1997 European Brass Band Festival. In 2002, his organization administered the International Trumpet Guild Conference in Manchester, England. In 2003, he launched an international magazine titled The Brass Herald, now the leading publication covering brass activities in Europe; Biggs serves as Editor and Chief of this notable journal.

Biggs and Ruth Biggs, office administrator for The Brass Herald, were married in 1984 and have a daughter, Alice (b. 1989). Biggs enjoys watching sports, and is interested in politics. In 2003, he was made a Freeman of the Worshipful Company of Musicians of the City of London and afforded the Freedom of the City of London. In the following year, this organization appointed him to the position of Liveryman.

Bibl.: "Philip Biggs" (www.brassbandsummerschool.com/?page=staff&staffID=2); personal interview, May 25, 2011.

Bilgen, Erden (b. Kars, Turkey, Aug. 7, 1950). Turkish trumpeter and composer. Bilgen's first lessons were with his father, Selim Bilgen. He then studied with the legendary Cemal Cimcoz from 1962 to 1964, and with Herman Neuling and Hans Nicolai at the Izmir State Conservatory from 1964 to 1969. He continued studying trumpet with Jean Claude Bayeaux, and composition with Ercivan Saydam at the Ankara State Conservatory where he graduated in 1971. He completed his master of music degree at the Rheinische Musikhochschule in Düsseldorf in 1978.

Bilgen played with the Presidential Symphony Orchestra in Turkey from 1971 to 1978, and during the early 1980s appeared on Turkish television many times as a performer of pop, jazz, classical, and Turkish folk music. In 1985, he became a founding faculty member of the Freiburg School of Jazz in Germany. He was associate principal trumpet of the Essen Philharmonic Orchestra, and since 1991 has been a member of the State Symphony Orchestra in Izmir, Turkey. He has toured throughout the world as a soloist, and has recorded a CD titled Erden Bilgen Plays Music For Trumpet. He also leads his own brass quintet.

Bilgen received the title of "State Soloist" from the Turkish Ministry of Culture in 1991.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Erden Bilgen's official website: http://erdenbilgen.com.

Bilger, David E[dward] (b. Brookfield, Wisconsin, Aug. 28, 1961). American trumpeter. Bilger began playing cornet, and switched to trumpet during high school. He studied with Dennis Najoom in Milwaukee before attending the University of Illinois, where he studied with David Hickman and Ray Sasaki. After receiving his bachelor of music degree in 1983, he attended The Juilliard School in New York, where he was a student of Mark Gould. Additionally, he has studied with Renold Schilke, Ronald Romm, Fred Mills, and Thomas Stevens at the Banff Centre of the Arts in Canada during the summer of 1980.

Bilger was a member of the National Repertory Orchestra during the summer of 1981, and was a winner of the Young Artists Guild competition in New York, which launched his early career as a soloist. In the mid 1980s, he toured extensively as a soloist and as a member of the New York Trumpet Ensemble. He was appointed coprincipal of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra around 1985, and named principal in September of 1988. In 1995, he became principal trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra, a position he continues to hold. He has taught at the Curtis Institute of Music since 1997, and is often an adjunct faculty member at Temple University. He has also served as an adjunct faculty member at Swarthmore College, Catholic University, Rice University, University of North Texas, and the University of Georgia. In addition, he has taught at the Pacific Music Festival and the National Orchestral Institute.

Although a major figure in the orchestral trumpet world, Bilger has been a guest soloist with many orchestras, including the Dallas Symphony, Philharmonia Virtuosi of New York, Indianapolis Chamber Orchestra, Orchestra of Saint Luke's, Houston Symphony, Oakland Symphony, and many others. He performed Tomasi's Trumpet Concerto while touring North and South America as a soloist with the Philadelphia Orchestra. He has also appeared with numerous ensembles as a chamber music performer.

Bilger has recorded for the Delos and Summit labels, and with composer Meg Bowles, has recently released a CD of new electro-acoustic music for trumpet and synthesizers. He has presented recitals at the conferences of the International Trumpet Guild, and has appeared with the Canadian Brass, Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, the Paul Whiteman Orchestra, and the Empire Brass. He and his former wife Cynthia have a daughter Emily, and sons Richard and Abraham. He is currently married to Angela Bilger (since 2010), and they have a son named Andreas (b. Jan. 12, 2012).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "David Bilger" (www.bachbrass.com); "David Bilger: Trumpet" (www.curtis.edu/hrml/20320.shtml); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bimson, Gareth (b. Liverpool, England, Aug. 4, 1959). British trumpeter. Bimson's father was a policeman and amateur saxophonist. His older brother John became principal horn of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra. Gareth started playing piano and soon, the cornet. He played in school bands, and later joined the Liverpool Brass Band, Merseyside Youth Orchestra, and the National Youth Orchestra of Great Britain, where he studied with Ernest Hall. Bimson won a scholarship to attend the Royal College of Music to study with David Mason. He later studied with Bob Walton and Michael Laird.

Bimson's big break occurred in the late 1970s, when he was selected as a substitute for the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra's European tour. From 1979 to 1983, he freelanced in London, where he performed as guest principal with all of the leading orchestras of the city. He regularly played with the English Chamber Orchestra, and in 1983 replaced his former mentor Ernest Hall as coprincipal of the BBC Symphony Orchestra. Bimson is married and has a daughter named Lauren. His hobbies include golf.

Bibl.: Hurrell, Martin. "The BBC Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Sept. 1995); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Binder, Werner (b. Buch am Wald, Germany, Jan. 16, 1945). German trumpeter. Binder studied at the State Conservatory in Würzburg. He was principal trumpet of the Munich Philharmonic from 1964 to 1975, and since 1975 has been principal of the Bavarian Radio Symphony Orchestra. He has also recorded with the Munich Brass Soloists.

Binder's hobby is fishing.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bing, William ("Bill") (b. Baltimore, Maryland, Feb. 12, 1947). American trumpeter and conductor. Bing grew up in the Detroit area. He began playing the trumpet in 1960; his teacher was Gordon Smith (1960-63). He attended the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan during his junior and senior years of high school, studying with Clifford Lillya, Gordon Mathie, and Ray Lichtenwalter. After graduating from high school (1965), he enrolled at the University of Michigan where he studied with Clifford Lillya and earned a bachelor of music education degree (1969). After a brief stint at Boston University, Bing moved to Los Angeles to attend graduate school at the University of Southern California (1969-71) where he also studied with John Clyman and James Stamp. Additionally, he studied with Frank Kaderabek (1964-66), Armando Ghitalla (1969-70), Claude Gordon (1978-79), Mannie Klein (1976-80), and Rene Lamart (1986).

Bing began teaching at the California Institute of Technology in 1971, where he has been artist-in-residence and director of bands. He has also taught at California State University-Los Angeles, California State University-Fullerton, Biola College, and California State University-Northridge (1990-2005). In addition to teaching at CIT, Bing is an adjunct faculty member at Occidental College. He has received several teaching awards and has published the texts, The Bing Book (Whipple Music) and Fundamentals for Brass (Balquhidder).

Bing has worked extensively as a freelance musician in the Los Angeles area. He performed with the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra and Los Angeles Opera Orchestra during the 1990s, and has also performed with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Pacific Symphony, California Philharmonic, and many other classical and jazz ensembles. He is currently a member of the Modern Brass Quintet.

Bing and Delores Bing, a cellist and faculty member at the California Institute of Technology, have been married since 1972. His hobbies include magic and golf.

Bibl.: "William Bing" (www.williambing.com); personal interview, Mar. 6, 2011.

Birch, Robert ("Bob") M. (b. Concord, New Hampshire, June 11, 1955). American trumpeter. Birch began playing the trumpet at age nine, taking lessons from John Brookfield (seven and a half years) and Armando Ghitalla (a year and a half). After graduating from Concord

High School in New Hampshire in 1973, he attended the University of New Hampshire where he studied with James West, earning a bachelor of music degree in 1976 (cum laude). From 1976 to 1978, he studied with Dr. Richard Burkart at The Ohio State University, receiving his master of music degree. He became principal trumpet and soloist of the US Navy Band in Washington, D.C. in 1979, performing with the ensemble until 1996. He earned a doctor of musical arts degree at Catholic University in 1991, studying with Adel Sanchez and Steven Hendrickson.

Birch was a founding member of the Bowie Brass Quintet. He is an active soloist and has performed Haydn's Concerto in E-flat with the Boston Pops (John Williams conducting). He has toured Germany as a recitalist with organ (1996), and Japan as a soloist with Keith Bryon's New Sousa Band (1996). He has also toured England with the Brass Band of Battle Creek (1998), Japan with the Washington Opera Orchestra (2002), and Germany with the Washington Bach Consort (2000). He has performed in the sections of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Wolftrap Opera, Washington Chamber Symphony, National Symphony Orchestra, National Gallery Orchestra, Opera Lafayette, Bach Sinfonia, Kennedy Center Opera, Post-Classical Ensemble, Baltimore Opera Orchestra (1996-2002), Concert Artists of Baltimore, and Annapolis Chamber Orchestra. He is currently a member of the National Philharmonic Orchestra, Washington Bach Consort, and the Chesapeake Orchestra. He has also been featured at the conferences of the International Trumpet Guild (1985, 1991, 1999). Birch has taught at Indiana State University, and has been a faculty member at George Washington University since 1990, serving as Professor of Trumpet, Coordinator of Brass and Woodwind Studies, and Associate Director of Bands.

Birch and his wife, cellist Kathy Birch, have three daughters, Katie (b. 1982), Jamie (b. 1984), and Erin (b. 1988). His hobbies include reading, playing golf, staying physically fit, and watching sports.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Robert Birch" (www.gwu.edu/~music/facultybio.html); personal interview, Apr. 19, 2011.

Birkemeier, Richard P. (b. Cedar Rapids, Iowa, Jan. 1, 1952). American trumpeter and conductor. Birkemeier grew up in Madison, Wisconsin. He began playing trumpet at age twelve; his first teachers were Elmer Ziegler and Donald Whitaker. After graduating from James Madison Memorial High School in 1970, he attended the University of Wisconsin, studying with Whitaker and receiving a bachelor of music education degree in 1974. From 1974 to 1976, he studied with Richard Steff at Memphis State University, earning a master of music degree.

Birkemeier was director of bands at Lakeland College from 1976 to 1978. He attended Northwestern University, study-ing with Vincent Cichowicz from 1979 to 1981, and receiving a doctorate in music. (His dissertation is titled The Orchestral Trumpet of the Nineteenth Century.) He then became director of bands and brass at Ohio Wesleyan University from 1981 to 1985. In 1985, he accepted a position as trumpet professor and Brass Coordinator at the Bob Cole Conservatory of Music at California State University, Long Beach (CSULB) where he still teaches. In addition to his teaching, he has served as Associate Dean in the College of the Arts and Vice-Chair of the music department at CSULB.

As a performer, Birkemeier has played with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Memphis Symphony, and Pacific Symphony. A noted authority on nineteenth century brass, he has performed on the historic F trumpet and published articles on that instrument in the Brass Bulletin and the International Trumpet Guild Journal. He has also played the natural (valveless) trumpet with the Los Angeles Baroque Orchestra, Musica Angelica, and the San Luis Obispo Mozart Festival Orchestra.

For the past twenty-five years, Birkemeier has played in and conducted the Americus Brass Band, a professional Civil War replica band from Southern California. As Musical Director since 1989, he has led the group on several national tours, recorded three critically acclaimed CDs, and recorded soundtracks for, or appeared in, numerous films and television shows including Glory, Gettysburg, Geronimo: An American Legend, and Hildago.

Birkemeier served as director of the California Institute for the Preservation of Jazz from 1996 to 2008. He was the site host of the 1996 International Brassfest held at CSULB, which was sponsored by Summit Brass, the International Trumpet Guild, and other brass organizations. He remains an active freelance musician in Southern California.

Birkemeier and Laurie Birkemeier (a retired staff administrator at CSULB) have been married since 1979. His hobby is model trains.

Bibl.: "Richard Birkemeier" (www.csulb.edu/depts/music/brass/richard_birkemeier.html); personal interview, Apr. 24, 2011.

Bishop, Joe (b. Monticello, Arkansas, Nov. 27, 1907; d. Houston, Texas, May 12, 1976). American flugelhornist and composer/arranger. Bishop began playing the piano as a child, and soon switched to trumpet and tuba. He attended Hendrix College before playing tuba with Al Katz's Kittens, and mellophone with Mart Britt's band. He switched to flugelhorn in 1927 and joined the Louisiana Ramblers that played and recorded in Mexico and Texas. Bishop later played flugelhorn with Austin Wylie (1930), Isham Jones (1931-36), Jimmy Gordon (1938), and Cow Cow Davenport (1938).

When Woody Herman formed his band in 1938, Bishop became a charter member. Although he occasionally soloed on flugelhorn, Bishop's main importance to the band was his composing and arranging of tunes. He arranged Herman's first hit song, Woodchopper's Ball, and also composed other hits including Blues Upstairs, Blues Downstairs, Midnight Blue, Blue Flame, and Blue Prelude. Many of these tunes were later recorded by other artists.

Bishop contracted tuberculosis in 1940, and had to drop out of Herman's band. Two years later, he rejoined Herman as an arranger. His illness forced him to retire in 1951. He moved to Saranac Lake, New York, and ran a store for many years, but later moved to Houston, Texas, where he died at the age of sixty-eight. Bishop's beautiful flugelhorn can be heard on several of the early Woody Herman albums and on the recent CD, Blues on Parade (GRP/Decca). Historically, Bishop is one of the first solo flugelhorn players, long before Kenny Baker, Shorty Rogers, and of course, Clark Terry and Art Farmer.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Biviano, Lin (b. c1946). American trumpeter. Biviano's father was a trombonist, and his uncle was a trumpet player. Lin studied trumpet with Donald Reinhardt in Philadelphia, and graduated from the Berklee School of Music (now the Berklee College of Music). His biggest influence in jazz was Chet Ferretti. Biviano built an impressive upper register which he displayed to good affect in the big bands of Maynard Ferguson (1973-74), Buddy Rich, Count Basie (1977), Tony Bennett, Bill Chase, Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra, Glenn Miller, Ella Fitzgerald, Harry James, Frank Sinatra, Mel Tormé, and others. He led his own big band (1974-76) that toured the East Coast, but disbanded it when no record deal could be made with a large record company. Biviano can be heard on over a hundred big band albums made between 1970 and 1990.

Since his playing heydays of the 1970s and '80s, Biviano has conducted various show bands at numerous Atlantic City, New Jersey hotels, has performed in Broadway musicals in New York City such as A Chorus Line, Beatlemania, Mame, and No No Nanette, and has served as musical director of the Lawrence Welk Orchestra. He is an adjunct faculty member at the Berklee College of Music in Boston where he leads The Urban Outreach Ensemble, a jazz group that performs at schools in the area.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct., 2008); "Lin Biviano" (www.berklee.edu/faculty/detail/lin-biviano); "Lin Biviano" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Blaauw, Marco (b. Lichtenvoorde, Holland, Sept. 23, 1965). Dutch trumpeter. Blaauw studied at the Sweelinck Conservatory in Amsterdam and with Pierre Thibaud in Paris, as well as with Reinhold Friedrich and Markus Stockhausen.

Blaauw became interested in new music, and studied with Karlheinz Stockhausen starting in 1998. He developed a new trumpet design based on Bobby Shew's four-valve "Shewhorn" that incorporates two bells. However, Blaauw's design, built for him by Dieter Gärtner, added a fifth valve that allows quarter-tones to be played.

Blaauw is an active soloist and chamber music performer, and is a member of the ensemble, musikFabrik in Cologne, Germany. He has also played with the Dutch Radio Symphony Orchestra, National Polish Radio Symphony, WDR Symphony, Deutsche Oper Berlin, London Sinfonietta, and the Asko/Schönberg Ensemble. He has taught at the Stockhausen courses in Kürten (2003) and the International Summer Courses for New Music in Darmstadt (2004 and 2006). Since 2008, he has been a guest lecturer at the Music College of Lucerne in Switzerland. His four solo CDs are Blaauw (BVHAAST, 2005), HOT (BVHAAST, 2006), Improvisation (World Edition, 2007), and Play Robot Dream (Unsounds, 2010).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Marco Blaauw" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Marco Blaauw's official website: www.marcoblaauw.com.

Black, Bibi (b. c1965). American trumpeter. Black grew up in Alabama. She attended the Interlochen Arts Academy High School in Michigan, graduating in 1983. She then studied at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia where she graduated in 1988. While in Philadelphia, she won the Grahm-Stahl trumpet competition (1985) and the Philadelphia Orchestra Young Artist award (1988). During the 1988-89 season, Black played second trumpet in the Philadelphia Orchestra, becoming the first female trumpet player to ever hold a position in that orchestra.

Black's solo career began in 1987. She has released a CD on the EMI label, another on Chandos (includes works by Arutunian, Pakhmutova, Vainberg), and one on her own private label (works by Haydn, Hummel, Vivaldi). She has been a guest soloist around the world with such orchestras as the London Symphony, Vancouver Symphony, and many others. She was a featured artist at the 1996 International Brassfest in Long Beach, California. Currently, Black is a homemaker in Alabama.

Bibl.: "Bibi Black" (news item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1992).

Black, Larry (b. Dixon, Illinois, Oct. 22, 1940). American trumpeter. Black began playing the trumpet at age ten, and by the age of fifteen was a soloist with several local bands. His teacher was Robert L'Heureux. During his junior and senior years of high school, Black was second trumpet in the Rockford (IL) Symphony Orchestra. He studied with Dr. Maurice Weed at Northern Illinois University (1959-63), earning a bachelor of music education degree. He earned a master of music degree at Northwestern University (1965-66), studying with Vincent Cichowicz, and playing with the Chicago Brass Quintet and Civic Orchestra of Chicago (coached by Adolph Herseth). Additionally, he has studied with Samuel Krauss, John Ware, Raymond Crisara, Arnold Jacobs, and George Vosburgh.

Black played in the first trumpet section of the US Military Academy Band, played principal with the USMA Brass Quintet (1966-69), was third/assistant principal of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra (1969-70), and became third trumpet of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra in 1970, a position he held until 1993 when he voluntarily moved to fourth trumpet. He was principal of the Brevard Music Festival Orchestra during summers (1971-74), and played with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra Brass Quintet and Trio. He retired from the ASO in 2003.

As a teacher, Black has taught in the public schools of West Genesee (NY), Oregon (IL), and in Georgia. He also taught at Kennesaw State University (four years), Georgia State University in Atlanta, Agnes Scot College, West Georgia College, Southern Baptist Theological Seminary in Louisville, Western Carolina University (adjunct since 2005), Brevard (NC) College (since 2004), and Furman University (fall 2006). Among his many students are Christopher Martin, Peter Bond, Robert Dorer, Michael Miller, Micah Wilkinson, Michael Martin, Glenda Smith, Charles Matthiessen, and Kevin Lyons.

Black established the Black Leather Specialties Company in 1979, producing gig bags, mouthpiece pouches, hand guards, and other trumpet accessories. He and his wife Rita are now retired, and live in Brevard, North Carolina, where he performs with several community organizations including the Greenville Symphony, Hendersonville Symphony, Ashville Choral Society Orchestra, Brevard Chamber Orchestra, and the Appalachian Brass Quintet.

Black has two children: Corey Michael (b. 1973) and Thomas Christian (b. 1976). His hobbies include camping, hiking, riding his 1993 FLHS Harley-Davidson motorcycle, and driving his 1974 MGB convertible.

Bibl.: "Larry Black" (www.brevard.edu); "Larry Black" (http://paws.wcu.edu/ulrich/LarryBlackBio.htm); personal interview, Jan. 8, 2011.

Blackburn, Clifford ("Cliff") K. (b. Knoxville, Tennessee, Dec. 25, 1947). American trumpeter and instrument maker. Blackburn grew up in Knoxville, Tennessee. He began playing trumpet at age nine; his first teacher was Dave Durham, and while attending Fulton High School, studied with Jack Thomas, graduating in 1965. He attended Tennessee Technological University from 1965 to 1969, studying with Patrick McGuffey and George Bitzer, and earning a bachelor of science in music degree. He then studied with Leon Rapier at the University of Louisville from 1970 to 1971.

Blackburn was a member of the Nashville Symphony during the 1969-70 season, joined the Louisville Orchestra in 1971, and was also a member of the Louisville Bach Society. After learning brass instrument repair, he began making his own trumpet leadpipes around 1974. These proved to be quite successful, and he soon began selling them commercially through his Blackburn Music Services company. He worked with acoustics expert William T. Cardwell, and around 1983 built his first C trumpet, which was purchased by David Hickman. His instruments became very popular, so he resigned from the Louisville Orchestra in 1987 to devote all of his time to building professional quality instruments and leadpipes under the Blackburn Trumpets name. He and his wife Nancy ("Bunny") moved to Decatur, Tennessee, and established a home with an adjoining workshop in 1987. Although demand for his instruments has increased over the years, he still personally handcrafts his trumpets and leadpipes, along with his assistant Tina Erickson.

Clifford and Nancy were married in 1969, and have two children: Cassandra (b. 1976) and Thomas (b. 1979). His hobbies include competitive handgun shooting. He also teaches classes on handgun safety and use.

Bibl.: personal interview, Aug. 10, 2011.

Blackburn, Roger (b. Parkersburg, West Virginia, c1944). American trumpeter. Blackburn attended Asbury College in Kentucky and Westminster Choir College in New Jersey before studying with Samuel Krauss at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. In 1969, he won a Fulbright Scholarship that enabled him to study in Vienna with Helmut Wobisch.

Blackburn's orchestral career began in the Israel Philharmonic, and then as associate principal trumpet of the Houston Symphony Orchestra. He became coacting principal of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra during the 1972-73 season, but left the orchestra for personal reasons before the end of his contract. He joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as fourth trumpet in 1974, and during his long tenure there also performed as acting principal on several occasions.

A gospel and barbershop singer, Blackburn released Barbershopping in Brass in 1973, a self-produced album that he performed on trumpet, overdubbing each part. He formed the brass quartet, Philharmonic Flavor, that once included trombonists Glenn Dodson and Joseph Alessi III. In addition, he established 4 His Glory, a gospel vocal quartet that released the albums Let Not Your Heart Be Troubled and Will You Love Jesus More?

Blackburn has performed with the Canadian Brass, Philadelphia Chamber Players, Mozart Society, and the Glencairn Horns of Byrn Athyn. He has taught at Temple University, and has published a book of orchestral excerpts. He and his wife Marilyn have a daughter, Martha. His hobbies include singing and collecting rare old recordings.

Bibl.: "Roger Blackburn" (www.philorch.org/bios.php?page=blackburnroger).

Blair, Stacy Dee (b. Eastland, Texas, Sept. 17, 1954; d. Grand Prairie, Texas, Sept. 17, 2010). American trumpeter. Blair was born partially blind, and his condition worsened with age until he became legally blind at age twenty. He learned to play trumpet by ear from listening to classical recordings of Maurice André and others, eventually memorizing over one hundred fifty concertos. Despite his disability, he had a good sense of humor. When arriving late to a band rehearsal at Eastland High School, he came in holding the side of his face. When his classmates asked him what was wrong, he replied, The phone rang, and I answered the iron! He attended Hardin-Simmons University (1973-77) studying with Bill Owens in Abilene, and then with Leon Rapier at the University of Louisville where he earned a master of music degree in 1979.

Blair launched his solo career by winning the International Trumpet Guild's annual solo competition in 1978, and again in 1979. After graduating, he studied with Adolph Herseth in Chicago for a few months. He won a Fulbright scholarship to study in France with Maurice André from September of 1979 to May of 1980. The Paris Conservatory gave him an Honorary Doctorate. Blair's other teachers included Dave Ritter, John Foster, Bobby Bingham, Bill Spencer, and Richard Giangiulio.

Blair moved permanently to Dallas, Texas, and developed a solo career by performing with numerous bands and orchestras, including Ensemble Orchestral de Paris, Louisville Symphony conducted by Jorge Mester, Orquesta Filharmonica de Unam (Mexico), and the Israel Philharmonic under Maestro Leonard Bernstein. He also toured the United States and fifty-three other countries as a recitalist with piano and organ. Blair has been heard on many radio broadcasts on NPR and the Voice of America. He also appeared on such television shows as Good Morning America (1977), the NBC Today Show and The Tonight Show starring Johnny Carson. One of his solo recordings was nominated for a Grammy Award in 2007.

Blair received the Distinguished Alumni Award from both colleges he attended—Hardin-Simmons University and the University of Louisville. He was inducted into the International Hall of Fame for Persons with Disabilities in 1998, and was awarded the Helen Keller Life Achievement Award in 1995. He held a black belt in jujutsu (1981), and wrote a book titled Cooking Without Looking.

Blair died on his fifty-sixth birthday following a long illness. He is buried in his hometown of Eastland, Texas.

Bibl.: Hardin, Anne. "The Roads They Have Taken: A Look at ITG's Student Contest Winners" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1996); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Stacy Blair website" (www.stacyblair.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Anderson, Charles G. "Trumpeter Blair Remembered for His Courage, Talent" (Abilene Reporter-News, Sept. 20, 2010).

Blakeney, Andrew ("Andy") (b. Quitman, Mississippi, June 10, 1898; d. Baldwin Park, California, Feb. 12, 1992). American trumpeter. Blakeney moved to Chicago at the age of eighteen, and studied trumpet under William L. Jackson (1919 to 1922). He worked as a trumpeter in local bands such as his own Utopia Orchestra (a reading band, 1922) and that of Glover Compton. His first big job was playing for two weeks in King Oliver's band in 1925 (substituting for Tommy Ladnier). He also played that year with Doc Cook's No. 2 Band (as lead trumpet), then the regular band (as second trumpet alongside George Mitchell). Blakeney also did rehearsals with Jelly Roll Morton (1926) and led his own eleven-piece band at the Charleston Café (with Shirley Clay as second cornet).

In 1926, Blakeney moved to Los Angeles and became a studio musician where he was heard on numerous movie soundtracks and radio broadcasts. He recorded jazz with Sonny Clay and Reb Spikes, and performed with Paul Howard, "Tin Can" Henry, Lee Herriford, Les Hite, and Lionel Hampton (1935). From 1936 to 1941, he led his own band in Hawaii, then returned to Los Angeles where he played on and off with Ceele Burke's orchestra and Horace Henderson from 1942 to 1946. He also gained quite a bit of fame in 1947 playing with Kid Ory.

During the late 1940s, '50s and '60s, Blakeney led various Dixieland groups in California. He was well known as a member of the Legends of Jazz as they toured the United States and Europe during the 1970s. His last recordings were with the Eagle Brass Band in 1984. He died of kidney failure in 1992 at the age of ninety-three.

Andy Blakeney appeared in the films Hotel (1966), The Great White Hope (1970), and Mame (1974). His best record albums include The Legends of Jazz (Crescent Productions 1) and Storyville Nights (Verve).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Blakeslee, Rob (b. Portland, Oregon, Sept. 12, 1952). American trumpeter. Blakeslee grew up in the Portland, Oregon, area and was taught by Fred Sautter. Since 1970, Blakeslee has been primarily a West Coast jazz musician, although he lived in Dallas, Texas, from 1983 to 1987 to begin recording for the Daagnim Records label. His first album with them, 2100 New Orleans, did well, and he took a public school teaching job in order to stay there and continue his recording and performing career.

In 1988, Blakeslee was offered a position as director of jazz at Oregon State University in Corvallis. He accepted the job and worked there through 1996. He recorded several albums including Lifestyle

(Nine Winds), Long Narrows (Nine Winds), Against the Grain (Nine Winds), Waterloo Ice House (Louis), Last Minute Gifts (Louis), Dante No Longer Repents (Music & Arts), and Catechism (Music & Arts).

Rob Blakeslee has performed with Andrew Hill, Oliver Lake, John Carter, Anthony Braxton, Vinnie Golia, Wayne Horvitz, and many others. His music is very free in nature, and leans toward the avant-garde. He is a member of the Northwest Creative Music Orchestra, and is cofounder of the Creative Music Guild in Portland.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Rob Blakeslee" (www.ninewinds.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Blanc, Jean-Claude (b. Vauderens, Switzerland, Mar. 29, 1943). Swiss trumpeter. Blanc studied at the Lausanne Music Conservatory, and with Raymond Sabarich at the Paris Conservatory (1960). He is a member of the Lausanne Chamber Orchestra, and has performed with the Berne Symphony Orchestra, Basel Symphony, Geneva Symphony Orchestra, and the Zurich Symphony Orchestra. He was also an active soloist, and recorded with Maurice André. He has taught in Switzerland, Belgium, France, Germany, and Italy.

Now retired, Blanc resides in Lausanne.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Blanchard, Terence Oliver (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Mar. 13, 1962). American trumpeter and composer. Blanchard began playing the piano at age five, and took up the cornet at age eight. His mother Wilhelmina, and father Joseph Oliver Blanchard (an insurance company manager and fine amateur opera singer) saw to it that he received good classical trumpet and piano lessons. After being inspired when jazz trumpeter Alvin Alcorn visited his third grade class in 1970, Blanchard became interested in jazz. He studied with Ellis Marsalis and Roger Dickerson at the New Orleans Center for the Creative Arts (1978-80) and became good friends with Wynton Marsalis. Blanchard's main trumpet influence was Freddie Hubbard. He played with the St. Augustine Marching Band (alongside Leroy Jones) and the New Orleans Civic Orchestra.

After graduating from high school, Blanchard attended Rutgers University for one year. His teacher, William Fielder, recommended him for Lionel Hampton's band. Blanchard toured with Hampton in 1980-82 before replacing Wynton Marsalis in Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1982-86). He received a great deal of exposure with Blakey, but also co-led a group with Donald Henderson from 1984 to 1989, making several albums for the Concord label. Blanchard jammed with Dizzy Gillespie in 1982, Wynton Marsalis in 1982, and performed with Milt Jackson (1986) and Jay McShann (1989).

Things were taking off, musically, for Blanchard, but in 1989 he made the decision to overhaul his trumpet embouchure because the mouthpiece was cutting into his lips each day. He learned to play again with better success, but it took nearly a year for him to settle into the new embouchure. In 1990, he formed his own band which has had tremendous success during the past two decades. A hard bop group, it has recorded extensively for Columbia and Sony.

Terence Blanchard became friends with movie director Spike Lee in 1987. Their association has led to dozens of film projects that utilized Blanchard's excellent compositions and performing talent, including School Daze, Do the Right Thing, Mo' Better Blues (ghosting the trumpet solos portrayed by Denzel Washington), Jungle Fever, Malcolm X (Blanchard appears briefly), Crooklyn, and Clockers. Blanchard has recorded or written for numerous other film productions as well, including Just Wright (he appears at the end of the film), Sugar Hill, Inside Man, She Hate Me, 25th Hour, People I Know, Original Sin, Caveman's Valentine, The Promised Land, Glitter, Dark Blue, Barbershop, and dozens more. He also composed the score for the HBO documentary When the Levees Broke: A Requiem in Four Acts. In Disney's The Princess and the Frog, Blanchard ghosted the trumpet solos played by alligator Louis, and recorded the voice of Earl the bandleader on the riverboat.

Blanchard's CDs (other than the numerous film score recordings listed above) include New York Second Line (George Wein Collection, winning the "Grand Prix du Disque in France, 1984), Nascence (Columbia), Crystal Stair (Columbia), Black Pearl (Columbia), Terence Blanchard (Columbia), Simply Stated (Columbia), The Malcolm X Jazz Suite (Columbia), Jazz in Film (Sony), A Tale of God's Will (Blue Note), Flow (Blue Note), Bounce (Blue Note), Let's Get Lost (Sony), The Heart Speaks (Columbia) and The Billie Holiday Songbook (Columbia). He also appears in the video, Art Blakey: The Jazz Messengers (Rhapsody, 1987).

The record and film industries have shown their appreciation of Terence Blanchard by bestowing him with numerous awards. He received nominations for Grammy Awards in 1990, 1996, 2001, and 2002. He received a Grammy Award in 2005, a Golden Globe nomination in 2003, an Emmy nomination in 1995, a Sierra Award in 2003 for "Best Film Score" (25th Hour), and 2005 and 2007 Black Reel awards for best original score for films Inside Man and She Hate Me, respectively.

Blanchard's home in New Orleans was completely lost due to Hurricane Katrina (2005). He and his wife, plus four children, moved to a suburb of New Orleans where they continue to be strong advocates of the Crescent City's heritage. Blanchard became the artistic director of the Thelonious Monk Institute for Jazz in 2000. He has published an authorized autobiography with Anthony Margo called Contemporary Cat: Terence Blanchard with Special Guests (Scarecrow Press).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Margo, Anthony. Contemporary Cat: Terence Blanchard with Special Guests (Scarecrow Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Terence Blanchard" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Terence Blanchard's official website: www.terenceblanchard.com.

Blank, Isidore ("Izzy") (b. 1916; d. 1972). American trumpeter. Blank grew up on the East side of New York City and studied at the Institute of Musical Art (now The Juilliard School). He performed in Broadway shows such as Four Saints in Three Acts and Anything Goes, and later became first trumpet in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra (1939-72). He was also an active recording artist.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Blee, Eugene (fl. 1950-75). American trumpeter. Blee was principal trumpet of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra from 1956 to 1974 before moving to fourth trumpet. He taught at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music, and recorded Robert Nagel's Concerto for Trumpet and Strings with the Peninsula Festival Orchestra under Thor Johnson. His best-known student is James Wilt.

Bibl.: Johnson, Thor. "Trumpet Concerto (Nagel)" (Composers Records, Inc.); Wilt, James. "Eugene Blee" (Trumpet Herald: www.trumpetherald.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bleyer, Max (fl. 1900-1920). American trumpeter. Bleyer played principal trumpet in the Philadelphia Orchestra during the 1903-04 season. He was also principal of the New York Symphony Society from 1907 to 1909. He began teaching at the Institute of Musical Studies (now The Juilliard School) in 1908.

Bibl.: www.Stokowski.org/Philadelphia_Orchestra_Musicians.htm; Dobrzelewski, J. C. Essential Orchestral Excerpts for Trumpet, Vol. 2 (Hickman Music Editions).

Bloedhorn, Frank (b. Hamm, Westfalen, Germany, Feb. 23, 1964). German trumpeter. Bloedhorn studied with Jochen Weigert from 1980 to 1982 before attending the Folkwang Musikschule in Essen where he studied with Rudolf Lodenkemper from 1982 to 1984. He then studied with Rudolf Hasse from 1984 to 1990, Reinhold Friedrich in Karlsruhe, and Edward Tarr (natural trumpet) in Basel, Switzerland.

Bloedhorn began his career in the Lower Saxony State Theatre Orchestra in 1989. He then joined the Frankfurt Museum Orchestra, and served as a lecturer at the Folkwang College of Music. Since 2001, he has been a member of the Bavarian State Opera orchestra in Munich. He is very much dedicated to brass chamber playing: he has performed with the hr Brass, Bach Brass & Blues, Ensemble 23*12, Frankfurt Chamber Brass, OperaBrass (of the Bavarian State Opera), and Embrassy, and has recorded numerous CDs with these groups. He has also released solo albums of Baroque trumpet music. For his many concerts and master classes throughout Europe, Japan, Bali, United Emirates, and Nicaragua, he received the German Commission for UNESCO award (the official German contribution to the International Year of the United Nations in 2001 for "Dialogue among Civilizations"). Since 2005, he has been an adjunct professor at the Munich School of Music and Dance.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bloom, Milton ("Mickey") (b. Brooklyn, New York, Sept. 9, 1906; d. Las Vegas, Nevada, Oct. 11, 1979). American trumpeter and songwriter. Bloom grew up in Brooklyn. He studied trumpet with Max Schlossberg of the New York Philharmonic. He dropped out of high school to back comedian George Jessel on tour. During the 1920s, he worked in New York City with the St. Louis Five (until 1923) and various theater orchestras. He recorded several tunes for Brunswick with a group known as The Captivators, which drew much attention (1929). Soon, he was playing in bands led by Red Nichols (1929) Walt Rosner, Hal Kemp, Johnny Mince, the Dorsey Brothers, Rudy Vallee (1930s), Ray Noble, Vincent Lopez, and Charlie Barnet (1941). In 1927, he toured Europe and Florida several times with the Irving Aaronson band.

At the beginning of World War II, Bloom enlisted in the US Army, serving at the Santa Ana Air Force Base in California as a member of the AAF Radio Orchestra and the AAF "Winged Victory" Orchestra. For the remainder of the 1940s and '50s, he worked as a studio performer in Hollywood, recording soundtracks for dozens of motion pictures. He did studio work in New York City during the 1960s, and eventually made his way to Las Vegas, where he played in various show bands. His brother, Rube Bloom, was a jazz pianist and composer.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Mickey Bloom" (www.findagrave.com/cgi-bin/fg.cgi?page=gr&GRid=5988018).

Blount, John M. (b. c1965). American trumpeter. Blount graduated from Columbia Tennessee Central High School and attended Middle Tennessee State University. He later studied with Jimmy Maxwell and Bob McCoy at Western Connecticut University. He joined the US

Navy music program in 1984, and enrolled in the Navy School of Music. He served in the US Navy Show Band South, based in New Orleans, and in 1990 was selected to play with the Navy's premiere jazz ensemble, The Commodores. He performed as lead trumpet in the group for fifteen years, touring all of the U.S. and Europe.

Since resuming his civilian career in 2004, Blount has been a freelance trumpeter in the Washington/Baltimore area. He has played lead trumpet with numerous Broadway shows, and in 2007 released the solo album, Better Days Ahead, on the Sea Breeze label. He has a line of signature trumpet mouthpieces made by Greg Black, and has published the book, Trumpet Solfeggio (Charles Colin Publications). He is leader of the John Blount-Dave Tucker Big Band, and has performed with such artists as Doc Severinsen, Arturo Sandoval, Lou Rawls, Maureen McGovern, Natalie Cole, Terry Gibbs, Randy Brecker, Jack Jones, The Four Freshmen, Aretha Franklin, the Glenn Miller Band, the Jimmy Dorsey Band, and many others. He is currently teaching at the Waldorf School in Baltimore.

Bibl.: John Blount's official website: www.jmb-music.com.

Blühmel, Friedrich (fl. 1808-44; d. before 1845). Silesian designer. Blühmel worked in a German coal mine and performed in the mine band. He learned to play the violin and various woodwind instruments before taking up the trumpet and horn in 1808. His main importance to brass instrument history stems from a joint 1818 patent with Heinrich Stölzel for the invention of the so-called "box" valve. In 1819, he invented a type of rotary valve but was unsuccessful in obtaining a patent on it because its function was previously covered in the patent with Stölzel.

The 1818 patent was only granted for ten years. When it expired, Blühmel and Stölzel went separate ways but were entangled in disputes over who had actually invented the valve. Blühmel claimed that he had made the first instrument with valves, and that Stölzel had merely improved upon it. At any rate, Blühmel's and Stölzel's box valves were incorporated into brass instruments manufactured by F. W. Schuster of Karlsruhe until about 1833, and were commonly referred to as "Schuster" valves.

Bibl.: Baines, Anthony. Brass Instruments (Faber & Faber); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Tarr, Edward H. "Friedrich Blühmel" (The New Grove Online).

Blunt, James L. (b. Melbourne, Victoria, Australia, Aug. 13, 1956). Australian trumpeter. Blunt grew up in Sydney, Australia. He began playing the trumpet at age twelve; his teachers were Don Wilson, Geoffrey Bailey, Gordon Webb, and John Robertson. After graduating from high school in 1974, he attended Sydney University from 1975 to 1978, studying with Gordon Webb and briefly, with Lewisson Campbell. He also studied with Edward H. Tarr (natural trumpet) in Basel, Switzerland, and from 1980 to 1981, with Bruce Dickey (cornetto).

Blunt played in the Australian Broadcasting Commission Training Orchestra in 1977, and from 1978 to 2006 was a member of the Australian Opera and Ballet Orchestra, serving as principal trumpet from 1979 to 2001, and second from 2001 to 2006. Since 1985, he has taught trumpet at the Sydney Conservatorium of Music and the University of New South Wales.

Blunt and his wife Virginia, a violinist with the Australian Opera and Ballet Orchestra since 1987, and director of strings at St. Aloysius College since 2003, have been married since 1989, and have a son, Ben (b. 1991), and a daughter, Emily (b. 1994). Now retired, Blunt enjoys playing solo cornet with Saint Mary's Band Club Brass Band, a competing A-grade brass band, as well as fishing, cooking, and wine and whiskey tasting. He is a longtime car enthusiast, particularly of vintage automobiles, and enjoys reading.

Bibl.: "James L. Blunt Retires" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/news07/666blunt.html); personal interview, Oct. 2, 2011.

Bocage, Peter (b. Algiers, Louisiana, July 21, 1887; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Dec. 3, 1967). American trumpeter. Bocage came from a musical family. He began playing violin at age thirteen with various dance bands in nearby New Orleans, and also learned to play banjo, baritone horn, trombone, mandolin, and xylophone. At age twenty-one (1908), he became the leader of the Superior Orchestra, a popular ragtime band. He taught himself to play the cornet, and from 1910 to 1913 played with Papa Celestin at the Tuxedo Dance Hall. In 1911, he began playing with the Onward Brass Band, and in 1918 joined Fate Marable's band on the Capitol riverboat that traveled up and down the Mississippi River.

By 1919, Bocage was one of the best cornet and trumpet players in New Orleans. He eventually played with almost every professional group in New Orleans including the New Orleans Orchestra (1919-28), Onward Brass Band (beginning in1922) that included Joe "King" Oliver on cornet, the Creole Serenaders (led by Louis Warneke), Piron's New Orleans Orchestra (beginning in 1923) that made recordings for the Victor label, Tuxedo Orchestra (included Louis Armstrong), Emile Barnes's band, and the Eureka Brass Band. He took over the leadership of the Excelsior Brass Band in 1922. He preferred a smoother and softer style of playing than was typical of other cornetists such as Buddy Bolden, Freddie Keppard, and later, Bunk Johnson.

Bocage tired of the music scene and his hectic schedule, and in 1939 temporarily left music to become an insurance salesman. But in 1945, he received an invitation to replace Bunk Johnson in Sidney Bechet's band in Boston, and the opportunity brought him back into the music business. He later returned to New Orleans where he spent his last years performing at Preservation Hall.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Peter Bocage" (www.redhotjazz.com/bocage.html).

Bodart, Dominique (b. Namur, Belgium, Jan. 29, 1969). Belgian trumpeter. Bodart studied with Freddy Dubuisson at the Namur

Conservatory, and earned a diploma from the Royal Conservatory in Brussels. He also attended conservatories in Liège and Chateauroux, studying with Pierre Cox and Bernard Jeannoutot, respectively. He studied with Pierre Thibaud for three years in Paris, and with Friedemann Immer on the natural (valveless) trumpet.

An active soloist, Bodart won several prizes in European competitions, and was selected to play in the Jeunesse Musicales International youth orchestra under Maestro Charles Dutoit. He apprenticed as an orchestral player in the National Orchestra of Belgium (1994-95), Orkest van Vlaanderen (1999-2000), Flemish Broadcasting Orchestra (2000-04), and was assistant principal trumpet of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Luxembourg (2005-06). He was coprincipal of the Tampere Filharmonia in Finland, and was a guest trumpeter with the London Symphony Orchestra in 2006.

Bodart is a professor of trumpet at the Académie d'Eghezée (Belgium) and the Lucien Robert Conservatory in Tamines. In 2005, he served as artistic director of the Théo Charlier Trumpet Competition in Brussels. His two solo CDs are titled French Music for Trumpet and Organ and Virayana.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Dominique Bodart's official website: www.dominiquebodart.com.

Bode, Hans (b. Quakenbrück, Germany, Apr. 4, 1895; d. Oldenburg, Germany, May 19, 1980). German trumpeter. Bode was a pupil of Carl Höhne and Alfred Matthes in Berlin, and was a professor of trumpet at the Berlin Conservatory from 1938 to 1960. Among his best students are Walter Schetsche and Adam Zeyer.

Bode had an active career as an orchestral player. After playing in a Marine Band from 1920-22, he became a member of the Deutsche Oper in Berlin. From 1922-49, he played in the State Opera Orchestra in Unter den Linden, and from 1949 to 1960 played with the RIAS Symphony Orchestra under Ferenc Fricsay. He spent his summers between 1931 and 1965 performing in the Bayreuth Festival Orchestra, where he was acclaimed for his excellent renditions of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto performed on a piccolo F trumpet. He also recorded dance music with Marek Weber.

Bibl: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. "European Cornet and Trumpet Soloists" (Notes to CD produced by the International Trumpet Guild, 2004); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bodenröder, Robert ("Robby") (b. Kriftel/Taunus, Germany, Dec. 16, 1928; d. Selbach [near Baden-Baden], Germany, June 9, 2000). German trumpeter. Bodenröder studied with Fritz Geyer at Dr. Hoch's Conservatory in Frankfurt. In 1955, he was engaged by the dance orchestra of the Saarbrüchen Radio. From that year until 1970, he was in the small formation and thereafter until 1993 in the Symphony Orchestra of the Southwest German Radio in Baden-Baden (third/assistant principal).

From 1972 to 1993, Bodenröder was a professor at the Hochschule für Musik in Freiburg, where one of his pupils was Hannes Läubin. Bodenröder was a skilled performer on the natural (valveless) trumpet, and recorded an LP album with Edward Tarr titled The Art of the Baroque Trumpet. He was also a member of the Collegium Aureum and the Cappella Coloniensis, and recorded extensively including a solo album called Trumpet Tunes & Voluntaries on the MPS label.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bodet, Françis (b. Oyé, France, Aug. 10, 1894; d. Geneva, Switzerland, Apr. 10, 1981). French trumpeter. Bodet studied at the Paris Conservatory with Alexandre Petit in 1914, and then with Merri Franquin.

In 1929, Bodet was a founding member of the Orchestra de la Suisse Romande, in which he played until 1960 (principal trumpet 1929-44). He was the first trumpeter in Switzerland to perform J. S. Bach's difficult Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 (Zurich, 1928). Known equally as a teacher and an orchestral performer, he taught at the Geneva Conservatory (1949-69) and authored several trumpet books and etudes including La technique des lèvres (based on Merri Franquin's principles) and 16 Etudes d'après Bach (Leduc).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Bodet with his daughter.

Bodet, Guy (b. Amboise, France, June 27, 1955). French trumpeter. Bodet's first trumpet lessons were with his stepfather Jean Naudin, a jazz pioneer in the Grégor & Ses Grégoriens band during the 1930s. He then studied with Jean-Paul Burtin at the conservatory in Orleans, and with Roger Delmotte in Versailles. He also studied with Robert Pichaureau (1977-78), Raymond Tournesac (1978), and Albert Calvayrac (1981). Addition lessons were with Christian Martinez and Dominique Brunet.

A gifted jazz trumpeter, Bodet has played with the Marc Robert Big Band (1976-79), Dino Cagnasso Big Band (1980), Gérard Bedini's Super Swing Machine (1986), Bob Quibel Orchestra (television shows in 1987), Michel Pastre Big Band, and for many years with the Claude Bolling Big Band. Other jazz groups include those of Guy Marchand, Sacha Distel, Shirley Bassey, Michèle Hendricks, Guy Lafitte, and Stéphane Grappelli. He is a founder of the Bodet-Penot Quintet, Bodet and Soul Quartet and Trio, and the Mimile Quartet. Although mostly second trumpet and jazz soloist with big bands, Bodet has in recent years become an experienced lead player with the bands of Jean-Pierre Derouard, Michel Pastre, and Attilio Troiano. As a classical performer, he has played with the Municipal Band of Poitiers, Poitiers Brass Quintet, the Jean-Pierre Wallez Chamber Orchestra, and as a soloist with organ.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct., 2008).

Bogard, Rick (b. Beebe, Arkansas, Oct. 29, 1955). American trumpeter. Bogard grew up in Cabot, Arkansas. He began playing the trumpet at age ten, and studied with his high school band director, Jerry Ridgway, and with Donald Kramer and Ronald Bryant. After graduating from Cabot High School in 1973, he studied at the University of Central Arkansas with Ronald Fox for three years and Patrick Hasty for one year. He completed a bachelor of music education degree in 1977, and then earned a master of music degree the following year, studying with Fox at Baylor University. He has also studied with Thomas Booth.

In 1979, Bogard became the assistant band director at Garland High School where he taught for three years before serving as a trumpet teaching assistant at the University of North Texas from 1982 to 1984, studying towards a doctor of music degree with John J. Haynie. He then taught high brass at Eastland College from 1985 to 1992, and completed his DMA degree in 1994, studying with Leonard Candelaria. Since 1989, he has been second trumpet in the Dallas Opera Orchestra (principal during the 1993-94 season), and since 1990 has been on the music faculty at the University of Texas-Arlington. He became a fulltime faculty member at UTA in 2000, and in addition to teaching trumpet is associate chair of the department. He is a former member of the Waco Symphony Orchestra (second trumpet, 1977-78), Arkansas Symphony Orchestra (second trumpet, 1975-77), and Dallas Wind Symphony (1986-90), and has performed with the Fort Worth Symphony and Dallas Chamber Orchestra.

Bogard performed at the 2007 and 2009 conferences of the International Trumpet Guild. He released a solo CD in 2004 titled Trumpet Songs (Centaur), and his book, Daily Warm-Ups and Skill Studies, is published by Gore Publishing Company.

Bogard and his wife Kathy, an accountant, have been married since 1977, and have a daughter, Lauren (b. 1981). His hobbies include golf and bicycling.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Rick Bogard" (www.uta.edu/ra/real/editprofile.php?onlyview=1pid=1263); personal interview, Aug. 29, 2011.

Bogios, Chris G. (b. c1939). American trumpeter. Bogios grew up in a Greek neighborhood in San Francisco. As a boy, he worked in a butcher shop, and purchased his first cornet at age thirteen after saving forty dollars. He brought the instrument home and played Taps after dinner. Ironically, his father, a worker in the shipyards, passed away that night.

Bogios took his first lessons from his junior high band director, Walter Gallitan. After graduating from Balboa High School, he attended San Francisco State College, where he earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1959, studying with Charles Bubb Jr. of the San Francisco Symphony. Years later, he earned a master's degree at the same institution. In the summer of 1959, Bogios was hired by the Boston Pops for a seven-week tour. In 1960, he became a member of the Portland (OR) Symphony Orchestra, and in 1961 won a position in the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra under Maestro Enrique Jorda. During his nearly fifty years with the orchestra, he played third trumpet (1961-63, 1965-79, and 2007-09), and second trumpet (1963-65 and 1979-2007).

Bogios has taught in the San Francisco area public schools and at San Jose State University. In addition to playing with the San Francisco Symphony, he was a member of the San Francisco Opera orchestra during his early career. He and his wife Bev have three children: sons Gus and Jim (both musicians) and daughter Denise.

Bibl.: Cooper, Stefan. "The Trumpet Players of the San Francisco Symphony 1911-1996" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1996); Walsh, Alex. "After All These Years, I Still Love To Play" (www.afm6.org).

Böhme, Max William ("Willi") (b. Potschappel [near Dresden], Germany, Nov. 16, 1861; d. Düsseldorf, Germany, 1928). German trumpeter and composer. The older brother of the more famous Oskar Böhme, Willi studied with Ferdinand Weinschenk at the Leipzig Conservatory. He was principal trumpet of the Budapest Opera Orchestra in Hungary from 1889 to 1908, and was also a member of the Royal Court Opera Orchestra and the Bayreuth Festival Orchestra from 1891 to 1901, with the exception of 1896. From 1897 to 1908, he was the first professor of trumpet at the National Hungarian Royal Academy of Music (now the Franz Liszt Music Academy); his pupil Frigyes Varasdy succeeded him there. In 1908, Böhme opened his own music school in his hometown of Potschappel.

Böhme, a fine composer, wrote two methods for trumpet (Große ausführliche Schule für B-Trompete oder Cornet à Pistons oder Althorn, and Kleine Trompetenschule mit 20 instrumentalen Übangen nebst Fanfaren), as well as numerous works for trumpet and piano (including Polka, Tarantella, Romanze, Schokoladen-Walzer, and Die schönste Blume). His brother Oskar dedicated the composition Souvenir de St. Petersbourg for cornet to him.

Böhme married in 1886.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H., East Meets West (Pendragon Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Böhme, Oskar Wilhelmovich (b. Potschappel, Germany, Feb. 24, 1870; d. Oct. 23, 1938). German cornetist. Oskar's early training was with his father, Heinrich Wilhelm Böhme (1843-?) who was a musician and teacher in a mining band near Dresden. At age fifteen, Oskar traveled as a trumpet soloist until 1894, when he finally settled in Budapest where he became a member of the opera orchestra until 1896. During this time, he studied composition with professor Herzfeld.

Böhme entered the Leipzig Conservatory on November 2, 1896. He studied composition, and admired Ferdinand Weinschenk (for whom he later dedicated his Trumpet Concerto in E Minor). After only one year of school, Böhme moved to St. Petersburg. For the rest of his life, he remained in Russia, where he was known as a cornetist, not a trumpeter. He played in the Mariinsky Theater Orchestra until 1921, and then taught at a music school on Vasilevsky Island. From 1930 to 1934, he played in the orchestra of the Leningrad Drama Theater.

Between 1934 and 1939, Stalin had over eight million persons of German origin arrested. Over 800,000 were executed, and the remaining sent to labor camps. In 1936 while in captivity, Böhme was sent to teach at a music school at the foot of the Ural Mountains, in Chkalov, and is reported to have died there two years later. However, an eyewitness claims to have seen Böhme in 1941, by then an old man, at hard labor on the Turkmenian Channel. The exact date and circumstance of his death may never be known.

Böhme had an older brother, Max William ("Willi"), born in 1861 and a trumpeter (or cornetist) as well. Like Oskar, he also composed. Although both were successful musicians, Oskar was regarded as the more talented of the two.

Böhme's works for trumpet and cornet endure, and are often performed, recorded and studied today. They include Trumpet Concerto in E Minor (often transposed to F Minor), 24 Etudes, Russian Dance, Soirée de St.-Petersbourg (Romance), La Napolitaine, Scène de Ballet, Berceuse, and Sextet in E-flat Minor.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Böhning, Jürgen (b. Worbis, Germany, Aug. 1, 1950). German trumpeter. Böhning studied in Leinefelde before attending a special music school in Weimar, where he studied with Harry Haustein, and won second prize in a national music competition. He was a member of the Weimar Staatskapelle from 1972 to 1987, and since 1987 has been principal trumpet of the Berlin Symphony Orchestra. His hobbies include exercising and reading.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Böld, Christian (b. Augsburg, Germany, Aug. 30, 1957). German trumpeter. Böld studied in Augsburg with Richard Seidel, and in Munich with Paul Lachenmeir. After performing for a while in a humorous folk ensemble, he joined the trumpet section of the Bayerische Staatsoper, and from September of 1980 was principal trumpet of the Bayerisches Staatsorchester München. He is currently coprincipal trumpet with Andreas Öttl.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Bolden, Charles Joseph ("Buddy") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Sept. 6, 1877; d. Jackson, Louisiana, Nov. 4, 1931). American cornetist. Bolden is today considered to be the father of jazz. It is said that his music had a huge influence not only on several later jazz cornetists, but also on the entire jazz genre of music.

Bolden dropped out of school at the age of twelve, and worked as a plasterer in the city of New Orleans. At the age of sixteen, he decided to take up the cornet, and he studied it under Manuel Hall. The legend about Bolden is that his improvement was astonishing, and he soon joined Charley Galloway's string band that performed at parties, picnics, parades, dances, and other similar events. About a year later, he formed his own string band and became so popular that during the 1890s he hired enough musicians to form six groups that performed nightly. Bolden appeared with each group at some time during each performance. By 1903, many musicians called him "King" Bolden.

In fact, Buddy Bolden became a professional cornet player in 1901. From 1901 to 1907, he led his own Buddy Bolden Band that later became known as the Eagle Band. The only picture of the band was taken in 1903 or 1906. Bolden also led a brass band of his own, and he organized a parade with the Henry Allen Sr. Brass Band in the spring of 1907.

In 1906, Bolden began suffering from extreme headaches, depression, and even periods of insanity. His drinking increased, and he often had fits of violence, being arrested once in 1906 and once in 1907. On June 5, 1907 he was committed to the East Louisiana State Hospital and lived there for twenty-four years until a heart ailment caused his death at age fifty-four. While in the hospital, he never regained use of his mental faculties. Thus, he was a musician for only thirteen years.

Bolden's style of music influenced many jazz artists, but Bolden himself was described by Jelly Roll Morton as a ragtime cornet player. He was a strong player with a very powerful sound, inspiring such cornetists as Freddie Keppard, "Wooden Joe" Nicholas, and Willie "Bunk" Johnson. He was especially noted for his blues-like playing. His best-loved solos are said to be Bucket's Got a Hole in It, Make Me a Pallet on the Floor, and Funky Butt. It is known that Buddy Bolden recorded a cylinder owned by Oscar Zahn, but it was destroyed in the 1960s. His tragic life formed the basis of M. Ondaaje's novel, Coming through Slaughter (1976).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Marquis, Donald. In Search of Buddy Bolden (Louisiana State University Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Boldoczki, Gábor (b. Szeged, Hungary, Sept. 16, 1976). Hungarian trumpeter. Boldoczki studied at the Vienna Conservatory and the Franz Liszt Music Academy in Budapest, and with Reinhold Friedrich in Karlsruhe, Germany. He is considered to be a star trumpeter of his generation: he has been winning prizes at international solo competitions since the age of fourteen, including important ones in Munich, Prague, Geneva, Zalagerszig (Hungary), Porcia, and in 1997, first prize in the Maurice André International Solo Competition in Paris. Other prizes include the "Prix Davidoff" (1999) and "Young Artist of the Year" in Bad Wörishofen (2002). Beginning in 1998, he was invited by Otto Sauter to perform in the All-European trumpet ensemble, Ten of the Best.

Devoting himself to fulltime solo playing, Boldoczki has performed with leading orchestras around the world, including the Zurich Chamber Orchestra, Concertgebouw Amsterdam, Netherlands Philharmonic, Liszt Chamber Orchestra, Munich Chamber Orchestra, Berlin Symphony Orchestra, Prague Symphony Orchestra, Strasbourg Philharmonic Orchestra, Beijing Symphony Orchestra, Haydn Philharmonic, Hungarian National Philharmonic Orchestra, Lucerne Symphony Orchestra, Czech Philharmonic, Salzburg Mozarteum Orchestra, Bach-Collegium Münichen, and many others. He has released six solo CDs for the Sony Classical label, including Bach, Gloria, and Italian Concertos. Since 2010, he has been a professor at the Franz Liszt Music Academy.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Gábor Boldoczki's official website: www.gabor-in-concert.com.

Bolshiyanov, Yury Andreyevich (b. Moscow, Russia, Oct. 7, 1922; d. St. Petersburg, Russia, May 15, 2004). Russian trumpeter. Bolshiyanov studied at the Leningrad Music School with Alexander Schmidt in 1941, and then attended the Leningrad Conservatory, eventually earning a doctorate in musicology in 1951; his dissertation is titled Soviet Concertos for Trumpet. During the 1940s, he was an active brass quintet player and soloist. In 1953, he won first prize in the Fourth World Youth Festival in Bucharest.

Bolshiyanov was principal trumpet of the Leningrad Philharmonic Orchestra from 1945 to 1968. He was honored by the State in 1967, the same year he received the title of professor at the Leningrad Conservatory, where he had begun to teach as an assistant as early as 1951. He was a rector of the school from 1976 until his retirement in 1980. He was one of Russia's leading teachers. Among his students were Vladimir Aleshkov, Vladimir Bokhtenkov, Valery Chirskov, Valentin Goss, Leonid Korkin, Yury Laporev, Valentin Malkov, Mikhail Mikhailov, Gennady Nikonov, Mikhail Romanov, Ilya Sharapov, Yury Sharapov, Anatoly Stepanov, Boris Taburetkin, Valery Utkin, and Boris Yuriev.

Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bolton, Dupree [Ira Lewis] (b. Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, Mar. 3, 1929; d. Alameda, California, June 5, 1993). American trumpeter. The story of Dupree Bolton is truly one of the saddest in music. Quoting saxophonist Harold Land, If things had worked out right for [Dupree] *he could have been one of the most important trumpet players of our time. There was a certain grandeur he was able to capture...*As it turned out, Dupree's life served as a vivid reminder of why kids should stay off of drugs.

Bolton's father worked in the defense industry and was also an excellent amateur musician. Bolton's mother was a homemaker who encouraged her children to learn music. Dupree began learning the violin from his father when he was four or five years old. However, Dupree was attracted to the trumpet; his father purchased a Sears and Roebuck trumpet for twenty dollars. Dupree took to the trumpet instantly, and showed remarkable improvement. By age fourteen, he was playing professionally in Jay McShann's band while it was performing a run of dances in Oklahoma City. McShann offered Dupree a regular job with the band, but Dupree's mother insisted that the boy stay home and finish school. Determined to tour with McShann, he secretly purchased an old suitcase and left it at the hotel where the band was staying. Each day, he would steal an article of clothing from his bedroom and place it in the suitcase. When the band was ready to hit the road three weeks later, Dupree was set to go with them. He lied about his age, stating that he was eighteen, which is probably why his birth year is incorrectly listed as 1925 in many previous biographical sources. After Dupree ran away from home, his parents ran newspaper ads that offered a twenty-five dollar reward for information regarding his whereabouts. Because of this, Bolton gave employers and record labels false names. This has also caused difficulty in tracing his early career.

It was only a matter of weeks until several members of McShann's band enticed Bolton to try drugs. Because Bolton was generally more clean-cut and better dressed than most members of the band, the older players convinced Bolton to take forged prescription orders to pharmacies to obtain greater quantities of painkillers. In return, Bolton was given a share of the opium, and he soon became hooked. A year later, Bolton became friends with John Coltrane, a former member of McShann's band. Coltrane introduced him to cocaine, and eventually to heroin.

One of Bolton's roommates in the band was dealing drugs. In 1946, the police raided their hotel room and discovered large quantities of heroin. They also found marijuana on Bolton's person. Both men were arrested and convicted. Bolton was sent to the Joseph Harp Correctional Center in Lexington, Kentucky—a hospital prison. After four years there, he was released at the age of twenty-one. He joined Buddy Johnson's band (1944-45) and later Benny Carter's big band (1945-46). Unfortunately, Bolton was arrested a second time for forging checks (to pay for drugs), and was sent to Soledad Prison where he served time for fifty-one months. Nothing is known of Bolton's whereabouts for the next several years, but in 1956 he was arrested a third time (forgery) and sentenced to Terminal Island Prison where he served a three-year term. Upon his release in 1959, Bolton made a fantastic musical comeback, recording The Fox with Harold Land. This recording remains a phenomenal landmark in recorded jazz today. One record reviewer described it as a "cross between Clifford Brown and a flamethrower" because of its incredible energy and blazing technique.

Bolton was arrested yet again for forging checks and prescriptions. He was sent to San Quentin Prison from 1959 to 1962. In 1963, he made another stellar comeback when he played and recorded with Curtis Amy, recording an album called Katanga!. Bolton also played with Bobby Hutcherson's band in 1967, but was ultimately arrested a fifth time (forging checks and prescriptions) and sent to prison in Tulsa, Oklahoma, for nearly fifteen years. He was allowed to play his trumpet in prison, and even participated in a prison band that made a recording in 1980. Dupree disliked the recording, stating that it was not made by real musicians. He claimed that he participated due to sheer boredom.

When Dupree Bolton was released from prison for the last time in 1982, he was now a fifty-three-year-old man. He joined Dexter Gordon's band in that same year, but ultimately moved to San Francisco where he became a street musician. He was issued government social security checks and provided with methadone, a drug used to help incurable drug addicts. He kept his identity a secret because he felt that his life story might adversely affect aspiring young musicians. But, in January of 1989, author and musician Ted Giola persuaded Bolton to tell his story through an interview. By this time, Bolton felt that his story needed to be told so that it could serve as a testament to the dangers of drug addiction.

Bolton died of a heart attack on June 5, 1993. He was sixty-four years old. Although he hated having spent half of his life behind bars, he felt that prison had saved him from an early death by drugs. Posthumously, Uptown Records released Fireball, an album made from once lost tapes recorded by Bolton in 1962.

Bibl.: Giola, Ted. "In Search of Dupree Bolton, Pts. I & II" (www.jazz.com); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Boltro, Flavio (b. Turin, Italy, May 5, 1961). Italian trumpeter. Flavio began playing the trumpet, guided by his father, Dante Boltro, before studying at the Giuseppe Verdi Conservatory in Turin where he won first prize in 1980. He began his professional career in 1982 as a classical and jazz player, joining the RAI Symphony Orchestra, playing with several regional theater orchestras, and performing at various European jazz festivals. During the 1990s, he was a member of the Michael Petrucciani Sextet, and performed with many well-known jazz artists including Don Cherry, Bob Berg, Cedar Walton, Freddie Hubbard, Jimmy Cobb, and Joe Lovano (1994-97).

Boltro toured the United States from 1988 to 1992 with Giovanni Tommaso. Trumpeter Wynton Marsalis said of him that he "...is one of the best trumpet players of the global jazz scene." Two of his solo CDs are Road Runner and 40, both on the Blue Note label.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Flavio Boltro" (www.tusciainjazz.com/seminars/trumpet).

Bolz, Horst-Dieter (b. Stuttgart, Germany, July 29, 1936). German trumpeter. Bolz began playing the trumpet (Kuhlo horn) at age ten, and after seeing the film Young Man with a Horn starring Kirk Douglas (with soundtrack by Harry James), decided that he would be a professional trumpeter. He began playing in local dance bands at age fourteen, and modeled his playing style after the great Horst Fischer.

At age fifteen, he formed the Dieter Bolz Dance Orchestra, which performed around Stuttgart, mostly in American military nightclubs. He then played with Wolfgang Dauner and the Jazzband-Bällen of Stuttgart. From 1953 to 1955, he studied with Heinz Burum at the Stuttgart State University of Music, but from 1955 to 1957 toured the Orient with a show band in which he played trumpet and vibraphone, after which he returned to school and completed his studies in 1959.

Bolz accepted a position with the Coburg State Theatre Orchestra in 1959, and was a guest soloist with many orchestras including the Nuremberg Opera Orchestra and the Bamberg Symphony Orchestra.

Bolz became a professor at the Trossingen University of Music in 1977, and in 1993 formed the Trossinger Trumpet Ensemble (now the trumpet*ART*ensemble) that became a famous student group.

Although he retired in 2002, Bolz remains an active private teacher and leader of the trumpet ensemble. He is considered to be one of Europe's finest trumpet teachers.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bonano, Joseph Gustaf ("Sharkey") (b. Milneburg, Louisiana, Apr. 9, 1902; New Orleans, Louisiana, Mar. 27, 1972). American trumpeter. Bonano's father was a classical flutist. Bonano began working in 1920 with trombonist Eddie Edwards, and then played during the early 1920s with Chink Martin and Freddie Newman in New Orleans. He went to Chicago in 1924 to play with Jimmy Durante, but returned to New Orleans in 1925. He began his recording career in 1925 with Brownlee's orchestra. (He was nicknamed after the boxer, Sailor Tom Sharkey.)

In 1927, Bonano was in Chicago playing with Jean Goldkette's orchestra. From 1928-30, he co-led the Melody Masters with Leon Prima (trumpeter Louis Prima's older brother) in New Orleans. In 1928, he recorded with Johnnie Miller and Monk Hazel. Bonano led Dixieland groups from 1930 to 1936 before moving to New York to play with Ben Pollack. There, he formed the group Sharks of Rhythm, recorded Dixie sessions (1936-37), and continued his work as a New Orleans-style jazz musician. He was a fine entertainer who often sang in a humorously high and raspy voice and broke out into dance while on stage.

Bonano was a sideman with The Original Dixieland Jazz Band in 1938. His career was interrupted when he was drafted into the Army, but he returned to New Orleans where he was a popular jazz musician at various nightclubs throughout the 1950s. Between 1946 and 1960, he recorded for labels such as Capitol, Riverside, Southland, GHB, Good Times Jazz, Roulette, and Roul. Some of his best albums are Sharkey and His Kings of Dixieland (GHB), Midnight on Bourbon Street (Capitol), and Dixieland at the Roundtable (Roul).

Sharkey Bonano performed throughout the 1960s, playing in New Orleans, New York, and Chicago. From 1969 to 1971, he appeared at the New Orleans Jazz & Heritage Festival. Illness forced him to retire in the early 1970s. He died on March 27, 1972 at the age of sixty-nine.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bond, Peter (b. El Paso, Texas, Oct. 9, 1956). American trumpeter. Bond was raised in Rockford, Illinois. He began playing trumpet and bugle around the age of ten; his first teachers were trombonist Roger Ellis, and Ed Retzlow. He graduated from Rockford West High School in 1974, and attended Western Illinois University, studying with William DeJong and earning a bachelor of arts degree in music education in 1980. He enjoyed playing in drum and bugle corps, and was a member of Phantom Regiment from middle school through college. He was a graduate assistant in band at Georgia State University in Atlanta, graduating in 1981 and studying with Atlanta Symphony Orchestra principal trumpet, John Head, who instilled in him an interest in orchestral music. He was also inspired by Larry Black and Steven Winick, and has also studied with Vincent Cichowicz, Arnold Jacobs, Adolph Herseth, Dale Clevenger, Robert Nagel, and James Pandolfi.

Bond remained in the Atlanta area for six years, freelancing with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, Atlanta Ballet Orchestra, and Charleston (South Carolina) Symphony, as well as with big bands and other ensembles. In 1987, he won an audition for principal of the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra in Albuquerque, a position he held until 1992 when he joined the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra in New York City as second trumpet. He has played with the New York Philharmonic, New York City Opera, New York City Ballet, and at the Santa Fe Chamber Music Festival. From 1995 to 2004, he taught at Rutgers University as an adjunct professor.

Bond and wife Carla, a singer specializing in early music, have been married since 1992. His hobbies include home projects, bicycling, and private teaching.

Bibl.: "Peter Bond" (www.atlantatrumpetensemble.com/05festival/clinicians.htm); personal interview, Aug. 1, 2011.

Bonnici, André (b. Montluçon, France, July 1, 1969). French trumpeter. Bonnici studied with Pascal Ansel before enrolling at the Conservatoire National de Région de Lyon where he graduated in 1989. He subsequently studied with Pierre Dutot, Bruno Nouvion, and André Presle. He was one of five trumpeters (all students of Guy Touvron at the conservatory in Lyons, including Pierre Ballester, Didier Chaffard, Ludovic Roux, and Jean-Luc Richard) to form the trumpet ensemble, Les Trompettes de Lyon, which has become one of the world's finest music and humor acts. He also teaches at the Montluçon Conservatory.

Bonnici and his wife Marguerite Saunier, a professor of harmony, analysis, and piano, and a harpsichordist with various Baroque orchestras, have three children: Jean Baptiste (b. 1993), Arthur (b. 1998), and Adèle (b. 2006). His hobbies include jogging, cinema, and diving (swimming).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompettes, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008); www.lestrompettesdelyon.com; personal interview, Sept. 26, 2012.

Boos, Louis F. (b. Tiffin, Ohio, Feb. 13, 1858; d. Jackson, Michigan, Jan. 31, 1935). American cornetist. Louis received his music instruction from his father, a church choir director, and learned to play the piano, organ, and cornet. At the age of sixteen, he ran away to join Gilmore's 22nd Infantry Regiment Band, but left the group a short time later. He then traveled with a repertory company, settling in Jackson, Michigan, where he lived for the rest of his life.

Boos reorganized Jackson's Central City Band (also known as Boos's 1st Infantry Band). His three brothers William, Charles, and Frederick were also excellent musicians who were cornetists or conductors. Louis's career as a cornet soloist and conductor was outstanding.

After retiring, Boos continued teaching and taught several prominent students including Bert Brown, H. A. VanderCook, V. A. Geiger, and Frank Hoffman (who assumed duties with Boos's band after his retirement). His many cornet solo compositions include The Charmer, Jig Melody, The Two Roses, Ada Polka, and Lulu Polka.

Bibl.: Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published).

Booth, Thomas ("Tom") George (b. Camp Kilmer, New Jersey, June 28, 1952). American trumpeter. Booth grew up mostly in Green Pond, New Jersey. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first lessons were with his father. He also studied with Walter Moore (local band director) and Bruce Revecz (New York City Opera Orchestra). Booth earned his bachelor of music degree at Baldwin-Wallace College (1970-74) where he studied with James Darling and Mary Squire. He continued his studies with David Hickman and W. Ritchie Clendenin at the University of Illinois (1974-75) where he served as a graduate trumpet teaching assistant, and was a member of the Champaign-Urbana Symphony Orchestra and Illinois Brass Quintet (faculty). He married his wife Linda, a clarinetist and pianist, only three days before he commenced graduate work.

Booth won the position of second trumpet in the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra in 1975. He played with the orchestra for two years and also taught as an adjunct professor at the University of Texas-San Antonio. He moved to Dallas in 1977 to assume duties as third/assistant principal of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, a position he held until 2000 when he moved to fourth/assistant principal. Booth has been teaching as an adjunct faculty member at Southern Methodist University since 1978, and is currently head of the winds, brass, and percussion department. He has also taught at the Round Top Music Festival in Texas since 1978. He participated in the recording, Dallas Trumpets (Crystal), with DSO members Richard Giangiulio and Bert Truax. They gave master classes in Lyons, France in 1981.

Booth lives in Sunnyvale, Texas, with his wife Linda (now an elementary music and middle school theater teacher, pianist, writer, and paramedic for the local volunteer fire and rescue squad). Their children are Kathleen (b. 1980), Christine (b. 1981), and Bill (b. 1983). Booth's hobbies are fishing, bird watching, hiking, and other outdoor activities.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Tom Booth" (http://faculty.smu.edu/tbooth/tombooth.asp); personal interview, Dec. 22, 2010.

Bordner, Gary (b. East Moline, Illinois, Oct. 9, 1953). American trumpeter. Bordner grew up in the Quad Cities area of western Illinois. His father owned and operated a gasoline service station, and his mother was a pianist who taught privately; he has two younger sisters. He started playing the trumpet just after sixth grade, and took lessons from his junior high band director, Ronald D. Price. Bordner later attended Augustana College in Rock Island, Illinois, where he studied with George Opheim while working at his father's gas station to help with tuition expenses. During his last two years of college, he was a member of the Quad Cities Symphony.

After graduating in 1975, Bordner earned a master of music degree at the Eastman School of Music where he studied for two years with Sidney Mear. He was then offered a position with the Eastman Brass Quintet, so he decided to begin a doctoral program there studying with Allan Dean. A year later, he accepted a two-year replacement position at the University of North Dakota in Grand Forks.

As a faculty member at UND, Bordner performed in many of the area's leading ensembles. At that time, the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra did not employ salaried trumpeters, so he began performing in many concerts with the ensemble. After his two-year appointment expired, he decided to move to the Minneapolis-St. Paul area in 1980, so that he could freelance while continuing to perform with the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra. He was offered a fulltime position as principal trumpet in 1982. During his many years with the orchestra, he also performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (summer of 1998 at the Tanglewood Institute, and as assistant principal from November 2001 to February 2002) and with the Mainly Mozart Festival in San Diego (several summers since 2004). Bordner is an adjunct faculty member at the University of Minnesota, and has released a solo CD titled Trumpet Works on the Artegra Records label.

Bordner and his wife Donna, who is an activity director at Norris Square, a Presbyterian Homes Senior Living Community, have two daughters, Anna (b. 1984) and Lindsey (b. 1987). His hobbies include bird hunting and fishing at his cabin in northern Minnesota.

Bibl.: Flaherty, Mark. "Gary Bordner: A Balanced Approach to Life and the Trumpet" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2007); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Gary Gordner" (www.music.umn.edu); personal interview, May 10, 2010.

Borodkin, Jacob ("Jake") (b. Minsk, Russia, Dec. 25, 1890; d. Brooklyn, New York, Feb. 21, 1954). Russian-born American trumpeter. Borodkin immigrated to the United States in 1891 at the age of five. He was the principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic during the 1907-08 season, and second trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra from 1908 to 1910. He moved to Chicago in 1910, and became second trumpet of the Chicago Grand Opera Company Orchestra. In 1911, he became principal of the Theodore Thomas Orchestra (later called the Chicago Symphony Orchestra), but soon resigned. A review of his first concert with the Thomas orchestra was published in the Chicago Tribune newspaper: Just at present the latter [brass] section of the orchestra is slightly handicapped by a new first trumpeter, Jacob Borodkin, who has replaced Mr. Schubert. He has not had time to "play himself in," as the Germans say. His tone, though clear and resonant, is a little penetrating to blend with the noble fullness of sound produced by his colleagues. This may have been due to the fact that he played a French Besson B-flat piston trumpet, the sound of which may not have been compatible with that of the German-made rotary trumpets typically used in the orchestra.

From 1912 to 1913, Borodkin played second trumpet in the Chicago Opera Company Orchestra. He moved to New York City, and played in Victor Herbert's orchestra in 1913, as well as in the bands of Alessandro Liberati and Arthur Pryor. During the late 1930s, he was a member of the Radio City Music Hall Orchestra. He was the first teacher of Harry Glantz.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Crown, Thomas. "The Chicago Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section 1902-1932." (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2011); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trumpet (Schott).

Borst, Rudolf (b. Felsogalla, Hungary, Nov. 24, 1909; d. Budapest, Hungary, Feb. 18, 2000). Hungarian trumpeter. Borst began playing the trumpet at age fourteen, and participated in his village cadet band. He served in the army in Budaörs in 1926. Later that year, he entered the Franz Lizst Academy in Budapest where he studied with András Dámit, principal trumpet of the Budapest Opera Orchestra, and with Vilmos Ernoházi-Neuner. When Dámit died, Borst became his successor as principal, a position he held from 1932 to 1971.

Borst taught at the Béla Bartók Conservatory from 1940 to 1971, and at the Teachers Training College of the Academy of Music from 1954 to 1971. He authored and edited three trumpet books: Chord Exercises, Trumpet Duets, and Trumpet Music. He also performed at times with the State Opera Orchestra and the Orchestra of the Philharmonic Society. He was considered one of Europe's finest orchestral trumpeters.

Borst was married to Marika Borst, a piano player. He retired in 1971, and died at the age of ninety-one.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Komlossy, Karoly. "In Memoriam: Rudolf Borst" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2000); "Rudolf Borst (1909-2000)" (World News, Brass Bulletin Journal, Mar. 2000); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bosch, Mireia Farrés (b. Santpedor, Barcelona, Spain, Jan. 19, 1980). Spanish trumpeter. Bosch began playing the trumpet at age eight. At age thirteen, she was a member of the National Youth Orchestra of Catalonia, and when seventeen received an Honor Award in trumpet and in chamber music from the Manresa Conservatory in Barcelona where she studied with Joan Amau. She traveled to Boston to begin graduate work at the New England Conservatory where she studied with Charles Schlueter (1998-2001). She also studied jazz with John McNeil. While in Boston, she performed with the Boston Civic Orchestra, Gardner Museum Chamber Orchestra, and the Hingham Frequency Band and Orchestra.

After graduating with distinction from NEC, Bosch returned to Spain and became the principal trumpet of the Granada Symphony (1998-2004). In 2004, she was appointed principal of the Barcelona Symphony. She taught at the Escuela Superior de Música de Palma de Mallorca from 2004 to 2006. She is an active recitalist, and enjoys premiering new works for trumpet.

Bibl.: "Mireia Farrés Bosch" (www.monette.net); "Mireia Farrés Bosch" (www.vigomusica.com/index.asp?ID=551&IDF=70).

Bose, Sterling [Belmont] ("Bozo") (b. Florence, Alabama, Feb. 23, 1906; d. St. Petersburg, Florida, June 11, 1958). American cornetist and trumpeter. Bose worked with various jazz bands in New Orleans and St. Louis during the early and mid 1920s before moving to Detroit to replace Bix Beiderbecke in Jean Goldkette's group (1927-28). He then moved to Chicago, where he became a staff musician for WGN Radio, and in November of 1930, joined Ben Pollack's band.

Bose, known to his friends as Bozo, had a successful career as a swing trumpeter. During the 1930s and '40s, he embarked on a long succession of moves to numerous cities, and played in bands that included those of Joe Haymes (1934-35), Tommy Dorsey (1935), Ray Noble (1936), Benny Goodman (1936), Glenn Miller (1937), Bob Crosby (1937-39), Bobby Hackett (1939), Jack Teagarden, George Brunis, Art Hodes, Miff Mole, Bud Freeman (1942), Lana Webster, Bob Zurke, Bobby Sherwood (1943), Horace Heidt (1944), and Tiny Hill (1946). Unfortunately, his penchant for alcohol caused him to pass out several times during concerts, and his constant moving made it difficult for him to gain a widespread reputation as a solid soloist.

Bose is one of the unsung heroes of early jazz and the swing era. Although he played on numerous big band recordings, he never made a recording under his own name. His drinking problem led to a long illness after his move to St. Petersburg, Florida, in 1948 where he led his own bands. His brother Neil had killed himself with a firearm, and Sterling told friends more than once that if his brother had the nerve to do it, so did he. Tragically, Bose committed suicide with a handgun in 1958 at the age of fifty-two. He was posthumously inducted into the Alabama Music Hall of Fame.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Sterling Bose" (www.alamhof.org/bozobose.html).

Bosso, Fabrizio (b. Turin, Italy, Nov. 5, 1973). Italian trumpeter. Bosso's father played the trumpet and was his first teacher. Bosso attended the Giuseppe Verdi Conservatory in Turin, and in 1990 received a scholarship to attend St. Mary's College of Maryland (U.S.). He also studied with Pierre Thibaud at a special music school in Saluzzo, Italy. Trained as a classical and jazz trumpeter, Bosso was voted "Best New Talent" by the Italian jazz magazine, Musica Jazz, and released his first album, Fast Flight, with Red Records.

Bosso has toured with Carla Bley, Steve Coleman, Dave Liebman, Kenny Wheeler, Mike Gibbs, and George Russell. In addition, he has performed with Gianni Basso, Slide Hampton, Randy Brecker, Bob Mintzer, Italian Big Band led by Marco Renzi, Franco d'Andrea, Phil Woods (2000), Italian Trumpet Summit (2002, 2007), Flavio Boltro (2005), Funk Off (Umbria Jazz Festival, 2007), Giovanni di Battista (Marciac, 2008), and many others. In December of 1997, he was a member of the Carnegie Hall Big Band, and has recorded for Blue Note, EMI Italy, Park Music Records, and Chart. He has appeared at numerous jazz festivals around the world, and has taught jazz improvisation at the Nicola Piccinni Music Conservatory in Bari.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Fabrizio Bosso's official website: www.fabriziobosso.com.

Botschinsky, Allan (b. Copenhagen, Denmark, Mar. 29, 1940). Danish trumpeter and composer. Botschinsky was born into a musical family. His father was a classical bassoonist. Allan's parents purchased a trumpet for him at the age of eleven. He wanted to join a local parade band, but suffered from polio as a child and was unable to march. He enrolled in the Royal Danish Conservatory at age fourteen, and turned professional at age sixteen when he became a member of Ib Glindemann's Big Band (1956-59).

During his late teen years, he began working together with Bent Axen and Niels-Henning Orsted Pederson as a lead trumpeter in backup bands for visiting Americans such as Oscar Pettiford, Stan Getz, Dexter Gordon, Ben Webster, Lee Konitz, Kenny Dorham, and Quincy Jones. Beginning in 1960, Botschinsky also led his own quintet. During the 1963-64 academic year, he attended the Manhattan School of Music in New York, but he returned to Denmark in the following year to begin work as solo trumpeter with the Danish Radio Big Band (1964-82). Botschinsky played with the Hamburg Workshop (1968), Nordic Workshop (1972), and Philly Joe Jones. He moved to Hamburg, Germany, in 1985 and soon began working with Peter Herbolzheimer's Rhythm Combinations and Brass, the European Trumpet Summit, and small groups of his own. Botschinsky made records with Sahib Shihab, Kenny Dorham (on the Steeplechase label), Thad Jones (1978), Derek Watkins (1980), and under his own name (from 1963).

Botschinsky began composing during the early 1970s, studying with Svend Erik Werner. In 1987, he formed M-A Music International with Marion Kaempfert, daughter of bandleader Bert Kaempfert. Allan and Marion married in 1990 and moved to Italy. M-A Music produced many recordings and published much of his music. In 1993, they moved to London. In the late 1990s, he joined the Danish composers group The Third Way and began composing mostly classical music, including a trumpet concerto with chamber orchestra. Botschinsky has earned many awards as a composer. In 1984, Danish television produced a special program titled The Music of Allan Botschinsky.

A few of Botschinsky's best trumpet albums are First Brass, Duologue, Last Summer, and The Bench. He has recorded for M-A Music, Telefunken, Stunt, Storyville, and Steeplechase. He was named the 1963 Danish Musician of the Year.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Allan Botschinsky's official website" (www.allanbotschinsky.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Botti, Christopher ("Chris") Stephen (b. Portland, Oregon, Oct. 12, 1962). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Botti has become a superstar in the pop jazz world. His cool jazz style of playing (influenced by Miles Davis) and his boyish good looks (named by People magazine in 2004 as one the "50 Most Beautiful People") have made him a popular touring artist and television attraction.

Although Botti spent two years of his childhood in Italy, he was raised mostly in Corvallis, Oregon. His mother, a classical pianist, was his first musical influence. He began playing the trumpet at age nine, and was playing professionally by age thirteen. He was selected as a member of McDonald's All American High School Jazz Band, and attended Zeit High School (even though he was allowed to complete much of his senior year at Mount Hood Community College in Gresham, Oregon); his teacher during this time was Fred Sautter. After graduating, he attended Indiana University, studying with William Adam (trumpet) and David Baker (jazz). He received a grant from the National Endowment for the Arts that enabled him to study jazz in New York with George Coleman and Woody Shaw. He left IU during his senior year in order to tour with the bands of Frank Sinatra and Buddy Rich.

Botti moved to New York City in 1985, and began working as a studio player, as well as with several pop and rock bands. He toured with Bob Dylan, Aretha Franklin, Paul Simon (on and off between 1990-95), Dr. John, Natalie Cole, Bette Midler, Natalie Merchant, Roger Daltrey, and others. In 1995, he signed with the Verve/Forecast label, cutting his first album, First Wish, in that same year. Botti also composed the score for the film, Caught, in 1996. A steady stream of record albums followed, including Midnight Without You (Verve/Forecast), Slowing Down the World (GRP), Night Sessions (Columbia), When I Fall In Love (Columbia), To Love Again: The Duets (Columbia), Italia (Columbia), The Very Best of Chris Botti (Verve), A Thousand Kisses Deep (Columbia), and others.

Gordon Matthew Sumner invited Botti to tour as a featured soloist with his group Sting, which led to a long friendship and collaboration on several television and recording projects. Sting appeared on Botti's live television special from Los Angeles titled To Love Again (released on PBS under the title Chris Botti Live with Orchestra and Special Guests). Botti's other PBS Television special (available on CD and DVD) is Chris Botti in Boston with the Boston Pops Orchestra. These nationally broadcasted specials, along with constant world tours, have made Chris Botti a household name in America and other countries. Botti has also toured with Joni Mitchell's rock band, Upper Extremities, played with violin artist Lucia Micarelli, and recorded with Arturo Sandoval (2010).

Botti was nominated for Grammy awards in 2007 and 2009, and three of his albums rose to number one on Billboard magazine's pop charts. Botti hosted a radio program called Chill with Chris Botti for several years during the mid 2000s, and was leader of the house band for the television talk show, The Caroline Rhea Show (2002-03). He even found time to work as an actor on the American television soap opera, One Life to Live.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Chris Botti" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Chris Botti's official website: www.chrisbotti.com.

Bourque, John (b. c1957). American trumpeter. Bourque grew up in the New England area, and earned a bachelor of music degree at the Oberlin Conservatory in 1979. He took additional lessons from William Vacchiano of the New York Philharmonic. He was a member of the Thunder Bay (Canada) Symphony, Ft. Wayne Philharmonic, and Spokane Symphony Orchestra before joining the Virginia Symphony and Opera Orchestra as second trumpet in 1987. After eleven years there, he became the assistant principal of the newly formed Malaysian Philharmonic Orchestra in 1998. He has taught at The College of William and Mary, and Elizabeth City State University. He currently teaches for the MPO's Youth Orchestra. He was a guest artist at the 2005 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Bangkok, Thailand.

Bibl.: "John Bourque" (www.kakiseni.com/eventsdetails.aspx?id=MJU3).

Bowen, Gregory ("Greg") (b. Llangenech, South Wales, England, May 3, 1943). British trumpeter. Bowen was a member of the National Youth Orchestra of South Wales as a teen, and later attended the College of Music and Drama in Cardiff. He began his professional career in London, working as a studio performer who backed numerous celebrity artists such as Ted Heath, Johnny Dankworth, Tom Jones, The Beatles, Petula Clark, The Rolling Stones, and others. He played on movie soundtracks such as Goldfinger and Beyond the Sea, and also recorded with artists Harry James, Natalie Cole, Clark Terry, Bobby Shew, Jack Jones, Judy Garland, Liza Minelli, Benny Goodman, Maynard Ferguson, Buddy Rich, Louie Bellson, Tony Bennett, Dizzy Gillespie, James Morrison, Peter Herbolzheimer, Ella Fitzgerald, Quincy Jones, Bob Brookmeyer, and Nancy Wilson. He toured with the Mantovani Orchestra, and in 1976 became a member of the RIAS Dance Orchestra. Beginning in 1995, he was lead trumpeter of the RIAS Big Band. In July of 2003, he received the Honorary Fellowship Medal from the Royal Welsh College of Music and Drama.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Bowie, Lester (b. Frederick, Maryland, Oct. 11, 1941; d. New York, New York, Nov. 8, 1999). American trumpeter. Bowie was born into a musical family. His grandfather was a founding member of the Bartonville Cornet Band. He grew up in St. Louis, and began playing the trumpet at age five under the guidance of his father, a high school band director. At age fourteen, he took lessons from the St. Louis jazz trumpeter, Bobby Danzie, who influenced him a great deal. Bowie's younger brother, Joseph, later took up the trombone, and would join Lester professionally during most of his life.

In his teens, Lester Bowie played with various rhythm and blues bands including those of Little Milton, Rufus Thomas, Albert King, Solomon Burke, and Joe Tex. He joined the Air Force at age seventeen (1958-60) and played jazz in his free time. After the service, he helped establish the Black Artists Group in St. Louis, a group devoted to avant-garde jazz. He then moved to Chicago in 1965, and became a studio musician. He married gospel singer Fontella Bass and became her musical director for a while. He joined the Association for the Advancement of Creative Musicians and became its second president. His first record album was Numbers 1 & 2 (1967).

In 1969, Bowie helped form an avant-garde jazz quintet called the Art Ensemble of Chicago, a group that he was associated with for the remainder of his life. This group recorded dozens of albums and became the perfect outlet for Bowie's innovative musical ideas. Bowie developed a colorful and often humorous style of playing, using many sound effects such as growls, mutes, bending notes, half-valve playing, and wide vibrato. The group often utilized the sounds of exotic percussion instruments and toys. He dressed in a white lab coat and wore a waxed goatee. The band's slogan was "Great Black Music—Ancient to the Future."

In addition to performing with the Art Ensemble of Chicago, Bowie recorded with Cecil Taylor, Jimmy Lyons, Amina Claudine Myers, Kahil El'Zabar, Archie Shepp, David Murray, and Sunny Murray. He also performed with Jack DeJohnette, Arthur Blythe, and Chico Freeman. He led his own bands, such as From the Root to the Source, New York Organ Ensemble, Hip Hop Philharmonic Orchestra, and Brass Fantasy (beginning in 1981). He also played with the Leaders (starting in 1986). Because of his creativity in the arts, Bowie was a Visiting Professor at Harvard University and Dartmouth College, and was a Yale Fellow.

Bowie developed kidney problems around 1998. He died unexpectedly from liver cancer a year later, just a month before his fifty-eighth birthday, and at the height of his career. He recorded over fifty albums for labels such as MPS, Atlantic, Columbia, DIW, ECM, Muse, Black Saint, Nessa, Affinity, JMY, Birdology, Paula, West Wind, Prestige, Improvising Arts, Black Lion, Delmark, AECO, Praxis, Inner City, BYG, Freedom, and America. Some of his compositions include Ska Reggae Hi-Bop, Donald Duck Meets Miles Davis, and Fanfare for the Warriors. He appeared in the film, Les Stances à Sophie (1970) and is featured in the video, The Art Ensemble of Chicago: Live from the Jazz Showcase (Rhapsody Films, 1981). He was inducted into the Downbeat Jazz Hall of Fame in 2000 and was honored by the 2001 album, Tribute to Lester, by the Art Ensemble of Chicago.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Lester Bowie" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bowman, Joseph ("Joe") Leonard (b. Warren, Ohio, July 2, 1975). American trumpeter. Bowman studied with Gary Davis and graduated from Firestone High School in Akron, Ohio. He attended the Cincinnati Conservatory, studying with Alan Siebert and Marie Speziale, and graduating in 1997. He studied with David Hickman at Arizona State University, completing his master of music degree in 1999 and his doctor of musical arts degree in 2002 while serving as one of Hickman's graduate teaching assistants. He has also studied with Samuel Pilafian, Pat Harbison, and Matthew Sonneborn. He began his fulltime teaching career at the University of Tennessee at Martin (2001-03) and in June of 2003, began teaching at Mahidol University in Bangkok, Thailand, where he hosted the 2005 International Trumpet Guild Conference.

Bowman was a featured artist during the 2009 ITG Conference in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. He has served on the board of directors of ITG and as editor of the ITG Youth website from 2001 to 2008. Since 2008, he has served as third trumpet with the Thailand Philharmonic Orchestra. He has also played with The Phoenix Symphony, Sun Cities Symphony, and Sonoran Brass Quintet.

Bowman and his wife Bunga "Lisa" Bowman, a financial controller for Tex Tech Industries (American textiles), live in Bangkok with their son Alexander (b. 2006). Joe's hobbies include traveling, golf, cooking, and reading.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Bowman, Joseph Leonard. An Annotated Bibliography of Published Twentieth-Century Sonatas for Trumpet and Piano. (unpublished DMA diss., Arizona State University, 2002); personal interview, May 16, 2011.

Brader, Ken III (b. Easton, Pennsylvania, Jan. 21, 1954). American trumpeter. Brader's father and grandfather owned a music store in Easton, Pennsylvania, where he grew up. His grandfather showed him how to play trumpet at the early age of four, and during his junior and senior years at Easton Area High School, he took lessons in New York City with Raymond Crisara. After graduating in 1971, he enrolled at the Eastman School of Music where he studied with Sidney Mear, and continued lessons with Crisara during the summers. After earning a bachelor of music degree in 1975, he worked towards a master's degree at Eastman, often performing with Chuck Mangione's band between 1975 and 1977, but left school in 1977 to tour with the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra. He was also hired as the director of the jazz ensemble at the University of Rochester from 1975 to 1977.

Brader toured fulltime with the Glenn Miller Orchestra from 1979 to 1981, serving as lead trumpet, soloist, and a member of the vocal group, as well as serving as the assistant director of the band. From 1985 to 2000, he was a member of the Glenn Miller Special Unit Band that toured extensively. Other positions include being a member of the Phil Woods Big Band (1998-2000), Philadelphia Pops orchestra since 1992 (lead trumpet since 1997), and the Water Gap Brass (since the mid 1980s). He played lead trumpet on the CD recording by Patti Page, Live at Carnegie Hall—The 50th Anniversary Concert, that won a Grammy Award in 1999. He can be heard on the five-CD set, The Love Songs of Your Life, and with Derek Smith and the Smithsonians. In addition, he is featured on several CDs with the Glenn Miller Orchestra including Moonlight Serenade (Ranwood Records), In the Christmas Mood (LaserLight), In the Christmas Mood II (LaserLight), In the Nutcracker Mood (LaserLight), Tuxedo Junction (LaserLight), and Live in Europe (LaserLight).

Brader has taught at Marywood University (Pennsylvania, 1988-2008) and Lafayette College (Pennsylvania, since 1992). He was married in 1984, but divorced in 1993.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ken Brader III" (www.esu.edu/~pdorian/wgb/brader.html); personal interviews, July 14 & 26, 2012.

Bradford, Bobby Lee (b. Cleveland, Mississippi, July 19, 1934). American trumpeter, cornetist, composer, and bandleader. Bradford began playing the piano at age eight, and took up the cornet at age fourteen. He grew up mostly in Dallas, Texas, and was influenced by the jazz styles of Fats Navarro, Charlie Parker, and Bud Powell. He moved to Los Angeles in 1952, where he played with Leo Wright, Buster Smith, and John Hardee. He took a day job in the stockroom of a department store, and met jazz saxophonist Ornette Coleman who also worked there. Coleman was a large influence on Bradford's playing.

Bradford and Coleman joined saxophonist Eric Dolphy in 1953. Bradford also played with the Gerald Wilson Orchestra and with Wardell Gray's band. He was drafted into military service in 1954 and played in various Air Force bands until 1958. After release from the military, he played with Quincy Jones (1961), and he replaced Don Cherry in Ornette Coleman's quartet in New York (1961-63). The group was not very active during this time, so Bradford left the group, and was replaced by Freddie Hubbard. He attended Huston-Tillotson College (now Huston-Tillotson University) in Austin, Texas, earning a bachelor of music degree.

Bradford returned to Los Angeles in 1964. He mainly worked with clarinetist John Carter, with whom he formed the New Art Jazz Ensemble in 1966. The two worked together until Carter's death in 1991. Bradford occasionally worked with Coleman's group in New York, playing on an album in 1971 and working gigs in 1973. During the early 1970s, he lived for a while in London, playing with Steve Lacy or with John Stevens and his Spontaneous Music Ensemble. In late 1973, he led a combo in Paris. In 1974, he accepted teaching positions at Pasadena City College and Pomona College in Claremont, California. From 1976 to 1978, he also belonged to the Little Big Horn workshop.

Bobby Bradford has been extremely active as a teacher, performer, and composer. He leads his Mo'Tet ensemble, and often plays with clarinetist Marty Ehrlich. On various occasions, Bradford has joined John Stevens's Freebop, the David Murray Octet, and Charlie Haden's Liberation Music Orchestra. His albums include Comin' On (Hat Art), One Night Stand (Black Saint), Seeking (Hat Art), Dauwhe (Black Saint), The Complete Science Fiction Sessions (Columbia/ Legacy), Linage (Nine Winds), Lost in Los Angeles (Emanem), Flight for Four (Flying Dutchman), and Secrets (Riverside). He is also seen in the video, John Carter and Bobby Bradford: The New Music (Rhapsody Films, 1980).

The Festival of New Trumpet Music awarded Bradford its top award of recognition in 2009. He remains an active musician in the Los Angeles area.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Bobby Bradford" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bobby Bradford" (www.allaboutjazz.com).

Brady, Charles Noel (b. Delano, California, July 16, 1937; d. Bakersfield, California, Feb. 16, 2010). American trumpeter. Brady was a native of Kern County, California, and graduated from Delano High School in 1955. He attended the University of Southern California on a full scholarship, graduating in 1959. He did a two-year tour of duty in the 52nd Army Band in Ft. Ord, California, and then went to New York to study at The Juilliard School, and Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C. He was coprincipal of the National Symphony Orchestra for six years, and recorded for Columbia records under Igor Stravinsky and Bruno Walter. He made what many people feel is the definitive recording of L'Histoire du Soldat by Stravinsky. Brady also toured with the Boston Pops orchestra under Arthur Fiedler. During his career, he performed with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, San Francisco Symphony, and the New York Philharmonic. He also recorded numerous soundtracks for films such as Lady in the Cage and Pork Chop Hill.

Brady returned to his hometown of Bakersfield, and performed with the Bakersfield Symphony for nearly thirty years, as well as with the Bakersfield Community Band, Bakersfield Civic Light Opera Orchestra, various chamber ensembles, dance bands, and jazz groups. He served as an adjunct professor at California State University-Bakersfield, and was a music teacher at Fairfax Middle School from 1975 to 2007. He also taught privately in his home. He was a board member of the Bakersfield Youth Symphony. After retiring, he played with the Cal State Community Orchestra.

Brady was married to Eva Eiren (married in 1961). Their sons are Charles Jr., James, and John. Besides being a truly humble and deeply religious man, Brady was a friend to all who knew him. It is said that he never spoke an ill word about anyone. He died of a heart attack at the age of seventy-two.

Bibl.: Scaffidi, Susan. "Trumpeter was a Great Musician, an even better Man" (Bakersfield Californian, Feb. 17, 2010); "Charles Noel Brady (1937-2010)" (obituary in Bakersfield Californian, Feb. 20, 2010).

Photo by Doug Davis.

Braff, Reuben ("Ruby") (b. Boston, Massachusetts, Mar. 16, 1927; d. North Chatham, Massachusetts, Feb. 9, 2003). American cornetist. Braff was born to Russian immigrants. At age eight, he asked for a saxophone, but since Reuben was rather small for his age, his father elected to purchase a cornet. Braff mostly taught himself how to play the instrument by listening to recordings of Bix Beiderbecke and Louis Armstrong over the radio, but he did get advice from a circus trombone player named Ward Silloway, and played parades with a school band (1939-41). By age eleven, he was working with older musicians each night at a local bar. Braff did poorly in school, and considered the cornet his salvation. By age twenty-two, he was performing and recording with veteran musicians such as Edmond Hall (1949), Pee Wee Russell (1951), Bud Freeman, and Sam Margolis.

Ruby Braff moved to New York City in 1953 at the age of twenty-six. He rented an apartment with a friend (pianist Nat Pierce) and struggled to find work as a jazz musician because by that time, his mainstream style of playing was considered passé. Bebop had taken the world by storm, and Braff found himself on an island surrounded by a sea of Dizzy Gillespie disciples. He held tight to the music he loved, but soon found himself literally starving to death. For a while, his diet consisted mostly of canned sardines and canned tomatoes!

Most of Braff's work during the 1950s and '60s was as a recording musician. The Vanguard label found him quite suitable to record with Vic Dickerson (1953-54), the Benny Goodman Sextet (1955), Buck Clayton, Urbie Green, and others. He appeared in a 1956 television play titled The Magic Horn about a jazz group, but seldom appeared in public concerts. He did another television show with Jack Teagarden in 1958. Braff stopped playing for about three years, but appeared with George Wein in 1961. He toured Europe in 1961, and by the late 1960s was one of the few vintage cornetists in New York. He recorded with George Wein's Newport All-Stars, co-led a quartet with guitarist George Barnes in 1973 (but had a huge falling out when the two broke apart in 1975), and played with the New York Repertory Company. He also spent two years with singer Tony Bennett.

When traditional jazz made a comeback during the late 1970s, Braff was in the right place at the right time. His warm and beautiful cornet sound, melodic improvisations, and precise technique placed him at the top of the music scene for the next twenty years. He recorded with Dick Hyman, Scott Hamilton, Howard Alden, Ellis Larkins, Mel Powell, Ralph Sutton, Roger Kellaway, and others, and produced dozens of albums as leader, including Fireworks (Inner City), Hustlin' and Bustlin' (Black Lion), Best of Braff (Bethlehem/Avenue Jazz), Hear Me Talkin' (Black Lion), The Grand Reunion (Chiaroscuro), The Ruby Braff-George Barnes Quartet (Chiaroscuro), A First (Concord Jazz), Music from "My Fair Lady" (Concord Jazz), Ruby Braff and His New England Songhounds (Concord Jazz), Controlled Nonchalance (Arbors), America the Beautiful (Concord Jazz), Jazz at Storyville, Vols. 1-2 (Savoy), Holiday in Braff (Bethlehem), Ruby Braff Special (Vanguard), Braff! (Epic), To Fred Astaire with Love (RCA), Fats Waller's Heavenly Jive (Chiaroscuro), Very Sinatra (Finesse), A Sailboat in the Moonlight (Concord Jazz), You Brought a New Kind of Love (Arbors), Variety is the Spice of Braff (Arbors), I Hear Music (Arbors), Watch What Happens (Arbors), Music for the Still of the Night (Arbors), Being with You (Arbors), You Can Depend On Me (Arbors), and With An Extra Bit of Luck (Concord Jazz).

Appreciated for his sensitive and passionate playing, Braff also had the reputation of being an uncompromising perfectionist and was known for his abrasive personality. When promoter Joe Glaser called Braff about booking him for a tour of England, Glaser told the cornetist that he did not want to use his band that included legendary performers Jack Teagarden and Earl Hines. Braff exchanged insults with Glaser and hung up on him. Thinking that he had not made his points clear enough, Braff called back a minute later, telling Glaser, You don't deserve to know guys like Teagarden and Hines! and hung up again. Braff also criticized many younger players for being too technical and "showy." Yet, he loved audiences, and had them laughing as he told fictitious stories about how the Queen of England was madly in love with him, London's Scotland Yard would call him to help solve crimes, and he and English cornetist Humphrey Lyttelton would meet underwater in submarines to decide the best actions for world affairs.

Health problems including emphysema, glaucoma, and heart disease began to affect Braff in 2002. He had trouble flying, and had to be pushed in a wheelchair through airport terminals. One of his tours of England had several concerts cancelled at the last minute. He died of lung failure on February 9, 2003 at the age of seventy-five. He had appeared on over 250 recordings, performed at many of the world's leading jazz festivals, and never compromised his ideals for music. Critics often said that he never played a note about which he wasn't passionate.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008); "Ruby Braff" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Brahmstedt, Howard K[enneth] (b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, May 18, 1936). American trumpeter. Brahmstedt began playing trumpet at age ten, guided by his father Norman Brahmstedt, a high school band director. Howard attended the University of Wisconsin in Madison, and took lessons for two years from William Babcock in Chicago. After receiving his bachelor of music degree, Brahmstedt went to New York City where he studied with Raymond Crisara for two years, and as a member of the National Orchestral Association orchestra, received sectional coaching from Nat Prager and James Smith. Brahmstedt then earned master of music and doctor of music degrees at Indiana University, studying with Herbert Mueller, Louis Davidson, and William Adam.

Brahmstedt won two Fulbright Scholar Awards to China, to teach trumpet and American music, and perform recitals and concerts at the leading music conservatories in Beijing, Shanghai, Tianjin, Xi'an, and Chengdu. His primary career was at Tennessee Tech University where he was a professor from 1969 to 1999. During a return visit to the Xi'an Conservatory of Music in 1996, the Shaanxi Province named him the "Outstanding Foreigner in Culture and Education." He has traveled throughout much of Tibet, the Xinjiang Region, and Inner Mongolia, and was in Kathmandu, Nepal, researching music and cultures. During his career, he has performed with the Madison Symphony Orchestra, West Point Concert Band, TTU Faculty Brass Quintet, Bryan Symphony Orchestra, Cumberland County Playhouse Orchestra, and led the Howard Kenny Jazz-Dance Band. Now retired from teaching, he is currently a member of the Rochester (MN) Symphony Orchestra, conducts the Lord of Life Brass Choir, and is an active freelance performer in Minneapolis.

Brahmstedt and Patricia Brahmstedt have been married since 1960, and have three children: Alicia (b. 1961), Ken (b. 1963), and Kristin (b. 1965). His hobbies include Alpine skiing, hiking, traveling, bicycling, camping, and international music endeavors.

Bibl.: "Brahmstedt China Travels..." (www2.tntech.edu/publicaffairs/rel/1996/sept96/china.html); personal interview, June 30, 2011.

Braito, Marco (b. Cavalese, Trento, Italy, Nov. 25, 1971). Italian trumpeter. Braito studied with Igino Ferrari at the conservatory in Bozen before attending the School of Music in Salazzo. He later won first prize in the annual competition in the trumpet class of Pierre Thibaud at the Paris Conservatory. Braito was a guest principal of the San Carlo Theater orchestra in Naples, and from 2000 to 2003 was principal trumpet and soloist with the Orchestra della Toscana in Florence, Italy. In 2004, he was appointed principal of the Orchestra Sinfonica Nazionale della RAI in Turin. In addition to his regular orchestra duties, Braito has been very active with the Gomalan Brass Quintet since 1999. With trumpeter Marco Pierbon and others in the group, he has toured numerous countries and released several CD recordings.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); www.gomalanbrass.com.

Brandi, Giovanni Pellegrino (fl. c1675-1700). Italian trumpeter. Brandi was the most important trumpeter employed by the Basilica of San Petronio in Bologna, Italy, during his day. Records at the cathedral indicate that he worked there from 1679 through 1699. It was during this time that he performed nearly one hundred trumpet concertos, sonatas, and sinfonias by Giuseppe Torelli and other composers of the Bologna School.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (English, Third Edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

Brandt, Willy [Vasily; Vassily] Georgiyevich (b. Coburg, Germany, 1869; d. Saratov, Russia, Feb. 2, 1923). Russian cornetist and trumpeter. Brandt attended the Coburg Music School at an early age, and graduated in 1887 after four years of study. He was immediately engaged to play in a summer spa orchestra near Hanover. The orchestra consisted mostly of Russian musicians and provided beneficial employment during the summers of 1887 and 1888. Brandt spent his winters in Helsinki (1887-90) as first trumpet and soloist in the Orchestral Society, now the Helsinki Philharmonic.

Brandt auditioned for the principal trumpet chair in the Bolshoi Theater Orchestra in Moscow. After a very long trip from Helsinki to Moscow, he arrived late, and was told that the job had already been filled. His plea to be heard anyway was granted, and after he played an Arban characteristic study, one committee member exclaimed, This is a star! Not being able to offer him the position already granted someone else, and not wanting to lose such a gifted trumpeter, Brandt was given a full salary in a fabricated position as a Contrabassoonist. He moved to Moscow in 1890, and in the following year the principal trumpet chair opened again; Brandt was immediately given the position he first sought.

During his years in Moscow, Brandt was also active as a soloist and teacher. A newspaper review of the best soloists of the 1895-96 season lists Brandt among them. He also played in a brass quartet that included Mikhail Tabakov as second cornet.

When a new conservatory was opened in Saratov in 1912, many renowned professors including Brandt were hired. In Saratov, Brandt not only taught trumpet and cornet, but also managed and conducted the conservatory orchestra. He was beloved by all of the students, as well as townspeople, thanks to his playing his cornet for the factory workers during many lunch hours.

Brandt died on February 2, 1923 from poisoning caused by a vaccination. The entire city arrived for the funeral service; thousands of people passed by his casket while the conservatory orchestra performed Beethoven's Fifth Symphony, a work Brandt had rehearsed with them just days earlier. Brandt's widow moved in with their daughter, a theater actress who lived in Tula.

Brandt can be considered the father of the Russian trumpet (and cornet) school. His magnificent and beautiful tonal quality lived on through his students, most notably Sergey Bolotin, Vladimir Drucker, Sergei Yeriomin, and especially Tabakov, the leading performer and teacher of his generation.

Brandt's compositions for cornet and trumpet remain staples in the repertory. They include Concert Piece Nos. 1 & 2, Concert Polka, Wiegenlied, 34 Orchestral Etudes, and 23 Last Studies (his last work).

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Brashear, Oscar [Jesse] (b. Chicago, Illinois, Aug. 18, 1944). American trumpeter. Raised in Chicago, Brashear began his music studies by learning piano and harmony from Josephine Innis at the age of seven. At age eleven, he took up the trumpet and studied for twelve years under Charles Allen. He graduated from Capt. Walter Dyett Du Sable High School in Chicago and then attended Wright Junior College (1962-65) and Roosevelt University (the latter under Renold Schilke, 1965-67).

Brashear began his professional career playing in orchestras led by Gene Evans, Woody Herman (1967), Count Basie (1968-69), Sonny Stitt, Gene Ammons, James Moody, and Eddie Harris. Brashear then moved to Los Angeles (1970) and recorded with Hampton Hawes, and worked with the bands of Dexter Gordon (1971), James Moody (1971), Harold Land, Bobby Hutcherson, and Joe Henderson. His style has been greatly influenced by Lee Morgan, Woody Shaw, and especially Freddie Hubbard. He has also performed with artists such as Horace Silver (1975), Quincy Jones, Oliver Nelson, Henry Mancini, Benny Carter, Teddy Edwards, Gerald Wilson, Shelly Manne, J. J. Johnson (1979), Zoot Sims, Ahmad Jamal, Jeremy Smith, and Billy Childs.

As a television and recording studio jazz musician, Oscar Brashear has recorded over one hundred discs with celebrities such as The Four Tops, Redd Foxx, Diahann Carroll, Stevie Wonder, Sammy Davis Jr., Nancy Wilson, Sarah Vaughan, Johnny Mathis, The Temptations, Dionne Warwick, Bill Cosby, and Gladys Knight and the Pips. His playing can be heard in the soundtrack of the film Rocky II.

Since the early 1970s, Brashear is considered to be one of the greatest jazz trumpeters alive, yet he is relatively unknown to the public. This is due, no doubt, to his mostly anonymous studio work and from not having released a solo album. He is currently a member of the Clayton-Hamilton Jazz Orchestra.

Bibl.: Hood, Boyde. "Ten Outstanding Trumpet Players in the Los Angeles Area" (Brass Bulletin, no. 41, 1983); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Braun, Rick (b. Allentown, Pennsylvania, July 6, 1955). American trumpeter. Braun began playing drums, but switched to trumpet at the age of eight; his first music teacher was Richard Hinkoe. During his junior and senior years at Dieruff High School in Allentown, Braun studied with Seymour Rosenfeld of the Philadelphia Orchestra. He attended the Eastman School of Music for a short time, forming the fusion group, Auracle, that made two pop records. He also released a solo pop album on Teichiku Records, but it was mostly unnoticed (1991).

Quitting school to go on the road with Auracle, Braun moved to Los Angeles, but the group soon broke up when its record label selected instead a vocalist as its main solo artist. Braun began freelancing, but had to work outside of music to make a living. His big break came when he was invited to play with Rod Stewart's band, which toured the country, providing Braun with great exposure, as well as greater income but, unfortunately, he became addicted to drugs. After a period of bottoming out, Braun eventually quit drugs and alcohol. He later toured with artists such as Tina Turner, Glenn Frey, Natalie Cole, Rickie Lee Jones, War, Sade, and REO Speedwagon.

Braun released his first jazz solo album in 1993, Intimate Secrets (Mesa/Bluemoon), which was very successful. He became the first smooth jazz trumpeter since Chuck Mangione to receive a great deal of radio airplay. His third solo album, Beat Street, became number one on the Billboard charts for thirteen weeks in a row, breaking all records for the longest hit run. In 1996 and 1997, Braun won the Gavin Artist of the Year Award. His later album, Shake It Up, was another number one Billboard hit.

Braun received the Oasis "Best Brass Player Award" in 2001, and the "Best Collaboration Award" in the same year. He has recorded with such artists as Tom Petty, Peter White, Willie and Lobo, Tin Drum, Al Jarreau, Warren Hill, Marty Grebb, Jeff Golub, Johnny Mathis, Steve Reid, Jeff Robinson, Gerald Veasley, Third Force, Slim Man, Richard Elliot, Chris Camozzi, Brian Bromberg, Norman Brown, Gabriele Andres, and many others. His solo albums are recorded on the Warner Brothers, Atlantic, Bluemoon, Rhino, Teichiku, and Mesa/Bluemoon labels.

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "Rick Braun: Life in the Fast Lane" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2001); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Rick Braun's official website (www.rickbraun.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Braz, Dirceu (b. Mogi das Cruzes, Brazil, Nov. 10, 1950). Brazilian trumpeter, composer, and poet. Braz was born and raised near São Paulo, Brazil. He began his music making by playing guitar in a local dance band, and later began playing the trumpet. From 1973 to 1976, he studied at the Stuttgart Musikhochschule in Germany with Heribert Rosenthal. He has also studied with Henri Adelbrecht at the Zurich Conservatory in Switzerland.

Braz worked in Germany from 1979 to 1990 as a trumpet teacher in the public schools in Heidelberg. He is a prolific soloist, and has released thirteen albums and CDs in Germany, two of which are Bachtrompete and Tea Time, both on the RBM label. Since 1990, his life and career have been devoted to performing concerts for the public in São Paulo in order to raise money for a school for disadvantaged children. He even performs on the streets (with recorded accompaniment) for crowds of people willing to donate money to the school.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Dirceu Braz" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Brecker, Randall ("Randy") Edward (b. Cheltenham, Pennsylvania, Nov. 27, 1945). American trumpeter and composer. Brecker is an iconic figure in the jazz world, having toured the world for over forty-five years. In addition to winning five Grammy Awards, he has released dozens of albums including Heavy Metal Bebop (Artista), In the Idiom (Denon), Into the Sun (Concord), Merge with Jack Wilkins (Chiaroscuro), Toe To Toe (MCA), Out of the Loop (GRP), Hangin' in the City (ESC), Randy Brecker Live with the WDR Big Band (Telarc/BHM), and Randy in Brazil (Summit/MAMA).

Brecker began playing the trumpet at age eight. He took to jazz through his father, a jazz pianist, and by studying his father's jazz recordings of famous trumpet players. His first performances were with R&B bands in local bars. He studied trumpet under Sigmund Hering and Tony Marchione. From 1963 to 1966, Brecker attended Indiana University and studied under David Baker. He toured the Middle East and Asia during his senior year with the IU Big Band under the auspices of the US State Department. He decided to stay in Europe for a few months, but returned to the U.S. in the fall of 1966 to study at New York University for a year. He soon joined the group Blood, Sweat and Tears (1967), and later played and recorded with the Horace Silver Quintet (1968-70, 1971-73), Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1972), Clark Terry (1967-68), Stevie Wonder, Duke Pearson (1967), Thad Jones-Mel Lewis band (1968, 1973), Joe Henderson, Frank Foster, Dream (a fusion group with younger brother and saxophonist Michael Brecker), Larry Coryell's Eleventh House (1973-74), and Billy Cobham (1974-75). His main fame at this time came from coleading the successful Brecker Brothers group (with Michael) that garnered seven Grammy Award nominations between 1975 and 1981.

During the 1980s, Randy Brecker co-led a short-lived band with then wife Eliane Elias (pianist), and with Jaco Pastorius's Word of Mouth Orchestra (1981-82). He performed with the Mingus Big Band, recording the last album Mingus ever made (Me Myself and Eye). He was an active studio musician, and was a featured soloist with several all-star groups. He also toured extensively with Stanley Clarke's Jazz Explosion, and in 1989 embarked on a six-month US State Department tour of Eastern Europe.

Recently, Brecker has been collaborating in performances with wife Ada Rovatti, the well-known Italian sax player and composer. In 2000, he took part in a Trumpet Summit. He played his last performance with brother Michael in 2004, just before Michael became too ill to perform any longer. Sadly, Michael died of leukemia on January 13, 2007. Today, Randy and Bill Evans are active with their Soulbop Band. Brecker is one of the most distinguished jazz trumpeters in the world, and has performed with hundreds of leading musicians. Brecker made videos with Gil Evans, the GRP Big Band, and Louie Bellson.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Randy Brecker's official website (www.randybrecker.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Breedlove, Graham (b. Longview, Texas, Apr. 1, 1970). American trumpeter. Breedlove grew up in Lafayette, Louisiana, where he began playing the trumpet at age twelve. His first lessons were with Dr. Gary Mortenson, who was teaching at the University of Southwestern Louisiana at the time (now called University of Louisiana-Lafayette). Breedlove attended Louisiana State University, studying under Dr. James West (1988-1991), then took a year off to tour with the Glenn Miller Orchestra. He returned to LSU for his senior year (1992-93), and finished his bachelor's degree in music. Breedlove earned a master's degree at Indiana University with Stephen Burns (1994-96), also studying jazz with Dominic Spera and David Baker. Other teachers include Bryon Stripling and Alvin Batiste. While in school, he married his wife Kelly in 1995. They have since had daughter Lucy (b. 2001), son Ryan (b. 2001), and daughter Chloe (b. 2003).

After receiving Indiana University's Performer's Certificate, Breedlove auditioned for a jazz opening in the Army Blues, the US Army's premier big band. He joined that organization in 1996, a position he holds today. He has taught part-time at Towson University and has performed with the Saturday Night Live Band, Ray Charles, Wynton Marsalis, Tito Puente, James Moody, Arturo Sandoval, and many others. His debut CD, Coming Home, has been released on Summit Records.

Breedlove's compositions have been heard on NBC Television's Today Show and the Food Network's Emeril Live. Having recorded on over one hundred albums, including two that won Grammy Awards, Breedlove also appears on the Hal Leonard Jazz Play Along Series. His hobbies include mountain biking, woodworking, and photography.

Bibl.: "Graham Breedlove" (www.facebook.com/pages/The-US-Army-Blues); Graham Breedlove's official website: www.grahambreedlove.com; personal interview, Sept. 12, 2010.

Brenton, Harold E. (b. June 1872; d. May 20, 1947). American trumpeter. Brenton learned to play the cornet and trumpet at the Boston Church Home for Orphans and Destitute Children. He was active as a theater musician in Boston during the 1910s, and was a music trustee supporting the music programs in the Boston Public Schools. He was a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra from 1902 to 1907.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Harold E. Brenton" (www.stokowski.org/Boston_Symphony_Musicians_List.htm).

Breuls, Ruud (b. Urmond [near Limburg], Netherlands, Dec. 4, 1962). Dutch trumpeter. Breuls first attended the music school in Maastricht, and later graduated from the Conservatory of Amsterdam (formerly the Hilversum Conservatory) in 1988, when he won the Wessel Ilcken Prize in Loodrecht. He has worked as a studio musician and jazz artist, and can be heard on dozens of recordings including his own CD, Shades of Brown on the T2 label. Over the years, he has performed or recorded with many jazz legends, among them Bob Brookmeyer, Lee Konitz, Jim McNeely, Bill Holman, Bob Mintzer, and Vince Mendoza. He has also played with groups such as Cess Slinger's Buddies in Soul, Free Play plus 8, Lubop City Big Band, Jazz Orchestra of the Concertgebouw, Dutch Jazz Orchestra, and the Beets Brothers Orchestra. Since 1990, he has taught jazz trumpet at the Conservatory of Amsterdam, and since 1996 has served as jazz trumpet soloist of the Metropole Orchestra.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Bridgewater, Cecil [Vernon] (b. Urbana, Illinois, Oct. 10, 1942). American trumpeter and composer. Cecil Bridgewater comes from a musical family with a long line of trumpeters/cornetists (father, grandfather and great grandfather). As it turns out, the first concert he ever heard was by Louis Armstrong. The second was by Duke Ellington. These were enough to cement his desire to become a jazz musician. He studied piano with his mother, learned to play alto sax, and then switched to trumpet. He also developed skills as a drummer, something he feels helped his sense of rhythm.

Bridgewater attended the University of Illinois from 1960 to 1964, earning a bachelor of music degree. He studied under Haskell Sexton. He then moved to Chicago and began working as a freelance and jazz musician. After two years in the Army, he returned to Urbana and the University of Illinois to perform with their famous big band that toured the United States, Sweden, and Russia under John Garvey. With his brother Ron (saxophonist), Cecil also played in a short-lived band called the Bridgewater Brothers (1969). The university jazz band entered several jazz competitions at various festivals, winning first prizes for "Best Big Band." Cecil also won awards for "Best Trumpet Player," "Best Overall Musician," and "Best Small Group."

In 1970, Bridgewater moved to New York City to develop his career as a jazz trumpeter. He joined Horace Silver's quintet for a while, and then performed from 1970 to 1976 with the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra. Jones taught him to compose and arrange, something that has been a strong asset to Bridgewater's career. Bridgewater has also played with the Max Roach Quartet since 1971. He played with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1972), Jimmy Heath (1974-76), Randy Watson, the Grover Mitchell Big Band, Count Basie Orchestra (1989), Dizzy Gillespie, Joe Henderson, Wynton Marsalis, McCoy Tyner, Lena Horne (1982-83), Vanessa Rubin, Uptown String Quartet, and Sir Roland Hanna. He recorded with many of these artists, as well as with Abdullah Ibrahim (1973), Charles McPhearson, Frank Foster, and others. He made a video with Max Roach (Max Roach: In Concert & In Session, 1982, Kool Jazz Fest., DCI Music Video). As a composer, Bridgewater has received commissions, including ones from the Cleveland Chamber Symphony, Atlanta Arts Festival, University of Illinois, and JazzMobile. During the 1970s, Bridgewater was married to singer Dee Dee Bridgewater.

Bridgewater made his recording debut as leader in 1992. His albums include Mean What You Say (Brownstone), I Love Your Smile (Mesa), Generations Suite (Denon), and Lightning and Thunder (Denon). He has taught at New York's New School, The Juilliard School, William Patterson University, SUNY-Queens College, and JazzMobile. He has been a faculty member at the Manhattan School of Music since 1991.

Bibl.: Feather, Leonard and Gitler, Ira: The Biographical Encyclopedia of Jazz (Oxford); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Cecil Bridgewater's official website (www.cecilbridgewater.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Briggs, [James] Arthur (b. St. George's, Grenada, British West Indies, Apr. 9, 1899; d. Chantilly [suburb of Paris], France, July 16, 1991). Grenadian trumpeter. Unfortunately, a huge amount of misinformation exists about this important jazz musician. Briggs came to the United States in 1917 and studied at the Martin Smith Music

School in New York (c1917-18). His first professional playing experience was during the late 1910s with the Clef Club Marching Band, then with Will Marion Cook's 50 Players & Singers (late 1918/early 1919). As a member of the Southern Syncopated Orchestra (including Sidney Bechet and conducted by Will Marion Cook), Briggs went to London (June 1919-1920), where he took additional lessons from John Solomon. He stayed in England, playing with various dance and jazz bands until early 1922, after which he worked in Paris and Belgium until January 1925. Briggs played with his own band, the Savoy Syncopator's Orchestra, with which he recorded under his own name in Germany until September 1927, after which the band played extensively in France until December 1928. Briggs joined Danny Polo's group, Abbaye de Thélème, in Paris and briefly played with Noble Sissle there in 1928. Briggs played the Blackbirds Revue at the Moulin-Rouge (July/September, 1929), and then was back in the Noble Sissle Orchestra (along with Tommy Ladnier) playing in Monte Carlo, Paris, London, New York City, and Paris again (until May 1931). While in London, he performed for King George and Queen Mary in a command performance. In Paris, he recorded with Don Barretto's Afro-Cuban Orchestra (1934), Freddie Johnson's Harlemites (1933), Coleman Hawkins (1935), Django Reinhardt's Quintette du Hot Club de France (1935), and many others.

Because of his refusal to leave Paris prior to the German invasion in October 1940, Briggs was imprisoned by the Germans when they occupied France during World War II. During four years of internment, he played in a prisoner orchestra conducted by Tom Waltham (symphonic music). After the war, he led his own band again (1945-63) mostly in Paris, Biarritz, and Vichy, and taught trumpet and saxophone in St. Gatien and Chantilly (1964-84).

Briggs was known for his large and beautiful tone on the trumpet, and was not only a good jazz soloist, but also a good lead trumpet in the big bands of the 1930s. He influenced jazz in Europe, and was himself strongly influenced by Red Nichols and Louis Armstrong. He was said to be the cousin of Pete Briggs, a tuba player who recorded with Armstrong's Hot Seven.

Briggs was married and had one daughter. He died in Chantilly, France, after sudden kidney failure in 1991 at the age of ninety-two.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); information provided to author by Laplace, who communicated by numerous correspondences with Briggs.

Briney, Bruce C. (b. Joliet, Illinois, Mar. 15, 1960). American trumpeter and conductor. While growing up in Joliet, Illinois, Briney studied with Peter Labella, and played in the Joliet Township West

High School band under Dean Sayles. After graduating in 1978, he enrolled at the University of Illinois where he studied with David Hickman from 1978 to 1982. After receiving his bachelor of music degree, he performed in the Civic Orchestra of Chicago (summer 1982) and attended Northwestern University where he studied with Vincent Cichowicz and Luther Didrickson (master of music degree in 1983, and doctor of musical arts degree in 1996). Additional study was with Arnold Jacobs, Raymond Sasaki, Charles Geyer, George Vosburgh, and Raymond Mase. He also studied conducting with John Paynter and Victor Yampolsky.

Dr. Briney has performed with the Savannah Symphony Orchestra, Peninsula Music Festival Orchestra, Illinois Philharmonic, Symphony of the Shores, and the Spoleto Festival Brass Quintet. He is a current member of the Quad Cities Symphony and the Knox-Galesburg Symphony, and has been the conductor of the Quincy Symphony Orchestra since 2007. In addition, he has been the conductor of the Millar Brass Ensemble, and is a cofounder of the Macomb Brass Band (serving as its conductor for five years). As a teacher, Briney has taught at Roosevelt University in Chicago (1988-93), Bradley University (spring 1998), and is a professor at Western Illinois University (since 1993). In 2001, he received the WIU School of Music's "Outstanding Teaching Award."

Bruce has been married to Robin Briney (a realtor) since 1984. Their children are Paul (b. 1996) and Elizabeth (b. 1998). He enjoys spending time with his family, and fishing when he gets a chance.

Bibl.: "Bruce Briney" (www.qsoa.org/Bruce_Briney.htm); "Bruce Briney" (www.wiu.edu/cofac/music/faculty_staff/briney.php); personal interview, Jan. 14, 2012.

Brisbois, Austin Dean ("Bud") (b. Edina, Minnesota, Apr. 11, 1937; d. Scottsdale, Arizona, June 2, 1978). American trumpeter. Brisbois was one of the finest high note trumpet players of all time. He began playing the trumpet at age twelve, and developed his incredible range—self-taught—while in high school. He briefly attended college in Minneapolis, but moved to Los Angeles around 1956 to work as a freelance artist. In 1958, Stan Kenton hired Brisbois to play the scream parts once written for Maynard Ferguson. He played lead with Kenton's band for two-and-a-half years, recording over thirty albums.

While working as a studio musician during the 1960s and '70s, Brisbois recorded hundreds of albums as a lead trumpet player. His television work includes prominent parts on the series Hawaii-Five-O and the cartoon series The Jetsons. He also worked with leading performers such as Herb Alpert, Nat King Cole, Tony Bennett, the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Bobby Darin, Herbie Hancock, The Monkees, Frank Sinatra, Lalo Schifrin, Billy May, Harry James, Dean Martin, The Four Freshmen, Neil Diamond, Duke Ellington, Nancy Wilson, Henri Mancini, and Rosemary Clooney.

In 1973, Brisbois formed his own rock group, Butane, which featured him on vocals and solo trumpet. It achieved moderate success, and appeared on one television show, The Midnight Special, but no record contract was signed, and the group disbanded in 1975. Following the breakup of his second marriage in the same year, Brisbois began struggling with his lifelong problem of manic depression. He quit the music business and moved to Beverly Hills where he became a Porsche car salesman. A year later, he moved to Scottsdale, Arizona, to be near his sister. He began playing the trumpet again in 1977, teaching private lessons and working with the Mesa Community College Jazz Band. He also coached the trumpet section of the Young Sounds jazz band sponsored by the Phoenix Musicians Union, and performed in various groups in the Phoenix area. His last appearance was as a guest soloist with the jazz-rock group, Matrix. He told the members of the group, I played as well as I have ever played. Less than a week later he committed suicide in the Arizona desert near his home in Scottsdale.

Brisbois was highly respected as both a lead and jazz player, and as a person. No one is certain why he committed suicide, but when David Hickman invited him to serve as a guest artist for the 1977 International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Illinois, Brisbois said that he had just inherited a controlling interest in the Skippy Peanut Butter Company, and that his life had become very complicated. He could not make a commitment to appear, and stated, I don't know what I will be doing at that time. I could be dead by then.

Bibl.: Keim, Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Austin D. 'Bud' Brisbois" (Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org).

Brndiar, John ("Jack") J. (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Apr. 14, 1953). American trumpeter. Brndiar grew up in the Cleveland area, and began playing trumpet at age nine. His early teachers were Richard Millard, Gordon Boyd, and Charles Schlueter. After graduating from Brooklyn High School in 1971, he attended the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory under James Darling and Mary Squire (1972-75). From 1976 to 1977, he earned a master of music degree with Bernard Adelstein at the Cleveland Institute of Music.

Brndiar began playing extra with The Cleveland Orchestra in 1974. He became principal of the Cleveland Chamber Symphony in 1983, and has been a member of the Ohio Chamber Orchestra, Cleveland Opera Orchestra, Cleveland Ballet Orchestra, Blossom Festival Band and Orchestra, Paragon Brass Quintet, and Festival Mozaic Orchestra. He began his teaching career at Cleveland State University (1988-93), University of Akron (substitute, 1992), Ashland University (2010-11), and the College of Wooster (2010-11). He is currently teaching at the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory (since 1993). He has been an active freelance musician since 1972.

John is married to Takako Masame, a violinist in The Cleveland Orchestra. He enjoys reading and keeping physically active and fit.

Bibl.: "John Brndiar" (www.ashland.edu/faculty/music/brndiar-john); personal interview, Jan. 7, 2012.

Brock, Fredy (b. Karlsruhe, Germany, July 10, 1926; d. Grafrath am Ammersee, Germany, Nov. 20, 1992). German trumpeter. Mostly remembered as a popular songwriter, Brock played trumpet with many dance bands including that of Max Greger (1954-71). He led his own band to much success, recording albums such as Ballroom Special (OBH Musikverlag), Twist, and Walk on the Beach.

Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Brodie, Lyman A. (b. Tampa, Florida, Oct. 1, 1949). American trumpeter. Brodie grew up in Tampa, Florida, and began playing the trumpet at age nine. His father Joseph worked in the shipping and receiving department of a large men's clothing store, and his mother Altamese was an early childhood educator for fifty-five years. Lyman attended Howard Blake High School (graduating in 1967), and studied with band director Thomas Simpson and trumpet teacher Henry Pasano. He then studied with Don Owen at the University of South Florida, where he earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1971. While in college, he played as an extra trumpet with the Tampa Philharmonic. When the orchestra was reformed as the Florida Gulf Coast Symphony during his sophomore year, Brodie won a position as third trumpet. He also performed with the American Wind Symphony during the summer of 1970. Early influential figures were Miles Davis, Maynard Ferguson, and Lee Morgan, and later, Adolph Herseth, Maurice André, and Snooky Young.

Brodie became a graduate teaching assistant at North Texas State University (now University of North Texas) where he studied with John Haynie, and earned a master of music degree in 1973. He served as associate principal trumpet of the Ft. Worth (Texas) Symphony Orchestra from 1978 to 1982, and as trumpet professor at the University of Texas at Arlington from 1984 to 1990. He was a founding member and principal trumpet of the Dallas Wind Symphony from 1985 to 2006, and has played in the Dallas Opera, Dallas Ballet, and Lyric Orchestra of Dallas. He was the trumpet professor at the University of Central Florida (UCF) from 1974 to 1978 and from 1990-97. He is a founding member and principal trumpet of the Orlando Philharmonic (starting in 1993), and has also served as president of the orchestra's Board of Directors. He has been a member of The Sovereign Brass (quintet), and is former principal trumpet of the Black Music Repertory Ensemble in Chicago, which debuted in 1990 at Lincoln Center in New York.

As an arts administrator, Brodie served as both interim and permanent chair of the UCF Department of Music for five years from 1993 to 1997. Today, he is an Associate Dean of the College of Arts and Humanities at UCF. Brodie can be heard on numerous recordings for the Crystal, Madacy, and Reference Recordings labels.

Bibl.: Almeida, John. "The Dallas Wind Symphony Trumpet Section and Lyman Brodie" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2002); "UCF: College of Arts and Humanities" (www.cah.ucf.edu); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview Mar. 12, 2010.

Brohm, Jörg (b. Kredenbach/Siegen, Germany, Feb. 20, 1967). German trumpeter. Brohm's first trumpet lessons were at age ten with his father. He later studied at the Robert Schumann School of Music in Düsseldorf. His teachers include Hellmut Schneiderwind, Adam Bauer, and Norbert Jütendonk; he also attended jazz workshops featuring Bobby Shew, Andy Haderer, Chuck Findley, and Jan Oosthof.

Brohm is one of Germany's top jazz and lead trumpeters, having performed with Shirley Bassey, Jiggs Whigham, Dusko Gojkovic, Barbara Dennerlein, Till Brönner, and groups such as the WDR Big Band, Pepe Lienhard Orchestra, RIAS Big Band Berlin, Paul Kuhn Big Band, Cologne Concert Big Band, King of Swing Orchestra, Willy Ketzer Big Band, Sunday Night Orchestra, Bach Brass & Blues, Starlight Explosion, and the Cologne Contemporary Jazz Orchestra.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Broiles, Melvin ("Mel") (b. Coquille, Oregon, Sept. 4, 1929; d. New York, New York, Aug. 26, 2003). American trumpeter. Broiles was one of the greatest virtuosos of the trumpet. He was a top orchestral player and teacher whose often bizarre sense of humor equaled his reputation as a musician.

Broiles began playing trumpet during second grade in the Salina, Kansas, public schools. He lived in Hollywood, California, during his high school years, where he performed in various concert bands and dance bands. In 1950, he enrolled at The Juilliard School in New York where he became a student of William Vacchiano. After one year, he was drafted into military service, and played in the West Point Academy Band from 1951 to 1954. Upon discharge, he performed in New York as a freelance artist, and played many Broadway shows. In 1954, he was selected to play in the NBC Symphony's Symphony of the Air radio program, subsequently performing in numerous live radio broadcasts. This orchestra also toured the Far East for three months.

Broiles became principal trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra in 1955, but after one year accepted a position as principal trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Near the end of his first season in Philadelphia, Broiles was asked to make an appointment to see the general manager of the orchestra. This came at a time when other members of the orchestra were negotiating their contracts for the following season. Broiles arrived at the meeting with a list of demands for increased salary and benefits, only to discover that the reason for the meeting was to inform him that his services were no longer needed. He returned to the Metropolitan Opera the following year, and remained with that organization until his retirement in 2001.

From 1961, Broiles played at Saint Patrick's Cathedral. He played under noted conductors such as Leopold Stokowski and Pierre Monteux, and performed jazz with Charlie Parker (1947) and John Lewis (1960) among others. He recorded various quicksteps on the E-flat cornet with James Burke, as well as recording the Mass in B minor by Bach (under Robert Shaw), the Concerto P75 for two trumpets by Vivaldi with Robert Nagel, and Altenberg's Concerto for 7 Trumpets and Timpani with Roger Voisin.

Broiles was a gifted teacher, and began teaching part-time at The Juilliard School in 1971; he continued teaching there for thirty years until his retirement in 2001. He also taught at the Mannes School of Music and the Manhattan School of Music. He trained a legion of professional trumpet performers and teachers. He was also a fine composer who wrote numerous etudes and duets, including Etudes and Duets, Books 1-4*, Transpositions for Orchestral Trumpeters, Trumpet Baroque,* Books 1-2*, Tower Calls* (trumpet alone), Baroque Duets, and Grand Opera Classics. His solo with band, Vernal Equinox, is a virtuosic work. He also composed Fanfare and Blazing Trumpets for trumpet ensemble.

Many of Broiles's humorous antics are well known. When the great German virtuoso trumpeter Adolf Scherbaum came to New York for a solo concert in the late 1960s, Broiles sent him a letter challenging him to a high note contest. Broiles claimed to have rented Carnegie Recital Hall, and to have invited many of the leading trumpet players in New York City to witness the duel. Scherbaum, baffled by the letter and not knowing Broiles's reputation as a prankster, was uncertain whether this challenge was real, or a joke. Fortunately, Scherbaum dismissed the letter after he found out that this was typical Broiles humor. Likewise, hundreds of trumpeters remember Broiles's lecture-demonstration at the 1980 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Boulder, Colorado. Broiles entered the stage wearing rather outrageous western clothing, replete with cowboy boots, poised with feet apart in front of each other, left fist on his hip, and piccolo trumpet in his right hand, and then played the entire third movement of the Brandenburg Concerto No. 2! Also, Broiles's last performance with the Metropolitan Opera was outrageous. During a huge grand pause near the climactic conclusion of the opera, Wozzeck, by Berg, Broiles screamed from the orchestra pit, I love this job!!

Broiles married Teresa Yergo in 1957; they had a daughter, Karen. He was an accomplished pilot who flew his own four-seat single engine Cessna airplane. He was also an excellent photographer. His trumpet was heard countless times at New York Giants football games. He died just days before his seventy-fourth birthday. He is remembered as a flamboyant and strong trumpeter, an excellent teacher, and a fun-loving person. His music library is housed at the University of Georgia under the former care of Fred Mills (who unfortunately passed away on September 7, 2009).

Bibl.: Falk, Jonni. "Mel Broiles and His Magic Trumpet" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1987); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Mel Broiles" (Windsong Press: www.windsongpress.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Brönner, Till (b. Viersen, Nordrhein-Westfalen, Germany, May 6, 1971). German trumpeter. Brönner was raised in Rome and comes from a musical family. He studied classical music at the Jesuit boarding school, Aloisiuskollog, in Bonn, and after hearing recordings of saxophonist Charlie Parker, fell in love with bebop music. He later studied jazz trumpet with Jiggs Whigham and Jon Eardley at the Cologne Music Academy, and also took lessons with Bobby Shew and Malte Burba. At age eighteen, he dropped out of school to become a member of Peter Herbolzheimer's Rhythm Combination and Brass (1989-91). At age twenty, he became first trumpet of the renowned RIAS Big Band in Berlin.

Brönner released his first solo album, Generations of Jazz, in 1993, receiving two prizes for best German jazz album. He quickly became established as a top jazz musician, working with such legends as Dave Brubeck, James Moody, Natalie Cole, Tony Bennett, Ray Brown, Johnny Griffin, Monty Alexander, Joachim Kühn, and many others. Around 1998, he began producing albums for others, and composing or arranging music for them. He wrote the music for the movie soundtracks to Jazz Scene (2001) and Höllentour (Hell on Wheels, about the Tour de France bicycle race). He has won many awards, including two Echo Awards and several Grammy nominations, and has sold more CDs than any other German jazz musician. His CD, Love, on the Verve label in 1998, featured his first work as a jazz singer, and won a Gold Disc Award from the Japanese magazine, Swing Journal. Other albums include My Secret Love (1995), German Songs (1996), Midnight (1997), Chattin' with Chet (2000), Jazz Seen (2001), Get Well Soon (2002), Blue Eyed Soul (2002), That Summer (2004), Oceana (2006), The Christmas Album (2007), RIO (2008), and At the End of the Day (2010).

Brönner is a superstar performer whose music is a unique blend of bebop and jazz fusion, but which also sometimes includes country, rock, pop, and other styles. He most frequently performs jazz ballads on flugelhorn or trumpet, reflecting strong influences of Dizzy Gillespie, Chet Baker, and Freddie Hubbard.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Till Brönner's official website: www.tillbroenner.com; "Till Brönner" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Till_Brönner).

Brooks, Gerald Randolph ("Randy") E. (b. Sanford, Maine, Mar. 15, 1918; d. Springdale, Maine, Mar. 21, 1967). American trumpeter.

Brooks began playing the cornet at age six under the guidance of his parents. He later studied under Ruby Newman and Walter M. Smith. At age eight, he performed a cornet trio with his parents in the Sanford Salvation Army band. When he was eleven, he was discovered by Rudy Vallee and, because of his young age, was engaged as a novelty soloist with Vallee's Connecticut Yankees.

After graduating from high school in 1937, Brooks went to New York City and played trumpet with Hal Kemp, Claude Thornhill (1942), Bob Allen, Art Jarrett, and Les Brown (1942-44). In 1944, he also started his own swing band. Its hit recording of Tenderly sold over a million copies and established Brooks as "The Golden Trumpet." Other popular recordings followed, including Harlem Nocturne, The Man with the Horn, Don't Let Me Dream, Moonmist, and Laughing on the Outside.

In 1946, Brooks's band performed a lengthy run at the Roseland Ballroom in New York. They also played during the Harvest Moon Festival at Madison Square Garden in the same year. Downbeat magazine named the band one of the best in the nation in 1947. Brooks became famous for his beautiful ballad style, equaling that of the more famous Ray Anthony.

Brooks married the glamorous bandleader Ina Ray Hutton, and moved to the West Coast. His career was poised to skyrocket when a cerebral stroke occurred in 1950, causing him to become partially paralyzed. After months of physical therapy, Brooks began playing again, but never regained his earlier skills on the trumpet. A second stroke in 1958 all but ended his playing days. By 1961, he retired altogether as a nearly forgotten trumpeter. He died on March 21, 1967 in a fire at his mother's apartment in Springdale, Maine, having just turned forty-nine.

Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Randy Brooks" (www.findagrave.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Brooks, Oswald F. ("Baba") [aka Baba Leslie] (b. Kingston, Jamaica, c1935). Jamaican trumpeter. Brooks began his musical career as a trumpeter in the Eric Dean Orchestra during the 1950s. Although mostly not credited, he became a studio player in Kingston and recorded with numerous ska bands during the 1950s and '60s. He also recorded with Duke Reid, Sonia Pottinger, Lindon Pottinger, King Edwards, and Prince Buster.

Brooks formed his own band in the early 1960s and had several hit singles including Independence Ska (1962), Bus Strike (1964), Musical Workshop (1964), Musical Communion, Bank to Bank, Watermelon Man, and Guns Fever (1965). He also performed with The Skatalites. He recorded for labels such as Gayfeet, High Note, LOP, Treasure Isle/Dutchess, and can be heard on the album Baba Brooks and His Band (You & Me).

Bibl.: "Oswald Brooks" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Baba Brooks" (www.georgwa.demon.co.uk/Baba%20Brooks.htm).

Brosel, Hans (b. Böllingsdorf [Ansbach], Germany, Aug. 21, 1950). German trumpeter. Brosel studied at the Nürnberg Conservatory from 1964 to 1967, and with Walter Uhlemann at the Musikhochschule München from 1967 to 1972. While a student in Munich, he was a member of the BGS Music Corps from 1969 to 1971. He was an active chamber music performer throughout the 1970s and '80s, and a member of the Munich Philharmonic during the 1973-74 season. In 1976, he joined the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, and since September of 1982 has played with the Nürnberg Philharmonic, Bavarian Brass Soloists in Munich, and the Brass Ensemble of the Munich Philharmonic.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Brown, Bernard [Henry Kingsmill] (b. Norfolk, England, Apr. 26, 1914; d. Mar. 11, 1983). British trumpeter. Brown began studying with John Solomon, then with George Eskdale at the Royal Academy of Music in London in 1937. He then joined the Irish Guards Band during World War II, and became third trumpet in the London Symphony Orchestra (1949-58). He played with the English Chamber Orchestra and recorded with the Edward Tarr Trumpet Ensemble and the Pro Arte Orchestra (additional trumpeter, his friend Denis Egan being the regular principal trumpet). He was known for his excellent ability to perform the high trumpet parts of J. S. Bach on the modern D trumpet. He played with the Royal Opera House Orchestra at Covent Garden (in the 1960-70s), and taught at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London where he mentored numerous trumpet players including Crispian Steele-Perkins.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Brown, Clifford Benjamin ("Brownie") (b. Wilmington, Delaware, Oct. 30, 1930; d. Bedford, Pennsylvania, June 26, 1956). American trumpeter. Had it not been for a tragic car accident, the twenty-five-year-old trumpeter might have become another Louis Armstrong in stature and influence. As it is, Brownie was one of the finest jazz trumpeters to ever live. His influence on leading artists such as Lee Morgan, Donald Byrd, Freddie Hubbard, Woody Shaw, Booker Little, Marcus Belgrave, Valery Ponomarev, Vince DiMartino, Bobby Shew, Chuck Findley, Arturo Sandoval, Patrick Artero, Wendell Brunious, Leroy Jones, and others is significant.

Brown came from a family of musicians, and began to play the trumpet under his father at age twelve. Brown later studied under Robert "Boysie" Lowery (1943-46) and Harry Andrews during senior high school at Howard High School (1946-48). Brownie also played in his high school marching band conducted by Andrews, and led the school's jazz band, the Esquires. In 1948, Brown attended Delaware State College as a math major, and later transferred to Maryland State University as a music major. His performances with the school jazz ensembles brought him a lot of attention from Marcus Belgrave and others. But he got even more attention in jam sessions in Philadelphia. He had occasions to play with J. J. Johnson, Max Roach, and Fats Navarro. Brown regularly received advice from Fats Navarro (1946-49), and had an opportunity to sit in with Dizzy Gillespie's big band in Wilmington (1949). Impressed, Gillespie always encouraged him to continue in music.

A car accident in 1950 left him disabled for nearly a full year. Although he was able to recover completely, he never returned to college. In 1951, Brown replaced Bennie Harris in the Charlie Parker Quintet for a week at the Harlem Club in Philadelphia. Then, he played for a spell with Jimmy Heath. In late 1951, he began playing with the R&B group Chris Powell and his Five Blue Flames, making his first recordings in 1952. In the following year, he recorded on Blue Note with Lou Donaldson, and played in a recorded jam session with Tadd Dameron. He also performed with Dameron in Atlantic City, New Jersey. Brown recorded again on Blue Note under J. J. Johnson's leadership in June, and under his own name in August, offering a beautiful rendition on Easy Living (one of the Brownie's own favorite solos).

Brown toured Europe with Lionel Hampton's band in the fall of 1953, and took part in many recording sessions, many in Paris. In early 1954, Brown played at Birdland with a quintet that included Art

Blakey (leader), Lou Donaldson, Horace Silver, and Curly Russell. A few months later, he went to Los Angeles to colead a new band with drummer Max Roach. He stayed with Roach until his death. He also starred in several recorded jam sessions, and made records with Dinah Washington, Helen Merrill, and Sarah Vaughan. He recorded an album with strings in 1955, and was soon considered to be the young lion of jazz.

In the early morning hours of June 27, 1956, he, pianist Richie Powell, and Powell's wife were driving on the Pennsylvania Turnpike to their next concert in Chicago when Powell's wife lost control of the automobile during a rainstorm. Brown was sleeping in the back seat when all three were killed after the car left the road. It was a tragic end to an already brilliant career. He is buried at the Mt. Zion Cemetery in Wilmington, Delaware.

Clifford Brown led a clean life away from drugs, cigarettes, and alcohol. Although he only recorded for four years, his albums are prized among jazz enthusiasts. Available CDs include Clifford Brown Quartet in Paris (Original Jazz Classics), Clifford Brown and Max Roach (Verve), A Study in Brown (EmArcy), At Basin Street (EmArcy), and The Beginning and the End (Columbia/Legacy). The only known video of the legendary trumpeter was found in a long-lost television episode of the Soupy On show (1956 in Detroit). A video documentary of Brown called Brownie Speaks is currently being produced by Wilmington jazz artist Don Glanden.

Songs composed by Brown include Goofin' With Me, Clifford's Axe, Bones for Jones, George's Dilemma, Swingin', Joy Spring, Daahoud, Sandu, Gerkin for Perkin, Tiny Capers, Brownie Speaks, LaRue Minor Mood, All Weird, and Sweet Clifford. Brown's improvisations are marked by his beautiful tone, skillful technique, and long melodic lines, and he was known for his haunting and introspective ballads. Posthumously, he was awarded the Honorary Award by the International Trumpet Guild (2004) and inducted into the Downbeat Jazz Hall of Fame in 1972. Several artists have dedicated record albums to him, including Helen Merrill and Arturo Sandoval. The city of Wilmington also hosts the annual Clifford Brown Jazz Festival. Another tribute to Brown is the Benny Golson song, I Remember Clifford, that has been recorded hundreds of times by leading artists.

Bibl.: Catalano, Nick. Clifford Brown: The Life and Art of the Legendary Jazz Trumpeter (Oxford University Press); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. a full study Do You Remember Clifford?, excerpt on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Brown, David C. (b. Ft. Collins, Colorado, Jan. 11, 1951). American trumpeter. Brown grew up in Flagstaff, Arizona. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first teachers were Fay Hanson, and Jane Carter, who was teaching at Northern Arizona University at the time. After graduating from Flagstaff High School in 1969, Brown attended Indiana University where he studied with Charles Gorham, earning a bachelor of music degree in 1975.

Brown's career began when he became principal trumpet of the Toledo Symphony Orchestra in 1975, a position he held until 1998. He also played in the Great Lakes Brass Quintet, and was principal cornet of the Toledo Concert Band and second trumpet in the Toledo Opera orchestra. From 1976 to 1998, he taught at the University of Toledo and played in the faculty brass quintet. While teaching at the University of Toledo, Brown earned a master of music degree in 1997, studying jazz improvisation with Gene Parker.

Brown accepted a position at Brigham Young University in 1998. He also works in the Salt Lake City, Utah, area as a freelance and studio performer, and has played with the Utah Symphony and Ballet West. He has backed numerous celebrities on CD recordings, and recorded soundtracks for dozens of television shows and commercials, as well as feature films such as The Scarecrow, Crossfire Trail, Thunderbirds, and Universal Movie Magic. His own CD recording for trumpet and organ is titled Majestic Airs (Tantara).

Brown and his wife Laura, a billing manager for a medical office, have four children: Trent (b. 1976), Lindsay (b. 1978), Brian (b. 1981), and Tyler (b. 1983). They also have ten grandchildren. His hobbies include woodworking, kayaking, and hiking.

Bibl.: "David C. Brown" (http://cfac-old.byu.edu/index.php?id=28&act=1&eid=122); personal interview, Feb. 8, 2011.

Brown, Frank (b. Cincinnati, Ohio, Sept. 30, 1931; d. Cincinnati, Ohio, May 13, 1983). American trumpeter. Brown started playing the cornet, and was an excellent young soloist. After high school, he served in the military during the Korean War as a member of a concert band (one year). Afterward, he played with the big bands of Woody Herman, Duke Ellington, Ralph Marterie, Buddy Morrow, and Buddy Rich. He settled in his hometown of Cincinnati during the early 1970s, performing as a classical and jazz freelance musician with the Cincinnati Ballet Orchestra, Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Playhouse in the Park, and Symphony Jazz Ensemble. He taught jazz trumpet at the University of Cincinnati College-Conservatory of Music, and often performed during the evenings at various local nightclubs.

Brown was a popular and active trumpeter. An article in the September 1982 issue of Cincinnati magazine discussed the local music scene stating, You don't work as a musician in Cincinnati if you don't know Frank Brown. Unfortunately, Brown was found brutally murdered one evening at a local nightclub. He was fifty-one years old.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Brown, Henry C. (b. Westmoreland, New Hampshire, Dec. 12, 1827; d. Boston, Massachusetts. Dec. 7, 1912). American cornetist. Henry's father John Dwight Brown, was a violinist and vocal teacher who instructed Henry during his formative years. Henry began the cornet at age ten. By age sixteen, he joined the National Theater Orchestra in Boston. At age nineteen, he was cornet soloist with the Boston Brigade Band, and became its leader in 1856 at the age of twenty-nine. When Patrick Gilmore left Salem in 1859, Brown assumed his position as leader of the Salem Cadet Band. At the start of the Civil War, Brown led the famous 23rd Mass. Infantry Band, which saw service throughout the war.

Brown gained national prominence as a cornet soloist when Gilmore invited him to become cornet soloist for the Gilmore Peace Jubilee in 1869. This led to a yearlong solo tour of Europe in 1872, after which he returned to Boston to resume duties with the Brigade Band. In November 1875, Brown was selected to play Schubert's Elegy of Tears as a cornet solo during the funeral procession for Henry Wilson, a Massachusetts Statesman.

After retiring in 1879, Brown devoted most of his time to teaching; he was considered to be New England's finest cornet teacher. He was known for his beautiful and powerful tone, and refined technique. He became a wealthy real estate investor and was involved with several civic organizations in Boston. He died just days before his eighty-fifth birthday.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications).

Brown, Herbert ("Bert") Fuller (b. Orland, Indiana, Jan. 28, 1869; d. Miami, Florida, Feb. 21, 1959). American cornetist. The Brown family were farmers in Indiana, and struggled to make ends meet. While in his teens, Herbert directed local bands in order to help out with finances. His early training was with his father, a fine amateur musician.

In 1887, Brown moved to Jackson, Michigan, in order to study cornet with Louis Boos, a former member of the Gilmore Band. He played in the Boos Band until 1889 when he joined a traveling theatrical company that ended its tours in New York City. He then became musical director of the Dockstader and Thomas Minstrels, and toured Michigan where he accepted a job playing in the Wurzburger and Bronson Band in Grand Rapids. His next move was to Cleveland where he played for two seasons in the Star Theater Orchestra. After that, he played in the Euclid Avenue Opera House, until it burned during the winter of 1892. As a result, he sought work in the local theaters of Pittsburgh.

Brown was a member of the 1893 Official World's Fair Band that featured James D. Llewellyn as special cornet soloist. At the conclusion of the fair, Brown joined Liberati's band for a West Coast tour, and in the following year, worked in Chicago as cornet soloist at McVickers Theater. Throughout the 1890s, he was first trumpet (cornet) in the Adolph Rosenbecker Symphony Orchestra (sometimes referred to as the Chicago Symphony Orchestra) and in Weldon's Chicago Band. Sometime during the early 1900s, Brown moved to New Orleans. He was engaged by Innes to play cornet at the St. Louis Exposition. In 1906, he joined Arthur Pryor's band in New York City, and remained with it until 1917, although he occasionally played for short periods with them after that.

During the 1917-18 season, Brown became assistant solo cornet in Sousa's Band, and shared solo honors with Frank Simon. Subsequently, he played engagements with the Duss Band of New York, the Bellstedt band, Fanciulli's Band, and Phinney's Band of Chicago.

Brown inherited the family farm; he also owned a great deal of real estate, which made him a wealthy man. He no longer needed to earn money playing the cornet, but continued playing whenever he felt it was fun to do so. Beginning in 1921, he occasionally performed with Harold Bachman's Million Dollar Band while still maintaining the farm in Indiana. Bohumir Kryl offered him a contract with his band one summer, but Brown refused, saying, the fishing is too good here.

Brown married in 1895, but his wife died in 1898. His hometown of Orland loved him, considered him a leading citizen, and even named a nearby lake (Brown Lake) in his honor. He was known to possess a dry wit and sense of humor.

Bert Brown recorded hundreds of works as a member of Pryor's band, but only made one solo recording, To Have, To Hold, To Love by Ernest Ball, for the Victor Record Company. His tone stood out in all of these recordings, especially in operatic selections. In 1907, the Chicago Daily Journal described him as the greatest cornet soloist in America. In the same year, the Ft. Wayne Journal Gazette wrote, Bert Brown stands today without a peer as a great cornet soloist.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publicatons).

Brown, Marcellus (b. Frankfurt, Germany, June 20, 1951). German-born American trumpeter and conductor. Brown grew up in Detroit. He began playing the trumpet at age eleven; his first trumpet teachers were Anderson White, Louie LaRosa, and Leonard B. Smith. After graduating from high school in 1969, he attended the University of Michigan where he studied with Clifford Lillya (1969-74), earning bachelor and master of music degrees. In 1978, he began work on a doctor of music degree at the University of Illinois where his primary teachers were Harry Begian (band conducting) and David Hickman (trumpet). While in school, he began teaching part time at Augustana College in Rock Island, Illinois, and after completing his degree, taught there fulltime from 1981 to 1989. He also played in the Quad Cities Symphony in nearby Davenport, Iowa.

Brown became director of bands and trumpet professor at Boise State University in Idaho in 1989. He directs the Treasure Valley Concert Band, is founder of the Idaho Youth Wind Symphony, and performs in the faculty brass quintet, Duo Les Bois (trumpet and guitar), and the Boise Philharmonic Orchestra. He has received the Larry G. Selland Humanitarian Award from the BSU Women's Center (2002), Excellence in Teaching Award from the BSU/LDS Student Association (2002), the Top Ten Student Scholar Award from BSU (2003), and was elected into the American Bandmasters Association (2006).

Brown and his wife Carol A. Brown, Head of Human Resources for Boise, Inc., a large paper making company, have three children: Brandon (b. 1982), Marc (b. 1986), and Adam (b. 1986). His hobbies include golf and rollerblading.

Bibl.: "Marcellus Brown" (www.music.boisestate.edu/studio-faculty/prof-marcellus-brown/); personal interview, Apr. 24, 2011.

Brown, Maurice ("Mobetta") (b. Harvey, Illinois, Jan. 6, 1981). American trumpeter and composer. The great jazz trumpeter, Clark Terry, once said: Brownie is the young trumpeter to watch for sure. I see young cats all over the world and Maurice has it. An article in Downbeat magazine stated, Brown is one of the most exciting young trumpeters in jazz—be it New Orleans or New York. His improvisations are fresh, his chops are dynamic, and he's writing what could very well become a new generation of hard-bop-meets-new-grooves standards.

Brown grew up in Chicago. While a student at Hillcrest High School, he played with Ramsey Lewis at Chicago's Orchestra Hall.

After graduating in 1999, he was awarded a full scholarship to study at Northern Illinois University. He continued his studies at Southern University in Baton Rouge, Louisiana where he studied jazz with clarinetist Alvin Batiste. Being mostly influenced by the trumpet style of Miles Davis, it was no surprise that Brown won first place in the Miles Davis Trumpet Competition.

Brown moved to New Orleans in 2002. He played with such greats as Clark Terry, Johnny Griffin, Curtis Fuller, Etta Jones, Houston Person, Lou Donaldson, Elvin Jones, Benny Golson, Vanessa Rubin, Frank Morgan, Jon Faddis, Mulgrew Miller, Jeff Watts, Stefon Harris, Ellis Marsalis, and Lonnie Plaxico. He also recorded with Roy Hargrove, Fred Anderson, Michelle Carr, Ernest Dawkins, and others. He lost his home during Hurricane Katrina and subsequently moved to Brooklyn, New York. He formed a new group called Soul'd U Out, which has become very popular. He also leads the combo, The Maurice Brown Effect. In New York, he has recorded with Aretha Franklin, Talib Kweli, Wyclef Jean, Cee-Lo, De La Soul, The Roots, and Diddy.

Maurice Brown was inducted into the Brooklyn Jazz Hall of Fame in 2007 at the young age of twenty-six. His albums as leader are The Cycle of Love (Brown Records) and Hip to Bop (Brown Records). He is characterized as unpretentious and cultured, and is the subject of Adam Barton's forthcoming film documentary, Brass Movement: A Modern Jazz Story. Brown has toured the world and appears each year at major jazz festivals.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Maurice Brown" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Maurice Brown's official website: www.mauricebrown.net.

Browne, Tom (b. Queens, New York, Oct. 30, 1954). American trumpeter. Browne might be considered the king of funk-oriented jazz trumpeters. He played piano at the age of eleven, but soon switched to trumpet. He attended New York's High School of Music and Art, then studied physics at Kingsborough University and Queens College. After recording with alto sax player Sonny Fortune in 1976, Browne decided to make music his career.

In 1979, Browne signed with GRP Records and started an impressive series of recordings. His 1980 recording with Sonny Fortune, Funkin' for Jamaica, became a hit single, and his 1981 single, Thighs High, made the top five on the R&B charts. His albums for GRP, Arista, Malaco, and Hip Bop are Browne Sugar (GRP), Love Approach (GRP), Magic (Arista), Yours Truly (GRP), Rockin' Radio (Arista), Tommy Gun (Arista), No Longer (Malaco), Mo' Jamaica Funk (Hip Bop), Another Shade of Browne (Hip Bop), The Essence of Funk (Hip Bop), R 'N' Browne (Hip Bop), Collection (Hip Bob, Essence), and S'Up (Pony Canyon).

Browne retired from music in 1988 to become a charter pilot. However, he returned to music in the early 1990s. Although he is still active as a performer, most of Browne's fame stems from the 1980s and '90s. He is currently a commercial airline captain with Continental Connection and Mountain Air Cargo, and is a pilot, charter captain, and director of operations for several charter airlines.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Tom Browne" (http://en.wikipedia.org.); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Erdmann, Thomas. "Tom Browne: Learning to Adapt" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2012).

Bruckner, Heinrich (b. Vienna, Austria, Sept. 5, 1965). Austrian trumpeter. Bruckner studied with Richard Schwameis and Karl Brugger at the Vienna Conservatory, and with Josef Pomberger at the Vienna Hochschule. In 1981, he was the youngest ever prizewinner (third prize) in the Helmut Wobisch Competition. That same year, he began playing professionally with the stage band of the Austrian Theatre.

Since 1987, Bruckner has been principal trumpet of the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, and is a member of the Art of Brass Vienna and Vienna Symphony Jazz Project. He also plays natural (valveless) trumpet in Ensemble Tonus. He is an active soloist, and his 2005 CD on the Camerata label was nominated for an Amadeus Award. He was a guest professor of brass chamber music at the University of Music in Vienna from 1995 to 2005.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Heinrich Bruckner" (www.artofbrass.at/members-e.htm).

Brun, Philippe (b. Paris, France, Apr. 19, 1908; d. Ville aux Dames, France, Jan. 14, 1994). French trumpeter. Brun studied the violin at the Paris Conservatory, but switched to the trumpet at the age of eighteen. He was self-taught, but took advice from Julien Porret and trombonist Marcel Dumont. Brun was an advocate of the nonpressure system of brass playing.

Brun played cornet with Fred Hoffman, and joined Gregor as a Bix [Beiderbecke]-style soloist (May to December 1929). He made his recording debuts with Gregor (May 1929) and his solo on Gregorology places him as one of the truly best Bix disciples. He also made records as a guest with Ray Ventura and his Collegians (1929). Brun also played with Stéphane Mougin and Danny Polo, and moved to England in late 1929 where he was an important soloist for Jack Hylton through 1935. He also played with Bert Ambrose and Fred Waring.

Brun returned to Paris in the mid 1930s, and worked with the Jazz du Poste Parisien (1936), Bob Huber, and Ray Ventura (1937 to April 1940). He recorded with Django Reinhardt in 1937, Alix Combelle in 1938, and later with Danny Polo and the Hot Club Swing Stars. Altogether, he recorded twenty tunes as a leader between 1937 and 1940. College Stomp, recorded under his own name, would later become one of Cat Anderson's favorite records.

During the Nazi occupation of France, Brun lived in Switzerland from early 1941 to 1944. There, he performed with Andre Ekyan, Edmond Cohanier, Eddie Brunner, and Teddy Stauffer. He recorded twenty-six tunes for the Swiss Elite Special label. After World War II, he returned to France and led his own bands and made records under his own name on labels such as Ducretet-Thomson and Pacific. He led a band at the Sporting Club in Monte-Carlo, played with Camille Sauvage (1951), Sidney Bechet (1953), Alix Combelle (1964), and the Carl Hagenbeck Circus. He retired in the early 1960s, and is today considered to be the first French jazz trumpeter who was comparable to the top American jazz artists during the 1930s and '40s.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Brunious, Wendell (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Oct. 27, 1954). American trumpeter. Brunious comes from a musical family. His father, John "Picket" Brunious (1920-76), was a prominent jazz trumpeter who taught Wendell to play trumpet at age eleven. Wendell later studied music at Southern University and began his professional career subbing for his father in various clubs on Bourbon Street in New Orleans, as well as in the William Houston Big Band and Danny Barker's Congo Square Brass Band (1969). By 1979, he was a regular performer at Preservation Hall under Kid Thomas Valentine. When Valentine died in 1987, Brunious was named the band's leader.

Brunious played with the Eureka Brass Band (1980), Lionel Hampton (1980 in New Orleans; 1981 in New York), Linda Hopkins (1984), Sammy Rimington (tour in 1984, and many other occasions), Carrie Smith (1986), Louis Nelson (1987-89), Wallace Davenport (1992), Wynton Marsalis, Bob Wilber, Leroy Jones, Patrick Artero, Nicholas Payton, John Allred, Jesse Davis, and others. He recorded with the Caledonia Jazz Band of Norway (1985 and 1987) and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band into the 2000s. He began recording CDs as leader of PHJB in 1986, including In the Tradition (GHB), Mama Don't Allow It (GHB), New Orleans Reunion, We'll Meet Again, and Wendell Brunious (self-produced), and can also be heard as a sideman on over fifty CDs. Brunious was one of the first to combine the styles of Louis Armstrong and Clifford Brown. He is also a successful crooner, and has strongly influenced his own nephew Mark Braud, a trumpet player and singer himself.

Brunious and Rita (Hoard) Brunious were married in New Orleans in 1984 and had two children, Meredith and Brandon, but were divorced in 2004. He then lived in Sweden with clarinetist Caroline Fromell and their son Jonathan from 2004 to 2011, but he has recently returned to his hometown of New Orleans where he works as a touring jazz trumpet soloist.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Wendell Brunious" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Wendell_Brunious).

Bruynen, Rob (b. Heerlen, Netherlands, Jan. 29, 1961). Dutch trumpeter. Bruynen began playing the trumpet at age eight, and started to learn jazz at age fourteen. He studied at the Maastricht Academy of Music and the Hilversum Music Academy (1979-82), learning classical and jazz music. He has performed with The Skymasters, Metropole Orchestra, VARA Dansorkest, TROS Orchestra, Dutch Jazz Orchestra, Euro Jazz Band, Glenn Miller Orchestra, Lalo Schifrin, Patti Austin, Quincy Jones, Phil Collins, Bill Evans, Joe Lovano, The Brecker Brothers, Ray Brown, and many others.

Bruynen has been a member of the WDR Big Band in Cologne since 1986, and has taught jazz at the Maastricht Academy of Music since 1989. He can be heard on over sixty CDs, and is leader of his own group, Brownie's Colours (since 1998, formerly known as Brownie Speaks). He is an active composer and arranger.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Rob Bruynen" (www.browniescolours.nl/bruynen3.html).

Bryant, Clora (b. Denison, Texas, May 30, 1929). American trumpeter. Bryant started on the piano, but switched to the trumpet during her junior year in high school when her older brother joined the military in 1941. He left his trumpet behind, and Clora took it up in order to play in her high school marching band. After graduating from high school, she attended Prairie View University in Prairie View, Texas (now Prairie View A&M University) and played in its all-girl orchestra. She studied trumpet with Conrad O. Johnson in 1942, and Lloyd Reese in 1945.

Bryant's professional career began in 1946 when she played briefly in the Sweethearts of Rhythm. She also played with the Four Vees, Queens of Swing (1948-49), Jack McVea's (all-female) orchestra

(1950), the Sepia Tones (1951), Charlie Parker, Billie Holiday (1951), Dizzy Gillespie, and Eric Dolphy (1956). She led her own quartet in 1957 and recorded her only record as a leader for the Mode label. Her long and prosperous career also included playing with numerous show bands in the Los Angeles area, as well as with the Bill Berry Big Band (1968) and Barry White's band (1975). From 1976 to 1983, she was a member of a group called Swi-bop. She toured with Johnny Otis (1980-85) and performed with Jimmy and Jeannie Cheatham's Sweet Baby Blues Band (1986-89). In addition, she performed with Louis Armstrong, Carl Perkins, and Dexter Gordon.

In 1989, Clora Bryant wrote a letter to Premier Mikhail Gorbachev that resulted in her being the first woman jazz performer to tour the Soviet Union. She was also the first woman trumpeter to record with Dizzy Gillespie. She was an excellent bebop player who was capable of singing and playing in the Dixieland style.

A heart attack and quadruple bypass operation in 1996 stopped her trumpet-playing career. However, she continued to sing and teach jazz history at several Los Angeles colleges. She was given the Mary Lou Williams Women in Jazz award in 2002, and in 2004, filmmaker Zeinabu Irene Davis produced a documentary on Bryant called Trumpetistically. Bryant also edited the book, Central Avenue Sounds: Jazz in Los Angeles (University of California Press, 1998). She continues to inspire and mentor young jazz performers, especially women artists.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Clora Bryant" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Bryant, Robert Sr. ("Bobby") (b. Hattiesburg, Mississippi, May 19, 1934; d. Los Angeles, California, June 10, 1998). American trumpeter. Bryant learned the trumpet and tenor sax as a member of his school bands. He then attended the Cosmopolitan School of Music in Chicago from 1952 to 1957 where he studied classical piano and played with several local groups including MIT+3 and Red Saunders's band.

Bryant spent part of 1960 in New York playing in the groups of Johnny Griffin and Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis, but moved permanently to Los Angeles in 1961 to become primarily a studio player. He also played with several big bands including those of Vic Damone (world tour in 1965), Oliver Nelson (1966-c1969), and Gerald Wilson (1967-68, 1970, 1981). He performed and recorded with Charles Mingus during the 1964 Monterey Jazz Festival, and later became a member of the Capp-Pierce Juggernaut. Bryan also led his own bands on record dates in 1961, 1967, 1969, and 1971. His last years were spent playing in the Clayton-Hamilton Jazz Orchestra and with his own part-time band.

Bryan was known for his unusually strong upper register that was at times comparable to that of Maynard Ferguson and Cat Anderson, but ill health during the 1990s diminished his abilities to continue in this style. He turned much of his attention to teaching, and continued to play on a limited basis until his death in 1998 at the age of sixty-four. Some of his best albums include Swahili Strut (Cadet), Ain't Doing too B-A-D (Cadet), and The Jazz Excursion into Hair (Pacific Jazz). His son, Robert Jr. is a professional jazz tenor sax player.

Bibl.: Kernfeld. Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Brydenfelt, Michael (b. Roskilde, Denmark, Apr. 3, 1966). Danish trumpeter. Brydenfelt began playing trumpet at the relatively late age of fifteen. His first lessons were with a local trombone teacher, but he soon began studying with the best trumpet players in the city. Showing a remarkable ability, he entered the Royal Danish Academy in Copenhagen, studying with Ole Andersen at the age of eighteen, and graduating four years later. He spent the next year studying in Sweden with Bo Nilsson, and at the age of twenty-two entered the Paris Conservatory to study with Pierre Thibaud. He subsequently studied with David Hickman at the Banff Center for the Arts in Canada, Edward Tarr in Basel, Switzerland, and Chris Gekker at the Aspen Music Festival in the United States.

Brydenfelt began a fulltime career as a classical trumpet soloist in 1996. He has performed in thousands of concerts with organ and piano, and has guest soloed with hundreds of symphony orchestras around the world. He won prizes in numerous competitions including the 18th International Concours for Wind Instruments in Toulon, France (1993), the 44th International Music Competition "Prague Spring Festival (1992)," The European Trumpet Guild Competition, and Bernard Soustrot's Prestige de la Trompette in Alsace, France. He has also received the Gladsaxe Music Prize, Carl Nielsen Grant, and Special Soloist Prize from members of the Danish National Radio Symphony. He has served as a judge on several international juries, and was a member of the advisory board for the European International Trumpet Guild. He also performed at the 2002 ITG Conference in Manchester, England.

Brydenfelt's first solo album, Memory (on CMC/EMI with guitar), earned Gold status within three weeks, and was nominated for a Grammy Award. Other albums include The Trumpet Player (Channel Classics), Trumpet Concertos (Channel Classics), Festliche Orgeltage in Moselland—Live (Südwestfunk), Time To Say Goodbye (Rec-Art/EMI), Romantic (Rec-Art/EMI), and Trumpet and Organ (Carmik).

Brydenfelt has continued his career by performing over one hundred concerts each year, and has become one of the leading soloists of his generation. He and his wife, pianist Carol Conrad, have two children.

Bibl.: Irish, John. "Michael Brydenfelt: A Solo Career" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2004); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Buat, Ivano (b. Quincinetto [near Turin], Italy, July 28, 1964). Italian trumpeter. Buat's first trumpet teacher was his father, followed by Lino Blanchod. He attended the "A. Vivaldi" Conservatory in Alessandria, where he received a bachelor of music degree in 1984. Later studies were with Bo Nilsson, Armando Ghitalla, and Calvin Price. From 1987 to 1988, he attended the Scuola di Alto Perfezionamento Musicale in Saluzzo (Italy) where he received lessons from Pierre Thibaud, Bernard Soustrot, and Sandro Verzari. He has won prizes at several national and international solo competitions in Italy: International Competition "città di Stresa" (first prize), National Competition "città di Genova" (first prize), National Competition "città di Acqui Terme" (first prize), International Competition "città di Ancona" (second prize), International Competition "città di Moncalieri" (second prize). As a soloist, he has performed in Italy, Germany, Switzerland, and Romania.

Baut has been invited to perform as principal trumpet with many of Italy's most prestigious orchestras including the Filarmonica "Alla Scala" (Milan), Orchestra Nazionale della RAI (Turin), Pomeriggi Musicali (Milan), Orchestra Regionale Toscana (Florence), Arturo Toscanini Orchestra (Parma), and the major opera house orchestras in Naples, Venice, and Genoa. Since 1992, he has served as principal trumpet of the Teatro Regio di Torino opera orchestra. He has also been a guest performer with the Orchestra della Svizzera Italiano (Lugano, Switzerland) and the Sinfonieorchester Oberengadin. As a chamber musician, he has toured with Ensemble 900 ed oltre and is the founder of the brass quintet, Pentabrass (since 1998), which has performed concerts in Italy, France, Germany, Belgium, Spain, Russia, South Korea, U.S., and Colombia.

Buat has been married to Giancarla Ferrero, an insurance agent, since 1994. Their children are Luca (b. 1996) and Davide (b. 2005). His hobby is photography.

Bibl.: www.pentabrass.it; personal interview, Mar. 22, 2013.

Bubb, Charles R. Jr. (b. Riverside, California, Nov. 17, 1913; d. Menlo Park, California, Feb. 11, 2002). American trumpeter. Bubb was raised in Mountain View, California, and attended Stanford University where he received a degree in mathematics in 1934, followed by graduate work there. He studied trumpet privately with Leon Barton, the San Francisco Symphony's second trumpet. He taught mathematics at Rutgers University, the University of California-Davis, and the University of Oregon. He joined the San Francisco Symphony as second trumpet in 1944, and played through the 1960 season under Maestro Pierre Monteux. However, Bubb played principal much of the time until Maestro Enrique Jorda became Montreux's successor in 1960. Unhappy with new playing assignments being made by Jorda, Bubb decided to retire from the orchestra, and soon taught mathematics at Woodside High School in California. He also played with several community orchestras well into his seventies.

Following Bubb's death from bone marrow cancer in 2002 at the age of eighty-eight, he was memorialized during a concert by the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. His wife Jane predeceased him in 1998, but his son Charles Bubb III and daughter Susan Hickman survived him.

Bibl.: "Charles Bubb" (www.stokowski.org/Principal_ Musicians_San_Francisco_ Symphony.htm); "About Charles Bubb" (http://ma58.org.aboutbubb.html); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Commanday, Robert. "Tribute: Charles R. Bubb Jr. (1913-2002)" (San Francisco Classical Voice, Feb. 19, 2002).

Buchtel, Forrest L[awrence] Sr. (b. c1901; d. 1996). American cornetist and composer. Buchtel earned an A.B. degree at Simpson College in 1921, and studied with H.A. VanderCook at the VanderCook College of Music in Chicago where he earned bachelor of music education and master of music degrees. He taught at Amundsen High School and Lane Technical High School in Chicago before being hired at Kansas State Teachers College (now Emporia State University) where he taught from 1925 to 1930. During most of his long career, however, he taught at the VanderCook College of Music from 1931 until he retired in 1985.

Buchtel is well known as a composer of band music and instrumental solos, and was a Grammy Award-winner who wrote dozens of cornet solos, duets, and trios including Polka Dots, Two Pals, Conchita, and The Three Pucks. Merle Evans, the legendary director of the Ringling Brothers Circus Band, performed Buchtel's music exclusively.

Buchtel was inducted into the Beach Hall of Distinction at Emporia State University on April 23, 1994. He also received an Honorary Doctorate of Music from the VanderCook College of Music. Buchtel's son, Forrest Lawrence Buchtel Jr., is a professional jazz trumpeter.

Bibl.: "Forrest L. Buchtel" (www.emporia.edu/musictopic09/index.html#forrest%20buchtel); "Forrest L. Buchtel" (www.vandercook.edu/archives/collection/a_g.htm).

Buckner, John Edward ("Teddy") (b. Sherman, Texas, July 16, 1909; d. Los Angeles, California, Sept. 22, 1994). American trumpeter. Buckner spent part of his childhood growing up in Silver City, New Mexico where his uncle taught him to play the drums and ukulele. He later took up the trumpet and studied under Harold Scott. By age fifteen, Buckner was playing with Buddy Garcia and "Big Six" Reeves. His style of playing was heavily influenced by Louis Armstrong.

In the late 1920s, Buckner moved to Los Angeles and worked with Speed Webb (1928), Sonny Clay, Sylvester Scott, Cee Pee Johnson, and Les Hite. He traveled to Shanghai, China in 1934 with Buck Clayton's orchestra, but returned to Los Angeles a year later and played in Irwin C. Miller's Brownskin Models Revue. He began playing in the Hollywood studios, and was used as a rehearsal stand-in for Louis Armstrong in the 1936 movie, Pennies from Heaven. (He was also used as a stand-in for Armstrong in the 1975 film, Louis Armstrong: Chicago Style.) In that same year (1936), he played with Lionel Hampton's group at the Paradise Club in Los Angeles, assuming the directorship of the band when Hampton left to join Benny Goodman's orchestra.

From 1944 to 1945, Buckner rejoined Cee Pee Johnson's band, and later played off and on with Benny Carter (1943 to 1947). He also played with Solid Blender's sextet. Buckner rejoined Hampton's band when Lionel returned in 1947. After leaving Hampton's band in 1948, Buckner became a key soloist with Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band (1949-54). His big sound and forceful style greatly enhanced the group's overall appeal.

Teddy Buckner formed his own Dixieland band in 1955, a group that he kept for many years. In 1958, Buckner appeared for a short while in France and Belgium with jazz saxophonist Sidney Bechet. He returned to California and worked with his Dixieland band at the 400 Club, Beverly Caverns, and The Huddle. He also played for and is seen in a number of Hollywood films, including King of Burlesque (with Fats Waller, 1935), Pete Kelly's Blues (1955), The Wild Party (1956), St. Louis Blues (1958), King Creole (1958), 4 for Texas (1963), and They Shoot Horses, Don't They? (1969).

From 1965 to 1981, Buckner led his Dixieland group in daily performances at Disneyland, generally imitating Louis Armstrong's All-Stars. A few of his best record albums include An Evening with Teddy Buckner (Real Jazz), On the Sunset Strip (Dixieland Jubilee), and A Salute to Louis Armstrong (Dixieland Jubilee). Teddy Buckner retired in 1985 and passed away in 1994 at the age of eighty-five.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Budde, Willi (b. Warendorf, Germany, Dec. 23, 1962). German trumpeter. Budde's first trumpet lessons were with Hans Joachim Knoke, after which he studied at the Hochschule für Musik in Detmold with Rudolf Lodenkemper, Wolfgang Pohle, and Max Sommerhalder. He studied jazz with Peter Herbolzheimer, Bobby Lamb, and Ack van Rooyen, and the natural (valveless) trumpet with Friedemann Immer and Susan Williams.

A highly versatile musician, Budde is active as a soloist on the natural trumpet, as an orchestral player who has performed with the Northwest German Philharmonic Orchestra in Herford, State Theater Orchestra in Detmold, and others, and as a jazz player who was jazz soloist with the Jörg Achim Keller Big Band and the Salsa band, Tropicaina. He formed his own big band in 1989, and also founded the OWL Big Band in Herford in 1997 during which time the city of Herford awarded him the Cultural Prize for outstanding artistic contributions. He is an active freelance musician who has performed numerous Broadway musicals including West Side Story, Kiss Me Kate, and Sweet Charity. His first CD is titled Brass Unlimited (2000).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Buhl, [Joseph-] David (b. Chanteloup, France, Feb. 21, 1781; d. Versailles, France, Apr. 1860). French trumpeter of German ancestry. His father was a musician in the employ of the Duke of Chaiseul. David learned to play the harpsichord and trumpet at an early age and progressed so quickly that by the age of eleven, he was considered a trumpet virtuoso. He obtained admission to the musical establishment of the Parisian Guards, and later joined the wind orchestra of the infantry grenadiers of the Consul Guards.

When a school for cavalry trumpeters was opened in Versailles in early 1805, David Buhl was named its professor, and taught there until the school was suppressed in 1811. On July 1, 1814 he became director of the musical establishment of the état majeur of the Lifeguards of King Louis XVIII, and during the same year was awarded membership in the Légion d'honneur. In 1816, he was appointed first trumpet of both the opera orchestra and the royal theater. He served in these capacities for ten years.

Due to a severe accident caused by a collision of carriages during the coronation of King Charles X in Reims (1825), Buhl was forced to retire. He was recognized as having been the premier performer on the French reformierte Trompette (also called the trompette courbée and trompette demilune), a curved "half-moon-shaped" valveless trumpet. The shape of this instrument allowed the player to insert fingers of the right hand into the bell so that the bell was "stopped," lowering the pitch a semitone and even a full step in order to produce several pitches missing from the harmonic series. He wrote a method for this type of instrument in 1825.

Buhl is credited with codifying the French military signals between 1803 and 1829, and for writing their rhythms down (as opposed to the free manner of performing them that was handed down through an aural tradition). He also added several signals that have been adopted by other countries. Several of his calls are in use today by the US Army including First Call, Mess Call, Retreat, and Tattoo—First Strain. He made significant developments to a slide trumpet shaped like a trombone; this so-called "French slide trumpet" was preferred to the valve trumpet by several leading artists of the day.

David Buhl was the uncle of François Georges Dauverné, teacher of cornetist Joseph Jean-Baptiste Laurent Arban and Louis-Antoine St. Jacome.

Bibl.: Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. Trans. by Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editore); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Proksch, Bryan. "Buhl, Dauverné, Kresser, and the Trumpet in Paris, ca. 1800-1840" (Historic Brass Society Journal, vol. 20, 2008); Tarr, Edward H. and Jean-François Madeuf, notes to editions of his pieces for trumpet ensemble (The Brass Press).

Bull, William (b. 1650; d. 1712). English trumpeter. Bull, along with Matthias and John Shore, is considered to be one of the finest trumpeters of his day in England. He was appointed a trumpeter-extraordinary to the court of Charles II in July of 1666, and attained the rank of trumpeter-in-ordinary in January of 1678. He was also a trumpeter in the Queen's and Troop Horse Guards in 1679. Bull was reappointed a trumpeter-in-ordinary on the accession of James II. He retained this position during the reign of William and Mary.

Bull was also an exceptional trumpet maker who was considered among England's finest. Several of his instruments have survived to this day.

Bibl.: Byrne, Maurice. "William Bull, John Stevenson and the Harris Family." (The Galpin Society Journal, Vol. 45, 1992); Halfpenny, Eric. "William Bull and the English Baroque Trumpet." (The Galpin Society Journal, Vol. 15, 1962). Smithers, Don L. The Music and History of the Baroque Trumpet before 1721 (Syracuse University Press).

Photo: Bull's trade card.

Bullock, Donald P[aul] (b. Torrington, Wyoming, Feb. 16, 1936; d. Kalamazoo, Michigan, July 29, 1988). American trumpeter. Bullock grew up and was educated in Torrington, Wyoming. He taught music in the public schools there, before attending the University of Colorado in Boulder, where he studied with Frank W. Baird and earned a master of music degree in 1963. He became a professor of trumpet at Western Michigan University in Kalamazoo, and was an active soloist with the Kalamazoo Bach Festival. He was a cofounder of the Western Brass Quintet, with which he recorded (CRI SD 192). The quintet gave its debut concert at Carnegie Hall in 1975, performed extensively throughout the Midwest, and appeared at the 1977 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Urbana, Illinois.

Bullock was a fine administrator. He served as director of the school of music at Western Michigan University for many years, and was active in the International Trumpet Guild (Board of Directors for eight years, Secretary from 1977 to 1981, and President from 1983 to 1985). He also cohosted the 1987 ITG conference at WMU with Stephen Jones.

As a scholar, Bullock published numerous articles in the ITG Journal, Instrumentalist magazine, NACWPI Journal, and College Music Symposium. His arrangements for brass quintet are published by Peer Southern International and Medici Music Press.

Bullock was married to Mary Bullock. He died at the age of fifty-one, and in 1990 the International Trumpet Guild established the Donald P. Bullock Memorial Scholarship Fund, which provides scholarships for students to attend the annual ITG conferences.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); ITG Archives; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Buono, Vincent C. (b. New York, New York, Aug. 3, 1875; d. New York, New York, June 3, 1959). American cornetist. In his early twenties, Buono went to New York City and began playing in theaters and in Neyer's 7th Regiment Band. He then played first chair and soloist with Charles Prince's organizations until 1922. These small groups were employed to back up various solo artists and vocalists recording for the Columbia Phonograph Company; Buono performed on hundreds of the recordings.

In the 1930s, Buono continued working with numerous theater orchestras. He was known as a reliable person and excellent sight-reader who played with a fine soft tone, clean technique, and a style all his own. Herbert Clarke said of him, Vince Buono is one of the most underrated of cornet and trumpet players of the early 1900s, and we always considered him to be one of the best first chair men in the band business.

Cornet solos recorded by Buono include A Dream (Bartlett), Inflammatus (Rossini), Sea Shells (Innes), The Lost Chord (Sullivan), The Swiss Boy (Bent), The Rosary (Nevin), Behüt dich Gott (Nessler), Hochzeitsglocken (O'Riordan), and the U. S. Navy and Army Bugle Calls.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications).

Burgess, Jon Wesley (b. Urbana, Illinois, Oct. 25, 1955). American trumpeter. Burgess began playing trumpet at age twelve; his first teachers were Jack Trager and Rudolf Nashan. He graduated from Abraham Clark High School in Roselle, New Jersey, in 1974, and attended the University of Illinois from 1974 to 1978 where he earned a bachelor of music degree studying with David Hickman. He was a graduate teaching assistant for Dr. Roger Stoner at the University of Kansas from 1978 to 1980, receiving a master of music degree. He was a member of the Florida Orchestra in Tampa from 1980 to 1984 and adjunct trumpet teacher at the University of Tampa from 1981 to 1984. He continued graduate work as a doctoral student with Hickman at Arizona State University from 1984 to 1988, where he served as a graduate teaching assistant for two years. He has also studied with Charles Berginc, William Scarlett, Vincent Cichowicz, and Susan Slaughter.

Burgess taught at Morehead State University in Kentucky from 1988 to 2000 before accepting his current position as trumpet professor at Texas Christian University in Ft. Worth in the fall of 2000. He has served as Pedagogy Editor for the International Trumpet Guild Journal since 2000, and has also performed at several ITG conferences as a soloist and conductor of the TCU Trumpet Ensemble. He and his wife hosted the 2003 ITG Conference at TCU. Since 2001, he has spent his summers teaching at the Blue Lake Fine Arts Camp in Michigan. He has performed with the National Repertory Orchestra (summer 1978), American Wind Symphony (summer 1979), Phoenix Symphony Orchestra, San Diego Symphony Orchestra, Charlotte Symphony Orchestra, Kentuckiana Brass and Percussion Ensemble, Ft. Worth Symphony Orchestra, Las Colinas Symphony, and Tim Zimmerman and The King's Brass.

Burgess and his wife Betsy have been married since 1978 and have a daughter, Rachel Marie (b. 1994). His hobby is cooking.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Burgess, Jon Wesley. An Annotated Bibliography of Trumpet Ensemble Music for Five or More Trumpets (unpublished DMA diss., Arizona State University, 1988); "Jon Burgess" (www.music.tcu.edu/faculty_j_burgess.asp); personal interview, Aug. 25, 2011.

Burgstaller, Josef ("Joe") (b. Chicago, Illinois, Apr. 27, 1971). American trumpeter. Joe Burgstaller is one of the star trumpeters of his generation. His parents, Josef (an electrical engineer and IT manager) and Evamaria (a massage therapist), immigrated to the U.S. from Austria in 1969. Joe grew up in Virginia Beach, Virginia, and graduated from Kempsville High School in 1988. His early trumpet teachers were Dr. Stephen Carlson, Gary Gompers, and Jonathan Greenberg. He began playing the cornet at the age of six. By age twelve, he was performing in local jazz clubs, and by age fifteen was the youngest professional in the Virginia Opera Orchestra.

Burgstaller studied with David Hickman at Arizona State University where he earned bachelor and master of music degrees (1988-95). He also served as one of Hickman's teaching assistants, and was on the staff of Summit Brass and Summit Records. He became a member of the Meridian Arts Ensemble in New York (1995-2001) and launched a successful solo career with Columbia Artists' Community Concerts by performing hundreds of recitals and mini-residencies across the United States with his Joe Burgstaller: The Rafael Méndez Project (1998-2001). He became an expert at playing the repertoire of the legendary Rafael Méndez, and released a solo CD, The Virtuoso Trumpet. The Instrumentalist magazine dubbed him "The Next Méndez," and Dr. Robert Méndez, wrote of Joe: He's mastered my father's works.

Burgstaller joined the famed touring ensemble Canadian Brass, with which he played for seven and a half years (2001-09 with a one year sabbatical in 2005), recorded over a dozen CDs, and contributed several of his own arrangements of music. His versatile playing style showcased his abilities to play classical, pop, jazz, and Latina music. Three of the recordings featuring Joe hit the Top-Ten Billboard charts.

Currently, Burgstaller is a Distinguished Faculty member at The Peabody Institute of Music in Baltimore, Maryland, and teaches each summer at the Music Academy of the West in Santa Barbara, California. He continues his solo career, and his crossover group BM4 (BurgstallerMartignon4), has released a widely acclaimed CD called Mozart's Blue Dream and Other Crossover Fantasies (Summit Records in the U.S.; C.A.R.E. Music Group in Europe). He is an active clinician and was the first ever music recipient of the Distinguished Alumnus Award from the School of Music at Arizona State University, and was the first ever recipient of the Outstanding Alumnus Award from the Eastern Music Festival. Burgstaller's hobbies include arranging, composing, videography, and running. He resides in New York City with his wife Julie, a trumpeter.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); personal interview, Jan. 21, 2010.

Burkart, Richard E[dgar] (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, June 24, 1931). American trumpeter. Burkart's early studies were with Salvadore Castigliola and Gilbert Johnson. He attended Louisiana State University where he studied with Leon Rapier, earning bachelor of music, bachelor of music education, and master of music degrees.

Burkart's first teaching position was at Lamar College in Beaumont, Texas, where he taught from 1955 to 1969. He accepted a trumpet assistantship at the University of Wisconsin in Madison in the fall of 1969 while earning a doctorate in music studying with Donald Whitaker. In 1971, after graduating, Burkart accepted his final teaching post at The Ohio State University where he taught until June 30, 1995, and was a member of the OSU Brass Trio and OSU Brass Quintet. A nationally recognized teacher, Burkart has produced hundreds of professional students including Terry Everson, Richard Lehman, Andrew Wilson, Luis Engelke, Julie Vish, Timothy Leasure, Robert Birch, Joyce Davis, Charles Gates, Scott Johnston, Steven Emery, Edward Sandor, Patrick Tillery, and Daniel D'Addio.

As a performer, Burkart has played with the Castigliola Big Band, been principal of the Beaumont Symphony Orchestra and Jazz Ensemble, Robert Shaw Choral Institute Orchestra, Alaska Music Festival Orchestra, and Peninsula Music Festival Orchestra. He was also a member of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, and toured as soloist with the Chicago Little Symphony.

Burkhart was an important figure in the development of the International Trumpet Guild; he hosted the 1980 ITG Conference at OSU and founded the Ellsworth Smith-ITG International Trumpet Solo Competition. He served as Vice President and President of the ITG (1985-87), and received the ITG's Award of Merit in 2007.

Since retiring in 1996, Burkart has been an active Dixieland player in the Toll House Jazz Band in Columbus, Ohio. He is a strong family man, husband to Janet Burkart, and a devout Christian. His hobbies include winemaking.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Hanson, Frank E. "Richard Burkart: Retirement Celebration" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Sept. 1995).

Burke, James ("Jimmy") Francis (b. Port Jefferson, New York, Apr. 15, 1923; d. New York, New York, June 26, 1981). American cornetist. Burke was the youngest of three children of Robert Arthur Burke and Helen Marguerite Gobel. James weighed fifteen pounds, nine ounces at birth, and because of his large size, surgical instruments were used during the delivery. Forceps pressed against his back, and caused pinching of the brachial nerve, which resulted in permanent damage to his right arm. The damage was so severe that the arm never fully developed, and remained withered and virtually useless his entire life.

At age five, Jimmy began cornet studies with his father Robert, who made a device to hold the instrument while Jimmy fingered it with his left hand. Jimmy began preparing solos at age seven, and at age eleven became a member of Coast To Coast On A Bus, a radio program broadcasted each Sunday by WJZ. At the same time, he also performed on WABC's Horn and Hardart's Children's Hour. He continued with these shows during high school. He also participated in many regional and national solo contests, and earned a national championship at age eighteen.

In 1935, Burke studied with Del Staigers, who at the time was considered the world's foremost cornet soloist. Staigers persuaded the King Musical Instruments Company to build a cornet especially for Burke, which could be operated with only the left hand. In 1937, Burke studied with John "Ned" Mahoney.

At age nineteen, Burke was selected to join the famed Goldman Band. So in 1943, he began his thirty-three-year career with that organization. He performed five solos each week and a concert each day. Concurrently, he began his seven-year tenure as principal trumpet of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra and as a professor at the Peabody Conservatory.

Burke worked closely with composer and conductor Robert Russell Bennett, under whose baton he recorded the soundtrack to Victory at Sea as well as Bennett's cornet solo Rose Variations with band. He also recorded several solo albums including Horn of Plenty (1956) and Clinician Series (1960).

Together with tubist Harvey Phillips, Burke cofounded The All-Star Concert Band that consisted of many of the leading musicians of the day. The trumpet section included Raymond Crisara, Robert Nagel, Harry Glantz, Manny Weinstock, Theodore Weis, and Wilfred "Bob" Roberts. The band recorded three albums. In 1964, Burke participated in a fourteen-week US State Department good-will tour of twenty African countries.

Burke was a fabulous cornetist who possessed a huge repertoire. His ability to memorize music quickly is legendary. His jovial personality and wry sense of humor were equally renowned. He retired from performing in 1975 in order to devote more time to teaching, conducting, and his family. He had five children and many grandchildren.

Bibl.: O'Keeffe, Mark. The James F. Burke Tribute Page (www.jfbcornet.com/biography.htm).

Burke, Milo (b. Brockton, Massachusetts, Feb. 21, 1870; d. Brockton, Massachusetts, Jan. 16, 1949). American cornetist. Milo's father James immigrated to America from Ireland, met and married Mary Hogan, and worked as a shoemaker and small farmer. He played the violin and E-flat clarinet. Milo was one of twelve children, but only four lived to adulthood; eight died from an outbreak of diphtheria. He studied violin for a dozen years with William McKinley, but had only a handful of lessons on the cornet with Henry C. Brown, a prominent Boston teacher. Despite the lack of cornet lessons, Milo became proficient on the instrument by listening to live performances and recordings of great soloists such as Jules Levy, Walter Emerson, and Bowen Church. While in his teens, he joined the Martland Band and the Mace Gay Excelsior Band in 1882. He formed his own band during his twenties.

When he was nineteen years old, Burke married Francelia Mason, an accomplished pianist, with whom he had two children, Charles and Rose. After fourteen years of marriage, Francelia died suddenly from a ruptured appendix. A few years later, Burke married Ellen Diamond; their marriage lasted forty years.

Burke received many offers to travel, notably from Sousa and T. P. Brooke, and to record with the Victor Record Company, but he did not wish to be away from his family. He established a shoe making business with his brother Lawrence, and continued performing with his own band. He was a fine teacher of many successful cornetists including Walter M. Smith and his own son, Charles Burke.

Burke was a humble and religious man who felt no desire for fame. Although he received many honors and awards, he was neither egotistical nor profane. Although he demanded excellence of himself and his fellow musicians, he was very kind in his methods of criticism. While he possessed a fine sense of humor, levity was not allowed in rehearsals or concerts. He never appeared to be nervous when performing or speaking, and was always in perfect control of his emotions.

A Massachusetts newspaper provided the following testimonial about Burke's playing. Milo Burke, than whom there is no greater cornet soloist in this country, was splendid in his individual offerings, and played with that technique and delicate interpretation which have placed him high among cornetists. A Boston admirer wrote the following poem in 1919:

A hush steals over the throng,
And confusion dies away.
The motorman muffles his gong,
When Milo gets up to play.
Out through the crowded Mall,
As clear as a silver Bell.
The pure tones rise and fall,
With a feeling, a soul and a zest.
An artist that plays with his heart,
And one who is ever at his best.
Cadenza and rare triple tongue,
His mastery of technique proclaim.
The people all class him among
The best in the musical game.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications).

Burkhardt, Ingolf (b. Unterschefflenz, Baden-Würtemberg, Germany, June 30, 1963). German trumpeter and composer. Burkhardt's first musical experience was with a local brass band at age nine, playing on an old bugle given to him by his grandfather. His high school band director (Mr. Kuhn) taught him how to play the blues, and at age sixteen Burkhardt began playing professionally in a local dance band. In 1982 at age nineteen, he became a member of the Stadt Bad Friedrichshall Big Band. He also played in the local Youth Big Band led by Jiggs Whigham, touring Africa and recording two LPs. Between 1985 and 1989, he studied with Manfred Schoof and Jiggs Whigham at the Cologne Music Conservatory, and while in school there, performed with the West German Broadcasting (WDR) Big Band, Peter Herbolzheimer's Rhythm Combination and Brass, Big Band of the EU, and with artists such as Chaka Khan. In 1987, he met jazz legend Bobby Shew who became his teacher for two years, followed by their forming a jazz quintet that made six tours of Germany between 1989 and 1995.

Burkhardt was a professor of music at the Hamburg Music Conservatory from 2001 to 2008, and is an active clinician and private teacher. Since 1990, he has been a regular member of the NDR Big Band. He has worked with Jimmy Smith, Al Jarreau, Gary Burton, Lionel Hampton, Abdullah Ibrahim, McCoy Tyner, Van Morrison, Bobby McFerrin, Michael Gibbs, Dave Holland, Alan Skidmore, JAZUL, Paquito D'Rivera, Joe Pass, Pee Wee Ellis, and many others. He has recorded with James Last, Trio Rio, Al Martino, and The Matterhorns. He is also a member of Joe Gallardo's Latino Blue. His solo CDs include Jazzed Friends (Mons), Strangers (PAO), Just B4 (Rent A Dog), What...? (Rent A Dog), and That...! (C.A.R.E. Music Group, now reassigned and self-produced by JAZUL).

Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Ingolf Burkhardt's official website: www.ingolfb.com.

Burkhart, David Aaron (b. Hollywood, California, Apr. 25, 1954). American trumpeter. Burkhart and his family moved to Chicago when he was five years old. He began playing the trumpet at age ten, taking lessons for the next two years from Lee Dreuth. From age twelve to eighteen, he studied with Charles Geyer of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. After graduating from Francis W. Parker School in 1972, he enrolled at Yale University where he studied with Robert Nagel, earning a bachelor of arts degree with honors in 1976. He continued his studies at Yale School of Music, receiving a master of music degree in 1977. Additionally, he studied with Adolph Herseth, Arnold Jacobs, William Vacchiano, and Carmine Caruso.

Burkhart was third trumpet of the New Haven Symphony (1973-78). He was principal of the Jerusalem Symphony Orchestra (1978-80), San Jose Symphony (1980-81), and Oakland Symphony (1980-86); acting principal of the San Diego Symphony (1985-86), second in the San Jose Symphony (1986-87), principal of the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra (summers 1986-89), and principal of the Sacramento Symphony Orchestra (1987-94). He was also a member of the Sun Valley Summer Symphony (2006-08). Since 1989, he has played in the San Francisco Opera Orchestra, four years as acting third trumpet and one year as acting principal.

Burkhart was a member of the Jerusalem Brass Quintet (1978-80) and the Arch Ensemble for Experimental Music (1981-85). He is a founding member of The Bay Brass, a member of the San Francisco Brass Quintet, and regularly plays and records with the San Francisco Opera Orchestra and the San Francisco Symphony. He has taught at the Rubin Academy of Music, Jerusalem (1978-80), San Jose State University (1981-85), Stanford University (1981-91), and the San Francisco Conservatory of Music (since 1988).

Since 1991, Burkhart has been a staff member of San Francisco's renowned Anchor Brewing Company, brewers of Anchor Steam Beer. A leading historian on San Francisco, his award-winning books include Earthquake Days: The 1906 San Francisco Earthquake and Fire in 3-D (Faultline Books), Cocktail Boothby's American Bartender (Anchor Distilling), and Cocktails & Punches in Mark Twain's San Francisco (Anchor Distilling).

Burkhart is married to oboist Deborah Shidler. He is a member of the San Francisco Museum & Historical Society and the National Stereoscopic Association. His hobbies include stereoview collecting and genealogy.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "David Burkhart" (www.sfcm.edu/faculty/burkhart.aspx); "David Burkhart" (www.baybrass.org/bio_burkhart.html); personal interview, Apr. 17, 2011.

Burkhart, Raymond ("Ray") [David] (b. Lakewood, Ohio, Oct. 31, 1961). American trumpeter. Burkhart grew up in Red Bluff, California. He played bugle at age nine for his Webelos (Cub Scouts) troop; his first trumpet teachers were Forrest "Mike" Compton, Jay August Thiel, Ray Williams, and Claude Gordon (1978). After graduating from Red Bluff Union High School in 1979, he attended Occidental College where he earned a bachelor of arts degree, studying with William Bing and Charley Davis. He then studied at the University of Southern California (1985) with Rob Roy McGregor and Edward Tarr, receiving a master of music degree. Additional study was with Uan Rasey, Malcolm McNab, and Roy Poper. In 2010, Burkhart received a PhD from Claremont Graduate University where he studied conducting and musicology.

A highly versatile performer, Burkhart plays with the Premiere Brass Quintet, and as a studio player, has recorded soundtracks for many films including Path to War, Death Wish IV, Home Alone 2, The Matrix Revolutions, Shooter, The Matrix Reloaded, and George of the Jungle. He has toured as a soloist with Yanni, and played with Jessye Norman, Pat Boone, Dave Brubeck, Cleo Laine, Ray Anthony, Conte Candoli, Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, Long Beach Opera, Mozart Camerata, Pasadena Pops (twenty years as second trumpet), Santa Fe Pro Musica, Los Angeles Baroque Orchestra, and Bach Collegium San Diego. He is an active composer, arranger, conductor, and performer on the natural (valveless) trumpet, and is owner of his own publishing company, Premiere Press.

Burkhart has taught at Occidental College, Pasadena City College, and Glendale College. He has been on the faculties of Pomona College since 2002, and Claremont Graduate University since 2005.

Burkhart's hobbies have included golf, tennis, and bowling, but more recently he has been enjoying fishing and target shooting.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Ray Burkhart's official website: www.tromba.us; personal interview, Sept. 2, 2011.

Burnett, Joe (b. Dallas, Texas, Nov. 24, 1927). American trumpeter. Burnett began playing the trumpet in high school. He toured with the big bands of Woody Herman (1953-54), Maynard Ferguson (1956, 1958), Charlie Barnet (1960), Julie London (Japan tour in 1964), and played mellophone and trumpet in Stan Kenton's band. His jazz style is modeled after Dizzy Gillespie, Miles Davis, and Art Farmer. Burnett played the trumpet solo on the soundtrack for the movie, The Wild Seed.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Burns, David ("Dave") (b. Perth Amboy, New Jersey, Mar. 5, 1924; d. Apr. 5, 2009). American trumpeter and composer. Burns began playing the trumpet at age nine, and was influenced by recordings of Louis Armstrong and Roy Eldridge. After hearing Dizzy Gillespie play during a live performance, his style was even more influenced by Gillespie's bebop manner of playing.

Burns began his career with Al Cooper's Savoy Sultans (1942-43). He was drafted into military service in 1943, and played in an Army Air Force band. After his honorable discharge in 1945, he became a member of Dizzy Gillespie's big band (1945, and 1946-49).

He played with Duke Ellington from 1950-52, James Moody's octet (1952-57), freelanced in New York (1957-61), Billy Mitchell-Al Grey band (1961-63), Willie Bobo (1963-65), and co-led a group with drummer Bill English from 1966 to 1968. Burns also recorded with Dizzy Gillespie, James Moody, the Six Bips and a Bop (1948), Leo Parker, Eddie Jefferson (1968), Milt Jackson (1962), Johnny Griffin (1960), Dexter Gordon, George Wallington, Art Taylor, and others.

Never a person to seek the limelight, Dave Burns can be seen in two videos: Jivin's in Bebop (1947, with Dizzy Gillespie) and Sweet Love Bitter (1967). He released two solo albums for Vanguard: Dave Burns and Warming Up. He composed over fifty tunes, many of which he recorded. Burns studied trumpet under Antony Aquaviva, Nicholas Morrisey, and Carmine Caruso, and became primarily a jazz educator after 1970. He died at the age of eighty-five.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Burns, Legh Walter (b. Glen Cove, Long Island, New York, Apr. 4, 1935). American trumpeter and conductor. Burns is best known as the person who established and hosted the National Trumpet Symposium at the University of Denver starting in 1968. This summer event grew each year, ultimately attracting as many as 450 trumpet players. He hosted the NTS through 1973.

Legh's father Walter owned a stationery store, and his mother Mildred was a homemaker; he also has an older brother named John (b. 1931). Legh became interested in the trumpet at age seven, when his cousin Legh Knowles, a trumpeter with many of the famous big bands including Glenn Miller and Charlie Spivak, showed him a trumpet and played it for him. Young Burns could not wait to start playing the trumpet, but his mother insisted that he wait until his permanent teeth came in. So at age nine, he began playing the trumpet.

Burns grew up in Long Island and began cornet lessons with Ned Mahoney, himself a student of the legendary Ernest Williams. Other teachers included James Burke, Raymond Crisara, and Nat Prager. He attended the University of Miami from 1953 to 1958, and earned a bachelor of music education and a master of music degree in trumpet performance. He studied with the university's brass teacher, Modeste Alloo, and at the same time took lessons from a leading trumpeter named Bower Murphy. After graduating, Burns became a member of the United States Air Force Band in Washington, D.C., and established and conducted the Washington Chamber Ensemble. His conducting teachers were Pierre Monteux, Herbert Blomstedt, Richard Lert, and Renee Longy.

After his service years (1958-62), Burns accepted a position at Springfield (Illinois) Junior College (1962-64), where he taught trumpet, band, theory, and conducting. While there, he married a music student named Judith (1963). From 1964 to 1967, Burns taught trumpet and band at the University of Oklahoma. He later accepted a similar position at the University of Denver, and established the Colorado Brass Quintet. He also founded the Festival Chamber Orchestra of Denver, and conducted the group during numerous concerts at the National Trumpet Symposium. He and the orchestra recorded an album in 1973 featuring trumpet soloist David Hickman (Clarino Records).

During the summer of 1973, Burns moved to Norman, Oklahoma, to become the orchestra director at the University of Oklahoma. In 1975, he assisted Gary Stollsteimer (trumpet professor) in hosting the National Trumpet Symposium at OU, but the establishment of the International Trumpet Guild during the same year stifled its success. Another symposium was held in 1976, but attendance was again low, this time due to the International Brass Congress held in Switzerland. No further symposiums were hosted. Burns's hobby was collecting trumpet recordings, which led to his establishing The Music Gallery in 1991, a store that specialized in buying and selling new and used trumpet albums and CDs.

Burns retired from OU in 1995 and sold his record store. His involvement with various youth orchestras in Oklahoma was outstanding, and included taking groups on thirteen foreign tours. The Oklahoma Youth Orchestra under his direction became the first high school orchestra ever to undertake a concert tour of the People's Republic of China. He was given the Music in Education Award by the Governor of Oklahoma. He also established the Guy Fraser Harrison Academy for the Performing Arts. In 1995, he moved to New Hampshire where he lived for eight years.

Legh and Judith Burns now live on Whidbey Island, Washington, where he is active as a conductor. He was appointed conductor of the Saratoga Chamber Orchestra at its inception in 2007. His two children (Legh, b. 1965; Catherine, b. 1969) and six grandchildren live in the Seattle area. His hobby is gardening.

Bibl.: Laramore, Douglas L. "The National Trumpet Symposium, 1968-1973" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1996); Saratoga Chamber Orchestra website (www.saratogachamberorchestra.org); personal interview, July 17, 2010.

Burns, Stephen (b. Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts, Sept. 14, 1959). American trumpeter, conductor, and composer. Burns grew up in Wellesley Hills, Massachusetts. He studied trumpet with Richard Given, and then attended The Juilliard School in New York City where he studied with Gerard Schwarz and William Vacchiano. He received a bachelor of music degree in 1981 and a master of music degree in 1982. He also studied at the Tanglewood Institute with Roger Voisin and Armando Ghitalla. Additionally, he studied with Pierre Thibaud in Paris, and Arnold Jacobs in Chicago.

Burns's career was launched when, under the auspices of the Young Concert Artists Guild in New York, he won a solo competition (1981). In 1982, he received an Avery Fisher Career Grant, and in the following year was awarded a Recitalists Grant from the National Endowment for the Arts. He was the first-prize winner of the Maurice André International Trumpet Solo Competition in Paris (1988), and has since performed as soloist with the Moscow Virtuosi (1987-88); performed Jevtic's Second Concerto (1988) and Haydn Concerto in E-flat with the Orchestre Philharmonique Pays de la Loire; and performed with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, Seattle Symphony, Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, Leipzig Chamber Orchestra, Japan National Philharmonic, Arturo Toscanini Orchestra, and many others. He has released numerous solo albums on the Delos, Musical Heritage Society, Kleos, Classical Masters, Essay, and Grammavision labels.

Burns studied conducting with Jorma Panula and Pinchas Zukerman. He is the artistic director of the Fulcrum Point New Music Project and the American Concerto Orchestra in Chicago. He is also an accomplished composer, and has commissioned and premiered dozens of works for trumpet, chamber group, or orchestra.

As an educator, Burns has taught trumpet at Indiana University, the Manhattan School of Music, and the State University of New York in Purchase. He is a regular faculty member at the Center for Advanced Studies at Chosen Vale, and has served as an artist-in-residence with Performing Arts Chicago. He has been a guest artist-teacher at the summer festivals of Santa Fe, Tanglewood, Mostly Mozart, Spoleto, Caramoor, Lieksa, and others. He was also a visiting professor at the Arturo Toscanini Foundation Corso MYTHOS in Bologna, Italy.

Burns has been a guest at The White House, appeared on NBC Television's Today Show, and National Public Radio's All Things Considered, and has toured the world as a soloist and conductor. He has also toured as a trumpeter with the acclaimed large brass ensemble, Summit Brass.

Burns and his wife Kate Neisser, a school psychologist, reside in Chicago with their sons Edward and Isaac.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Stephen Burns" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Burt, Jack (b. Wauseon, Ohio, May 22, 1958). American trumpeter. Burt began playing the trumpet during fifth grade in Holland, Ohio. Two years later, his family moved to Hollywood, Florida, where he took lessons from Phil Gilbert during his last two years of high school. Gilbert overhauled Burt's embouchure, which made advanced playing possible for him. After graduating from South Broward High School in 1976, Burt attended Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory and studied with James Darling and Mary Squire (1977-80). In 1980-81, he spent a year in West Berlin, where he took lessons from Arno Lange and pursued a career in musicology. However, it was during this time that he decided to become a professional trumpet player.

Burt attended the University of South Carolina from 1981-83, where he studied with A. Keith Amstutz and earned a master of music degree. He then won a position with the Mexico City Philharmonic and the UNAM Philharmonic Orchestra in Mexico. He resigned his positions in order to return to the U.S. and earn a doctor of music degree at the University of Texas in Austin, where he studied with Raymond Crisara (1986-95).

Dr. Burt became the trumpet professor at Texas A&M University in Kingsville in 1991. He also played principal in the Corpus Christi Symphony and the Victoria Symphony Orchestra. In 2004, he moved to Orono, Maine, to begin his current position as professor of trumpet at the University of Maine. He is married to his second wife, Marisa Solomon, a Maine native and cellist who studied music at both the Oberlin and San Francisco Conservatories. Their son Benjamin (b. 1999) is a budding trumpet player, and their other son Lucas (b. 2001) plays the violin. Burt's hobbies include alpine skiing, golf and hiking.

Bibl.: "Jack Burt to the University of Maine" (News Item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2005); personal interview, Apr. 7, 2010.

Burum, Heinz [Heinrich] (b. Brühl, Germany, Dec. 18, 1905; d. Düren, Germany, Dec. 20, 1989). German trumpeter. Burum began playing bass trumpet at age seven, but switched to the standard trumpet a few years later. From 1924 to 1929, he studied with Ludwig Werle in Cologne. He joined the Cologne Philharmonic Orchestra in 1929, played in various dance bands in 1930, played at the Metropole Theatre in Berlin in 1932, and made records for the Electrola label. He became principal trumpet of the Sinfonieorchester des Deutschlandsenders Berlin in 1934, played in the Berlin Radio Orchestra from 1942 to 1943, and was a member of the Bruckner Orchestra of Linz from 1943 to 1945. For the next twenty-five years, Burum performed with the Würtembergisches Staatstheater in Stuttgart, and was also a member of the Heilbronn Chamber Orchestra. He taught at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Stuttgart from 1946 to 1977, and wrote Introduction to Arban Method, Das Geheimnis des richtigen Ansatzes (BIM). According to Denis Egan, who knew him well, Burum developed his own method of playing with two embouchures—one regular, and the other on the right side of his mouth for piccolo trumpet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Heinz Burum" (http://de.wikipedia.org/wiki/Heinz_Burum).

Buschinger, Edmund Franz (b. Giselandorf, Romania, Oct. 4, 1941). Romanian trumpeter. Buschinger studied with Georg Bruckler and George Adamachi at the Ciprian Porumbescu Music School in Bucharest, graduating in 1966. He worked as a member of a studio orchestra and symphony orchestra for radio, and also played in an opera orchestra. From 1966 to 1982, he was principal trumpet of the Romanian National Philharmonic Orchestra "George Enescu," and between 1966 and 1984 taught at the Romanian Music School in Bucharest.

Buschinger founded and led the International Brass Quintet in 1970. Throughout the 1980s, he was an active conductor of various bands and orchestras, and in 1984 became the director of the Sophieminde Music School in Flensburg where he taught trumpet, piano, harmony, and theory. A short time later, he became a professor at a music school in Cologne, and taught at the Robert Schumann Institute in Düsseldorf. He has continued to be an active soloist and chamber musician, even after assuming the position of Dean of the Institute in 1999.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Bush, Irving [R.] (b. Los Angeles, California, Apr. 7, 1930; d. Los Angeles, California, Jan. 8, 2009). American trumpeter. Bush attended California State University, from which he received both bachelor and master of music degrees (cum laude). He studied with Benjamin Klatzkin, James Stamp, Hyrum Lammers, and Lloyd Geisler. He began his career in 1944 in Los Angeles. Bush performed in various big bands, and recorded with Sam Donahue, Harry James, David Rose, Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald, George Shearing, Sarah Vaughan, and Nelson Riddle. For three years, he was Nat "King" Cole's personal first trumpeter. He also recorded with the Columbia Broadcasting Symphony under Igor Stravinsky. His experience made him a versatile and active studio musician during the 1950s.

Bush joined the Los Angeles Philharmonic as associate principal trumpet in 1961. He released one solo album, Trumpet and Drum 1976 (Avant Records) that included patriotic music celebrating the Bicentennial of the United States. Bush taught trumpet at the US Naval School of Music for two years, then at California State University (twelve years) and the University of Southern California (six years). He also published several texts and exercise books for trumpet including Trumpet Players Blow With Good Vibrations (Balquhidder Music—previously self-published in 1962 as Artistic Trumpet Technique and Study), and Advanced Range, Technique and Interval Studies (Western International Music—previously published in 1960 by Charles Colin Publications as Top Tones for Trumpet). He also composed Four Fanfares for All Occasions for four trumpets (Encore Music) and Contemporary Music for Two Trumpets (Encore). He designed and manufactured Bush Mouthpieces, and was also a design consultant for Benge Trumpets in Los Angeles. Bush retired from trumpet playing in 1983, and assumed duties as personnel manager of the Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Bush was a polite, soft-spoken man who was highly respected by his peers. He retired from the Los Angeles Philharmonic in 1995, and then served on the board of directors of the American Federation of Musicians, Local 47. He died from complications stemming from multiple myeloma, a cancer of the white blood cells. He was seventy-eight years old.

Bibl.: Bush, Irving. Trumpet Players Blow With Good Vibrations (Balquhidder Music); Bush, Irving. Trumpet and Drum 1976 (Avant Records); "Trumpeter, Teacher Irving Bush Dies" (Los Angeles Times, Jan. 30, 2009); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Busse, Henry [Sr.] (b. Magdeburg, Germany, May 19, 1894; d. Memphis, Tennessee, Apr. 23, 1955). German cornetist and trumpeter. At the age of eighteen, Busse ran away from his family's farm in Germany, and boarded a ship to New York. There, he worked as a cornetist before moving to Los Angeles four years later, and becoming a member of a pit orchestra. In 1918, he and Paul Whiteman formed a dance orchestra that became very popular. Because of the U.S. anti-German sentiment caused by World War I, Busse's thick German accent was not well received by audiences, so the band came to be fronted by Whiteman, and was eventually called the Paul Whiteman Orchestra.

As the band's most featured soloist, Busse became famous from his recordings of his solo compositions that included Wang Wang Blues, Hot Lips, and When Day Is Done. He was arguably the most famous trumpet soloist in the United States between 1918 and 1928, and the Whiteman orchestra was considered the most popular of its time. The press dubbed Whiteman the "King of Jazz." This is ironic, considering that Downbeat magazine labeled Whiteman's music as "Mickey Mouse." Nonetheless, Busse's playing influenced many young trumpeters including Al Hirt and Herb Alpert.

When Bix Beiderbecke joined the Whiteman band in the late 1920s, Busse became increasingly jealous of the large number of solo spots given to him. After an argument with Whiteman, Busse was fired in April of 1928. Busse immediately formed his own orchestra, Henry Busse and the Shuffle Rhythm Band, that played regularly until Busse's death in 1955. The band played mostly commercial dance music, and Busse's sweet-sounding cornet and trumpet appealed to audiences everywhere. Busse made the gossip columns in Los Angeles when he partied one night with a woman at the Hotsy Totsy Club, and woke up the next morning being married to her. Not remembering anything about the wedding, he filed for an annulment, but it took eighteen months for the marriage to be legally dissolved. Busse escaped arrest for nonpayment of alimony by touring Europe for several months.

In 1929, Busse married former model and stage actress Dorothy Drake. They had a son, Henry Jr., in 1931 but were divorced in 1935. Meanwhile, Busse's band was working nightly at the Chez Paree club owned by mobster boss Al Capone. Busse's popularity grew when he was seen and heard in the Hollywood films, Starlit Days At The Lido (starring Clark Gable, 1935) and Lady Let's Dance, in which he had a small speaking part. He also appears as a soloist in the film, The Famous Dorseys (1947).

Henry Busse died on the bandstand while performing for an undertakers' convention in Memphis just a month before his sixty-first birthday. Some of his best recordings have been reissued on LPs and CDs including The Uncollected Henry Busse—1935 (Hindsight), Paul Whiteman, Vol. 1 (RCA), and Original 1927 Recordings [of the Paul Whiteman Orchestra] (Nostalgic Arts).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Henry Busse" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Butler, Barbara ("Barb") (b. Cedar Falls, Iowa, Feb. 9, 1952). American trumpeter. Butler began playing piano at the age of seven, but switched to cornet two years later. Early on, she studied mostly with Dr. David Kennedy, the horn professor at the University of Northern Iowa. She attended the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, during the summers of 1969 and 1970 (Allen Vizzutti was her section mate in the World Youth Orchestra). In 1970, she enrolled as a freshman at St. Olaf College in Minnesota where she studied with Ronald Hasselmann of the Minnesota Orchestra. After one year, she transferred to Northwestern University to study with Vincent Cichowicz, graduating with a bachelor of music degree in 1974. She has also studied with Adolph Herseth and Gerard Schwarz. She spent many of her summers participating in the Aspen Music Festival (1972), Pierre Monteux Festival (1973), and Tanglewood Institute (1974). She returned to Northwestern University to begin graduate work (1974-75), but interrupted her studies to begin duties as coprincipal trumpet of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra.

Butler began her professional career in 1975 as principal of the Grant Park Orchestra in Chicago. She played in the Vancouver Symphony from 1976 to 1980, but resigned in order to join her husband, Charles Geyer, as a professor of trumpet at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York. In 1998, she and Geyer replaced Vincent Cichowicz as professors of trumpet at Northwestern University. During her many decades of teaching, she has worked with hundreds of talented students including Tage Larsen, Christopher Martin, Matthew Muckey, Phil Snedecor, Bill Williams, Joey Tartell, Ethan Bensdorf, Peter Lindblom, Edward Reid, Andrew McCandless, John Hagstrom, William Campbell, Michael Martin, Douglas Prosser, Brandon Eubank, Rob Singer, Bryan McKinney, Sue Sievert, Mike Jury, Lennie Foy, Eric Lopez, Phil Scoles, Jennifer Marotta, Jeff Beal, Chris Fensom, Christopher Moore, Larry Knopp, David Cohen, Mark Ponzo, Wesley Nance, Michael Walk, Greg Jones, John Schuesselin, Bob Thompson, Jeff Strong, Mark Hyams, and Karen Bliznik.

An active performer, Butler has been a member of the Eastman Brass and the Eastman Virtuosi, and is currently playing with the Chicago Chamber Musicians, Music of the Baroque, and the Grand Teton Festival Orchestra. She has appeared as a soloist throughout the U.S., as well as in Spain, Italy, Finland, Canada, Japan, and Switzerland. She has toured with Summit Brass, served as a faculty artist at conferences of the International Trumpet Guild, National Trumpet Competition, and International Women's Brass, and has been a guest coprincipal with the Houston Symphony Orchestra and the Saint Louis Symphony. Her CDs include Music for Two Trumpets (Gasparo), With Clarion Voice (D'Note), and Carmen Fantasia (Warner Classics).

Butler and Geyer make their home in Lincolnshire, Illinois, where they raise and show Arabian horses. She also enjoys fox hunting, hiking, and mountain climbing. They have one daughter, Jorie Butler-Geyer (b. 1994).

In the spring of 2012, Butler and Geyer accepted teaching positions at Rice University in Houston, where they begin teaching in the fall of 2013.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Barbara Butler" (www.northshoreband.org/press/butler.asp); personal interview, May 19, 2011; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Butler, Charles R. (b. St. Johns, Michigan, Apr. 8, 1954). American trumpeter. Butler grew up in Carson City, Michigan, where he first studied with Devere Fader and John Lindenau. After graduating from the Interlochen Arts Academy in 1972, he attended Northwestern University where he studied with Vincent Cichowicz from 1972 to 1976. He has also studied with Charles Geyer and Thomas Stevens.

Butler's impressive orchestral career began when he joined the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra (1977-78). He then played principal trumpet with the Israel Philharmonic (1978-83) and principal with: the Seattle Symphony Orchestra (1983-2002), Seattle Opera Orchestra (1983-2002), Pacific Northwest Ballet Orchestra (1983-87), Pacific Northwest Wagner Festival (1984-2002), Santa Fe Opera Orchestra (summer 1987), Bellingham Music Festival (summers 2003 to present), Malaysia Philharmonic (2002-03), Orquesta de Galicia (2002-03), Orquesta de Tenerife (2002-03), Houston Symphony Orchestra (2003-05), Louisiana Philharmonic (guest, 2005), and San Francisco Opera Orchestra (spring recording project, 2001). He has also performed with the Burning River Brass (spring tour, 2007), New York Philharmonic, and Los Angeles Philharmonic.

Butler has recorded with many leading conductors. He was featured on the Bernstein Retrospective, a project conducted by Leonard Bernstein on Deutsche Grammophon in the early 1980's—a release of all of Bernstein's major symphonic and Broadway works previously recorded in the 1960's. Butler has recorded under the batons of Zubin Mehta, Raphael Kubelik, Sir George Solti, Itzhak Perlman (Israel Philharmonic), Donald Runnicles (San Francisco Opera), and Hans Graf (Houston Symphony), and has played on over one hundred recordings with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra.

Butler has been married to bassoonist Mona (Trytten) Butler since 1981, and currently resides in Seattle, Washington. Their children are Sonja Kaarin (b. 1987) and Trygve Carlton (b. 1991). His hobbies include (in his words): Practically everything that gets my hands and clothes dirty, including (but not limited to) gardening, cooking healthy foods, construction, plumbing, woodworking, engineering, auto and motorcycle mechanics and maintenance, trumpet and cornet building, classic cars, winter sports, hiking, biking, playing with my two Aussie mix-breed dogs, animal husbandry, and working out at the gym. Then there are those other things like raising kids, being a good partner to my spouse, becoming a better trumpet player through daily practice, and trying hard to recover after a near death experience from a neurological disorder surgically repaired in April of 2009.

Bibl.: "Charles Butler" (www.lyrosmusic.com); personal interview, Nov. 29, 2010.

Butler, Helen May (b. near Keene, New Hampshire, May 17, 1867; d. Covington, Kentucky, June 16, 1957). American cornetist. A multi-talented woman, Butler became known as "A Woman of Distinction." She studied violin with Bernard Listerman (concertmaster of the Boston Symphony Orchestra) and cornet.

In 1891, she formed and conducted the Talma Ladies Orchestra, and in 1898 formed the US Talma Ladies Military Band. The band performed at several major venues including Madison Square Garden and numerous Expositions. She endorsed Conn instruments, and as a result, C.G. Conn gave the entire band Conn instruments during their performance at the St. Louis World's Fair in 1904.

Butler was a fine cornet soloist and conductor, a close friend of Sousa, and acquainted with all of the leading bandsmen of the time. She was also a composer; her Cosmopolitan America March (published in 1904 by Ingram) became so popular that it became the official march of the National Republican Party during Theodore Roosevelt's presidential campaign in 1904. She was often called the Female Sousa because of her similar programming and style.

After her band broke up around 1912, Butler settled in Covington, Kentucky (near Cincinnati), and remained there for the rest of her life. She became very active in civic groups and even ran (unsuccessfully) for the US Senate in 1936. She raised two children and continued to play and teach for many years. She died at the age of ninety. Her band uniforms and memorabilia were given to the Smithsonian Institution.

Bibl.: Hazen and Hazen. The Music Men (Smithsonian Institution Press); Rehrig, William H. (Edit. Paul E. Bierley). The Heritage Encyclopedia of Band Music (Integrity Press).

Butterfield, Charles William ("Billy") (b. Middleton, Ohio, Jan. 14, 1917; d. North Palm, Florida, Mar. 18, 1988). American trumpeter. Butterfield learned the violin, bass, and trombone as a boy, and later switched to trumpet, studying under Frank Simon. He attended high school in Wyoming before briefly studying medicine at Transylvania College. He decided to pursue a career as a jazz musician, and began playing with the bands of Dick Raymond, Andy Anderson, and Austin Wylie during his late teens.

At age twenty, Butterfield joined Bob Crosby's orchestra and the Crosby Bobcats (1937-40). His feature solo on I'm Free by Bob Haggart (later retitled as What's New) brought him great attention. He joined Bob Strong's orchestra in 1940, and also appeared in the Hollywood film, Second Chorus, as a member of Artie Shaw's band. After the movie, he stayed with Shaw's band, and became well known through his recording of Stardust. He also played with Shaw's Gramercy Five. When Shaw discontinued his band in 1941, Butterfield became a member of Benny Goodman's orchestra, as well as Les Brown's band (1941-42). From 1942 to 1944, Butterfield was a staff musician for the NBC and CBS studios in Hollywood. He even subbed at the Metropolitan Opera in a work written by Benjamin Britten and conducted by Joe Stopac.

Billy Butterfield enlisted in the military in 1944. After his service duties, he formed his own big band in 1945, and recorded for Capitol Records. The band was not financially successful, and folded after two years. He then resumed work as a fulltime studio player, playing jazz and Dixieland music on the side with Eddie Condon, the Lawson-Haggart Band, and with the Bob Crosby alumni. He recorded numerous albums as a leader, and also recorded with Lester Young, Benny Goodman, Jack Teagarden, Billie Holiday, Mel Powell, and Buck Clayton.

During the mid 1960s, Butterfield left the studios, and moved to Florida. Between 1968 and 1972, he toured the world with the World's Greatest Jazz Band, and continued playing with Yank Lawson and Bob Haggart. He played Dixieland music until his death in 1988, due to cancer. Butterfield was known for his warm and beautiful tone, versatility, and consistent professionalism.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Byrd, Donald[son] [Toussaint L'Ouverture II] (b. Detroit, Michigan, Dec. 9, 1932; d. Delaware, Feb. 4, 2013). American trumpeter. Donald Byrd is considered to be one of the most influential jazz artists and educators of all time. His father was a Methodist minister. He attended Cass Technical High School, where he played in the concert band led by Dr. Harry Begian. During this time, he also performed with Lionel Hampton. He attended Wayne State University in Detroit under Leonard B. Smith (graduating in 1954), and then moved to New York City where he studied privately with William Vacchiano of the New York Philharmonic. He enrolled in the Manhattan School of Music, but his studies were interrupted by the draft. He served in an Air Force band, and continued his music education degree at the Manhattan School under Joe Alessi.

While in New York, Byrd's early professional career was spent playing with some of the giants of the jazz world, including Max Roach, Horace Silver, Jackie McLean, Red Garland, Art Taylor, Art Blakey, Sonny Rollins, Coleman Hawkins, John Coltrane, Thelonious Monk, Gigi Gryce (1957), and Lionel Hampton (1959). In 1962, he moved to Paris for a year to study composition with Nadia Boulanger, and trumpet with Maurice André, and played with the Paris Jazz All Stars (1966). He recorded throughout the 1950s and '60s, and by 1965 was considered the young lion of the jazz trumpet world. From 1958 to 1961, he co-led a quintet with Pepper Adams. After recording with several groups for labels such as RCA, Savoy, Columbia, Riverside, Transition, and Jubilee, he began recording as leader in 1958 for Blue Note, a label he stayed with through 1976. Some of his finest albums include Byrd in Flight, A New Perspective, Fancy Free, and Free Form. After Clifford Brown's accidental death in 1956, Donald Byrd was considered by many to be the leading hard-bop trumpeter.

Byrd turned much of his attention to teaching during 1960s, serving on the faculties of Rutgers University (where he started their jazz program). Howard University (where he was chair of Afro-American Studies), and the Hampton Institute. His teaching became famous during the 1970s when he formed a group called Blackbyrds with several talented students from Howard University. This was one of the first jazz-fusion ensembles. Despite his heavy involvement in music and teaching, he began studying law, receiving a degree from Howard University in 1976. He then taught music at North Carolina Central University, and earned a doctorate in education from Columbia Teachers College in 1982.

Throughout the 1980s, Donald Byrd became a post-bop player. During his career, he recorded on hundreds of albums with artists such Conte Candoli, Art Farmer, Hank Mobley, Horace Silver, Sonny Rollins, Jackie McLean, George Wellington (1955), Phil Woods, Jimmy Smith, Gigi Gryce (1957), Cannonball Adderley, Angelo, Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1956), Dexter Gordon, Kenny Clarke, David Berger, Gene Ammons, Alex Bugnon, Paul Chambers, Kenny Burrell, The Jazz Crusaders, Eric Dolphy, Thad Jones, Jimmy Heath, and Guru. He recorded over fifty albums as leader for labels such as Blue Note, Verve, Fresh Sound, Elektra, Black Lion, Bethlehem, Savoy, Jubilee, Discovery, Prestige, Landmark, and Delmark.

Byrd became the acting head of Afro-American/Jazz Studies at the Oberlin Conservatory in Ohio, and served as an advisor to the Jazz Program of the National Endowment of the Arts. He is currently teaching at Delaware State University as an artist-in-residence (since 2009). He has also taught at Queens College and New York University. In addition to music, his activities include being a playwright, poet, painter, art collector, attorney, licensed pilot, and promoter of new talent. Among the many young jazz artists he discovered and helped are Herbie Hancock, Duke Pearson, and Darren Barrett. He introduced his own kind of trumpet, the Blackbyrd (with Dick Ackright). He now resides in Teaneck, New Jersey.

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "Donald Byrd's Formula for Success (M + M = A)" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2004); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Donald Byrd" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Donald Byrd" (www.hardbop.tripod.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Byrd, Winston (b. Camden, New Jersey, Nov. 27, 1972). American trumpeter. Byrd began playing trumpet at age thirteen and graduated from high school in 1991. He quickly developed jazz skills and a wide range, and started his career as a trumpet player in several pop and rock groups such as the Stylistics, the Chi-Lites, The Dells, The Grateful Dead, Blood Sweat & Tears, Michael Bolton, Natalie Cole, James Moody, Mary Wilson (of the Supremes), and Clarke Kahn. He also played lead in the big bands of Count Basie, Duke Ellington, Illinois Jacquet (1997, tour in France), Clark Terry, Paquito D'Rivera, Claudio Roditi, David Murray, Slide Hampton, Louie Bellson, Oliver Lake, Charles Mingus, Charles Tolliver, and the Dizzy Gillespie All-Star Big Band (led by Jon Faddis). He considers his most significant inspirations to be Maynard Ferguson, Dizzy Gillespie, Jon Faddis, and Arturo Sandoval.

Recently, Byrd has led his own big bands in New York City and Los Angeles. He is also a frequent performer with the Gerald Wilson Orchestra, Frank Capp Juggernaut, Buddy Collette Big Band, and the Don Ellis Reunion Band. He has played on television for the BET Awards and the Grammy Awards. His solo CD is Soul Searchin (Alliance). He is also a well-known composer.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Winston Byrd's official website: www.winstonbyrdmusic.com.

C

Cacia, Paul (b. Anaheim, California, June 20, 1956). American trumpeter and producer. Cacia comes from a musical family, but because of his illegitimate birth, he was disinherited and given up for adoption. He was adopted by Joe and Lorraine Cacia. He enrolled in St. Catherine's Military Academy in Anaheim, California, where the nuns taught him to play the piano. His summers were spent with his grandparents in upstate New York.

Cacia moved to San Juan Capistrano during the sixth grade and took up the trumpet, taking lessons with Leon Badham. He was also self-taught on violin, clarinet, trombone, oboe, French horn, and baritone horn. His early musical development was considered exceptional, and he earned numerous honors as a musician during high school. He became the youngest student of Claude Gordon. He attended San Clemente High School for a while, but graduated from Dana Hills High School. During those years, he worked as a bus boy at a hotel restaurant and later became a dining room attendant to President Richard M. Nixon. He also attended the Conservatory of Developing Artists at the University of Redlands in 1968 where he studied with James Jorgenson. He continued studies with Gordon, and also took a few lessons with Cat Anderson, Don Fehrer, James Stamp, John Madrid, Bud Brisbois, Glenn Stuart, and John Audino. He participated in master classes with Maurice André, Adolph Herseth, Carmine Caruso, and Maynard Ferguson.

Cacia's early professional years included playing with Louis Bellson (1972), Cat Anderson, Stan Kenton, Don Ellis, and Calvin Jackson. He moved to Honolulu, Hawaii, and performed in various shows for Bob Hope, Frank Gorshen, Tennessee Ernie Ford, and others. He then moved to Los Angeles and played jazz in various lounges as well as the Phoenix Playboy Club and the Harrah's Club casino at Lake Tahoe. Studio work in Los Angeles included recordings with Diana Ross, Elton John, Robert Plant, Barry White, Glen Campbell, Delaney Bramlett, The Osmonds, Abbe Lane, in addition to sessions for many record labels and film companies. He signed his first record contract as an artist/producer with Capitol Records at the age of twenty-one, and formed his first big band in 1977, releasing his first solo album titled Unbelievable. Subsequent albums were Bite Your Lip (ALX Records), Big Band Portrait, All in Good Time (with Louie Bellson), Believe It, Quantum Leap, and The Alumni Tribute to Stan Kenton. He also married at that time. He later moved to San Francisco where he worked with Electric Flag, Neil Young, and the Buddy Miles Express (touring for three years and eventually becoming the group's musical director and arranger). He also recorded with Stevie Wonder.

Cacia became a member of Ray Anthony's Big Band as lead trumpet for one year, touring Mexico and performing on the television show, Siempre en Domingo. He left to move to New Orleans to join Al Hirt's Big Band. He was a guest soloist with the Mormon Tabernacle Choir on nine occasions, and became the executive director of the Don Ellis estate for two years. He studied arranging and orchestration with Pete Rugolo, conducting with Dick Shearer, and record producing with Dave Pell. He then moved to Las Vegas to join the Las Vegas Pops Orchestra that performed both at local casinos and on tour. Congress subpoenaed Cacia to testify on behalf of the AFM/AFL-CIO in Federal US Labor Court. His testimony broke a thirteen-year deadlock case against a casino. He was placed under Federal Marshall protection after two assassination attempts.

Moving back to Los Angeles, Paul Cacia worked as producer for the Los Angeles Raiders Big Band. He made three solo appearances for the Big Band Academy Awards, developed the Brevette-model trumpet for Boosey & Hawkes (with Zig Kanstul), and performed as a studio musician for the television show Highway to Heaven and the movie The Sinatra Story. He became director of special projects and a member of the personal staff to billionaire Meshulam Rickless, owner of the Riviera Hotel in Las Vegas.

Cacia was active in the artist management world from 1991-98, and was the personal manager of Miss Peggy Lee from 1996 to 1998. He continues to perform with his own orchestra and as a guest soloist and producer. He is divorced, and has three children. He is currently living in Las Vegas.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Paul Cacia" (http://paulcacia.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Caens, Thierry [Gérard] (b. Dijon, France, Sept. 24, 1958). French trumpeter. Caens comes from a musical family: his brother Jean-Pierre is a sax player; his great-grandfather Alphonse played clarinet; his grandfather was a violinist; and his uncles Maurice, Paul, and Serge were also musicians. Caens first studied with his father, Marcel Caens, and beginning in 1975 with Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory, graduating in 1978. He also took lessons from Robert Pichaureau and Pierre Pollin.

Caens won a position as principal trumpet of the National Orchestra of Lyons in 1975 at age twenty, a position he held until 1981. From 1981 to 1985, he was solo cornet of the Paris Opera. His career as a soloist started in the mid 1970s. He performed with Gabriel Niel (organ), Orchestre de Chambre Bernard Thomas (on television with Maurice André and Guy Touvron), Ensemble de Cuivres Guy Touvron, the noted quintet Arban (1976-86) that won the 1979 Maurice André Competition. In 1981, he also won a bronze medal at the Geneva competition.

Since the age of thirty-seven, Caens has devoted most of his performances to soloing around the world with such orchestras as the Moscow Chamber Orchestra, Israel Camerata, Tokyo Metropolitan Symphony, Franz Lizst Orchestra of Budapest, Toulouse National Chamber Orchestra, Orchestre Lamoureux, and many others. He has also released numerous CDs of Baroque and Classical music, as well as cornet solos and other genres.

Caens founded the ensemble, Les Cuivres Français, as well as Les Trois Cuivres with hornist André Cazalet and trombonist Michel Becquet. Caens has also performed as trumpet soloist on the soundtrack for the French film, Cyrano de Bergerac.

Caens is professor of trumpet at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique in Lyons (replacing Pierre Dutot in 2004) and at the Conservatorie National de Région in Dijon (from 1985). He is the conductor of Camerata Bourgogne, and is an active composer and arranger who has published trumpet methods and solos through Hamelle/Leduc, and Midi-Musique.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Musician Thierry Caens" (B & S website: http://b-and-s.com). Thierry Caens's official website: www.ThierryCaens.com.

Caffarelli, Reginaldo (b. Sintrie, Italy, Feb. 16, 1891; d. Rome, Italy, Nov 11, 1960). Italian trumpeter and cornetist. Caffarelli spent his career in the Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia Orchestra (where his student Nino Iannamorelli succeeded him). As a cornet soloist, he made many recordings under his own name in the 1910-34 period, but he was best known as a teacher at the Accademia Nazionale di Santa Cecilia in Rome. Among his pupils were Nino Iannamorelli (who recorded the trumpet solo in the film soundtrack La Strada by Fellini) and Ennio Morricone (famous film music composer). Caffarelli wrote studies for trumpet.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cagnolatti, Ernest Joseph ("Ernie" "Cag") (b. Madisonville, Louisiana, Apr. 2, 1911; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Apr. 7, 1983). His grandfather was born in Italy (Genova). Ernie's brother, Claiberre Cagnolatti, was a drummer. Ernie studied the trumpet under Arnold Metoyer in 1929, and began playing trumpet in church. He later joined the Eureka Brass Band in New Orleans, and from 1933 to 1942 played mostly with the Herbert Leary Big Band. During the 1940s, he performed with the bands of Oscar "Papa" Celestin, George Williams, and Sidney Desvignes. He played with Paul Barbarin (1950-52), Alphonse Picou, Jim Robinson (1961), and Paul Barbarin again (1962-67, including a tour in Vietnam in 1967). From 1969 to 1980, he was a member of the Preservation Hall Orchestra in New Orleans. (A stroke in 1980 prevented him from playing any further.) He recorded in 1962 with Harold Dejan, in 1968 with the Onward Brass Band, and extensively with Paul Barbarin from 1951 to 1965.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "ErnieCagnolatti" (www.facebook.com/pages/Ernie-Cagnolatti/148176415197348).

Caine, Elliott (b. Indianapolis, Indiana, Oct. 5, 1951). American trumpeter. Caine started playing trumpet at age eleven. He attended Indiana University, studying jazz with David Baker, and after hearing recordings by Clifford Brown and Miles Davis, became passionate about jazz. He moved to Los Angeles in 1976, where he played with several Latin and Salsa bands, while studying jazz piano with George Lewis and trumpet with Nolan Shaheed, Robert Rithaler, Roy Wiegand, and Rene Lamart. From 1990 to 1999, he performed with the popular ska group, Jump With Joey, which toured the U.S. and Japan, and made several albums for Capitol Records. He also played with The Beastie Boys, Machito, Joey Cheezhee, and others, and appeared on the television show, Entertainment Tonight, and an HBO special titled On the Ledge. He also made several appearances in feature films, including The Addams Family, Sinatra, and Gypsy, and was recently featured in Nina Wachenfeld Sings Kurt Weill.

Over the past several years, Caine has been focusing on his own groups. He has appeared at numerous national and international jazz festivals including the Playboy Jazz Festival, Idyllwild Jazz in the Pines Festival, Equinoxe Jazz Festival, and the Montreux Festival. His CDs include Hippy Chicks on Acid "Live at Alvas," Blues from Mars, Le Super Cool, and Orientation. He has been honored by Los Angeles Music Week magazine (2005) and the City of Los Angeles (1999).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Elliott Caine & Band" (www.oz-ist.com/Artist.aspx?id=23); "Elliott Caine" (www.wondercaprecords.com/cainebio.html).

Calder, Mark (b. Inverness, Scotland, 1961). Scottish trumpeter. Calder began playing trumpet at age eleven, and soon joined local brass bands and orchestras. He studied at the Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow with Bob Jenner, Trevor Green, and John Grace. He was awarded the Governor's Prize in Brass. He later earned a diploma at the National Centre for Orchestral Studies.

Calder has been principal and associate principal of several orchestras including the Bournemouth Sinfonietta and the Orchestra of the Birmingham Royal Ballet. He is currently second trumpet of the Philharmonia Orchestra of London, and teaches at the Royal Grammar School in Guildford and at the Royal College of Music in London.

Bibl.: "Mark Calder" (www.rcm.ac.uk/about/stafflisting/profile/?id=5373).

Calicchio, Dominic (b. Rome, Italy, Sept. 13, 1901; d. May 11, 1979). Italian designer and manufacturer. Calicchio was born in Rome, and began working at the Marchiondi's orphanage workshop in Milan (1914-18). He then moved to the United States and spent five months working with Rudy Mück (1925). He opened his own workshop in New York from 1925 to 1947. For the first two years, Calicchio repaired brass instruments and made mouthpieces. From 1928 on, Calicchio began making trumpets and cornets. Like Vincent Bach and Elden Benge, Calicchio tried to reproduce and improve the French Besson trumpets of the 1930s and '40s. Like the others, he was unable to make exact copies, but did instead build high quality instruments with a unique sound and playing characteristics that were highly respected. Calicchio left New York and moved to California.

Calicchio was commissioned by MGM to produce two heart-shaped "magical" trumpets to be used as movie props in the 1978 film, Sgt. Pepper's Lonely Hearts Club Band starring Steve Martin and George Burns and featuring the Bee Gees, Alice Cooper, Aerosmith, Earth Wind and Fire, and others. One of the instruments is now in the MGM archives, and the other has been purchased by the National Music Museum in Vermillion, South Dakota. Freddie Hubbard was an adviser to Calicchio. A documentary film was made: Dominic Calicchio—The Story of a Craftsman. Calicchio was called the Michelangelo of Brass.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Callet, Jerome ("Jerry") (b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Apr. 24, 1930). American trumpeter. Callet began playing the trumpet at age thirteen. While attending Taylor Allderdice High School in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania (graduating in 1948), he was a member of the Pittsburgh Youth Orchestra. Despite studying with James Morrow, Guy Borelli, Nat Prager, and others, he was still unable to play a high c" by age thirty. Totally frustrated with traditional embouchure methods, he dedicated himself to a lifetime of research and development in the ability to play in the upper register, eventually becoming one of the world's leading high note artists and teachers.

He experienced his greatest playing revelation on October 13, 1970 when he was able to combine the old German French horn einsetzen ("setting in") and ansetzen ("setting on") embouchures. Within an hour, he was able to play from double pedal C to double high c"" with very little difficulty. This revelation culminated in his first book, Trumpet Yoga, published in 1972 by Colin Publications. A second book, Brass Power and Endurance, was published by Howard Branch Publishing in 1974. In 1987, he produced a video and book called Superchops.

Callet began to design trumpets during the early 1970s; his first instruments were built by Donald Getzen of the DEG Corporation, and Callet mouthpieces soon followed. Callet's background in instrument design originated in 1953 when he began a sixteen-year apprenticeship with Elden Benge, followed by six years with Dominic Callicchio. To date, Callet has manufactured over 25,000 mouthpieces and 5,000 trumpets. His newest model trumpet, the "Sima," was produced in 2008.

In 2002, Callet collaborated with Baroque trumpet specialist Robert Civiletti to publish Trumpet Secrets—The Secrets of the Tongue-Controlled Embouchure (self-published). In 2007, he published Master Superchops, a two-DVD set that demonstrates his teachings in great detail. An amazingly strong high note player, Callet advertised in various magazines such as Downbeat and the International Trumpet Guild Journal, an open challenge to his "most powerful embouchure contest" (with a $1,000 prize for anyone who could outmatch his high register for twenty minutes). A few of his best-known students are James T. Decker, Csaba Kelemen, Herbert T. Smith, Olivier A. Theurillat, Pierre Thibaud, Keith Underwood (flute), and John R. Ware.

Callet was trumpet soloist and leader of his own big band, Stratosphere, from 1978 to 1988. He continues to teach private lessons in the New York area, and is an active clinician throughout the world. He lives on Staten Island, New York, with his wife Yumiko Morimoto (married in 1994), a theater artist from 1962 to 2004 and his assistant since 1998. His children from a previous marriage are Toby (b. 1958) and Betsy (b. 1961). His hobbies include embouchure experiments and kettlebell training.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Jerome Callet" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Jerome Callet's official website: www.callettrumpets.com; "Interview with Jerome Callet" (http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/interview/callet); personal interview, Apr. 16, 2011.

Calvayrac, Albert (b. Conques-sur-Orbiel, France, July 20, 1934). French trumpeter. Calvayrac began studying with his father (a tuba player) and later attended the conservatory in Toulouse in 1948, studying with Louis Déjean and Yves Sirvain. In 1952, he entered the class of Raymond Sabarich at the Paris Conservatory, winning first prize in cornet in 1953 and a prize in trumpet in 1955. He played in the Army (Musique du Train) during his studies in Paris.

Calvayrac was a cornet soloist with the Jean Bentaberry Orchestra (1957-72, playing regular broadcasts on Radio-Toulouse), and joined the Toulouse Symphony Orchestra of the Office de la Radio-Télévision française at the Capitole (1965-74). He also joined the Toulouse Chamber Orchestra conducted by Louis Auriacombe and Georges Armand with which he performed many major works of the repertoire including Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto, Hummel's Concerto, Bach's Suites in D (with Yves Sirvain, principal trumpet), Vivaldi's Concerto P75 (with André Bernes, 2nd trumpet), Stravinsky's A Soldier's Tale, and Haydn's Concerto (1971). He also played with the Jean-François Paillard Chamber Orchestra, organist Xavier Darasse, and the Ars Nova Brass Quintet. He studied with James Stamp (1977), and took part in the GFT Trumpet Workshop (1979). In 1965, Calvayrac became a professor at the Toulouse Conservatoire (until 1999). Among his best-known pupils are Jean-Pierre Canilhac and Claude Egéa. Calvayrac's son, Michel, is also a trumpet player.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Calvert, Albert Edward ("Eddie") (b. Preston, Lancashire, England, Mar. 15, 1922; d. Salisbury, Rhodesia, South Africa, Aug. 7, 1978). British trumpeter. As a child, Calvert learned to play a variety of instruments. He settled on the trumpet and soon played with local brass and dance bands. He began playing professionally just after World War II when he played with Billy Ternent, Geraldo & His Band (1945-47), Ramon Lopez (Musique Typique, 1948), his own Typic Band (1950's), and for Stanley Black's television orchestra. He became a featured soloist with Black, and was introduced as "The Man with the Golden Trumpet," a moniker that stayed with him all his life. His style of playing was very much like that of Ziggy Elman and Harry James.

During the 1950s, Calvert was a popular soloist for BBC Radio and Television. He began making 78-rpm and 45-rpm records for Columbia in 1949, and in 1953, his single recording of Oh Mein Papa rose to number one on the pop charts, where it stayed for nine weeks. Other singles on the charts included Cherry Pink and Apple Blossom White (#1, 1955), Stranger in Paradise (#14, 1955), John and Julie (#6, 1955), Zambesi (#13, 1956), Mandy (#9, 1958) and Little Serenade (#28, 1958). He was the first British instrumentalist to have two number-one hits, and the first British musician to have a gold record (Oh Mein Papa). He also cowrote the song, My Son, My Son, that took Vera Lynn to the top of the charts in 1954.

Calvert became a wealthy person during the 1950s, but his popularity waned during the 1960s, probably due to the rise in popularity of rock music and the huge success of The Beatles. As his fortune and popularity dwindled, he left England in 1968 and moved to South Africa, settling in Rhodesia, where he became popular with whites, mostly because of his pro-apartheid version of Amazing Grace, performed as Amazing Race. Unfortunately, during a tour of South Africa, he suffered a heart attack in Johannasburg. He died a few months later in Salisbury, Rhodesia, at the age of fifty-six.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Eddie Calvert" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Camarata, Salvatore ("Tutti") (b. Glen Ridge, New Jersey, May 11, 1913; d. Burbank, California, Apr. 13, 2005). American trumpeter, arranger, and producer. Camarata was the youngest of eight children in his family. He began playing the violin at age nine, but switched to trumpet at age twelve. He worked as a freelance musician in New York City during the late 1920s, graduated from The Juilliard School, and studied composition at Columbia University. At age twenty-one, he joined the Charlie Barnet band as a trumpeter and staff arranger. He also worked for a while on the Bing Crosby radio show, and as an arranger for Paul Whiteman's band. Camarata joined Jimmy Dorsey's orchestra during the 1930s as first trumpet and composer/arranger (remaining until 1942), and composed two of Dorsey's biggest hits: Green Eyes and Maria Elena. It was Dorsey who gave Camarata the nickname, Tutti.

In the early 1940s, Camarata joined Glen Gray's Casa Loma Orchestra and then the Benny Goodman band as arranger, but when World War II broke out, he became a flight instructor in the US Air Force. In 1944, he was back with Charlie Barnet for a time before moving to Southern California to work as a musical director and arranger for Decca Records where he was a producer for such celebrities as Billie Holiday, Bing Crosby, Louis Armstrong, and Mary Martin. When Decca sent him to London for a while to produce music for the film, London Town, he met Sir Edward Lewis, and the two formed London Records, now the leading label in England. After returning to Los Angeles in 1950, he continued producing for Decca and formed a band called the Commanders, which recorded a successful series of albums. He began producing music for several television shows, including Together With Music, which caught the attention of Disneyland Records, which hired him for the next twenty years.

Disney charged Camarata with producing albums featuring Annette Funicello that, along with other Disney albums, garnered him eight Grammy Award nominations. In 1957, he produced the hit album, Tutti's Trumpets, that featured six of the top Los Angeles studio players: Conrad Gozzo, Uan Rasey, Mannie Klein, Pete Candoli, Joe Triscari, and Shorty Sherock. He also produced an album called Tutti's Trombones. Because Disney refused to build its own recording studio, Camarata purchased an old auto repair shop and turned it into Sunset Sound Recorders. Being only one of two state-of-the-art studios in Los Angeles at the time, his studio soon became flooded with big name talent looking for a place to record. In addition to producing for Disney until 1972, Camarata recorded and produced for artists including the Beach Boys, Rolling Stones, Van Halen, Barbra Streisand, Barry Manilow, Ricky Nelson, Led Zeppelin, The Doors, Miles Davis, Herb Alpert, Prince, the Bee Gees, and Paul McCartney.

Camarata retired during the mid 1990s, turning control of the studio over to his son Paul, who remains its owner. He died on April 13, 2005 at the age of ninety-one.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Salvatore 'Tutti' Camarata" (www.spaceagepop.com/camarata.htm); "Salvatore Camarata" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Campbell, Alan ("Al") W. (b. Ft. Worth, Texas, Dec. 24, 1955). American trumpeter. Campbell grew up in Los Angeles. He began playing trumpet at the age of thirteen; his first teacher was William Krinsky. After graduating from Wellesley High School in Wellesley, Massachusetts in 1974, he attended Oberlin College, studying with Gene Young, and completing bachelor of music and bachelor of economics degrees in 1979. He then studied with David Hickman at the University of Illinois from 1979 to 1981, serving as a graduate teaching assistant, and completing his master of music degree in 1984. He won an audition as second trumpet of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra in Ohio where he played from 1981 to 1998.

While working in Columbus, Campbell taught at Otterbein College in nearby Westerville, Ohio, from 1984 to 1990. He also played with the ProMusica Chamber Orchestra of Columbus, and from 1990 to 1991 was acting second trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra.

Campbell and Marcia Caton Campbell, an urban planner, were married in 1980. They moved to Madison, Wisconsin, in 1998 when she was offered a position at the University of Wisconsin; he was offered a position at UW as Artist-in-Residence, and performed with the Wisconsin Brass Quintet and taught a large music class. He also worked as a freelance musician in Columbus, Madison, and Milwaukee. In July of 2005, he accepted a one-year position in the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra. The job was extended to him another year, and he eventually became the fulltime second trumpet. Marcia works in Milwaukee as director of The Center for Resilient Cities.

Campbell has performed with the National Repertory Orchestra, Peninsula Music Festival, New York Big Brass, Chicago Symphony Orchestra (summer 2010), and has also taught at the University of Wisconsin-Whitewater (fall 1999) and the Eastern Music Festival (2007-2010). He and Marcia have two daughters: Kate (b. 1986) and Liz (b. 1989). His hobbies include running, golf, and cooking.

Bibl.: "Alan Campbell" (www.mso.org); personal interview, June 28, 2011.

Campbell, Roy Jr. (b. Los Angeles, California, Sept. 29, 1952). American trumpeter. The son of a trumpet player, Campbell grew up in New York. He took piano lessons as a child, then switched to trumpet at age fifteen. He participated in Jazz Mobile workshops led by Lee Morgan, Kenny Dorham, Joe Newman, Yusef Lateef, Howard McGhee, and other top jazz musicians. During the late 1960s, Campbell also played in the Manhattan Community College big bands.

In 1972 at the age of twenty, Roy Campbell formed a group called Spectrum. He also worked with Woody Shaw, Cecil Taylor, Jameel Moondoc, Ellen Christi, Carlos Garnett, David Murray, Billy Bang, William Hooker, Matthew Shipp, Frank Wright, John Zorn, Peter Brötzmann, William Parker, Sun Ra, and others. During the early 1990s, he lived in Holland, touring with Klaas Hekman's band, sitting in with Don Cherry's big band, writing film scores, and leading the Thelonious World Orchestra in Rotterdam. After returning to the United States, Campbell led the Other Dimensions in Music ensemble, and the Pyramid Trio.

A multitalented artist, Roy Campbell Jr. also plays flute, pocket trumpet, flugelhorn, recorder, and violin. He is a professional actor, arranger, composer, and writer who has scored music for film documentaries including The Selling of Harlem and Survival in New York, as well as off-Broadway shows such as Ludwig, Parole by Death, and Hughes' Dream Harlem. He has been interviewed for various national television corporations, including ABC, CBS, PBS, NBC, and UPN.

In 1995, Campbell formed the jazz ensemble Shades and Colors of Trane, a tribute band to John Coltrane. In 1999, he added the group Downtown Horns, and in 2003 was given the Harlem Unsung Hero of Afrikan-Amerikan Classical Music award at the Lenox Lounge. He has recorded dozens of albums. Among those as leader are New Kingdom (Delmark), Other Dimensions in Music (Silkheart), Communion (Silkheart), La Tierra del Fuego (Delmark), Ancestral Homeland (No More), Ethic Stew and Brew (Delmark), Pyramid (Silkheart), and It's Krunch Time (Thirsty Ear). Campbell is known for his versatility, comfortably performing free-jazz, hard bop, fusion, and R&B.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Roy Campbell Jr." (http://en.wikipedia.org); Roy Campbell's official website: www.roycampbell.com.

Campbell, William ("Bill") (b. Shreveport, Louisiana, Nov. 14, 1961). American trumpeter. Campbell grew up in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania. He began playing the trumpet at age nine; his first trumpet teachers were Lloyd Baddorf, William Scarlatta, Ross Weaver, and Richard Giangiulio. After graduating from Airline High School in 1979, he studied with Barbara Butler at the Eastman School of Music, earning a bachelor of music degree (1979-83) and a master of music degree (1983-85). He was also a member (fourth and assistant principal trumpet) of the Rochester Philharmonic Orchestra from 1979 through 1985.

From 1985 to 1992, Campbell was a member of l'Orchestra del Maggio Musicale Fiorentino in Italy (conducted by Maestro Zubin Mehta). He returned to the U.S. in 1992 as professor of trumpet at the University of Kansas. In 1996, he accepted an offer to become trumpet professor at The Ohio State University (replacing Dr. Richard Burkart), but left that position in 2000 to assume his current job as professor of trumpet at the University of Michigan. He has been the principal trumpet of the Ann Arbor Symphony since 2008, and in 2009 founded the UM International Trumpet Institute based near Tours, France. Among his former students are Jason Bergman, Ben Albright, Andy Allphin, Kevin Gebo, Beth Thomas, Alex Noppe, Thomas Pfotenhaur, and Matt Ernst.

Campbell has been a guest principal trumpeter of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, St. Louis Symphony Orchestra, Columbus Symphony Orchestra, and the Rochester Philharmonic. He has taught at the Brevard Music Festival and is a guest professor at the Shenyang Conservatory in China. He received the "Outstanding Professor Award" from the OSU Sphinx/Mortar Board.

Campbell and Lucia Campbell, lyric soprano and Minister of Music at St. Thomas Catholic Church in Ann Arbor, Michigan, have been married since 1988, and have two children, Ben (b. 1990) and Jim (b. 1993). His hobbies include video games and softball.

Bibl.: "William Campbell" (www.music.umich.edu/faculty_staff/bio.php?u=&lname=campbell&name=william); personal interview, Apr. 24, 2011.

Campos, Frank Gabriel (b. San Antonio, Texas, June 24, 1953). American trumpeter. The Campos family is from Monterey, California. Campos's father (Frank Campos) was a career officer in the US Air Force, so the family frequently moved. They lived in the Philippines, Spain, Newfoundland, North Dakota, Colorado, Virginia, Michigan, and California before Campos graduated from Mitchell High School in Colorado Springs, Colorado, in 1971.

Campos began playing the trumpet at age eight, studying with his father who was a fine amateur trumpeter. While earning an AA degree from Monterey Peninsula College (1974), he studied with Carole Klein, David Burkhart, and Laurie McGaw. At California State University-Fresno, where he completed a bachelor's degree in trumpet in 1977, he studied with Dr. W. Ritchie Clendenin, Charles Brady, and in Los Angeles with James Stamp. After acquiring a teacher's certificate in 1979, Campos taught in the public schools of California for four years, then earned a master's degree and worked on a doctoral program at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) between 1982 and 1986, studying with John Haynie, Leonard Candelaria, and Don Jacoby. At NTSU, he received the Outstanding Masters Student Award and the Outstanding Doctoral Student Award, as well as the Hexter Prize for Outstanding Graduate. His doctoral studies were interrupted when he accepted a teaching position at Ithaca College in 1986, a position he still holds.

A highly versatile performer, Campos has played with the NTSU One O'Clock Lab Band (solo trumpet), Dallas Cowboys Band, Natalie Cole, Johnny Mathis, Ella Fitzgerald, Bob Hope, and Keith Brion's New Sousa Band. He was a founding member of the Dallas Brass (1984-86) and was a member of the Ft. Worth Symphony Orchestra, Fresno Philharmonic Orchestra, and Monterey County Symphony Orchestra. He has also served as principal trumpet of the Glimmerglass Opera Orchestra, Dallas Chamber Orchestra, Texas Baroque Ensemble, Bear Valley Music Festival, and Madera Symphony Orchestra. In addition, he has been a jazz soloist at the Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland and the Ottawa International Jazz Festival in Canada. He is currently a member of the Ithaca Brass and is principal of the Binghamton Philharmonic Orchestra and the Tri-Cities Opera Orchestra. He is also a regular substitute or extra player with the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra, Glimmerglass Opera Orchestra, Ensemble X, Gap Magione Big Band, Sonare Early Music Consort, and the Central New York Jazz Orchestra. He served on the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild for twelve years, and is a column writer for the International Trumpet Guild Journal. He has also authored the book, Trumpet Technique (Oxford Music Press).

Campos and his wife, Sharon Ann Thorstad, a public school math teacher, have been married since 1974, and have two children, Laura Ann (b. 1985) and Leslie Annette (b. 1986). Campos's hobbies include reading, writing, kayaking, and qigong.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Frank Campos" (http://faculty.Ithaca.edu/campos); personal interview, Apr. 25, 2011.

Candelaria, Leonard A[nthony] (b. Pomona, California, May 13, 1947). American trumpeter. After graduating from high school, Candelaria attended Chaffey Junior College in Alta Loma, California (1965-67). He enlisted in the Army in 1967, and played in military bands in Los Angeles and Honolulu. After his discharge (1970), he earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1972 and a master of music education degree in 1974, studying with John J. Haynie at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas), where he performed in the One O'Clock Lab Band and served as a graduate trumpet teaching assistant.

When professor Haynie decided to teach part-time beginning in 1974, Candelaria was selected as the other trumpet professor. Candelaria maintained an outstanding class of students which included such notables as Iskander Akhmadullin, Ken Watters, Bob Lark, Scott Englebright, Craig Fraedrich, Daniel Smith, James Ford III, Alan Wenger, Stephen Leisring, Frank Campos, Michelle Kaminski, Michael Leuchner, Charles Tumlinson, Daniel Williams, Mathias Engl, Grant Peters, and John Korak, just to mention a few. In 1990, he received the Shelton Excellence in Teaching Award, and in 2001 attained the title of Regents' Professor. He worked on his doctorate degree at Northwestern University from 1975 to 1985, studying with Vincent Cichowicz. Additionally, he studied with Edward Tarr (Baroque trumpet), Luther Didrickson, and Robert H. Fleming.

During his illustrious career, Candelaria has performed with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, Summit Brass, Ft. Worth Symphony, Texas Baroque Ensemble, Orchestra of New Spain, Texas Brass Ensemble, Bach Gesellschaft, and the Texas Bach Collegium. He has presented recitals and master classes throughout the U.S., Europe, Asia, and Central America. He has served as a judge at numerous international trumpet solo competitions held in Russia, Germany, and the U.S.

Candelaria was elected president of the International Trumpet Guild (1993-95), and has served the organization as a board member, conference host (1988), and conference artist. He was awarded the ITG Award of Merit in 2003. A versatile player, he was appointed the permanent chair of the Carmine Caruso International Jazz Trumpet Solo Competition and hosted the 1998 competition at UNT.

Candelaria is married to pianist Dr. Kathryn Fouse. When she was offered a teaching position at Samford University in Birmingham, Alabama in 2002, Candelaria took a year's leave of absence from UNT to become an artist-in-residence at the University of Alabama-Birmingham. A year later when Leonard and Kathryn decided to stay in Birmingham, he resigned from his post at UNT and became a fulltime teacher at UAB. He hosted the Ellsworth Smith-ITG International Solo Competition at UAB in 2004. He retired in the fall of 2009 and lives in Birmingham with Fouse, who serves as Associate Dean of Music at Samford. Their two children, Alexander and Arianna, are enthusiastic trumpeters.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Leonard A. Candelaria" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Leonard Candelaria" (www.edwards-instruments.com); personal interview, Mar. 20, 2013.

Candoli, Secondo ("Conte") (b. Mishawaka, Indiana, July 12, 1927; d. Palm Desert, California, Dec. 14, 2001). American trumpeter. The Candoli family were Italian immigrants who settled in the United States after World War I. His father played in a local club band and encouraged Conte and his older brother Pete (1923-2008) to play music on the various instruments around the house. Pete became a member of Woody Herman's First Herd and was helpful in arranging for Conte to play with Herman's band during a summer vacation in 1944. In the next year, Conte graduated from high school and became a regular member of Herman's band. His playing with Herman was cut short when he was drafted into the Army in 1945.

After discharge from the military in late 1946, Conte joined Chubby Jackson's Sextet and toured Scandinavia from 1947 to 1948. He then joined the Stan Kenton Orchestra (1948) and Charlie Ventura's Bop for the People Band in 1949. He played again with Woody Herman (1950) and with Charlie Barnet (1951). Candoli rejoined Kenton's band in 1951 and played as one of the group's leading soloists until 1953. He then formed his own band in Chicago with Chubby Jackson, Frank Rosolino, and Lou Levy, but decided to move to Los Angeles in the latter part of 1954.

Candoli became a top freelance and studio player in Los Angeles during the mid 1950s through the 1980s. He played with Howard Rumsey's Lighthouse All-Stars (recording for the Contemporary label), Shorty Rogers, Bud Shank, the Terry Gibbs Dream Band (1959-62), Gerry Mulligan's Concert Jazz Band (in New York and Europe, 1960-61), the Shelly Manne Quintet (1965-68), Candoli Brothers (with brother Pete), Stan Kenton's Neophonic Orchestra (special engagements), and recorded with Sonny Criss (1968), Frank Strazzeri (1973), and Teddy Edwards (1974).

Doc Severinsen invited Conte to join Johnny Carson's Tonight Show band in 1968, starting a long and successful run until Carson's retirement in 1992. Candoli also played with Supersax (1972) and Louie Bellson as well as the Lighthouse All-Stars reunion band during the 1980s. He considered his biggest influences to be Dizzy Gillespie (during the 1940s) and Clifford Brown (during the 1950s).

Shortly before his death in 2001, Conte recorded his last album, Candoli Live. Other albums include Powerhouse Trumpet (Bethlehem/Avenue Jazz), Conte Candoli 4 (V.S.O.P.), Conte-Nutty (Fresh Sound), and Lighthouse All-Stars: Vol. 6 (Original Jazz Classics). Altogether, Candoli recorded 770 tracks on 123 albums with various groups. He was inducted into the International Jazz Hall of Fame in 1997. He died of cancer on December 14, 2001 at the Monterey Palms Convalescent Home in Desert Palm, California, at the age of seventy-four.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Conte Candoli Collection" (www.ijc.uidaho.edu); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

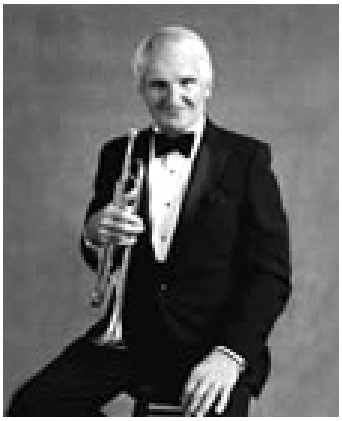
Candoli, Walter Joseph ("Pete") (b. Mishawaka, Indiana, June 28, 1923; d. Studio City, California, Jan. 11, 2008). American trumpeter.



Along with his younger brother Conte (1927-2001), Pete began playing musical instruments as a boy. His father was a member of a club band and instilled a love of music in his boys. While still a teenager, Pete started his career in various bands such as those of Sonny Dunham (1940-41), Will Bradley (1941-42), Benny Goodman (1942), Ray McKinley (1942), Tommy Dorsey (1943-44), Freddie Slack, Teddy Powell, Count Basie, and Charlie Barnet. He married Nona Reedy in 1943, but they divorced in 1953 without having had any children.

From 1944 to 1946, Candoli was lead trumpet with Woody Herman's First Herd. He became known as the "Superman with a Horn" because of his performances at the end of the tune Apple Honey, where he appeared in front of the band wearing a Superman costume and screaming high notes. He can be seen with Herman's band in the film, Earl Carroll Vanities (1945). When Herman's band recorded Igor Stravinsky's Ebony Concerto, Pete played the first trumpet part. He later played lead with Boyd Raeburn (1947), Tex Beneke (1947-48), and Jerry Gray (1950-51). Candoli was also an exquisite jazz soloist.

Candoli moved to Los Angeles in the mid 1950s to work in the radio, television, and movie studios. He eventually played over five thousand sessions as a studio player, and made hundreds of recordings including the well-known Tutti's Trumpets album produced by Tutti Camarata. In 1953, he married Vicky Lane. Although they had one child (daughter Tara), the couple divorced in 1958.

During his long and extensive career, Candoli performed with at least twenty-seven different big bands. Among those not previously mentioned are those of Les Brown (1952) and Stan Kenton (1952 and 1954-56). He co-led a combo with his brother Conte called Candoli Brothers. They appeared in the film, Bell, Book and Candle in 1958.

Pete Candoli married actress Betty Hutton in 1960. They had a daughter, Carolyn, but divorced in 1967. In that same year, he took part in an episode of the Al Hirt Show, playing in a trumpet ensemble with Hirt, Dizzy Gillespie, and Don Ellis. He was an active composer and arranger, writing many tunes for singers such as Ella Fitzgerald, Judy Garland, and Peggy Lee. In 1972, he married singer Edie Adams. They formed a nightclub act that was very successful, but ended when the two divorced in 1988. He and brother Conte appeared at the Monterey Jazz Festival (1973), and Pete also performed at the Aurex Jazz Festival in Tokyo (1987). During the 1990s, Candoli performed a great deal with Lionel Hampton's band.

Pete Candoli was awarded major prizes from Metronome and Downbeat magazines, and also received the honor of being voted one of the top seven jazz trumpet artists of all time by Look and Esquire magazines. He was also inducted into the International Jazz Hall of Fame in 1997, and the Big Band Hall of Fame in 2003. Among his best albums are The Brothers Candoli (MCA/ Impulse) and Blues, When Your Lover Has Gone (Somerset). He died in Studio City, California, at the age of eighty-four.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Pete Candoli 1923-2008" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2008); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Canham, Thomas G. (b. Isle of Jersey, England, 1825; d. Patterson, New Jersey, Nov. 1873). American keyed bugler. Canham entered the British military at an early age and served in India as a musician. He was a virtuoso violinist as well as a keyed bugle player. After military service, he immigrated to America and began working as a circus bandleader and keyed bugle soloist. In 1856, he led the Spaulding & Rogers Circus band, then the H. Buckley & Company Circus band. He was leader of the Dan Rice Circus band in 1857 and 1859, at times leaving to tour as a keyed bugle soloist with various organizations.

Dan Rice, a star circus clown, had the idea of pitting Canham against another circus performer, the famed keyed bugle soloist Edward "Ned" Kendall. The public contest was highly publicized and was reported by William Meade, stating that, Tom Canham came, and it wasn't long before he was towering above his celebrated rival. It should be noted, however, that Kendall was beginning to suffer from tuberculosis, and was not playing in his prime.

Canham was bandleader of the John Robinson Circus from 1868 until 1873 when he died riding in a band chariot that overturned.

Bibl.: Dudgeon, Ralph T. The Keyed Bugle (Second Edition) (Scarecrow Press).

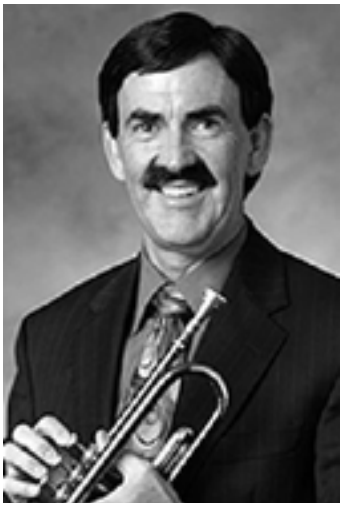
Cansler, Philip T. (b. Kansas City, Missouri, Nov. 3, 1953; d. Scappoose, Oregon, June 3, 2008). American trumpeter. Cansler graduated from Park Hill High School in Kansas City before earning a bachelor of music degree from Washburn University in Topeka, Kansas. During the summers, he played in a pit orchestra at the Worlds of Fun Amusement Park in Kansas City. He earned master and doctor of music degrees at the University of Oregon.

Cansler's teaching career began at Buena Vista College in Iowa (two years). In 1980, he began his twenty-eight years at the University of Portland where he served as trumpet teacher and director of the concert and pep bands. He is well remembered for his humorous antics while directing the pep band during basketball games (wearing purple wigs, Indiana Jones hats, Mohawk haircuts, etc.). He is also known as the composer of the University of Portland Victory March, the school fight song. His many students affectionately referred to him as "Dr. C."



Cansler published over fifty music articles plus the text, Twentieth-Century Music for Trumpet and Organ (Brass Press/BIM), an offshoot of his doctoral dissertation. He also released four CDs of music for trumpet and organ.

Cansler and Annette (McCoy) Cansler were married in November of 2007, but tragically, he was soon afterwards diagnosed with a "GBM" brain tumor, and died at the age of fifty-four.

Bibl.: "Philip T. Cansler, Popular Music Professor Dies" (www.salem-news.com/articles/june042008/cansler_passes_6-4-08.php); "Philip Cansler Remembered" (www.spotlightnews.net/news/story.php?story_id=121251790433279100).

Cap, Etienne (b. Burcht/Antwerp, Belgium, Jan. 26, 1942). Belgian trumpeter. Cap began studying with his brother Jean, and then studied with Emile Maes (also the teacher of Théo Mertens) at the conservatory in Antwerp from 1955 to 1961. He also studied with Théo Mertens.

At age eighteen, Cap began playing with the Swinging 16 rehearsal big band, and later performed with Paul Anka and Charles Aznavour. In 1964, he was with the Belgian Radio and Television Orchestra, and backed celebrity artists such as Josephine Baker (1971), Tom Jones, Burt Bacharach, The Supremes, Louis Armstrong, Zarah Leander, Gilbert Bécaud, Sacha Distel, and Maurice Chevalier.

Cap played the Marlene Dietrich show, Tivoli, in Copenhagen in 1967. During much of the 1970s, he played in the big bands of Max Greger and Hugo Strasser (1977-92), and with James Last. Two of his albums are Trumpet Trip (Studio One) and Etienne Cap and His Orchestra (Intersound). He is also an accomplished composer and arranger.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Capodiferro, Pietro ("Pet") (b. Italy, 1882; d. New York, New York, 1953). American cornetist. Capodiferro (translated means literally "iron head") probably came from central or southeast Italy. He immigrated to New York in 1898 at the age of sixteen, and began working as a cornet soloist with Dante's Concert Band. In 1904, he was a member of the Waldorf Hotel Orchestra, and joined the New York Symphony Orchestra for one season (1905-06). Subsequent engagements included the Manhattan Grand Opera Company (1906-10), Chicago-Philadelphia Grand Opera (1910-12), Metropolitan Opera Orchestra as principal trumpet (1912-19) although he was ill during the 1918-19 season when he was replaced by Frank Chiaffarelli, N. Franko Orchestra (part-time, 1918), New Symphony Orchestra (1919-20), Capitol Theater Orchestra (1920-27) and again, the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra (1943-44). Capodiferro's recordings display a flamboyant style, staccato technique, and a fast vibrato. He recorded with Dante's Concert Band, as well as under his own name in 1920, and on various labels such as Starr-Gennett, Edison, and Paramount.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. "European Cornet and Trumpet Soloists" (Notes to CD recording published by the International Trumpet Guild, 2004); "Principals of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra" (www.stokowski.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Capouillez, Luc (b. Lessines, Belgium, June 7, 1948). Belgian trumpeter. Capouillez began his trumpet studies with Henri Erlich, and then attended the Royal Conservatory in Brussels where he studied with Julien Vannetelbosch, and with Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory in 1969. Much of his career was as a member of the Orchestre de Liège, Grande Orchestre Symphonique de la R.T.B.-B.R.T. in Brussels, Camerata del Monte, Trio Adolphe Sax, Villach Band (2009), and as leader of the Luc Capouillez Brass Ensemble that has recorded several record albums. He was also featured in the trumpet solo on the soundtrack for the film, Farinelli (1994). Capouillez is well known as a professor at the Royal Conservatory in Liège, and at the Music Academies of Auderghem and Waterloo.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cappozzo, Jean-Luc (b. Belfort, France, Apr. 22, 1954). French trumpeter and flugelhornist. Cappozzo began playing trumpet at age fourteen. From 1974 to 1981, he was a soloist in a military band in Dijon. He then studied with Denis Sindt at a music school in Chalon-sur-Saône.

A highly versatile player in classical and jazz styles, Cappozzo taught classical trumpet at a music school in Roanne, played in an orchestra in Marcigny, and a big band in Roanne (1981-91). In 1985, he also became a professor of jazz at a music school in Lyons. He has been a member of Les Emboutisseurs, La Marmite Infernale, Apollo trio, and the Global Unity Orchestra (since 2005). He is also a member of the Hexagone brass sextet that includes trumpeter Pierre Dutot.

A prolific artist in bebop and free jazz, Cappozzo has released numerous CDs including Blown to the Side (Transfigured Night), Sophisticated Ladies (AJM), Suspension (Creative Source), Apollo: Cap Unpublished (ARFI), The Kettle Infernale (ARFI), Louis Sclavis/Confrontation 5tet (ECM), Sophia Domanich/Pentacle (Sketch), Gross Air (INNA), Spirit Joy (Quark), Live Instants Chavirés (Kadima Collection), Passing the Torch (Ruby Flower), Reefs (AJM), Global Unity (Intakt), Law Years (Soul Note), Apollo/Goodbye Girls (ARFI), Trium (Caligola), and Pentacle/Triana Moods (Crystal). He has appeared with various groups at numerous European jazz festivals.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Carder, Jason Randall (b. Chicago, Illinois, Sept. 27, 1967). American trumpeter. Carder's father Bryan James was a dermatologist, and his mother Nancy Lee was an English professor and grade school principal. He grew up in Arizona, and attended Catalina High School in Tucson from 1982 to 1984, but graduated from the Interlochen Arts Academy in 1985 under John Lindenau. In Arizona, he studied with Glen Bowling, James Benitez, and Stephen Steele. He was selected to perform in the McDonald's All-American Jazz Band, and subsequently received the Maynard Ferguson Award.

Carder studied at the University of Miami with Gilbert Johnson and Whit Sidener from 1986 to 1989, before joining Woody Herman's band (1989-90). He toured with Ray Charles from 1990 to 1991, and worked in Latin bands and freelanced in Brooklyn, New York, from 1992 to 1993. He was a member of the Maynard Ferguson band in 1993, and that same year returned to the University of Miami (1993-96) to complete his bachelor of music degree in studio music. After that, he was active in the Miami studio scene, and played with Carlos Oliva and the Sobrinos Del Juez. He again returned to the University of Miami for graduate work in 2003, completing his master of music degree in 2004. During this time, he was a member of the Jaco Pastorius Big Band (2003-06). In 2007, he toured and recorded with Maria Schneider's big band, but since 2008, Carder has been performing in Yanni's orchestra. He is also pursuing a doctorate in music at the University of Arizona.

Jason Carder has been an adjunct faculty member at the Mannes School of Music in New York (preparatory division) and at Florida International University. He has played lead trumpet with The Phoenix Symphony Pops Orchestra, Tucson Symphony Pops Orchestra, and has been a featured soloist for Peter Nero and other top artists. As a studio musician, he has recorded soundtracks for films such as There's Something About Mary, Dirty Dancing: Havana Nights, 54, and Bailando por Un Sueño. He has also released the solo CD, Coming Home, for the New Vintage Recordings label. His hobbies are dart throwing, cooking, and collecting early American coins. Jason is married to Connie Whitney-Carder, his high school sweetheart. She is a paralegal and has a son named Zachary Whitney (b. 1995).

Bibl.: Jason Carder's official website: www.jasoncarder.com; "Jason Carder" (www.trumpetplayerprofiles.com); personal interview, July 20, 2010.

Cardoso, Wilfredo (b. c1930). Argentine trumpeter. Cardoso undertook advanced orchestral study in Boston with Roger Voisin. From 1959 to 1965, he was principal trumpet of the SODRE Symphony Orchestra in Montévidéo. He founded the Uruguayan Brass Quintet, played in the Orquesta Estable del Teatro Colón, and became principal of the Orquesta Filarmonica de Buenos Aires in 1975. He was a professor at the Montévidéo Conservatory from 1959 to 1965, and the Buenos Aires Conservatory during his years in the Filarmonica.

Cardoso authored three trumpet texts: High Trumpets, Ascending Trumpets, and How to Play Trumpet in a Symphony Orchestra, all self-published. He was a featured artist at the 1980 International Trumpet Guild Conference. Cardoso played an unusually large mouthpiece that had a cup size approximately that of an alto trumpet mouthpiece. Nonetheless, he possessed a virtuosic ability, with a strong upper register, large orchestral tone, and incredible endurance.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Cardwell, William ("Bill") T. Jr. (b. Douglas, Arizona, May 27, 1917; d. Alhambra, California, May 17, 2012). American designer. Cardwell was born to William T. and Lillian Cardwell, and moved with them from Arizona to Long Beach, California, where he graduated from Long Beach Polytechnic High School. In 1939, he earned a master's degree in chemical engineering from the California Institute of Technology and immediately began working as a chemical engineer and research scientist for Standard Oil of California (later to become Chevron Corporation). His intense interest in the trumpet led to a great deal of acoustic research and designs for which he obtained a patent in 1966.

Cardwell presented papers to the Acoustical Society of America, and was a lecturer at conferences of the International Trumpet Guild. He was a design consultant to several trumpet makers, most notably Clifford Blackburn.

Cardwell retired from Chevron in 1981, but continued his research with trumpets for the remainder of his life. He and his wife Betty Elaine Cardwell enjoyed traveling and photography.

Bibl.: "In Memory of William T. Cardwell Jr." (http://obits.dignitymemorial.com).

Carey, Thomas ("Mutt" "Papa Mutt") (b. Hahnville, Louisiana, 1891; d. Elsinore, California, Sept. 3, 1948). American trumpeter. Carey was the youngest of seventeen children born into a musical family. From an early age, he began playing drums, guitar, and alto horn, but switched to trumpet at the age of twenty-two. After playing trumpet for only one year, he joined trombonist Kid Ory's band (1914). Their names would forever be linked together.

In New Orleans, Carey worked with Ory, his brother Jack Carey's Crescent City Brass Band, Frankie Dusen, King Oliver, Jimmy Brown, Bebe Ridgely, the Eagle Brass Band, Tuxedo Brass Band, and the Superior Brass Band. Carey's soft and sweet tone earned him the nickname, "Blues King of New Orleans."

In 1917, Carey toured with a vaudeville show, playing in a quartet called Mack's Merry-makers. After playing in Chicago, he stayed to play with Lawrence Duhé's band. However, the cold Chicago winter triggered his return to New Orleans. After another year or so in New Orleans, Carey moved to California to join Kid Ory's band that had previously moved there. In 1922, the band changed its name to Spike's Seven Pods of Pepper Orchestra. They are considered the first Black musicians from New Orleans to record for a commercial label.

Carey left Ory's band in 1925 to join King Oliver's band in Chicago. Carey took over Oliver's smaller band, which he expanded and renamed the Liberty Syncopators (later called the Jeffersonians). The group worked in silent film studios for years, playing atmosphere music on the set. However, the Great Depression during the early 1930s and the introduction of sound movies left the group with little work. Carey was forced to take various day jobs, among them train porter and mailman, until returning to fulltime music making in 1944 when Kid Ory assembled a new band to play for episodes of Orson Wells's radio show. Ory's new group became very popular, soon performing regular concerts and making commercial recordings.

Carey moved to the San Francisco area during the summer of 1947. He formed a new band, but died a few months later from a heart attack at the approximate age of fifty-seven. He was known to play in a style so similar to that of King Oliver that they were hard to tell apart. Many of Carey's early 78-rpm recordings have been reissued on CD, and include Mutt Carey and Lee Collins (American Music), Kid Ory's Creole Jazz Band (Good Time Jazz), Giants of Traditional Jazz (Savoy), and The Great New Orleans Trombonist [Ory] (Columbia). Ory and Carey also appear in the 1947 film, Louis Armstrong in New Orleans, as well as two 1928 films titled Legion of the Command and The Road to Ruin.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Mutt Carey" (www.answers.com).

Carisi, John ("Johnny") Edward. (b. Hasbrouck Heights, New Jersey, Feb. 23, 1922; d. New York, Oct. 3, 1992). American trumpeter and composer. Carisi was mostly self-taught on the trumpet. He played in some obscure bands between 1938 and 1943, as well as with Babe Russin (1940) in New York. During World War II, he served in Glenn Miller's Army Air Force Band. After leaving the service, he freelanced and played with the Claude Thornhill Orchestra (1949-50).

Carisi was a fine arranger who wrote charts for several jazz orchestras including those of Ray McKinley, Charlie Barnet, Claude

Thornhill, and Max Roach. He also arranged music for television and radio. He was an important composer who wrote several jazz tunes such as Israel, Lesterian Mode, and Springville. He studied classical composition with Stefan Wolpe from 1948 to 1950, and received a Guggenheim Fellowship to further his study. He taught composition at the Manhattan School of Music and at Queens College during the 1970s. Carisi recorded with Gil Evans (1957) and the RCA Victor Jazz Workshop, and played with Brew Moore (1969-70) and Loren Schoenberg.

Johnny Carisi was known for his beautiful tone and easy style of playing. His jazz solos were always very well thought out and harmonically rich, his style having been influenced by Miles Davis. He loved to play in the Dixieland band that performed during the home games of the New York Yankees baseball team.

Although Carisi died of heart failure immediately following open-heart surgery, he hadn't stopped playing until two days prior to the operation. He was seventy years old and was survived by his wife Gemze, and sons Peter and Jonathan.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Watrous, Peter. "Johnny Carisi, 70, A Jazz Trumpeter and Composer" (The New York Times, Oct. 10, 1992); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Carlsen, Douglas C. (b. Blair, Nebraska, May 19, 1969). American trumpeter. Carlsen grew up in Nebraska and studied music with his parents. He later took trumpet lessons from Steven Erickson and Craig Bircher. After graduating from Blair High School, he attended Arizona State University where he studied with David Hickman and Anthony Plog from 1988 to 1992. During the summer of 1990, he attended the Banff Center of the Arts in Canada where he recorded Vivaldi's Concerto in C for Two Trumpets with Hickman and the Banff Camerata (Summit Records).

Carlsen won a position as second trumpet with the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra in 1992, and was promoted to principal in 1997. During the summers of 1995 to 1999, he performed at the Breckenridge Music Institute in Colorado. He joined the Minnesota Orchestra as acting associate principal trumpet in 1999, and won the permanent position in the following year. He has also performed with The Phoenix Symphony, Tucson Symphony Orchestra, Santa Fe Symphony, Banff Opera Orchestra, National Repertory Orchestra, and Summit Brass.

Doug is married to Naoko Kawamura Carlsen. He enjoys golf, travel, gardening, poker, reading, and walking his dogs.

Bibl.: Greig, Murray. "The Minnesota Orchestra Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2006); Minnesota Orchestra website (www.minnesotaorchestra.com); personal interview, Mar. 17, 2010.

Carlson, Stephen (b. Duluth, Minnesota, June 14, 1948). American trumpeter. Carlson began playing cornet at age twelve and graduated from East High School in Duluth, Minnesota, in 1966. In 1970, he received his bachelor of science in music education degree from the University of Minnesota where he studied with James Murphy and Richard Carlson. He earned a master of music degree at the University of Michigan in 1971, studying with Clifford Lillya. His doctor of musical arts degree is from the Catholic University of America (1981) where his teachers were Lloyd Geisler and Adel Sanchez. He also studied with Vincent Cichowicz, Armando Ghitalla, Frank Kaderabek, Stephen Chenette, and Irving Sarin.

Carlson began his career as a professor at the University of Missouri-Kansas City (1973-75). He then joined the faculty at Norfolk State University where he taught from 1975 to 2004. He was principal trumpet of the Virginia Symphony and Pops from 1975 to 2002, and has been associate principal/third since 2002. He has also been a member of the Virginia Opera Orchestra since 1975, and performs with the Virginia Brass Quintet. Carlson has served as an adjunct professor at the College of William and Mary, University of Michigan, Virginia Wesleyan College, Mid-America Nazarene College, Old Dominion University, and is on the faculty of Young Musicians of Virginia.

Carlson and Patti Ferrell (principal clarinet of the Virginia Symphony, Virginia Opera, and an adjunct professor at the College of William and Mary, Christopher Newport University, and Old Dominion University) have been married since 1973, and have two daughters, Kirsten (b. 1974) and Maren (b. 1977), both married. His hobbies include water sports and snow skiing.

Bibl.: "Stephen Carlson" (http://al.odu.edu/music/directory/scarlson.shtml); personal interview, May 10, 2011.

Carnovale, Norbert August (b. Biloxi, Mississippi, July 20, 1932; d. Hattiesburg, Mississippi, Jan. 6, 2000). American trumpeter. Carnovale earned a bachelor of music degree from Louisiana State University where he studied with Leon Rapier. He also earned a master of music degree from the Teachers College of Columbia University in New York, and a doctor of music degree from the University of Iowa. His dissertation on an annotated bibliography of repertoire for trumpet and orchestra led to the publication of a condensed book by The Brass Press in 1975.

Carnovale studied with John A. Beer, Harry Glantz, Paul Abel, William Vacchiano, Nathan Prager, and Charles Colin. He also took lessons from Lennie Tristano. He played in jazz groups led by Al Belletto in New Orleans, and Hal McIntyre and Claude Thornhill. He also played with the Tri-Cities Symphony, Iowa Symphony and Brass Quintet, Gulf Coast Symphony (1973), and Southern Mississippi Faculty Brass Quintet.

Carnovale was on the music faculty at the University of Southern Mississippi from 1962 through 1999, where he taught trumpet and jazz band, and served as chair of the department for five years. He was the first Music Reviews Editor of the International Trumpet Guild Journal (1977-81), and published two books through Greenwood Press: Gunther Schuller: A Bio-Bibliography (1987), and George Gershwin: A Bio-Bibliography (2000). He died at the age of sixty-seven.

Bibl.: "Norbert A. Carnovale (1932-2000)" (News Item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2000); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Carr, Ian [Henry Randall] (b. Dumfries, Scotland, Apr. 21, 1933; d. London, England, Feb. 25, 2009). Scottish trumpeter and author. Carr was raised in Newcastle-upon-Tyne, England. He studied the piano for a short while, but when he was seventeen, his older brother Mike bought him a used cornet. Ian taught himself to play both cornet and trumpet. He attended Kings College at Durham University from 1952 to 1958, where he studied English literature. After graduating, he joined the British Army, working his way up to the rank of lieutenant in the Royal Northumberland Fusiliers. After discharge, Carr travelled throughout Europe, playing trumpet with several jazz bands. After two years of travel, he returned to England in 1960, intent on becoming a fulltime musician.

Carr developed a dual career as a trumpet player and writer for various jazz journals. He played with the Emcee Five (1960-62), co-led a quintet with Don Rendell (1962-69), led his own quartet in 1965, and performed with Neil Ardley, Joe Harriott, and Don Byas (tour of Portugal in 1968). He led the Animals Big Band (1965) and formed his own award-winning fusion group, Nucleus, in 1969. Nucleus recorded twelve albums and performed at numerous jazz festivals during the 1970s and '80s. In addition, Carr was a member of the United Jazz and Rock Ensemble (starting in 1975), and worked with Harry South, John Stevens, Trevor Watts, Mike Westbrook, John McLaughlin, Leon Thomas (in Montreux), UER Big Band (dir. Jerry van Rooyen, 1969), Stan Tracey, Bob Downes, Michael Garrick, New Jazz Orchestra, Mike Gibbs, Hamburg Radio Orchestra, and George Russell (1989-93), led his own small groups, and was also a studio player in London.

Among Carr's record albums are Belladonna (BGO), Solar Plexus (Vertigo), In Flagranti Delicto (Capitol), Out of the Long Dark (Capitol), Awakening (Mood), Old Heartland (MMC), Roots (BGO), Elastic Rock (BGO), Under the Sun (BGO), Snakehips Etcetera (BGO), Alleycat (BGO), Direct Hits (BGO), The Pretty Redhead (Hux), and Live in Bremen (Cuneiform). As an author, Carr wrote a regular column for BBC Music Magazine and contributed to the books Jazz: The Essential Companion and Jazz: the Rough Guide. He also wrote several significant biographies on famous jazz musicians, including trumpeter Miles Davis.

In 1982, Ian Carr taught at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London. In the following year, he was diagnosed with colon cancer. Following successful surgeries, Carr was able to return to playing trumpet and flugelhorn. He won the 2006 BBC Jazz Award for his service to jazz.

Late in life, Carr suffered from dementia (starting in 2005). He died on February 25, 2009 after complications from pneumonia and a series of mini-strokes. He was seventy-five. Carr had been married, but his first wife died during the birth of his daughter Selina. His second wife, Sandy Major, divorced him shortly before his death.

Bibl.: Weber, Bruce. "Ian Carr, Jazz Trumpeter and Author, Dies at 75" (New York Times, Mar. 11, 2009); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ian Carr: trumpeter, bandleader, writer and broadcaster" (The Times, Feb. 27, 2009); "Ian Carr" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Carroll, Baikida [E. J.] (b. St. Louis, Missouri, Jan. 15, 1947). American trumpeter and composer. Carroll's father was saxophonist Jimmy Harris. As a child, Carroll studied trumpet and theory with his high school band director, Vernon Nashville. He played with Albert King and Fontella Bass, and joined the Army in 1965, studying at the Armed Forces School of Music. He was then assigned to the 3rd Infantry Division USAREUR band.

After completing his military service, Carroll played with Little Milton, and Sam and Dave, before returning to Saint Louis where he directed the Black Artists Group (BAG) from 1969. During the summers of 1968-72, he attended jazz seminars at Washington University with guest artists Thad Jones, Mel Lewis, Ron Carter, Phil

Woods, and Roland Hanna. In 1972, Carroll formed his own group that toured Paris. He also played with Daniel Humair (1972) and Ambrose Jackson. Subsequently, he was hired to teach at the American Center for Students and Artists (1973), and in 1974 was invited by the City of Paris to become a resident artist at the Cité Internationale des Arts.

Carroll recorded his first album as leader in 1975, Orange Fish Tears (Palm). He returned to New York City in June of 1975 to teach composition at Queens College. He worked in San Francisco from late 1975 to 1978, then returned to New York where he formed his own group called Ring. In late 1978, he moved to Woodstock, New York, to teach at Creative Music Studio. He worked there until the studio closed in 1984. He played with Muhal Richard Abrams (in Nîmes, 1981) and David Murray (1984-85).

Baikida Carroll became a prominent composer in New York during the mid 1980s. He composed for film, theater, dance, and concerts, and won awards, grants, and commissions from numerous arts organizations including the National Endowment for the Arts, Meet the Composer, Musicians' Foundation, and the Duke Ellington Established Composers Award. Among his many compositions are the Tony-nominated Broadway show score, Having Your Say, and The Mighty Gents, Eugene Sheen, Poem for a Revolutionary Night, and Miss Julie.

Carroll was stricken with Bell's palsy in 1987, a condition that left him unable to play the trumpet for a year. It took an additional two years for him to recover, but he eventually began to record and perform at full capacity. His later CDs include Door of the Cage (Soul Note), The Spoken Word (HatHUT) and Marionettes on a High Wire (Omni Tone). Carroll has also recorded with Oliver Lake (1971, 1980-81), Michael Gregory Jackson, Muhal Richard Abrams (1980-83), Julius Hemphill, David Murray, Jack DeJohnette, Sam Rivers's big band, Don Cherry, and many others.

Baikida Carroll is known for his warm and dark trumpet tone. He ranks among America's finest composers, and has served on numerous composition and arts panels.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Baikida Carroll's official website: www.baikida.com.

Carroll, Edward (b. Chicago, Illinois, Dec. 10, 1953). American trumpeter. Carroll grew up in Chicago. He took lessons from Renold Schilke and Vincent Cichowicz, and while in high school, attended the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan where he studied with John Lindenau. Carroll received his bachelor and master of music degrees in New York at The Juilliard School, studying with Gerard Schwarz. After graduating at age twenty-one, he accepted his first professional position as associate principal trumpet of the Houston Symphony Orchestra. Carroll's orchestral career also includes being principal of the San Diego Symphony and the Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestra.

Carroll performed with and directed the New York Trumpet Ensemble (1979-88). He also developed an outstanding solo career, and released numerous albums such as The Trumpet Resounding (Vox; MHS), Art of the Trumpet (Vox), The Italian Trumpet (VoxBox), Master-pieces for Trumpet (Vox), Sound the Trumpet (Sony/Newport Classic), For Their Majesties' Pleasure and Delight (Sony), Mr. Handel of Brook Street (Sony/Newport Classic), Heldenmusik (Intrada/MHS), Telemann's Chamber Music for Trumpet (Helicon), and Italian Baroque (Erasmus). He has been a frequent guest of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, and has been a soloist with the London Sinfonietta, Speculum Musicae, Music Today, I Musici de Montreal, Orpheus, the Bach Aria Group, the Handel and Haydn Society (Boston), and many other ensembles.

As an educator, Carroll has taught at the Rotterdam Conservatory (1987-98), London Royal Academy (1997-2000), California State Summer School of the Arts (2006-08), California Institute of the Arts (CalArts, since 2001), Dartmouth College, and McGill University. He is also the director of the Center for Advanced Studies at Chosen Vale in New Hampshire, and was music director at the Lake Placid Institute for the Arts and Humanities (1996-2003).

Carroll has appeared as a guest conductor many times, and has toured the world as a performer and teacher. He has served as a judge at several national and international solo and chamber music competitions, and has commissioned and premiered numerous new works for trumpet. He is the editor of Gustav Mahler: The Complete Trumpet Parts, published by Universal Edition, Vienna.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Edward Carroll" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Edward Carroll's official website: http://edwardcarroll.com.

Carroll, John (b. Ottawa, Illinois, Mar. 10, 1954). American trumpeter. While growing up in his home town, Carroll began playing the trumpet at age ten, studying with his father, Ward Carroll Jr. During middle school and high school, John's teachers included Austyn R. Edwards, Ray Makeever, and Ronald Modell. He attended Indiana University from 1972 to 1976, earning a bachelor's degree and a performer's certificate, studying with Louis Davidson and Charles Gorham. He also studied with Thomas Stevens at the Music Academy of the West, and attended the Tanglewood Institute during the summers of 1975 and 1976. He then enrolled at the New England Conservatory where he studied with Armando Ghitalla, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. While in Boston, he occasionally performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and Boston Pops, and was third/assistant principal of the Springfield Symphony Orchestra and principal of the Boston Opera orchestra.

Carroll was fourth/utility trumpet of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra from 1977 until the fall of 1979 when he assumed duties as principal of the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra. In addition to his duties with the orchestra, Carroll has taught at St. Mary's University since 1989, and Our Lady of the Lake University since 1996. He is founder and conductor of the brass ensembles at both schools, and is director of the jazz band at OLLU. In addition, since 2008 he has been the conductor of the Providence Community Wind Ensemble, and is a founding member and CEO of the San Antonio Brass.

Carroll has performed as principal of the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, the Sunriver Music Festival Orchestra, and the Cactus Pear Music Festival. Besides being a composer, he has collected over three thousand musical instruments, including nearly one hundred cornets and several hundred trumpets.

In 2007, Carroll earned a master's degree in conducting at the University of Texas-San Antonio, and in 2008 completed a DMA at the University of Texas in Austin, studying with Raymond Sasaki.

Bibl.: "John Carroll" (www.sabrass.org/artist.php?view=bio&bid=513); "John Carroll" (www.sasymphony.org/m_bios.php?featuredID=43); personal interview, Jan. 7, 2011.

Carson, Ernie (b. Portland, Oregon, Dec. 4, 1937; d. Portland, Oregon, Jan. 9, 2012). American cornetist. Carson began playing cornet as a boy, and was soon playing in local theater bands. He joined the Castle Jazz Band in 1954, and played for two years before enlisting in the US Marines (1956-58). After his discharge, he moved to Los Angeles, and worked as a freelancer. He was strongly influenced by cornetist Wild Bill Davison.

Carson became a member of Turk Murphy's band (1961-62) and also led his own groups. He formed the Capitol City Jazz Band in 1972, and reformed the Castle Jazz Band in 1992. He also played with Terry Waldo (1972), Bob Greene, Herb Hall, Kenny Davern (1973-75), and Nick Fatool (1987). Although he lived in Atlanta, Georgia, from 1972-95, he now resides and works in Oregon where he performs at numerous classic jazz festivals and records for small labels. He is also a pianist and singer.

Carson's albums include Old Bones (Stomp Off), Wher'm I Gonna Live (Stomp Off), Southern Comfort (GHB), Every Man a King (GHB), Pink Elephants (GHB), Christmas with the Castle (GHB), One Beer (GHB), and Pretty Little Lady from Beaumont, Texas. As a sideman, he recorded with Tony Parenti (1971), St. Peter Street Strutters, and Rick Fay. He is considered to be one of the finest living traditional jazz cornetists.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Caruso, Carmine (b. Nov. 2, 1904; d. May 26, 1987). American teacher. Caruso learned music at a very early age from his father, Paul. By the age of four, Carmine demonstrated perfect pitch and was considered to be a prodigy on the piano. Caruso gave up the piano at the age of eight and began playing the violin. When he was seventeen, he wanted to play big band music, so he switched to saxophone and soon began playing in ballrooms and shows with Vincent Lopez, Emil Coleman, Lester Lanin, Meyer Davis, and Russ Morgan (1941).

Caruso became a full-time teacher starting in 1941. His first students were saxophone players, but his method of playing and his keen ability to teach the mental aspects of performance, soon brought on students of all instruments, including trumpet. His "long-setting" method became extremely popular among trumpet players, and he quickly became a leading trumpet teacher in New York. When Ray Copeland completely lost his ability to play the trumpet, it was Caruso who helped him recover over an eighteen-month period. Other trumpet students included Al Porcino, Bob Findley, Donald Benedetti, Pat Harbison, Charly Raymond, Roger Ingram, Dennis Schneider, Mike Vax, and Herb Alpert. He also taught for a while at New York University.

Caruso and his student Laurie Frink were married a few years before he passed away at the age of eighty-three. After his death, Frink helped establish the Carmine Caruso International Jazz Trumpet Competition, hosted annually by the International Trumpet Guild and funded through the Herb Alpert Foundation. His method book, Musical Calisthenics for Brass, is published by Almo Publications.

Bibl.: Harrison, Bill. "The Great Caruso" (included in Caruso's Musical Calisthenics for Brass, Almo Pub., 1979); "Carmine Caruso," OJ's Page (http://abel.hive.no); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Casas [Acosta], Juan (b. Santiago, Cuba, Nov. 6, 1954). Cuban trumpeter. Casas began playing the trumpet at age nine under the guidance of his grandfather. He later attended the Conservatorio Esteban Salas de Santiago, and at age sixteen became principal trumpet of the Orquesta Ilamada. In 1972, he joined the Mario Peterson Orchestra, and from 1977 to 1983 played in the Orquesta Santiago.

Since 1983, Casas has performed with various groups in Europe, Central America, and South America, including La Estrellas de San Antonio, and with artists such as Panteón Rococó, Nana Pancha, Eliades Ochoa, Ricardo Arjona, Gibbarto Santa Rosa, Roberto Roena, and many others. Casas currently resides in Mexico City, Mexico, where he is an active jazz musician.

Bibl.: "Juan Casas" (program booklet for the Third International Trumpet Festival "Rafael Méndez"); personal interview, Nov. 18, 2010).

Cascapera, Sérgio (b. Brazil, c1969). Brazilian trumpeter. Cascapera began studying trumpet with his father, professor Decio Cascapera. Sérgio performed with the Municipal Symphonic Orchestra of São Paulo (1978-80), and played with the State Symphony Orchestra of São Paulo (1980-97). He earned a bachelor of music degree at the Mozarteum University of São Paulo (1987-89), a master's degree at the University of São Paulo (1990-92), and a doctorate of arts degree at the University of São Paulo (1994-97). He has taught at the University of São Paulo since 1989, and has published dozens of books and articles about trumpet playing. His beginning trumpet method books are published by Ricordi, and his instructional DVD on trumpet was the first of its kind in Brazil.

Bibl.: "Trompetistas do Ceará: Sérgio Cascapera" (http://trompetistasceara.blogspot.com/2009_07_18_archive.html); "Sérgio Cascapera" (pt.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sérgio_Cascapera).

Cassone, Gabriele (b. Udine, Italy, Sept. 6, 1959). Italian trumpeter. Cassone studied trumpet with Mario Catena and composition with Luciano Chailly. He also took lessons from Adolf Scherbaum (1984) and Armando Ghitalla (1984, 1985). After receiving his diploma in music, he immediately embarked on an international solo career, and has been made famous by his extraordinary ability to play every type of trumpet and cornet, including natural (valveless) trumpet, keyed trumpet, cornet-à-pistons, flugelhorn, and modern trumpets. He has formed a trumpet and organ duo with Antonio Frigé that has toured the world and released several recordings. He has recorded over twenty CDs including Ancient Music (Nuova Era), Telemann Tafelmusik and Trumpet Concertos (Giulia), Brandenburg Concertos (Teldec), Bach Cantatas Nos. 128 and 172 (DGG), La Tromba in San Petronio (Nuova Era), Sonatas for Trumpet and Organ (Nuova Era), and Haydn & Hummel Concertos per tromba (Amadeus). He can also be seen in video playing Verdi's Adagio para tromba en Re, Ponchielli's Concerto, variation & final, and Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto (2006, I Barocchisti, dir. Diego Fasoli).

Cassone is renowned for his interpretations of contemporary music, and was selected by composer Luciano Berio to premiere Sequenza X for unaccompanied trumpet. Cassone was also asked by Berio to premiere and record KOL-OD for trumpet and ensemble with L'Ensemble Intercontemporam, conducted by Pierre Boulez. Cassone's recordings of modern music include All the Sequenzas for Solo Instruments (DGG) and KOL OD (Col Legno).

Cassone is a professor at the Conservatory of Novara in Italy, and a former guest lecturer at the Academy of St. Cecilia in Rome. He has served as a jury member at several international trumpet solo competitions, and has presented concerts and master classes throughout the world. In 2009, he published the monumental book, The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editore), translated into English by Tom Dambly.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Gabriele Cassone's official website: www.gabrielecassone.it.

Castle, Lee [Castaldo, Aniello] (b. Bronx, New York, Feb. 28, 1915; d. Hollywood, Florida, Nov. 16, 1990). American trumpeter. Aniello Castaldo learned to play the drums as a boy but switched to trumpet at the age of fifteen after being inspired by a Louis Armstrong recording. By the age of eighteen, he turned professional, performing in the bands of Paul Tremaine, Paul Martell, and others. At age twenty, he joined Joe Haymes's band and made his recording debut. He changed his name to Lee Castaldo in the mid 1930s, and during the next several years played with Artie Shaw (1936), Red Norvo, Glenn Miller (1939), Jack Teagarden, Artie Shaw (again in 1941), Will Bradley (1941), and Benny Goodman (1943). He became a close friend of Tommy Dorsey in 1937, and took lessons from Dorsey's father, a fine music teacher.

In 1939, Castle recorded with Glenn Hardman's Hammond Five. In 1940, he started his own big band, but it was not successful. He attempted to make a go with his own band two more times during the next few years, but it was not to be. He worked as a studio player for a while before joining Artie Shaw's band for a third time in 1950. His tone was sweet like Harry James's sound, but his style had a drive similar to that of Louis Armstrong and Bunny Berigan.

Castle joined Tommy Dorsey's band in 1953. A short time later, Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey decided to pool their bands together, making Castle the band's musical director and occasional trumpet soloist. The band performed music for several of the Jackie Gleason television shows in 1955. After both of the Dorsey brothers died, the band was divided into two ghost bands. Starting in 1956, the new Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra was led by Lee Castle.

Although Castle was a talented trumpet soloist who could play swing, bebop, and Dixieland quite well, he seemed to be content simply fronting the band. He successfully led the band for thirty-three years, longer than either Dorsey brother had led his own band. He died of a heart attack on November 16, 1990 at the age of seventy-five. He was survived by his wife Virginia, two sisters, and three brothers. Some of his best record albums are Dixieland Heaven (Jay-Dee 4), The Lee Castle Jazztette (Jay-Dee 4), Sentimental Swinging (Columbia), The Immortal Miff Mole (Jazzology), plus many for the Epic label. His featured solo tunes were Sugar Foot Stomp, I Never Knew, Basin Street Boogie, and So Rare.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Caston, Saul (Sol) [Solomon Gusikoff Cohen] (b. New York, Aug. 22, 1901; d. Winston-Salem, North Carolina, July 28, 1970). American trumpeter and conductor. Caston began playing the trumpet under the direction of his uncle, Irwin Caston. By age eleven, Saul was studying with the famous Max Schlossberg at the Curtis Institute of Music where he also took piano and composition lessons, and studied conducting with Abram Chasins and Fritz Reiner. In 1916, at age fifteen, Caston was a member of the Russian Symphony Orchestra in New York.

In 1918 at age seventeen, Caston joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as second trumpet next to Ernest S. Williams. When Williams left the orchestra in 1923, Caston was named principal trumpet, a position he held until 1945. Caston had four maternal (maiden name Gusikoff) relatives in the Philadelphia Orchestra: Benjamin Gusikoff (cello, 1920-56), Isadore Gusikoff (cello, 1921-39), Michael Gusikoff (concertmaster, 1926), and Charles Gusikoff (trombone, 1931-59). In 1932, Caston took part in an experimental stereo recording of Pictures at an Exhibition by Mussorgsky-Ravel with the Philadelphia Orchestra conducted by Leopold Stokowski.

Caston's conducting career began in 1936 when he became an associate conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski, and later under Eugene Ormandy while continuing as principal trumpet. He was also conductor of the Reading (Pennsylvania) Symphony Orchestra from 1942 to 1944. He remained with the Philadelphia Orchestra until 1945, when he left to become conductor of the Denver Symphony Orchestra where he became very successful. In 1951, Time magazine praised his civic leadership and work with the children of the community stating, Caston won Denver like a Pied Piper—by winning its youngsters. He held the conductorship in Denver through the 1963-64 season.

Caston was an excellent teacher, and taught trumpet at the Curtis Institute of Music from 1924 to 1942. Among his many well-known students are Stephen Chenette, Manuel Arujo, Lloyd Geisler, Samuel Krauss, and Seymour Rosenfeld.

As a trumpet player, Caston performed world premieres of several major orchestral works including Ameriques (1926) and Arcana (1927) by Varèse; and American premieres of Berg's Wozzeck (1931), Shostakovich's Symphony No. 1 (1934) and Piano Concerto No. 1 (1934), and Stravinsky's Song of the Nightingale (1923) and *Symphonies for Wind Instruments (*1923). He also performed an arrangement of the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach.

Bibl.: Clarke, Keith C. "The Beginning of a Legend: The Young Mr. Glantz and his Contemporaries" (New York Brass Conference for Scholarships, 1978); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Stoddard, Hope. Symphony Conductors of the USA (Crowell, 1957); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Saul Caston (on left) with Eugene Ormandy and Arturo Toscanini (on right) sitting behind (1940).

Cathcart, Charles Richard ("Dick") (b. Michigan City, Indiana, Nov. 6, 1924; d. Los Angeles, California, Nov. 8, 1993). American trumpeter. Despite being the son of a cornetist, Cathcart began his music studies on clarinet at the age of four, but switched to trumpet at age thirteen. His early professional days were spent with the bands of Ray McKinley and Alvino Rey (1942).

From 1943 to 1946, Cathcart served in the Army Air Force Radio Orchestra where he became friends with Jack Webb who was to become a well-known television and movie producer. Their relationship would play a big role in Cathcart's career. After the military, Cathcart played with Bob Crosby's swing band (1946) and also with the MGM studio orchestra (1946-50). He played Dixieland music with Ben Pollack (1949-50) and also joined Ray Noble's band for a while.

The association with Jack Webb led to Cathcart being asked to compose a theme song for the radio program Pete Kelly's Blues in 1952. Cathcart played trumpet on the series. In 1954, Webb produced a television series based on the program, but it was retitled Dragnet. Webb then produced a movie in 1955 called Pete Kelly's Blues in which Cathcart had the role of a cornetist. Cathcart also dubbed the trumpet solos performed onscreen by Jack Webb. Because of the fame Cathcart received from the radio, television, and movie based on the series, he started his own Dixieland band called Pete Kelly's Big Seven that recorded for RCA, Capitol, and Warner Brothers.

Dick Cathcart's greatest fame came from being a member of the Lawrence Welk Band from 1962 to 1968. He was often featured as trumpet soloist, particularly in Dixieland tunes, on many of the band's television programs. In his later years, Cathcart performed more free jazz, and also sang in the Curt Ramsey Quintet.

Cathcart's first marriage yielded three children, but ended in divorce. His second wife was Peggy Lennon of the Lennon Sisters. Together, they had six children. Cathcart died of cancer just two days after his sixty-ninth birthday.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Dick Cathcart" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ceccarini, Bob (b. St. Louis, Missouri, Sept. 28, 1942). American trumpeter. Ceccarini grew up in St. Louis. He began playing trumpet at age seven, and graduated from Normandy High School in 1960. Although mostly self-taught, he studied with Edward Brauer while in college at the St. Louis Institute of Music, and graduated from Webster College. He also had additional lessons with Claude Gordon, Carmine Caruso, and Don "Jake" Jacoby.

Ceccarini's first professional playing jobs were with Sammy Gardner, and the Mound City Six Dixieland Band. He began subbing with the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, eventually performing and recording with it many times during his career. From 1977 to 1978, he toured as lead trumpet with the Broadway musical, A Chorus Line, as well as the Wayne Newton Show, and performed with the St. Louis Brass Quintet from 1964 to 1981. He has been principal trumpet of the St. Louis Municipal Opera Orchestra since 1968, and has performed in over two hundred different Broadway shows. Cecarini has also taught at Washington University, the University of Missouri-St. Louis, Webster University, Missouri Baptist University, and Jefferson College. He was a founder, and has been a member of the River City Ramblers Dixieland Band since 1973, and serves as a musician's contractor for the Fox Theater Orchestra, the St. Louis Municipal Opera Orchestra, and the St. Louis Repertory Theater Orchestra.

Ceccarini and his wife, pianist and electronic keyboardist Diane Ceccarini, have been married since 1983. His children from a previous marriage are Angela (b. 1964) and Ron (b. 1966). His hobbies include collecting model trains, target shooting, and running.

Bibl.: "Bob Ceccarini" (www.dddnews.com/story/1616438.html); personal interview, Apr. 13, 2012.

Cecocho, Igor (b. Minsk, Belarus, Aug. 9, 1958). Belarusian trumpeter from the Polish [Grodno] region. Cecocho began lessons at the age of ten with Jozef Zlatkin, and graduated from the Belarus Academy of Music where he studied with N. Volkov. In 1972, he won first prize in the Belarus Competition for Young Wind Instrument Players. He also received a second prize in the international competition, "Daugavpils," in Latvia, around 1985.

Cecocho's orchestral positions include the National Radio Orchestra (1972-90), Minsk Bolshoi Theatre Symphony Orchestra (1979-90), and the Wroclaw Philharmonic (principal trumpet from 1992 to 2008). He also plays the natural (valveless) trumpet in the Baroque orchestra, Concerto Polacco. From 1986 to 1990, he was a lecturer at the Belarus Academy of Music, since 1990 has served as a professor at the Wroclaw Music Academy, and since 2006 at the Music Academy in Lodz. Cococho has released several classical CDs, including Monarca Della Tromba (DUC) and Panufmik: Homage to Polish Music (Naxos).

Cecocho and his wife Tatiana have two children, Alexy (b. 1992) and Anna (b. 1998). His hobby is collecting high-end audio equipment.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Igor Cococho's official website: www.cecocho.art.pl; personal interview, Nov. 3, 2011.

Cedillo [Rodríguez], Armando (b. Mexico City, Mexico, Oct. 16, 1966). Mexican trumpeter. Cedillo grew up in Mexico City. His parents are Sebastian Cedillo and Amanda Rodríguez, and his sisters are Magdalena, Angel, Xochitl, Amanda, and Santa Mariana.

At age twelve, Armando began taking trumpet lessons from his grandfather, Cruz Cedillo. His other teacher was Felipe Leon. He also learned to play several percussion instruments. After graduating from Miguel Lanz Duret High School in 1988, Cedillo studied music at the Escuela de Música Vida y Movimiento with Arturo Reyes (1981-88), and at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London with Paul Cosh (1988-92). He also took lessons from Ollin Yoliztli and master classes under Jaime Méndez.

As an orchestral player, Cedillo was principal trumpet of the University Philharmonic Orchestra in México City (1986) and the México Philharmonic Orchestra (1994-98). As one of México's leading soloists, Cedillo has recorded CDs that range from pop to classical music, including Surcando El Aire, Crossing the Wind, Una fantasia Musical con Beatles (vols. 1-2), and retro (all on the WOP Music label). He has toured with the famous Mexican musician, Luis Miguel, and is a member of Ensamble de Trompetas de México and Ensamble de Alientos de la Ciudad de México.

Cedillo is a professor at the Escuela de México Vida y Movimiento in México City where he teaches trumpet, wind ensemble, and big band. He is the founder and organizer of the annual Rafael Méndez International Trumpet Festival, a weeklong event that attracts hundreds of people each year. Some of his best-known students are Hugo Torres, Alejandro Olvera, and Raimundo Martínez.

Cedillo and his wife Frida Fernandez have been married since 1994, and have four children: Armando, Daniel, Christelle, and Sebastian.

Bibl.: "Armando Cedillo" (program booklet for the Third Annual International Trumpet Festival, "Rafael Méndez"); personal interview, Nov. 17, 2010.

Celestin, Oscar [Phillip] ("Papa") (b. Napoleonville, Louisiana, Jan. 1, 1884; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Dec. 15, 1954). American cornetist. One of the great jazz pioneers, Celestin began his music studies on guitar and mandolin, but soon switched first to trombone, then to cornet. He played valve trombone in church in Donaldsonville (1900), then trombone and cornet in the J.C. Trist Band (1902). He moved to New Orleans in 1906, and started playing with the Indiana Brass Band led by Dave Perkins and cornet virtuoso George McCullum Sr. He also played with Henry Allen Sr.'s Excelsior Brass Band (1906-10), Silver Leaf Orchestra (1908-09), Olympia Band, and his own Tuxedo Band (1910-13). His band (dressed in tuxedos) performed at the Tuxedo Hall, but the dancehall was closed after a shooting. His band then performed throughout New Orleans for high society functions, both black and white. Their frequent riverboat performances made them popular with tourists. Beginning in 1911, Celestin also led the Tuxedo Brass Band, where Louis Armstrong played from 1917 to 1922.

In 1917, Celestin partnered with trombonist William "Baba" Ridgley, renaming the band the Original Tuxedo Orchestra. At one time or another, the band employed all of the top performers in the city, including trumpet player Kid Shots Madison. When Ridgley left in 1925, Celestin changed the band's name to the Tuxedo Jazz Orchestra. It performed in Lake Charles (1926 in front of Bunk Johnson) and Biloxi (1931). The band played five record dates between 1925 and 1928 that produced seventeen tunes. The band played at the Pelican Roof in New Orleans (1939) and was restructured as a ten-piece orchestra (1941).

The Depression forced Celestin to dissolve his band in 1932. He played music only part time while working at a shipyard to make a living. By 1947, following World War II, financial conditions had improved, and he reformed his band. Celestin's lovable personality and energetic vocal solos were popular with audiences, and soon the band was a leading tourist attraction on Bourbon Street. The band thrived during the 1950s and the 1960s under the name Papa Celestin's New Orleans Band. They were constantly playing popular dance music for radio and television, making recordings (1950-54), and they even performed a special concert at the White House for President Eisenhower in 1953.

When Oscar Celestin died just two weeks before his seventy-first birthday, over four thousand people marched in his funeral parade. He had been at the prime of his career, appearing with his band just one year earlier in the film Cinerama Holiday. Many of his Gramophone recordings are now available on compact disc, including The 1950s Radio Broadcasts (Arhoolie), Celestin's Original Tuxedo Jazz Orchestra/Sam Morgan's Jazz Band (Jazz Oracle), and Marie Laveau (his most popular vocal solo, GHB). He was so loved by the citizens of New Orleans that the Jazz Foundation of New Orleans commissioned a bust in his honor which was donated to the Delgado Museum in that city.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Oscar Celestin" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. discography, extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Cerclier, Jules Henri Louis (b. Paris, France, May 29, 1823; d. St. German-en-Laye, France, July 15, 1897). French trumpeter. Cerclier was born into a musical family, and entered the Paris Conservatory in 1835 (studying violin and solfege). He returned to the conservatory in 1842 as a trumpet student of F.G.A. Dauverné, but his early trumpet study was undistinguished; his playing was considered harsh due to a weak and unstable embouchure. By 1844, reviews of his playing had improved greatly, and in 1846 he won first prize in trumpet by performing a solo work by Dauverné.

During the early 1850's, Cerclier studied voice at the conservatory and won two prizes in 1855. Little is known about his career between 1855 and 1869, but it can be assumed that he freelanced as a trumpeter and vocalist. In 1869, at the age of forty-five, he became an adjunct professor of trumpet at the Paris Conservatory and was paid only a small fraction of Arban's annual salary as cornet professor. Cerclier became a full professor in 1882 and received the appointment of Officier d'Académie in that same year. In 1888, he was made a Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur.

Cerclier retired in 1894. (By then he was earning a salary greater than Mellet, Arban's successor as cornet professor.) He died in 1897 at the age of seventy-four, and was posthumously given the title of Officier de l'Instruction Publique in 1898.

Bibl.: Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Jules Cerclier" (www.editions-bim.com).

Chaffard, Didier (b. Vienne, France, Sept. 22, 1968). French trumpeter. Chaffard's first trumpet teacher was Claude Corbin. He later studied with Guy Touvron at the Conservatoire National de Région de Lyon, graduating in 1989. He was one of five trumpet students at the conservatory to form the popular music and entertainment group, Les Trompettes de Lyon (along with Pierre Ballester, André Bonnici, Ludovic Roux, and Jean-Luc Richard), which has performed regularly at a theater in Lyons and has toured the world. He has released a solo CD and DVD titled Canard Laqué, and a DVD titled sans tambour ni tambour. He teaches at the École Municipale de La Verpillière.

Chaffard and his wife Sandrine Pintoux, a professor of physics and chemistry, have two daughters, Capucine (b. 2001) and Emma (b. 2003). His hobbies include jogging and rugby.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); www.lestrompettesdelyon.com; personal interview, Sept. 26, 2012.

Chambers, William Paris (b. Newport, Pennsylvania, Nov. 1, 1854; d. Newville, Pennsylvania, Nov. 13, 1913). American cornetist. His family moved from Newport to Newville, Pennsylvania, where William lived most of his life. He was mostly self taught, but seemed to have little difficulty learning the cornet. Many claimed that he had a "freak lip" because of the ease with which he played, especially in the upper register. At age fifteen, he directed the Keystone Cornet Band (later termed the "Boy's Band" because of Chambers's youthfulness).

At age eighteen, he became director of the Capitol City Band in Harrisburg, Pennsylvania, and in 1887 the director of the Great Southern Band in Baltimore. The city sponsored the band for a trip to Denver in 1892, and during the trip, Chambers would have the band play short concerts at some of the train stops. His cornet solos gained attention, and he was compared to Levy, Liberati, and other great soloists. One of his students told a story of a stunt Chambers liked to perform in concerts: Mr. Chambers would play the three/four movement in "Pretty Jane" while holding the cornet upside-down. He was therefore pressing the valves up instead of down. He did this with the backs of his fingers and played the movement at the correct tempo. The student went on, saying "He would usually end this demonstration by playing "Till We Meet Again" in three or four octaves, trilling from high c''' to second [double] high c''''.

In the late 1890s and early 1900s, Chambers was manager of the C.G. Conn store in downtown New York City. Many cornetists would stop by to hear Chambers demonstrate his fantastic range on the cornet, often playing up to triple-high c'''' with ease. He played solos with his own company on a yearlong concert tour of the major cities in Europe and Africa. He composed several solos including Carnival of Venice, Kryl's Favorite, Nelly Gray with Variations, Commodore Polka, The Seraph, and Narcissus. From 1896 to 1901, Chambers recorded many of his solos, among them his Commodore Polka on the Berliner label.

Chambers is known to all bandsmen as a composer of nearly ninety marches, some of which became very popular. A partial listing includes The Chicago Tribune, The Boys of the Old Brigade, Buffalo Bill's Equestrian, March Religioso, Falcon, Old England, Hostrauer's March, Northland, Way Down South, St. Andrew's March, Choral March, and Cavalcade.

Chambers was married to a fine pianist, with whom he performed at Carnegie Hall on February 10, 1910 for the Maine Memorial Service honoring the United Spanish War Veterans. He died three years later and is buried in the Newville Cemetery.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publication); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Champouillon, David (b. Kew Gardens, Queens, Long Island, New York, Mar. 27, 1959). American trumpeter. Champouillon grew up in West Hempstead, Nassau County, Long Island, until age fifteen when he moved to Cicero, New York (near Syracuse). He attended Cicero High School and graduated in 1977. He studied with Elliott Topalian (1974-77), Daniel Sapochetti (1977-78), James Mosher (1978-79) and Laurie McGaw (1979-83). He graduated from Onondaga Community College in 1979. He then completed three degree programs while studying with: Gilbert Johnson at the University of Miami, bachelor of music degree in studio music and jazz in 1987; Tom Brawner at Eastern Illinois University, master of music degree in 1988; and William Pfund at the University of Northern Colorado, doctorate in trumpet performance/pedagogy and theory/composition in 1998. His other teachers include Edmund Cord (1989-90), Edward Gornik (1990-95), and William Fielder (1997-98).

A highly versatile player, Champouillon has performed as both a jazz artist and classical musician. At age twenty, he was a member of the US Air Force Band at Travis AFB, in California (1979-83). He has also played with the Salt Lake Symphony, Utah Chamber Orchestra, Ballet West, Utah Opera, Utah Festival Orchestra, Oakland Symphony, Utah Symphony, Syracuse Symphony, Ash Lawn-Highland Opera, and with numerous jazz artists and many other organizations. He is a brass reviewer for the Oxford University Press, a jazz reviewer for Prentice Hall and McGraw-Hill, and a jazz columnist for The Brass Herald. He has taught at Eastern Illinois University (1987-88), the University of Utah (1992-95), the University of Northern Colorado (1995-96), Kutztown University of Pennsylvania (1997-98), and Roanoke College (1998-99).

Champouillon is currently professor of trumpet and jazz at East Tennessee State University (since 2000). He has twice won Downbeat magazine's Best College Big Band award and has served as a jazz judge for the National Trumpet Competition. His hobbies include basketball and billiards.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Champouillon Appointed Director of Arban International Trumpet Institute" (News Item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2002); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "David Champouillon" (www.bachbrass.com); personal interview, Mar. 15, 2010.

Chapman, Peter (b. Montreal, Quebec, Canada, c1945). Canadian trumpeter. Chapman studied with Roger Voisin at Boston University, where he received bachelor's and master's degrees in music. While a student in 1966, he performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra as an extra, and soon became a member of the Boston Pops orchestra and principal of the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra. For a while, he was a member of the American National Opera Company. A few years later, he became the fourth trumpet of the BSO.

Maestro Leonard Bernstein selected Chapman as one of the original orchestra members for the premiere of Mass that opened the Kennedy Center for the Arts in Washington, D.C. When André Côme died in 1987, Chapman became acting second trumpet of the BSO, and won the audition for the position in the following year. He has also taught at Boston University, Boston Conservatory, and the New England Conservatory.

Bibl.: Yeo, Douglas. "Trumpet Players of the Boston Symphony" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1990).

Chappottín [Chappotín], Félix (b. Cayo Hueso [Havana], Cuba, Mar. 31, 1907; d. La Habana, Cuba, Dec. 28, 1983). Cuban trumpeter and bandleader. Sometimes referred to as the "Louis Armstrong of Cuba," Chappottín was a member of Septeto Habanero (1927-30), Cuba's most popular band during that time. He was famous for his trills, growls, and "laughing trumpet" without the use of a plunger. He was related to the legendary Chano Pozo, and studied the cornet with Venancio Gonzalez, even though he began playing the tuba in a boys' band. From 1924 to 1949, he played with many noted Cuban bands including Sexteto Munamar, Anacuona (famous female band), Septeto Bolero, and Conjunto Azul (with Chano Pozo). He then played lead trumpet in the Arsenio Rodriguez y su Conjunto band from September 1949 to 1953. Without doubt, Chappottin's playing style was influenced by "Florecita" Oscar Velasco O'Farrill.

In 1953 when Rodriguez left Cuba for America to seek medical help for his vision problems, and stayed in New York to continue his career as a jazz musician, he handed the band over to Chappottin, who renamed it Conjunto Chappottin y Sus Estrellas, and made it one of the leading bands in Cuba. The band's popularity was not well received by the Cuban government and its dictator, Fulgencio Batista, and was forced to keep a low profile. The band was eventually taken over by Félix's son and grandson. Chappottin recorded extensively and made numerous television appearances in Cuba. Father of the "Conjunto" trumpet style, he was one of the first Cuban trumpeters influenced by the North American hot jazz. He is today considered to be one of the five founding trumpeters of "Son" music, along with Lazaro Herrera, Oscar Velazco (Florecita), José (Pepe) Macia, and José Interian.

Bibl.: Davies, Rick : Trompeta. Chappottin, Chocolate, and the Afro-Cuban Trumpet Style (2003, Scarecrow Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Félix Chappottín" (www.allmusic.com/artists/felix-chappottin-p207452/biography).

Charlier, Théophile ("Théo") Noël (b. Seraing-sur-Meuse, France, July 17, 1868; d. Brussels, Belgium, Oct. 9, 1944). Belgian trumpeter. In 1880 at the age of twelve, Charlier entered the cornet class of Dieudonné Gérardy at the Liège Royal Conservatory. He won first prize in cornet in 1885, and in trumpet in 1886. He was appointed as a teaching assistant in 1884-86 and again in 1888. From 1886 to 1895, he was the principal trumpet in the Concerts of the Palace of Arts and Commerce in Antwerp, as well as in the Royal French Opera. When Gérardy died in 1901, Charlier was appointed professor at the conservatory.

Charlier and Mélanie Belleflamme were married in 1888, and had one daughter, Alida Alexandrine, who was born in the same year. In 1895, Charlier left his orchestral position in Antwerp, and assumed duties as principal trumpet of the Royal Theater of the Monnaie in Brussels, which was only an eighty-km commute by train to his duties at the Liège conservatory. In 1904, he left Brussels to become director of the famous Mariemont Bascoup Colliery Band and of the School of Music.

When Arban died in 1889, Charlier's importance as a leading teacher grew throughout Belgium; he was also somewhat influential in France. His best students were Alphonse Cox, Gilles Fraikin, Albert Gerday, Théo Grunday, and Michel Nikolay. Charlier began favoring the trumpet over the cornet, and designed a piston-valve B-flat trumpet (Charlier model) that was built by the Brussels company, Mahillon (from 1909). By 1908, the cornet was phased out of the Liège conservatory. Charlier pushed the trumpet repertoire forward by being the first (Liège, 1898 and Paris, 1902) to perform Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in its original version on a piccolo G trumpet built by Mahillon. Charlier's inventiveness also led to his patent of the screw-rim mouthpiece in 1909.

Charlier was one of the very few in his day to regularly (until 1931 at the age of sixty-three) play the works by Bach on a D trumpet, such as the Mass in B minor (first in Liège in March 1900 under François Rasse). Only Pierre Vignal and later, one of Charlier's best students, Michel Nikolay had this ability. Charlier was a noted soloist who toured France (Paris, Lyons, Marseille, and other French cities), played the Septuor by Saint-Saëns, and premiered the Divertissement for Trumpet and Strings by Bordes on December 10, 1905. In France, he is also remembered for performing Wagner works with the Concerts Straram (with Albert Adriano and Théo Grunday on trumpets).

On October 3, 1905 Charlier founded and directed the Scola musicæ in Brussels, where he taught trumpet and voice, and which he described as "an institute of advanced musical studies." It was during this time that he composed numerous pieces for voice as well as his famous 36 Transcendental Etudes for trumpet, which were published by Alphonse Leduc in 1946 (first complete English translation in 1979 by Michel Laplace and Cliff Warren). A long lost 37th etude was published by BIM in 1995. He also wrote many trumpet solos with piano accompaniment, such as the 1st and 2nd Solo de Concours. He wrote a Method for Horn in F and various unpublished books. His longest composition was his two-act opera-ballet, Djamilch, which received its premiere at the Antwerp Royal Theater in 1897.

Charlier was an important, highly respected Belgian musician, as well as a renowned trumpeter, composer, educator, and administrator in the Brussels community. He received the Order of the French Academy (1904), as well as similar awards: Knight of the Order of Leopold (1920), Officer of the Order of the Crown (1926), Civic Medal First Class (1927), Officer of Public Institution of France (1928), Centennial Commemorative Medal (1931), and Officer of the Order of Leopold (1933).

After Xavier Teste and Julius Kosleck, and together with Merri Franquin, Charlier was a pioneer of the trumpet revival. His other main contribution was his 36 Etudes Transcendantes. Last but not least, he was a true pioneer in the playing of the trumpet parts of the Bach repertoire.

Charlier retired in September of 1933, but regularly sat on the juries of the annual brass competitions at the Scola musicæ. He died at the age of seventy-six.

Bibl.: Macaluso, Rosario (Eng. Trans. By Jeffrey Agrell). "A Grand Master; Théo Charlier" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2001); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Chase, Bill [William Edward Chiaiese] (b. Boston, Massachusetts, Oct. 20, 1934; d. nr. Jackson, Minnesota, Aug. 9, 1974). American trumpeter. Both of Chase's parents were good amateur musicians. He received his musical education at the Berklee College of Music in Boston where he studied with Herb Pomeroy and John Coffey. He credits Coffey, a trombonist, as the person who straightened out his insecure embouchure. During his first year of college in 1952, Chase heard a concert by the Stan Kenton Orchestra with Maynard Ferguson on lead trumpet. This greatly affected Chase's decision to become a lead trumpeter. Chase said, My ears opened like a parachute. I couldn't believe him [Ferguson]! After graduating in 1957, Chase entered the New England Conservatory where he studied for a short while with Armando Ghitalla. Although Ghitalla soon encouraged him to look for a different school, Chase was impressed with Ghitalla's love for music and passion for the trumpet.

In 1958, Chase became the lead trumpet in Maynard Ferguson's band. The following year, he assumed Ferguson's former position as lead in Stan Kenton's orchestra. After being invited to play at the Monterey Jazz Festival with Woody Herman's band, Chase played intermittently with Herman for ten years. He toured Europe with Herman in 1965, and recorded numerous albums including Live at Antibes, Encore, My Kind of Broadway, Blue Flame, Somewhere, Live in Seattle, Live at Newport 1966, Heavy Exposure, Woody Herman & the Fourth Herd, Woody's Winners, and Jazz Hoot. The band also appeared live on the television show, Jazz Casual.

Chase formed his own band in 1971. Simply called "Chase," the group consisted of four trumpets, a singer, and four rhythm-section members. Their first album, titled Chase, sold over 400,000 copies, and was nominated for a 1971 Grammy Award under the category "Best New Artist." One of the tunes on the album, Get It On, became a top hit and launched the group into near stardom. They appeared on several television shows including Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show and the Smothers Brothers Show. Their second album, Ennea (1972), was not particularly well received, nor was their third album, Pure Music.

After reforming some of the band's personnel, the group launched a national tour in 1974 to revive its popularity. The group was scheduled on a commercial airplane, but Chase and three other members decided to take a later flight. Because of weather problems, all flights were full, so Chase chartered a private plane for him and the other three musicians. On August 9, 1974 Chase's plane went down and crashed near Jackson, Minnesota. No one survived. It was a tragic end to the thirty-nine-year-old trumpeter's life. Chase is remembered for his incredibly powerful upper range, exciting solo rendition of Bernstein's Somewhere, his own band's brief success, and his friendly and unassuming personality. The group Chase is still very influential throughout the world. Stéphane Rollin is one of Chase's best disciples.

Bibl.: Cooper, Dick. "The Bill Chase Story" (www.great-music.net); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St.

Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cheatham, Adolphus Anthony ("Doc") (b. Nashville, Tennessee, June 13, 1905; d. Washington, District of Columbia, June 2, 1997).

American trumpeter. Cheatham's father (a barber) was part native American Indian (Cherokee) and lived in Cheatham County, Tennessee (thus, the name Cheatham). His mother was a schoolteacher and lab assistant. Adolphus began playing the cornet as a child, but soon switched to trumpet. Other than a few lessons with two circus cornetist brothers, "Professors" N.C. and C.M. Davis, he originally was mostly self-taught, although much later he had lessons with Max Schlossberg.

Cheatham played with the Pearl High School Band (in 1917, on soprano sax) and the Meharry Medical College Symphony Orchestra in Nashville (on cornet) which earned him the nickname "Doc.". He began playing professionally around 1922, and was employed as a member of a pit band for the Bijou Theatre in Nashville. He moved to Chicago in 1924, where he played with Albert Wynn (at the Dreamland, 1924-26), the Synco Jazzers, Ma Rainey, Jelly Roll Morton, Erskine Tate (at the Vendome Theatre as a substitute for Louis Armstrong), and Lil Armstrong (1926). He was fired from a job with a show band because he couldn't read music well enough, so he hired a music teacher to give him lessons.

Doc Cheatham moved to Philadelphia in 1927 to play with Wilbur DeParis (1927-28), but moved a year later to New York City where he played with Sam Wooding's orchestra (1928-30, including a tour of Europe). From 1930 to 1932, he was with Marion Hardy's Alabamians and McKinney's Cotton Pickers (1931-32, alongside Joe Smith). Cheatham joined Cab Calloway's band as lead trumpet in 1933, finding steady work during the Great Depression. The strain of touring caught up with him in 1939 however, and he was hospitalized for nine weeks due to anemia and exhaustion. His illness dogged him for years.

Having left Calloway's band, Cheatham opened his own music-teaching studio in 1939. He also took a job in the New York City post office. A year later, his health improved enough for him to continue playing with the big bands of Teddy Wilson, Benny Carter (1940-41), Fletcher Henderson (1941), and Teddy Hill. He also recorded with Billie Holiday, and was a member of the Eddie Heywood Sextet (1943-45).

At the end of the swing era, Cheatham found work in numerous Latin bands in New York, including those of Marcelino Guerra (1948-50), Machito (1962, Japan tour), Herbie Mann (1960), and Perez Prado (1951-52). He also worked with several Dixieland bands, especially Wilbur DeParis's New New Orleans Jazz Band (from 1955, and taking part in the first Antibes Jazz Festival in 1960). During the late 1950s, Cheatham played with Vic Dickenson, Eddie Condon, and Sammy Price, plus led his own group (1960-65). He was selected to join the trumpet section with Rex Allen, Joe Newman, Roy Eldridge, and Rex Stewart for a 1957 CBS Television special called The Sound of Jazz and featuring Billie Holiday. He was also proud to belong to the Benny Goodman Quintet from 1966 to 1967.

When Doc Cheatham left the Goodman group, the swing era had ended. Now sixty-two years old, and having been a lead or section player all of his life, he needed to learn how to improvise mainstream jazz in a hurry. He taught himself through Clifford Brown recordings, and became one of the finest jazz trumpeters in history. For the next thirty years, Doc Cheatham dazzled audiences throughout the world. His last jazz recording, Doc Cheatham and Nicholas Payton (Verve), won a Grammy Award, and features the old and new star trumpeters of jazz. Before recording the album, twenty-three-year-old Payton told Fortune magazine*, I just hope Doc doesn't slaughter me too badly.*

Cheatham's recordings after learning to be a soloist include Duets and Solos (Sackville), At the Bern Jazz Festival (Sackville), Live at Sweet Basil (Jazzology), The Fabulous Doc Cheatham (Parkwood), Hey Doc! (Jezebel), John Doc and Herb (Metronome), Black Beauty (Sackville), Doc Cheatham (Jezebel), The Eighty-Seven Years of Doc Cheatham (Parkwood), and Swinging Down in New Orleans (Jazzology). He is also seen in the videos, The Sound of Jazz (Vintage Jazz Classics), and Wilbur DeParis in Europe (30N-90W Video).

Doc Cheatham never retired. He performed live concerts up until days before passing away from a stroke. His seventy-seven years of active performing as a trumpeter (and as a singer toward the end of his life) sets a record of professional longevity among all trumpeters. Although he smoked cigars, Cheatham claimed that his long life came from not drinking alcohol. He was a dapper, thin man who liked to joke with his audiences. Twice married, he was survived by his second wife, Amanda, and daughter Alicia. His grandson, Theo Croker, is also a noted trumpet player.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. except on mp3; Oct. 2008); "Doc Cheatham" (www.answers.com); "Doc Cheatham" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Chenette, Stephen ("Steve") (b. Tampa, Florida, Dec. 16, 1935). American trumpeter and conductor. Chenette grew up in Oklahoma, Texas, and the city of Carlsbad, New Mexico. His father Ed changed the family name from Chestnut to Chenette (sounding more French). His uncle Clay Chenette was a fine cornet player. Steve began playing the cornet at age seven under the guidance of his father, a well-known band director and composer, and for a brief time with Col. Earl Irons (1949). Private lessons began at age fifteen with the legendary Rafael Méndez while attending the Gunnison Music Camp in Colorado. After graduating from Carlsbad High School in 1952 (age sixteen), he received a full scholarship to study with Samuel G. Krauss at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia. During his undergraduate years there (1952-56), he spent the summers of 1954 and '55 at the Tanglewood Institute where he studied with Armando Ghitalla (1954 for six weeks). Additional study was with John Coffey (five weeks), Gilbert Johnson (1961), William Vacchiano (1957), and Arnold Jacobs (one of his greatest influences). Conducting studies were with Leonard Bernstein (at the Tanglewood Institute), William R. Smith, assistant conductor of the Philadelphia Orchestra, George Trautwein, and Frederick Fennell.

Chenette's first professional orchestral job was as second trumpet of the Buffalo Philharmonic (1956-58). He became principal trumpet of the Denver Symphony Orchestra (1958-60) under Saul Caston, and for nine weeks in 1960 played principal in the Boston Pops orchestra (substituting for Ghitalla) under Arthur Fiedler while the Boston Symphony Orchestra was on a State Department tour of the Orient. From 1960 to 1972, he was principal of the Minneapolis Symphony (now the Minnesota Orchestra), and was concurrently principal of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra during the 1961-62 season. He also taught part-time at the University of Minnesota. In 1964, Chenette gave the first American performance of the Second Concerto by André Jolivet.

Chenette accepted a trumpet professorship at the University of Toronto in 1972. Beginning in 1975, he was also the conductor of the university wind ensemble and brass choir. He taught at the National Music Camp of Canada (1973-c1995), and has been a guest conductor of bands all over the world. In August of 1986, he was a guest professor at the University of Calgary. He retired from the University of Toronto in 2001 after twenty-eight years of service there. He continues to be active as a conductor of community bands and brass bands.

When the International Trumpet Guild was formed in 1975, Chenette became involved with the organization. He has been a board member, secretary (two terms), vice president, and president (2003-05). In 2008, he received the ITG's prestigious Award of Merit for outstanding lifetime achievement.

Steve married Marjory Black in 1956, a horn student he met while attending the Curtis Institute together. They played in the Buffalo Philharmonic and the Denver Symphony Orchestra, but were divorced after about thirteen years of marriage. His second wife (married in 1972), Susan Bussey Chenette, is a professional flutist and pianist, and has a MFA in Creative Writing. She is also an award-winning poet. Steve and Marjory have two daughters: Anne (b. 1958) and Catherine (b. 1960). His hobbies once included back packing, river rafting, scuba diving, and softball, but today he enjoys long distance bicycling and photography.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Interview with Steve Chenette" (Canadian Winds—Vents canadiens, Fall, 2010, Vol. 9, No. 1); personal interview, Jan. 10, 2012; Laplace's personal interview, Nov. 3, 2011.

Cherry, Don[ald Eugene] (b. Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, Nov. 18, 1936; d. Málaga, Spain, Oct. 19, 1995). American cornetist. Cherry was one of the most important free-jazz improvisers, influenced by trumpeters such as Fats Navarro, Clifford Brown, Miles Davis, and Harry "Sweets" Edison.

His father owned the Cherry Blossom Club in Tulsa, Oklahoma. The family moved to Los Angeles in 1940, and Don began learning the trumpet while in junior high, studying under Samuel Browne. At the age of fifteen, Cherry played with the jazz band led by Browne at Jefferson High School in a neighboring school district. This caused too many absences from his own Samuel Adams High School, and, as a result, he was expelled. He freelanced in Los Angeles for a while, playing with Dexter Gordon, Wardell Gray, Hampton Hawes, Red Mitchell, Eric Dolphy, and Don Ellis, among others. In 1953, he met Ornette Coleman, a jazz saxophonist. Coleman's style of improvisation was much more free than the bebop style Cherry was accustomed to, but Cherry soon began fitting his style of playing to that of Coleman. In 1957, Cherry and Coleman teamed up with the Paul Bley Trio to form a quintet that performed at the Hillcrest Club. Their music was a bit too progressive for their audience there, and they soon lost the contract.

Cherry approached Contemporary Records, forming a relationship that resulted in two albums with Ornette Coleman. Their music caught the attention of composer Gunther Schuller and pianist John Lewis, creating a great deal of radio play and subsequent guest appearances. By 1959, Cherry and Ornette Coleman signed with Atlantic Records, and began playing at New York's Five Spot Café. Coleman's quintet with Cherry was now a quartet. Their music was both popular and controversial. Some of the albums produced between 1959 and 1961 include Something Else!!!!, Change of the Century, and Free Jazz. Cherry also recorded with John Coltrane (1961) and Sonny Rollins (1962, 1963).

In 1962, Cherry broke away from Coleman's group and began playing with Steve Levy (1961), Archie Shepp, and Albert Ayler. He was coleader of the New York Contemporary Five (1963-64) that took up residence in Europe. His finest recordings included Complete Communion and Symphony for Improvisers (1966 on Blue Note). He was in his prime during the late 1960s, and taught at Dartmouth College in 1970, as well as recording with the Jazz Composer's Orchestra in 1973.

Cherry moved to Sweden for four years, also traveling extensively throughout the world. He became interested in the music and instruments of various cultures, thus becoming one of the first "world-music" jazz musicians. He learned to play the flute and various exotic percussion instruments, and began using them in his performances, unfortunately to the neglect of his cornet. He joined the group Codona that was based on world cultures, especially the mixing of Arabic-Turkish-South African folk rhythms and ostinati. When the group disbanded in 1984, Cherry formed a new group called Nu that toured England in 1987.

Cherry's later years were spent in San Francisco playing with Peter Apfelbaum's Hieroglyphics, and with his own group. During the late 1970s and early 1980s, he also worked with rock singer and guitarist Lou Reed. Another one of Cherry's bands was Old and New Dreams. In 1983, he specialized on the pocket trumpet. From 1984 to 1986, he played in the group, Leaders, and in 1986 performed at the Berlin Jazzfest with Jabbo Smith. That same year, Cherry appeared in a video in New Orleans with Dizzy Gillespie, Maynard Ferguson, Al Hirt, and Chuck Mangione, produced by Ben Sidran. He died in 1995 at the age of fifty-eight from liver failure caused by hepatitis. He died at the home of his stepdaughter, Neneh Cherry.

What Don Cherry lacked in range and technical ability he more than made up for in creativity and a unique style of cornet and pocket trumpet playing. He developed an assortment of expressive squeals and split notes on both instruments. Today, he is considered to have been one of the leading jazz musicians of the twentieth century.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.) The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Chestnut, Walter [Monroe] (b. Norfolk, Virginia, Feb. 17, 1936; d. Northhampton, Massachusetts, May 4, 2007). American trumpeter. Chestnut began playing the trumpet when he was fourteen years old. He attended the University of Michigan where he studied with Clifford Lillya from 1954-59. After earning his bachelor of music education degree, he became an instrumental director in the public schools of Colon, Michigan. From 1962 through 1966, he was a junior high band director in Sturgis, Michigan. He returned to the University of Michigan in 1966 as a teaching fellow, and completed his master of music degree in 1967.

Chestnut was professor of trumpet at the University of Massachusetts from 1967 to 2001. He directed the university brass choir and played in the faculty Brass Trio. He also played principal trumpet in the Springfield (MA) Symphony from 1967 to 1973. He was well known for his brilliant herald trumpet fanfares that opened each university graduation ceremony.

As an avid instrument collector and lecturer on the history of the trumpet, Chestnut presented hundreds of clinics to public school students. He produced a thirty-minute video/DVD titled History of the Trumpet in Sight and Sound (1991). He also recorded a compact disc of music for trumpet and organ, and played a Handel aria on Edna White's On Taming The Devil's Tongue cassette (Trumpet Productions, 1982).

In 1993, a spinal condition left Chestnut unable to walk or play the trumpet. He went through a painful and protracted recovery that left him able only to operate an electric wheelchair. His struggle made him an inspirational figure on campus.

During Chestnut's career, he received several honors and distinctions. He was soloist in Haydn's Concerto in E-flat with the Boston Pops Orchestra in 1978 (conducted by Arthur Fiedler), was selected as an "Outstanding Music Educator in America" in 1973, and was awarded the Kappa Kappa Psi Distinguished Service to Music Award, as well as the Lowell Mason Award from the Massachusetts Music Educators Association. The University of Massachusetts awarded him the Chancellor's Medal, the Distinguished Teacher Award, and an Honorary Doctorate in 2004. Upon his retirement in 2000, he was awarded the title of University Herald Trumpeter Emeritus.

"Mr. C," as his students affectionately called him, died at the age of seventy-one at Cooley Dickinson Hospital in Northhampton, Massachusetts.

Bibl.: "Remembering Walter Chestnut" (The Minuteman Band Alumni Association website: www.ummbalumni.org/chestnut); "Tribute to Walter Chestnut" (2007 International Trumpet Guild Conference program booklet); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Chez, Al [Alan Cheznovitz] (b. Jersey City, New Jersey, July 7, 1961). American trumpeter. Chez (born as Alan Cheznovitz) took an interest in the trumpet at age three when his father (a country-western singer) took him and his two older brothers to a drum and bugle competition. He began playing trumpet at age nine and soon joined his father's drum and bugle corps, The Saints. His love of corps has stayed with him throughout his life.

After graduating from John P. Stevens High School in Edison Township, New Jersey, in 1980, Chez freelanced as a jazz and show band trumpeter. He also performed with, and coached the brass lines of several bugle corps, including The Garfield Cadets, The Bushwackers, and the Reading Buccaneers. He quit his day job at an electrical supply store so that he could tour with a local band, La Bamba and the Hubcaps.

Chez became a member of Tower of Power (1988-92), as well as the Robert Cray Band (1994-95). He had occasionally performed with Paul Shaffer's The World's Most Dangerous Band since 1986, but in 1997 Shaffer asked Chez to become a permanent member of his group that had begun playing as the house band for CBS Television's The Late Show with David Letterman in Los Angeles.

During Chez's successful career, he has performed with Bonjovi, Arturo Sandoval, David Bowie, Maynard Ferguson, Eric Clapton, The Young Rascals, The Rolling Stones, the Dave Edwards Band, and many other celebrities. He has performed at The White House for three different U.S. presidents, and participated in the fiftieth birthday celebration for John Lennon and every Rock and Roll Hall of Fame induction ceremony since 1986. He continues being involved with drum and bugle corps, and is a brass staff member of the Crossmen World Class Drum Corps from San Antonio, Texas.

Chez and his wife Cat have two children: son Travis (b. c1993) and daughter Jessica (b. c1999).

Bibl.: "Al Chez" (www.crossmen.org/2010-al-chez.html); "Al Chez" (www.cbs.com/late_night/late_show/bio/alan_chez/bio.php); "Alan Cheznovitz" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Alan Chez" (www.flipoakes.com/alanchez.htm).

Childers, Marion ("Buddy") (b. St. Louis, Missouri, Feb. 12, 1926; d. Los Angeles, California, May 24, 2007). American trumpeter. Childers was one of the most talented trumpet players that ever lived.

While growing up in Belleville, Illinois, he began teaching himself to play the trumpet at age twelve. At age fourteen, he joined the St. Louis musicians union and began playing professionally. At age sixteen, he joined the Stan Kenton Orchestra. Soon, he was playing lead in the band.

Childers played with Kenton for seven or eight periods of time between 1942 and 1954. Between stints with the Kenton orchestra, he played lead with other big bands including those of Benny Carter (1944), George Auld, Les Brown (1947), Woody Herman (1949), Tommy Dorsey (1951-52), Charlie Barnet (1954), and André Previn. He was drafted into military service in 1944, but was released early due to an injury. He recorded with Willie Smith (November 1945).

Around 1955, Childers moved to Los Angeles where he became a studio musician. He played in many television productions for Quincy Jones and Oliver Nelson as well as for film music. He moved to Las Vegas in 1959 and played lead in several show bands, but returned to Los Angeles in 1966. He also had a second career as a photographer. He was the musical director for Frank Sinatra Jr. and recorded albums such as Just Buddy and Buddy Childers Quintet. He also played with Bobby Bryant (1968-69) and then led his own big band, proving to be a successful jazz soloist. In 1981, he played with Pat Longo and the Toshiko Akiyoshi-Lew Tabackin big band.

Childers developed cancer about ten years before his death from the disease. He was a strong player until the end, even playing from his wheelchair.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Buddy Childers" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Buddy Childers" (www.artistdirect.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Christ, Herbert (b. Frankfurt, Germany, July 25, 1942). German trumpeter and cornetist. Christ began playing cornet at age fourteen. During the 1960s, he played with the Sidewalk Jazzband (1962-68), Blues & Stomps Company (1964-68), Jazz Lips, and the Preservation Hall Jazz Band that visited Frankfurt. During the 1970s, he toured much of Europe with Alton Purnell, Louis Nelson, and the Trevor Richards New Orleans Band. He founded the New Orleans Jazz Babies in 1973, and played with Jazz Classics, Frankfurt Barrel House Jazz Band, Dreamboat Serenaders (a studio band, 1985-90), and Big Band Memories (1992). In 1992, he founded Herbert Christ & His German Hot Jazz Kings, and in 1994 was a member of the Ambrosia Band and the Wolverine Jazz Gang. From 1995-99, he was soloist with the Storyville Jazz Band, International New Orleans Jazz Band, Matchbox Blues Band, Doc Houlind's Copenhagen Ragtime Band, and the Bovisa New Orleans Band. He is currently the leader of the All-Star Hot Jazz Band on the International Jazz-Cruise at Sea (since about 1997). Christ has played with jazz stars Albert Nicholas, Wild Bill Davison, Benny Bailey, and Benny Waters.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Christensen, Ketil (b. Castrup, Denmark, July 11, 1952). Danish trumpeter. Christensen attended The Royal Danish Academy in Copenhagen, and also studied for a while in the United States, England, and with Pierre Thibaud in Paris. He was a prizewinner at the 1980 competition in Munich, and became principal trumpet of the Royal Chapel Orchestra in Copenhagen in 1972. Christensen received the Jacob Gade Award and the Gladsaxe Music Prize, and was a cofounder of the Royal Danish Brass ensemble (from 1977).

A gifted soloist, Christensen made several recordings including Trumpet Concertos, Vols. 1-9, O Marvellous Wonder, Three Danish Trumpet Concertos (Rondo), and Trumpet Evergreen (Rondo).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ketil Christensen" (Notes to LP album, Ketil Christensen Plays Danish Trumpet Concertos on the Rondo label).

Christiansen, Jan Fredrik (b. Lebesby, Norway, Apr. 5, 1942). Norwegian trumpeter. Christiansen studied with Harry Kvebæk, William Overton, and Adolph Herseth. He joined the Norwegian Opera (second trumpet, 1965-66), then the Oslo Philharmonic Orchestra in 1966, replacing Kvebæk in 1973 as principal trumpet. He was a member of the Norwegian Brass Quintet from 1973 to 1989, and premiered Olav Anton Thommessen's trumpet concerto, The Second Creation, in 1985. Maestro Sir George Solti selected him as the only Norwegian to play in the 1995 World Orchestra for Peace.

Christiansen left the Philharmonic in 2007, but is still active as principal of the Oslo Sinfonietta and as a professor at the Norwegian Academy of Music. He sometimes performs on a four-valve quartertone (Bach) B-flat trumpet modified by Spada Music. His solo CD is Missa da Tromba on the 2L label.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Jan Fredrik Christiansen" (www.sl.no.pages/album/052.html); "Jan Frederik Christiansen" (http://summermusicingalway.com/smg-faculty.html); "Jan Frederik Christiansen" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/jan_frederik_christiansen).

Christianson, Dennis ("Denny") Richard (b. Rockford, Illinois, Sept. 12, 1942). American trumpeter, arranger, and bandleader. Christianson studied at the Navy School of Music in Washington, D.C. before playing at Harrah's Casino in Lake Tahoe, Nevada, from 1971 to 1975. He worked as a studio player in Los Angeles from 1975 to 1980 before moving in 1980 to Montreal, Quebec, in Canada, where he played and arranged for Diane Dufresne and various studio orchestras. He taught at the University of Montreal from 1983 to 1984, Concordia University from 1986 to 1987, and McGill University from 1988 to 1990. He formed the Denny Christianson Big Band in 1981, a group that has appeared at international jazz festivals throughout Europe, as well as on numerous television shows.

In addition to appearing on over 250 recordings and hundreds of television commercials and film soundtracks, Christianson has been music director for fifteen television shows. He has worked with Sammy Davis Jr., Pepper Adams, Louis Bellson, Tony Bennett, Benny Carter, Dee Dee Bridgewater, Harry "Sweets" Edison, Michel Legrand, Marvin Stamm, Stevie Wonder, Kai Winding, The Jackson 5, Ray Charles, Jon Faddis, and many others. Since 2001, he has been director of music studies at Humber College in Toronto. He became a Canadian citizen in 1991.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Denny Christianson" (www.thecanadianencyclopedia.com/articles/emc/denny-christianson); "Denny Christianson" (www.canadianjazzarchive.org/en/musicians/denny-christianson.html).

Christoff, Simeon (b. Sofia, Bulgaria, 1934). Bulgarian trumpeter. Christoff studied engineering at the University of Sofia, but in 1956 attended the Bulgarian National Conservatory of Music, studying with Petar Karparov, and the Royal Conservatory in Liège, studying with Pierre Cox. Christoff played in the National Youth Orchestra of Bulgaria, and eventually became principal trumpet of the Radio Symphony of Istanbul in Turkey and a member of the Royal Symphony Orchestra.

A highly versatile performer, Christoff played with the Schweizer Radio Big Band in 1970, and in 1972 toured Australia with a show called Fans for Ferguson Down Under. During the 1970s and '80s, he played with numerous show bands in Germany, Bulgaria, Belgium, Russia, and Turkey, including those with Tony Bennett and Petula Clark. He also taught at the Varna Music School in Istanbul. He is best known for his excellent upper register and skills as a solfège teacher. He is also a composer and arranger.

Christoff moved to Australia and taught at Melbourne University Teachers College. He likes to experiment with various mouthpiece designs.

Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Chumov, Leonid Yegorovich (b. Ternovoye, Russia, May 5, 1927). Russian trumpeter. Chumov was a member of the Soviet Army Band (1941-53) before he attended the Krasnodorsk Musical College where he studied with Konstantin Yakovievich Serostanov. He also studied with Georgy Orvid (1962). Chumov played principal trumpet in the Moscow Art Theater Orchestra (USSR National Orchestra, 1961-80), and taught brass ensembles at the Moscow Conservatory (1970-2006). He wrote trumpet methods (1979, 1987), as well as three etude books (1963, 1965, 1969). His edition of Georges Enescu's Au soir for four trumpets (McNaughton-Verlag) is well known.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Fred Mills, Leonid Chumov, Andrei Ikov, and unidentified man.

Chunn, Michael W. (b. Harrisburg, Illinois, Sept. 20, 1954). American trumpeter. Chunn took his first cornet lessons at age eight from his father, Walt Chunn, who was also his band director, although most of Michael's early private study was with Ronald Dishinger and Dave Friend. After graduating from Harrisburg High School in 1972, he enrolled at the University of Illinois as an accounting major, completing his business degree in 1977. While studying business, he was also very active in the university band program, and having begun a dual major with music in 1976, his primary interest turned towards trumpet. Thus he studied with David Hickman from 1976 until 1980 when he completed his master of music degree.

Chunn began his teaching career at Colorado State University (1980-83). While in Colorado, he was also an active freelance musician, playing extra with the Denver Symphony Orchestra and serving as principal trumpet of the Colorado Ballet Orchestra. He was also a member of the Aries Brass Quintet. During this time, he recorded his solo album, Michael Chunn Plays Music for Cornet and Trumpet (1982) on the Crystal Records label (released in digital format 2011, Trumpet Sounds, CD662.) In 1983, he became trumpet professor at Kent State University in northeast Ohio where he was a very active performer. After serving as acting principal trumpet for the Akron Symphony during the 1984-85 season, he toured with the Metropolitan Brass Quintet from 1985 to 1990. Beginning in 1989, he gradually assumed the role of principal trumpet with the Cleveland Ballet Orchestra, the Ohio Chamber Orchestra (for ten years), and the Cleveland Opera Orchestra, winning all three appointments in 1995. Chunn also performed as principal trumpet for Lyric Opera Cleveland for fifteen summer seasons beginning in 1989, and for Red (an orchestra) for seven years beginning in 2001. Since being in Ohio, he has periodically performed as an extra and substitute for the Cleveland Orchestra, Akron Symphony, Canton Symphony, Champaign-Urbana Symphony, Youngstown Symphony, and the Cleveland Chamber Symphony. Chunn has also been an active soloist and recitalist throughout his career. He has performed as a member of the Kent Brass Quintet since 1983, served on the faculty of the Blossom Festival School, and also published A Trumpeter's Daily Routine (Medici Music Press).

Chunn and his wife Susan Elizabeth Jones Chunn, an elementary music teacher, have two children: Erin (b. 1979) and Kelly (b. 1985). His hobbies include reading, golf, puzzles, and working with Finale and Sibelius computer music software.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Michael Chunn" (www.kent.edu/profile/profile_detail.ctm?profileitem=mchunn); personal interview, July 28, 2011.

Church, Bowen R. (b. East Greenwich, Rhode Island, Sept. 3, 1860; d. Jersey City, New Jersey, Nov. 13, 1923). American cornetist. Bowen was a naturally talented musician who learned to play the cornet at a very early age. At age nine, he happened to be traveling on a train seated next to the famed bandmaster D.W. Reeves. Seeing Reeves's cornet case, he boldly asked if he could play the instrument. Reluctantly, Reeves handed young Bowen his cornet; he was astounded and so impressed by how well the boy played, that he invited him to come to Providence and take lessons from him at no charge.

Church gave his first cornet recital in Providence at the age of eleven, and became a junior member of Reeves's American Band of Providence at age thirteen. Within a few years, he could play most of Hartmann's difficult solos, and at age eighteen was a featured soloist with the band. Church was particularly good at playing lyrical solos. He made numerous trips to Boston to take lessons from noted vocal teachers, in order to learn correct breathing and proper phrasing.

Most of Church's career was spent in Providence as soloist with Reeves's band. He became associated with Claude Sparry in 1900 when Sparry joined the band. The two became inseparable duet partners and friends. Unfortunately, their one-upmanship carried over to alcohol; their addiction is a matter of public record in that city. Nonetheless, both performers were popular attractions at concerts.

Reeves was invited to become temporary director of the Gilmore Band when Gilmore suddenly died in 1893; Church was hired as Reeves's replacement. Despite his drinking problem, Church did an excellent job in leading the band until Reeves returned a year later. When Reeves died in 1900, Edward Fay became director of the Providence Band. In order to stop Church's drinking, Fay offered him a contract for $100 per week—twice his previous salary—provided that he consume no alcohol. Church managed to stay sober all year, and even asked Fay to return his salary to $50 per week, stating that he was being paid too much money. However, when the contract was almost up, Church warned Fay and the band that he was going to "make up for lost time" by drinking even more than before. After a while, a new contract was signed and Church returned to the band without restriction.

Herbert Clarke became the director of the Providence Band in January of 1902 and continued with it until March 1, 1904. Clarke intended to play the cornet solos and was not willing to put up with Church's drinking, so Church was not associated with the band during this time. When Clarke left, Fay returned, engaged Church as soloist again, and named him his assistant conductor as well. Upon Fay's retirement in 1912, Church was hired as leader for a short while, but as he grew older he became a heavier drinker, and was forced to sell his large home in Providence. He later accepted a job as director of a musical organization in Jersey City, New Jersey, sponsored by the Atlantic and Pacific Tea Company.

Contemporaries of Church felt that there was little doubt that he would have become a world celebrity cornet soloist had it not been for his addiction to alcohol. Many years after leaving Providence, Clarke was asked to name the six greatest cornet soloists of all time. His response was, This is a dangerous thing to do, however I will say this, Bowen Church would have to be on the list.

Church died in Jersey City on March 13, 1923 and is buried in the family plot in East Greenwich, Rhode Island. The City of Providence placed a life-size statue of Bowen Church playing his cornet in front of the old bandstand in Roger Williams Park. (See color pages.)

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cichowicz, Vincent ("Vince") (b. Chicago, Illinois, Aug. 27, 1927; d. Fontana, Wisconsin, Dec. 11, 2006). American trumpeter. Vincent was born to Walter and Mary Cichowicz, and had a brother (Walter) and two sisters (Ange and Ann). Although his was not a musical family, there was always music in the house from radio broadcasts of the Metropolitan Opera and various orchestras. Vincent began playing the cornet at age twelve, played in his school band and took private lessons from Renold Schilke, a member of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. To pay for his lessons, Vincent worked in Schilke's garden.

After Cichowicz graduated from high school, Schilke recommended him for an audition with the Houston Symphony. So at age seventeen, Cichowicz moved to Houston, Texas, to begin his career. After one year in the orchestra, he joined the Fifth Army Band, and was assigned to the Brooke Army Medical Center at Fort Sam Houston. Upon discharge from the military, he returned to Chicago, where he began music studies at Roosevelt University. He became first trumpet at the Grand Park Concerts (1947 to 1960) and a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago in 1947 with which he played for three years. Then, in 1952 he was awarded a position as second trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, with which he remained for twenty-three years, performing under conductors Leonard Bernstein, Rafael Kubelik, Fritz Reiner, Sir Georg Solti, Jean Martinon, Otto Klemperer, Igor Stravinsky, Paul Hindemith, Daniel Barenboim, Carlo Maria Giulini, and Claudio Abbado. For all of these years, the principal trumpeter was the legendary Adolph "Bud" Herseth. Cichowicz can be seen on a video titled Hindemith conducts Hindemith (Music for Strings & Brass) produced by the CSO.

While Herseth was a naturally confident person, Cichowicz was more pragmatic in his approach to playing the trumpet. He began teaching part-time at Northwestern University in 1959, and discovered that his careful and meticulous ways were very helpful to students. In 1974 during his last year with the CSO, he accepted a fulltime position at NU, taught there until his retirement in 1998, and was replaced by two of his illustrious former students, Barbara Butler and Charles Geyer. During thirty-nine years of teaching, Cichowicz taught hundreds of professional performers and teachers, making him the foremost teacher of his generation in America.

Cichowicz participated in the Grammy Award-winning album The Antiphonal Music of Gabrieli that featured the brass sections of the Philadelphia, Cleveland, and Chicago symphonies (1968). He conducted the Millar Brass Ensemble for several years during the late 1990s. He published Flow Studies and Orchestral Excerpts for Trumpet with piano accompaniment, plus several articles and brass ensemble arrangements. He was on the advisory board of The Instrumentalist magazine. He was awarded the Legends in Teaching Award by Northwestern University, the Honorary Award by the International Trumpet Guild, and a Special Achievement Award by the Euro-ITG. In addition, he was made an honorary member of Phi Mu Alpha and Pi Kappa Lambda.

As a clinician Cichowicz traveled throughout the world. He was a regular faculty member of the National Youth Orchestra of Canada (1980-2004) and the brass seminar program at The Domaine Forget in Charlevoix, Quebec (1986-2004).

Vincent Cichowicz married Lois Cahill with whom he had three sons, Michael, Steven, and Robert. He later married Genriq E. Murphy in 1987, who accompanied him until his death on December 11, 2006 when he died of colon cancer at the age of seventy-nine.

The legacy of Vincent Cichowicz lives through his many students that occupy important positions around the world. His former CSO colleague and college roommate Frank Kaderabek stated, The man was a consummate professional...always right on the money...He made me a better trumpet player and a better person.

Bibl.: Clark, Keith C. Trumpet Sections of American Symphony Orchestras: the Chicago Symphony Orchestra (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Vol.8, no. 2, 1983); "Vincent Cichowicz." (Chicago Tribune, Dec. 14, 2009); "Vincent Cichowicz." (International Trumpet Guild website: www.trumpetguild.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Cimcoz, [Mehmet] Cemal (b. Gönen, Turkey, 1912; d. June 26, 2005). Turkish trumpeter. Cimcoz began playing in a band at a private school in Gönen for children of Gallipoli war victims. In 1926, he attended a military high school at Askeri Lisesi. After graduating, he became a member of Turkey's Presidential Wind and Brass Orchestra, serving as trumpet soloist for twenty years. He also worked in the light classical and jazz orchestras for Ankara State Radio.

From 1956 to 1972, Cimcoz was a member of the Ankara State Opera Orchestra. He retired as one of Turkey's finest trumpeters. He died at the age of approximately ninety-three.

Bibl.: "In Memoriam: Cemal Cimcoz 1912-2005" (News Item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2006); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ciurczak, Peter L[ouis] (b. 1933). American trumpeter. Ciurczak received a bachelor of music degree from the Oberlin Conservatory in 1955, a master of arts degree from Columbia University in 1959, and a PhD from North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) in 1974. His thesis is titled The Trumpet in Baroque Opera:

Its Use as a Solo, Obbligato and Ensemble Instrument. One of his teachers was John J. Haynie.

Ciurczak taught at Kansas State Teachers College (now Emporia State University) from 1963 to 1972, and was chair of the department of music from 1972 to 1979. He presented a lecture on Baroque trumpet repertoire during the first National Trumpet Symposium in Denver, Colorado, in 1968, and was made an Honorary Member of Tau Beta Sigma in 1966. He moved to Albuquerque, New Mexico, in 1979 to assume duties as director of the school of music at the University of New Mexico, and in 1988 became director of the school of music at the University of Southern Mississippi in Hattiesburg. Ciurczak retired in 1999.

Bibl.: Hardin, Anne and John J. Haynie. Inside John Haynie's Studio (University of North Texas Press).

Civiletti, Robert J. ("Bahb") (b. New York City, New York, July 13, 1946). American trumpeter. Civiletti's early training was with Myer Savits, Carmine Fornarotto, and Isidore Blank. He also studied with William Vacchiano. He received a scholarship to the Yankton Conservatory in Yankton, South Dakota, where he studied with Fredrick Kaufman, and performed in the Sioux City Symphony. He also earned a music therapy degree from Montclair State University in New Jersey, and was a therapist at Overlook State Hospital. As a performer, Civiletti became a member of the National Orchestra Association of New York and the orchestras of Tito Puente and Glenn Miller. He was also a trumpeter in the pop group, the O'Jays.

Civiletti dropped out of the music profession in 1981 to pursue other interests, but returned in 1993. While attending the 1997 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Sweden, he met the noted natural trumpet player, Friedemann Immer. Curious about the natural (valveless) trumpet and the Baroque style of playing, Civiletti was allowed to play a few notes on Immer's trumpet made by Rainer Egger. His ability on the instrument was immediately evident. Subsequently, Civiletti took several lessons from Immer, and studied with Edward Tarr at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis in Basel, Switzerland. Civiletti was first prizewinner of the Baroque division of the National Trumpet Competition at George Mason University in 2004.

Specializing in the Baroque trumpet, Civiletti has performed with the Ensemble l'Arco, Bach-Kollegium, Baroque Orchestra of Düsseldorf, Hanover Chamber Orchestra, and Baroque orchestras in Boonton, New Jersey, and Milwaukee. He has released three solo albums, The Art of the High Baroque, Bahb und Freunde, and La Musica Italiana dell'Epoca Barrocca, all on his Buccina Cantorum Recordia label.

Civiletti studied with Jerome Callet and learned Callet's tongue-controlled embouchure method. The two collaborated in publishing the book, Trumpet Secrets of the Tongue-Controlled Embouchure. Civiletti established The Brass Players Studio where he teaches private students of all ages.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Interview with Robert J. "Bahb" Civiletti" (O.J.'s Trumpet Page: http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/interview/civiletti).

Civitareale, Felice (b. Differdingen, Luxemburg, May 3, 1956). Luxemburger trumpeter and flugelhornist. Civitareale studied at the Esch-Alzette Conservatory in Luxemburg, and with Paul Lachenmeir in Munich. In 1980, he became first trumpet and flugelhorn soloist with the orchestra of Dieter Reith and Jürgen Franke. He also worked as a studio player, recording film soundtracks and backing celebrity artists such as Joan Baez, Mercedes Sosa, and Konstantin Wecker. He toured with the United Jazz & Rock Ensemble, and was a guest trumpeter in the bands of Paul Kuhn, Erwin Lehn, Thilo Wolf, Max Greger, and the Hessischer Rundfunk Orchestra and Munich Philharmonic. He has performed on dozens of recordings, and recorded a solo CD titled Let's Go To Spain (Merkton).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Clamor, Thomas (b. Minden, Westfalen, Germany, Aug. 5, 1963). German trumpeter and conductor. Clamor began playing the trumpet at age ten, and studied at the Northwest German Music Academy in Detmold with Rudolf Lodenkemper. He was a member of the opera orchestras in Hagen and Frankfurt before joining the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra in 1986, becoming the youngest member of the orchestra at the time. He currently performs with the Berlin Philharmonic Brass Ensemble, Brasserie Berlin, Berlin Brass, and the German Brass. He previously taught at the Franz Liszt Hochschule in Weimar, and currently teaches chamber music at the Hanns Eisler Music School.

As a conductor, Clamor leads the Simon Bolívar Youth Symphony Band in Venezuela, and the Venezuelan Brass Ensemble. He enjoys water sports and spending time with his family.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Clark, Keith [Collar] (b. Grand Rapids, Michigan, Nov. 21, 1927; d. Fort Pierce, Florida, Jan. 10, 2002). American trumpeter. Very few musicians are remembered from a single performance, but when Sergeant Keith Clark, Principal Bugler of the US Army Band, played Taps at President John F. Kennedy's funeral on November 25, 1963, his reputation was cemented.

Clark grew up in Grand Rapids, Michigan. He studied at the Interlochen Music School under Clifford Lillya and Lloyd Geisler before becoming a member of the Grand Rapids Symphony Orchestra. He joined the US Army Band in 1946, and eventually became the chief bugler at Arlington National Cemetery in Washington, D.C. He performed Taps countless times during a twenty-year period. Thus, he was the senior bugler called to perform for the slain president's funeral.

The day of the funeral was hectic as various ceremonial groups rehearsed for the parade ceremonies that were to be viewed by millions of television and local onlookers. Clark was required to stand at attention in the freezing rain for over three hours. Just before he played, a twenty-one-gun salute was fired within a few feet of him, causing him to become temporarily deaf. He was then given the signal to play. As the entire world wept for Kennedy, Clarke played a beautifully heartfelt rendition of Taps but cracked the top note. This single note would forever mark his career. Clark later played principal trumpet in the Southwest Florida Symphony and taught trumpet in colleges in Washington, Maryland, and New York. In addition, Clark wrote articles for the International Trumpet Guild Journal.

Clarke retired from the army in 1966, and began a career as a teacher and writer who wrote numerous trumpet-related articles. A deeply religious man, Clark amassed a huge collection of hymns (over 9,000!) that are now preserved as the Clark Hymnology Collection at Regent University in Virginia Beach, Virginia. Clark and his wife Marjorie had four daughters. He died on January 10, 2002 of an aortic aneurysm, and is buried in Arlington National Cemetery. The bugle used at Kennedy's funeral is currently on display at the Arlington Cemetery Visitor Center.

Bibl.: Goldstein, Richard. "Keith Clark, Bugler for Kennedy, Dies at 74" (The New York Times, Sept. 16, 2002); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Villanueva, Jari. "The 40th Anniversary of the Broken Note" (www.tapsbugler.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Clarke, Herbert Lincoln (b. Woburn, Massachusetts, Sept. 12, 1867; d. Long Beach, California, Jan. 30, 1945). American cornetist and composer. Based on the incredible number of solo performances with Sousa's band and others, Clarke's stature as the greatest cornetist is unparalled.

Herbert's father, William Horatio Clarke, was a celebrated organist, writer, and composer who accepted numerous positions in the United States and Canada, mostly as a church organist and public school music teacher. He taught young Herbert about music and encouraged him to practice the violin, but Herbert's obsession with the cornet was obvious from an early age. William did not care for his young son playing a band instrument, because he considered "band boys" to be a troublesome lot. Although forbidden to practice the cornet, Herbert would often practice in secret on his older brother's cornet. His father preferred that Herbert's education be geared towards architecture, for which Herbert showed a great aptitude. In later years, Clarke felt that this education helped him analyze his cornet playing and correct problems.

Herbert was the fourth of five sons in the Clarke family. The first four were close in age. Will, the oldest, became an organist and pianist, but did not pursue music as a profession. The second son, Edwin, became a fine violinist and cornetist who eventually played cornet in Sousa's band and became Sousa's general manager. Ernest, the third son, became a prominent trombonist, and solo trombonist in Gilmore's band until the band broke up. He later played in the New York Symphony Orchestra for fifteen years.

In Herbert's autobiography containing a detailed family history, nothing is mentioned of Herbert's younger brother; even his name is missing. Herbert's mother's name is also missing.

The family moved from Woburn to Dayton, Ohio, when Herbert was four or five years old. A short time later, they moved to Indianapolis where his father was a church organist, and involved with the manufacturing of organs. In 1878, they moved to Somerville, near Boston, and two years later, to Toronto. In Toronto, young Herbert heard a performance by the acclaimed American Band of Providence conducted by the great David Wallace Reeves. The cornet soloist was Bowen R. Church and Herbert, now thirteen, became totally enthralled by the sound of the cornet and his newly discovered hero, Church. Since Herbert was now older, his father approved of his serious studying of the cornet.

Herbert played violin in Dr. F.H. Torrington's Philharmonic Society Orchestra, a fine amateur group in Toronto, and joined the Queen's Own Regimental Band as a cornet player. During the summer of 1882 when he was fifteen, Herbert and his brother Edwin were paid members of the Baker and Farron Company Orchestra in Buffalo, New York, but Herbert stayed for only a month, because he did not enjoy living away from his family, which was still in Toronto. He graduated from high school in June of 1884.

The family moved back to Indianapolis in 1885, at which time Clarke became a close friend and long time associate of Walter B. Rogers. Rogers was older than Clarke, and at the time was a much more proficient cornet player. He gave Clarke many pointers on cornet playing, which helped Clarke with his solo performing. As he traveled through the area, Clarke also listened to live performances of several great cornet soloists, including Jules Levy, Walter Emerson, and Alessandro Liberati.

Clarke began playing the viola in order to join his brothers Ernest and Edwin as members of the When Clothing Store Band of Indianapolis. This group also played hand bells and were called the When Clothing Store Bell Ringers. In 1886, he entered his first cornet solo contest in Indianapolis, performing Levy's Whirlwind Polka. He won first place and was awarded a prize: Henry Distin, a brass instrument manufacturer, presented him with a unique pocket cornet, a treasure Clarke enjoyed playing occasionally for the rest of his life. As a young man in his late teens, Clarke explored several business jobs, but with the encouragement of his friends, and after winning the solo contest, he decided to pursue a career as a cornet soloist.

In September of 1887, Clarke returned to Toronto to become cornet soloist with the Citizen's Band, which was essentially the Queen's Own Regimental Band. He began to study harmony and composition, and at age twenty-three, assumed a position at the Toronto Conservatory as instructor of violin, viola, cornet, and all other brass instruments. He also became a member of the Conservatory String Quartet. In the fall of 1890, he resigned his position with the Citizen's Band in order to accept a position as director of the Heintzman's Piano Company Band in Toronto, his first conducting position. Since the band performed mostly in the summers, Clarke formed a string group named The Canadian Trio in order to continue performing during the rest of the year.

By this time, Clarke's brother Ernest was a trombonist in Patrick Gilmore's band in New York City, and arranged a private audition for Herbert. So, in February of 1892, Clarke traveled to New York to audition for the cornet soloist position with Gilmore. Clarke recalls the event:

Upon my calling at Mr. Gilmore's and waiting in his library for about half an hour, he appeared and greeted me so affably, a characteristic that made him such a lovable man to all, that I forgot my excitement for the moment…Before starting, he advised me to "warm up a bit," and this gave me more confidence...I commenced to play one of my most difficult solos; I think it was Levy's "Whirlwind Polka"...When I finished this number in a credible manner, Mr. Gilmore simply nodded his head and said, "go on." I then played a difficult air varie, finishing on a very high note, top F, that was not in the music. His exclaiming "bravo!" encouraged me to play another solo with more execution, or technique...He next asked me if I could play some simple ballads, suggesting "The Last Rose of Summer," which I knew and interpreted to his astonishment and satisfaction...Then suddenly he asked if I knew the popular soprano aria from "Robert the Devil" by Meyerbeer. "Yes." "All right, play it," he said. I certainly did my best and played the entire aria faultlessly, thinking of each phrase as it was taught to me, and putting all of my knowledge of music into the rendition. After I finished, Gilmore came over to me, patted me on the back, and told me that he had been looking for a great cornet player who could play musically, with the endurance I had displayed this afternoon and that at last he had found one!

Clarke played as cornet soloist with Gilmore until Gilmore's death in 1892. Although Victor Herbert took over the leadership of the band, without Gilmore's genius for concert promotion, the group eventually disbanded because of lack of bookings.

After his time with Gilmore's band, Clarke did substitute work in theaters, restaurants, hotels, and even dance work in New York City. He worked at resorts with Ellis Brooks, a well-known contractor in New York. Here, he met trombonist Frank Holton, a man he would be associated with for the rest of his life. In March of 1893, Clarke received a wire from John Philip Sousa offering him the solo cornet spot in his band. At the time, Sousa was a relatively unknown bandleader, but he established a fantastic band by picking up many former members of the Gilmore band. Clarke accepted the position without audition. One of the soloists in Sousa's band was the great trombonist Arthur Pryor, who encouraged Clarke to compose his own solos, telling him that all respected soloists should have their own unique repertoire.

Sousa's band would tour for weeks or months at a time, and then have several weeks or months off. Clarke continued filling this time by working with Ellis Brooks at resorts in New York and Florida.

He also played for a month with the Light Opera Company (the "Bostonians"), and in 1897, played eight weeks with Neyer's (formerly Cappa's) Band in Central Park. He began arranging music for various publishing houses in New York City. On December 1, 1898 he played second trumpet in the New York Philharmonic Orchestra conducted by Emil Pauer; he enjoyed the repertoire and was allowed to play the cornet in the ensemble. After only one season, he rejoined the Sousa band and embarked on a nine-month tour of the United States.

In 1898, Clarke began to record many of his cornet solo compositions for the Berliner Company (later Victor) in Camden, New Jersey. Many of these recordings included the Sousa Band as accompaniment, but Sousa did not participate in the sessions because he felt that "canned" music would become the downfall of live concerts. Over the next twenty-two years, Clarke recorded for several labels including Victor, Eldridge Johnson Company, Columbia, Odeon, and Edison. He was paid five dollars per day to record several cylinder masters of two solos.

In 1900, during an inactive period for the Sousa Band, Clarke was invited by Pauer to play first trumpet in the Metropolitan Opera Company. He accepted the job, but was not pleased that he was required to play trumpet rather than cornet. After a few months, Sousa called Clarke and informed him of an upcoming European tour, but Clarke was uncertain that he could be released from the orchestra in midseason. Sousa met with Pauer and the orchestra manager, and arranged for Clarke's early release, provided that they could find a suitable substitute. A new trumpeter in the city, Mr. Louis Penzkofer from Germany was selected, so Clarke was able to perform at the Grande Exposition in Paris with the Sousa Band in 1900.

Throughout 1900, Clarke continued tours of the U.S. and Canada with Sousa, and made several more recordings. In September of 1901, the Sousa Band traveled to England where they played a Command Performance for King Edward VII; Sousa wrote a march for the occasion, Imperial March. On the return voyage, Clarke composed another solo, Valse Brilliante, that at Sousa's suggestion, was renamed Sounds from the Hudson.

In 1902, Clarke accepted an offer to direct the American Band of Providence (Rhode Island), the prominent band he had heard as a boy in Toronto; he recorded Bride of the Waves and Love's Old Sweet Song with this group. The decision to take the job was based on his need to be with his family more often. He also directed the Naval Brigade Band of Massachusetts and the First Light Infantry Band of Providence, and managed to perform with Sousa at several world's fairs. Finally, in 1904, he rejoined the Sousa Band as cornet soloist, principal cornet, assistant conductor, and personnel manager. During this busy time he earned a fantastic salary.

Sousa tours continued with Clarke filling inactive periods by appearing as a soloist with other bands such as George Stewart's Band of Boston (eight weeks at the St. Louis World's Fair). He sorely missed his family; so he took them with him on a Sousa tour of Europe in December of 1904.

His family visited Clarke's parents during the summer of 1906 in Reading, Massachusetts, and while there, Clarke purchased a twenty-acre farm as a home, thinking that it would be a wonderfully relaxing place to live and rest after touring; the family immediately moved there.

Sousa was planning a yearlong world tour for 1907, so Clarke turned down many playing opportunities in order to keep the dates free. However, a dispute between Sousa and an Australian tour manager caused Sousa to tear up the contract, leaving Clarke without employment for the coming year. Clarke decided to accept pupils and began to advertise his "Clarke School for the Cornet" which he would teach out of his country home in Reading.

The on-again, off-again performance schedules with Sousa and other bands began to affect Clarke's endurance. Now forty years old, he decided that he needed to find a more efficient way of playing, and began working on a breathing system by learning to play scale and arpeggio exercises many times in one breath. After noticing much improvement in his embouchure, he systematized his exercises into four books, which he published himself around 1908-21. The books, Elementary Studies, Technical Studies, Characteristic Studies, and Setting-Up Drills, are still core books in today's pedagogy for trumpet and cornet, as well as other brass instruments.

For the next three years, Clarke's activities alternated among teaching, touring with Sousa and other bands, and recording. On a Sousa tour to Australia and New Zealand in 1910, Sousa became quite ill and was unable to complete the tour. Clarke took over the conducting of the remaining concerts, and continued playing solos as well. It was during this trip that he composed his solo, Southern Cross.

Clarke played with Sousa until the fall of 1912. Then on January 13, 1913, he took a job in Elkhart, Indiana, as a cornet tester for the Conn Company. He alternated working for Conn with touring for Sousa for three years until Charles G. Conn sold the company; Clarke was told that he did not need to return. He then worked with Frank Holton in designing the Holton-Clarke long-model cornet.

After witnessing the great Jules Levy perform long after his prime, Clarke told Sousa many times that he wanted to retire from touring at age fifty, regardless of his playing ability at that age. In keeping with this idea, Clarke played his last Sousa tour in 1917, ending with a concert at Willow Grove, the home of the Sousa Band rehearsals. He moved to Chicago, opened his School for Cornet and accepted numerous students, including Renold Schilke. Clarke occasionally performed as soloist with Sousa in special concerts such as at world's fairs or expositions, but his touring days were over.

In 1918, Clarke became director of the Anglo-Canadian Leather Company Band in Huntsville, Ontario. He was paid fifteen thousand dollars per year, a generous salary for the time. He attracted many great players to the band including his boyhood friend Walter B. Rogers. He recorded his last solos in 1921. When his five-year contract with the band expired, he asked to be released in order to move to Los Angeles where the climate was more agreeable to him and his wife, Lilian. In October 1923, after moving to California, Clarke was asked by the manager of the Long Beach Municipal Band whether he would be interested in assuming the position of director. After some initial reluctance, he accepted and became director on November 30, 1923. He occasionally performed solos with the band until 1928, and continued conducting it until 1943.

Clarke was a charter member and president of the American Bandmasters Association, and was an editor for Filmore's magazine (later Jacobs' Band and Orchestra Monthly). Late in life, he received an Honorary Doctorate from Phillips University in Enid, Oklahoma. He passed away on January 30, 1945 at the age of seventy-eight.

During his career, Clarke made over seven thousand solo appearances, including 473 in one season. He recorded more than any other cornetist, and participated in thirty-four U.S. and Canadian tours, four European tours, and one world tour. In addition to Clarke's four instructional books, he composed over 240 solos, duets, trios, quartets, and band works. His best-known solos include Bride of the Waves, Carnival of Venice, Southern Cross, Twilight Dreams, Sounds from the Hudson, The Debutante, From the Shores of the Mighty Pacific, Stars in a Velvety Sky, and La Veta Caprice.

At Clarke's funeral, the Long Beach Municipal Band played Clarke's own Past Glad Hours, and Forest Ray performed the cornet solo, Twilight Dreams. In 1947, his ashes were interred in the Congressional Cemetery in Washington, D.C. near the gravesite of John Philip Sousa. His memorabilia were donated by the Clarke family to the University of Illinois, and placed next to the John Philip Sousa Library in the A.A. Harding Band Building. (The Clarke Library has recently been relocated within the campus.)

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Clarke, Herbert L. A Cornet-Playing Pilgrim's Progress (series of 24 articles for Jacobs' Band and Orchestra Monthly) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3, detailed disc; Oct. 2008).

Clarke, Jonathan (b. South Wales, England, Oct. 14, 1977). British trumpeter. Clarke began playing the trumpet at age eight, taking his first lessons from his band director, Bill Davis. He attended the Trinity College of Music (1996-2000) where he studied modern and natural (valve-less) trumpet with Robert Farley. His postgraduate diploma was earned at the Royal Academy of Music in London, where he studied with Ian Balmain, James Watson, and Mark David (2000-01).

During his early career, Clarke gained a great deal of experience from subbing in the Malaysian Philharmonic Orchestra, Netherlands Philharmonic Orchestra, and Singapore Symphony Orchestra, as well as serving as guest principal trumpet of the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, BBC Philharmonic Orchestra, BBC Concert Orchestra, Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestra, Royal Philharmonic Concert Orchestra, Orkest Van Het Oosten, Netherlands Opera Orchestra, and the Manchester Camerata. He was appointed principal of the Netherlands Radio Philharmonic Orchestra (2001-02), Royal Philharmonic Orchestra (2004), West Australian Symphony Orchestra (2004), Hallé Orchestra (2007), and assistant principal of the BBC Philharmonic Orchestra (2008-09).

Clarke has been principal of the Hong Kong Philharmonic Orchestra (since 2003). He has taught at the Hong Kong Academy of Music (since 2003), Hong Kong Chinese University (2004-06), and Hong Kong Baptist University (2007-10).

Bibl.: "Jonathan Clarke" (www.4barsrest.com/classifieds/cards_details.asp?id=2763).

Clayton, Wilbur Dorsey ("Buck") (b. Parsons, Kansas, Nov. 12, 1911; d. New York, New York, Dec. 8, 1991). American trumpeter. Clayton began playing the piano at the age of six, and was performing in a kid's band in the following year. His father was a minister and a fine amateur tuba and trumpet-playing musician who taught Buck how to play. Buck took up the trumpet at the age of seventeen, after being inspired from hearing Louis Armstrong.

After graduating from high school in 1930, Clayton moved to California where he began playing in various jazz groups at night, while working regular jobs during the day. Within a couple of years, he was working fulltime with musicians such as Duke Ellighew, the Irving Brothers, Lavern Floyd, Charlie Echols, and Earl Dancer. When Dancer was caught gambling with the band's money, he was kicked out of the band, and Clayton was elected its new leader. When Teddy Weatherford came to Los Angeles in 1934 looking for a band to take to China, he selected Clayton's group. They played at the International Settlement in Shanghai from 1934 to 1935, and made excellent salaries. The band returned to Los Angeles in 1935.

Clayton was offered a job playing in Willie Bryant's orchestra in New York City. Clayton accepted the position, and began the long drive from Los Angeles to New York. He stopped in Kansas City to see his mother and check out the jazz scene in town. There, he was persuaded by Count Basie to replace Hot Lips Page who had left the band. He decided to stay in Kansas City to play in Basie's band, and became the main soloist of the group from 1936 to 1943. Some of his best featured numbers were Topsy, Swinging the Blues, Fiesta in Blue, Sent for You Yesterday, Good Morning Blues, Swinging at the Daisy Chain, One O'Clock Jump, and Jumpin' at the Woodside (original version). Many of these solos were performed with cup mute.

In addition to recording with Basie, Clayton also backed many popular jazz singers, such as Teddy Wilson, Billie Holiday, and Lester Young, in recordings. He also recorded with the Kansas City Five in 1938. Clayton was an excellent composer and arranger, contributing numerous tunes to the orchestras of Basie, Benny Goodman, Tommy Dorsey, and Duke Ellington. Works included Avenue C, Down for Double, Love Jumped Out, Taps Miller, and Red Bank Boogie. He also appeared with the Basie orchestra in the 1943 film, Reveille with Beverly Clayton was drafted into the Army in 1943. During his three years of service, he played with bands led by Sy Oliver and Mercer Ellington. He earned the distinction of Best Trumpeter in the Army. After his military years, he played mostly with small groups and Norman Granz's Jazz at the Philharmonic (1946-48). In 1949, he worked in the United States and Europe, and often recorded. He played with Jimmy Rushing and Joe Bushkin in the early 1950s, and toured Europe with Mezz Mezzrow in 1953. Clayton became a leading Dixieland player, and recorded a series of jam session recordings in 1953-56 for Columbia Records under his own name.

The 1950s and '60s were good years for Clayton. He played with Tony Parenti and Benny Goodman (1955-56), and in 1955 appeared in the film, The Benny Goodman Story. In 1958, he performed with Sidney Bechet at the World's Fair in Brussels. He worked and recorded with Eddie Condon from 1959 to 1964, and participated in the Count Basie reunion band in 1961, making numerous appearances in Europe and on television. In 1967, he also appeared with John Hammond's thirtieth anniversary Spirituals to Swing concert.

Health and dental problems plagued Clayton in 1967. As things worsened, he had to quit playing from 1972 to 1976. He made a playing comeback at the Grande Parade du Jazz in Nice in 1976 and 1979, and with his band that toured Africa in 1977 sponsored by the US State Department. He became depressed during the 1970s and worked as a salesman, although he spent some of his time working in the musicians' union office and supervising recording sessions for Chiaroscuro Records. In 1983-86, he led a big band and toured Europe. He taught at Hunter College for five years, but did not find this to be very satisfying. In his last years, much of his time was devoted to composing and arranging. He wrote his memoirs in Buck Clayton's Jazz World in 1987. He died on December 8, 1991 at the age of eighty.

Buck Clayton is a model in mainstream jazz playing, showing a good tone quality, swing, and inspiration. He used the following trumpets: Blessing Super 1938, Besson Meha (1940s-50s), Selmer K Modified (1950s-60s), Holton Galaxy, HN White King Liberty, and Getzen Eterna (end of his career) with an Al Cass mouthpiece.

Bibl.: Clayton, Buck and Nancy Miller Elliott. Buck Clayton's Jazz World (Oxford University Press); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Clendenin, W[illiam] Ritchie (b. Columbia, South Carolina, June 7, 1943). American trumpeter and cornetist. Clendenin grew up in Boulder, Colorado, and began studying with Frank W. Baird in 1953 at the age of ten. He graduated from Boulder High School in 1961, and attended the University of Colorado under Baird from 1961 to 1965. After receiving his bachelor of music degree, he earned a master of music degree at Yale University (1965-67) where he was a student of Robert Nagel. He then became a member of the US Marine Band "The President's Own" in Washington, D.C. from 1967 to 1971, giving him the opportunity to tour the country in 1968 and 1969, as well as perform at The White House as a member of the White House Orchestra. He was also the trumpet soloist for The White House wedding of Lynda Bird Johnson and Capt. Charles Robb in 1967. After his military obligation, he earned a doctor of musical arts degree at the University of Colorado (under Baird) in 1973. Additional studies were with Charles Brady.

Dr. Clendenin accepted a trumpet professorship at California State University in Fresno during the fall of 1973, where he taught until 2002. He was given the distinction of Professor Emeritus of Music in 2003. He has performed as a member of the Colorado Brass Quintet (1971-73), New Haven Symphony Orchestra from 1965 to 1967 (principal, 1966-67), Colorado Music Festival Orchestra from 1977 to 1979 (principal, 1978-79), and is the current cornet soloist and section leader of the WSC Colorado Brass Band (since 1990) and a member of Bugles Across America since 2007. He also played with the Fresno Philharmonic, Fountain Creek Brass Band, Golden State British Brass Band (Los Angeles), and the British Brass Band of CSU. He taught at the University of Illinois during the summer of 1975, and is an active cornet soloist with brass bands and school bands in Colorado and California. He is on the board of directors of the Rocky Mountain Trumpet Fest. Among his many former students are Frank G. Campos, Larry Engstrom, and Michael Caldwell. Now retired, W. Ritchie Clendenin resides in Boulder, Colorado. His hobby is performing with local brass bands.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interviews, Jan. 20 and 24, 2012.

Cline, Gilbert D. (b. Honolulu, Hawaii, Oct. 2, 1953). American trumpeter. Cline grew up in California. His father, an amateur cornet player and traditional jazz fan, was a California State Park Ranger who was transferred to various locations. As a result, Cline lived in Boulder Creek (beginning trumpet in fifth grade), Cambria, Sonoma, and Fortuna. His first formal trumpet lessons were with Richard Stroud. Other influential music teachers were Millard Martin, Richard Schneider, Leon Rye, William Swackhamer, and Kenneth Brungess. Cline attended Humboldt State University where he studied with John Carr, graduating with a bachelor's degree in 1975. He also earned a master's degree at California State University-Hayward, studying with Marv Nelson (1980), and a DMA studying with George Recker at the University of Oregon (1990).

Cline first taught at Humboldt State University in Arcata, California, in 1977, and was appointed professor in 1982. In the early 1980s, he performed with the Oakland Symphony, Eugene (Oregon) Symphony, and Oregon Bach Festival Orchestra. At HSU, he teaches scoring and music history, is director of the Humboldt Bay Brass, and teaches jazz band. He is an authority on the natural (valveless) trumpet, and has played it with the Seattle Baroque, American Bach Soloists, Chanticleer, Magnificat, Trinity Consort, Indianapolis Baroque Orchestra, Musica Angelica Baroque, Portland Baroque Orchestra, Jefferson Baroque Orchestra, and San Luis Obispo Mozart Festival Orchestra. He leads the Trumpet Consort von Humboldt. Cline has composed some forty works, made dozens of historical arrangements, and is a founding member of the Humboldt Chamber Music Workshop and the Historic Brass Society.

Cline and his wife Valorie have a son, Tyler, a violinist. Gilbert's hobbies include gardening, mouthpiece customizing, masonry, automotive maintenance and customizing, and aviation.

Bibl.: personal interviews, Sept. 7 and 12, 2010.

Clodfelter, [Timothy] Mark (b. Winston-Salem, North Carolina, Aug. 17, 1966). American trumpeter. Clodfelter received a bugle for Christmas when he was six years old, and was given early instruction on the instrument by his father, who had played trombone in high school. Mark began playing trumpet at age twelve under the guidance of his band director John Olsen, and during his senior year of high school took private lessons from Tim Phillips. After graduating from North Davidson High School in 1984, he attended Lenoir Rhyne College (1984-89) where he studied with Don Eagle of the North Carolina Symphony and earned a bachelor of music education degree. He earned a master of music degree studying with Raymond Mase at the North Carolina School of the Arts (1989-91). He also studied with James Thompson and David Hickman.

Clodfelter's professional career began when he played with the Western Piedmont Symphony (1987-91), Greensboro Symphony (1990-97), Salisbury Symphony (1991-97), Greenville Symphony (1992-96), and the Eastern Music Festival's Eastern Philharmonic (1994). He taught at Mars Hill College from 1996 to 2002 before joining the faculty at the University of Kentucky in the fall of 2002. He accepted a one-year position at the University of North Carolina at Greensboro during the 2012-13 academic year while taking a leave of absence from the University of Kentucky, and later won the permanent position in November of 2012. He has also performed as principal trumpet of the Asheville Symphony Orchestra, the Trade Winds (Tampa, Florida), and as coprincipal of Orchestra Kentucky. A highly versatile performer, he has also played with the DiMartino/Osland Jazz Orchestra and the Kentucky Jazz Repertory Orchestra. He has backed celebrity artists such as The O'Jays, Gladys Knight, Mannheim Steamroller, the Moody Blues, The Lettermen, Doc Severinsen, Bob Mintzer, Frank Mantooth, Lou Rawls, Glen Campbell, and Ray Charles. He is an active recitalist and chamber musician who often performs with his wife, pianist Rebecca Wilt (married in 2009). In addition, he has taught at the Eastern Music Festival, served as trumpet instructor of the Carolina Crown Drum and Bugle Corps, and is a founding member of the Giannini Brass.

Clodfelter has a daughter, Hannah (b. 1999). His hobbies include fishing, hunting, snow skiing, home studio recording, watch collecting, and tobacco pipe collecting.

Bibl.: Mark Clodfelter's official website: www.markclodfelter.com; personal interview, Sept. 15, 2012.

Clyman, John [Jr.] (b. c1916; d. 1981). American trumpeter. As a young man, Clyman played in the All American Youth Orchestra under Maestro Leopold Stokowski, which performed a world tour in 1941. (The other trumpeter was Lloyd Geisler.) His teacher was Vladimir Drucker. He spent twenty-five years of his career as a staff trumpeter at the Paramount and Twentieth Century Fox studios in Hollywood, California, where he performed on hundreds of soundtracks for Hollywood films during the 1940, '50s, and early '60s. He also played principal trumpet with the Los Angeles Philharmonic (1947-50) and the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra.

Clyman was an active teacher who had a reputation for being extremely strict and intimidating with his students; he told them that he would give them a little sugar now and then, but most of what he would give them would be vinegar. He wanted to toughen them up for the real world. "Tough love" was his style for the first year or so, but once he knew that a student was completely committed to a career as a trumpet player, and would do everything it took to get there, he showed more interest in them and their playing than before. He taught lessons at his home in Pacific Palisades, which was always very neat and clean. (One student described it as a four-star hotel lobby.) During the mid 1970s, he also taught at the University of Southern California. Some of his students include Bill Bryant, Chase Craig, Dean Drummond, Russell Kidd, Patrick Kunkee, Larry Gianni, A. Howard Lackey, Kim Pensyl, Bob Reeves, Tom Snelson, and Philip Tauber. Clyman taught the pedal tone method similar to Claude Gordon and Louis Maggio.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "John Clyman" thread on www.TrumpetMaster.com (accessed on 11/4/10); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Coassin, Robert ("Bob") (b. Hamden, Connecticut, Nov. 11, 1953). American trumpeter. Coassin began playing trumpet at age six. He progressed rapidly, and before graduating from high school, was studying in New York City and touring Europe with jazz trumpeter Clark Terry. At age eighteen, he became the lead trumpet player with the Ray Charles Orchestra, touring the world for four years and releasing six albums. He then played for three years with the Buddy Rich Big Band, and performed with Stan Kenton's last band.

Coassin moved to Europe in 1980 where he toured as lead trumpet with the bands of Mel Lewis, Bob Brookmeyer, Dizzy Gillespie, Bill Holman, and Al Cohn. He also taught at various schools on a part-time basis and recorded for films and television productions, backing such artists as Frank Sinatra, Mel Tormé, Caterina Valente, Jose Feliciano, and Smokey Robinson. He was also a member of Tower of Power, the James Last Orchestra, and the Peter Herbolzheimer band.

Relocating to Sydney, Australia, in 1988, but still playing with James Last, Coassin formed his own band called Superforce. He has also performed and recorded with Anthony Warlow, Olivia Newton-John, INXS, Grace Knight, and Kate Ceberano. He remains an active freelance trumpeter, studio player, and teacher.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bob Coassin" (www.johnfarnham.info/band/bob.htm).

Cobb, Kevin (b. Bowling Green, Ohio, May 28, 1971). American trumpeter. Cobb began his studies at age ten under the guidance of Martin Porter. In just three years he performed his first solo, Herbert Clarke's difficult The Debutante, with the Naperville (IL) Municipal Band. At age fifteen he was the winner of the Toledo Symphony Orchestra's youth solo competition; his other early teachers were Terry Schwartz and John Aley. From 1986 to 1989, he studied with John Lindenau at the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan, and from 1989 to 1993 earned a bachelor of music degree at the Curtis Institute in Philadelphia where he studied with Frank Kaderabek. He completed his studies at The Juilliard School (1993-95) with Mark Gould, receiving a master of music degree.

An active freelance performer, Cobb has played with many of New York's leading ensembles including Speculum Musicae, New York New Music Ensemble, Metropolitan Opera Orchestra, Orchestra of St. Luke's, New York Ballet Orchestra, and the New York Philharmonic. From 1995 to 1998, he spent his summers as principal trumpet of the Utah Festival Opera Company. He is also a member of the New York Big Brass, and tours with the Paragon Ragtime Orchestra. He joined the American Brass Quintet in the fall of 1998, and with that appointment became a faculty member at The Juilliard School and the Aspen Music Festival. He is also on the faculty of the Mason Gross School of the Arts at Rutgers University, State University of New York at Stonybrook (since 2005), and the Hartt School of Music (since 2008). He is a former member of the Manhattan Brass Quintet and the Meridian Arts Ensemble.

Cobb is an active soloist and chamber musician who has served as a judge at several national music competitions. He has recorded nearly a dozen CDs with the American Brass Quintet and has released the solo CD, One, on the Summit Records label. Along with Brian McWhorter, he cohosts the Integral Trumpet Retreat. He is coprincipal of the Festival Orchestra at the Aspen Music Festival, and also teaches at the Colorado College Summer Music Festival.

Cobb's hobbies include playing guitar and composing music unrelated to the classical arts. He likes to hike and bicycle outdoors, and is learning about psychology.

Bibl.: "Kevin Cobb" (www.juilliard.edu/degrees-programs/music/faculty/detail.php?Facultyid=51); "Kevin Cobb" (www.stonybrook.edu/commcms/music/aboutus/faculty/cobb_kevin.html); "Kevin Cobb" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Kevin_Cobb); personal interviews, Dec. 7 and 20, 2012.

Coble, George (b. Boston, Massachusetts, Mar. 27, 1948). American trumpeter. Coble grew up in Syracuse, New York, and studied with Don L. Smithers at Syracuse University and with Rudolph Nashan, then principal of the Syracuse Symphony Orchestra. Additionally, he has studied with Charles Schlueter, Robert Nagel, Bernard Adelstein, Frank Kaderabek, and Emory Remington.

Coble began performing with the Syracuse Symphony in 1969, and was appointed principal trumpet in 1972. After twenty-two years in the orchestra, he became the associate principal/third trumpet of the New York Philharmonic in 1992, but returned to Syracuse a short time later to resume his prior position there. He also played with the Syracuse Symphony Brass Quintet and the Syracuse Rock Ensemble. He was invited to play at Festivals at Tanglewood, Chautauqua, Oberlin, and the Blossom Festival under Robert Shaw, as well as with the Cleveland Orchestra and the Scranton Philharmonic. He has taught at the Colgate University, Hamilton College, and Syracuse University.

Coble's wife Deborah has played in the SSO since 1995, and is the current principal flute. George retired from the SSO in 2009. The Cobles have two children. George's hobbies include cooking, wine tasting, and hiking.

Bibl.: Campos, Frank G. "An Interview with George Coble" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1991); Syracuse Symphony Orchestra website (www.syracusesymphony.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Coffman, Janis Marshelle (b. Dallas, Texas, Nov. 23, 1949). American trumpeter. Coffman began playing the trumpet at age eleven, and studied with George Gaidosh and Ronald Modell. She attended the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan, graduating in 1968. She then studied with Louis Davidson at Indiana University (1968-72), earning a bachelor of music degree. She was cosecond place winner (no first prize was awarded) of the Munich Competition (1971), and performed a recital during the National Trumpet Symposium in Denver, Colorado (1973). In that same year, she gave her New York debut recital at Carnegie Hall. Additionally, she has studied with Samuel Krauss (Philadelphia, 1970) and Timofei Dokshitser (Gnesin Institute, 1976-77).

Coffman was principal trumpet of the Munich Philharmonic Orchestra for one season (1972-73), but left because of sexual bias against females by several male members of the brass section. She then became coprincipal of the Stockholm Philharmonic Orchestra (August 1973-82). After resigning from the orchestra, she earned a master of music degree studying with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University (1983). She was featured with the Cologne Radio Orchestra, Barcelona Symphonic Orchestra (November 1972), and various ensembles in Holland (1973), and participated in the ITG Conference at Ithaca College (1983). In addition to freelancing in the Chicago area, Coffman was a guest orchestral trumpeter with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra, San Diego Symphony, Oklahoma Symphony, Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, Munich Bach Orchestra, West Berlin Opera Orchestra, and the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra in London.

In 1990, Coffman decided to leave orchestral playing, and study computer software and programming at DePaul University in Chicago, earning a master of science degree in 1995. She has been working in the computer industry since that time. She has two children, Michael and Elena.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Janis Marshelle Coffman" (1973 National Trumpet Symposium program booklet); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cohen, Paul ("Pauly") (b. Oct. 3, 1922). American trumpeter and bandleader. Cohen grew up in Brooklyn, New York, and graduated from Lincoln High School. He is a big band trumpeter who began his career during the mid 1940s with the Earl Hines Orchestra. He became a friend and mentor to the young trumpeter, John Birks ("Dizzy) Gillespie, who also played with Hines at the time. Over the years, Cohen performed and recorded with several big bands led by illustrious names such as Tommy Dorsey, Artie Shaw, Charlie Barnet, and Count Basie (lead trumpet, 1970-74 and 1979). He also recorded with a host of leading artists that also include Buddy Rich, Quincy Jones, Buddy DeFranco, Willie Nelson, Woody Herman, and Roy Eldridge.

Since the 1980s, Cohen has fronted his own big band in South Florida. Now approximately ninety years old, he remains an active trumpeter and bandleader.

Bibl.: www.swingandjazzpreservationsociety.org/item_detail.asp?id=23&itemdesc=February+15%2C+2005+Concert+Review.

Cohn, George ("Sonny") (b. Chicago, Illinois, Mar. 14, 1925; d. Chicago, Illinois, Nov. 7, 2006). American trumpeter. Sonny Cohn's father was an amateur trumpeter. Sonny began playing the trumpet at age nine under Charles Anderson (1936), and eventually played in his sister's band, Francis & Her Rhythm Kings (a trio consisting of trumpet, piano, and drums). His professional career began in 1942 with Richard Fox, followed by Walter Dyett's DuSable-ites (1943-45), and then a stint in a military band (1943-45). He played on and off with Red Saunders from 1945 to 1960, and also performed with Louie Bellson and Erskine Hawkins. Cohn recorded with Tab Smith and Jodie Christian.

Sonny Cohn's main reputation came from being a staple in Count Basie's orchestra, beginning in 1960 and continuing until 1990, six years after Basie's death. Cohn was known for his muted solos, excellent arrangements, personal reliability, clean-cut looks, and responsible personality. He also served as Basie's road manager for twenty years while being a member of the band. During his career, Cohn participated in nearly two hundred recording sessions, at times backing famous artists such as Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald, Sarah Vaughan, and Sammy Davis Jr.

After leaving the Basie band in 1990, Cohn went into semiretirement. He continued playing, however, even after heart surgery in 2002. He passed away in 2006 at the age of eighty-one.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Sonny Cohn" (www.answers.com); "George "Sonny" Cohn (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuiuvres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cola, George ("Kid Sheik") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Sept. 15, 1908; d. Detroit, Michigan, Nov. 7, 1996). American trumpeter. Always referred to as "Kid Sheik Colar," he discovered in 1963 when requesting a passport that the correct spelling of his name was Cola, not Colar. Cola learned to play piano and drums, then the trumpet from "Wooden" Joe Nicholas (1924), Chris Kelly (1924), Louis Dumaine, and the classical cornet player George McCullum.

At age fifteen, he formed his first band, the Kid Sheik's Swingsters (1923 to 1945). He also played with Chris Kelly—his main influence (1924), brass bands led by Kid Rena, Kid Howard, and in the Tuxedo Brass Band.

Cola joined the Air Force Music School from 1943 to 1945, and was a company bugler in the army. After his military service, he returned to New Orleans and worked with George Lewis (1949), the Eureka Brass Band, Olympia Brass Band, and other groups. In 1963, he toured England with Barry Martyn.

During the 1960s, Cola played with John Handy. The 1970s and '80s were spent mostly performing and touring with the Preservation Hall Jazz Band. He recorded a great deal between 1961 and 1981, and had a large following of fans. Some of his best albums include Kid Sheik's Swingsters (Jazzology), Kid Martyn in New Orleans with Kid Sheik's Band (77), Kid Sheik in England (GHB), New Orleans Jazz in Cleveland (Eureka), The Sheik of Araby (504 Records), Kid Sheik and His Cado Street Jazz Band 1960 (504 Records), Kid Sheik in Cleveland and Boston (American Recordings), Kid Sheik and Brother Cornbread in Copenhagen (Jazz Crusade), In the Groove (GHB), and Kid Sheik's First Europe Tour (GHB).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cole, Grace ("Gracie") Elizabeth Agnes Annie (b. Rowlands Gill, County Durham, England, Sept. 8, 1924; d. Westcott, Surrey, England, Dec. 28, 2006). British trumpeter and bandleader. Cole's father Albert moved to Yorkshire in search of work as a miner when Gracie was two years old. He played cornet in colliery bands and taught Gracie to play the cornet when she was twelve. She excelled quickly, winning several solo competitions within a year or two. During her teens, she played with various local brass bands, including the Firebeck Colliery Band with her father, and Besses o' th' Barn. Her first radio performance was at age fifteen on the BBC Radio's Children's Hour program. In 1942, she became the first woman to compete for the Alexander Owen Memorial Scholarship, which she won by an unprecedented twenty-one points.

Cole's father encouraged her to do her part for the war effort during World War II, so she auditioned for Gloria Gaye's All Girls

Band that toured various theaters and military forces shows organized by the Entertainments National Service Association. Gaye asked her to switch to the trumpet, but Cole told him that, I love my fat little cornet, close to my face, close to my heart. Gaye replied that it [cornet] was good enough for Louis Armstrong, and she was hired (1942). After eighteen months, however, she joined Rudy Starita's All-Girl Band that also entertained military troops throughout Europe. Then, in November of 1945, she joined Ivy Benson's band as lead trumpet and soloist, and toured with it for the next six years. The band was featured on numerous radio and television broadcasts, including its own Ladies Night series.

In 1951, Cole married Bill Geldhard, a trombonist with the George Evans Band. When a newspaper called for a performance and photograph of the combined bands of Benson and Evans, Cole's hot trumpet solo in an arrangement of Dizzy Gillespie's hard bebop tune, Shaw Nuff, impressed Evans enough to hire her for his previously all-male band. After eighteen months, she and her husband joined the Squadronaires, the most popular band at the time. She became uncomfortable being the only woman in the band, so she quit, and formed an all-female band that she led from 1952 to 1956. In 1958, she fronted an all-male band at Mecca Ballrooms.

Cole and Geldhard had two daughters, Kim and Lois, both of whom became musicians. Cole devoted most of her time to raising her family, and did little musical work during the 1960s, although she occasionally played piano and trumpet in recordings or television shows. In 1978, she began playing trumpet again, and performed with brass bands in Oxted, Surrey, and Horsham, West Sussex. Her pioneering efforts for women in music were appreciated during the 1980s, and she often granted interviews concerning the women's movement. Because of her inspiration to many brass bands, she was made a Freeman of the City of London in 1990.

With the demise of commercially viable big bands, Cole's jazz career began to wind down. In 2000, she became ill with Alzheimer's disease, and was eventually forced to give up her trumpet playing. She continued to play piano in nursing homes until a few weeks before her death at age eighty-two.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Gracie Cole" (Obituary, The Guardian newspaper, Jan. 19, 2007); "Gracie Cole" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Gracie_Cole).

Cole, Ward (b. Helena, Montana, c1930). American trumpeter and composer. Ward Cole, a student of William Vacchiano, worked during the 1950s in New York City as first trumpet in Fred Waring's touring group, The Pennsylvanians. He was a versatile trumpeter who played jazz and classical styles with the Seattle Symphony, and at Radio City Music Hall.

Cole moved to Toronto, Ontario, in Canada to teach trumpet and conducting at the University of Toronto (1960s), and played extra with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra. In 1968, he took a position as head of the music department at the University of Calgary where he continued playing and teaching trumpet for five years. After leaving this position, he freelanced in Calgary as a jazz and classical musician until retiring to Oceanside, California, in 1981.

Cole is still active as a composer and performer with local big bands. He was on the Interim Steering Committee of the International Trumpet Guild during the mid 1970s.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ward Cole" (www.windmusicsales.com/composer/Cole/Ward#).

Coleman, William ("Bill") Johnson (b. Centreville, Kentucky, Aug. 4, 1904; d. Toulouse, France, Aug. 24, 1981). American trumpeter. Coleman came from a musical family. His father Robert Henry Coleman played snare and bass drums, his uncles were brass players—Ernest Coleman on tuba, and John Coleman on cornet. He grew up in Cincinnati and first began vocal lessons under Jessie Seltzer in 1920. He also learned piano under Miss Hargrave (1921) and began on alto horn in Ernest Moore's Concert Band in Cincinnati (1919). Coleman briefly played the C melody sax, but switched to trumpet at the age of eighteen after being inspired by a recording of Louis Armstrong. He received lessons on trumpet mainly from Wingy Carpenter, and later from Steve Dunn (1924), Gus McClung (1927), and Cuban Bennett (1928). He taught himself to read music while playing with the bands of J. C. Higginbotham and Edgar Hayes.

Bill Coleman played as a professional with J.C. Higginbotham and Edgar Courance (1922), Edgar Hayes, and Clarence Paige (1923). In 1923-24, he played in the Zack Whyte Orchestra alongside Steve Dunn on trumpet.

Coleman moved to New York City in 1927, where he soon played with Lloyd and Cecil Scott (1927 to 1929 alongside Frankie Newton on trumpet). He made his record debuts with Cecil Scott in 1929, and his solo on Springfield Stomp shows his innovative, fluent style. In 1929, he joined Luis Russell's band, but he felt overshadowed by Henry "Red" Allen and left it to play with Cecil Scott's Bright Boys (late 1929 to spring 1930) and Charlie Johnson (1930-31, including a show with Bessie Smith), but returned to Russell's band in 1931-32. He later played with Ralph Cooper's Kongo Knights and recorded with Russell and Don Redman.

From June to October 1933, Colman toured France and Monte Carlo with Lucky Millinder. When he returned to the U.S. later that year, he played with Benny Carter (late 1933) and Teddy Hill (late 1934 to spring 1935), as well as recording with Fats Waller (fourteen sides in 1934). He returned to Europe (1935) with Freddy Taylor (until 1936) and became a top soloist with other groups as well. He spent a total of five years in Europe, performing with Taylor, Willie Lewis (June 1937 to December 1938), Leon Abbey (tour of Bombay, November 1936 to April 1937), and as coleader of the Harlem Rhythm Masters (touring Egypt in 1938-40). He made some excellent recordings as a leader in Paris, and also recorded with Garnett Clark's Hot Club Four, Willie Lewis, Alix Combelle, Eddie Martin, Eddie Brunner, and others. He became a star in Europe, especially France.

Despite his popularity in France, Bill Coleman returned to the U.S. from 1940-48. He recorded with Lester Young's Kansas City Six, Billie Holiday, and Coleman Hawkins, and performed as well with Joe Marsala (April 1940), Benny Carter (May 1940), Fats Waller (1940), Teddy Wilson (1940-41), Andy Kirk (1941-42), Ellis Larkins (1943 at the Café Society), Mary Lou Williams (1944-45), the John Kirby Sextet (1944-45), toured Japan and the Philippines (1945), and then joined Sy Oliver (1946-47), Billy Kyle (1947-48), and Slim Moore in a boppish repertory (1948). He also led his own groups off and on. In the United States, he was a well-respected jazz soloist known for his elegance and fluidity. At the invitation of Charles Delaunay in December of 1948, Coleman moved permanently to Paris, France, but visited the U.S. in 1954 and 1958.

Bill Coleman performed at the Edouard VII Theatre (October 1948), with Kenny Clarke (Geneva, 1949), and recorded with Sidney Bechet (Happy Go Lucky Blues) and Buck Clayton (BC and BC, 1949). Quite influenced by the bop style, he made a good session with Don Byas, recording What Is this Thing Called Love. He led his own All-Stars in 1952 (which included Dickie Wells and Zutty Singleton). He also led his own band at the Trois Mailletz in Paris (1955-60) and toured Italy with Benny Waters (1956), then with Albert Nicholas and Don Byas (1957). He was a guest soloist with the Dutch Swing College Band in 1957. He was guest with Count Basie at the Antibes Festival (1961) and toured Switzerland in 1962-63.

From 1960 to 1963, Bill Coleman studied harmony under Julien Falk. He also collaborated with Jef Gilson (1966), toured England (1966 and 1967), played with Buddy Tate (Antwerp, 1969), Raymond Fonsèque (from 1969), and did a television show with Duke Ellington (1970). Bill Coleman appeared at the Montreux Festival (1973) and the Grande Parade du Jazz in Nice (1974) where he played with Earl Hines, Barney Bigard, Cozy Cole, Vic Dickenson, Jo Jones, and Joe Venuti, among others. He established himself in the south of France, and was the golden-father of the Marciac Jazz Festival (1979). In April 1980, he joined Michel Laplace's Trumpet Workshop in a Tribute to Louis Armstrong, and in 1981 appeared on French television with Raymond Fonsèque to introduce his autobiography, Trumpet Story. (The English version was published in 1991 by Northwestern University Press.)

Coleman was a popular and elegant swing trumpeter from the 1940s until the 1970s and could play some bebop and Dixieland, if needed. With Roy Eldridge and Harry Edison, Coleman was a model of mainstream jazz playing on trumpet—very legato with some velocity. His early influences were Dijau and Dolly Jones (1918), Joe Smith (1922), Doc Cheatham (1923), Louis Armstrong (1925), Roy Eldridge (1927), Jabbo Smith (1928), Peanuts Holland (1931), and mainly Cuban Bennett. Great at playing ballads, Bill Coleman made the Couesnon flugelhorn very popular. Some of his best albums are Swingin' in Switzerland (Black and Blue), From Boogie to Funk (Brunswick), Bill Coleman Sings and Plays Spirituals (1971, Concert Hall), Bill and the Boys (Concert Hall), and Really I Do (Black and Blue).

Coleman died in France at the age of seventy-seven. He is buried at the Cadeillan Cemetery in southwest France.

Bibl.: Coleman, Bill. Trumpet Story (Northwestern University Press); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom with a full study, excerpt on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Coles, John ("Johnny") (b. Trenton, New Jersey, July 3, 1926; d. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Dec. 21, 1997). American trumpeter. John Coles was self-taught on the trumpet starting at the age of ten, and continued his music studies at the Mastbaum Vocational School in Philadelphia. He then played in an army service band. After his military duties, Coles joined Slappy and his Swingers (1945-48) and other rhythm and blues bands such as those of Eddie "Cleanhead" Vinson (1948-51), Bull Moose Jackson (1952), and Earl Bostic (1955-56). At the same time, he also played bebop in Philadelphia with Philly Joe Jones (1951) and jam sessions at the Elks Lodge with Miles Davis.

Coles's excellent reputation stemmed from his playing of trumpet and flugelhorn with James Moody (1956-58), Gil Evans and Miles Davis (1958-66), and Charles Mingus's Sextet (1964). He also recorded with Duke Pearson and Astrud Gilberto. His warm and serene solos were a result of the influences of Miles Davis and Dizzy Gillespie (and later by the vocals of Ray Charles). He was a founding member of Herbie Hancock's band in 1968, and toured with Ray Charles (1969-70 and 1974-75), Duke Ellington (1970-73), Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1976), and the Count Basie Orchestra led by Thad Jones (1985-86). Coles also worked with Dameronia and the Mingus Dynasty.

Although most of Johnny Coles's recordings were as a member of other people's bands, he did record as a leader for Epic (The Warm Sound, 1961), Blue Note (Little Johnny C, 1963), Mainstream (Katumbo, 1971), and Chris Cross (New Morning, 1982). However, many of Coles's listeners consider Out of the Cool with Charles Mingus to be his best album, even though he was not the leader. Coles can also be seen and heard in the video, Charles Mingus Sextet (Shanachie, 1964).

Johnny Coles was an underappreciated artist who spent most of his career as a significant sideman. He was married and divorced, but had no children. He moved to San Francisco in 1985, but retired to his hometown of Philadelphia in 1989. He died of stomach cancer in the following year. The 5-foot 3-inch trumpeter weighed only sixty pounds at the time of his death. The PECO Energy Jazz Festival honored him with their Living Legends of Jazz award.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Johnny Cole" (www.jazzhouse.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Colin, Charles [Coleen Kalbofsky] (b. Salem, Massachusetts, Sept. 22, 1913; d. Port Chester, New York, Feb. 7, 2000). American trumpeter and publisher. Colin's father was a women's tailor and a part-time furrier; his mother had health problems and was frequently in the hospital; he had five brothers and grew up in Salem, Massachusetts.

At the age of nine, he began studying the violin but switched to cornet when his neighbor and professional trumpeter Harry Berken offered to give him a cornet and instruct him in how to play it. But, because of Berken's drinking during lessons, Colin soon quit studying with him even though they remained friends for many years.

At age eleven, Colin began studying with Aaron Harris, an accomplished euphonium player who had recently played with Sousa's band. Harris was an excellent teacher, and Colin made excellent progress through his eight years of study with him. After graduating from high school in 1932, Colin attended the New England Conservatory where he studied with Louis J. Kloepfel. He also played in the New England Brass Ensemble (1935-36).

Colin moved to New York City, and joined the local musicians' union. He lived in a hotel, and made friends with Hans Bach, the younger brother of Vincent Bach, who owned a music store where Colin began working, and where he would practice whenever no customers were present. In 1935, two policemen from Jersey City, New Jersey, came into the store to purchase band supplies, and heard Colin practicing. Impressed with his ability, the men arranged for the mayor of Jersey City to hire him as principal trumpet of the Patrolmen's Benevolent Association Band. In order to entice Colin to move there, the mayor guaranteed to also arrange for him to teach private lessons to one hundred young students. This was Colin's first fulltime position, one that sparked his keen interest in teaching.

After a year in New Jersey, Colin moved back to New York and opened a teaching studio (in 1939). He also played with the WMCA Radio Orchestra and Charlie Barnet's band, with which he toured extensively and for a while was the band's road manager. Colin became tired of life on the road, so he accepted a position with Dick Raymond's band in New York where he played on a regular basis at the Hotel Astor. In addition, he played with Benny Meroft at the Paramount Theatre in Times Square for two years.

Colin became engaged to Irene Blinn, a fine saxophonist, who saw all of the handwritten manuscripts of exercises he was giving to his students, and suggested that he publish them by starting his own company, and so Charles Colin Music Publishing was born in 1940 with which Irene assisted. Charles and Irene were married in 1940, and remained together for fifty-nine years. Colin's first successful books were 100 Original Warm-ups (published by David Gornston in 1940), Lip Flexibilities (1942), and the world famous Advanced Lip Flexibilities, which greatly influenced the trumpet world, especially in France with advocates such as Jean Greffin and later, Pierre Thibaud. There were some difficulties with protecting his copyrights on these books because not all teachers and publishers were knowledgeable about copyright laws, and some people tried to sell pirated copies.

Colin's reputation as a teacher and publisher grew during the 1950s and '60s. He published articles in Downbeat, Dial, Rhythm, Orchestra World, and Metronome, as well as publishing other books through his company such as Advanced Daily Studies, Vital Brass Notes, The Brass Player, Breath Control Range and Endurance, and Melodious Fundamentals.

Colin had many students, among the best known being Sonny Berman, Bugs Bower (his son-in-law), Norbert Carnovale, Stan Fishelson, Bernie Glow, Pat Harrington, Max Herman, Dr. Kirby Jolly, Nat Pavone, Al Porcino, Alan Popick, Shorty Rogers, and Georgie Schwartz. Colin was open-minded toward jazz, supported the early boppers, and published many jazz methods.

Colin's concern for the education of students led to a discussion at lunch with Don Butterfield, Robert Giardinelli, Lester Salomon, and Gerard Schwarz, who formed the New York Brass Conference for Scholarships (NYBCS), a nonprofit corporation; Colin was elected Director. This organization has held annual conferences in New York City since 1973, and was one of the pioneering organizations in large brass meetings. Colin also attended many National Trumpet Symposiums (Denver) and International Trumpet Guild Conferences.

Colin served as Executive Director of the National Brass Clinic at Elon College and was on the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild, North American British Band Competitions, and Big Stage Band Era. He received the Award of Merit from the International Trumpet Guild and in 1966, an Honorary Doctorate in Music from Elon College in North Carolina.

Colin died in Port Chester, New York, on February 7, 2000 at the age of eighty-six. His son Allan and daughter Liz own and manage Colin Publications, as well as direct the New York Brass Conference for Scholarships.

Bibl.: Colin, Charles. Charles Colin Reflections (Colin Publications); Smith, André M. "The Life of Charles Colin and the Silver Jubilee of the New York Brass Conferences, 1973-1997" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1997); Laplace, Michel. Lip Flexibilities (Jazz Hot Internet suppl. no 626, 2005; Gazette des Cuivres no. 2, 2006); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. A full study; Oct. 2008).

Collins, Burton ("Burt") J. (b. New York, New York, Mar. 27, 1931; d. Feb. 24, 2007). American trumpeter. Collins's parents were vaudeville performers; his father was a trumpet player. Burt grew up in Philadelphia where his idol was Red Rodney. He moved to New York City and played with the big bands of Neal Hefti (1955), Woody Herman (1956), Dizzy Gillespie (1956-57), Quincy Jones, Duke Pearson, Donald Byrd, Cannonball Adderley, James Moody, and others. As the big bands died out, he worked as one of New York's most active studio musicians and Broadway show performers. He recorded on hundreds of albums, television jingles, movie soundtracks, etc., and with artists such as Phil Woods, T. Rex, Manhattan Transfer, David Matthews, O'Donel Levy, Neil Sedaka, Janis Ian, Duke Pearson, Lee Konitz, and Engelbert Humperdinck. He also published 18 Jazz Duets for Music Minus One Records.

Collins married Ann Ruckert, but later divorced. His second wife, Barbara Collins, predeceased him. He was one of the most beloved musicians in New York.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Burt Collins" (www.local802afm.org/publication_entry.cfm?xEntry=33871694).

Collins, Kiku (b. Chester, New Jersey, Sept. 2, 1971). American trumpeter. New Jersey native Collins attended the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, during two summers before enrolling in the Interlochen Arts Academy where she studied with John Lindenau.

After graduating in 1989, she attended the Manhattan School of Music in New York where she studied with Metropolitan Opera principal trumpet Mel Broiles until she left school upon her mother's untimely death. As a classical trumpeter, Maurice André influenced Collins musically, but Chet Baker and Sarah Vaughan ultimately shaped her playing style as a jazz and pop musician. Her older brother also played the trumpet.

Finding little work as a trumpeter after leaving the Manhattan School of Music, Collins put aside music to work in advertising, acting, and modeling. Picking up the trumpet again a few years later, she began her transition to pop playing in a funk band. She worked extensively as a studio musician and can be heard in commercials for Sprite, Ikea, Wisk, Certs, Checker Auto Parts, Etrade, Corn Nuts, Hawaiian Punch, Nicotel, The History Channel, Miller Beer, Sony, HBO Latin, VISA, Burger King, ABC's Nightline, Philips, Carefree Gum, and many others. She has also produced a great number of jingles.

As a result of an exhaustive audition process in 2006, Collins joined Beyoncè Knowles's all-girl band playing trumpet and valve trombone. After appearing extensively on television awards shows and in performances around the world, she left Beyoncè a year later to spend more time raising her daughter (born 2001). Since then, Collins joined Michael Bolton's band where, in addition to playing trumpet, she also sings backup vocals. She released her debut solo album, Here With Me, on Innova Records, and has performed with her own quintet at various clubs in New York City including The Cutting Room and The Metropolitan Room, as well as at international jazz festivals in Italy and England.

Kiku (which is Japanese for "Chrysanthemum") is a licensed personal trainer and enjoys writing. She is currently working on her second album and has acted and played for off-Broadway shows, as well as performing as an actress in several TV commercials including a spot for Marshall's Department Store, playing the trumpet with her then six-year-old daughter.

Bibl.: Biggs, Alice. "Kiku Collins" (The Brass Herald, May 2008); Lyren, Del. "From Classical to Pop: An Interview with Kiku Collins" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2008); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interviews, Feb. 22, 2010 and Mar. 3, 2011.

Photo credits (see color pages): Andrew T. Foster

Collins, Leeds ("Lee") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Oct. 17, 1901; d. Chicago, Illinois, July 3, 1960). American trumpeter. Collins's father John played the trumpet, and gave Lee his first lessons at the age of thirteen. Lee also studied under Jim Humphrey. Within three years, Lee was playing professionally as a jazz musician. He organized the group Young Eagles with Pops Foster (1917-18), played with the Buddy Petit Brass Band (1919-20), Petit's Band (1922), Albert Nicholas (1922), Alphonse Picou (1922), and other groups in New Orleans, Mobile (Alabama), and Pensacola (Florida).

In 1924, Collins played concerts in Florida, but moved to Chicago in order to play in King Oliver's band as Louis Armstrong's replacement (September to December). He made his first recordings there with Jelly Roll Morton on the piano. After six months, Collins returned to New Orleans where he worked with Lorenzo Tio Jr. (1925-29), Oscar Celestin's Tuxedo Jazz Orchestra (1926), and recorded four hot solos with the Jones-Collins Astoria Hot Eight in 1929. In the following year, he moved to New York City and joined Luis Russell's band as a replacement for Red Allen who was on vacation. In 1930, he returned to Chicago, this time to play with Dave Peyton, W. McDonald's Chicago Ramblers, Johnny Dodds, Zutty Singleton (1932), and others.

Collins made several recordings in 1936 with artists such as Richard M. Jones, Hannah May's State Street Four, Lil Johnson, Blue Scott Blue Boys, and Victoria Spivey. In the late 1930s, he began leading his own bands that played mainly at the Victory Club (1940-54). His band backed singer Chippie Hill in 1946 (recording five tunes), Little Brother Montgomery in 1947 (recording four tunes), and he toured with Kid Ory in 1948. Lee Collins played with Art Hodes in 1950-51. Collins then joined Mezz Mezzrow's band to play in France (1951-52). He made records with Mezz on Vogue, and was at his best at this time.

Emphysema became a problem for Collins in 1951. He recovered for a while, and traveled to San Francisco in 1953 where he performed a series of concerts before visiting New Orleans to record four tunes with Jack Delaney in 1954. These were his last recordings. He toured Europe again in 1954 with Mezzrow, but became very ill and was forced to return to Chicago. The effects of emphysema and a stroke caused him to end his playing career.

Collins began writing his autobiography in 1943. Not able to perform music any longer, he decided to finish the biography. With the help of his wife Mary, Collins completed the book in 1960. The autobiography, Oh Didn't He Ramble, was published posthumously in 1974 by the University of Illinois Press. It is an important glimpse into his life, and provides valuable information on several important but unrecorded early New Orleans jazz musicians. Influenced by Bunk Johnson, Buddy Petit, and Louis Armstrong, Collins was a strong player who could play with great excitement and beautiful lyric phrasing.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Collins, Lester Rallingston ("Shad") (b. Elizabeth, New Jersey, June 27, 1910; d. New York, New York, June 6, 1978). American trumpeter. After growing up in Lockport, New York, Collins began his career by playing with Charlie Dixon (1928), Eddie White (1929-30), Chick Webb (1931), Benny Carter (1933), Tiny Bradshaw (1934), Eubie

Blake (1933-34), and Teddy Hill (1936-37, with whom he toured Europe and recorded with band members such as Dickie Wells and Bill Dillard).

Back in the United States, he played with Count Basie from December 1938 to January 1940. He was a fine swing player with a cutting and fiery tone, and a percussive staccato. He often used mutes when accompanying others. During the 1940s, he played with Benny Carter, Lester Young (1941), Buddy Johnson, and replaced Dizzy Gillespie in Cab Calloway's band (on and off from 1941 to 1946). During the 1950s, he worked mainly for Sam "The Man" Taylor, but also played with Buster Harding, Al Sears, and Jimmy Rushing.

During the late 1950s, Collins recorded several discs with Paul Quinichette that are excellent representations of his playing. He recorded for Bluebird, Swing, Decca, Okeh, and Vanguard. Recently, CDs have been issued that include Nice Work (with Vic Dickenson, Vanguard), For Basie (with Paul Quinichette, Original Jazz Classics), and Basie Reunion (with Paul Quinichette, Original Jazz Classics). He also composed Rock-a-Bye Basie, now a standard.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo from Frank Driggs collection: Shad Collins (1940) with Doc West on drums and Lester Young on tenor sax.

Collins, Philip ("Phil") (b. Orange, New Jersey, Jan. 3, 1948). American trumpeter. Collins grew up in Summit, New Jersey, and began taking trumpet lessons at age nine from Nelson Keller, a former member of the Fred Waring Orchestra and student of Ernest Williams. During high school, he attended the Brevard Music Festival in North Carolina for three summers where he studied with Ruth Still, Ralph Montgomery, and Peter Ciurczak. Still inspired his passion for orchestral playing, and Collins soon became a huge fan of orchestral recordings featuring Adolph Herseth, William Vacchiano, Roger Voisin, Gilbert Johnson, and Armando Ghitalla. While in high school, he also studied in New York with Mel Broiles and William Vacchiano, and at the Tanglewood Institute with Armando Ghitalla. After graduating from Summit High School in 1966, Collins earned a bachelor of music degree at the Eastman School of Music. While a student, he performed with the Eastman Brass Quintet and as third trumpet of the Rochester Philharmonic. He studied with Daniel Patrylak and Sidney Mear.

After graduating from Eastman in 1970, Collins attended the Blossom Music Festival in Cleveland. He auditioned for and won an open fourth position in the Cleveland Orchestra, and in the fall of 1970 began two years with the orchestra. During his second year in the orchestra, he did graduate work at the Cleveland Institute of Music with Bernard Adelstein, principal of the Cleveland Orchestra. He also took occasional lessons in Chicago from Adolph Herseth and Arnold Jacobs. From 1972 to 1975, he was principal of the National Arts Centre Orchestra in Ottawa, Canada.

Collins became principal of the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in 1975, a position he held for over thirty years until retiring in 2007; he also played principal in the Cincinnati Pops. Between the two orchestras, he recorded over 125 albums on the Telarc, Vox, and Candide labels. Since 2002, he has been an adjunct faculty member at the Cincinnati Conservatory of Music of the University of Cincinnati. He has published several etude books including In the Singing Style, 100 Trumpetudes, and Studies in the Style of the Pops Orchestra.

While a student at Eastman, Collins met his wife Sandra, a violinist and pianist who teaches privately; they have a daughter, Tracey (b. 1974), and five sons: Jeff (b. 1977), Tim (b. 1981), Wes (b. 1984), Jeremy (b. 1986), and Zak (b. 1988). Collins is a strong family man and devout Christian.

Bibl.: Hayes, Adam. "Three Decades and Counting: An Interview with Phil Collins" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2007); "About Phil Collins" (http://philstudents.blogspot.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres &v XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, May 8, 2010.

Collins, Richard ("Dick") Harrison (b. Seattle, Washington, July 19, 1924). American trumpeter. The Collins family of musicians goes back several generations. Dick began playing the cornet at age five, taking lessons from Red Nichols's father in San Jose, California (1929-30). At age six, Dick had his own radio show in San Francisco (!). He switched to trumpet, and studied with Grace Adams from 1934-35. His first playing experience on the trumpet was with the Earl Gladman orchestra (1938-40).

Along with his brother Bob, a trombonist, Dick joined Dave Brubeck's octet from 1946 to 1950. For a while, in 1948, Collins studied composition in France with Darius Milhaud. While there, he had an opportunity to record with Hubert Fol's Be-Bop Minstrels. After returning to the U.S., Collins performed and recorded with the big bands of Charlie Barnet (1951), Charles Mingus, Alvino Rey (1952), and Woody Herman (1954-56). He also recorded with Charlie Mariano, Nat Pierce, Paul Desmond, and Cal Tjader (1953-54). Collins led his own groups in two albums for the RCA/Victor label, including the popular Horn of Plenty (1954).

In the mid 1950s, Collins moved to Los Angeles and became a studio performer. He also toured on and off with the Les Brown Orchestra (between 1956 and 1966), touring through much of Europe, Asia, and Africa. From 1968 to 1986, Collins worked as a music librarian for various institutions in California, but also performed with Nat Pierce's quintet (1978) and the Capp-Pierce Juggernaut (1998).

It is surprising that the talents of Dick Collins are not better known. He is reportedly a nice and humble man who never craved the limelight. During his youth, his nickname was Bix, mostly because he was a country boy who could play jazz.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Colombo, Lou (b. Brockton, Massachusetts, Aug. 22, 1927). American trumpeter and bandleader. Lou's father gave him a bugle at age ten in order to join a local drum and bugle corps. Lou took up the cornet the following year, and played trumpet in a three-piece jazz combo at age thirteen. His early influences were Roy Eldridge, Billy Butterfield, and Harry James. During high school, Lou split his time between music and baseball.

After graduating from high school, Lou Colombo was recruited by the Brooklyn Dodgers. He was a good hitter with a .300 batting average, but a severe ankle injury abruptly ended his career in baseball. He returned to music at the age of twenty-four, and played with Dick Johnson, Dick McKenna, Charlie Spivak (early 1950s), Buddy Morrow, Artie Shaw, Perez Prado, Benny Goodman, Dizzy Gillespie (late 1980s), and George Masso. In 1956, Colombo was a winner in Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts show, and appeared on television several times. Due to overblowing in 1964, his upper lip suffered an injury that required him to shift his mouthpiece position to the extreme right of his mouth. In order to allow himself adequate rest, Colombo learned to play the mandolin and guitar. Lou Colombo only cut one album as leader, I Remember Bobby (Concord Jazz), a tribute to his close friend Bobby Hackett.

Colombo is a naturally talented musician who often plays the trumpet by holding it with his right hand only. Dizzy Gillespie said of him, Lou Colombo is a trumpet artist. He is the most natural player I ever heard—the greatest trumpet player in America. Likewise, Herb Alpert is quoted as saying, Lou has a very passionate, warm, romantic, and above all, honest approach to music, a truly wonderful musician.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Lou Colombo" (www.provincetownjazzfestival.org); "Lou Colombo" (www.roadhousecafefl.com).

Colson, John [Francis] (b. Marengo, Iowa, June 21, 1933). American trumpeter and conductor. Colson grew up in Marengo, Iowa. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first teachers were Anne Forbes, Paul Kuentzel, Harold Harmon, and William Gower Sr. After graduating from Marengo High School in 1951, he attended the University of Iowa, earning a bachelor of music degree in 1955 and a master of arts degree in 1956. His professors were William Gower Sr., J. Robert Hanson, John Beer, Robert Getchell, Walter Moeck, and Alex Pickard. He played professionally for eight years in the trumpet section of the Tri-City Symphony Orchestra.

Colson's teaching career began at Lake Park High School (in Iowa, 1956-57), and continued at Garner High School (in Iowa, 1957-59), Adams State College (in Colorado, 1962-63), Bettendorf Middle School (in Iowa, 1963-65), and finally South Dakota State University (in Brookings, 1965-2002). Among his many students were Del Lyren, Calvin Hofer, Scott Olson, Kent Foss, and the identical triplets Sarah, Mary, and Kristin Stoneback.

As a conductor, Colson led the SDSU-Civic Symphony for thirty-four years, as well as numerous honor bands and orchestras, and dozens of summer festival ensembles. He received the 2001 National Federation Interscholastic Music Association Outstanding Music Educator Award. His publications include Conducting and Rehearsing the Instrumental Music Ensemble: A Study Guide for Advanced Instrumental Conducting, Rhythm and Pulse, and Braces and Brass (coauthored with Ronald Stoneback). During his forty-six-year career, Colson worked with over one hundred guest soloists of national and international distinction. He also founded and directed two summer music camps that are still flourishing.

Colson and his wife Nancy K. Colson have been married since 1955, and have four children: David (b. 1957), Peter (b. 1961), Scott (b. 1963), and Elizabeth (b. 1971). Now retired, he spends his time listening to music, playing tennis, and teaching private brass lessons.

Bibl.: personal interview, Feb. 8, 2011.

Colyer, Ken[neth] (b. Great Yarmouth, Norfolk, England, Apr. 18, 1928; d. south of France, Mar. 8, 1988). British trumpeter. When his older brother William John Colyer went off to serve in World War II, Ken studied his brother's jazz records and became self-taught on trumpet and guitar at an early age. At age seventeen, he joined the Merchant Navy and traveled to places around the world including Montreal and New York where he heard numerous famous jazz musicians. After his military service, he returned to England and soon led the Crane River Jazz Band (1949) and played with the Christie Brothers Stompers (1950-51). He rejoined the Navy and traveled to the United States, but Colyer jumped ship and began playing in New Orleans (November 1952 to 1953). He played with George Lewis and made records, including some good ones with Emil Barnes. Because of his British accent, his American friends nicknamed him "The Guv'nor."

In March of 1953, Colyer was caught and briefly jailed before being deported back to England. Later in 1953, he formed Ken Colyer's Jazzmen, a septet that recorded and performed to much acclaim. He also led the Omega Brass Band. He played again with George Lewis (1958, 1959) and appeared with Little Brother Montgomery (1960). His new group, the New Orleans Jazzmen (1959), introduced clarinet player Sammy Rimington Sr. (1960-61). He also reunited the Crane River Jazz Band (1960s). After a bout with stomach cancer in 1971, Colyer took his doctor's advice and stopped leading a band (1970-76), only appearing here and there as a guest player with Mike Casimir and Barry Martyn. He also performed folk music on the side, where he sang and played guitar. He re-formed the New Orleans Jazzmen in 1976. He then appeared with Chris Blount, and in the early 1980s formed the All Star Jazzmen, as well as touring with Max Collie's New Orleans Mardi Gras Show.

Colyer performed on the soundtrack for the film West 11, but health problems began to slow him down during his last few years until he was forced to stop playing in 1987, just a year before his death at the age of fifty-nine. Recording for such labels as Storyville, Decca, Vogue, 77, Joy, Black Lion, GHB, Stomp Off, and his own label, KC Records, Colyer released many albums including Ken Colyer in New Orleans (Vogue), New Orleans to London (Decca), Club Sessions with Colyer (Decca), and They All Played Ragtime (Decca). Recent CD compilations include In the Beginning (Lake), The Decca Skiffle Sessions (Lake), The Decca Years (Lake), Serenading Anne (Upbeat), The Classic Years (Uptown), Up Jumped the Devil (Uptown), and Ken Colyer's Jazzmen with Sammy Rimington (GHB).

Colyer experienced problems with his lips, teeth, and gums around 1986. He had planned to issue historic recordings of his band on his own KC Records label, but before the first LP was produced, his health took a turn for the worse. He moved to the South of France in hopes that the warmer climate would improve things for him, ending up in the small fishing village of Les Issambres. He was taken in by a French couple. Shortly after a stomach operation, Colyer died in his sleep on March 8, 1988. His ashes were scattered in the Channel close to the French shore. His autobiography, When Dreams are in the Dust, is published by the Ken Colyer Trust and is available on its website: www.kencolyertrust.org. A new biography by Mike Pointon and Ray Smith is in preparation.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Ken Colyer" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Côme, André M. ("Andy") (b. Cambridge, Massachusetts, 1934; d. Boston, Massachusetts, June 12, 1987). American trumpeter. Côme attended the public schools in Newton, Massachusetts, and began learning to play the trumpet at age seven from his uncle, Marcel Lafosse of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. During the Korean War, Côme served as a member of the Air Force Band. After being discharged from the military, he joined the Baltimore Symphony. In 1957, at the age of twenty-three, he succeeded his uncle as second trumpet of the Boston Symphony, a position he held until his unexpected death in 1987. For many years, Côme also served as principal trumpet of the Boston Pops Orchestra. He taught at the New England Conservatory of Music, Boston University, and Brown University.

Côme took part in many recordings, such as Great Performance-The Antiphonal Music of Gabrieli (1959, with Armando Ghitalla, trumpet, W. Gibson, K. Kahila, trombone, E. Power Biggs, organ); Heroic Music for Organ, Brass & Percussion (January 1962, with E. Power Biggs, organ and the New England Brass Ensemble with Ghitalla, trumpet, E. Firth, percussion); Telemann, Getreue Music (CBS 61648, reissued on CD, Glorious Sound of Brass); Millennium Collection-The Boston Pops (1967, as a soloist with the Boston Pops: J. Webb, "By the Time I Get To Phoenix"); and The American Brass Band Journal (on E-flat cornet, with Armando Ghitalla on B-flat cornet & Empire Brass, Columbia M 34192).

Côme was a quiet and unassuming man who was greatly respected as a person and musician. He was tall and handsome, and had a friendly, gentlemanly character. He was sometimes described as being regal in appearance and manner. He died at the age of fifty-three. More than one thousand friends and admirers attended a memorial concert in Côme's honor at the Tanglewood Institute's summer theater in Lenox, Massachusetts. Funds from the concert helped establish an endowment for the André Côme Fellowship that supports scholarships to the BSO's summer institute.

Bibl.: Yeo, Douglas. "Trumpet Players of the Boston Symphony" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1990); "André M. Côme, 53 was Trumpeter with BSO" (The Boston Globe, June 14, 1987); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Conforzi, Igino (b. Poggio Mirteto, Italy, May 5, 1958). Italian trumpeter. Conforzi studied with Alberto Ceccarelli, and earned a diploma studying with Edward Tarr at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis in Basel, Switzerland. He also studied with Anthony Plog.

Conforzi has specialized in playing the natural (valveless) trumpet, and in 1992 he established the early music ensemble, Tibicines, which has released numerous recordings using period instruments of the Baroque. His many albums also include Battalia! (Arts Music), Girolamo Fantini (Quadrivium), and Tra Sacro e Profano (Arts). Conforzi has performed with such ensembles as the Orchestra Giovanile Italiana, Tonhalle Zürich, Basel Symphony Orchestra, Concerto Italiano, Fiori Musicali, Kantorei Schopfeim, Collegium Aureum, Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble, Concerto Köln, Stuttgart Baroque Orchestra, Concerto Copenhagen, Orquestra Barroca de Sevilla, La Cappella Musicale di San Petronio, Forma Antiqua, Orquesta Barroca de Canarias, and many others.

Conforzi is also a composer and conductor, and has taught and presented workshops in Italy, Germany, France, Brazil, and the United States. He is presently living in Bologna and is teaching natural trumpet at the Bologna Conservatory of Music.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Igino Conforzi's official webpage: www.iginoconforzi.net.

Conn, C[harles] G[erard] (b. Phelps, New York, Jan. 29, 1844; d. southern California, Jan. 5, 1931). American manufacturer. Conn came from the Finger Lakes region of upstate New York and moved to Elkhart, Indiana, when he was eleven. He studied piano and violin, and then cornet (age fourteen). One of his teachers was Theodore Hoch. He served as a musician with the 21st Regiment Band and as a sharpshooter in the Union Army during the Civil War, but spent some time in a Federal prison camp until the war ended. After the war, he returned to Elkhart and worked in his father's grocery store. He also began learning the technique of making rubber stamps, and engraving and plating silverware.

Conn played the cornet extensively and toured as a solo cornetist with bands and circuses. After a Fourth of July celebration concert, he got into a fistfight with a fellow musician and was struck in the mouth, nearly ending his cornet playing. In order to play on his badly bruised and cut lips, he developed a cornet mouthpiece with a rubber rim. This proved to be very successful, and he began making them on a commercial basis, patenting the mouthpiece in 1875. Before long, he developed his mouthpiece making into a small business. In 1875, Conn met the French instrument maker, Eugène Dupont. They formed a legal partnership known as Conn & Dupont, and began making cornets. In the following year, they purchased three large furniture store buildings and set up a large factory in Elkhart. By the time they dissolved their partnership in 1879, they were employing over one hundred workers. Conn purchased the entire company and renamed it the C.G. Conn Company.

Conn was a tall, handsome man with a likable personality. He was good-natured and had a fine sense of humor. He was deeply involved with the Freemasons, and was quite vocal about his views on public morality and religion. He edited an in-house newsletter called The Musical Truth that purported his opinions on politics and business. In 1880, at the age of thirty-six, he was elected to his first of two terms as a representative in the Indiana General Assembly.

A fire destroyed the Conn factory in 1887. Conn rebuilt on the same site, and reopened about a year later. During this time, he acquired a factory in Worchester, Massachusetts, purchased from Isaac Fiske who had decided to retire. As soon as the new Elkhart factory was opened, Conn closed the Worchester plant. Within five years, he employed three hundred workers and claimed that he owned the world's largest musical instrument company in the world. He was elected Mayor of the city of Elkhart (1880-83) and also spent two years in Washington, D.C. as an Indiana Congressman (1892-94).

Conn played cornet with the Heywood Peerless Concert Company (1891), Albert Couturier's Grand Concert Band (1893), and Patrick Gilmore's Band and gave concerts in Berlin (1906). In 1896, he was nominated as a Democratic vice-presidential candidate, but lost the election. His political career ended when he lost the Indiana gubernatorial nomination in 1908, and after an unsuccessful run in 1910 for the US Senate.

He sold a large number of Sousaphones (often called "raincatchers") to the government for use in military bands, and in 1898 opened a retail shop in New York City that was a commercial success. The Conn factory was unionized in 1906. They were now producing over eight hundred instruments each month. He also made and imported string instruments. Many great cornet soloists endorsed Conn instruments including Jules Levy, Bowen Church, Walter Rogers, Thomas Short, Alessandro Liberati, Walter Emerson, Albert Bode, Theodore Hoch, W. Paris Chambers, Herman Bellstedt Jr., and Marie McNeil. His instruments won a medal in the 1893 Columbian Exposition.

A second fire completely destroyed the Elkhart factory in 1910. In order to fund an even larger plant at a different location in Elkhart, Conn and his wife Kate mortgaged their home and other assets. The new factory was larger than before, and employed two hundred fifty men and fifty-three women. His success was significant, and he used his business reputation as a means to continue professing his idealistic morals and religious beliefs. His philosophical book, The Sixth Sense—Prayer, published in 1916, taught that prayer developed growth of new brain cells and would ultimately lead to salvation and the conquering of sin.

A strange turnaround occurred during the last fifteen years of Charles Conn's eighty-seven-year life. He began to go into debt, often drank too much, and was known for his sexual exploits with various women. In 1915, he sold his company to a group of Ohio capitalists headed by Carl D. Greenleaf. The company was renamed C.G. Conn Ltd., and began operating under assembly line production, making it even more productive than before by turning out over 2,500 instruments each month.

After forty-six years of marriage, Charles and Kate divorced. He had sold all of his holdings to pay off loans and settle his divorce. He moved to southern California and remarried in 1919 at the age of seventy-five. He and his much younger second wife had one son.

C.G. Conn died penniless in 1931. The Elkhart Masonic Lodge raised funds so that his body could be transported to Indiana for a proper burial in Elkhart. Money for a headstone was raised six years later by the Elkhart Chamber of Commerce. This seems an ironic and sad ending for a successful businessman and public leader who made a huge impact on musical life in America. He is buried at the Grace Lawn Cemetery in Elkhart.

Bibl.: Banks, Margaret Downie. "The C.G. Conn Company: A Retrospective" (CIMCIM Newsletter, No. 14, 1989); Schwartz, Richard I. Supplement to the Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charles Gerard Conn" (www.findagrave.com).

Conner, Jeff (b. Framingham, Massachusetts, Mar. 13, 1963). American trumpeter. Conner grew up in the city of Holliston, Massachusetts. He began to play the trumpet at age ten, studying with Richard Givens. After graduating from Holliston High School in 1981, he attended the Boston Conservatory from 1981 to 1985 where he studied with Timothy Morrison and Peter Chapman. He continued graduate work with Morrison and Roger Voisin at Boston University from 1985 to 1987, earning a master of music degree. It was at this time that he and four other students founded the Boston Brass (1986), a group that has become one of the world's finest and most active brass ensembles. Today, Conner remains the only original member. He has also performed with the Northeast Philharmonic, Pierre Monteux Orchestra, Salem Philharmonic, Music at Gretna Summer Festival Orchestra, Harvard-Radcliffe Chamber Orchestra, Boris Goldovsky Summer Opera Orchestra, and other ensembles.

Conner and his wife Carrie, a teacher, have a son, Jack (b. 2002). His hobby is playing catch with his son.

Bibl.: Biggs, Philip. "Jeff Connor" (The Brass Herald magazine, No. 37, 2011); personal interview, May 29, 2012.

Conrad, Jörg (b. Zürich, Switzerland, July 26, 1945). Swiss trumpeter. Conrad began playing trumpet at age sixteen. From 1968 to 1970, he studied with Jean Venos at the Conservatory in Winterthur, and in 1975 studied with Henri Adelbrecht at the Musikhochschule in Zürich.

Conrad was principal trumpet of the Lucerne Symphony Orchestra from 1971 to 1998, and has since continued as a substitute principal. He has recorded CDs with the Lucerne Trumpet Ensemble, and since 1974 has been a professor of trumpet at the Lucerne Musikhochschule.

Bibl.: Keim,Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cook, Wayne (b. Pearsall, Texas, Dec. 16, 1939). American trumpeter. Cook grew up in Cotulla, Texas, and graduated from Cotulla High School in 1958. He studied with John J. Haynie at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) where he earned a bachelor of music degree in 1962. He studied with Haskell Sexton at the University of Illinois, and received a master of science in music education degree in 1964. He did postgraduate work towards a doctorate at the Eastman School of Music.

Cook taught trumpet at Indiana State University from 1964 to 1966, before becoming professor of trumpet at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee (UW-M) from 1966 to 1999 (Emeritus in 1999). He is currently on the faculty at the Wisconsin Conservatory of Music (since 2002) and the faculty at Alverno College (since 2008). He was also an administrator at the University of Wisconsin-Milwaukee, where he served as director of graduate music studies, associate dean of Fine Arts, and director of the department of music.

As a performer, Cook was a member of the Milwaukee Symphony (fourth/utility) for fifteen years from 1966 to 1981. He was also principal trumpet of the Skylight Comic Opera, Music Under the Stars, Milwaukee Ballet Orchestra, Florentine Opera Orchestra, Waukesha Symphony, and Festival City Symphony (thirty-two years). In addition, he performed with the Waukesha Symphony Brass Quintet and the UW-M Faculty Brass Quintet. He has recorded Epifania: Five Pieces of Leonard Salzedo with Tuned Gongs for Albany Troy Records (2002), and has performed as a soloist and freelance trumpeter in twenty-six countries on four continents.

Cook and his wife Marlene, a pianist, have three daughters (Julie, b. 1968; Sheri, b. 1970; Leslie, b. 1974) and six grandchildren. His hobbies include gardening and investing in financial securities.

Bibl.: "Wayne Cook, trumpet" (www.tomjewett.com); "Wisconsin Conservatory Faculty Biographies" (www.wcmusic.org/faculty.html; "Wayne Cook" (news item, International Trumpet Guild Journal, Sept. 1993); personal interview, Feb. 11, 2010.

Cook, Willie [John] (b. Tangipahoa, Louisiana, Nov. 11, 1923; d. Stockholm, Sweden, Sept. 22, 2000). American trumpeter. Cook's father worked for the Illinois Central railroad. When Willie was four years old, the family moved to East Chicago, Indiana. Willie's older brother played trumpet in the school band, giving Willie an opportunity to play on his brother's instrument. Willie also studied the violin for a short while, but trumpet ended up being his instrument of choice. Later, Willie played in the school band.

Willie Cook turned professional in 1941 when he joined Claude Trenier's band. He started his own band in the following year, but it had little success. In late 1942, he joined up with Jay McShann and made his first recordings. In 1944, he was recruited by Earl Hines, playing with him until 1947. He also arranged music for Hines's orchestra. In 1948, Cook was a member of the Jimmy Lunceford ghost band, and from late 1948 to 1950, he was a member of Dizzy Gillespie's band. When the Gillespie band broke up in 1950, Cook joined Gerald Wilson's band for a short time, and also became Billie Holiday's music director. However, he became disillusioned with the music profession and its inadequate financial rewards. He stopped playing in order to take a job in the construction industry.

In 1951, Cook received a call from Duke Ellington inviting him to join his famous organization as lead trumpet. He played with Ellington from 1951 to 1957. Here, he shared solo duties with Clark Terry, Ray Nance, and Cat Anderson. These proved to be the best years of his career. However, in 1958-59 Cook decided to freelance in New York. He also played some with Mercer Ellington and Jimmy Jones. He rejoined Duke Ellington's band from 1959 to 1969, and reappeared with him in 1973. He then retired to Houston, Texas, but managed to play with Clark Terry in 1978, also playing with Count Basie at about the same time.

During the late 1970s, Cook married a Swedish woman and moved to Copenhagen where he worked with several Swedish bands in the early 1980s, including the Gugge Hedrenius Big Blues Band and his own band. He also worked with Ernie Wilkins and the Danish Radio Big Band. He remained active as a musician for twenty more years.

Some of Cook's best albums include Christl Mood (Phontastic), Kansas City 6 with Basie (Original Jazz Classics), and Buenos Aires Session with Paul Gonsalves (Catalyst). He died in 2000 at the age of seventy-six.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Willie Cook" The Last Post (www.jazzhouse.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Coolidge, David ("Dave") R. (b. Anderson, Indiana, Sept. 4, 1965). American trumpeter. Coolidge grew up in Anderson, Indiana. His early trumpet teachers were Tim Shelton (grades 3-9) and Mark Murray (grades 11-12 and college). After graduating from Anderson Highland High School in 1983, he attended Anderson University (1983-87), and Indiana University, studying with trumpet instructors William Adam and Bernard Adelstein, and jazz teachers David Baker and Dominic Spera. He began his professional career during the summer of 1988 in a show band for Celebrate America at Busch Gardens in Williamsburg, Virginia. In May 1989, he began his eleven-year tenure as a lead trumpeter at Walt Disney World, primarily with EPCOT's renowned ensemble, Future Corps, which was featured at various music conventions, Drum Corps International competitions, and on television shows such as Live with Regis & Kathy Lee and Good Morning America. The group also toured Japan three times.

Since moving to Arizona in 2000, Coolidge has become one of the busiest freelance artists in the Phoenix metro area. He is an active clinician who has served on the instructional staffs for several nationally prominent drum and bugle corps and marching bands, and is often a judge at jazz, marching band, and concert band competitions. He is a former adjunct jazz faculty member at Arizona State University, and a former trumpet instructor at Phoenix College.

Coolidge and Alisa Turner Coolidge, a revenue management analyst, have been married since 1993. His hobbies include watching sports, reading news and technology blogs, target shooting, and spending quality time with his wife and their pet dog.

Bibl.: "Coolidge Biography" (http://coolhorn.com/Biography.html); personal interview, May 23, 2012.

Coon, Jack ("Jackie") Merle (b. Beatrice, Nebraska, June 21, 1929; d. Hawaii, Mar. 25, 2007). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Coon grew up in southern California, and was introduced to the trumpet at age eleven when his brother played for him a recording of Louis Armstrong in West End Blues. It was at that moment that he decided to become a jazz trumpet player. After graduating from high school, Coon went on the road with Red Fox and His Musical Hounds. He also played for three months with Jack Teagarden's band, something that Coon described as "a high point in my life." Although he made several recordings with Teagarden, they were not released until the 1990s (Arbors Records). He also played with Earl Hines, Louis Prima, and Charlie Barnet.

Coon's official recording debut was in 1957 with Barney Bigard. He also played the mellophone solo on Red Nichols's great recording of Battle Hymn of the Republic (1959). Coon worked as a Los Angeles studio player during the 1960s and '70s, backing such artists as Bob Crosby and Pete Fountain. Known as a superb swing and Dixieland player, Coon performed regularly at Disneyland for nine years (1968-78), and toured with the Silver Cornet Orchestra. Coon appears in the film Meet Me After the Show (1951, with Betty Grable), and a video called March of Jazz (1996).

Although Coon had several chances to become famous, his desire to stay close to his family prevented him from leaving southern California for very long. He did make several significant albums, however, including Jazzin' Around (Sea Breeze), Back in His Own Backyard (Arbors), Softly (Arbors), Jazzin' with Jackie (Arbors), and The Joys of New Orleans (Arbors). He moved to Big Sur, near Monterey, and continues to live in California. He is known for his cool-toned flugelhorn solos and relaxed vocals.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo by Mal Domber: Johnny Varro, Bob Haggart, Jackie Coon, and Ed Metz, Jr.

Cooper, David [Thomas] (b. St. Charles, Illinois, Nov. 26, 1963). American trumpeter. Cooper grew up in Green Bay, Wisconsin. He began playing the trumpet at age ten, and while attending Green Bay Southwest High School, studied with Lovell Ives. After graduating in 1982, Cooper earned a bachelor of music degree at the Lawrence Conservatory in Appleton, Wisconsin, where he studied with Robert Levy (graduating in 1987). He also studied jazz improvisation with Fred Sturm and John Harmon. Cooper then earned a master of music degree at the University of Akron where he studied with Scott Johnston, and served as a graduate trumpet assistant (1987-90). He continued his graduate work at the University of Wisconsin-Madison, earning a doctorate in music degree in 1993, studying with John Aley. Cooper played in the Wisconsin Brass Quintet (faculty), and with the Dallas Brass during the summer of 1993.

A highly versatile trumpeter, Cooper has performed with symphony orchestras: Dubuque (1994-98, principal since 2001), Canton, Milwaukee (1993-98), Madison, and La Crosse (1996-2003); and with Count Basie, Gerry Mulligan, Dizzy Gillespie, Bob Mintzer, Joe Williams, Jiggs Whigham, the Temptations, Walt Disney World, Aspen Jazz Ensemble, Cleveland Jazz Orchestra, Tim Whalen Nonet, Art Blakey Tribute Band, New Breed Jazz Quintet, and with artists such as Doc Severinsen, Adolph Herseth, Charles Lazarus, Bobby Shew, Lynn Harrell, and Lew Soloff. He has backed celebrities such as Wayne Newton, Bobby McFerrin, Bob Newhart, Marie Osmond, and Robert Goulet. Cooper has performed at the International Trumpet Guild Conference, New York Brass Conference, and as a soloist and clinician.

Since 2005, Cooper has taught trumpet and jazz at the University of Wisconsin-Platteville. He is a published composer and arranger, and has released numerous recordings including Festive Arias for Voice & Trumpet (vols. 1 & 2), Bach Cello Suites on Trumpet (1-6), Telemann Canonic Sonatas, Live at the Magnus, and Petite Monde.

Cooper is also the author and host of the trumpet educational website, www.AllThingsTrumpet.com, a blog that contains articles on practice and performance tips, improvisation techniques, and general trumpet issues for the serious trumpet player. There is also an ever-evolving list of trumpet repertoire reviewed, analyzed, and performed by Cooper on the site.

Cooper and his wife Kelly De Haven, a jazz singer and marketer for the University of Wisconsin, have a daughter, Skye (b. 1996). His hobbies include kayaking, camping, and home brewing.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); David Cooper's official website: http://www.DavidCooperMusic.com; personal interview, Dec. 13, 2010.

Cooper, Stefan T. (b. Modesto, California, Oct. 29. 1969). American trumpeter. Cooper grew up in the Bay area of California, and received his bachelor of music degree at California State University-Stanislaus in 1991. He then studied with David Hickman at Arizona State University, earning a master of music degree in 1992. Other teachers include David Goedicke, Laurie McGaw, and Bo Nilsson.

Cooper was principal trumpet of the Orchestra Sinfonica Nazionale della RAI of Torino, Italy. He moved to Sweden in 1997 to become principal of the Malmö Opera Orchestra (1997). He has performed with the Malmö Symphony Orchestra, Norrköping Symphony Orchestra, and the Royal Opera orchestra in Stockholm. He also served as principal of the Stavanger Symphony Orchestra in Norway for four years. A versatile musician, Cooper has played with various big bands, Afro-Cuban bands, chamber ensembles, and the Göteborgs Musiken. Stefan Cooper has released a solo album titled Meditation. He is also conductor of the Malmö Brass Band in Sweden.

Bibl.: "Stefan Cooper" (www.malmobrassband.com/band/profiles/stefan_cooper.htm).

Copeland, Ray M. (Norfolk, Virginia, July 17, 1926; d. Sunderland, Massachusetts, May 18, 1984). American trumpeter. Copeland was classically trained in Brooklyn during his teens. His first played professionally with Cecil Scott in 1945, and later played with Chris Columbus, Mercer Ellington (1947-48), and the Savoy Sultans (1948-49). During the first half of the 1950s, he worked for a paper company, performing music only part-time with Andy Kirk, Lucky Thompson, and Sy Oliver. He also recorded with Thelonious Monk in 1954.

Copeland played fulltime again in 1955. Soon, he played with Lionel Hampton (1957-58), Randy Weston (1957-59), Monk (more recordings in 1957), Tito Puente, Oscar Pettiford (1958), Johnny Richards, Gigi Gryce (1958-59), and his own band. Between 1959 and 1961, he occasionally performed as a member of New York's Roxy Theater Orchestra. He can be heard with the Johnny Richards Orchestra on the soundtrack of the 1959 movie, Kiss Her Goodbye.

Much of the 1960s were spent touring with Louis Bellson and Pearl Bailey (1962-64), Ella Fitzgerald, Randy Weston (touring Africa under the auspices of the US State Department, 1966 and 1970), and Thelonious Monk (touring Europe in 1967). Copeland composed Classical Jazz Suite in Six Movements that was premiered at Lincoln Center in New York in 1970. In 1974, he toured Europe with the revue The Musical Life of Charlie Parker, and later played in various pit orchestras on Broadway.

Copeland taught at Hampshire College from 1979 to 1984. His book, The Ray Copeland Method and Approach to the Creative Art of Jazz Improvisation was published in 1974. During his career, he recorded for labels such as RCA, Dawn, Mainstream, Savoy, United Artists, Warner Brothers, Bakton, Bethlehem, Polydor, EmArcy, and Prestige. Recently released CDs include Monk (Original Jazz Classics), Monterey '66 (Antillas), Tanjah (Antilles), African Cookbook (Koch), How High the Moon (Biography), Deep Passion (GRP/Impulse), Thelonious Monk with John Coltrane (Original Jazz Classics), and Sugan (Original Jazz Classics).

Bibl,: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Coppola, John (b. Geneva, New York, May 11, 1929). American trumpeter. Coppola began playing trumpet at an early age, and began playing professionally at age thirteen. At age twenty-one, he joined Charlie Barnet's band, and during the 1950s and '60s performed with the bands of Stan Kenton (1951, 1954), Woody Herman (1955-56), Billy May (1952), Frank Sinatra, Nat "King" Cole, Gerald Wilson, Petula Clark, Dizzy Gillespie, "Tennessee" Ernie Ford, Nelson Riddle, and Henry Mancini. A highly versatile musician, he performed many Broadway shows and worked as a studio player.

Coppola is married to the swing band singer, Frances Lynne Coppola.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo of Herman trumpet section (1956), left to right: Woody Herman, Burt Collins, John Coppola, Dudley Harvey.

Cord, Edmund ("Ed") (b. Indianapolis, Indiana, June 9, 1949). American trumpeter. Cord grew up in Indianapolis. He began playing trumpet at age nine; his first teacher was Max Woodbury, principal trumpet of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra. After graduating from Thomas Carr Howe High School in 1967, he attended Indiana University, studying with Herbert Mueller, Louis Davidson, and Charles Gorham, and earning a bachelor of music degree in 1972. Additionally, he studied with Vincent Cichowicz, James Stamp, Thomas Stevens, and Arnold Jacobs. He was a member of the National Repertory Orchestra during the summer of 1971, and received The Music Director's Award from Maurice Abravanel at the Music Academy of the West in 1972.

Cord became principal trumpet of the Israel Philharmonic in 1972, but left to become associate principal of the Utah Symphony (1976-78), and then coprincipal in 1978; in 1985 he was named principal. He also spent the summers of 1978-80, and 1990 as principal of the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra.

In 1989, Cord left the Utah Symphony to assume duties as a professor of trumpet at Indiana University, a position he still holds, and where he is director of the brass choir. He has also taught at the Rubin Academy of Music in Tel Aviv and the University of Utah, and served as brass coach and trumpet teacher of the Asian Youth Orchestra (1994-2000). Cord has presented master classes, clinics, and workshops in brass performance in Australia, England, Israel, and throughout Asia and North America. Among his many former students are Susan Rider, Ram Oren, Yoram Levy, Brad Weil, Richard Sandals, E. J. Ramos, Lertkiat Chonjirajitra, Travis Peterson, Eric Swisher, and David Champouillon.

During his long and productive career, Cord has been a guest principal of the Saint Louis Symphony, Indianapolis Symphony, Houston Symphony Orchestra, San Diego Symphony, Ft. Wayne Philharmonic, and the Indianapolis Chamber Orchestra. He has also performed with the Louisville Orchestra, Vancouver Symphony, Grand Teton Festival Orchestra, Doc Severinsen, Ella Fitzgerald, Henry Mancini, Marvin Hamlisch, the Moody Blues, Mannheim Steamroller, The Temptations, Carmel Brass, and several Broadway touring companies. He has been a soloist with the Israel Philharmonic Orchestra, Bangkok Symphony, Utah Symphony, and the Hong Kong Pro Arte Orchestra.

Cord and pianist Ruth Cord have been married since 2007. His children (from a previous marriage) are Aliza (b. 1977), Benjamin (b. 1980), and Rebecca (b. 1980). His hobbies include astronomy, reading, and his automobiles (1980 Fiat "Spider 2000" and 1987 BMW 325iS).

Bibl.: "Edmund Cord" (http://newsinfo.iu.edu/sb/page/normal/851.html); personal interview, Apr. 4, 2011.

Photo credit: Indiana University

Cornelius, Edward ("Corky") Jr. (b. Hoosier, Indiana, December 3, 1914; d. New York, New York, Aug. 3, 1943). American trumpeter. His father, Edward "Corky" Cornelius Sr., was a professional jazz drummer who played in territorial bands in Texas. Edward Jr. was raised in Binghamton, New York, and learned to play the trumpet from his father. He began his career during the early 1930s with the bands of Les Brown, Frank Dailey, and Buddy Rogers. His main reputation, however, came when he joined the Benny Goodman Orchestra in 1939. When drummer Gene Krupa left the Goodman organization to form his own band, Cornelius moved with him, but soon switched to the Casa Loma Orchestra in New York from 1941 until 1943.

Corky Cornelius married Gene Krupa's vocalist Irene Daye. They had a daughter shortly before his sudden death at age twenty-nine from kidney failure. He is buried in Lawrence, Massachusetts.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Edward 'Corky' Cornelius" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Corky_Cornelius).

Cosh, Paul (b. Sherborne, England, June 26, 1948). British trumpeter. Cosh's first lessons were with his father. He later studied with Charlie Parsons, and joined the town brass band. In 1966, he studied with William Overton at the Royal Academy of Music where he was a founding member of the Royal Academy Big Band and Royal Academy Drama Club. After graduating, he played in various pit orchestras for musicals and plays at the National Theatre (directed by Sir Lawrence Olivier) and at the Royal Shakespeare Company. He also freelanced as a studio musician, and recorded with celebrity singers such as Elton John, Bryan Ferry, Mike Westbrook (1976), and George Michael. He also toured with Diana Ross, Jack Jones, Perry Como, and Leo Sayer.

During the 1980s, Cosh recorded several movie soundtracks including Star Wars, Superman I and II, Ghandi, and Napoleon. He also played as an extra with several leading orchestras throughout the United Kingdom. He was a professor at the Guildhall School of Music and Drama from 1984 to 1987, and was a member of the BBC Symphony Orchestra from 1987 to 2005. He has also taught at Oxford University and York University. He conducts various champion brass bands. He is married to Sandy Cosh and has two sons, Ben (b. 1974) and William (b. 1976). He enjoys mountain hiking.

Bibl.: Harrell, Martin. "The BBC Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Sept. 1995); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Paul Cosh"

(www.gsmd.ac.uk); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Couch, Charles Allan ("Al") (b. Los Angeles, California, Oct. 28, 1942). American trumpeter. Couch grew up in Pasadena, California. He began playing the trumpet at age eight; his first teacher was Charles Mendenhall. During high school, he and his family moved to Saratoga, California, where he studied with Ernest Ortone, a student of the great Ernest Williams. After graduating from Campbell High School in 1960, he attended the University of Southern California for one year, studying music and business. He attended the University of California-Berkeley during his sophomore year in 1961-62 without declaring a major. A year later, he transferred to San Francisco State College where he began studying music in earnest, studying with Victor Kress, and graduating in June of 1965. He continued work there for an additional year in order to receive a Special Secondary Teaching Certificate in music. Additionally, he studied privately with Donald Reinberg.

Couch was drafted into the Army in 1966, and taught trumpet for three years at the Armed Forces School of Music in Norfolk, Virginia. After his service, he enrolled at Boston University where he studied with Roger Voisin from 1969 to 1971, earning a master of music degree. Upon graduating, he became principal trumpet of La Orquesta Sinfonica del Estado de Mexico in Toluca from September of 1971 to June of 1972. He then joined the Cleveland Orchestra, where he played until 2002, mostly as third and assistant first trumpet. He has also performed with the Cleveland Pops, Cleveland Chamber Symphony, Cleveland Jazz Orchestra, and Heritage Brass Quintet. He has been teaching at Cleveland State University since 1986.

Charles and Joanne Couch (a soprano) were married in 1970, and have three children: David (b. 1971) and twin sons Jonathan and Jeffrey (b. 1974). His hobbies include guitar and yoga.

Bibl.: "Allan Couch" (www.heritagebrassquintet.com/couch.htm); personal interview, June 28, 2011.

Courtois, Antoine (b. 1770; d. 1855). French manufacturer. Courtois's father established a brass instrument company in 1789 in Paris. Antoine Courtois himself opened the "Courtois Frères" shop in 1803 at which time he began making instruments under the exclusive name of Courtois. Courtois's bugles were played in the Garde Républicaine Band, and he also produced curved trumpets, slide trombones, keyed bugles, horns, and ophicleides. Circa 1830, Courtois Frères produced a cornet in C with two valves.

In 1844, Courtois's son Antoine Denis Courtois (1800?-1880) took over the business from his father and spent much of his time at work developing the cornet-à-piston. He worked closely with Jean-Baptiste L. Arban to design the "Arban-system" cornet around 1845. At his death, he was succeeded first by Auguste Mille (1881-98), then E. Delfaux, Emmanuel Gaudet (from 1917), P. Deslaurier (1933-37), and Paul Gaudet, Emmanuel's son. Gaudet's workshop was established in Amboise (from 1956). In 1980, Jacques Gaudet succeeded Paul Gaudet, and the Courtois company is today a leading manufacturer owned by the Buffet Crampon Group.

Many legendary and historic trumpet and cornet stars played Courtois instruments. These include Albert Adriano, Matthew Arbuckle, Herbert Barr, Roger Delmotte (adviser), Pierre Dutot, Denis Egan, Walter Emerson, Conrad Gozzo, Arthur Haneuse, Bunk Johnson, Georges Jouvin, Hermann Koenig, Mannie Klein, Jules Levy Sr., Ralph Marterie, Louis Menardi, Sergey Nakariakov, Pierre Pollin (adviser), Wilfred Roberts, Rocky Rockwell, Thomas V. Short, and Dan Tetslaff, to name a few.

Bibl.: Mathez, Jean-Pierre. Antoine Courtois (1997, Brass Bulletin); "Antoine Courtois" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cousins, M. Thomas (b. Wilson, North Carolina, Oct. 9, 1914; d. Charlotte, North Carolina, Oct. 22, 1972). American trumpeter and composer. Cousins is today best known for his numerous compositions for chorus, band, and orchestra. He was a leading trumpet player who was a member of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C. He was selected to serve on the committee that designed the "Committee" trumpet for the Martin Band Instrument Company in 1939. He was also a skilled arranger.

Bibl.: "M. Thomas Cousins" (www.worldcat.org/identities/ccn-no00-39499). http://www.worldcat.org/identities/lccn-no00-39499.

Couturier, Ernest Albert (b. Poughkeepsie, New York, Sept. 30, 1869; d. Wingdale, New York, Feb. 28, 1950). American cornetist. Couturier's parents, Charles Couturier and Amalia Feger, were emigrants from France and Brazil, respectively. One of Albert's eyes was defective at birth and he nearly lost his sight. He studied the piano at age ten, began playing the violin at age eleven, and then the cornet at age fourteen.

For a short time, Couturier attended the New England Conservatory of Music in Boston where he studied violin, cornet, and harmony. His cornet teacher told his parents that he should drop the cornet and concentrate on his other music studies. Couturier left school and returned to his hometown of Poughkeepsie to work in his uncle's watch repair shop.

During a trip to New York City in 1885, young Couturier happened to hear a band concert in Central Park. The cornet soloist who played was Theodore Hoch, a brilliant cornetist who also worked for the Carl Fischer Company. Couturier was quite impressed with Hoch's playing and began taking lessons from him. Hoch insisted that Couturier place all of the mouthpiece pressure on his bottom lip and jaw, so that the top lip could vibrate freely. After four years of study, Couturier developed an amazing range, and was able to play seven Cs. Soon, he was able to play all of the solos by Arban, Hartmann, and Levy. His first solo performance in public was at the age of seventeen, when he played Arban's Carnival of Venice.

In the late 1880s, Couturier played in various minstrel shows and circuses that traveled across the United States and Canada. He was the featured cornet soloist with the Heywood Peerless Concert Company for two seasons beginning in 1892. In that same year, he formed his own band that performed at the St. Louis Exposition; in the following year, he joined the Innes Band. At various times, he was contracted to be the cornet soloist with the re-formed Gilmore Band under the direction of Victor Herbert. When Herbert resigned as director, Couturier assumed the conducting duties for several weeks.

After the Gilmore Band broke up, Gilmore's widow gave the entire Gilmore Band Library to Couturier. Together, with several former members of the band, they established the P. S. Gilmore Band Library Publishing Company in St. Louis, and arranged reduced scores of many of the 18,000 works in the collection. The company was sold in 1905 to Carl Fischer.

Couturier toured Europe in 1906, and caused a sensation because of his amazing upper register and effortless octave slurs. In the following year, he was offered the cornet solo spot in Sousa's band, but declined the offer in order to tour as a featured soloist with numerous bands across the U.S. and Canada, and to demonstrate Holton cornets. He continued these activities for ten years.

Couturier designed his own "Conical Bore Cornet" in 1918, and had it made by the York Company in Grand Rapids, Michigan. After some success with the instrument, he established his own manufacturing company in La Porte, Indiana. He acquired the rights to his designs and began producing fine cornets of his own make; he sold the company to Lyon & Healy in 1923. Couturier cornets continued to be produced until 1929.

Couturier went totally blind in 1925 at the age of fifty-six, but began touring as a soloist in vaudeville shows and circuses until he developed heart problems. He retired and moved to Mt. Vernon, New York.

Couturier suffered a mental breakdown and died in the Harlem Valley Psychiatric Center in Wingdale, New York, on February 28, 1950 at the age of eighty. He never recorded his main solo repertoire because of the limited recording time of 78-rpm records during that period; he refused to allow the pieces to be cut up. However, he did record four solos for the Edison Company: Schubert's Serenade, Endearing Young Charms, A Dream (Barlett), and The Rosary. His usual solos remain unpublished and include Carnival of Venice; Waltz in D-flat; Moonlight; Saturn; Mercury; Venus; Jupiter; Uranus; Mercury.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Galloway, H. Michael. "Ernest Albert Couturier: American Cornet Virtuoso" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1980).

Cowell, John ("Johnny") Marwood (b. Tillsonburg, Ontario, Canada, Jan. 11, 1926). Canadian trumpeter and composer. Cowell's father and three uncles were brass players. Johnny began playing the trumpet at an early age and performed his first solo at age six. He was mostly self-taught, but did study for a while in Toronto with Edward Smeale. By age fifteen, he was playing professionally as soloist with the Toronto Symphony Band, and at age sixteen, joined the Toronto Symphony Orchestra.

During World War II, Cowell was a member of the Royal Canadian Navy Band and principal trumpet of the Victoria Symphony Orchestra (1943-45). He sustained a lip injury and was unable to play the trumpet for some years. After his honorable discharge from the military, he received a scholarship in composition to the Royal Conservatory of Music in Toronto where he studied with Oskar Morawetz and John Weinzweig. He was adept at composing pop tunes; many of his over two hundred tunes were recorded by major artists such as Andy Williams, Al Hirt, Tony Martin, and Lawrence Welk. Some, including Walk Hand in Hand, Our Winter Love, and His Girl climbed to number one on the pop charts.

After eight years of hard work, Cowell was able to play the trumpet again. He won a position in the Toronto Symphony Orchestra (again) in 1952, a position he would hold until 1991. He resumed his solo career and was featured as a pops trumpet soloist with the TSO and other leading orchestras and bands throughout Canada. He also performed with dance bands led by Stanley St. John, Art Hallman, Jack Denton, and others.

Cowell released seven solo albums: The Art of Johnny Cowell (Doremi), Carnival of Venice (Fanfare), Hot Brass (Audat), The Virtuoso Trumpet (Fanfare), Tender Loving Care (Ampersand), Those Were The Days (Broadland), and Bridge Over Troubled Waters (CTL). He also played on many other recordings, often performing his own compositions. As a composer, he has had many commissions, including one for Roller Coaster, a trumpet trio commissioned by Maestro Seiji Ozawa as an encore during a Japan tour by the TSO. Another commission was for a fanfare for Queen Elizabeth's visit to Canada in 1984.

Upon his retirement from the TSO in 1991, Cowell became principal of the Toronto Philharmonic and soloist with the Hannaford Street Silver Band. His final concert as a soloist was in 2003 at the age of seventy-seven. He received letters of congratulation from the Prime Minister of Canada, Premier of the Province of Ontario, Mayor of the City of Toronto, and president of the Toronto Musicians' Association. He also received a special letter from pops conductor Erich Kunzel, and the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Toronto Musicians' Association in 2005.

Bibl.: Frink, Laurie. "ITG Profile: Johnny Cowell" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2006); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Johnny Cowell" (The Canadian Encyclopedia: www.thecanadianencyclopedia.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Cox, Allan E. (b. Seattle, Washington, Nov. 10, 1945). American trumpeter. Cox grew up in North Loup, Nebraska. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first teacher was Clark Yonda. After graduating from North Loup-Scotia High School in nearby Scotia, Nebraska, in 1964, he attended the University of Nebraska, studying with Dennis L. Schneider and earning a bachelor of music education degree in 1968. Cox then became a graduate trumpet teaching assistant at Wichita State University, studying with Walter Myers and earning a master of music degree in 1970. Additionally, he has studied with Vincent Cichowicz, Manny Laureano, Raymond Mase, Michael Sachs, Gerard Schwarz, James Stamp, and James Thompson.

Cox began his fulltime teaching career at East Carolina University (1970-72) and the University of Southern Mississippi in 1972, receiving the university's Excellence in Research Award for performance and creative activity in 1995. He performed with numerous area orchestras and the Southern Arts Brass Quintet (faculty) until accepting his current position as professor of trumpet at Vanderbilt University in 2000. He was Guest Professor of Trumpet at Musashino Academia Musicae and a member of the International Brass Quintet in Tokyo, Japan (1980-82), and taught at the Sewanee Summer Music Festival in Tennessee (1985-2001). He has been a member of symphony orchestras in Lincoln, Wichita, Pensacola, Gulf Coast, Meridian, and Lakeside, as well as a member of the International Brass Quintet, Sewanee Festival Orchestra (principal), Sonus Brass (since 1987), and the Blair Brass Quintet (since 2003). Cox has performed as a soloist in Japan, Germany, South Korea, Mexico, Venezuela, Taiwan, Italy, and throughout the United States. Among his many successful students are Michael Tunnell, Joan Retzke, Larry Clemens, and Leland Kornegay. His solo CDs are Petite Pieces for Trumpet and Piano and Hymus for trumpet and organ (Mark Custom Recording Service).

Cox has been married to Dr. Hildegard Holland Cox, an organist and church choir director, since 1993. His children are Damon (b. 1967) and Mathew (b. 1970) (from a previous marriage), and stepdaughter Ilona Johnson (b. 1982). His hobbies include being an avid sports fan, golf, traveling, coin and stamp collecting, landscaping, crossword puzzles, and Sudoku.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Allan Cox" (http://blair.vanderbilt.edu); personal interview, Feb. 27, 2011.

Cox, Pierre (b. Lüttich [Liège], Belgium, Sept. 26, 1929). Belgian trumpeter. Cox began studying trumpet with his father, Théodore, and later with Joseph Martin. For ten years, he attended the Royal Conservatory of Music in Liège, studying with the noted Michel Nicolay. He won second prize at the Geneva Competition in 1950 (Roger Delmotte, first prize). In 1948, he became third trumpet, in 1949 principal, of the Liège Opera Orchestra, which in 1960 became the Orchestra of Liège. He made radio recordings of various concertos, including those by Jolivet (second concerto) and Loucheur, conducted by the respective composers. From 1951 to 1994, among other places, he taught at the Royal Conservatory of Music in Liège, where he had a reputation as a severe teacher. Among his pupils were Antoine Acquisto, Jean Lambert, Marc Frankinet, and Dominique Bodart.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Macaluso, Rosario. "Le cours de trompette au Conservatoire royal de musique de Liège depuis 1826," Bulletin de la Societie liégoise de Musicologie (Oct. 1992).

Cracchiolo, Salvator ("Sal") William II (b. Long Beach, California, Oct. 3, 1954). American trumpeter. Cracchiolo's father, Sal Cracchiolo I, owned a music studio where he taught piano and played professional accordion. His mother, Edith, started him off on trumpet at age twelve. He later studied with James Stamp, Claude Gordon, Don Ferrara, and Bobby Shew. While still in high school, he played with the Cerritos College jazz and concert bands. He began playing professionally at age fifteen, playing in various nightclubs with Latin and Rhythm & Blues bands.

Cracchiolo began his long musical relationship with Poncho Sanchez in 1970, becoming the original trumpet player with the Poncho Sanchez Latin Band (starting in 1977) that led to the production of eighteen record albums. During the 1980s, he also played with the Pasadena City College Big Band under Gary Foster. While with this band, he performed with such legends as Lee Konitz, Peter Erskine, and Warne Marsh. Cracchiolo toured internationally with Sanchez and others during the late 1980s, and also played and recorded with artists such as Arturo Sandoval, Dizzy Gillespie, Freddie Hubbard, Chick Corea, Tito Puente, Terence Blanchard, Eddie Harris, Bobby Shew, Stanley Turrentine, Tito Puente, Mongo Santamaria, Clare Fischer, Joey DeFrancesco, Dianne Reeves, Andy Martin, and Celia Cruz. He participated in recorded film soundtracks for The Mambo Kings, A Million to Juan, Luminarias, and The HBO Cinema Latin Session. He has also toured worldwide with Tom Jones, Tower of Power, Vikki Carr, Brian Setzer, Pete Escovedo, and others.

Cracchiolo is currently performing, recording, and touring with his own sextet that includes his wife, vocalist Melanie Jackson. Their CD, Fly, was nominated for a Latin Grammy in 2001. Their 2003 CD is titled Spirit.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Sal Cracchiolo" (www.jazz.com/encyclopedia/cracchiolo-sal-salvator-william-cracchiolo-II).

Crisara, Raymond D. (b. Cortland, New York, Oct. 19, 1920). American trumpeter. Crisara has had a long and productive career. He began playing trumpet at age ten under the guidance of his father, a local community band director and tool and die maker. Crisara graduated from high school at age fifteen, and began playing in various music ensembles in upstate New York. He played in the New York All-State Band (Ithaca, 1936) before going to New York City to study with Ernest Williams at the Ernest Williams School of Music (1937-40) where he played in the Ernest Williams Music School Bands (1936-39). There, he met classmates Donald Jacoby, Ray Wetzel, Frank Scimonelli, James Burke, and Gilbert Mitchell. He also played with the Goldman Band, and was cosoloist with Del Staigers (1940). During his third year with Williams, band conductor William D. Revelli came by the school, and offered Crisara a position at the University of Michigan as assistant band director and trumpet teacher. This was a rare opportunity for an undergraduate student, so Crisara accepted the job.

Vincent Bach came to the University of Michigan in 1941 to work with the band, and at Revelli's request, Crisara performed for Bach. This must have made quite an impression on Bach, because a few months later, he contacted Crisara about an opening at the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra in New York. Crisara took the audition and became principal trumpet in the fall of 1941, but was drafted into the army in 1942. He was initially stationed at Ft. Dix in New Jersey, but was later transferred to Ft. Jackson, South Carolina, and then to the Special Service unit at Ft. Slocum, New York, where he performed in a show band.

After finishing his military service, Crisara won an audition to become third and associate principal of the NBC Symphony under Maestro Arturo Toscanini. The first trumpeter was Harry Glantz, and the second was Frank Falcone. Crisara stayed with the orchestra until Toscanini's death in 1954, when the orchestra was disbanded. He worked as a studio musician for many more years, playing for television shows such as Victory at Sea, Project 20, Wide Wide World, and The Defenders. He performed in many Broadway shows, and taught as an adjunct faculty member at New York University and the University of Bridgeport in Connecticut. He was also a member of the André Kostelanetz Orchestra, Pablo Casals Festival Orchestra, Paul Lavalle's Band of America, Xavier Cugat Orchestra (1959), Morton Gould's orchestra, Leopold Stokowski's orchestra, the Burke-Phillips Band, and the ABC Brass Quintet. Crisara has recorded hundreds of jingles and concert works, including Paul Hindemith's Sonata with Glenn Gould, piano.

In 1978, Daniel Patrylak, director of the school of music at the University of Texas in Austin, called Crisara about the possibility of replacing Frank Elsass as professor of trumpet. Crisara accepted the position in the fall of 1980, and during the next twenty-three years taught hundreds of students including Craig Morris, Alan Hood, Vincent DiMartino, Billy Ray Hunter, and Nick Norton. Crisara held the Frank C. Erwin Jr. Centennial Professorship, and was once named the music school's Outstanding Teacher. He retired in 2003, and was succeeded by Raymond Sasaki.

Crisara was known to be a technically precise and musical player who possessed a phenomenal single-tongue articulation. Doc Severinsen said of him, I cannot recall a time over the years that I ever heard Ray make a musical error or even miss a note. He is the most schooled trumpet player I have ever known or heard. Crisara is also one of the most beloved musicians. John Ware said of him, Ray Crisara is a gentleman with character of the highest degree, and is a trumpeter of unsurpassed excellence. My experiences playing with Ray are among my fondest memories.

Crisara received the Edwin Franko Goldman Memorial Award from the American Bandmasters Association in 1994, and the Award of Merit from the International Trumpet Guild in 2004. On October 16, 2010 approximately forty of Crisara's former students held a ninetieth birthday celebration in his honor at the University of Texas. Crisara lives in Austin, Texas, with Angela, his wife of over sixty years.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom with mp3 excerpt; Oct. 2008); Winking, Keith. "Raymond Crisara: Teaching by Example" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2000); "Interview with Raymond Crisara" (www.trumpetguild.org/2004conference/wed/204.html).

Crowley, Andrew ("Andy") (b. London, England, Jan. 17, 1962). British trumpeter. Crowley studied at the Royal Academy of Music in London from 1980 to 1983. He has held several important principal trumpet positions in London orchestras, including the City of London Sinfonia, English Chamber Orchestra (from 1990), and London Sinfonietta (1991-94). He is a founding member of the London Brass, and currently serves as its manager.

As a leading studio performer, Crowley has recorded over four hundred film soundtracks, including those of The Legend of Bagger Vance, The Mask of Zorro, Tinker Tailor Soldier Spy, Black Swan, Gladiator, Kick Ass, Shark Tale, Prince of Persia, Kung Fu Panda, Iron Man 2, and Captain America. He has also worked with Paul McCartney, Tom Jones, Cliff Richard, and Quincy Jones, among others. Since 2010, he has toured internationally with Peter Gabriel's production of Scratch Your Back. He is also a fine conductor, and has made many guest appearances at leading music festivals.

Crowley has taught at the Royal College of Music since 1993.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2010); Andrew Crowley's official website: www.andrewcrowley.co.uk.

Crown, [Gordon] Thomas ("Tom") (b. Chicago, Illinois, July 9, 1929). American trumpeter. At the age of twelve, Crown began his music studies on E-flat tuba but, being rather small for his age, switched to trumpet at age fifteen. He attended South Shore High School in Chicago (graduating in 1947) and had his first lessons with Isabelle Harridge. He later studied with Renold Schilke, and attended Roosevelt University (under Schilke) between 1949 and 1959, graduating with bachelor and master of music education degrees. He was accepted into the Civic Orchestra of Chicago (1949-52) at which time he received lessons from Adolph Herseth. Subsequently, he studied with Arnold Jacobs.

At age nineteen, Crown began his playing career with the Grant Park Orchestra (four summers) in Chicago. This led to an invitation from Arthur Fiedler to tour with the Boston Pops orchestra. Crown replaced Elden Benge (who moved to California) in the WGN Radio-Television Orchestra in 1953, then again from 1959-70. Tom Crown was well known in Chicago because he played on WGN's Bozo Circus for ten years. He was drafted into military service in 1953 and for eight months was stationed in Stuttgart, Germany. There, he played in the 7th Army Symphony Orchestra, performing in Germany, Italy, France, Ireland, and England. Upon his return to Chicago, he married Donna Frank in 1959.

Crown joined the Chicago Lyric Opera Orchestra in 1962 and remained in this ensemble for thirty years, retiring in 1992. He taught trumpet at Roosevelt University from 1968 to 1988, and in 1969, he founded Tom Crown Mutes, known worldwide. Crown was the host of the Chicago Trumpet Conference in 1971, and from 1973-74, he participated in an exchange with trumpeter Arno Lange, playing that year with the Deutsche Oper Berlin. He also founded Crown Music Press in 1975 with Chicago Lyric Opera Orchestra colleague Charles Stine, but turned the business over to Stine soon afterwards.

Now retired from playing, Tom Crown and wife Donna continue operating the mute company out of their home in La Grange Park, Illinois, near Chicago. He enjoys writing and researching the history of important trumpeters of Chicago, and learning foreign languages.

Bibl.: Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Tom Crown: History of Mutes" (Brass Bulletin, no. 67, III/1989); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tom Crown Mutes website (www.tomcrownmutes.com); personal interview, Feb. 17, 2010.

Culley, Wendell Philips (b. Worcester, Massachusetts, Jan. 8, 1906; d. Los Angeles, California, May 8, 1983). American trumpeter. Culley came from a musical family. He played in the Worcester Concert Band and in local bands in the Boston area, and joined the Bill Brown Brownies in 1930. He moved to New York City in 1930 and played lead trumpet for Cab Calloway (1930-31), Horace Henderson, Noble Sissle (1931-42), Lionel Hampton (1944-49), and Count Basie (1952-59). He played on over two hundred recordings between 1932 and 1959.

After leaving Count Basie's band in 1959, Wendell Culley gave up music and moved to Los Angeles where he pursued a career in insurance. He married Violet Cecilia Jones; their daughter was Christine Gilliard Culley (1930-2009). He passed away on May 8, 1983 and is buried in Rose Hills Memorial Park in Whittier, California, in an unmarked grave.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Culley Family History" (http://rootdigger2011.com/tag/wendell-Phillip-culley); "Wendell Phillip (Cully) Culley" (www.findagrave.com/cgi-bin/fg.cgi?page=gr&Grid=60250077).

Cullum, Jim Jr. (b. San Antonio, Texas, Sept. 20, 1941). American cornetist. Cullum's father was clarinetist Jim Cullum Sr., the founder of the Happy Jazz Band in San Antonio, Texas. Inspired by his father's record collection of Louis Armstrong, Bobby Hackett, King Oliver, and Bix Beiderbecke, Jim Jr. took up the cornet at an early age, and at seventeen was playing professionally. Cullum attended San Antonio College and Trinity University, graduating in 1965. He had joined his father's band in 1962, making fifteen albums with it by 1973 when his father passed away. Jim Jr. took over the band, and it eventually became known as the Jim Cullum Jazz Band.

Cullum's idol was cornetist Bix Beiderbecke (1903-31). Being an admirer of Bix's tone quality, Cullum plays the same brand and model of cornet as Bix, a Conn "Victor." Cullum has devoted his entire career to traditional jazz music. After his band began performing regularly at The Landing club in San Antonio, Cullum has become nationally known through weekly broadcasts of Live at The Landing on National Public Radio. His band has also toured hundreds of college campuses and jazz festivals throughout the United States as well as Mexico and Australia. Among his distinguished guests were Bobby Hackett (1966), Max Kaminsky (1978), and Bob Barnard (1990).

Jim Cullum's albums include Jim Cullum's Happy Jazz Band (Jazzology), Live at the Memphis Jazz Festival (Jazzology), Porgy and Bess (a "concerto/suite" for jazz band arranged by Cullum and recorded on the Columbia label), Hooray for Hoagy (Audiophile), Shootin' the Agate (Stomp Off), New Year's All Star Jam (Riverwalk), Battle of the Bands (Riverwalk) and Fireworks! Red Hot and Blues (Riverwalk).

Bibl.: Crowther, Bruce. "Jim Cullum: San Antonio Jazz Legend" (www.landing.com/reviews/jjintern.htm); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Jim Jr. playing with his father.

Curé, Antoine (b. Bar-le-Duc, France, Apr. 11, 1951). French trumpeter. Curé studied with his father, then with André Bellis at the Caen Conservatory until 1970 when he entered the Paris Conservatory, studying with Ludovic Vaillant until 1974. Additionally, he studied with Roger Delmotte and Marcel Lagorce.

Curé won second prize in the international competition in Toulon in 1975, and first prize in the competition in Vercelli in 1977. He gave trumpet and organ concerts, appeared on French television (Hummel's Concerto), and played with the Ile de France Orchestra. He was a frequent soloist with the Concerts Colonne before joining Pierre Boulez's group, Ensemble InterContemporain, in 1981. Curé played with the Ensemble de Trompettes de Paris from 1983 to 1986 and Jean-Paul Leroy's Concert Arban (quintet) in 1990. He is a member of the Arban Chamber Brass.

Considered to be one of the world's leading contemporary trumpet specialists, Curé has premiered and recorded numerous works for trumpet including several CDs of music ranging in repertoire from Molter to Birtwistle.

Curé replaced Marcel Lagorce at the Paris Conservatory in 1986, and has given master classes around the world.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Curnow, Jeffrey ("Jeff") (b. Wilmington, Delaware, Dec. 11, 1960). American trumpeter. Curnow grew up in Easton, Pennsylvania, where his father was a high school band director. He studied with Seymour Rosenfeld at Temple University in Philadelphia, receiving a bachelor of music degree before attending Wichita State University for one year as a graduate assistant in trumpet to Dr. Walter Myers. There, he also performed in the Wichita Brass Quintet and Wichita Symphony Orchestra. Before completing his master of music degree, however, Curnow left in 1983 to become principal trumpet of the New Haven Symphony Orchestra in Connecticut. Soon, he was also a member of Edward Carroll's New York Trumpet Ensemble.

Curnow's career blossomed when he joined the Empire Brass Quintet in 1987. The group toured the world, released fifteen CDs during Curnow's time with it, and appeared on several national television and radio shows. On occasion, he also performed as an extra or substitute trumpeter in the Philadelphia Orchestra, Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, and the National Symphony Orchestra.

Leaving the Empire Brass Quintet in 1995, Curnow devoted his career to orchestral playing as principal of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra. In 2001, he accepted his current position as associate principal of the Philadelphia Orchestra. An active teacher, Curnow has taught at the University of Connecticut, the Tanglewood Institute, the Royal Academy of Music in London, and is an adjunct faculty member at Temple University, and since 2003, at the Curtis Institute.

Curnow's hobby is videography. He has produced several humorous cartoon videos about trumpet playing.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Jeffrey Curnow" (www.temple.edu/boyer/AppDev/port.asp?portID=323.

Curry, Mark Steven ("Cat") (b. South Bend, Indiana, Aug. 28, 1956). American trumpeter and manufacturer. Curry began playing the trumpet at age thirteen. His first trumpet teacher was Lloyd Higgerson, band director at Kankakee (Illinois) Eastridge High School where Curry graduated in 1974. He then attended the University of Illinois from 1974 to 1978, earning a bachelor of music degree studying with Wayne Gorder, Raymond Sasaki, and David Hickman. During his freshman year, the famous scream trumpeter, William "Cat" Anderson, gave a concert and clinic with the University of Illinois Jazz Band. Anderson took the time to work with Curry for a short while, and his advice enabled Curry to expand his already impressive upper register by a fifth—that day! At the end of the concert that evening, Anderson invited Curry to come on stage and play an encore with him, an event that gave rise to Curry's nickname, "Cat."

Curry freelanced in central Illinois and Chicago (Jazz Members Big Band) until joining Woody Herman's band as lead trumpet during the summer of 1982. A few months later, he moved to Las Vegas and worked in various show and kicks bands. From 1983 to 1989, he toured as lead trumpet in the Ray Charles Orchestra, and substituted with the "Genius of Soul" until Charles's death in 2004. He moved to Reno, Nevada, in 1989, working as a freelance lead player in several casino bands for numerous headliners and shows, while earning his master of music degree in trumpet at the University of Nevada-Reno studying with Dr. Larry Engstrom. Curry is a founding member of the Reno Jazz Orchestra.

Curry began producing trumpet valve caps and mouthpiece "Sound Sleeves" in 1989. He worked with computer numerical control programmer Neil Gorman in Wisconsin, a machinist who helped design many of his prototype mouthpieces. Westside Machine Tool in Elkhorn, Wisconsin, manufactured Curry's first mouthpieces from 1993 to 1997. After learning CNC and computer assisted design/manufacturing programming, Curry was able to expand his mouthpiece line that today include trombone, tuba, horn, and specialty brass instrument mouthpieces. Beginning in 1998, Curry has produced mouthpieces through his company, Curry Precision Mouthpieces in Reno, Nevada.

Since 2003, Curry has lived with his life partner, Linda Collins. He enjoys playing golf, and is an active musician in the Reno area.

Bibl.: personal interview, Feb. 14, 2011.

Curson, Theodore ("Ted") (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, June 3, 1935; d. Montclair, New Jersey, Nov. 4, 2012). American trumpeter. Curson received his first trumpet on his tenth birthday as a present from his father. The Curson family knew Jimmy, Percy, and Tootie Heath, who helped get him started in jazz. Curson attended Mastbaum High School, and then studied at the Granoff Musical Conservatory and Costello Studios. His trumpet teachers were Anthony Del Campo and John Costello.

Curson began his professional career in 1953 by working with Bobby Timmons, then with Charlie Ventura. With the encouragement of Miles Davis, he moved to New York City in 1956 where he soon worked with Ray Bryant, Philly Joe Jones, Duke Jordan, Mal Waldron, and Red Garland. Curson made his first of many recordings in 1959 (with Cecil Taylor). Perhaps Curson was best known from 1959 to 1962 as a member of the Charles Mingus Quartet.

Curson co-led a band with sax player Bill Barron from 1962 to 1966. He also performed with Max Roach and Archie Shepp. Beginning in 1963, Curson began touring Europe. He moved to Denmark around 1965, but returned to New York in 1976. He played with Gato Barbieri (Paris, 1966), Nick Brignola (Antibes Festival, 1967), Michel Roques (1968), Alan Silva (1971), Harold Mabern (1972), Karin Krog (1972), and Steve Potts (1972). Since then, he freelanced, and performed or recorded with the Mingus Dynasty, Ron Blake, Sal Nistico, Andrew Hill, Frank Wright (1978), and led his own groups including the Spirit of Life Ensemble. For eight years during the 1980s, Curson hosted jam sessions at the Blue Note. In the early twenty-first century, he played in France (Spirit of Jazz concerts).

A versatile musician, Curson began playing the guitar as a second instrument in 1970. He was also a fine vocalist, and was an excellent player of the piccolo trumpet and flugelhorn. His composition, Tears for Dolphy, has been used in several movie soundtracks. His albums as leader include Typical Ted (Trident), Sugar 'n Spice (Level Green), I Heard Mingus (Interplay), Quicksand (Atlantic), Cattin' Curson (EPM), Urge (Fontana), Studio Live (Fifty Fifty), Flip Top (Freedom), Blue Piccolo (Whynot), Plenty of Horn (Boplicity), Fire Down Below (Original Jazz Classics), Pop Wine (Future), Tears for Dolphy (Black Lion), Traveling On (Evidence), The Canadian Concert of Ted Curson (Can-Am), Snake Johnson (Chiaroscuro), Ted Curson and Company (India Navigation), and others.

Since 1966, Curson performed at the annual Pori Jazz Festival in Finland. His popularity prompted President Tarja Halonen to extend a personal invitation to appear at Finland's 2007 Independence Day Ball.

Curson died of a heart attack on November 4, 2012.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Erdmann, Thomas. "My Own Way: An Interview with Ted Curson" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2011); "Ted Curson" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Ted Curson" (All Tomorrow's Parties: www.atpfestival.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Curtis, Stanley H. (b. Florence, Alabama, Oct. 23, 1963). American trumpeter. Stanley is the son of Mr. and Mrs. Robert O. Curtis. He was raised in Tuscaloosa, Alabama, where he began learning the trumpet at the age of thirteen. He graduated from Central High School in 1982, and played with the Tuscaloosa Symphony. Curtis attended the University of Alabama under Michael Johnson, receiving his bachelor of music degree in 1986. In 1988, he earned a master of music degree from the Cleveland Institute as a student of Michael Sachs. He was a member of the Evansville (Indiana) Symphony Orchestra, and was on the faculty of the University of Evansville for a few years before deciding to attend Indiana University as a doctoral student from 2002 to 2005 where he studied with Charles Gorham and Bernard Adelstein.

After completing his doctor of music degree, Curtis went to Holland on a Fulbright Scholarship to study Baroque trumpet and cornett with Friedemann Immer. Curtis has chaired the Baroque Division of the National Trumpet Competition since 2002, and has been a member of several early music ensembles including the Milwaukee Baroque, Orchestra of the 17th Century, Washington Bach Consort, Washington Cornett & Sackbutt Ensemble, and Apollo's Fire. As a performer on the natural trumpet, Curtis won third prize in the First International Altenburg Competition for Baroque Trumpet in Bad Sãckingen, Germany (1996), and has performed J.S. Bach's difficult Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 numerous times. In addition, he was assistant principal trumpet of the Orquesta Sinfónica de Galicia in La Coruña, Spain (1995-97).

Stanley H. Curtis joined the United States Navy Band in 1998. He is also a member of the US Navy Band Brass Quintet. Teachers not previously mentioned include Rick Seraphinoff and Thomas Binkley for early music, and Steven Hendrickson and Peter Masseurs for modern trumpet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Koehler, Elisa. "Thoughts on Historic Brass Performance: An Interview with Stanley Curtis" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2008); "MU1 Stanley H. Curtis" The United States Navy Band (www.navyband.mil).

Cuvit, Michel (b. Geneva, Switzerland, Dec. 6, 1930; d. Monthey, Switzerland, Aug. 18 or 19, 2010). Swiss trumpeter. Cuvit was self-taught before studying with Paolo Longinotti at the Geneva Conservatory from 1955 to 1957. He joined his mentor in the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande in 1960, and later replaced him as principal trumpet when Longinotti died in 1963. Cuvit remained with the orchestra until 1987.

Cuvit was a fine soloist who recorded the trumpet concertos of Leopold Mozart and Johann Nepomuk Hummel (in E-flat) with the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande under the baton of Maestro Ernest Ansermet.

Cuvit was a teacher at the Geneva Conservatory until 1997. Among his pupils was Gérard Métraillier. He also made mouthpieces of his own brand.

Cuvit was married to Denise Cuvit-Humbersert with whom he had a daughter, Nicole Dewarrat-Cuvit.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "En Hommage à Michel Cuvit" (www.hommages.ch/defunt/55013/Michel_Cuvit); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Czeglédi, Zsolt (b. Sárvár, Hungary, July 23, 1967). Hungarian trumpeter. Czeglédi studied with János Pernecker from 1975 to 1981, and attended the conservatory in Györ from 1981 to 1982. He then studied with István Török at the Béla Bartók Conservatory in Budapest from 1982 to 1985, and with Frigyes Várásdy at the Franz Liszt Music Academy from 1985 to 1990. He won prizes in several competitions including those in Zalaegerszeg (1978), Barcs (chamber music, 1984 and 1986), and Miskole (1985).

Czeglédi began his orchestral career in 1988 as principal trumpet of the Hungarian State Opera Orchestra in Budapest. He became principal of the Philharmonic Orchestra of Budapest in 1991, and has also held the same position with the Budapest Festival Orchestra since 1997. He was a member of the Academic Brass Quintet from 1985 to 1989, and the Hungarian Brass Quintet from 1991 to 1996.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

D

Dahlqvist, Reine (b. Göteborg, Sweden, Sept. 2, 1945). Swedish author and musicologist. Dahlqvist, an amateur trumpeter, has devoted much of his research and writing to the trumpet. He studied musicology in Göteborg with Jan Ling, and in Uppsala with Ingmar Bengtsson. He earned a master's degree at the University of Vienna, writing his dissertation on the keyed trumpet. His PhD was earned at the University of Göteborg in 1988. Dahlqvist received a research scholarship from the Council for Humanities and Social Sciences (1989-92) that enabled him to do post doctoral work.

Dahlqvist taught at the University of Göteborg and served as the School of Music librarian. He has authored numerous articles and texts, including The Keyed Trumpet and Its Greatest Virtuoso, Anton Weidinger (The Brass Press).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Dai, Zhonghui, (b. Manchuria, China, Nov. 20, 1957). Chinese trumpeter and conductor. After receiving a degree in music in China, Dai continued his career in America, earning a master of music degree at the International University of San Diego. He received a fellowship to the Tanglewood Institute during the summer of 1990, a fellowship to the Los Angeles Philharmonic Institute in 1991, and studied for seven years at the University of Southern California Institute. His teachers include Boyde Hood, Rob Roy McGregor, Charles Schlueter, Roger Voisin, Thomas Stevens, and Susan Slaughter.

Dai has recorded two solo albums and two educational videos. He has been the principal trumpeter of the National Symphony Orchestra of Beijing since 1999, and is a professor at Beijing's Central Conservatory (since 2002). He is founder and director of the conservatory brass ensemble and is conductor of the conservatory's symphonic wind orchestra. He is an active soloist and clinician, and is president of the China Trumpet Guild, vice president of the Chinese Association of Symphonic Bands, and a former member of the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild.

Bibl.: www.philharmonicwinds.org; www.gvsu.edu/trumpetseminar/zhonghui-dai-37.htm.

Daily, Pete [Thamon Pierce] (b. Portland, Indiana, May 5, 1911; d. Los Angeles, California, Aug. 23, 1986). American cornetist. As a boy, Daily learned the baritone horn, tuba, and bass sax before switching to cornet in high school. Between the years 1930 and 1942, he became a well-known Dixieland performer in Chicago, playing with Jack Davies's Kentuckians (making his debut recordings in 1930), Frank Melrose, Art Von Damme, Bud Freeman, and Boyce Brown. His best records were made with Frank Melrose in 1940.

Daily moved to Los Angeles in 1942, and worked with Mike Riley and Ozzie Nelson before joining the Merchant Marine. After the service, he rejoined Nelson in 1945. Starting in the mid 1940s, he led the Pete Daily Chicagoans, a Dixieland band based in Los Angeles that recorded for Jump and Capitol until 1954.

Bad health affected Daily in the 1960s. He began to double on valve trombone and moved back to Indiana where he played with Smokey Stover's band. His health worsened in the 1970s, forcing him to play on a part-time basis after moving back to Los Angeles. Finally, a stroke in 1979 ended his playing career.

Pete Daily can be heard in the 1951 film, Rhythm Inn. Some of his albums include Pete Daily and His Chicagoans (Jump), Pete Daily's Dixieland Band (Capitol), and Dixie by Daily (Capitol).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Dale, Delbert (b. Indianapolis, Indiana, c1922; d. 1992). American trumpeter. Dale grew up in Indianapolis and learned trumpet and music composition in the United States and Japan. He also played in many wind ensembles and symphony orchestras in those countries. He founded the Indianapolis Brass Choir in 1987 and wrote the text, Trumpet Technique in 1965 (revised in 1977), and arranged Londonderry Air (traditional) and Somewhere (Bernstein) for brass in 1987.

Bibl.: Dale, Delbert. Trumpet Technique (Oxford University Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: USAF Band touring in Quito, Ecuador in February of 1959. From left to right: Jack Tardy, Art Will, Delbert Dale.

Dámit, András (b. Nagyzsám, Hungary, Aug. 14, 1883; d. Budapest, Hungary, July 27, 1932). Hungarian trumpeter. Dámit studied trumpet with Willi (William) Böhme at the Budapest Academy from 1897 to 1906, as well as composition with János Koossler. He succeeded Böhme as principal trumpet of the Budapest Opera and Philharmonic Society (1907-32), and as professor at the Academy (1908-32).

Dámit was considered the best trumpeter of his generation in Hungary, known for his excellent playing in the operas of Richard Wagner, and it's been reported that he also possessed an excellent Wagnerian tenor voice.

Dámit was the leading trumpet teacher in Hungary during the early twentieth century; among his best-known students are Niklós Forrai, Kálmán Patkos, László Szödy, Willy Neuner (who later changed his name to Vilmos Ernóhézi), Rudolf Borst, and Miksa Sammer. His successor at the Academy was Ernóhézi.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Damrow, Frits (b. Uebach, Netherlands, June 3, 1960). Dutch trumpeter. Damrow began playing the flugelhorn at age nine. When he was twelve, his father bought him an album of Maurice André, and listening to it inspired him to become a professional trumpeter. Damrow attended the music school in Kerkrade, studying with Guus Erkens. Afterwards, he studied with Pierre Wilhelmus at the conservatory in Maastricht. He has also studied with James Stamp, Thomas Stevens, and Pierre Thibaud.

Damrow was principal trumpet of the Radio Symphony Orchestra in Hilversum from 1982 to 1991, and principal of the famed Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam from 1991 to 2009. He was a professor at the conservatory in Hilversum from 1984 to 1995, and taught at the Amsterdam Conservatory from 1995 until 2010 when he moved to Switzerland to become a professor at the Hochschule der Künste in Zurich. He has given master classes around the world, and has performed recitals at numerous music festivals and conferences of the International Trumpet Guild.

Damrow has published several texts and collections of music including Fitness for Brass, Multistyle Studies, Bel Canto for Brass, Sound the Trumpet, and Festive Brass, all with de Haske Publications. He has also released the CD, Sonate.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Danielsson, Bengt (b. Sala, Sweden, Nov. 20, 1962). Swedish trumpeter. Danielsson studied at the University of Göthenburg with Bengt Eklund, and additionally with Claes Strömblad, Philip Smith, and John Wallace. After playing in a military orchestra for one year, he continued his education for one year at the Orchestra School in Londres.

Danielsson's orchestral career began as principal trumpet of the Helsingborg Symphony Orchestra (1986-89), and since 1989 he has been principal of the Göthenburg Symphony Orchestra. He is also a member of Otto Sauter's Ten of the Best trumpet ensemble that has toured the world and made several recordings. His solo playing can be heard on Lars-Erik Larsson's Concertino for Trumpet and String Orchestra on the Intim Musik label (1994). He was selected to play with the World Orchestra of New York in 2000, and is on the faculty of the University of Göthenburg.

Danielsson is married to Ulrika Dahlberg-Danielsson, a professional trumpet player with the Göthenburg Opera.

Bibl.: concert program booklet, Ten of the Best, Sala Nezahualcóyotl, Mexico City, Nov. 14, 2012.

Danté, Jon Paul (b. Brockton, Massachusetts, June 8, 1969). American trumpeter. Danté grew up in Boston. He began playing the trumpet at age nine; his first teachers were Vincent Macrina, then Jay Daly. After graduating from Dover High School (New Hampshire) in 1987, he earned a bachelor of music degree at Boston University in 1991, studying with Roger Voisin, and embarked on a freelance career in the Boston area. He was principal trumpet of the Berkshire Opera Orchestra, Boston Orchestra, and formed the Paramount Brass Quintet, which performed over one hundred concerts per year. He was also an adjunct faculty member at the Boston Conservatory of Music from 1995 to 1999.

Danté became the principal of the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra in 1999, as well as a member of the Santa Fe Symphony. During the summers, he performed with the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra, Bellingham Music Festival, and Colorado Music Festival in Boulder. A highly versatile player, he recorded with the Albuquerque-based ska band, Danny Winn and the Earthlings.

In 2006, Danté accepted a position as principal of the Malaysian Philharmonic Orchestra, a position he held until 2011. He has served as a guest principal of the Puerto Rico Symphony, St. Cecilia Chamber Orchestra in Rome, Singapore Symphony Orchestra, and has played on occasion with the Colorado Symphony Orchestra, Macao Symphony Orchestra, and the Hong Kong Philharmonic. He has taught as an adjunct faculty member at summer festivals including the Maryland Summer Center for the Arts, North Shore Conservatory, Tanglewood Institute, and has been a visiting faculty artist at the Yong Siew Toh Conservatory in Singapore, and Silpakora University in Bangkok, Thailand. In December of 2011, he became the regular principal of the Hong Kong Philharmonic, and also teaches at the Hong Kong Academy for Performing Arts.

Danté is an active soloist who has released the CDs, Tapestry-Music of Baroque Masters (Centaur) and Shepherd's Hey with the Paramount Brass Quintet. He is also a skilled composer and arranger. His hobbies include photography, motorcycling, and designing websites.

Bibl.: Jon Paul Danté's official website: www.jondante.com; "Jon Danté" (www.santafesymphony.org/jDante.htm); personal interview, Jan. 24, 2012.

Dara, Olu [Jones, Charles III] (b. Louisville, Mississippi, Jan. 12, 1941). American cornetist and trumpeter. Dara grew up in Natchez, Mississippi, and learned to tap dance and entertain audiences at an early age. He took up the trumpet at age seven, and had a natural gift for playing by ear. His trumpet teacher told him that he didn't need to practice, stating that you can't practice life. After graduating from high school, Dara enrolled at Tennessee State University for a short while, but left to join the Navy in 1959. He played in a military band, but by the time he was honorably discharged in 1963, he was burned out on music.

Dara ended up in Brooklyn, New York. Without enough money to go anywhere, he decided to stay. He left music behind, and worked various jobs. Born as Charles Jones III, he changed his name to Olu Dara in 1969. Through the encouragement of several high school and former Navy buddies, he returned to music. He taught himself to play jazz in just two days, and began sitting in with several avant-garde groups in New York City. I'd make sounds in a trumpet and they considered that top level musicianship. It really confused me. I just smiled and didn't say anything, said Dara to Larry Katz of the Boston Herald. Soon, Dara was playing with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1974), Oliver Lake, Hamiet Bluiett (1976), Doug Carn, Sam Rivers, Henry Threadgill, James Newton, Don Pullen, and David Murray (1981).

During the 1980s, Dara freelanced and worked with Charles Brackeen, Cassandra Wilson, James Blood Ulmer, Threadgill, and Murray's big band and octet. He took up the guitar in the late 1990s, as well as vocals and harmonica. He composed music that expressed his roots in Mississippi, and he switched from trumpet to cornet. He told Downbeat magazine, When I picked up the trumpet, I sounded like all the other trumpet players. When I picked up the cornet, I went back to the way I used to play. Dara played on the soundtrack for the film, Kansas City (1996), and became involved in theater and modern dance. He composed music for August Wilson's Pulitzer Prize-winning play, The Piano Lesson.

Although he contributed excellent solos to dozens of other people's recordings, Dara didn't make an album as leader until 1998. Through his son's (rapper Nas Dara) encouragement, Dara signed with Atlantic Records and released In the World: From Natchez to New York. His second album is titled Neighborhoods. He also recorded for Blue Note, Black Saint, Silkheart, OTC, and India Navigation with such artists as Craig Harris, Cecil McBee, Oliver Lake, Greg Bandy, Julius Hemphill, Charles Brackeen, Hamiet Bluiett, Cassandra Wilson, and James Newton.

Dara married and divorced Fannie Ann Jones. His second wife is Celeste Bullock. They have three children—Nas, Kiani, and Jubarai.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Olu Dara" (www.answers.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Darling, James S. (b. c1945). American trumpeter. Darling earned a bachelor of music degree at the University of Kentucky, and a master of music degree at the University of Illinois where he served as a graduate teaching assistant. His teachers were Glenn Immegart, Herbert Tiemeyer, Bernard Fitzgerald, Jack Hyatt, Haskell O. Sexton, and Adolph Herseth.

Darling taught at the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory from 1969 to 2002, at the Cleveland Institute of Music from 1988 to 2004, and at the Oberlin Conservatory for two years. He was appointed fourth trumpet and second cornet of the Cleveland Orchestra in 1973, a position he held until his retirement in 2005.

A noted teacher, Darling has produced many professional students. Among them are Robert Earley, Thomas Booth, John Brndiar, Charles Berginc, Brian Appleby-Wineberg, Cathy Leach, and James Ackley. His solo CD is titled Sonatas for Trumpet (Sherwood) (formerly released on LP as Music for Trumpet and Piano on the Advent label, 1973).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "James Darling" (www.cdbaby.com/cd/jamesdarling).

Dauverné, François Georges Auguste (b. Paris, France, Feb. 16, 1799; d. Paris, France, Nov. 4, 1874). French trumpeter. Dauverné is historically important to the trumpet in that he wrote the first methods to include not only the natural trumpet, but also various chromatic trumpets used at the time. The portions dealing with the use of valves are the first known pedagogical writings on the subject, and his exercises and etudes are also the first to have been published.

Dauverné's grandfather was a skilled performer of the natural trumpet. Dauverné was also the godchild of his predecessor, David Buhl (1781-1860). In 1814, Dauverné joined the King's Guard Band (until 1830). From 1820-51, he was also principal of the Paris Opera Orchestra. His reputation in France became formidable. Luigi Cherubini, director of the Paris Conservatory, was able to find government funding to begin special classes for trumpet and trombone. Thus, Dauverné was hired in 1833 as the conservatory's first trumpet professor, a position in which he remained until his retirement in 1869. Dauverné attracted the most gifted students from France, including P.N. Blanckeman, Jean-Baptiste Laurent Arban, Jules Cerclier, and Louis Antoine Saint-Jacome.

Dauverné wrote a total of four methods for the trumpet. Théorie ou tabulature de la trompette à pistons was published by Janet and Cotelle in 1827 or 1828. His second, Méthode de Trompette à Pistons from 1834 or 1835, was written exclusively for the two-valve trumpet, and was published by Halary (an instrument maker who collaborated with Dauverné on designs of various valve instruments). No doubt, the above-mentioned students used this method. A third, Méthode théorique & pratique de cornet à pistons ou à cylindres, Op. 7, was published c1846 by Henri Lemoine. In its preface, Dauverné wrote as an eyewitness that in his opera Guillaume Tell (1829), Rossini specified the valve trumpet, a remark often overlooked by modern scholars without access to this work. Dauverné's fourth (and more familiar) work, Méthode pour la trompette, was written and approved by the conservatory committee in 1856. Auber, the director of the conservatory, reported on March 18, 1856 to Dauverné, The Trumpet Method of which you are the author was submitted for approval to the Committee for Musical Studies at the conservatory, and examined by it with serious attention. The result of this examination is a report that justifies the high esteem of the committee for your work. Along with the unanimous vote of its members, I add, Sir, my particular congratulations, and thank you for having given our school a work which was missing from the teaching of the class which you were the first called upon to lead, a class whose ongoing success attests to the fine impetus which you imprinted on it. This method contains etudes, duets, trios, quartets, technical exercises, and historically important information concerning the natural trumpet (to which four-fifths of the method is devoted), as well as slide and valve trumpets. (Instructions for the keyed trumpet are neglected however, because Dauverné felt that the instrument had a "nasal sound.") This fourth method incorporated much of the previous two methods. A fifth book was published after Dauverné's death: Grand Method for the Ordinary [natural], Valve, and Slide Trumpet, accredited to Schiltz and Dauverné, published c1880 by J.R. Lafleur and Son. It is basically an abridged version of the 1856 method.

Dauverné believed that the valve trumpet (and cornet?) heralded the future of the instrument. His designs with Halary brought perfection to the two-valve trumpet, but their attempts at producing an in-tune three-valve trumpet failed. It was perhaps Arban, in conjunction with Adolphe Sax, who finally standardized the three-valve system. Arban succeeded Dauverné as professor (of cornet) at the conservatory in 1869.

It should not be overlooked that prominent composers expressed their displeasure with French trumpet performance several times during Dauverné's time. Mendelssohn, in a letter of February 15, 1832 to his teacher Zelter, praised the conservatory orchestra, but also identified several weak spots, including the trumpeters, who "are insecure in the high register and simplify their difficult passages." The same problem with the high register reoccurred when Wagner's Columbus Overture (1835) was performed by the same orchestra on February 4, 1841. The composer later wrote in his autobiography Mein Leben (1911) that in the rehearsal the trumpeters depressed me greatly; not once were the delicate high passages played without the tone breaking...I was assured [afterwards] that my overture certainly would have been applauded…if the unfortunate trumpeters had not provoked the audience…to an only thinly disguised displeasure by the consistent breaking of their tone on the delicate passage in question. In his instrumentation method (1843) Berlioz reaffirmed these statements, praising German and English trumpeters, but writing that French trumpeters would have difficulty with a simple arpeggiated figure ascending to high concert c''' on the E-flat trumpet.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward. "The Romantic Trumpet" (Historic Brass Society Journal V, 1993); Keim, Freidel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Rossum, Kelly. Dauverné's Trumpet Method (unpublished DMA dissertation, University of Minnesota, 2005).

Daval, Charles (b. Los Gatos, California, Oct. 13, 1956). American trumpeter. Daval began studying the trumpet at an early age. His father was a professional trumpeter who was principal of the San José Symphony for twenty years. When Charles was in high school, he needed braces, so his father switched him to euphonium, and arranged for him to study with Rocco DiStasio, a local band director and friend. After graduating from Los Gatos High School in 1974, Daval attended San José State University, where he studied with Robert Szabo, the school's trombone professor, and earned a bachelor of music degree as a euphonium major. Daval also played trumpet during college, and even performed Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 during his senior year. His trumpet teacher during this time was Edward Haug of the San Francisco Symphony.

Daval started playing with Haug in the Carmel Bach Festival Orchestra, and eventually replaced him as principal trumpet. In 1979, Daval entered the Maurice André International Solo Competition, in which he reached the semifinals. One of the judges, Thomas Stevens, advised him to study in Chicago, so Daval applied to Northwestern University, but his application was rejected. Not deterred, he moved to Evanston, and began taking occasional lessons over the next year with Vincent Cichowicz outside of school. Eventually, he was accepted at Northwestern as a scholarship student and member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago. A year later, Daval received a bronze medal at the Geneva competition, and won the principal trumpet position of the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, which delighted his teachers, Cichowicz and Adolph Herseth.

Daval became the principal trumpet of the Seattle Symphony in 1981. He then became third and assistant first trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and principal of the Boston Pops orchestra in 1983. At that time, the principal of the BSO (Charles Schlueter) was engaged in a protracted legal dispute with Maestro Ozawa. Because of the unstable situation and Ozawa's reluctance to grant tenure to anyone, Daval's probationary period was extended from one year to three years. After an arbitrator determined that Schlueter was to keep his position, Ozawa declined granting tenure to other orchestra members, and Daval was let go.

After more auditioning, Daval won a position in the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra in 1988, when he met and married Jennifer Ross. He played in Cincinnati for three years, and then won the principal position with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra in 1991. He and Jennifer commuted during his first year in Canada, but Jennifer resigned from her position as a violinist in the CSO and moved to Montreal in 1992. Charles began teaching part time at McGill University in Montreal, but soon it became obvious to both Charles and Jennifer that he loved teaching more than playing in the orchestra. So after one more year in the symphony, Charles accepted a position in 1993 as trumpet professor at the University of Michigan where he replaced Armando Ghitalla.

Daval very much enjoyed teaching in Ann Arbor, but Jennifer became very restless after remaining jobless for years. In 1995, they had a son, Joseph. Two years later, Jennifer won the position of principal second violin of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra. Charles and Jennifer considered commuting again, but decided that they did not want to raise their family that way. So, in 1997, Daval resigned his position at the University of Michigan, and moved to Pittsburgh to help raise their son. Daughter Rosalie was born in 2001. During this time, Charles won positions in the Pittsburgh Opera and Ballet orchestras, and taught part time at the University of Michigan and Indiana University. For several years, he was an adjunct faculty member at Catholic University in Washington, D.C. where he taught several students who traveled to Pittsburgh for lessons.

Despite his heavy schedule of playing and raising a family, Daval attended law school at Duquesne University in Pittsburgh for four years, and graduated Cum Laude in the spring of 2008. That summer, he passed the Pennsylvania Bar exam, and in the following February passed the Bar in Colorado and Wyoming. Although he has not yet become a practicing attorney, he is hoping to be able to teach practical applications of the law to musicians. In 2011, he accepted a fulltime position as professor of trumpet at the University of Illinois.

Daval was featured as a cornet soloist on a 1986 Maryland Public Television program titled Onstage at Wolftrap: The New Sousa Band. He was also featured in the trumpet solo Ciribirin on a CD titled Swing Swing Swing with John Williams and the Boston Pops Orchestra. He and Jennifer have participated in the Grand Teton Music Festival each summer since 1992. He enjoys hiking and fly-fishing.

Bibl.: Yeo, Douglas. "Trumpet Players of the Boston Symphony" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1990); personal interview, Mar. 8, 2010.

Davenport, Wallace (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, June 30, 1925; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Mar. 18, 2004). American trumpeter. Davenport grew up in New Orleans where he spent most of his life. He began playing the trumpet at age thirteen, and played in the Young Tuxedo Brass Band (1938). He also played with Oscar Celestin from 1940 to 1941. At age seventeen, he joined the US Navy, spending the next four years in a naval band. After discharge, Davenport returned to New Orleans and, while playing with Roy Brown (1947), became a skilled Dixieland performer.

Davenport's career got a huge jump when he began touring with several internationally known bands, including those of Lionel Hampton (1953-55, 1959, 1967, 1969, 1979-81), Mezz Mezzrow (tour of Paris in mid 1950s), Count Basie (1964-66), Ray Charles, Lloyd Price, Fats Domino, Quincy Jones, Earl Hines, and others. He formed his own record label, My Jazz, in 1971, which lasted until 1976. He recorded with Arnett Cobb, Bob Wilber, George Wein, Panama Francis, Junior Wells, and many other New Orleans musicians. In 1980, he was the guest star soloist with the Maryland Jazz Band in Germany.

Wallace Davenport remained a top Dixieland trumpeter into the 1990s. He released numerous albums, including Wild Man from Texas (Black & Blue, with Arnett Cobb), Darkness on the Delta (Fat Cat's Jazz), French Festival (Black & Blue), Wallace Davenport (Polskie Nagrania Muza), Wallace Davenport and the Jazz Greats (Shalom), Wallace Davenport and The Alliance Hall Dixieland Band (ProJazz), and Wallace Davenport and His New Orleans Jazz Band (Black & Blue). He received the Lifetime Achievement Award from the Preservation Resource Center's African-American Historic Preservation Council, plus many other awards from the City of New Orleans and local jazz groups. Davenport also performed a Command Performance for King Olaf V in Norway.

A versatile musician, Davenport played with The Alliance Hall Dixieland Band, backed Frank Sinatra and Sammy Davis Jr., and performed gospel music with The Zion Harmonizers and Aline White. He formed his own Wallace Davenport Gospel Singers to reflect his strong Christian beliefs. He retired from trumpet playing during the late 1990s, and passed away in 2004 at the age of seventy-eight.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Wallace Davenport" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Wallace Davenport" (www.satchmo.com/nolavl/rip2004/html); "Wallace Davenport" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Daversa, Jay (b. Los Angeles, California, June 14, 1945). American trumpeter. Daversa began playing the trumpet at age five, and by age six was playing in his father's jazz combo. He began learning to read music at age nine. At age eleven, Daversa joined the Dixieland Small Fry, a kid's band that performed on television shows such as The Dinah Shore Show and the Lawrence Welk Show. After high school, he enlisted in the military and performed in the 6th Army Band in San Francisco for three years (1962-65).

After completion of his service duties, Jay Daversa returned to Los Angeles and went on the road with Johnny Mathis for three months. He then joined the Stan Kenton Orchestra (1965-67) and later toured with Elvis Presley. In 1968, he was named "Most Promising New Jazz Artist" by Downbeat magazine. During the next twenty years, he performed and recorded with many great artists including Barbra Streisand, Louis Bellson, Shelly Manne, Dinah Shore, Herbie Hancock, Henry Mancini, Roger Kellaway, Bud Shank, Oliver Nelson, George Duke, Frank Zappa, Bill Watrous, Don Menza, and Gerald Wilson.

Late in life, Daversa decided to change his embouchure because he felt that he was using too much mouthpiece pressure. He studied with Bob Findley, Rene La Mar, and James Stamp. Although each helped in various ways, he credits his success to Findley's use of the Caruso method.

As an active studio player, Daversa has recorded over two hundred movie and television soundtracks including films such as Star Trek, Rollercoaster, King Kong, The Main Event, Grease, The Wiz, and Animal House, just to name a few. Television credits include The Incredible Hulk, The Waltons, Love Boat, The Rockford Files, Vegas, Tennessee Ernie Ford, Make Room for Daddy, The Dinah Shore Show, The Ray Bolger Show, Grease, Wonder Woman, and Fantasy Island, among others.

Bibl.: Hood, Boyde. "Ten Outstanding Trumpet Players in the Los Angeles Area" (Brass Bulletin, no. 41, 1983); Jay Daversa website (www.jaydaversa.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

David, Mark (b. Cornwall, England, c1970). British trumpeter. David began playing the cornet at age nine, and later studied with the late John Wilbraham at the Birmingham School of Music. He played principal trumpet in the Bournemouth Symphony Orchestra and the Opera North before accepting his current position as principal trumpet with the Philharmonia Orchestra in London in 1992. He has also performed on soundtracks for film and television, and often plays with the English Brass Ensemble, London Sinfonietta, and the Nash Ensemble. He participated in The World Orchestra for Peace under Maestro Valery Gergiev.

In addition to being one of the world's leading orchestral trumpeters, David is a professional ski instructor, personal trainer, and Ironman competition athlete. He is an adjunct faculty member at the Royal Academy of Music in London.

Bibl.: "Mark David" (www.schagerl.at/sch_engl/aktuelles/mark_david.html).

Davidson, James Douglas ("Trump") (b. Sudbury, Ontario, Canada, Nov. 26, 1908; d. Sudbury, Ontario, Canada, May 2, 1978). Canadian trumpeter. A true pioneer in Canadian jazz, Davidson formed his Melody Five in 1925. From 1929 to 1936, he performed in Toronto with violinist Luigi Romanelli. In 1937, Davidson formed his own big band that performed weekly broadcasts for NBC Radio through 1942. He also toured England with Ray Noble (1938-39).

From 1944-62, Davidson worked with Horace Lappi's orchestra and led a dance band at Palace Pier in Toronto. A smaller group from the band performed radio broadcasts for CBC and made several recordings. After 1962, he mostly led small groups, with the occasional big band in the mix (between 1974 and 1978), where he sang and arranged many of the tunes. Between 1961 and 1969, he led five Dixieland albums for various Canadian record labels.

Davidson is today considered to be an important person in the history of Canadian jazz. It is a pity that he did not make any recordings during his early professional years.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

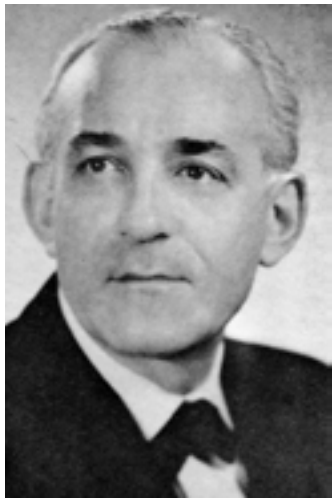
Davidson, Louis ("Lou" "Louie") (b. New York, New York, Mar. 16, 1912; d. Studio City, California, Mar. 30, 1999). American trumpeter. Davidson came from a family of musicians: his father, born in Russia, played clarinet and piano; and his brother, Milton, was a trumpet player, as are his nephews Ron Modell and Barry Davidson. Louis began studying with Max Schlossberg at the age of eleven, and showed an incredible talent for music. By the age of fourteen, he was performing in movie theaters in Brooklyn and with the American Orchestral Society during the time that Ernest Williams and Gustav Heim coached the trumpet section. At age fifteen, Davidson was a musician in a dance band on the SS Leviathan, which made several trips to Europe.

Davidson's illustrious career as a symphony orchestra trumpeter began in 1928 when Maestro Fritz Reiner invited him to play second trumpet in the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra. During his five years there, he studied with the principal trumpeter of the orchestra, Henry Wohlgemuth. Davidson moved back to New York in 1933 (age twenty-one), and played with the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo under Kurtz and Antal Doráti (two seasons, 1933-34 and 1934-35), with the Radio City Music Hall, and as a staff trumpeter for NBC Radio (alongside Benny Baker or Harry Glantz as principal trumpeters). He also played for numerous Broadway shows.

Davidson became the principal trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra at the age of twenty-three, and during his twenty-three years as principal played under Artur Rodzinski, Erich Leinsdorf, and George Szell, as well as many guest conductors. During the summer of 1940, Davidson was one of six American musicians invited by Arturo Toscanini to play a special series of concerts at the Teatro Colon in Buenos Aires, Argentina (alongside Harry Glantz, principal and Ray Crisara, third trumpet). He also participated in an American tour with the NBC Symphony during the summer of 1943 (with James Tamburini, second trumpet). In 1943, Davidson played the original trumpet part of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto (on an H. N. White Mini-Liberty trumpet), the first time that this difficult work was played in the United States without rearranging and simplifying the trumpet part. Davidson retired from the Cleveland Orchestra in 1958, and was replaced by his student Bernard Adelstein as principal trumpet. Davidson taught at the Cleveland Institute of Music, Western Reserve University, and Oberlin College.



In 1963, Davidson was appointed to the faculty at Indiana University in Bloomington where he taught hundreds of excellent students, among them: Kim Dunnick, Janis Marshelle Coffman, Edmund Cord, John Carroll, Ron Modell, and Dick Sudhalter. Davidson was active with the International Trumpet Guild and served on its Board of Directors. He introduced Timofei Dokshitser's playing to the American trumpet community when he produced a recording of Dokshitser in 1968. He also published two books, Trumpet Technique (1970) and Trumpet Profiles (1975).

Davidson's playing was one of the most elegant of any trumpet player to ever live; his style (mostly on the B-flat trumpet) was very smooth, and his articulations (which he credited learning from trombonist Gardell Simons) were exceptionally clean. Many who attended his wonderful clinic during the 1970 National Trumpet Symposium in Denver remember his exquisite performance of etudes by Charlier.

Davidson died in a rest home in Studio City, California, on March 30, 1999 just two weeks after his eighty-seventh birthday.

Bibl.: Davidson, Louis. Trumpet Profiles (self-published); International Trumpet Guild website: www.trumpetguild.org; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Davis, Bryan (b. Plymouth, England, Oct. 17, 1974). British trumpeter. Davis grew up in the resort town of Cleethorpes in North-East Lincolnshire and began trumpet lessons at age eight at school.

His first trumpet teacher was J. Brian Brown, a local Salvation Army bandmaster. He also took singing lessons and sang in a local boy's church choir. After watching a television broadcast of Dizzy Gillespie's United Nations Orchestra live at the Royal Festival Hall in London (featuring Arturo Sandoval and Claudio Roditi), he became interested in jazz and joined an after-school jazz band at age fifteen. At age seventeen, he became a member of the National Youth Jazz Orchestra.

In 1993, Davis began studies at the Leeds College of Music under the guidance of Richard Iles and Dick Hawdon, and graduated in 1997. From 1996 to 2002 he again played with the National Youth Jazz Orchestra, and after 1997, freelanced in Leeds where he performed with Tito Puente, Isaac Delgado, Tania Maria, Phil Woods, Bill Watrous, the Supremes, the Brasshoppers, Glenn Miller Orchestra UK, Roberto Pla, Rob McConnell, BBC Big Band, Lower Austria Concert Jazz Orchestra, and others. He has also played in orchestras for numerous touring musicals, and from 2004 to 2009, was a member of The Rat Pack—Live from Las Vegas (UK & Europe) / The Rat Pack—Live at the Sands (USA) show.

Since 2008, Davis has been married to Cynthia Murray-Davis (an American) and in the following year, began residing in New York City where he has worked with the Artie Shaw Orchestra, Tommy Dorsey Orchestra, Mike Longo's New York State of the Art Jazz Ensemble, Arturo O'Farrill's Afro-Latin Jazz Orchestra, Mr. Ho's Orchestrotica, Gary Morgan's Panamericana, New Life Jazz Orchestra, and others. He has recently enjoyed taking trumpet lessons from Roger Ingram and Brian Lynch and has developed an extraordinary upper register. In 2012, he recorded as part of Brian Lynch's "Madera Latino" project, a Latin-Jazz tribute to Woody Shaw. He continues to perform in Europe with groups including Thomas Gansch's Gansch & Roses, Otto Sauter's Ten of the Best trumpet ensemble, and The Rat Pack—Live from Las Vegas. When not working as a musician, he serves as a professional web developer and enjoys hobbies such as watching cricket and baseball (especially the New York Yankees).

Bibl.: "Bryan Davis" (www.trumpetplayerprofiles.com); Bryan Davis's official website: www.bryandavis.info; personal interview, Nov. 18, 2012.

Davis, Charles ("Charlie," "Charley") (b. 194?) American trumpeter. Davis studied with William Adam. He has played and recorded with the Ollie Mitchell Sunday Band, Woody Herman, Buddy Rich, Frank Sinatra, Natalie Cole, and Placido Domingo. As a top Los Angeles studio player since the 1980s, he has recorded music film tracks for hundreds of movies, television shows, and radio programs.

Davis makes his own line of trumpet mutes, and has taught at California State University-Long Beach and at the Henry Mancini Institute.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); www.myspace.com/charleydavistrumpet.

Davis, Ernestine Carroll ("Tiny") (b. Memphis, Tennessee, Aug. 5, 1910; d. Chicago, Illinois, Jan. 30, 1994). American trumpeter. Davis began playing the trumpet at the age of thirteen, and later attended Booker T. Washington High School in Memphis. She played with various groups in the Memphis area before moving to New York City where she joined the Harlem Play-Girls (1935-36). She was noted for her hot swing solos and beautiful blues ballads.

Tiny became a featured soloist with the all-female band, the International Sweethearts of Rhythm (1940-47), making her first recordings with that group. She then formed her own all-female jazz sextet called the Hell Divers. They recorded six tunes for the Decca label in 1949. She then moved to Chicago and worked with various bands led by others. She performed at the 1980 Women's Jazz Festival in Kansas City, but her work and fame dwindled in the 1980s.

Davis can be heard on the album titled International Sweethearts of Rhythm on the Rosetta label (#1312). She is also featured in the documentary film, Tiny & Ruby: Hell Divin' Women (1988). More recently, D. Antoinette Handy published the book, The International Sweethearts of Rhythm (Scarecrow Press, 1998).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo of Hell Divers band.

Davis, Gregory ("Greg") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Jan. 30, 1957). American trumpeter. Not to be confused with Greg Davis, son of trumpeter Miles Davis, Gregory Davis began playing the cornet at age thirteen in his school band. Among his early heroes were Clarke Terry, Dizzy Gillespie and Louis Armstrong. Within a year, Davis was playing with local soul and funk bands. Davis attended Loyola University from 1975 to 1979. While in college he was a founding member of the popular Dirty Dozen Brass Band, a group he has played with his entire career. The group was officially launched in April of 1977.

The Dirty Dozen Brass Band (which shortened its name to Dirty Dozen during the 1990s) broke away from the typical brass bands in New Orleans by incorporating funk, bebop, rhythm and blues, and other styles of music. By 1979 their popularity was growing outside the city, and their first recording, My Feet Can't Fail Me Now on Columbia brought them much fame. Other albums include Voodoo (Columbia), Jelly (Columbia), Live: Mardi Gras Montreux (Rounder), Open Up (Columbia), Ears to the Wall (Mammoth), This is Jazz (Sony), Buck Jump (Mammoth), Medicated Magic (Ropeadope), We Got Robbed (self-released), Another Joyous Occasion (Widespread Panic) and Night of Joy (Widespread Panic).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Davis, Jeffrey ("Jeff") Hayes (b. St. Albans, New York, Dec. 19, 1952). American trumpeter. Little is documented about Davis's early life. His mother Jean Alston-Davis was a singer, and his grandfather Ovie Alston was a noted trumpeter. Jeff Davis studied at the Berklee School of Music in Boston (1971-75) and was one of the finest big band lead trumpet players in the world during the 1970s. He has played lead for Herb Pomeroy, Lionel Hampton (1972-74), Woody Herman (1974-75), Thad Jones/Mel Lewis ("Grande Parade du Jazz" in Nice, France 1977), Count Basie, Buddy Rich, Machito (European tour with Dizzy Gillespie as a guest in 1982), Clark Terry, Tony Bennett (1975), Caterina Valente, and others. Since 1983, he has been working in Scandinavia (Copenhagen, Stockholm).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Davis, Joyce (b. Pomeroy, Ohio, Nov. 26, 1951). American trumpeter. Davis grew up in Middleport, Ohio, where she began playing trumpet at the age of nine. Her early teachers were Gene Crooks, Dan Presgrave, William Brophy, and Ernest Bastin. During high school, she attended the National Music Camp at Interlochen, studying with Gordon Mathie and Robert Grocock, and completed high school at the Interlochen Arts Academy under John Lindenau in 1969. She studied with Clifford Lillya at the University of Michigan from 1970 to 1972, but finished her bachelor of music degree at Florida State University (1972-74) with Don Hazzard.

After studying with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University during the summer of 1974, Davis became principal trumpet of the Orquesta Sinfonica del Estado de Mexico from 1975 to 1976. She then returned to Northwestern University to complete her master of music degree in June of 1977. From 1978 to 1979, she was associate principal with the same orchestra in Mexico, and in 1979-80 was second trumpet of the Orquesta Sinfonica del Teatro de Bellas Artes in Mexico City.

Davis accepted a position as principal trumpet of the Cape Town Symphony Orchestra in South Africa from 1981 to 1983, and taught at the University of Stellenbosch. She returned to the United States, taught at the University of Charleston in South Carolina, and performed with the Charleston Brassworks during the spring of 1984. From the summer of 1984 to August 1985, Davis returned to Durban, South Africa, where she performed with the Natal Philharmonic Orchestra.

During the 1986-87 academic year, Davis began doctoral studies with Dr. Richard Burkart at The Ohio State University while serving as a graduate teaching assistant in music history. After performing as principal trumpet of the Orquesta Filharmonica del UNAM in Mexico City during the 1987-88 school year, and being a guest lecturer at the National Conservatory of Mexico (1987-88), she was a graduate trumpet teaching assistant at OSU during the 1988-89 year. She became a professor at the University of Florida in 1989, and completed her DMA degree in August of 1990.

Dr. Davis served three terms on the board of directors of the International Trumpet Guild, and was ITG president from 1995 to 1997. She is an active soloist and clinician who has performed in numerous countries including the United States, Mexico, South Africa, Germany, Australia, Russia, and the Ukraine. In 2010, she was made an Honorary Professor at the National Academy of Music of the Ukraine in Kiev, and received the ITG's Award of Merit for lifetime achievement. She has authored or edited numerous books and articles, and has been a substitute or extra trumpet with the Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati Pops, and the Savannah Symphony Orchestra.

Davis's hobbies include reading and collecting artifacts from different countries and cultures of the world.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Joyce Davis" (www.arts.ufl.edu/bio.aspx?PID=163); personal interview, Jan. 15, 2012.

Davis, Leonard ("Ham") (b. St. Louis, Missouri, July 4, 1905; d. New York, New York, 1957). American trumpeter. Davis grew up in St. Louis and played with local bands such as the Odd Fellows Boys' Band, and with Charlie Creath (1924-25) in which he made his recording debut. He then moved to New York in the late 1920s, and played with Charlie Skeete (1926), Edgar Hayes (1927), Arthur Gibbs (1927-28), and Charlie Johnson (1928-29). Although Davis was a fine jazz soloist, his beautiful tone and excellent upper register brought him work mostly as a lead player. The high point of his career came in 1929 when he recorded two solos with Eddie Condon's Hot Shots, I'm Gonna Stomp Mr. Henry Lee and That's a Serious Thing, both recorded on February 8. Davis also had a great feeling for the blues.

During the 1930s and early 1940s, Davis worked with Elmer Snowden (1930-31), Don Redman, Russell Wooding, Benny Carter (1933), Luis Russell (1934-35), Russell's backup band for Louis Armstrong (1935-37), Edgar Hayes again (touring Europe in 1938), Sidney Bechet (1940), Maurice Hubbard's Band (reunited once again with Edgar Hayes), George James (1943), and Alberto Socarras. After the mid 1940s, he became a part-time performer, mostly playing club dates and weddings, until his death in 1957.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Leonard Davis" (www.allmusic.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Arthur Gibbs's Orchestra: From left to right, back row: Sam Hodges (drums), George Washington (trombone), Leonard Davis (trumpet), Billy Taylor (tuba). Front row: Edgar Sampson (alto sax), Happy Caldwell (tenor sax), Gene Michael (alto sax), Arthur Gibbs (piano), and Paul Bernet (banjo).

Davis, Melvin ("Mel") S. (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, 1931; d. Florida, Dec. 28, 2004). American trumpeter. At an early age, Davis began studying with Seymour Rosenfeld of the Philadelphia Orchestra, and at age twelve began playing in nightclubs. After graduating from high school, he joined the Saint Louis Symphonette, but returned to Philadelphia to study at the Curtis Institute and at Temple University.

During the mid 1950s, Davis moved to New York City where he formed a jazz group called The Lease Breakers that included Buddy Morrow, Harvey Phillips, Tony Mottola, and Sol Gubin. He played with the Benny Goodman band for a while, including a tour of the Far East (1956). He became a top studio player, and was on contract with Command Records as well as NBC Television. He was a regular member of the house band for Sesame Street (seventeen years) and appeared on Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show and the Perry Como Show. He also toured with the Music for Louis Armstrong Show (1975) and can be heard with Peter Appleyard (1960) and Phil Bodner (1965).

Davis was a leading soloist during the 1950s and '60s, recording albums such as Trumpet With A Soul (Epic), "Shoot" the Trumpet Player (Time Records), It's About Time, and Music for Weight Watchers. He also played on albums with Billie Holiday (Lady in Satin), Neal Hefti (Pardon My Doo-Wah), George Benson (The Other Side of Abbey Road), Lynn Roberts (Tribute to Harry James), Benny Goodman, Jean Goldkette, Perez Prado, and Danny Davis, to name a few. He recorded hundreds of television jingles.

A highly skilled and versatile musician, Davis often played piano, violin, drums, tuba, bass, and accordion. He was also a fine vocalist, composer, and arranger, and penned film scores for Fame Whore (1997) and Scum Rock (2002). His roots were always in the club scene; he owned a jazz club on Long Island, then one in Port Washington.

Davis retired and moved to Florida where he opened a jazz club. He died at the age of seventy-three. He was survived by his wife Ruth, and daughter Amy.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Mel Davis" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Mel_Davis_(musician)); "Mel Davis" (obituary, Allegro Archives, Vol. CV, no. 3, Mar. 2005).

Davis, Miles [Dewey III] (b. Alton, Illinois, May 25, 1926; d. Santa Monica, California, Sept. 28, 1991). American trumpeter. Davis is considered to be one of the most influential jazz musicians of all time.

He was at the forefront of several major developments in jazz music including cool jazz, hard bop, free jazz, and fusion.

Miles Davis was the son of a wealthy dentist, and lived most of his childhood in East St. Louis. His father gave him a trumpet at age thirteen, and he began his musical studies with Elwood Buchanan, a local musician. Buchanan taught Davis to play without vibrato of any kind, which became part of his trademark sound. Later, Davis studied under Joseph Gustat. Davis played in the Lincoln High School Band conducted by Buchanan, and by the age sixteen was working as a professional musician. He spent a year with Eddie Randle's band "Blue Devils" (1942-1943). During his senior year of high school, Davis was fortunate enough to substitute in Billy Eckstine's band that visited East St. Louis while on tour (1944). He played for two weeks in this group, alongside Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker. This experience cemented his desire to become a professional jazz musician.

In the fall of 1944, Davis moved to New York City to study with William Vacchiano at the Institute of Musical Art (now The Juilliard School). However, he attended school only a few months before becoming a regular musician at two Harlem jazz clubs, Minton's Playhouse and Monroe's. Here he performed with many musicians that were to become giants in the jazz world, including Fats Navarro, Freddie Webster, J.J. Johnson, Thelonious Monk, Kenny Clarke, and Charlie Parker. Davis began recording in 1945, mainly as a sideman.

Around 1945, Dizzy Gillespie left Charlie Parker's quintet. Davis was hired as his replacement. Their recording of Now's the Time featured Davis's vibratoless sound and simple melodic lines (mainly due to his lack of technical ability) that anticipated Davis's cool jazz period. The quintet toured the country, ending up in Los Angeles where Parker was hospitalized for months due to a nervous breakdown. The group eventually resumed, but personal problems between Davis and Parker arose, primarily due to Parker's drug addiction and the fact that Parker was slow in paying the members of the quintet. Davis left the group and began working with the Oscar Pettiford All Stars in 1948-49 alongside Fats Navarro who gave him some advice on how to play up-tempo music. Miles and Fats played together with Tadd Dameron (fall of 1948), after which Miles collaborated with Gil Evans.

Musicians in Evans's group were unhappy with the increasing virtuosity of bebop. Evans wanted an unusual sound for the group and changed the instrumentation so it included a (French] horn and a tuba, the so-called "tuba-band" of nine players. Davis's style was to play in a relaxed and melodic manner with improvisations being relatively simple. The Nonet was active from January 1949 to 1950. They did three sessions for Capitol Records, issued on 78-rpm discs and later reissued under the famous title, Birth of the Cool. The influence of Davis's cool jazz was huge, and attracted many musicians including white musicians such as Gerry Mulligan and Dave Brubeck.

At that time, Davis was living in New York with a childhood sweetheart named Irene, with whom he had two children, but at the end of 1949, Davis went to Paris (with Tadd Dameron) and fell in love with singer Juliette Greco. Upon his return to New York, Davis was depressed both from missing Greco and because many of the critics were crediting some of his colleagues with the invention of cool jazz. His relationship with Irene fell apart, and he began using heroin. He supported his habit by playing music, exploiting his friends, and working as a pimp. For the next few years, his life and music making were in shambles. By 1953, heroin affected his trumpet playing and he saw several musician friends such as Fats Navarro and Freddie Webster die from drugs. He himself had been arrested in California for drug possession, and his addiction was made public in a devastating interview that Cab Calloway gave to Downbeat magazine.

After returning to his family's home in East St. Louis, Davis finally kicked his drug habit in 1954. He then played throughout the Midwest and recorded with many musicians, including pianist Ahmad Jamal who had a large impact on him. Most of these recordings were on the Prestige and Blue Note labels. He began using a stemless harmon mute that became a signature of his style for many years.

In the mid 1950s, Davis moved away from cool jazz and began playing bebop with a slower, but hard beat. This became known as "hard bop." His recording, Walkin', was one of the first of this genre. During this period of time, Davis became distant and cold to his audiences and friends. He even seemed angry during many performances. This led to his lasting moniker, the "Prince of Darkness."

After a hugely successful performance at the Newport Jazz Festival in 1955, Davis formed his own quintet. He signed a contract with Columbia Records but had to first record several dates for Prestige in 1956. Prestige quickly released four albums, Relaxin' with the Miles Davis Quintet, Steamin' with the Miles Davis Quintet, Workin' with the Miles Davis Quintet, and Cookin' with the Miles Davis Quintet, after which the group disbanded in 1957. In 1957, he improvised the film score for the soundtrack of a French film titled Ascenseur pour l'échafaud starring the actress Jeanne Moreau. Forming a sextet in 1958, Davis recorded the album, Milestones.

In the late 1950s and early 1960s, Davis recorded a series of albums with Gil Evans, a pianist who greatly influenced the group's sound and style. To match Evans's arrangements, Davis began playing a great deal of flugelhorn as well as trumpet. Albums included Miles Ahead (1957), Porgy and Bess (1958), Kind of Blue (1959), Sketches of Spain (1959-60), Miles Davis at Carnegie Hall (1961), and Quiet Nights (1962).

Davis's moodiness caused difficulties within the group, and he also needed extended periods of inactivity that left the musicians without income. As a result, many players came and went in Davis's quintet between 1960 and 1975. Nonetheless, many albums followed including E.S.P. (1965), The Complete Live at The Plugged Nickel 1965, Miles Smiles (1966), Sorcerer (1967), Nefertiti (1967), Miles in the Sky (1968), and Filles de Kilimanjaro (1968). An automobile accident in the mid 1950s forced him to retire for a few months, and he suffered from pneumonia for five years.

The influence of acid rock and funk affected Davis. He met artists such as Jimi Hendrix and James Brown through a young model and songwriter named Betty Mabry, whom he married in 1968 but divorced a year later. He began incorporating acoustic and electronic instruments in his group and expanded the size of the ensemble. *In a Silent Way (*1969) and Bitches Brew (1975) were his first two recordings of this genre known as "jazz-rock fusion." He was also influenced by the music of Karlheinz Stockhausen. Davis's fans described it as "space music." His group often opened for popular rock groups such as the Steve Miller Band, the Grateful Dead, and Santana. Davis recorded several live albums in the funk-oriented style. These include Live at the Filmore East, March 7, 1970, It's About That Time (1970), Black Beauty (1970), and Miles Davis at Filmore: Live at the Cellar Door Sessions (1970). Being trained as a boxer in his youth, Davis contributed to a soundtrack of a documentary about the African-American boxing champ, Jack Johnson. His 1971 album, A Tribute to Jack Johnson, was a spinoff of this project. Another album, On the Corner (1972), blended funk with traditional jazz styles.

Davis was plagued by health problems in 1974 and 1975. He developed osteoarthritis that led to several hip operations, sickle-cell anemia, depression, bursitis, ulcers, and a renewed addiction to alcohol and drugs (cocaine). His performances were panned, and Davis withdrew from the stage and recording studio, spending some of his time composing. Columbia released compilation albums, and Downbeat magazine placed him in the top ten jazz trumpeters of 1979.

Actress and friend Cicely Tyson helped Davis off of drugs, and he soon regained his enthusiasm for music. However, after nearly three years off of the trumpet, his embouchure was not ready to return to his former level of playing. His album, The Man with the Horn, required recording sessions spread over the years 1979-81, and focused mainly on short solo passages. He married Tyson in 1981, but they divorced in 1988.

Feeling that Davis was not playing true jazz, Wynton Marsalis publicly criticized Davis's fusion-based albums, causing Davis to be quite upset. When Columbia Records asked Davis to place a "happy birthday" call to Marsalis, he quickly changed recording labels, moving to Warner Brothers. His first release with Warner Brothers, Tutu, received great reviews and received a Grammy Award in 1987. In 1988, he had a small part as a street musician in the Bill Murray movie, Scrooged. He recorded movie soundtracks for Street Smart, Siesta, The Hot Spot, and Dingo (1991, in which he even played a street musician).

In September of 1991, Davis went to St. John's Hospital in Santa Monica, California, for a "tune-up." He had been complaining of difficulties in breathing, and was hoping that his episodes with pneumonia were not returning. He was in good spirits and felt fairly normal for the most part. The doctors wanted to insert an oxygen tube down his throat, but Davis resisted. When the doctors insisted on this,

Davis became infuriated and had a stroke, slipping immediately into a coma. He was placed on life-support and his family was notified. With his family at his bedside, he died the following day at the age of sixty-five. Davis's death was mourned worldwide. He is buried at Woodlawn Cemetery in the Bronx, near the Duke Ellington family plot. One of his trumpets was buried with him.

Miles Davis received many awards during his long and influential career. Among them are being named Winner of Downbeat's Poll for Best Jazz Trumpet Player (1955, 1957, 1961), Grammy Awards (1960, 1970, 1982, 1986, 1989, 1990, 1992, 1993), a star on the Hollywood Walk of Fame (1998), Honorary Doctorate from the New England Conservatory (1986), Sonning Award for Lifetime Achievement in Music (1984), Knighted by the Legion of Honor (Paris, 1991), Australian Film Institute Award (1991), induction into the Rock and Roll Hall of Fame (2006), Hollywood's Rockwalk Induction (2006), RIAA Quadruple Platinum for Kind of Blue, and the St. Louis Walk of Fame. He also received the Honorary Award from the International Trumpet Guild.

Miles Davis is still highly influential throughout the world. Among his disciples are Paolo Fresu and Wallace Roney. Throughout his career, Miles played Martin trumpets, and he liked the Heim mouthpieces because they produced a dark tone for him.

Bibl.: Carr, Ian. Miles Davis—The Definitive Biography (Thunder's Mouth Press); Chambers, Jack. Milestones (Da Capo Press); Davis, Miles (with Quincey Troupe). Miles (Touchstone/ Simon & Schuster); Kernfeld, Barry. "Miles Davis" (The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz) (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Davis, Ronald J. ("Spanky") (b. Indianapolis, Indiana, Mar. 6, 1943). American trumpeter. While growing up in Ft. Wayne, Indiana, "Spanky" Davis began playing the trumpet at the age of seven. (He got his nickname when his hair was cut short, with bangs across his forehead, and the drummer of his band said that he looked like Spanky from the television show, Our Gang.) By age fifteen, Davis was playing professionally with area groups such as the Thunderbirds (1958-59), the Silhouettes (1959-61), and Jess Gaylor's orchestra (1961-62). He moved to Chicago in 1963, and played with Howard McGhee's big band, Tiny Hill (1966-68), Ralph Marterie's band (1970-74), Bill Reinhardt (1977), Jim Beebe's Chicago Jazz Band (1977-78), and his own Dixieland groups. Davis studied trumpet with George Bean from 1971-72.

Spanky Davis met Roy Eldridge in Chicago in 1978. They were both playing at the funeral of a mutual friend. The two hit it off, and became friends. Eldridge told Davis that if he ever came to New York City, he should look him up at Jimmy Ryan's club. Eldridge promised to use Davis as a substitute from time to time. So, in late 1978, Davis moved permanently to New York. From 1978 to 1979, Davis studied trumpet with Jimmy Maxwell, one of New York's top lead trumpet players. In addition to playing at Jimmy Ryan's (and replacing Eldridge from 1980-83), Davis worked with Mel Lewis, Gerry Mulligan, Sam Jones (1979-81), Machito (1979-80), Charlie Palmieri (1979), Benny Goodman's sextet (1981-82), Panama Francis's Savoy Big Band (1984-91), Butch Miles (1985-86), Buck Clayton (1988-91), Frank Sinatra, Annie Ross, Buddy Tate, Al Cohn, Tito Puente, Bob Haggart, Arvell Shaw, Rich Szabo, and others.

Davis remains active in New York, performing with his own jazz quartet at numerous clubs and concert venues. He has been featured at several international jazz festivals, and has recorded with Buck Clayton, Walt Levinsky, Roy Eldridge, Chuck Folds, and others. He can also be heard with the Jimmy Ryan All-Stars sextet. Davis can be seen in the Woody Allen film, Crimes and Misdemeanors, and in the film documentary, Machito—A Latin Legacy. Spanky Davis's recordings include Spanky and Roy (Challenge), and Chuck Folds and Friends Remember Doc Cheatham (Arbor).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Davis, Stanton Jr. (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Nov. 10, 1945). American trumpeter and composer. Having developed an interest in trumpet playing and composition at a young age, Davis attended the Berklee College of Music in Boston (1967-69) before transferring to the New England Conservatory (1969-73) where he majored in trumpet and composition. He worked at the MIT radio station from 1968 through 1974. After receiving his bachelor of music degree, he performed in the Boston and New York areas with such notables as George Russell, Mercer Ellington, American Jazz Orchestra (1986), Lester Bowie's Brass Fantasy (1985-87), Cab Calloway (1987), Jim Pepper, Bob Stewart, Charlie Haden, Jaki Byard, James Moody, George Gruntz, Muhal Richard Abrams, Sam Rivers, Ray Anderson, Gil Evans, Steve Turre, Webster Lewis, and Max Roach. Davis became a fixture in Broadway musical pit orchestras, and recorded for television on a Diana Ross Special, a PBS documentary entitled An American Dream, and other programs. He also worked with Jazzmobile from 1980 to 1986. He studied trumpet in New York with Carmine Caruso.

Having a keen interest in education, Stanton Davis taught at Southeast Massachusetts University (1976-78), Bennington College, New England Conservatory (1980-82), and Wellesley College (1981-84). In 1983, Davis earned a master of music degree in ethnomusicology from Wesleyan University. That year, he was also program director for the university's radio station.

Davis's style of jazz playing includes bebop and avant-garde. He recorded an obscure LP album in 1977 called Brighter Days (Outrageous Records) and a more recent CD entitled Manhattan Melody (Enja). As a composer, Davis has won a Creative Artists Fellowship from the Massachusetts Foundation for the Arts and Humanities and a National Endowment for the Arts Fellowship. He is currently working as a contract administrator for the American Federation of Musicians.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Stanton Davis Jr." (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Davison, William ("Wild" Bill) Edward (b. Defiance, Ohio, Jan. 5, 1906; d. Santa Barbara, California, Nov. 14, 1989). American cornetist. Davison was one of the world's leading jazz cornetists, known for his fiery solos and tireless energy. He earned his nickname during his late teens due to his womanizing, heavy drinking, playful antics, and kleptomania.

Davison was the son of Edward Davison (an itinerant worker) and Anna Kreps Davison (a homemaker). He was raised from age seven by his maternal grandparents, and displayed a keen interest in music at an early age. He had the knack of memorizing music after one hearing, and at first learned to play the mandolin, guitar, and banjo. He joined the Boy Scouts in order to learn to play the bugle, and at age twelve switched from bugle to cornet. During his early teens (up to age seventeen), he performed with the Ohio Lucky Seven; his strongest influences were Louis Panico, Bix Beiderbecke, and Louis Armstrong.

Davison became a featured soloist in Chicago's Benny Meroff Orchestra in 1928. Their music differed from New Orleans-style jazz, and came to be known as "Chicago-style" jazz. During the early 1930s, Davison and several members of Meroff's group (including guitarist Eddie Condon) formed their own band that was very successful throughout the Midwest. However, a tragic car accident in 1932 killed the group's star woodwind soloist, Frank Teschemacher, and the Chicago Musicians' Union caused other problems that eventually broke up the band. Davison moved to Milwaukee and began working with several local jazz groups, but after accidently being struck in the mouth by a flying beer mug in 1939, he eventually moved to New York City in 1941 where he became a top jazz musician. He led the band at Nick's nightclub in Greenwich Village (1941-42), fronted the band ay Jimmy Ryan's club in downtown New York (1943), and collaborated with Katherine Dunham in recreating an original Dixieland jazz band.

Davison began recording (mostly with Eddie Condon) for Commodore Records in the fall of 1943. Because of World War II, he was drafted into the military in December of 1943, and worked in an Army band stationed at the Grove Park Inn in western North Carolina. There, the band performed for injured soldiers. He continued performing in New York on weekends, and was honorably discharged from service in September of 1945. His career peaked in New York City during the late 1940s and early 1950s.

Davison married his fifth and final wife, actress Anne Stewart, in 1954. (His earlier marriages ended in divorce or annulment.) In 1957, he made his first European tour that was a huge success. For the rest of his life he mostly played with other people's bands, but he was leader of the Giants of Jazz during concert tours in 1968 and 1969. This group was extremely popular in Japan and Europe.

Although Wild Bill Davison was known for his energetic and outgoing personality and playing style, he was also capable of being very sensitive. He recorded over eight hundred tunes.

Davison died at the age of eighty-three after surgery for an abdominal aneurysm. His ashes are buried in his hometown of Defiance, Ohio.

Bibl.: "Wild Bill Davison" (http://musicians.allaboutjazz.com/musicians.php?id=6158#.ULUG7UJOS-1); "Bill Davison" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Bill_Davison).

Group photo: Davison is on the far right.

Daws, David (b. Middlesex, England, 1963). British cornetist and conductor. Daws began playing cornet at the very young age of three, taking lessons from Maisie Ringham. He achieved his lifelong ambition to become a member of The Salvation Army's International Staff Band in 1981, and became principal cornet in 1993. He then became conductor of the Regent Hall Salvation Army Band (1993-95), and for the next twelve years was principal cornet of The Enfield Salvation Army Band. He toured several times as a soloist around the world, and released several CD recordings including I Hear the Music, The Sound of David Daws, and Golden Slippers. Daws has been a regular cornet teacher for the National Youth Brass Band of Great Britain.

Daws underwent corrective surgery in Toronto (December of 2008), following a tear in his lip muscles. He is currently a member of the Hendon Salvation Army Band, and working to regain his abilities as a soloist. He conducts the Hendon Junior Salvation Army Band, which includes his daughters Stephanie and Isobel.

Bibl.: "David Daws" (www.4barsrest.com/classifieds/cards_detail.asp?id=2741).

Dawson, Colin Thomas (b. South Shields, Durham, England, July 30, 1960). British trumpeter and arranger. Dawson began playing trumpet at age ten, and later graduated from the Newcastle College of Arts and Technology. Having developed a passion for early New Orleans jazz music, he made several trips to the Crescent City between 1976 and 1978 to study early jazz styles. There, he took lessons from Jabbo Smith in 1978, and played at Preservation Hall and at the Jazz Fest. He began his professional career in 1979, and recorded that year with the Sammy Rimington Band. In 1980, he recorded the album, Live at the 100 Club, London with his own band. Dawson toured Europe in 1981, and formed his own Onward Jazz Band (1984-91). He worked with Billy Mitchell, "Peanuts" Hucko, Al Casey, Scott Hamilton, Red Richards, Benny Waters, Eddie Durham, Danny Moss, Red Callender, Barney Kessel, Buddy DeFranco, Milt Hinton, Jake Hanna, Joe Wilder, Harold Ashby, Yank Lawson, Bob Haggart, Eddie Locke, Gene Conners, Chris Barber, Jack Lesberg, and many others.

Dawson was invited to Munich, Germany, in 1989 to arrange for and perform with the Allotria Jazz Band, which toured all of Europe and the United States. In 1998, he recorded the CD, Sophisticated, with stride pianist Bernd Lhotzky, and since 1998, has regularly recorded with Echoes of Swing.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Colin Dawson" (www.artbyheart.de/English/colin_dawson).

Dawson, James (b. Willington, Durham, England, Jan. 8, 1901; d. Middlesborough, England, Feb. 28, 1988). British cornetist. Dawson's early cornet lessons were with his father, a trombonist with the Willington Silver Band. He became a fine cornet player who specialized in the soprano E-flat cornet.

Dawson's long and distinguished playing career spanned from 1918 to 1954, during which time he played with the Darton Main Colliery Band (1918-22), St. Hilda Colliery Band (1923-28), Brass Band of Northern England (1928-29), Blackhall Colliery Band (1929-35), Cargo Fleet Works Band (1935-42), and Middlesborough Empire Theatre Orchestra (1942-54). From 1954 to 1965, he served as the conductor of the Teesside Bridge and Engineering Works Band.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Dean, Allan J[ay] (b. Mason City, Iowa, Apr. 29, 1938). American trumpeter. Dean is one of the most versatile trumpeters in the world. He grew up on a farm near Mason City, Iowa, and attended a one-room schoolhouse from kindergarten through eighth grade. Both parents and his two older brothers were fine amateur musicians. Allan started playing the piano in third grade (which he continued through high school), and began playing the cornet in seventh grade. His early lessons were with Carleton Stewart and Paul Behm, whose fee for each lesson was a dozen eggs. Recordings of Rafael Méndez, from whom he also received advice, inspired Dean early.

Dean studied with Robert Hanson at the University of Iowa from 1956 to 1958. Hanson saw a great talent in Dean and encouraged him to go to New York for further study. Dean studied with Nathan Prager at the Manhattan School of Music, where he completed his bachelor of music degree in 1959. In 1960, he earned a master of music education degree at the Manhattan School. His interest in commercial music led to his first professional job in Fred Waring's show band in 1960. He was drafted into military service in 1961, sent to Hawaii, and assigned the duty of a clerk typist, but was soon placed in the 25th Division Army Band. He was released from the Army in 1963, and returned to New York City where he began a twenty-year career performing as a freelance trumpeter in various Broadway pit and other orchestras, as well as on recordings. He joined the American Brass Quintet (1964-65). When Robert Heinrich left the New York Brass Quintet, Dean was asked to replace him, and played with the group from January 1966 until the ensemble disbanded in 1984. In New York, he was active in the contemporary music field, both in concert and in recording as a member of the Contemporary Chamber Ensemble led by the late Arthur Weisburg.

The Saint Louis Brass Quintet invited Dean to join fellow trumpeter David Hickman in the group in 1985. Dean continues performing with the quintet, which has included trumpeters Hickman, Anthony Plog, and Ray Sasaki during his tenure. Dean is also a charter member of the Summit Brass (since 1986), an all-star large brass ensemble consisting of many of America's leading brass performers. He is also a frequent soloist with Keith Brion's New Sousa Band.

Dean became interested in early music when trumpeter Ronald Anderson introduced him to the recorder during the mid 1960s. He soon learned to play the cornetto as well. Dean and four other musicians formed the New York Renaissance Band, but when one player dropped out, the remaining four changed the group's name to Calliope: A Renaissance Band. Dean has toured and recorded with the ensemble for over thirty years. He also joined the New York Cornett and Sackbut Ensemble, a part-time group that originally included Raymond Mase playing cornetto, and Samuel Pilafian playing bass sackbut.

Dean has a long and distinguished teaching career that began when he replaced Robert Nagel as an adjunct faculty member at Western Connecticut State College in Danbury. He also taught for nearly a dozen years at the Hartt School of Music at the University of Hartford as part of the New York Brass Quintet's residency. He taught for two years at the North Carolina School of the Arts, three years at the Eastman School of Music, and a short time at the Manhattan School of Music. In 1982, he accepted a full time professorship at Indiana University, and taught there until joining the faculty of the Yale University School of Music as an adjunct professor in 1988. In addition, he has served as a guest faculty member at many leading festivals, including the Banff Centre of the Arts (Canada), Morella Festival (Spain), Curitiba Music Festival (Brazil), Orford Arts Centre (Canada), Musiki Blekinge (Sweden), Norfolk Chamber Music Festival, and the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute (formerly the Keystone Brass Institute).

As an active recording artist, Dean can be heard on over eighty albums with such ensembles as the Summit Brass, Saint Louis Brass Quintet, New York Brass Quintet, New York Cornett and Sackbut Ensemble, Calliope, The Contemporary Chamber Ensemble, New York Trumpet Ensemble, and the Smithsonian Chamber Players. He is an active arranger who has published numerous works for brass. He and his wife Julie Shapiro, an artist, have a daughter, Eloisa (b. 1992). Dean is an avid tennis player and enjoys reading and hatha yoga.

Bibl. Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Lyren, Del. "Cornettos, Recorders, and Trumpets, Oh My! An Interview with Allan Dean" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2005); personal interview, Feb. 10, 2010; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

D'Earth, John (b. Framingham, Massachusetts, Mar. 30, 1950). American trumpeter and composer. D'Earth started playing the drums under the guidance of his father, but switched to trumpet at age eight. As a teen, he studied jazz with sax player Boots Mussulli, and trumpet with John Coffey, principal trombone of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. D'Earth's early performing experience was in Ken Sawyer's Big Nine (1964-69). He then attended Harvard University as an English Literature student, and played jazz with Bennie Wallace and Don Grolnick.

D'Earth moved to New York City in 1971. He studied trumpet with Vincent Penzarella, Richie Beirach, and Carmine Caruso, and has performed all types of jazz with musicians such as Bob Moses (1973-84), Gunter Hampel (1974), Deodato (1974-76), Lee Konitz (1976-77), Buddy Rich (1977), Lionel Hampton (1977-78), Tito Puente (1979-80), Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Orchestra (1976-80), Harvie Swartz (1979-80), Jane Ira Bloom (1983), Emily Remler (1983-85), Dave Liebman, Bruce Harsby, George Gruntz's Concert Jazz Band (1991-95), Quincy Jones, Miles Davis, Don Matthews, Bennie Wallace, Eddie Gomez, Pat Metheny, Joe Henderson, Clark Terry, John Scofield, and John Abercrombie. He has also led his own groups, as well as coleading Cosmology, a group with his wife, singer Dawn Thompson.

Since 1981, D'Earth has lived in Charlottesville, Virginia, where he is director of jazz studies at the University of Virginia. He is cofounder of the Free Bridge Quintet, leads the Charlottesville Swing Orchestra, and is director of the Thompson-D'Earth Band. His record albums include One Bright Glance (Enja), Transitions (Concord Jazz, with Emily Remler), Catwalk (Concord Jazz, with Emily Remler), and Restoration Comedy. He has recorded for Vanguard, Enja, Double Time Jazz, and his own label, Cosmology.

As a composer, D'Earth has received many commissions to write for the San Diego Symphony, Atlanta Symphony, Roanoke Symphony, Kronos String Quartet, Kandinsky Trio, Dave Matthews Band, Charlottesville Chamber Festival, and many other groups.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "John D'Earth" (http://sokoband.com); "John D'Earth" (http://artsandsciences.virginia.edu/music).

De Boer, Paul (b. Paterson, New Jersey, Dec. 10, 1948). American trumpeter. De Boer grew up in North Haledon, New Jersey. He began playing trumpet at age ten; his first trumpet teacher was William Knorr.

After graduating from Eastern Christian High School in 1966, he attended the Manhattan School of Music in New York City, studying with Cecil Collins (1967-70). He left school for two years to serve in the New York National Guard, and resumed studies in 1972, graduating with a bachelor of music degree in 1973. He continued study at the Manhattan School (1973-74), earning a master of music degree in Historical Musicology. During the summers of 1976-77 and 1979-80, as well as the 1979-80 academic year, he attended Indiana University, where he was a student of Louis Davidson, earning a doctor of music degree. Additionally, he studied with Gerard Schwarz in New York.

De Boer taught at Roberts Wesleyan University (1981-88), Liberty University (1988-93), Louisiana University (1996-98), Howard Payne University (1998-2002), and since 2002 has been on the faculty of Houghton College. During recent summers, he has taught at the Csehy Summer School of Music. De Boer has performed with the Rochester Philharmonic, Bach Choir of Bethlehem, Roanoke Symphony Orchestra, and the Indiana Festival Orchestra.

Paul and organist Eileen De Boer have been married since 1970, and have six children: Dietrich (b. 1972), Davis (b. 1976), Michelle (b. 1979), Kirk (b. 1981), Derek (b. 1983), and Shannon (b. 1986). His hobby is photography.

Bibl.: "Paul De Boer" (http://campus.houghton.edu/orgs/music/faculty/bios/deboer.html); personal interview, Apr. 18, 2011.

Debonneville, Michel (b. Geneva, Switzerland, Mar. 19, 1943). Swiss trumpeter. Debonneville was a section trumpeter in the Orchestre de la Suisse Romande in Geneva from 1966 until his retirement in 2005. He made many recordings with the orchestra under the baton of Maestro Ernest Ansermet. For many years, he was also the manager of Sergei Diaghilev's Ballet Russe concerts in Geneva. He recorded Baroque works for two trumpets with Michel Cuvit, and taught at the Geneva Conservatory.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Decker, Charles ("Charlie") F. (b. Oneida, New York, July 1, 1946). American trumpeter. Decker grew up in Oneida, New York. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first teachers were Ed Hacker (Utica Symphony) and Charles Hois (Pittsburgh Symphony). After graduating from Oneida High School in 1964, he attended the Eastman School of Music, studying with Sidney Mear and graduating in 1968.

Decker was solo cornetist of the US Army Field Band in Washington, D.C. from 1968 to 1971. He then studied with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University (master of music degree, 1972), and Raymond Crisara at the University of Texas in Austin (doctor of music degree, 1981). He has performed with the Rochester Philharmonic, Berkshire Music Center Orchestra, Austin Symphony, Knoxville Symphony, University of Texas faculty brass quintet, and the Colorado Philharmonic (now the National Repertory Orchestra).

Decker taught at Bemidji State University in Minnesota from 1973 to 1979, and since 1981 has taught at Tennessee Tech University; his students have won awards at the National Trumpet Competition. TTU produced Decker's solo CD, Recital and Festival Solos for Trumpet, as well as three CDs with the Brass Arts Quintet (faculty). He has published numerous arrangements for trumpets and brass quintet through Kendor, Encore Music, and Medici Music.

Decker and his wife Kimberly, a teacher, have two daughters, Samantha and Suzanne.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charles F. Decker" (www.tntech.edu/people/cdecker?itemid=1401); personal interview, Mar. 7, 2011.

De Davrichewy, Irakli (b. Paris, France, Feb. 1, 1940). French trumpeter. Usually known as simply "Irakli," De Davrichewy studied piano and violin, and taught himself to play the trumpet. He formed his first orchestra in 1958, and led the French All-Stars, the Jazz Four (1971), and the Paris All Stars (from 1985). In 1959, he was voted the best trumpeter and best band in Jazz Hot magazine, and as best soloist again in 1964. He also won first prize at the Antibes-Juan-les-Pins Festival in 1960 (trumpet), and first prize at the Coulomb's Festival in the same year.

De Davrichewy has become the major successor of Louis Armstrong's music and style of playing. Today, his most important group is Irakli and the Louis Ambassadors, but he has also performed with Mezz Mezzrow (1967), Bob Greene (1969), Max Kaminsky (1971), Victoria Spivey (1974), Anachronic Jazz Band (1976), the High Society Jazz Band, Lionel Hampton, Dizzy Gillespie, Joe Newman, Buck Clayton, Bud Tate, Doc Cheatham, Claude Bolling, and many others. He has recorded with Marc Laferrière (1975), Georges Brassens, Vieux Truc led by Raymond Fonsèque (1984), the Tuxedo Big Band (2001, and his best record: Keep on Jumpin' on the TBB label), as well as various recordings under his own name (from 1965). He has toured Europe many times and has appeared at dozens of major music festivals. He is president of his own Louis Armstrong Association (from 1990).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Irakli De Davrichewy" (http://sgswing.fr/uk/irakli-biography.html).

Dedrick, Lyle F. ("Rusty") (b. Delevan, New York, July 12, 1918; d. Summitville, New York, Dec. 25, 2009). American trumpeter, composer, and arranger. Dedrick studied trumpet and composition at Fredonia State Teachers College (now the State University of New York-Fredonia) for a few years, but dropped out to become a fulltime musician. His composition teachers were Paul Creston and Stefan Wolpe. His brother Art was a trombone player, and together they first began to play in a family band. Rusty later played with the big bands of Dick Stabile (1938-39), Red Norvo (1939-41), and Claude Thornhill (1941-42) before being drafted into the Army (1942-45). After his service years, he played with the Ray McKinley Orchestra (1946) and Claude Thornhill (1946-47). Thornhill featured many of Dedrick's arrangements.

As the big band era drew to a close, Dedrick began working in the New York studios as a trumpeter, composer, and arranger. He wrote music for Don Elliott, Maxine Sullivan, Lee Wiley, and many others. He also played and arranged for various radio and television programs, including those for Arthur Godfrey, Sid Caesar, and Ed Sullivan. During the 1950s and '60s, he recorded several albums as leader in addition to recording with other artists. His recordings include A Salute to Bunny Berigan (DCC), Double Trumpet Doings (Original Jazz Classics, with Don Elliott), A Tribute to Andy Razaf (DCC, with Maxine Sullivan), Snowfall (Hep, with Claude Thornhill), and Back Home Again (Audiophile, with Lee Wiley).

Dedrick worked with Urbie Green in 1967 and Lionel Hampton from 1970-71 and recorded with Maxine Sullivan and Lee Wiley during the 1970s. He joined the faculty at the Manhattan School of Music in 1971, eventually becoming director of jazz studies. A leading educator, Dedrick published many of his compositions and arrangements through Kendor Music. He also directed various state and national high school honors jazz ensembles as well as the American Jazz Orchestra. In 1996, he served as musical director of the Smithsonian Institution's American Songbook project.

Lyle "Rusty" Dedrick passed away at his home on Christmas Day, 2009 at the age of ninety-one. He was survived by Patricia, his wife of sixty-four years, and two daughters, Doreen and Karin.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Lyle Dedrick" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Group photo: Dedrick is second from right, next to Claude Thornhill, far right.

DeGangi, Dominick (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Sept. 15, 1915; d. Conroe, Texas, Feb. 9, 2006). American trumpeter. DeGangi's father passed away when Dominick was nine years old. He grew up in Philadelphia where Vincent Persichetti was a neighbor. DeGangi's first cornet lessons were with a local euphonium player, but while in high school, he studied with Ralph Cherry and Max Schlossberg. He gained musical experience during high school by playing in various dance bands, theater orchestras, and at the Lord Baltimore Hotel.

After graduating from high school, DeGangi freelanced, and became a staff musician at WCAU Radio and KYW Radio in Philadelphia, as well as playing in the Littlefield Ballet Company Orchestra. During World War II, he joined the Army, and was assigned to the Army Air Corps Flying Band in Dayton, Ohio. DeGangi became the conductor and arranger for the band, a group that toured the country backing numerous celebrities such as Bob Hope. While in Dayton, he met and married Lucile, a violinist; during fifty-eight years of marriage, they had four children.

After the war, DeGangi moved back to Philadelphia where he played in the Philadelphia Grand Opera Orchestra, and was principal trumpet of the Philadelphia Pops Orchestra. He also took lessons from Ernest Williams. He toured with the big bands of Tommy Dorsey, Gene Krupa, Paul Whiteman, Richard Maltby, Frank Sinatra, and Jackie Gleason. He moved to New York City and attended the Manhattan School of Music and The Juilliard School, where he studied with Harry Glantz and William Vacchiano, as well as with Carmine Caruso. DeGangi performed Aaron Copland's Quiet City with the composer conducting. He performed in Broadway pit orchestras for such shows as Camelot and The King and I, and toured Iceland and Nicaragua with the Margot Fonteyn Ballet Spectacular. He also taught at Dartmouth College Congregation of the Arts for three years.

DeGangi became principal trumpet of the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra from 1952 to 1958. He left the orchestra to join the Cleveland Orchestra under George Szell as third/associate principal for two years (1958-1960), but returned to the Baltimore Symphony in 1962, where he remained until 1969. He completed his bachelor of music degree at the Peabody Conservatory of Music where he then taught for thirteen years. He resigned from the BSO in 1969 (replaced by James Burke), and moved to Miami, Florida. There he performed with the Miami Philharmonic and taught at four area colleges.

After surviving Hurricane Andrew in 1992, Dominick and Lucile moved to Conroe, Texas, near Houston. Although retired, DeGangi continued to play in local bands and orchestras. He was a humble musician and friend to all who knew him. He died of a heart attack at the age of ninety-one.

Bibl.: Frink, Laurie. "In Memoriam: Dominick DeGangi" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2006); "Music is food for life / 87-year-old trumpet player performs with North Harris band" (www.chron.com).

DeJong, William ("Bill") (b. Orange City, Iowa, Aug. 29, 1935). American trumpeter. Self-taught until college, DeJong began playing the cornet at age twelve and switched to trumpet at age eighteen. After graduating from Orange City High School in 1953, he attended Morningside College where he studied with Jim Hustis and received a bachelor of music education degree in 1957. He then attended Boston University where he studied with Armando Ghitalla and earned a master of music degree in 1959.

DeJong's career began with a series of military band positions: US Army Band in Ft. Myers, Virginia (1959-61); US Army Bandmaster of the 384th Army Band in Ft. Eustis, Virginia (1961-62); Advisor to eighteen military bands in South Vietnam (1962-63); and US Army Band-master of the 399th Army Band in Ft. Leonard Wood, Missouri (1963-65). After his service years, he became the band director at West Georgia College (1965-70).

DeJong began teaching trumpet at Western Illinois University in 1970. He also worked towards his doctoral degree at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas), studying with John Haynie and completing his DMA in 1971. Among DeJong's many former students are Matthew Lee, Karl Hammond, Peter Bond, Steve Hawk, and John Schlabach. He retired from WIU in 1993.

DeJong and his wife Jennifer, a high school English teacher, have three children: twin daughters Stephanie and Pamela (b. 1964), and son Colin (b. 1988). His hobby is playing golf.

Bibl.: personal interview, May 11, 2011.

Delmotte, Roger (b. Roubaix, France, Sept. 20, 1925). French trumpeter. Delmotte is respected as one of the pioneers in classical solo playing. His grandfather played tuba. Delmotte began playing piccolo flute (two years), but switched to flugelhorn, and as a boy played in local bands in Northern France, such as Fanfare Delattre in Roubaix and the Symphonie du Favreuil Ensemble conducted by Mr. Glorieux (1943). At the Roubaix Conservatory, Delmotte studied trumpet with Maurice Leclercq, a previous pupil of Merri Franquin and a first-prize winner in 1911 at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique de Paris. Delmotte won his Prix d'Honneur in 1944, but his studies were interrupted when he lost his father, and needed to work as a tailor in order to help support his family. However, he eventually enrolled in the Paris Conservatory where he studied with Eugène Foveau (1944-46), while still serving in a military band in order to receive a tuition scholarship.

After leaving the conservatory, Delmotte freelanced in Paris and the surrounding area. He toured with the famous tenor singer Luis Mariano (1946), and performed at the Casino Montparnasse with Mariano and Delmotte's first wife, Marguerite Constant, a soprano singer. In 1948, he performed at Mogador and in a Cadet Orchestra that mostly included recent graduates of the conservatory. He played at the Casino in Biarritz (summers, 1949 and 1950 with trumpeter Charles Deruyck); at the Casino in Cannes (winter 1950); and with many dance bands led by Félix Chardon, Jerry Mengo (1950), Gaston Lapeyronnie (alongside Georges Jouvin on trumpet), Hubert Rostaing; and with chamber orchestras of Félix Rogel (in Versailles) and Fernand Oubradous (from 1950).

In 1950, Delmotte became the first trumpet player to win a first prize in the Geneva Competition, a feat that launched his solo career. During that same year, he was appointed professor at the Versailles Conservatory (where he stayed until 1992). In 1951, he became principal trumpet of the Paris Opera Orchestra (where he played until 1986). He performed the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach under Fernand Oubradous (1951), and Jolivet's Concertino with the Concerts Lamoureux Orchestra conducted by Jean Martinon (1952); he played a small-bore Aubertin trumpet. Delmotte was the first artist to record the Jolivet, under Ernest Bour on the Ducretet-Thomson label. This historic recording dramatically furthered his career, and was immediately distributed in the United States on the Westminster label, which incorrectly listed Delmotte's name as "Del Motte." Delmotte was close to Jolivet, and advised him when this major composer wrote the Second Concerto for Trumpet. Soon, many composers wrote solo works for him, including Florent Schmitt, Jean Rivier, Georges Auric, Henry Barraud, and others; Delmotte premiered many new works for trumpet by Jean Françaix (Sonatine), Maurice Ohana (1963), and others.

Delmotte was very active as a studio player (film soundtracks, sessions with Roger-Roger, etc) in Paris. He also performed at many festivals, beginning with the Festival Casals in Prades (with an international orchestra conducted by Alexandre Schneider in 1951 that included Raymond Sabarich, trumpet, Serge Baudo, tympani, and members of the Philadelphia Orchestra such as Marcel Tabuteau, oboe). He also performed in prestigious orchestras such as Ensemble Nadia Boulanger (1951) and the Petit Théâtre Marigny-Domaine Musical with Pierre Boulez (from 1950).

As a proponent of the Baroque revival of the 1950s, Delmotte performed and recorded early trumpet concerti even before pioneers such as Adolf Scherbaum and Roger Voisin. He introduced the young (age nineteen) Maurice André by making the first recording of Vivaldi's Concerto for Two Trumpets with him in 1952. For about twenty years beginning in 1964, Delmotte became recognized as a duet partner of the organist Pierre Cochereau (first concert given at the Strassburg Cathedral). During the same period, Delmotte toured Turkey and Europe with John Grady (organist at St. Patrick's Church in New York City). During the 1970s, both Delmotte and André popularized music for trumpet with organ. Delmotte said (June 4, 2010), I always tried to be a complementary instrument to the organ, not a soloist.

The decade of the 1970s was a successful time for Delmotte. He made many recordings for the O.R.T.F. and Philips labels, performed Rivier's Concerto for Trumpet on national television (1972), cofounded a trumpet trio called Les Trompettes de Paris with Georges Jouvin and Roger Guérin (producing three albums for Pathé in 1971-72), toured Europe as a soloist, and formed his own brass ensemble that toured South Africa in 1979. He was also a member of the prestigious Gabriel Masson Brass Ensemble. Delmotte continued as a leading soloist throughout the 1980s. However, unlike André, Delmotte disliked the piccolo trumpets (but could play them well!). For many years, he preferred to play trumpets in C, D, and E-flat. He served as an adviser for Courtois trumpets.

In addition to his duties at the Versailles Conservatory, Delmotte served as Raymond Sabarich's teaching assistant at the Paris Conservatory (1965-66) where he soon became a professor (1966-67). For a short time, he was the first trumpet teacher at the Lyons National Superior Conservatory of Music (1982). He also gave many master classes (Salzburg, Tokyo, and especially in Switzerland). Among his many pupils are the well-known Nicolas André, Robert Bouché, Roger Boufferet, Dominique Derasse, Pierre Dutot, Roger Jeanmarie, Gérard Millière, Elisabeth Nouaille-Degorce, René Périnelli, Jean-Luc Ramecourt, Jean Sibra, Olivier Theurillat, Marc Ullrich, Pascal Vigneron, and Urban Walser.

Delmotte was a cofounder of the Guilde Française des Trompettistes (in 1978), and has been an important judge at international trumpet competitions beginning in 1979 when he was a member of the jury for the Maurice André Competition in Paris. He has also served on juries for the Toulon Competition (artistic director, 1975-2000), International Congress of Brass at Châtenay-Malabry, and others. He participated in the 1985 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Albuquerque, New Mexico. Delmotte received the titles of Chevalier des Arts & Lettres (1965), Chevalier de la Légion d'Honneur (1972), and Officier de l'Ordre National du Mérite (2001). His second wife, Evelyne, a Swiss woman, died around 1998. Delmotte is now retired, but still studies music. He lives in Bienne, Switzerland, collects old trumpets and cornets, and is vice president of an association of older musicians from the opera and opéra-comique. In 2011, he was a recipient of the International Trumpet Guild's "Honorary Award" for highest achievement.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. "Masters of the Twentieth Century: Roger Delmotte" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1984); Lowrey, Alvin & Michel Laplace. Roger Delmotte Discography (special supplement by the ITG Journal, May 1985); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, with a full study and discography, extracts on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008); personal interview by Michel Laplace (June 4, 2010); Rémy, Yves. "Roger Delmotte." (La Gazette des Cuivres, No. 18, 2011).

Dengler, Franz (b. Karlsbad, Bohemia, July 30, 1890; d. Vienna, Austria, Sept. 27, 1963). Bohemian trumpeter. It is unfortunate that nothing is known of Dengler's early life, for he was one of the most important orchestral trumpeters the world has known. Interestingly and significantly, he did not study in Vienna, but rather in Dresden. There he was greatly influenced by the renowned principal trumpeter of the Dresden Royal Orchestra (later Staatskapelle), Eduard Seifert (1870-1965), who participated in first performances of many works by Richard Strauss. Dengler was principal trumpet of the Berlin Opera orchestra under Richard Strauss in 1908, then the Vienna State Opera (1918), where Strauss was also conductor between 1919 and 1924, and was a member of the Vienna Philharmonic from 1918 to 1955 (principal until 1951). He was famous for his soft, pure tone and melodic style of playing.

Dengler taught at the Vienna Music Academy from 1931 to 1959. Viennese composer Karl Pilss wrote his Concerto for Trumpet and Orchestra for Dengler in 1934. His Sonata for Trumpet and Piano was composed a year later as a study piece for Adolf Scherbaum, one of Dengler's students. Another important student of Dengler's was Helmut Wobisch, who was later his successor as principal of the Vienna Philharmonic. Two further Dengler students who became principal were Josef Levora (coprincipal with Wobisch) and Adolf Holler (his last student). Dengler's favorite teaching saying was "The trumpet is an instrument of character!"

Bibl.: Adler, John. Expanding the Trumpet Repertoire: A Pedagogical Exploration of Four Diverse Works for Trumpet by Bertold Hummel, James Miley, Karl Pilss, and Joseph Turrin (unpublished diss., University of Miami, 2009); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Suggs, Robert James. Karl Pilss: Late Romantic Heir to the Viennese Tradition of Trumpet and Brass Ensemble Music (DMA diss., University of Maryland-College Park, 1998); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

De Oliveira, Bonfiglio (b. Guaratinguetá, São Paulo, Brazil, Sept. 27, 1894; d. Rio de Janeiro, RJ, Brazil, May 16, 1940). Brazilian trumpeter and composer. De Oliveira learned the rudiments of music from his father, bassist of the band Guaratinguetá Mafra. Bonfiglio played bass for two years before studying trumpet with Maestro Acosta, a professional trumpeter in Banda Mafra. De Oliveira received a scholarship to study at St. Joseph's College where he was assigned the task of reorganizing the student band, and where he began composing. He continued his studies at the Colegio San Joaquin in Lorraine, São Paulo, and then moved to the city of Pole, also in São Paulo where he formed a band that performed in the cities of Paraiba Valley. He was heard by conductor and violinist Lafaiete Silva, who invited him to join the Cinema Band in Rio de Janeiro. De Oliveira played bass and trumpet in various theater orchestras in Rio, including the Municipal Theater Symphonic Orchestra conducted by Francisco Braga.

In 1917, De Oliveira became a member of Group Caxangá, and in the following year, composed the song, Glória, in honor of a young man who had fallen in love. The song received verses from poet Branca M. Coelho, and was recorded by Gastão Formenti for the Columbia label in 1931. De Oliveira continued composing, and became known for his chôros (ranch marches). For the rest of his life, he collaborated with many of Brazil's best-known artists, touring as a trumpeter and composer throughout Portuguese cities in Italy, France, Portugal, and Spain. During the 1930s, he worked mostly as a studio musician in Rio, and played with Pixinguinha's Grupo de Guarda Velha (later known as Diabos do Céu) in 1932. Some of his songs became extremely popular, and he was considered to be one of his country's greatest trumpeters at that time.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bonfiglio de Oliveira" (www.allmusic.com/artist/bonfiglio-de-oliveira-mn0001276415); "Choro Music" (http://choro-music.blogspot.com/2006/06/bonfiglio-de-oliveira-trumpet-ace-of.html).

De Paris, Sidney (b. Crawfordsville, Indiana, May 30, 1905; d. New York, New York, Sept. 13, 1967). American trumpeter. Sidney's older brother was trombonist Wilbur De Paris. They both learned music from their father who was a carnival bandleader and vaudeville musician. The two brothers played alto and baritone horn duets in church as early as 1910. They played in their father's group for a while, but Sidney soon joined Sam Taylor's group in Washington, D.C. (1924) and then Clarence Paige's group.

Sidney De Paris performed and recorded with Charlie Johnson's Paradise Ten (on and off between 1926-31) and occasionally played with his brother's band in Philadelphia. He also played at times with McKinney's Cotton Pickers in 1929. He joined the bands of Fletcher Henderson (briefly in 1931), Don Redman (1932-36), Willie Bryant, Charlie Johnson (again in 1937-38), Mezz Mezzrow (late 1937), Benny Carter (1940-41), Charlie Barnet (1944), and Claude Hopkins (1946). He recorded under his own name on Blue Note (1944) and also recorded with many artists including Mezz Mezzrow (who once threw him out of a historic 1938 recording session supervised by Hugues Panassié because of his excessive growling on the trumpet), Jelly Roll Morton (1939), Sidney Bechet (1940), and Willie (the Lion) Smith (1940). During the early 1940s, he also played with Zutty Singleton, Art Hodes, and the Roy Eldridge big band (1944).

Sidney and Wilbur formed a Dixieland band in 1947, although they also frequently played New Orleans jazz and swing music. They made a number of recordings for Atlantic Records (1952-60) that are now collector items, and also recorded for Swingville (1962). By the 1950s, Sidney developed health problems that at times weakened his playing. They hired Doc Cheatham as second trumpet to help support Sidney's failing playing strength. The De Paris brothers played at the Antibes Jazz Festival in 1960, and throughout that decade Sidney also occasionally played tuba.

By 1964, Sidney had to stop playing completely. He died three years later at the age of sixty-two. At his best, Sidney De Paris played with a lot of drive and swing.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Depew, Art (b. West Palm Beach, Florida, Jan. 27, 1925). American trumpeter and bandleader. Depew was the son of a West Palm Beach minister, and played in churches. His career began at the age of thirteen when he joined the Florida Cavaliers. He studied at The Juilliard School for a while (3½ years), but left to play with the big bands of Glenn Miller (led by Tex Beneke) and Tommy Dorsey. He also took lessons from Donald S. Reinhardt in Philadelphia.

During the 1950s and '60s, Depew was based in California, where he played with the bands of Harry James (his boyhood idol), Charlie Barnet, Ray Anthony, Lawrence Welk (1957-65), Bob Crosby, and Bob Ringwald, and was often featured as a vocalist with these fine swing bands. He was also an active studio musician and arranger. He can be heard with the Great Pacific Jazz Band, Pete Lofthouse, the Second Story Men, and the Disneyland Delta Ramblers.

After Harry James died in 1983, Depew was invited to serve as leader of the Harry James ghost band from 1987 until 2006.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Deppa, Claude (b. Cape Town, South Africa, May 10, 1958). South African trumpeter. Deppa comes from a musical family. He began playing drums and crash cymbals as a boy, but after moving with his family to London, England, in 1975, switched to trumpet at age seventeen. His teachers were Kathy Stobart, Olaf Vass, Brian Booth, and Bob Bell (the latter being the most influential). In addition to being a proficient classical player, he is a top funk, African jazz, and Afro-Cuban-style trumpeter.

Deppa has performed and recorded with several internationally known groups, including Brotherhood of Breath, Carla Bley's Very Big Band, Andy Sheppard's Big-Co-Motion, Grand Union Orchestra, Jazz Warriors, Mervyn Africa Group, and is section leader of Kinetica Bloco. He is a founder of African Jazz Explosion, Horns Unlimited, and Five Funky Fellas. His solo CD is titled Toi-Toi (Jika).

Deppa's nephew, Enslin Dlambule, is a famous rugby player.

Bibl.: "Claude Deppa" (www.africanmusiciansprofiles.com/claudedeppa.htm).

Desvigne, Sidney (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Sept. 11, 1893; d. Pacoima, California, Dec. 2, 1959). American trumpeter and bandleader. Desvigne began his music career as a cornetist in several New Orleans café bands. He soon switched to trumpet, working with the Excelsior Brass Band, Maple Leaf Orchestra, Leonard Bechet's Silver Bell Band, and Ed Allen's Whispering Gold Band. He joined Fate Marable's riverboat band on the SS Island Queen during the early 1920s, but when Marable went to another Mississippi boat in 1926, Desvigne took over the band, reforming it as his own Southern Syncopators.

Moving back to New Orleans in the 1930s, Desvigne wanted to cash in on the popularity of swing bands, so he established his own big band that worked steadily until he decided to move to Los Angeles in 1945 where he purchased a nightclub, and became semiretired from playing.

A successful and important New Orleans musician, Desvigne was described as a man with a slight build, thin face, and a small mustache, and who was usually seen with a serious expression on his face.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Sidney Desvigne" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Sidney_Desvigne); "Sidney Desvigne" (www.jazznap.info/index.php?option=com_content&view=article&id=36:sidney-desvigne&catid=1:biography&Itemid=2).

Detwiler, David ("Dave") C. (b. Altoona, Pennsylvania, Jan. 3, 1950). American trumpeter. Detwiler began playing the trumpet at around age four, taking lessons from his father, Ray S. Detwiler, a professional trumpet player who appeared on the television program, The Mr. Roger's Show, many times. David also took lessons from his older brother Terry, who later became a member of the US Marine Band for over twenty years. David's first performing experiences were playing simple tunes at retirement homes and churches. He later attended the Valley Forge Military Academy where he received lessons from Lloyd Geisler, principal trumpet of the National Symphony Orchestra. After graduating from the academy in 1968, he earned a bachelor of arts degree, studying with Charles Hois and Tony Pascarelli at the University of Pittsburgh (1968-72).

Detwiler became a member of the US Army Band in Washington, D.C. in 1973. During over twenty-six years with the band, he directed musical events at The White House, was a featured soloist in over 350 concerts, played lead trumpet in The US Army Blues jazz ensemble, and performed for Presidents Nixon, Carter, Ford, Reagan, Bush (Sr.), and Clinton. During a European tour with the band, he was hailed by the Swedish press as "The World's Greatest Trumpeter" after he soloed with the US Army Band, Swedish Army Band, and the Norwegian Army Band on the same day! He has also been principal trumpet of the National Symphony Orchestra Pops since 1988, and a featured soloist on pops concerts with the New York Philharmonic and the National Symphony Orchestra. He was featured with the Airmen of Note during a conference of the International Trumpet Guild at the University of Kentucky (1998), and is well known for his amazing original high note solo on Scream Machine (often mistaken as a Maynard Ferguson solo), a tune which gained national acclaim as Brass Machine, and is often played by high school and college bands worldwide.

Detwiler received the Meritorious Service Award, as well as twenty-eight other military awards. He was president of the Virginia Chapter of the International Association of Jazz Educators, founder of the Georgetown Jazzfest in 1995, and is president of Prelude, Inc., a fulltime musical entertainment booking agency. He has been an active teacher and clinician since 1973, taught for several years in the public schools of Virginia, and was an adjunct professor at Georgetown University for fourteen years (jazz ensembles and trumpet, 1988-2002). He remains an active freelance performer in the D.C. area, often performing on television shows such as Christmas in Washington, The Kennedy Center Honors, Ford Theatre Honors, The National Memorial Day Concert, and A Capital 4th, all of these for more than twenty years running.

Detwiler and his wife Jill have been married since 1977 and have three children: Ray (b. 1977), J.D. (b. 1979), and Dustin (b. 1983). His hobbies used to include racquetball, but today he enjoys playing golf.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "David Detwiler Retires from 'Pershing's Own'" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/news00/detwiler.htm); David Detwiler's official website: www.davedetwiler.com; personal interview, July 8, 2012.

Deuchar, James ("Jimmy") (b. Dundee, Scotland, June 26, 1930; d. Dundee, Scotland, Sept. 9, 1993). Scottish trumpeter. Deuchar was born into a musical family. His father, also named Jimmy, was a saxophone player, and two uncles, Chick and Billy Smith, were trumpeters. His first professional playing experiences were at London's Club Eleven while in the Royal Air Force. He then played with Johnny Dankworth's Seven (1950-51), Geraldo and Oscar Rabin, Jack Parnell (1952), Ronnie Scott (Paris, 1953-54), and Tony Crombie (1955). He also performed occasionally with Lionel Hampton in 1956 and toured the United States with Scott in 1957. His playing style was influenced by the trumpet work of Fats Navarro and Howard McGhee.

In addition to recording with many of the musicians listed above, Deuchar also recorded with Victor Feldman and Zoot Sims. He moved to Germany for a few years, where he played with the Kurt Edelhagen Orchestra (1957-59). He spent the 1960s there, performing once again with Ronnie Scott (1960-62), and with Tubby Hayes (1962-64) and the Kenny Clarke-Francy Boland Orchestra (1963-71). He proved to be a skilled arranger for Edelhagen and the BBC.

Deuchar moved back to Scotland in 1971 and became one of the U.K.'s finest bop players. He toured the United States in 1986 with Charlie Watt's all-star band, and released numerous albums including Pub Crawling with Jimmy Deuchar (Tempo), Pal Jimmy (Tempo), and The Scots Connection (Hep).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

DeWitt, John (b. c1951). American trumpeter. DeWitt grew up in Denver, Colorado. During high school, he studied with Manuel Araujo, principal trumpet of the Denver Symphony Orchestra. He attended Northwestern University, studying with Vincent Cichowicz and completing a bachelor of music degree in 1973. He also studied with Adolph Herseth, Roger Voisin, and Armando Ghitalla.

DeWitt played with New York Chamber Soloists and Washington Bach Consort before his first position as coprincipal trumpet of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C. In 1981, he joined the Houston Symphony Orchestra as principal trumpet, a position he held for twenty-two years before moving to the associate principal position. In addition to being a member of the Houston Symphony Orchestra, DeWitt also performs with the Houston Symphony Chamber Players under Maestro Christopher Eschenbach.

Bibl: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "John DeWitt" (www.shadeheights.com/concertmusicians.html).

Dickey, Bruce (b. South Bend, Indiana, Mar. 3, 1949). American cornetto player. Dickey grew up in South Bend, Indiana, and studied trumpet with Jay Miller. After graduating from John Adams High School in 1967, Dickey attended Michigan State University, where he earned a bachelor's degree in Humanities before attending Indiana University, where he studied trumpet with William Adam (1971-74) and earned a master's degree in musicology. He began his career in early music at IU, and in 1974 went to Basel, Switzerland, to study recorder and cornetto at the renowned Schola Cantorum Basiliensis, an institute for early music research and performance. After studying cornetto for a year with Edward H. Tarr, he was given the position of cornetto teacher at the Schola Cantorum, a position that he holds to this day.

Dickey is one of a handful of musicians worldwide who have dedicated themselves to reviving the cornetto–once an instrument of great virtuosi, but which lamentably fell into disuse in the 19th century. The cornetto is a woodwind instrument, usually curved, and covered with leather or parchment. It has finger holes like a woodwind instrument, but a vibrating-lip cup mouthpiece similar to those in use with other high brass instruments, but much smaller. The revival of the cornetto began in the 1950s, but it was largely Dickey and his students, who in the late 1970s re-established the reputation of this instrument and restored it to the virtuosic level for which it was so renowned.

As a leading performer and teacher of early music performance practice, Dickey has collaborated with artists such as Jean-Pierre Canihac, Frans Brüggen, Ton Koopman, Jordi Savall, Andrew Parrott, Gustav Leonhardt, Nikolaus Harnoncourt, Monica Huggett, Konrad Junghänel, and Philippe Herreweghe. In addition to the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis, he has taught at the Royal Conservatory in The Hague (Amsterdam), the Accademia Chigiana in Siena, and the Early Music Institute at Indiana University. He has recorded over one hundred CDs for a variety of labels including Accent, EMI, Stradivarius, BIS, and Harmonia mundi France. In the last two decades, his work has focused on the ensemble Concerto Palatino, which he and Dutch Baroque trombonist Charles Toet founded in 1987.

In 1981, Dickey and his wife, Candace Smith, moved to Bologna, Italy, which is close to the origins and source materials for the cornetto and its music. They live with their daughter Elisa (b. 1993) in a country home surrounded by vineyards. In 2000, the Historic Brass Society conferred on him the prestigious Christopher Monk Award, and in 2007 he received a Taverner Award for "significant contributions to musical understanding, having been motivated by neither commerce nor ego." Dickey and Michael Collver published a catalog of the surviving cornetto repertoire, and in 2007 he and Edward Tarr published the book, Articulation in Early Wind Music for the Amadeus publishing house. Dickey and his wife, a singer and scholar particularly interested in the music sung in 17th-century Italian convents, founded the publishing house Artemisia Editions that specializes in this repertoire. His hobbies are cooking and gardening.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); "Bruce Dickey (Trumpet, Leader)" (www.bach-cantatas.com/Bio/Dickey-Bruce); "Bruce Dickey" (www.concertpalation.com/Bruce_Dickey.htm); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, Apr. 26, 2010.

Dickinson, John (b. New Zealand, c1944). New Zealand trumpeter. Dickinson was invited to come to England and join Harry Mortimer's Morris Motors Band in Oxford. While there, he studied at the Guildhall School of Music in London. It was during his second year in school that he won an audition to become second trumpet in the Scottish BBC Orchestra. He later advanced to principal. Dickinson then performed for one year in the Scottish National Orchestra, and then played principal in the Hallé Orchestra from 1969 to 1986.

Dickinson taught at the Royal Northern College of Music from 1977 to 1979, and beginning in 1979 at the Chethams School of Music where he was also head of brass from 1986 to 2002. He continues to serve as a consultant at the Chethams School, and worked for the Lancshire Education Department for five years. He is currently conducting the Sale Brass Band in South Manchester. His two CDs are Essential Handel (EMI) and Best Wedding 100 (EMI).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "John Dickinson" (www.rnmc.ac.uk).

Didrickson, Luther (b. 1938; d. July 31, 2001). American trumpeter. Didrickson studied with Vincent Cichowicz and Arnold Jacobs at Northwestern University, earning a bachelor of music education degree in 1960, and a master of music degree in 1961. He was one of Chicago's most active trumpet performers, playing with such ensembles as the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Grant Park Symphony Orchestra, Lyric Opera of Chicago, Chicago Little Symphony, Contemporary Chamber Players of the University of Chicago, Chicago Sinfonietta, Chicago Chamber Orchestra, and the Stovioni Ensemble. He also played in Maestro Thor Johnson's Peninsula Festival Orchestra in Wisconsin beginning in 1968, and was principal trumpet beginning in 1972. He founded Brassworks Chicago during the late 1960s, and served as its director through the early 1980s.

Didrickson is well known for teaching at Northwestern University for thirty-seven years from 1964 to 2001; he taught hundreds of talented musicians, among them Leonard Candelaria, Bruce Briney, James Buckner, and Philip Norris.

Didrickson died of cancer after a long and heroic struggle with the disease. He was survived by his wife, Sally, a viola player.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Luther Didrickson" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/news01/didrickson.htm); "Luther Didrickson" (http://fac.hsu.edu/bucknej/Trumpet%20Faculty/Buckner's%20Teachers/Luther_Didrickson.htm).

Dillard, William ("Bill") (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, July 20, 1911; d. Elmhurst, New York, Feb. 12, 1995). American trumpeter. In the early 1920s, Dillard was given a bugle (with no mouthpiece) and learned to play it. His father gave him a cornet at the age of twelve. Dillard studied under Clarence Smith.

In 1929, Dillard moved to New York and toured and recorded with Jelly Roll Morton. He also recorded with King Oliver, played on and off with Bingie Madison in 1930, and with Luis Russell in 1931-32. He recorded with Spike Hughes and Benny Carter in 1933, and toured Europe with Lucky Millinder in 1934. From 1934 to 1938, he played trumpet and sang with Teddy Hill's band, and he recorded with Dickie Wells in Paris (1937). Dillard later performed with Coleman Hawkins (1939), Louis Armstrong (1940), and Red Norvo (1942-43). During those years, Dillard was a good lead trumpet player, even giving advice to Dizzy Gillespie.

Beginning in 1943, Dillard became mostly an actor and singer in Broadway shows such as Carmen Jones, Anna Lucasta, Memphis Bound, and Beggar's Holiday. He toured France in 1949 with Leadbelly and continued working on Broadway in Regina, Lost in the Stars, Green Pastures, A Temporary Island, and My Darling Aida. He was a regular on the television soap opera Love of Life (playing Joe the bartender) and appeared on several television shows during the 1950s and '60s. He also recorded (on trumpet) with Earle Warren in 1974.

During the 1970s, Dillard starred in the musical revue One Mo' Time, where he sang and played trumpet. Some of his best recordings (featuring trumpet) include Hot Club Blues (with Dickie Wells, Swing) and Symphony on Riffs (with Benny Carter, Columbia). His only solo album, with Michael Boving's Rhythmakers, was recorded at age seventy-nine, well past his prime trumpet-playing years.

Dillard and his wife Celestine had three sons, William Jr., Pierre, and Vincent. Dillard died at age eighty-three from lupus and pneumonia.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "William Dillard, 83, A Jazz Trumpeter" (Obituaries, www.nytimes.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Group photo: Luis Russell's Orchestra with J. Archey, B. Coleman, L. Russell, B. Dillard, W. Johnson, Red Allen, P. Barbarin, A. Nicholas, Pops Foster, Moon Jones, and Greely.

Dilley, Harry (b. c1914). British trumpeter. Dilley played in the P.&S. Band conducted by Eric Ball (almost ten years), Irish Guards conducted by Willcocks (World War II), Van Damm's Orchestra (at the Golders Green Hippodrome), and Royal Philharmonic conducted by Thomas Beecham (1950, American tour).

Dilley is mostly known as the former principal trumpet of the Orchestra of the Royal Opera House at Covent Garden (1947-58). He recorded "Let the Bright Seraphim" from Handel's Samson oratorio with Dame Joan Sutherland and the Covent Garden orchestra for the Decca label (1960). He also recorded 78-rpm discs with various brass bands or piano accompaniment (1939-41). He was highly respected for his beautiful and large tone.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Principals of the Orchestra of the Royal Opera House, Covent Garden" (www.trumpetherald.com).

Dillon, [George] Burnette (b. Los Angeles, California, Jan. 29, 1944). American trumpeter and conductor. Dillon grew up in Los Angeles and began playing trumpet at age eleven. For two years in high school, he studied with Lester Remsen, graduating from South Gate High School in 1961. He attended Long Beach State University (now California State University-Long Beach) where he earned a bachelor of arts degree in music in 1966. He then taught high school band in the public schools of Rock Rapids, Iowa for a year and a half, but returned to California as a graduate trumpet assistant and band director at Fresno State University, where he received a master of music degree in 1968. From 1968 to 1970, he was band director at Palmdale High School in Palmdale, California.

Dillon accepted a position as band director and trumpet professor at the University of Oregon in 1970. In 1975, he moved back to Los Angeles as a freelance and studio musician, performing a myriad of movie soundtracks including Death to Smoochy, A Bug's Life, Dracula 2000, Little Nicky, Men in Black, Dinosaur, Hook, Jurassic Park, Waterworld, The Grand Canyon, Smile, Matrix Revolution, and many more. Television credits include Murder She Wrote, Jag, Deep Space Nine, Warner Bros. cartoons, and many others. He was principal trumpet of the Pasadena Symphony, Pacific Symphony Orchestra, the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, Los Angeles Music Center Opera Orchestra, Orange County Opera Pacific, American Ballet Theater, and Joffrey Ballet Orchestra. While working on a DMA at the University of Southern California, Dillon studied with John Clyman. However, his busy performing schedule did not allow him to complete the doctorate until 2005, several years after retiring to Oregon in 2002.

Dillon has been married to flutist Louise Di Tullio since 2002. He is stepfather to her two sons, and has two daughters from a previous marriage. He received the Distinguished Artist Award in 1996 from the School of Music at California State University-Long Beach, and became conductor of the Eugene Symphonic Band in 2009. He has been a volunteer fireman for McKenzie Fire and Rescue since 2005, and enjoys woodworking as a hobby.

Bibl.: "Burnette Dillon" (http://music.uoregon.edu/people/timeline.htm); personal interview, Aug. 2, 2011.

DiLorenzo, Anthony ("Tony") (b. c1963). American trumpeter and composer. DiLorenzo grew up in Stoughton, Massachusetts. He began his trumpet studies in Boston with Peter Chapman and Roger Voisin, and attended the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia, earning a bachelor of music degree under Frank Kaderabek. He won student concerto competitions with the New York Philharmonic and Boston Symphony Orchestra, and in addition to soloing with these two orchestras, also performed as soloist with the Boston Pops.

DiLorenzo was principal trumpet of the New World Symphony in Florida, and around 1986 or 1987 moved to Salt Lake City where he soon became a member of the Utah Symphony Orchestra. He recorded numerous movie soundtracks including 101 Dalmations, Forest Gump, Toy Story, and Crimson Tide. He was also a member of the Philadelphia Orchestra (second trumpet) and the Santa Fe Opera orchestra.

As an Emmy Award-winning composer, DiLorenzo has written numerous works for brass quintet, various solo instruments, and orchestra. His works have been performed and recorded by the San Francisco Symphony, Colorado Symphony, Utah Symphony, New World Symphony, his own Center City Brass Quintet, and Proteus 7 (a mixed ensemble).

Bibl.: "Anthony DiLorenzo" (www.centercitybrassquintet.com/tony.html).

DiMartino, Vincent (b. Amityville, Long Island, New York, July 23, 1948). American trumpeter. DiMartino is known throughout the world as an outstanding and versatile trumpet performer. His parents were Marie and Andrew DiMartino; his mother was a stay-at-home mom, and his father worked for Lockheed Aircraft for most of his career. DiMartino grew up in West Babylon, New York, and graduated from West Babylon High School in 1966. His first trumpet teacher was his school band director, Edward DeIulio (1962-66).

DiMartino attended the Eastman School of Music from 1966 to 1970 under Sidney Mear, where he earned a bachelor of music education degree. He also learned a great deal from performing with Daniel Patrylak. He returned to Eastman in 1977-78, receiving a master of music degree in jazz and contemporary media. Between degrees, he taught at the University of Kentucky (1972-93) where he eventually became the Alumni Distinguished Professor of Trumpet. In 1993, he accepted a position as the first Distinguished Artist-in-Residence at Centre College in Danville, Kentucky. His duties there were similar to those he had had at the University of Kentucky—teaching trumpet and directing jazz ensembles. He retired in 2012 from his long-time position (since 1996) as the Matton Professor of Trumpet at Centre College. During the 2000-01 academic year, DiMartino was a distinguished guest professor at East Carolina University.

During his illustrious career, Vincent DiMartino has played as a member of the jazz bands of Lionel Hampton, Chuck Mangione, Clark Terry (European tour), and the Eastman Arranger's Holiday Orchestra (as a lead trumpet). He has also performed with Pearl Bailey, Doc Severinsen, Henry Mancini, Dave Brubeck, Louie Bellson, Stan Getz, and Dizzy Gillespie. As a soloist, he has appeared with the New Sousa Band, Advocate Brass Band, Brass Band of Battle Creek, Cincinnati Pops Orchestra, Buffalo Philharmonic, Santa Fe Chamber Orchestra, Baton Rouge Symphony, Boston Pops, Orlando Symphony, US Army Blues, US Army Band, Canadian Brass, The United States Marine Band, and over two hundred other ensembles.

DiMartino is featured on numerous recordings including Trumpet Summit (Summit Records) with Bobby Shew and Allen Vizzutti, and a trumpet and organ CD titled Orchestral Music for Trumpet and Organ with Schuyler Robinson. He has also recorded three CDs of standard and new literature with The Syracuse University Wind Ensemble. He has performed at numerous brass conferences around the world, and has taught at the Empire Brass-Tanglewood Program, The Spanish Brass Festival in Spain, the Skidmore Jazz Festival (1988-2002), and the Kalavrita Brass Course in Greece. He has served as chair of the board of directors of the National Trumpet Competition, and has been president of the International Trumpet Guild during two terms, 1987-89 and 2001-03. In addition to hosting the 1982 ITG Conference at the University of Kentucky, DiMartino was also named the 2004 CASE Professor of the Year for the State of Kentucky. Vince DiMartino was given The Kentucky Governor's Artist of the Year 2008 Award. He received the International Trumpet Guild's Award of Merit for lifetime achievement in 2003.

DiMartino is married to Patti Powell, the vice president of Stuart Powell Ford-Lincoln-Mercury and Mazda in Danville, Kentucky. He has three children—Gabriel (himself a noted trumpet player), Kathryn, and Erica.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Vincent DiMartino" (www.trumpetguild.org/2002conference/bios/html); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. Excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008); "Vincent DiMartino" (www.centre.edu); Byrd, Richard. "A Tribute to Vince DiMartino at the Great American Brass Band Festival," (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2013); personal interview, Jan. 20, 2010.

Dissenha, Fernando Luis (b. São José dos Pinhais, Brazil, Jan. 16, 1968). Brazilian trumpeter. Dissenha studied with Pedro Vital in Brazil, and earned a bachelor of music degree, studying with Antônio Aparício Guimarães at the Paraná School of Music and Fine Arts. He also studied with Edgar Batista del Santos in São Paulo. He received a scholarship to study at the University of Hartford in 1991, and from 1992 to 1996 studied with Chris Gekker and Mark Gould at The Juilliard School in New York City, where he received a master of music degree and won the annual concerto competition. He performed Hummel's Concerto with the New York String Orchestra at Carnegie Hall.

Dissenha has performed with the American Brass Quintet and the São Paulo Brass Quintet. Since 1997, he has been principal trumpet of the São Paulo State Symphony Orchestra, which has toured a great deal throughout the world. He is said to have been the first trumpeter in Brazil to play Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto. He teaches at Tom Jobim's Music Studio Center, Cantareira University, and the Paraná School of Music and Fine Arts. His 2003 solo CD is with pianist Carlos Carambola Assisi.

Dissenha published a trumpet book through Vitale Brothers in 2008. He, his wife, and daughter reside in Partridges. His hobbies include watching television and sports.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Fernando Dissenha" (http://pt.wikipedia.org/wiki/Fernando_Dissenha); Fernando Dissenha's official website: www.dissenha.com.

Distin, Henry (b. London, England, July 22, 1819; d. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Oct. 9 or 11, 1903). English cornetist and manufacturer. Distin was the second of four sons born to the well-known English instrument maker, John Henry Distin (1798-1863). John and his sons formed the Distin and Sons [Brass] Quintet that toured for twenty-two years, performing over ten thousand concerts in Europe and the United States as advertisement for Sax instruments. John Distin's agreement for distribution of Sax products began in 1846, and continued until 1853. John had begun making his own brass instruments around 1845, and launched his product line in 1850. This, no doubt, caused Sax to end his agreement in 1853.

Henry Distin took over control of the Distin company in 1849, making the company very successful. However, in 1868 he decided to sell the company to Boosey & Company (today Boosey & Hawkes). In 1878, he moved to New York and opened The Henry Distin Company and began producing high quality valve cornets and other brass instruments. The company was moved to Philadelphia around 1880. Henry Distin awarded then nineteen-year-old Herbert L. Clarke a "baby cornet" (pocket cornet) in B-flat as a unique trophy for winning a cornet solo contest in Evansville, Indiana, in 1886.

Henry Distin moved his company to Williamsport, Pennsylvania, in 1890, and renamed it The Henry Distin Manufacturing Company. He soon retired from running the company, and hired a manager named Brua C. Keefer Jr., the son of a major stockholder in the firm, to oversee the manufacturing operations. In 1909, the Distin Company was sold to Keefer who renamed it The Brua C. Keefer Manufacturing Company and continued its operation until 1942.

Henry Distin's companies belonged to the leading manufacturers of cornets and brass instruments in the United States from 1880 to 1909. (Keefer instruments were also excellent.)

Bibl.: Bate, Philip. The Trumpet and Trombone (W. W. Norton); "Henry Distin" (www.musictrader.com); "Vintage Cornets" (www.vintagecornets.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Distin, John Henry (b. Plympton, Devonshire, England, Jan. 14, 1794; d. Great Newport, England, July 8, 1863). English cornetist and brass instrument maker. As a boy, Distin was a gifted musician who could play a variety of instruments. He was a band boy for the South Devon Militia, and became a leading player of the English slide trumpet. Critics wrote that in his prime Distin's slide trumpet playing was second only to that of Thomas Harper Sr.

Some accounts, mostly from his son Henry, claim that John Distin was the inventor of the keyed bugle. However, patent dates preceding these claims prove that the instrument was previously invented by Joseph Haliday of Ireland. Nonetheless, John Distin did in fact become a leading player of the keyed bugle, joining the Grenadier Guards as a keyed bugler in 1815. He was later a trumpeter in George IV's private band and a bandmaster to the Marquis of Bredalbane.

John Distin owned a family of brass instruments custom made by Adolphe Sax. He formed the Distin & Sons [Brass] Quintet that included his wife on piano plus sons George (d. 1848), Henry (b. 1819), William (d. 1884), and Theodore (1923-1893). In 1837, they embarked on an eighteen-year tour of Europe and America, performing at all of the major cities and in the finest halls. John's favorite cornet solo was The Soldiers Tired. In total, over ten thousand concerts were performed! This series of concerts brought them much fame and a great deal of interest in chromatic brass instruments. They became distributors of Sax instruments in England starting in 1846, and continued this distribution until 1853.

John Henry Distin & Sons began manufacturing brass instruments in England during the year 1850. The reputation and legacy of the company were continued by Henry, John's second son.

Bibl.: Bate, Philip. The Trumpet and Trombone (W. W. Norton); Eliason, Robert E. Keyed Bugles in the United States (Smithsonian Institution Press); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008)

Dittmann, Jochen (b. Hamburg, Germany, Nov. 13, 1960). German trumpeter. After being given a trumpet by one of his uncles, Dittmann studied with Raffael Benner from 1972 to 1977, and with Peter Kallensee from 1982 to 1985. He also studied with Horst-Dieter Bolz in Trossingen and Klaus Schuhwerk in Frankfurt. He was a member of the German Youth Philharmonic, and from April 1985 to October 1986 was second trumpet of the Hamburg State Opera Orchestra.

Dittmann has served as principal trumpet of the North German Radio Symphony Orchestra, German Symphony Orchestra of Berlin, Bamberg Symphony Orchestra, and the Munich Philharmonic. Since 1982, he has been a member of the Matthias Höfs Trumpet Trio. He is currently principal trumpet of the Lower Saxony State Orchestra in Hannover, and is a member of the Trompetengruppe der Hamburger Oper.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

DiVall, Robert ("Bob") L. (b. Los Angeles, California, Aug. 19, 1921; d. Los Angeles, California, June 17, 1993). DiVall spent his entire life in Los Angeles. After graduating from Fairfax High School, he attended the University of California-Los Angeles (UCLA), earning bachelor's and master's degrees in music. At the age of thirty, he became principal trumpet of the Los Angeles Philharmonic (1951-72), and was an active studio player. He became coprincipal of the LAP with Thomas Stevens in 1972, until he resigned from the orchestra in 1982.

DiVall made dozens of recordings with the Los Angeles Philharmonic. He can also be heard on numerous soundtracks for television (such as the solo trumpet theme for Dynasty) and film (including the original Rocky, Indiana Jones and the Last Crusade, and Red Dawn, just to name a few). DiVall was also an excellent teacher who taught at UCLA for several years.

A humble and kind man, DiVall was a highly respected person and musician. His colleague, principal trombonist Ralph Sauer, said of him, Bob DiVall was a fine gentleman with unbelievable accuracy, a sweet, lyrical style, and he NEVER forced—all qualities to strive for. Fellow studio trumpeter, Malcolm McNab, said of DiVall, I grew up in Los Angeles and as my interest in orchestral music developed, naturally I went to hear the L.A. Philharmonic at the auditorium and at the Hollywood Bowl. There I heard the orchestral repertoire for the first time. Bob was the first trumpet and always sounded so beautiful on everything. He made it sound easy! After he retired from the orchestra, it was my good fortune to sit beside him a lot over the next ten years in the studios. Imagine how I felt sitting there next to this man of impeccable taste, both musically and personally. I never heard him say an unkind word about anyone in all the time I knew him. Bob DiVall was a class act!

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Robert DiVall" (www.trumpetherald.com); "Robert DiVall" (www.malcolmmcnab.com/bob.html).

Divers, Timothy ("Tim") Charles (b. c1965). American trumpeter.

Divers graduated from the University of Southern California, and began his freelance career in 1987. He has performed with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, Pacific Symphony Orchestra, and Bolshoi Ballet Orchestra (of Orange County, California), and is currently the principal trumpet of the Glendale Symphony Orchestra and a member of the Asia American Symphony Orchestra. He has recorded numerous television and movie soundtracks.

Divers has been an active teacher for many years, teaching private lessons and serving on the faculties of the Old Town Conservatory of Music and the Pasadena City College After School Music Conservatory. He is currently teaching at Occidental College and Glendale City College.

Bibl.: "Timothy Divers" (www.glendalesymphony.org/musicians_pages/musicians_divers.htm).

Dixon, William ("Bill") Robert (b. Nantucket, Massachusetts, Oct. 5, 1925; d. North Bennington, Vermont, June 16, 2010). American trumpeter, flugelhornist, composer, and visual artist. Few trumpeters have had the impact on the world of music as has Bill Dixon. Born to William LeRoy Dixon and Louise Wade, Bill was the oldest of five children. His family moved a few times during his childhood, but settled in Harlem, New York. In 1934, he heard Louis Armstrong in concert and immediately became attracted to the trumpet. He attended Louis D. Brandeis High School, originally called The High School of Commerce, in Manhattan where he studied to become a visual artist. In pursuit of a career as a painter, Dixon attended Boston University and the WPA Arts School, and studied under the Art Students League. He also played some clarinet in school.

Dixon enlisted in the US Army from 1944 to 1946, and was stationed in Germany towards the end of World War II. After being released from the military at age twenty-one, he purchased a trumpet for the first time and began his bachelor of music degree at the Hartnette

Conservatory (1946-51) under the G.I. Bill of Rights. He met Cecil Taylor in 1951, a like-minded free jazz musician. Dixon freelanced in New York for a few years, but held day jobs doing any manner of work available. In 1954, he accepted a yearlong position with the Tommy Roberts Band in Alaska. From 1956 to 1962, he was an international civil servant at the United Nations. This led to his founding of the U. N. Jazz Society.

After leaving the United Nations in 1962 to devote full time to performing, composing, and painting, Dixon co-led a group with Archie Shepp. They regularly performed at the Savoy Ballroom and recorded several albums together. In 1963, Dixon became a member of the New York Contemporary Five, and in 1964 he produced the six "October Revolution" concerts at New York's Cellar Café. These historic concerts provided a significant musical outlet for twenty avant-garde groups that included Sun Ra, Paul Bley, Roswell Rudd, and others. At that same time, Dixon helped establish the Jazz Composers' Guild and orchestra.

Bill Dixon released several solo albums during the 1960s and early 1980s. Much of his work, however, was done in near isolation. He worked with dancer Judith Dunn from 1965 to 1975, taught at The Ohio State University in 1966, was a professor of jazz at Columbia University (1967-70), and in late 1967 formed the Free Conservatory of the University of the Streets program that was for New York's urban youth. He began his long career as a teacher at Bennington College in Vermont in 1968, and established the Black Music Division there in 1973. Among his pupils are Art Brooks and Mark Levin.

Bill Dixon's many albums include Intents and Purposes (RCA), Conquistador (Blue Note, with Cecil Taylor), Bill Dixon In Italy, Vols. 1-2 (Soul Note), November 1981 (Soul Note), Thoughts (Soul Note), Sons of Sisyphus (Soul Note), Vade Mecum, Vols. 1-2 (Soul Note), Bill Dixon Collection (Cadence), Bill Dixon with the Exploding Star Orchestra (Thrill Jockey), Tapestries for Small Orchestra (Firehouse 12), and Odyssey (Archive Editions). He is also one of four free jazz musicians to be documented in the Canadian film, Imagine the Sound. In addition, Dixon is the subject of the book, Dixonia, by Ben Young (Greenwood Press).

Bill Dixon's flugelhorn sound was dark and thoughtful. He was a true innovator who received the Jazz Pioneer Award in 1984. He died in his sleep on June 16, 2010 after suffering from an undisclosed illness. He was eighty-four years old. Dixon was survived by Sharon Vogel, his lifelong partner, and their children Claudia and William Robert II.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Young, Ben. Dixonia (Greenwood Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bill Dixon" (www.jazz.com); "Bill Dixon" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Dobrzelewski, Jean-Christophe ("J.C.") [Jan Krzysztof] (b. San Jose, Costa Rica, Sept. 22, 1978). Naturalized American trumpeter. Dobrzelewski's father is the well-known violinist and conductor, Jan Dobrzelewski (b. 1951). When Jean-Christophe was a baby, the family moved to Mexico City, and then, when J.C. was five, to Neuchâtel, Switzerland. He later attended school at the Gymnase Numa-Droz (high school), and graduated in 1996. His first trumpet teachers were Jean-François Bourquin and Jean-François Michel.

Dobrzelewski received his bachelor of music degree in 2000 at the Conservatoire Regional de Musique de Rueil-Malmaison where he studied with professor Eric Aubier. He was a prizewinner in the 1999 Selmer Trumpet Solo Competition in France. From 2000 to 2002, he studied with Joshua Whitehouse at the University of Maine in Orono where he earned a master's degree in trumpet performance. He then entered the doctoral program at Arizona State University where he studied with David Hickman and served as a graduate teaching assistant for two years. Additionally, he has studied with Emery Harvison, Max Sommerhalder, Samuel Pilafian, Wolfgang Bauer, and Guy Touvron.

After completion of his DMA degree in 2004, Dobrzelewski accepted a position as coprincipal trumpet of the Midland-Odessa Symphony Orchestra. He also played in the Lone Star Brass and taught in the local public schools as a trumpet specialist. He founded the West Texas Brass Project, an annual event bringing many of the area's finest young brass players together into a large brass/trumpet ensemble that tours the region.

After two years in Texas, Dobrzelewski became professor of trumpet at West Chester University of Pennsylvania, a position he still holds. He is an active freelance performer in the Philadelphia area, and hosts the annual International Trumpet Festival at WCU, which began in 2004. In addition, he is a founding member of Tromba Mundi, a professional trumpet ensemble consisting of several of the finest player-teachers of the east coast and midwest. He also hosted the 2012 Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition at WCU, and is scheduled to host the 2014 ITG Conference in Philadelphia.

Dobrzelewski has released four solo CDs for the MSR and AMIE labels, as well as a CD with Tromba Mundi on MSR. He is the editor of a sixteen-volume set of orchestral trumpet excerpt books entitled Essential Orchestral Excerpts for Trumpet (Hickman Music Editions), which have become popular study material for trumpeters.

Dobrzelewski and his wife Katrina, a flutist and early childhood music specialist, have four children: Gabriel, Ella, Matteo, and Liam. Dobrzelewski's hobbies include coaching soccer, scuba diving, and skiing.

Bibl.: "Faculty Profile: Jean-Christophe Dobrzelewski" (www.wcupa.edu); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, Jan. 2, 2010.

Docksey, F[rank] Joseph III ("Joe") (b. East Lansing, Michigan, July 29, 1947). American trumpeter. Docksey grew up in East Lansing, Michigan. He began playing trumpet at age nine and studied with A. Keith Amstutz and Byron Autrey while attending East Lansing High School, graduating in 1965. He earned a bachelor of music degree studying with Autrey at Michigan State University in 1969, and graduated with honors in performance and education. For the next three years, Docksey served in the Army, playing in the US Military Academy band at West Point. While there, he studied with John Ware, associate principal of the New York Philharmonic. Docksey then earned a master of arts degree at the University of Denver in 1974, studying with Legh Burns and Gerald Endsley. At DU, he was a graduate trumpet teaching assistant, and minored in conducting.

Docksey's first fulltime teaching position was at North Dakota State University from 1974 to 1977 where he taught trumpet, horn, theory, and was assistant director of bands. From 1977 to 1985, he was the trumpet professor and conductor of the Lamont Wind Ensemble at DU, and served as chair of the woodwind, brass, and percussion departments. From 1985 to 1988, he was assistant director of the Lamont School of Music at DU (and wind ensemble conductor), and from 1988 to 2011 was the director of the Lamont School of Music. He oversaw the design and construction of the $70 million Newman Center for the Performing Arts at DU (completed in 2003), and retired in August of 2011.

An active performer, Docksey has been a member of the Aries Brass Quintet (1978-present), The Denver Brass (1983-present), Denver Chamber Orchestra (principal trumpet, 1988-95), Central City Opera Orchestra (principal trumpet, 1974-84), and Colorado Ballet Orchestra (principal trumpet, 1982-92). He has also performed with, and guest conducted, the Summit Brass during annual Rafael Méndez Brass Institutes held at DU (since 2007). He has recorded seven CDs with the Aries Brass Quintet, nineteen with The Denver Brass, and performed on several other recordings.

Docksey and his wife Nancy have been married since 1972 and have three children: Sara (b. 1977), Tracy (b. 1979), and Frank Joseph Docksey IV (b. 1982). His hobbies include horses and pet cats, as well as off-roading with his Hummer H3 SUV.

Bibl.: "Curriculum Vita" (provided by Joseph Docksey); personal interview, Aug. 2, 2012.

Doest, Jason ("Jas") (b. 1919; d. Dec. 4, 2009). Dutch trumpeter. Although Henri Tomasi's famous trumpet concerto was dedicated to the French trumpeter Ludovic Vaillant, it was Doest who first performed the work under the baton of the composer in 1948 in the city of Hilversum, the Netherlands. Doest was the principal of the Netherlands Philharmonic Orchestra. He was married to Lien Sevenstern, the sister of trumpeter Harry Sevenstern, who was a colleague in the trumpet section. Doest recorded Vivaldi's Concerto for Two Trumpets with Jan Hagemeyer and the Netherlands Kantorei Orchestra conducted by Maarten Kooy (Saga label). His son, Kees Doest, was his student, and played in the Radio Chamber Orchestra in Hilversum.

Sources: Michel Laplace and Freddy Grin.

Dokshitser [Dokshizer], Timofei [Alexandrovich] (b. Niezhin, Ukrane, Dec. 13, 1921; d. Vilnius, Lithuania, Mar. 16, 2005). Ukrainian trumpeter. Dokshitser was one of the giants of the trumpet and music world. His artistry and popularity rivaled that of Maurice André and Louis Armstrong, and his playing style was extremely brilliant and distinct. He was a complete virtuoso who played not only with the technique and flair of the great violinists, but with the musical passion of an operatic tenor.

Dokshitser's ancestry can be traced back to a Jewish family in the village of Dok Shitzi (Byelorussia), which is the origin of the name. The transliteration of Dokshitser's name from the Cyrillic varies from country to country. The correct English transliteration of his name is Timofei Dokshitser, which is the way it was listed on the covers and sleeve notes of his Melodiya LPs. The artist himself, who didn't speak English, but did speak a little German, handwrote his name as Timofey Dokschizer (a mix of English and German), so his own spelling could be a good choice to respect his memory. In her translation of his memoirs (published by the International Trumpet Guild), Olga Braslavsky incorrectly transliterated his name as Timofei Dokshizer, with the result that that spelling is now in common usage. In this biography, the correct English transliteration will be used.

At the end of the eighteenth century, the family established itself in Nezhin, Ukraine. Dokshitser was named after his grandfather, Teviyer (Tevel) Shevelevich, but he became known as Timofei (Timothei) when he was ten years old. He grew up in a musical family: his father, Alexander Tevelevich, was a violinist, trumpeter, composer (mostly for silent movies), and conductor (cofounded an orchestra in Nezhin); his three uncles were also musicians; and his brother Vladimir became a trumpeter, studying at the Gnesin Institute of Music with Ivan Vasileysky (1958) and at the Moscow Conservatory with Georgy Orvid, and making a career playing in light music orchestras.

Life in the little town of Nezhin was difficult, and became worse when the New Economic Policy was decreed throughout Russia during the 1920s. The Dokshitser family became poor, and the entire city suffered from famine. So when Timofei was a boy of eleven, the Dokshitser family moved to Moscow, and lived with his father's sister and family. It was very crowded; at night a sheet was hung across the main living room to separate the two families.

Shortly after arriving in Moscow, Dokshitser was sent to a military music school where he learned to play the cornet in the 62nd Cavalry Regiment orchestra (1932-33). His first teacher was Ivan Antonovich Vaselevsky [Vasilyevsky], with whom he studied with for three years. After his military training, Dokshitser attended the Gnesin Institute of Music where he studied with the great trumpeter Mikhail Tabakov for eight years. Dokshitser progressed rapidly, and won third prize in the All-Union Brass Instrument Performers Competition in Moscow in February of 1941 at age nineteen, and first prize in the First International Youth Festival competition in Prague in 1947.

While in school, Timofei fell in love with Faina Semenovna Havkina, a soprano at the institute; they were married in 1945; their son, Sergey, born in 1948, became a professional bassoonist. They had little money and lived with Timofei's parents for a while before renting a small room in a communal apartment building. When he began performing regularly with the Bolshoi Ballet orchestra, they were given a room in the Theater House in Shepkinsky Pereulok near the theater. Unfortunately, Faina died at the young age of forty-nine. Two years later, Dokshitser and Mona Honovna Rachgus, the famous ceramic artist, were married and remained so for the rest of his life.

After graduating from Tabakov's trumpet class in 1950, Dokshitser decided to continue his studies at the Gnesin Institute where he studied conducting and harmony with Kirill Petrovich Kondrashin and Leo Moritzevich Ginsburg, graduating in 1957. For a while, Dokshitser spent as much time conducting as he did playing the trumpet, but he ultimately made the decision to specialize in performing on trumpet. He devoted all of his energies to serving as Tabakov's replacement as solo trumpet of the Bolshoi Ballet Orchestra and to developing his career as a solo artist.

Dohshitser's work as a soloist elicited over forty new trumpet compositions including those of Arutunian (Theme and Variations), Weinberg [Vaynberg], Shakhov, Peskin, Shchyolokov, Tamberg, Anfufeyer, Binkin, Gottlieb, Krasotov, Kriukov [Kryukov], Nesterov, Rauchwerger, Trotsyuk, Yurovsky, Zatin, Hidas, Meyer, Militich, Moore, and others. His numerous recordings have become a valuable resource of music seldom heard outside of the Soviet Union during his prime years.

While serving as a guest first trumpet of the Moscow Philharmonic that was allowed to tour the United States in 1965, Dokshitser became friends with Louis Davidson, then professor of trumpet at Indiana University. They began exchanging letters, music, and recordings, which led to Davidson's production of a Dokshitser LP recording of trumpet solos with piano accompaniment. Davidson's self-produced album was introduced to American trumpeters during the 1970 National Trumpet Symposium in Denver. It wasn't long before Dokshitser was an international trumpet star. In 1977, David Hickman organized Dokshitser's first U.S. tour as a soloist, in order partially to satisfy the requirements of the Soviet Ministry of Culture in allowing Dokshitser to participate in that year's International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Illinois where Hickman was teaching at the time. In the following year, the Benge Company (owned by Holton Musical Instruments) organized another U.S. solo tour for Dokshitser, and in 1995, Hickman arranged for Dokshitser to appear in Bloomington, Indiana, during the First International Brassfest.

Dokshitser was a prolific arranger who published numerous transcriptions for trumpet including Rhapsody in Blue (Gershwin) and Concerto for Trumpet, Piano and Orchestra (Shostakovich). All of his recordings were performed on the B-flat trumpet, although he occasionally used the C and piccolo B-flat trumpets in concert. He used a Bach 7E mouthpiece with his regular Benge B-flat trumpet (although he played a Selmer B-flat trumpet during his early career).

Dokshitser was a devoted educator, and taught at the Gnesin Institute of Music for decades until 1990. He recorded a clinic album in the Soviet Union (in Russian) in which he gave pedagogical advice on per-formance techniques and musical styles (Strich for Trumpet). He presented master classes around the world, and authored the books Articulations for Trumpet, Méthode de trompette (also translated into English by Wendy Thompson) and Système d'exercises complexes. Some of his leading students include Ivan Dmitriev, Mikhail Granitsky, Mikhail Khanin, Alexey Korolkov, Alexander Poteyenko, Anatoly Selianin, and Ilya Shkolnik.

Dokshitser played with the Bolshoi Ballet from 1945 to 1984. He was honored by the Soviet Union in 1959 and 1978, and was given a small one-room cottage outside of Moscow as a vacation home. He was given the Honorary Award by the International Trumpet Guild, and performed at several ITG Conferences and the 1976 International Brass Congress in Switzerland. He appeared as a soloist in over thirty countries.

In April of 1989, Dokshitser underwent a quadruple bypass heart operation. The ITG and other brass associations throughout the world helped raise funds for the costs of the operation (mostly from trumpeter and admirer Herb Alpert). He then embarked on a second career as a soloist around the world from 1990 to 1997. Dokshitser lived his last years in retirement in the city of Vilnius in western Lithuania. He wrote his autobiography in a book titled Trumpeter on Horseback (translated) that was later published by the ITG as The Memoirs of Timofei Dokshizer: An Autobiography (translated into English by Olga Braslavsky). He continued to serve as an arranger and competition judge, and often welcomed touring trumpeters such as Leonard Candelaria and David Hickman to his home in Vilnius.

"Tima" Dokshitser was a gentle and extremely polite man who was always humble despite his enormous reputation in the music world. He had a "maestoso" stage presence, definitely from the old school of performance in Russia. He was a close friend with many famous trumpet artists including Maurice André, Knud Hovaldt, Edward Tarr, Pierre Thibaud, Renold Schilke, Philip Jones, Dizzy Gillespie, Louis Davidson, Thierry Caens, Arturo Sandoval, Uan Rasey, and Vincent Cichowicz. He died on March 16, 2005 at the age of eighty-three, and was buried in Moscow.

Bibl.: Davidson, Louis. Trumpet Profiles (self-published); Dokshitser, Timofei (Eng. trans. By Olga Braslavsky). The Memoirs of Timofei Dokshizer: An Autobiography (International Trumpet Guild); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. a memoirs, a discography, excerpt on mp3, video clip).

Dolan, John (b. Schuyler Falls, New York, Jan. 27, 1875; d. Staten Island, New York, Apr. 8, 1942). American cornetist. Dolan was one of ten children in his family. At age fourteen, he ran away from home in order to join a circus as a tumbler. While with the circus, he began playing the violin, but later changed to cornet in order to play in the circus band. He was a totally self-taught musician.

Dolan served in the Army during the Spanish-American War, re-enlisted after the war ended, and played in the band on Governor's Island. He left the Army in 1902, and freelanced in New York City before joining Conway's band in 1907 as first chair and cornet soloist. His reputation quickly rose; he was the featured soloist with Conway at the San Francisco World Fair in 1915.

Beginning in 1919, Dolan was Sousa's first chair cornet and soloist. He played in Sousa's band longer than any other cornetist, with the exception of Herbert Clarke, who by this time was winding down his career. Dolan was Sousa's assistant conductor for much of the time, and got the chance to do all the conducting when Sousa broke his right arm while riding his horse. In September of 1928, Dolan and Sousa had a violent argument that led to Dolan's leaving the band for good.

Dolan was a brilliant soloist who often played up to high G in his solos. He was known for his soft tone, facile tongue, and great accuracy. He was a very shy person, had few close friends, tended to be a loner, and had a sensitive personality. According to his son, M. L. Dolan, John spent much of his time alone practicing, something that gave him great personal satisfaction.

After leaving Sousa's band, Dolan played with Barrerre's Little Symphony and several theaters in New York City, and taught in Ithaca, New York. He recorded three cornet solos with Conway's band on the Victor and Okeh labels: Fantasie on Irish Airs (arr. Dolan); My Old Kentucky Home with Variations (arr. Rollinson-Dolan); Inflammatus-Stabat Mater (Rossini, arr. Dolan, in 1916). He recorded a few more solos on Clico (Crystal Beach Polka, 1905) and Nassua labels (Anthony and Cleopatra with Orr Finne on trombone). After retiring, he continued daily practice for pleasure. He died from a heart attack in his home on Staten Island at the age of sixty-seven.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Dolk, Pieter (b. Amsterdam, Holland, June 27, 1916; d. Oct. 19, 2010). Dutch trumpeter. Dolk grew up in the Dutch town of Zwijndrecht, in a family that enjoyed music. He began his music studies on flute and piccolo, but switched to trumpet at age sixteen. In 1938, he was accepted into the Rotterdam Conservatory of Music, but World War II prevented him from completing his degree.

Dolk was arrested by Nazi soldiers on December 16, 1942 for assisting several of his Jewish music teachers and fellow musicians, and was sent to the Vught Concentration Camp in March of 1943. The commander of the camp wanted to form a small orchestra that could perform for S.S. officers and camp functions, so Dolk volunteered and was allowed a few hours of daily practice and rehearsal time away from his usual labor duties of cleaning floors and bathrooms. However, four months later, a new commander felt that the camp did not need such luxuries, and disbanded the orchestra.

Dolk was released from the Vught camp on April 12, 1944, and returned to Amsterdam where he studied trumpet with Marinus Komst, principal trumpeter of the Concertgenouw Orkest and teacher at the Amsterdam Conservatory. He soon joined the Nederlandse Opera Orchestra, the Residentie Orchestra, the Groningen Orchestra Society, known from 1961 as the Noordelijk Filharmonisch Orkest (principal trumpet from 1949 to 1981), and the Gravenhage Ensemble. He was also highly regarded as a conductor of wind bands: from 1950 to 1975 he conducted the Brass Band De Bazuin in Groningen and in 1982 was proclaimed Honorary Conductor. In addition, he was one of the first to play the Baroque trumpet (often alongside Walter Holy). Dolk performed and recorded with the Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble and the Collegium Aureum. Marius Flothuis dedicated his Aria for Trumpet and Piano, op. 18 to Dolk in 1944.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Pieter Dolk (1916-2010) Making Friends For Life at Vught" (www.wo2-muziek.nl); Annette de Klerk-Roggeveen. Pieter Dolk – trompettist: Een leven in het teken van muziek (Drieluik, Kaatsheuvel).

Dominique, Anatie ("Natty") (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Aug. 2, 1896; d. Chicago, Illinois, Aug. 30, 1982). American trumpeter. Dominique grew up in the early jazz culture of New Orleans. He was trained as a drummer, but in 1906 switched to cornet (studying with Manuel Perez). In 1913, he moved to Detroit, and then Chicago to become a jazz musician. He worked with various hotel bands led by Jimmy Noone, Johnny Dodds (1928-40), and others, but was best known for his work at the Sunset Café with Carroll Dickerson's band that included cornetist Louis Armstrong.

Heart problems around 1940 prevented Dominique from performing in his typically eccentric and flamboyant style, so he left music and took a job at Chicago's Midway Airport as a porter. By 1950, he was ready to return to playing trumpet, and formed Natty Dominique's Creole Dance Band that attained some success. He recorded with this band and others, including Jimmy Noone, Sippie Wallace, Johnny Dodds, and Jelly Roll Morton. One of these recordings is on Bill Russell's American Music label (1953).

In 1951, Dominique's band acquired a reputation for playing mostly "slow drag" tunes because his close friend and drummer, Baby Dodds (the older brother of clarinetist Johnny Dodds), had two strokes that caused him to lose his power and speed on drums, and rather than firing him, Dominique elected to mainly play slower tunes. Dominique continued to play trumpet into the 1960s, but eventually faded in popularity.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Natty Dominique" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Natty_Dominique); "Natty Dominique (www.midwayhistory.com/NattyD.html).

Donald, Barbara [Kay] (b. Minneapolis, Minnesota, Sept. 2, 1942; d. Olympia, Washington, Mar. 23, 2013). American trumpeter. Donald was born on September 2, 1942 (although some sources incorrectly list her birthday as Feb. 9) to music-loving parents. She took up the cornet in 1951, and switched to trumpet soon afterwards. Her family moved to San Diego, California in 1955. While in high school, she was denied access to the school's jazz band because she was female. This led her to form her own combo outside of school. After graduating, she went to New York but found similar difficulties. Unable to audition for big bands, she moved to Los Angeles and studied jazz under Benny Harris.

At age nineteen, Barbara Donald began her career with Dexter Gordon and Stanley Cowell. She married Norwegian pianist Olé Calmeyer, but they soon divorced. In 1963, she began playing with alto sax player Sonny Simmons, and in 1964 they were married. Both became excellent free jazz players, recorded several albums together, and moved to San Jose, California. Barbara also performed on occasion with Richard Davis, Prince Lasha, Rahsaan Roland Kirk, Pharoah Sanders, J.C. Moses, Edward Blackwell, Charlie Moffett, and John Coltrane (1966). Simmons was known for his brilliant jazz playing, and also for his moody personality. Their marriage struggled as they toured the country. However, they managed to give birth to two children, Zarak (b. 1965) and Raïsha (b. 1972). At the insistence of Barbara's parents, the Simmons-Donald family returned to San Jose in order to give their children a more stable upbringing. This left them with little musical work, and Simmons was forced to take day jobs to support the family. Frustrated with his reduced musical career, he began taking drugs around 1978 or '79, and the relationship between Simmons and Donald soon crumbled. They moved to Los Angeles in hopes of finding more playing gigs, but soon decided to return to San Jose.

By late 1979, the marriage between Donald and Simmons had collapsed. Donald moved to Olympia, Washington, and divorced Simmons in 1980. She formed a group called Unity and soon became a companion with the group's drummer, Irvin Lovilette. After Lovilette died suddenly in 1983, Donald moved to New York City where she worked with Gunter Hampel's Galaxy Band in 1984. She also kept Unity alive, performing at the 1984 Kool Jazz Festival.

Donald moved to Seattle, Washington, during the mid 1980s. Ill health took her permanently out of music in 1992. Although her career had more than its share of ups and downs, her legacy of recordings such as Olympia Live (Cadence), The Past and Tomorrow (Cadence), Barbara Donald Unity (CJR), Manhattan Egos (Arhoolie, with Sonny Simmons), Rumasuma (Contemporary, with Sonny Simmons), Staying on the Watch (ESP, with Sonny Simmons), and Music from the Spheres (ESP, with Sonny Simmons) display a fire and unique emotional verve.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott), Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Barbara Donald" (www.sonnysimmons.org/donald.htm).

Donnelly, Karen Angela (b. Regina, Saskatchewan, Canada, Oct. 2, 1966). Canadian trumpeter. Donnelly began playing the trumpet at age twelve, and earned a bachelor of music degree at the University of Regina before studying with James Thompson at McGill University in Montreal. After a successful three seasons as acting principal trumpet of the National Arts Centre Orchestra in Ottawa (1996-99), she was appointed principal in 1999.

Donnelly is a founding member of the Capital BrassWorks ensemble, and is also a member of the Rideau Lakes Brass Quintet. She coaches the trumpet section of the Ottawa Youth Orchestra and teaches as an adjunct faculty member at the University of Ottawa (since 2002). During the NACO 2006-07 season, she received a grant that enabled her to make several trips to New York City in order to study with Philip Smith, principal of the New York Philharmonic. Her solo CD is titled Gabriel's Sister (Capital BrassWorks).

Bibl.: "Karen Donnelly" (www.innercirclemanagementca); "Karen Donnelly" (www.encyclo.co.uk/define/Karen%20Donnelly); "Karen Donnelly" (http://artsalive.ca/mus/nacorchestra/bios/Karen Donnelly.html).

Dooley, James ("Jim") (b. Syracuse, New York, c1955). American trumpeter. Dooley began playing the trumpet at age ten. He studied at the Manhattan School of Music with Vincent Penzarella for five years before commencing his professional career in 1978 as a New York City freelance musician. In 1983, he was appointed principal trumpet of the San Jose Symphony in California. He has taught at San Jose State University (1986-2003), and is currently on the faculty at the University of Santa Clara. He has performed with the San Francisco Symphony on occasion, and is currently principal trumpet of Symphony Silicon Valley. He also played assistant principal of the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra in New Mexico for over twenty years, and is a member of the Bay Brass.

Bibl.: "James Dooley" (www.baybrass.org/bio_dooleyhtml).

Dorer, Robert E. (b. Mt. Clemens, Michigan, Apr. 27, 1962). American trumpeter. Dorer has held the second trumpet position of the Minnesota Orchestra since 1997. He has performed on many recordings, including the Minnesota Orchestra's highly acclaimed recording of the Beethoven Symphony cycle. He has also toured throughout the United States, Europe, and Japan with the orchestra.

Dorer grew up in Kennesaw, Georgia, and graduated from North Cobb High School in 1980. His trumpet teacher was Larry Black of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra. He attended Northwestern University, where he studied with Vincent Cichowicz from 1980 to 1984, and earned a bachelor of music degree. He then studied privately with Arnold Jacobs, Sidney Mear, and Robert Nagel. Dorer's first orchestral position was second trumpet of the Shreveport Symphony (1984-85). He was coprincipal of the Florida West Coast Symphony and the Florida Brass Quintet for five years (1986-91). He was second trumpet for one season of the New Mexico Symphony Orchestra (1991-97), before winning the principal position. He also performed with the Santa Fe Opera and the Santa Fe Pro Musica. Dorer played and taught at the Brevard Music Center in North Carolina for seven summers (1987-93). In 1997, after playing for three weeks as a guest principal of the New Zealand Symphony, he was offered the associate principal position, but soon after he won the second trumpet position of the Minnesota Orchestra, and chose instead to join it. An avid chamber musician, Dorer has performed at several Sommerfest events and in the Minnesota Orchestra's chamber series at the MacPhail School of Music. As a soloist, he has appeared with orchestras in Florida, New Mexico, North Carolina, and Minnesota. At Vincent Cichowicz's recommendation, Dorer was interviewed for the book Back to Basics, an analysis of Cichowicz's teaching method, by Luis Loubriel.

Dorer enjoys trumpet repair, snorkeling, hiking, biking, and coaching his children's soccer teams. His son, Ethan (b. 1997), plays the cello and piano, and his daughter, Jenna (b. 1999), plays clarinet and piano. His wife, Sally Gibson Dorer, is assistant principal cello of the Minnesota Opera Orchestra, and a substitute cellist with the Minnesota Orchestra and the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra.

Bibl.: Greig, Murray. "The Minnesota Orchestra Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2006); Minnesota Orchestra website (www.minnesotaorchestra.org); personal interview, Mar. 28, 2010.

Dorham, McKinley ("Kenny") Howard (b. Fairfield, Texas, Aug. 30, 1924; d. New York, New York, Dec. 5, 1972). American trumpeter. Dorham began playing piano at the age of seven, and the trumpet while in high school. After graduation, he went to pharmacy school while playing in the Wiley College dance band. He served in the Army from 1942 to 1943, and then played with Russell Jacquet.

After moving to New York City in the mid 1940s, Dorham worked with Dizzy Gillespie's big band in 1945 and recorded some with the Bebop Boys in 1946. He played in Billy Eckstine's orchestra in 1946, Lionel Hampton in 1947, Mercer Ellington in 1948, and replaced Miles Davis in Charlie Parker's Quintet in December of 1948. With Parker, Dorham took part in the historical Paris Jazz Festival in 1949.

During the 1950s, Dorham was a freelance performer in New York. He was a charter member of the Jazz Messengers in 1954, and led his own recording dates. He was leader of the Jazz Prophets in 1955 before playing in Max Roach's Quintet (replacing Clifford Brown who died in a car accident) from 1956 to 1958. After 1958, Dorham was mainly a bandleader, recording for labels such as Riverside, New Jazz, Time, and Blue Note. He taught at the Lenox School of Music in 1958 and appears in the 1959 film, Les Liaisons Dangereuses (but it is Lee Morgan who plays on the soundtrack).

Dorham reached his peak in the early 1960s, and his health started to decline in the mid 1960s. He soon gave up playing, and to earn a living, worked in a post office. He also wrote humorous and critical reviews for Downbeat magazine. He died at the age of forty-eight due to a disease of the kidneys.

Dorham composed several standard jazz tunes including Blue Bossa, Una Mas, Lotus Blossom, Minor Holiday, and Prince Albert. His albums include Kenny Dorham Quintet (Original Jazz Classics), Afro-Cuban (Blue Note), Una Mas (Blue Note), Showboat (Bainbridge), Whistle Stop (Blue Note), Blue Spring (Original Jazz Classics), Matador/Inta Sometin' (Blue Note), and Jazz Contrasts (Original Jazz Classics). Dorham is considered a model of bop trumpet playing.

Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Dorian, Patrick ("Pat") C. (b. Montreal, Quebec, Canada, Mar. 22, 1956). Canadian-born American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Dorian was adopted by a couple in the United States in 1958, and became a naturalized US citizen in 1961. He began playing trumpet soon afterward, and studied with Valerian LaGueux from 1968 to 1974. He earned bachelor of music and bachelor of music education degrees at Ithaca College in 1978, having studied with James Ode from 1974 to 1978, and Herbert Mueller from 1977 to 1978. He then attended Northwestern University, studying with Vincent Cichowicz and Luther Didrickson, and receiving a master of music degree in 1979. He also studied in New York City with Carmine Caruso (1981-87) and Jerome Callet (1985-89).

Dorian began his career as an instrumental music teacher in the East Stroudsburg Area School District in Pennsylvania (1980-89) and Pocono Mountain Area School District (1989-94), and taught part-time at nearby colleges and universities (evenings) from 1986 to 1994. He joined the music faculty at East Stroudsburg University of Pennsylvania in 1987, where he has served in various capacities including director of jazz studies, director of bands, and professor of film music. As a performer, he is a member of the Phil Woods Big Band, David Liebman Big Band, Jazz Artists Repertory Orchestra, and the Water Gap Brass. He has toured internationally, performing at major jazz festivals and recording on two Grammy-nominated CDs: Celebration! (1997) and Beyond the Line (2003). Dorian contributed two chapters and four interviews to the book Portrait of Bill Chase by Jim Szantor with Tommy Martin (Great-Music Publishing, 2007). His transcription and analysis of a 1992 lecture by Freddie Hubbard at ESU was published in 2012 in The Note by the Al Cohn Memorial Jazz Collection in ESU's Kemp Library.

Among Dorian's many awards are the Great Teacher Award by the ESU Alumni Association (2007), Ralph Vitello Award for Disability Services at ESU (2009), and the Fred Waring Award for Outstanding Contributions to the Arts and the Community. In 2010, he was awarded ESU's highest faculty honor, the pre-eminent rank of Distinguished Professor of Music.

Dorian and his wife Mary, a technical editor, were married in 1982. His hobbies include humor, film music, and dining at interesting restaurants.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Patrick Dorian" (www.esu.edu/~pdorian/dorianshortbio.html); personal interview, Apr. 21, 2012.

Dörner, Axel (b. Cologne, Germany, Apr. 26, 1964). German trumpeter and composer. Dörner's first instrument was the piano, an instrument he studied at the Arnhem Conservatory in the Netherlands from 1988 to 1989, and in Cologne from 1989 to 1996. In 1991, he also began to play trumpet, studying with Jon Eardley and Malte Burba until 1994. He played trumpet in a group he formed with Bruno Leicht called The Streetfighters Duo, which later expanded to The Streetfighters Quartet, and then to The Streetfighters Double Quartet. He also formed his own group called the Axel Dörner Quartet.

Dörner moved to Berlin in 1994 where he developed his jazz skills on trumpet, performing with numerous duos, and with the Aki Takase Sextet, Butch Morris's Berlin Skyscraper, Chris Burns's Ensemble, Hedros, the London Jazz Composers Orchestra, Lines, Alexander von Schlippenbach, Sam Rivers, George Lewis, Evan Parker, and other groups. His improvisations and compositions are quite avant-garde, and he often performs on a three-valve trumpet with a trombone-like slide. He played on over one hundred recordings for the FMP, Two Nineteen, Okka, Meniscus, Hatology, JazzHaus, and other labels. He has toured Europe, North America, South America, Australia, and Japan with various groups.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Axel Dörner" (www.efi.group.shef.ac.uk/musician/mdorner.html).

Dörpholz, Florian (b. Karlsruhe, Germany, Dec. 30, 1978). German trumpeter. Dörpholz began playing the trumpet at age nine while living in Lima, Peru. From 1992 to 1996, he studied with Christian Goetting at the Baden Karlsruhe Conservatory, and from 1996 to 1999 studied with Reinhold Friedrich at the Musikhochschule Karlsruhe. Between 1999 and 2001, he also studied there with Friedrich and Edward H. Tarr.

In 2000, Dörpholz accepted a one-year position as assistant principal trumpet of the State Rheinisch Philharmonic in Koblenz. From late 2000 until July of 2001, he was assistant principal of the National Theater Orchestra in Mannheim, and from 2001 to 2002 was principal of the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra. Since January of 2003, he has served as principal of the Berlin Radio Symphony Orchestra, and currently plays with the Genesis Brass ensemble.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Dotson, Dennis (b. Jacksonville, Texas, June 28, 1946). American trumpeter. Dotson attended Sam Houston State Teachers College from 1963 to 1968, while beginning a professional freelance career in 1965. He played in Houston, Las Vegas, and New York City with numerous big bands including those of Buddy Rich (three years), Bobby Shew, Carl Fontana, Kenny Wheeler, and Tom Harrell. He has performed with over thirty Broadway shows, and has backed dozens of celebrity entertainers. He has performed at eighteen jazz festivals worldwide and recorded with artists including Stan Getz, Frank Rosolino, Buddy Rich, Woody Herman, David "Fathead" Newman, Joe Lovano, Joe Henderson, and Marvin Stamm.

Dotson taught jazz trumpet lessons at the University of Houston from 1997 to 2005, and has taught at the University of Texas-Austin since 2005, and Houston Community College since 1989 where he also teaches jazz improvisation, jazz combo, and big band jazz.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Dennis Dotson" (www.allmusic.com/artist/dennis-dotson-mn0001499584).

Douglas, Dave [Deuel] (b. Montclair, New Jersey, Mar. 24, 1963). American trumpeter and composer. Douglas grew up in New York City. He played the piano at age five, trombone at seven, and trumpet at nine; his first trumpet teacher was Ron Westervelt. Douglas attended the Phillips Exeter Academy, a private high school in New Hampshire, and spent a year in Barcelona, Spain, as a foreign exchange student. After graduating from high school in 1981, he attended the Berklee School of Music (1981-82) and the New England Conservatory (1982-83), but dropped out of school to move to New York City in 1984 where he studied with John McNeil and Laurie Frink at New York University, as well as with Carmine Caruso. He began playing in the streets in New York in 1984.

By 1987, Douglas was performing with some of the leading jazz musicians in New York, including Horace Silver (1987, three months), Vincent Herring, Myra Melford, Mosaic Sextet (1988-91), Don Byron's Klezmer Band (1990-94), and John Zorn (starting in 1993). He released his first album as leader of his own group in 1993 (Parallel Worlds, Soul Note) and in 2001 (Witness, RCA). Although he was a technically skilled trumpeter, Douglas's fame stemmed from his innovative and contemporary jazz compositions that incorporate Jewish styles and hard bop. Since his first album, he has garnered awards annually from nearly every jazz magazine, major newspaper, and jazz poll, including Downbeat, New York Times, Seattle Times, Village Voice, Boston Globe, Jazz Times Readers Poll, Jazzlz, Jazz Journalists Association, Italian Jazz Critics Society, and others. He also received Grammy Award nominations in 2003 (Best Instrumental Jazz Album) and 2006 (Best Contemporary Jazz Album).

Douglas has been a member of numerous groups, many of which he formed himself, including Orange Then Blue, Tiny Bell Trio, Dave Douglas Sextet, Dave Douglas Quintet, Dave Douglas New Quintet, Nomad, Keystone, and others. He is the cofounder of the Festival of New Trumpet Music, held annually in New York City, and is the founder and owner of the record label Greenleaf Music (since 2005). Douglas has recorded twenty-eight solo albums for labels such as Soul Note, Songline, New World, Hathut, Arbabesque, DIW, Winter & Winter, RCA, BMG, Bluebird, Koch, Konnex, Capitol, Blue Note, Splasch, Premonition, A&M, Elektra, Sun Jump Records, Musicmasters, Gramavision Records, and Greenleaf Music.

Douglas is the director of the Workshop in Jazz and Creative Music at the Banff Centre in Canada. He is a recipient of a Guggenheim Fellowship (2005), and has toured Europe many times. He has recorded with many artists and groups including Second Sight, Masada, Fred Hersch, Vincent Herring, New and Used, Joe Lovano, Sean Lennon, Greg Cohen, Patricia Barber, Kenny Werner, Martial Solal, Myra Melford, Sheryl Crow, John Zorn, Uri Caine, Marc Ribot, Mario Pavone, Fontella Bass, Mark Dresser, Suzanne Vega, and Don Byron. As a composer, he has received commissions from the Trisha Brown Dance Company, Arts International, National Endowment for the Arts, Birmingham Contemporary Music Group, Norddeutscher Rundfunk, Essen Philharmonic, Stanford University, and the Library of Congress.

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "Pushing the Envelope: An Interview with Dave Douglas" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2002); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Dave Douglas" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Dave Douglas's official website (http://www.davedouglas.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Drake, Thomas ("Tom") (b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Dec. 15, 1957). American trumpeter. Drake grew up in Rochester, New York. He began playing trumpet at age nine; his first teachers were Alex Molinich, Charles Starke, and Richard Jones. After graduating from Pittsford Sutherland High School in 1975, he attended the Eastman School of Music (1975-79), studying with Sydney Mear, Richard Jones, and Allan Dean and earning a bachelor of music degree. He won a position as fourth trumpet of the Rochester Philharmonic during his sophomore year, and after graduation, continued with it (now as third trumpet) until 1985 when he accepted the position of principal trumpet of the North Carolina Symphony (1985-87). In the fall of 1987, he was appointed assistant principal trumpet of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, a position he held until becoming acting principal trumpet in 2010 (officially titled associate principal). He has also served as principal trumpet of the American Kantorei, a St. Louis-based ensemble specializing in the music of J. S. Bach, and during the late 1980s toured with the Summit Brass. In addition, he is a member of the St. Louis Symphony Brass Quintet, and is an active participant in the Symphony's Community Partnership Program. He is also the coach of the St. Louis Symphony Youth Orchestra's trumpet and brass section, and teaches during the summers at the Interlochen Arts Camp (since 2004).

Drake is a professional record producer for AAM Recordings and Arch Media, and has produced recordings for the St. Louis Symphony and several members of the orchestra, as well as helping produce the orchestra's National Public Radio broadcasts from 1996 to 2000.

Drake and his wife Marian Bottje, a frequent substitute cellist with the St. Louis Symphony and daughter of composer Will Gay Bottje, have a daughter, Sarah (b. 1988), and a son, Michael (b. 1997). His hobbies include home audio and following the St. Louis Cardinals baseball team.

Bibl.: "Thomas Drake" (www.stlsymphony.org/bios/trumpets/thomas-drake.aspx); "Thomas Drake" (http://camp.interlochen.org/person/thomas-drake); personal interview, July 28, 2012.

Drakes, Jesse (b. New York, New York, Oct. 22, 1926; d. New York, New York, Apr. 2010). American trumpeter. Drakes studied for a while at The Juilliard School, and began his career around 1945 by playing with Al Cooper's Savoy Sultans and the bands of J.C. Heard, Sid Catlett, and Eddie Heywood. He recorded with Sarah Vaughan (1947), but is best known for his years (on and off between 1948 and 1956) with Lester Young's band. He made numerous recordings with Young, and served as his best friend and helper. When the Young band wasn't on the road, Drakes often played with the Gene Ammons-Sonny Stitt band (1953), Ray Charles (1953), the big bands of Louie Bellson (1955), Harry Belafonte (1955), and Duke Ellington (one week, 1956).

After leaving Lester Young's band in 1956, Drakes worked with rhythm and blues bands led by King Curtis, Cab Calloway, stars of Tamla Motown, and Willis Jackson (in Atlanta City). He was sometimes featured as a vocalist. Starting in 1969, Drakes led his own dance bands in the New York area. It is a pity that he never led any recording dates.

Drakes was found dead in his New York apartment on May 1, 2010. The exact date of his death was not determined. He was survived by his son, Charles L. Drakes.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Jesse Drakes" (www.answers.com); "Jesse Drakes" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Drewes, Glenn William (b. Brooklyn, New York, Apr. 24, 1949). American trumpeter. Drewes's brother is the well-known sax player, Billy Drewes. Glenn began playing the piano at age eight, and the trumpet at twelve. As a teen, he gigged on piano at a local strip club, and played piano and organ with Lionel Hampton's band for three months (1971-72). He attended the State University of New York-Potsdam as a music education major (1967-71), but decided to focus on the trumpet.

Drewes's first fulltime playing job was in Syracuse, New York, as part of Pete Procopio's quintet (1971-75). He then moved to New York City where he played with Lionel Hampton's band (on trumpet, 1975-76), Woody Herman (1977-79), Buddy Rich (1981-85), Toshiko Akiyoshi-Lew Tabackin (1983-84), Gerry Mulligan (1981-85), Dizzy Gillespie (1987), Gene Harris (1988), Vanguard Jazz Orchestra (starting in 1985 when it was the Mel Lewis Big Band), Frank Sinatra (1982), Liza Minnelli (1982-85), Doc Severinsen, and many others including pop stars Michael Jackson, P. Diddy, Sonny Bono, and Madonna.

Since 1984, Drewes has played in numerous Broadway pit orchestras, recorded film soundtracks, played in the house band for the children's television show, Sesame Street, and led his own jazz quintet. He teaches at Long Island University Post, New York.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Glenn Drews" (http://www.jazztrumpetsolos.com/solo.asp?soloist=GlennDrewes&Solo=LowDown).

Driscoll, Phil (b. Seattle, Washington, Nov. 9, 1947). American trumpeter, composer, and vocalist. Driscoll's father was a pastor of a small full-gospel church. As a toddler, Phil used to sit under the piano as his mother played and his father preached. The family moved to various cities as he grew up, but settled in Dallas, Texas, for five years as he started school. Phil's father eventually became the building superintendent for the Lancaster, Texas, public school system (mid 1950s). In 1961, the family moved to Tulsa, Oklahoma, to build another church. Phil had been learning to play his father's trumpet under the guidance of Roger Fenn (third trumpet of the Tulsa Philharmonic), and eventually became first chair (and featured soloist) of the Tulsa Youth Symphony. During his senior year of high school, he formed the All-City Tulsans, a touring band in the area. He won a competition at the World Music Festival in Amsterdam (the Netherlands) that garnered much attention for him. After graduation, he was offered scholarships to fifty-six universities, but decided to tour with a jazz band called Thurlow Spurr and the Spurrlows. After a year, he left the band to attend college at Baylor University in Texas.

During Driscoll's sophomore year at Baylor, he signed a recording contract with Word Records, recording an album titled A Touch of Trumpet with the Stockholm Symphony Orchestra. During his senior year, he won a national television talent contest called The All American College Show which led to appearances on TV shows such as The Steve Allen Show, Della Reese Show, Merv Griffin Show, and the Ed Sullivan Show. By the 1970s, he was touring and recording with major music acts, such as Blood Sweat and Tears, Joe Cocker, and the London Philharmonic Orchestra. He also played with rock bands led by Stephen Stills, Leon Russell, and Billy Preston. He toured Asia with the United Service Organization (USO) show, and recorded an album of original songs for A&R Records in New York. Unfortunately, the label went out of business; Driscoll spent the next five years in court battles trying to recover the ownership of his music. He became depressed and began using illegal drugs.

By this time, Driscoll was married to Patti McDavitt; they had a son, Shawn Driscoll. His problems with drugs and finances led to a divorce during the late 1970s. Driscoll moved to Jacksonville, Florida, where he and some friends opened a nightclub called Driscoll's. He built a small recording studio in the back of the club, and recorded songs that he wrote. One of his songs was picked up by Blood Sweat and Tears. But, again, Driscoll's life turned sour when he suspected that his business partner was dishonest. He sold his interest in the club, and founded a new one. His career and life picked up again when CBS offered him the opportunity to coproduce his songs.

Driscoll married his second wife, Lynne Driscoll, in 1978. Together, they found a new sense of religion. But, on January 20, 1978 Phil was arrested on charges of conspiracy to distribute cocaine. He was released on bail, and pleaded guilty to a misdemeanor charge of possessing cocaine. He was placed on probation. However, the arrest caused a news frenzy that led to cancellation of bank loans and concert appearances (including the halftime show for the Gator Bowl), and more financial problems.

By 1981, Driscoll's career was exploding. He was recording one or two albums each year, composing many songs, and received Dove Awards in 1981, 1984, 1985, and 1987. He received a Grammy nomination for his 1984 album with Debbie Boone, and was invited to play at The White House for four different presidents. His compositions won many awards as well, and he performed for the opening ceremonies of the President Clinton Library in Little Rock, Arkansas. In 1996, he built his own recording studio (Most High Studios) on a twenty-four-acre farm outside Cleveland, Tennessee. In that same year, he started his own television ministry called The Voice of Praise, and established the Phil Driscoll Music Group in 1999 that sells sheet music and recordings. He received the Christian Country Music Association Award for "Best Musician" and the Canadian Country Musical Association's "Musician of the Year" award. He has released nearly forty albums for Word, Sparrow, JCI Associated, Compose, Mighty Horn, Most High, and Koch. His videos include The Power of His Presence (Most High Music), 10 Years After (Sparrow), and His Best (JVI Associated).

On June 8, 2006 Driscoll was found guilty of two counts of tax evasion, and one count of conspiracy, and was sentenced to one year in a federal prison beginning on March 14, 2007. He served ten months. He and wife Lynne (who have two children: Jamie and Danielle), now live in Eatonton, Georgia, where he operates Mighty Horn Ministries.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Book 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Phil Driscoll" (www.answers.com/topic/phil-driscoll-1); Phil Driscoll's official website: www.phildriscoll.com.

Droschel, Conrad [Dröschel; Troschel] (baptized Aug. 1, 1596; d. fall 1644). German maker. Droschel was one of the ten leading Baroque trumpet makers in Nuremberg. His instruments were signed with the initials "CD" above a bird looking right. He became a master maker in 1624, and a sworn master (Geschworener Meister) in 1644. During his journeyman period, however, he somehow became involved in a plot against instrument makers Hans Kümmelmann and Georg Petz (in 1623). At first, he received only a light punishment, but later the city council banished him from the city, then pardoned him after a four-week imprisonment.

Despite Droschel's wealth and success as an instrument maker (he owned three homes in or near Nuremberg), his personal life was filled with tragedy and difficulties. On August 9, 1624 he married Sybila Joachim, the daughter of a local publisher. They had four children before her sudden death in 1632, probably as a result of the double siege of Nuremberg wherein many lives were lost. Within a year, Droschel married again. His wife, Maria, stemmed from one of the oldest trumpet-making families; her father was the well-known Anton Schnitzer Jr. She died after two years of marriage and the birth of her only daughter. Droschel married for a third time in the following year; this time to the daughter of the musical Stadtpfeifer, Lorenz Behaim. They had had six children together by the time of his death, and one was born shortly after he had died.

Conrad Droschel was one of only three sworn masters to be listed in the rules and regulations of his craft in Nuremberg. He was given a large amount of respect for being the son-in-law of Anton Schnitzer. His instrument-making craft was continued after his death through his journeyman, Michael Nagel, who later married Droschel's widow and took over his workshop.

Bibl.: Pechstein, Klaus. "Die Merkzeichentafel der Nümberger Trompeten- und Posaunenmacher von 1640" (Mitteilungen des Vereins für Geschichte der Stadt Nürnberg 59, 1972); Wörthmüller, Willi. "Die Nürnberger Trompeten- und Posaunenmacher des 17. Und 18. Jahrunderts," Ibid., 45 (1954) and 46 (1955).

Drozdoff, Nicholas ("Nick") (b. Chicago, Illinois, June 28, 1953). American trumpeter. Drozdoff grew up in St. Louis. He began playing trumpet in 1965; his teachers were Bill Bay, Eddie Brauer, and Gary Smith. He also studied with Frank Lisanti, Philip Smith, and Jerome Callet. He credits Neal Dunlap at the VanderCook College of Music as his main teacher and mentor. After graduating high school from The Principia Upper School in 1971, he attended Washington University in St. Louis as an electrical engineering major (B.S. in 1976) while freelancing as a musician. He moved to Chicago in 1976 to take a job with Motorola, but after two years, quit the position to go on the road now and then with various dance bands such as Sonora Tropicale until he joined Maynard Ferguson's band in 1981 as second trumpet. Since 1982, he has been an active freelance trumpeter in Chicago, performing on many radio and television jingles and backing artists and celebrities such as Bill Cosby, Bob Newhart, Della Reese, Gladys Knight and the Pips, Rich Little, Fred Rogers, Frankie Avalon, Edie Gorme, Rosemary Clooney, Sammy Davis Jr., the Ojays, The Spinners, the Temptations, John Denver, Melissa Manchester, Diahann Carroll, and Pat Boone.

Drozdoff earned a master of music degree in classical trumpet at Roosevelt University in 1991, and a master of physics degree at DePaul University in 2004. He has been a fulltime physics teacher at Glenbrook North High School (two years), Zion Benton High School (three years), and New Trier High School (since 1997). He also managed his own musicians contracting service for a few years, and is currently first trumpet in the Chicago Grandstand Big Band. He also maintains a private studio of trumpet students. His solo CDs include Trumpets Volume 1, No Man Is An Island, Junk Yard Brass, and Brass Menagerie. He can also be heard on the CD, Intercontinental Drift, performing on several tracks including his flugelhorn solo on A Curious Yellow that won the Western Australia Music Industry Association award for best jazz piece. His jazz teachers include Joe Daley, Rich Corpolongo, and Alan Swaim.

Drozdoff and his wife Ardath Hamann, a law professor at the John Marshall Law School in Chicago, have a son Colin (b. 1990), who is a jazz pianist, and a daughter Natalia (b. 1995), who is a high school student who plays saxophone and piano, but wants to become an astronomer. Drozdoff's hobbies include a home recording studio, fishing, and photography.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Nick Drozdoff" (www.allaboutjazz.com/php/musician.php?id=3103); personal interview, Apr. 5, 2012.

Drucker, Vladimir ("Vladi") Mikhailovich (b. Moscow, Russia, Jan. 14, 1897; d. Van Nuys, California, Apr. 22, 1974). Russian trumpeter.

Drucker began playing the trumpet at age nine, and after only three years was accepted into Vasily Brandt's class at the Moscow Conservatory. After three years of study with Brandt, Brandt left, and Drucker was assigned to Mikhail Tabakov, with whom he studied for four years. Drucker graduated in trumpet, violin, and timpani.

At age sixteen, Drucker accepted his first professional position as assistant principal to Tabakov in Sergey Koussevitzky's private orchestra. At the outset of the October Revolution, Drucker fled Russia via the Trans-Siberian Railroad to China where he played for two years in the Shanghai Municipal Orchestra. In 1919, he then traveled to New York City where he immediately auditioned for Walter H. Rothwell, conductor of the newly formed Los Angeles Philharmonic; he was accepted as principal trumpet, and "Vladi," as his friends and students called him, played there until 1945. However, he occasionally performed for brief periods of time with other orchestras including the New York Symphony Orchestra (1923-25), San Francisco Symphony (1925-29), and Cleveland Orchestra (1934-35).

Drucker was offered positions by Reiner and Toscanini in 1931, but refused them. In the following year, he was offered the principal chair of the Moscow State Opera Orchestra with a professorship at the Moscow Conservatory, but again refused. After leaving the Los Angeles Philharmonic in 1945, he played in the Columbia Motion Pictures studios in Hollywood until 1958 when the musicians' contracts were dropped. He also played with the Hollywood Bowl Orchestra during the summers of 1929-47.

Drucker was known for his beautiful, rich tone and his ability to play very softly. Conductor Otto Klemperer once said of him that he was a reincarnation of his noted teacher [Tabakov]. Drucker played on a French Besson B-flat trumpet with a large and deep mouthpiece, which produced a sound typical of the Russian style established by Brandt and Tabakov. (His trumpet was known as the "Clark Besson," because it was given to him as a present from William A. Clark Jr., the wealthy orchestra founder, who owned an apartment in Paris and obtained it there.) Drucker's wife, Adriana Mikéshima, was a noted pianist, and their daughter, Valeska (b. 1936), a talented pianist who studied in Italy, and often performed in the Los Angeles area with small chamber ensembles.

Bibl.: Cooper, Stefan. "Trumpet Players of the San Francisco Symphony 1911-1996" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1996); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Dudgeon, Ralph T[homas] (b. McKeesport, Pennsylvania, Nov. 8, 1948). American trumpeter. Dudgeon is chiefly known for his scholarly research on the keyed bugle. He received his bachelor of music degree in 1970 from San Diego State University, a master's in trumpet from the same institution in 1972, and a PhD in music from the University of California-San Diego in 1980. He was a member of the San Diego Brass Quintet, San Diego Symphony, and San Diego Ballet & Opera. His teachers include Edwin Shinner, William Bowers, Jack Logan, John Clyman, and Gerard Schwarz.

Dudgeon has written numerous articles for the International Trumpet Guild Journal, Historical Brass Society Journal, New Grove Dictionary of Musical Instruments, Encyclopedia of Musical Instruments, American Musical Instruments Society, Ovation, and other leading magazines. He contributed two chapters to the Cambridge Companion to Brass Instruments, authored the book, The Keyed Bugle, and recorded a CD on the keyed bugle titled Music for Keyed Bugle. Dudgeon has recorded for labels such as Musical Heritage Society, Nimbus, Hyperion, Music Masters, Newport Classics, and Spring Tree.

As a keyed bugle soloist, Dudgeon has performed with over forty ensembles in Canada, Mexico, Europe, and the United States. He has been a member of Sonare, Genesee Baroque Players, London Gabrieli Brass Ensemble, Allentown Band, Binghamton Symphony, and the Catskill Symphony Orchestra. He also serves as first trumpet of the Scranton Bach Festival Orchestra, and was a founding member of the Miss Lucy Long Social Orchestra & Quick Step Society.

Dudgeon taught at the State University of New York-Cortland from 1997 to 2000, serving one of those years as chair of the music department, and is currently the trumpet teacher at Colgate University. He is also a consultant to The Instrument Museum in Schloss Kremsegg in Kremsmünster, Upper Austria.

Bibl.: Dudgeon, Ralph T. The Keyed Bugle (Second Edition) (Scarecrow Press); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Duhem, Hippolyte Jean (b. Paris, France, Dec. 1, 1828; d. Schaerbeek, Belgium, Aug. 30, 1911). Belgian trumpeter and cornetist. Duhem studied with C. Zeiss (or Zeyss) at the Royal Conservatory in Brussels, graduating in 1846. From 1846 to 1851, he was principal trumpet of the Royal Theater of the Monnaie, and the First Guard Regiment band. He taught cornet, trumpet, and flugelhorn at the Brussels Conservatory from 1860 to 1888, and was cornet soloist with the Kursaal Orchestra from 1870 to 1871. He was also the conductor of that organization from 1875 to 1877. In 1861, he commissioned the Paris firm of Antoine Courtois to make a piston trumpet in high D, the first of its kind, an octave above the standard natural (valveless) trumpet. He toured as a soloist from 1887 to 1889, and published among other books, [24] Études Mélodiques et de Virtuosité, which is still used today.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

Duncan, Donald ("Don") S. (b. Dayton, Ohio, Feb. 2, 1964). American trumpeter. Duncan is the fifth of five children born to James (a salesman) and Rosalie (a homemaker) Duncan. Donald grew up in Shawnee, Kansas (near Kansas City), and graduated from Shawnee Mission Northwest High School in 1982. He attended Wichita State University where he studied with Walter Myers, and received a bachelor of music degree in 1987. While in school, he was the principal trumpet of the Hutchinson Symphony Orchestra and third trumpet with the Wichita Symphony. Duncan then attended Arizona State University, where he studied with David Hickman, and earned a master of music degree in 1993. While in Arizona, he was director of music at Grace Community Church in Tempe, and also a substitute trumpeter in The Phoenix Symphony. In between his two years of graduate work at ASU, he was second trumpet of the New Mexico Symphony for three years. After graduation, he became a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago where he was coached by John Hagstrom and Mark Riddenour of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. He was also pastor of music and worship at Wheaton Bible Church in Wheaton, Illinois. Duncan was a member of the King's Brass during the summers of 1987, 1990, and 1994.

From 2001 to 2005, Duncan was on the faculty at the summer American Institute of Musical Studies in Graz, Austria, and principal of the festival orchestra. During this time, he was also director of music at Grace Community Church in Newton, Kansas. In 2006, Duncan accepted a position as trumpet professor at Wichita State University (in Kansas), and principal of the Wichita Symphony Orchestra and Wichita Brass Quintet (faculty). He is principal of the Wichita Grand Opera, and on numerous occasions has also performed as an extra or substitute trumpeter in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Duncan resigned his teaching position at WSU in the spring of 2011.

Duncan and his wife Helena have four children: John Mark (b. 2001), Danielle (b. 2003), Wesley (b. 2007), and James (b. 2010). His hobbies include baseball and baseball history, Civil War history, and the development of early brass instruments.

Bibl.: personal interview Feb. 7, 2010.

Dunham, Elmer Lewis Jr. ("Sonny") (b. Brockton, Massachusetts, Nov. 16, 1914; d. June 18, 1990). American trumpeter. Dunham's parents, Elmer M. Dunham and Ethel A. Lewis, fostered a love for music in Elmer Jr. and his sister, Louise (who later became a professional sax player). At age seven, Elmer Jr. attended local schools and took lessons on the valve trombone. He switched to slide trombone at the age of eleven, and was playing in local bands by the age of thirteen. He began his professional career as a trombonist in the Boston area. Since he was so young, older musicians named him "Sonny."

In the late 1920s, Dunham moved to New York where he played trombone for six months with Ben Bernie. In 1929, he joined Paul Tremaine's orchestra as a trumpet and trombone player, remaining for two years and also becoming an arranger and singer. In 1931, he formed his own group called Sonny Dunham and the New York Yankees, but it had little success. The following year, he joined Glen Gray's Casa Loma Orchestra, and became a popular soloist in the group. His recording of Memories of You was a smash hit and earned him the nickname, "The Man from Mars," because of his soaring high notes. Despite his success with the Casa Loma Orchestra, Dunham again formed a band of his own in 1937. This band had fourteen musicians (ten of whom doubled on trumpet!). Unfortunately, it too had little success, and disbanded after only a few months. He moved to Europe for three months before returning to the Casa Loma Orchestra in November 1937, where he remained until 1939. Dunham was now a household name, and was selected along with Harry James, Charlie Spivak, and Bunny Berigan as the top four trumpeters in a popularity poll by Metronome magazine in 1939. In the same year, Dunham recorded with Louis Armstrong and the Casa Loma Orchestra for Decca records.

Dunham debuted a new band in January of 1940 that regularly performed at the Glendale Auditorium in Los Angeles. They toured the United States, and settled in New York a year later. The band played on nightly radio broadcasts from the Roseland Ballroom, and played at the Meadowbrook in Cedar Brook, New Jersey. In August of 1941, the band moved to Hollywood, but returned to New York in January of 1942. Two months later, they began touring again, and played at the Hollywood Palladium as well as being featured in the 1942 Universal Pictures films, Behind the Eight Ball and Off the Beaten Track. They also appeared in a Universal Pictures short film titled Jivin' Jam Session (1942). The band became very successful, and was sponsored by Rudy Muck Mouthpieces.

The band left Hollywood and played in Chicago before returning to New York for an appearance at the Paramount Theatre in November of 1942. From January to April 1943, they played on the bandstand of the Hotel New Yorker, and later toured the Midwest.

Dunham's band recorded for Langworth Transcriptions in New York in late 1943, and continued performances at the Hotel New Yorker, as well as the Café Rouge Room at the Hotel Pennsylvania. During the summer of 1944, the band returned to Hollywood for performances and to appear in the Universal short film, Jive Busters. While there, they were also featured in the Warner Brothers film, Sonny Dunham and His Orchestra. They returned to New York in September of 1944.

Dunham's band was active throughout the U.S. until 1951, and helped launch the careers of trumpeters Pete Candoli and Uan Rasey. After the group disbanded, Dunham worked with Bernie Mann and Tommy Dorsey, but later formed another band. He retired to Florida in the 1960s, and formed a small group that performed in the area and played cruise ship bookings. He began playing trombone again because of lip problems, but played little during the 1970s and '80s; his last recording was made in 1974.

Dunham lived in a trailer in Miami. He suffered from cancer and died at the age of seventy-five.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Elmer 'Sonny' Dunham" (www.nme.com/artists/elmer-sonny-dunham); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Dunn, Johnny (b. Memphis, Tennessee, Feb. 19, 1897; d. Paris, France, Aug. 20, 1937). American trumpeter. Dunn played cornet early in his career, but switched to the trumpet before Louis Armstrong and others popularized it. Dunn attended Fisk University in Nashville, Tennessee, and was soon discovered by W.C. Handy. Dunn played as a soloist at the Metropolitan Theatre in Memphis (c1916), and then joined Handy's band in 1917, playing with it for three years. Dunn's feature solo was Sergeant Dunn's Bugle Call Blues, a tune that later evolved into the standard, Bugle Call Rag. Handy also dedicated Ole Miss Rag to him.

Dunn's specialty was producing growl and plunger mute effect sounds that became an integral part of Mamie Smith's Jazz Hounds in 1920, as well as in his own band in the following year. With Smith, his recordings of Don't Care Blues and Lovin' Sam from Alabam demonstrate Dunn's effects. When Dunn left Smith's group in 1921, his replacement was Bubber Miley, who extended Dunn's effects and became famous for them. In those days, Dunn was a star, and featured as a soloist at the Lafayette Theatre where he performed blues by Handy.

In 1921, Dunn formed his own band, the Original Jazz Hounds, that accompanied Edith Wilson's show, Put and Take, for two years. He recorded eighteen tunes with Wilson, and fourteen with his own band. In 1922, Dunn joined Vodery's Plantation Orchestra, and in 1923 toured Europe with the Dover and Dixie revue.

Dunn heard Louis Armstrong perform in Chicago, and attempted to show him up. He walked on stage, picked up Armstrong's trumpet, and began to play, but his grandstanding backfired when he realized that the tune was in the key of C-sharp, a key not too familiar to him. He then went to Europe with the Blackbirds of 1926 Show, but his playing was considered old-fashioned because of its staccato style and excessive vibrato. While in Europe, he managed to record four tunes with the Plantation Orchestra in London. He returned to the United States in 1927, and led his own big band. Dunn was a featured soloist with the Joe Reisman Orchestra in two pieces, St Louis Blues and Aunt Hagar's Blues (February 1928). His final (and best) recordings were made in 1928. He recorded a session with James P. Johnson and Fats Waller, and another under his own name that included You Need Some Lovin' and a remake of Sergeant Dunn's Bugle Call Blues. On those sides, his group included Jelly Roll Morton on the piano.

Dunn rejoined the Blackbird Company, and toured Europe again. He played with Noble Sissle in Paris (1928) before starting a new band called the New Yorkers. He performed in Europe (mainly Holland) with this group until the end of his life. He recorded with Josephine Baker, backed by Rao Silva & His 22 Color Boys (1932) and was also in a film with the Chocolate Kiddies in 1933. He moved to Paris in 1937, and died there from tuberculosis within a few months at the age of thirty-nine. Dunn was one of the most influential trumpeters before Armstrong. Among his adherents were Thomas Morris, Bubber Miley, and Joe Smith. Bobby Booker said that Dunn wore gloves and carried a cane as he walked down 7th Avenue. He was very good for those times, and he wasn't an ordinary acting kind of fellow. You know, he felt he was a great trumpet player, he had class.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Johnny Dunn" (www.redhotjazz.com); Schuller, Gunther. Early Jazz (Oxford University Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Dunn, Stephen ("Steve") J. (b. Dover, New Jersey, Mar. 8, 1966). American trumpeter. Dunn grew up in Mendham, New Jersey, and Albuquerque, New Mexico. He began playing trumpet at age twelve; his first teachers were Ron Fuss, Jim Stearns, and Ron Lipka. After graduating from Eldorado High School in Albuquerque, he earned a bachelor of music education degree at the University of North Texas (1984-89), studying with Leonard Candelaria; a master of music degree at Northwestern University (1989-90), studying with Vincent Cichowicz; and a doctor of musical arts degree at Arizona State University (1994-96), studying with David Hickman (degree completed in 2001). Additionally, he studied with Allan Dean at the Yale Summer School of Music, and Anthony Plog at the Freiburg Hochschule für Musik in Germany.

Dunn began his college teaching career in 1996 at Ft. Lewis College in Durango, Colorado, and in 1997 accepted a professorship at the University of Denver where he performed with the Aries Brass Quintet and The Denver Brass. In 1999, he was appointed to the faculty at the University of Oregon in Eugene where he performed with the Oregon Brass Quintet (with George Recker, trumpet) and as principal trumpet of the Oregon Festival of American Music Orchestra. In 2005, he assumed his current position as professor of trumpet at Northern Arizona University in Flagstaff. He is a member of the Elden Brass Quintet, and performs each summer with the Music in the Mountains Festival orchestra in Durango.

An active soloist, Dunn has toured with the Dunn/Pennington Duo (trumpet and percussion). His two CDs are Steps (2008, private label) and Old News (2002, Equilibrium). He has played on occasion with the Eugene Symphony Orchestra, Phoenix Symphony Orchestra, Utah Symphony, and the Ballet West Orchestra.

Dunn and his wife Shelley Rich, a violinist and violin instructor, have two children: Sarah (b. 2004) and Rachel (b. 2006). His hobbies include hiking, bicycling, and snow skiing.

Bibl.: "Stephen Dunn" (www4.nau.edt/trumpet/Stephen.dunn.html); personal interview, July 22, 2011.

Dunnick, Kim D. (b. Waukegan, Illinois, Dec. 30, 1946). American trumpeter. Dunnick received a bachelor of music degree from Indiana University, studying with Herbert Mueller, Louis Davidson, and Charles Gorham; a master of music degree from Catholic University of America, studying with David Flowers); and a doctor of music degree from Indiana University. From 1970 to 1973, he was a member of the US Army Band in Washington, D.C. where he performed with the Ceremonial Band, Herald Trumpets, and The Army Blues jazz band.

From the fall of 1976 to the fall of 1981, Dunnick taught at Tennessee Tech University in Cookeville. He then became a professor at Ithaca College in upstate New York, a position he still holds. He has performed with the Knoxville Symphony, Elmira Symphony, Brasswind quintet, and for ten years was principal trumpet of the Victoria Bach Festival orchestra in Texas. He has also played with the Syracuse and Binghamton symphonies, the BC Pops, the Evansville Little Symphony, and other central New York ensembles. He is the current principal of the Cayuga Chamber Orchestra, and a member of the Ithaca Brass (faculty brass quintet). During the summers, he performs with the Skaneateles Festival Orchestra. Dunnick has presented master classes and recitals throughout the world, and has served on several juries for international trumpet solo competitions (Moscow, Saratov, Kiev). He received the International Trumpet Guild's Award of Merit in 2004.

Dunnick has served on the board of directors of the ITG, and was president from 1997 to 1999. He served as vice president and president-elect of the ITG, and was again president from 2012-14. He has written several articles for the International Trumpet Guild Journal, and was coeditor of Trumpeter on a Horse: The Memoirs of Timofei Dokshizer, published by the ITG.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bio.: Dr. Kim Dunnick" (www.ithaca.edu/faculty/dunnick/bio.html).

Dünser, Stefan (b. Bludenz, Austria, Feb. 17, 1968). Austrian trumpeter. Dünser began playing the trumpet after being inspired by recordings of Louis Armstrong. He studied with Lothar Hilbrand at the Landeskonservatorium in Feldkirch, and in 1991 began studying the modern and natural (valveless) trumpet with Edward Tarr in Basel, graduating in 1995. He was among the earliest soloists to perform Bernd-Alois Zimmermann's trumpet concerto, Nobody Knows. He has performed with the Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble, has been principal trumpet of the Vorarlberg Symphony Orchestra, and is perhaps best known as a member of the Sonus Brass Ensemble, which tours extensively and has released several CDs. Dünser has authored four books for beginning trumpet players in a series called Trumpet Fox (Hage). He has served as a teacher at the Dornbirn Music School, as well as a coach and trainer for music teachers at the Conservatory in Vorarlberg.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Stefan Dünser" (www.sonusbrassensemble.at).

Düppenbecker, Frank (b. Essen, Germany, July 4, 1964). German trumpeter. Düppenbecker began playing with the help of his father, and played in a local brass choir. From 1986 to 1989, he attended the Musikhochschule in Frankfurt, studying with David Tasa, and from 1989 to 1992 earned a master of music degree at Northwestern University in Evanston, Illinois, under Vincent Cichowicz. He also studied with Adolph Herseth and Arnold Jacobs in Chicago, and with Uwe Komischke in Munich, Germany.

From 1988 to 1990, while a student in Frankfurt, Düppenbecker was a member of the Orchester des Saarländischen Rundfunks, and beginning in 1988 was a member of the Düsseldorf Symphony. Recently, he has been teaching and conducting brass ensembles in Holz and Limerick, Ireland, and is the founder of the Samuel Scheidt Brass Quintet. He can be heard on numerous CDs with the quintet and other ensembles, and has also released solo CDs that include Festliche Klänge and Die schönsten Melodien zur Weihnachtszeit.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Frank Düppenbecker" (http://www.frank-düppenbecker.de/kontakt.htm).

Dupuis, Kurt. American trumpeter. Dupuis grew up in Rochester, New York, and first studied trumpet with Terrance Detweiler of the US Marine Band. He spent two summers at the Grand Teton Orchestral Institute in Jackson Hole, Wyoming, and one summer at the Tanglewood Institute, summer home of the Boston Symphony Orchestra where he was coached by members of the Empire Brass. He graduated in 1985 from Spaulding High School in Rochester. He attended Boston University, studying with Peter Chapman and Roger Voisin, and earning a bachelor of music degree.

Shortly after graduating, Dupuis joined the Atlantic Brass Quintet and toured under the auspices of Columbia Artists Management. The quintet taught at the Tanglewood Institute and performed in many of the world's leading concert halls. In 1992, Dupuis became a member of the US Marine Band in Washington, D.C., a position he currently holds as a Master Sergeant. As principal trumpet, he performed Taps for Presidents Ronald Reagan (2004) and Gerald Ford (2007).

Bibl.: Conner, Jeff. "Kurt Dupuis" (The Brass Herald, Feb. 2010); "Local News" (The Boston Globe, Jan. 2, 2007).

Duquénoy, Louis (b. Boulogne-sur-Mer, France, Dec. 22, 1911; d. Dietlikon, Switzerland, Dec. 18, 1991). French trumpeter. Duquénoy studied violin, then trumpet with Eugène Foveau and Pierre Vignal at the Paris Conservatory. As a youngster, he enjoyed listening to Philippe Brun, cornet soloist with Gregor & His Gregorians.

Duquénoy played in the Lyons Radio-Symphony, and from 1949 to 1976 was principal trumpet of the Zurich Tonhalle Orchestra. Along with Henri Adelbrecht, he taught at the Zurich Conservatory.

Duquénoy was married to a violinist.

Duquénoy died at the age of seventy-nine, just four days before his eightieth birthday.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Duran, Manuel ("Manny") Sanchez (b. Alamagordo, New Mexico, June 11, 1926; d. New York, New York, Oct. 30, 2006). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Duran studied at the University of New Mexico from 1946 to 1950, and in New York City with Carmine Caruso and Adolf Sandole from 1975 to 1980. He grew up playing in various mariachi bands in the Southwest, and switched to jazz after hearing Louis Armstrong. He worked on the West Coast for a few years, and moved to New York City in 1956. He played at the legendary Café Bohemia for a year, and by the 1960s was performing as jazz soloist with the top Latin bands in that city including those led by Noro Morales (from 1960), Ray Barretto, Willie Bobo, Mario Bauzá, Mongo Santamaria, as well as the Conjunto 66. For nearly ten years, he was a member of the group led by Machito.

Duran formed a bebop band in the early 1980s with singer Carla White. The two became a fixture in the New York jazz scene; they played all of the finest clubs. They recorded one album together, Andruline, and then decided to break up the band. Duran continued leading his own bands in both the bebop and Latin idioms, and also ran the late night jam sessions at the Blue Note for many years. He also led the Saturday night jam sessions at Cleopatra's Needle, and played a regular gig at B.B. King's with his Afro-Bop Band.

Duran was a peerless melodic trumpeter and a kind and generous man who helped encourage many young jazz musicians.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Manny Duran June 11, 1926 – October 30, 2006" (www.allaboutjazz.com/php/news.php?id=11530).

Dutot, Pierre (b. Caen, Normandy, France, June 11, 1946). French trumpeter. When Dutot was ten years old, his mother took him to see a circus show, where he heard a clown play the trumpet, and became smitten with the sound of the instrument. His first teacher was André Bellis at the local conservatory, where he received a cornet and trumpet first prize in 1961 and 1963. He later studied with Roger Delmotte, Pierre Pollin, and Jean Greffin before entering the Paris Conservatory at age twenty-three, where he studied with Ludovic Vaillant, winning first prize in trumpet in 1971.

Dutot has an extensive career as a trumpet player beginning with local dance bands and concert bands. From 1970, he played trumpet and organ concerts with André Pagenel. He played with Roger Delmotte on the radio (1975), and toured South Africa with the Roger Delmotte Brass Quintet (1976). Dutot led his own brass quintet, which appeared at the 1st Festival of the French Trumpet Guild (1979). He has performed with the Suisse Romande Brass Ensemble (from 1983), the Prestige Dance Band, the Caen Big Band, the Rhône-Alpes Symphony Orchestra (1984-85), the Lyons Chamber Orchestra, Timofei Dokshitser (1990), and the Bordeaux Brass Band. He has also performed with his own groups: Lyons Conservatory Trumpet Ensemble, Trompolis Brass Ensemble, and Hexagone Brass Ensemble. Since 2009, he has conducted the Bordgiaq Brass Band in Léognan (near Bordeaux). From 1970, Dutot made many records under his own name, covering all kinds of music. He also made a record with Bernard Soustrot (1981), and another with Freddy Grin (1992).

Dutot became the trumpet professor at the Conservatoire National de Région (CNR) in Caen in 1975. He left in 1982 to take a similar position at CNR in 1986 in Villeurbanne (near Lyons), and stayed in this position until 1999. He is mostly known as the first trumpet teacher—after Roger Delmotte for a very short time—at the National Conservatory of Music in Lyons (October 1982 to 2004). He then taught at the Bordeaux Conservatory (2004 to 2007). He is an active clinician who has given thousands of master classes in France and around the world. Among his best-known students are David Guerrier, André Henry, Pascal Clarhaut, and Eric Planté. For years, Dutot has been an adviser to Courtois instruments.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Pierre Dutot – Portrait" (Brass Bulletin, no. 113, I, 2001); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

E

Eardley, Jon (b. Altoona, Pennsylvania, Sept. 30, 1928; d. Lambermont, Belgium, Apr. 2, 1991). American trumpeter. Eardley's father played trumpet in Paul Whiteman's orchestra. By age eleven, Jon began studying trumpet with his father, and by age fifteen was playing at local fairs and circuses during summer vacations from school. He joined the Air Force and played in a military band in Washington, D.C. from 1946 to 1949. After that, he played with Buddy Rich's band (1949) and with Gene Williams (1949-50). In 1950, he returned to his hometown of Altoona and performed with local groups for the next three years. He was influenced by the recordings of Louis Armstrong and Bix Beiderbecke.

In 1953, Eardley moved to New York where he played with Phil Woods (1954) and Gerry Mulligan's Quartet and Sextet (1954-57, including a European tour in 1956). He also led a group on two jazz albums (1954-56).

Eardley dropped out of music and returned to Altoona, but made a music comeback when he moved to Brussels in 1963, playing for Belgium Radio and Television. In 1964, he took part in a jazz festival in Comblain-la-Tour, France, and recorded as cosoloist with Benny Bailey at the International Jazz Workshop in Recklinghausen. In 1969, he joined the WDR Radio Big Band in Cologne, Germany, where he stayed for the rest of his career. He occasionally recorded jazz albums in the late 1960s, and made his final recordings for Spotlite as leader of his own trio (1977). He was one of the best "cool jazz" trumpeters of his day, and was known for his beautiful tone and singing style of playing. Later in his career, he was influenced by Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Earley, Robert ("Bob") W. (b. Summit, New Jersey, Oct. 3, 1955). American trumpeter. Earley grew up in Madison, New Jersey, and began playing trumpet at age nine under the guidance of his father, a professional musician. His father's sudden and unexpected death in 1971 inspired the sixteen-year-old Robert to work very hard. He later studied with Barry Browner and John Bunell before attending the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory under James Darling. Earley graduated with a bachelor of music education degree in 1977. He then earned a master of music degree at the New England Conservatory, where he studied with Armando Ghitalla (1979). Additional study was with William Vacchiano.

Earley was principal of the Boston Opera Company Orchestra before being named associate principal of the Montreal Symphony Orchestra (1982-91), during which time he became a faculty member at McGill University (1983-91). He joined the Philadelphia Orchestra as second trumpet in 1992 and retired in 2013. He has taught at Temple University since 1993 and Rutgers University since 2010. He also taught at Rowan University from 2000 to 2010. In addition, he has served as a guest faculty member at the Eastman School of Music and the University of Michigan. He has also performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra and the Boston Pops, and has recorded with Canadian Brass. Earley received the Conservatory Achievement Award from the Baldwin-Wallace Conservatory.

Robert Earley is married to violinist Nancy Meinhard. Their children are William (b. 1987) and Laura (b. 1987). His hobbies are primarily water activities including kayaking, water skiing, sailing, powerboating, and sport fishing.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Robert Earley" (www.rowan.edu/open/depts/fpa/music/our_assets/bio/earley.html); personal interview, May 6, 2011.

Eberhart, Lauren (b. c1968). American trumpeter. Eberhart holds a bachelor of music degree from Baldwin-Wallace College (1990) where she studied with the late Mary K. Squire and James Darling, and a master of music degree from Southern Methodist University (1992) where she studied with Thomas Booth. She has been second trumpet of the Savannah Symphony and a guest principal trumpet of the Charleston Symphony Orchestra, and has also performed as an extra with the Dallas Symphony Orchestra. She has been second trumpet of the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra in Texas for several years, and served as acting principal trumpet during the 2007-08 season. She is also assistant principal of the San Antonio Opera Orchestra, and third trumpet with the Cabrillo Festival of Contemporary Music in Santa Cruz, California during summers.

Eberhart is an adjunct instructor at San Antonio College, and has previously taught as an adjunct faculty member at Texas A&M University in Kingsville, as well as Savannah State College. She has performed with the San Antonio Brass, and is a founding member of the Hemisphere Brass Quintet.

Eberhart and her husband Andrew Gignac, principal trumpeter of the Mid-Texas Symphony and professor of trumpet at San Antonio College, have a daughter, Julia. Eberhart's hobbies include yoga, swimming, hiking, reading, and gardening. She is also a certified Reiki Master.

Bibl.: "Lauren Eberhart" (www.sasymphony.org/2012/06/lauren-eberhart).

Photo: Jan Roller, Andrew Gignac, Lauren Eberhard.

Eckert, John W. (b. New York, New York, Mar. 13, 1939). American trumpeter. Eckert began playing trumpet during grade school. He later attended the Eastman School of Music (1957-61), earning a bachelor of music degree, and attended graduate school at North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) from 1961 to 1963. Immediately after graduating with a master of music degree, Eckert joined the Stan Kenton Orchestra (1965-67).

After spending most of a year with Kenton, Eckert played with Si Zentner, American Brass Quintet, Maynard Ferguson (1965-68), Gerry Mulligan, Buddy Morrow, Chamber Jazz Quintet, Toshiko Akiyoshi, Benny Goodman (1988-89), Woody Herman, Sam Rivers, Joe Henderson, Buck Clayton, Grover Mitchell (1987-88), Louie Bellson, Muhal Richard Abrams, Loren Schoenberg, Lee Konitz, Benny Carter, Ken Peplowski, Bobby Short, and others. He recorded for numerous labels including Kudu, Columbia, MCA, Geffen, CBS, Jazz Heritage, Virgin, King/A&M, Soul Note, Irma, Natural Resources, Fratelli Fabbri Editori, and Flying Dutchman. From 1979 to 1983, he taught at Bridgeport University and New Jersey State College.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Eckert, Randy Darrell (b. Monticello, New York, Aug. 16, 1948). American trumpeter. Eckert started his career by playing with several rock and blues groups in Miami, and eventually with the Temptations, Miracles, Gladys Knight (1966-70), Sammy Davis Jr. (1968-75), and the Mel Tormé Big Band (1975-78). He moved to New York City in 1978, and worked with the Sam Jones/Tom Harrell group (1978-79), Machito (1978-80), Tito Puente (1980-82), Charlie Persip Superband (1980-89), and the Illinois Jacquet Big Band (1988-92). He returned to Miami, and for a while taught jazz at the University of Miami. He recorded with trumpeter Larry Gillespie.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ecklund, Peter (b. Woodbridge, Connecticut, Sept. 27, 1945). American cornetist. Ecklund began playing the bugle at ten, then trumpet at age twelve, and became interested in early jazz while in high school. He switched to cornet about the time he went to Yale University, earning bachelor's and master's degrees outside of music in 1969. He played with the Yale University Orchestra, Galvanized Jazz Band (school band), an ad hoc brass band at Georges Lewis's funeral in New Orleans (with Charlie DeVore, Yoshio Toyama, Bob Greene on trumpets), and Albert Nicholas (1969), and recorded with Tommy Sancton (1969). He took lessons from Joe Newman and Jimmy Maxwell. A few years after graduating, he decided to make music his career, and joined the bands of David Bromberg (1973-80), Gregg Allman (1974), Maria Muldaur, Leon Redbone, and Paul Butterfield. He also led the Galvanized Jazz Band, and toured with Paula Lockheart. During the 1970s, he recorded with Bonnie Raitt, Paul Butterfield, and Gloria Gaynor.

Ecklund worked with Marty Grosz (1987-82), the Orphan Newboys (starting in 1988), Leon Redbone, and Frank Vignola (1992), and recorded with Bob Dylan, Cynthia Sayer (1991), and the New York Jazz Ensemble (1993). He played on the soundtrack of Civil War by Ken Burns, and participated in a New York Brass Conference in March of 1991. From 1987 to 1995, he played first trumpet with Vince Giordano's Nighthawks, and since 1995 has played with the Jay Ungar-Molly Mason Band, and leads his own Blue Suitcase Trio. In 1999, he recorded trumpet and piano duets with Louis Mazetier.

Ecklund is a professional arranger and music copyist, has worked as a copyist for NBC Television's Saturday Night Live (2003-08), and has been commissioned to write numerous arrangements for other groups. He played cornet on the soundtracks for three of Woody Allen's movies during the 1990s, and has released albums such as Strings Attached (Arbors), Ecklund in Elkhart (Jazzology), Swing It (Jazzology), Extra (Jazzology), Keep a Song in Your Soul (Jazzology), Rhythm for Sale (Jazzology), Gigs: Reminiscing in Music (Arbors), Horn of Plenty (CJ), and Peter Ecklund and the Melody Makers (Stomp Off). He has also written arrangements for, and performed on several educational CDs for Music Minus One records.

Ecklund is an active traditional jazz performer and has published articles about early jazz for the Historic Brass Society, as well as publishing transcriptions of Bix Beiderbecke and Louis Armstrong solos taken from early recordings (Colin Publications). He continues to appear at major early jazz music festivals around the world.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Peter Ecklund's official website: http://peterecklundmusic.com.

Edelbrock, Dennis ("Denny") (b. St. Louis, Missouri, July 16, 1953). American trumpeter. Edelbrock's father Elbert was a band director who received the Iowa Bandmaster of the Year award when he retired in 1987; his mother Charlotte is a pianist. His first trumpet lessons were with his father and grandfather. By age twelve, he was arranging music for various performances, something he would continue to do throughout his career. He lived in Peoria, Illinois, until junior high school, and then in Iowa City, Iowa, graduating from West High School in 1971. As a teenager, he would be driven by his father to Chicago for lessons with Vincent Cichowicz. Edelbrock studied with John Beer at the University of Iowa where he earned a bachelor of music degree in 1975.

Edelbrock joined the US Army Band in 1975, and became a member of the Army Brass Quintet and the Army Herald Trumpets. He has performed on countless tours, played at the inauguration ceremonies for seven U.S. presidents, and participated in many White House ceremonies. He has received the Meritorious Service Award, and is the US Army's Senior Special Bugler. He performed at the 1984 Summer Olympics in Los Angeles, and at President Reagan's funeral.

As an active freelance performer in the Washington/ Baltimore area, Edelbrock has performed with the Metropolitan Opera, Bolshoi Ballet, Kirov Ballet, National Symphony Orchestra, Royal Spanish Ballet, New York City Ballet, and many other groups. He is an original member of the Washington Bach Consort, and is a founding member of Classical Brass, a quintet that presents live television broadcasts from Washington's National Cathedral each Christmas and Easter. The quintet has released CDs titled Honor to Our Soldiers, Christmas at the Cathedral, and Music from America's Golden Age on the Nonesuch and American Heritage Society labels. He has recorded soundtracks for several films including Contact (video version), Wag the Dog, Gardens of Stone, and various productions for the Discovery Channel.

Edelbrock studied with Adel Sanchez at Catholic University where he earned master and doctor of music degrees in 1978 and 1983, respectively. He is an adjunct professor at George Mason University where he established the National Trumpet Competition in 1992. NTC has provided opportunities to over two thousand young trumpeters to compete in solo and ensemble categories. He is leader of the US Army Brass Quintet, which has performed worldwide, given concerts at numerous international music conventions, and appeared on several television programs including the Today Show. As a composer and arranger, he has had his works featured at the US Olympics, the NBC special, Christmas in Washington, and Country Music Television's Nashville Now, among others.

Edelbrock and his wife Laura, a pianist and choral director, have a daughter named Emma (b. 2000). He is a volunteer for several Arlington area youth groups, and enjoys playing the piano and composing. He received the Excellence in Teaching Award from George Mason University in 1996.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Biggs, Philip. "Dennis Edelbrock" (The Brass Herald, Feb. 2010); "Dennis Edelbrock" (www.musiciansconcertband.com/Edelbrock.pdf); "Dennis Edelbrock" (www.trumpetguild.org); personal interview, Jan. 23, 2012.

Eder, Gotthard (b. Salzburg, Austria, Feb. 17, 1971). Austrian trumpeter. Eder graduated from the High School for Musicians in Salzburg. He was also a student of Josef Pomberger at the Vienna College of Music and Performing Arts. Since 1999, he has been a principal trumpet of the Vienna State Opera Orchestra and the Vienna Philharmonic.

Bibl.: Lachtner, Thomas. Der Wiener Klangstil auf der Trompete: Historische Entwicklung und empirische Hörstest-Studie (master's thesis, Vienna University, 2005); "Gotthard Eder" (www.salzburg.com/wiki/index.php/Gotthard_Eder).

Edison, Harry ("Sweets") (b. Columbus, Ohio, Oct. 10, 1915; d. Columbus, Ohio, July 27, 1999). American trumpeter. Edison's early years were spent in Kentucky, but his family moved back to Columbus, Ohio, when he was twelve. He began playing the trumpet when one of his uncles taught him a few scales, but other than that, he was self-taught. During his high school years, he played with Earl Hood's band and with Morrison's Grenadiers. After graduation, he played with Alphonse Trent's band, Eddie Johnson's Crackerjacks, and the Jeter-Pillars orchestra (1933). He then led his own groups (1933-36).

Edison moved to New York City in 1937 and played with the Lucky Millinder and Mills Blue Rhythm Band with which he made his recording debut. The following year, he joined the Count Basie Orchestra, playing with it for most of eleven years until February of 1950. Inspired by the playing of Louis Armstrong, Roy Eldridge, and saxophonist Lester Young, Edison acquired a full round tone and a lot of drive, but a narrow range. He received the humorous nickname of "Sweets" from Lester Young because his swinging style was not so sweet. His minimalistic jazz solos around one note were his trademark. With Basie, he appears in the film, Hit Parade of 1943.

After leaving Basie's orchestra in 1950, Edison played with Machito (1950), Josephine Baker (American tour), Jimmy Rushing, and Buddy Rich (1951-53), as well as leading his own combos. He then moved to Los Angeles and worked in various recording studios, performing background solos with numerous artists including several recordings with Frank Sinatra accompanied by the Nelson Riddle orchestra. He became the musical director for Joe Williams in 1961, and played throughout the 1960s, '70s, and '80s with Eddie "Lockjaw" Davis. In 1964, he co-led a quintet with Coleman Hawkins including Jo Jones in London. He made no recordings between 1966 and 1974, but resumed again after that time. Edison was active in the 1970s and 1980s, playing with Benny Carter (Memorial to Satchmo in 1971), Lee Strasberg (From Satchmo to Miles in July 1972), many Grandes Parades in Nice (including a duet with Dizzy Gillespie in 1976), the Basie Alumni (1981), Woody Herman All Stars (1985), coleading a Big Band with Frank Wess (1989), Lincoln Center with Wynton Marsalis and Doc Cheatham (1994), Lionel Hampton & His Gold Men of Jazz with Clark Terry (1994), and the Statesmen (1997).

As his upper range continued to decrease because of age, his solos became more and more rhythmically unique and personal. This made his trumpet solos easily identifiable even within a few notes. Edison was a perfect model for the mainstream jazz trumpet style. He influenced Pee Wee Jackson, Eddie Roane, and Joe Newman.

Sweets appeared in the film, Jammin' the Blues, in 1944. Among his best albums are Budd Johnson & the Four Brass Giants (on Riverside), Paul Quinichette & his Swingtette (on Pathé), Duke Ellington's Back to Back (on Verve), Harry Edison-Buck Clayton and Vice Versa (Verve), Just Friends (Black and Blue), Pres and Sweets (Verve), and Simply Sweets, Jawbreakers, and Edison's Lights, each on the Original Jazz Classics label.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Effros, Robert ("Bob") (b. London, England, Dec. 6, 1900; d. New York, New York, Sept. 12,1983). American trumpeter. Although Effros was born in London, at age three his family moved to Memphis, Tennessee. He learned to play drums during his teens, but was a bugler while serving in the US Army from 1917 to 1919. After his military obligation, he moved to Baltimore and began playing with a band led by Bea Palmer. He spent most of the 1920s in the Vincent Lopez Orchestra, which became quite popular. After a lengthy tour of Europe with the Lopez organization, Effros decided that he wanted to stay in one place for a while, so he accepted a position as a member of a house orchestra in Manhattan, New York, that was recording using the Vitaphone process. There, he recorded more than 125 discs during a ten-year period, as well as recording numerous soundtracks for feature films.

Effros formed his own dance orchestra in 1929 that recorded for the Brunswick label. He worked mostly as a studio player during the 1930s and '40s, and also played with Alfred d'Artega's orchestra. He was a composer of some distinction, writing the popular tunes Why the Twenties Roared and Cornfed. During his later years, he retired in Long Island, New York.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bob Effros" (www.artistdirect.com/artist/bio./bob-effros/608333).

Photo: Vincent Lopez Orchestra (Bob Effros pictured just to the right of Lopez.)

Egan, [Joseph] Denis (b. London, England, Mar. 12, 1919; d. London, England, Jan. 9, 1990). British trumpeter and cornetist. Egan came from a very musical family: his grandfather, John Kent, was a noted cornet player; his father played viola and tuba; his mother, Viola Kent, was a professional trumpeter, and her twin sister, Minnie, was a trombone player in dance bands. Egan began his musical studies on the violin, but soon switched to trumpet. His first trumpet teacher was John Solomon. He later studied with George Eskdale (1942-43), who was his main influence. He also had one lesson with Leslie "Jiver" Hutchinson on the upper range of the trumpet.

Egan played in the Welsh Guards (1939-43) and at the Streatham Theatre with an orchestra led by Teddy Foster who was a Louis Armstrong adherent. In that orchestra, Egan backed Maurice Chevalier, Stéphane Grappelli, and many others. He began his impressive orchestral career in the London Philharmonic Orchestra (1943-48) as solo cornet and second trumpet, alongside principal trumpeter Malcolm Arnold, who also was a major influence on him. With the LPO, he recorded Stravinsky's Petrushka (solo cornet part) in 1946 under Maestro Ernest Ansermet.

Egan played with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra (1952-54), the Sadler's Wells Opera Orchestra (1966-73), and the English National Opera Orchestra (previously Sadler's Wells, 1973-77). He rejoined the LPO in 1956 (USSR tour) and 1959-64. From 1948 until 1966, Egan was a freelancer in London and played extensively on film soundtracks and radio. He played as fourth trumpet in the Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (London, October 1947, Raymond Sabarich, principal trumpet), Roland Petit Ballet (c1949), Vic Oliver (alongside Max Goldberg, trumpet), performed Haydn's Concerto (1954, BBC Television), with Michael Hobson's Trio for Ballets (Hobson dedicated a Sonata da Chiesa for solo trumpet to Egan), Boyd Neel Chamber Orchestra (also known as Philhomusica), Merce Cunningham Ballets (with John Cage), the London Philharmonia (as a guest for Mahler's Third Symphony where he played the posthorn solo on the flugelhorn under Goldschmidt at the Radio in 1959), Joan Sutherland's rendition of Handel's Let the Bright Seraphim (television, 1960), and with Benny Goodman (playing Weber's Concerto for Clarinet on the television, 1967). As principal, he made almost all of the recordings with the Pro Arte Orchestra (1957 to c1970, including Janacek's Sinfonietta in 1959), and by the New [London] Symphony Orchestra on RCA, 1960-61). He also recorded with The Beatles (Hey Jude!, 1968). Egan can be heard on many film soundtracks, such as Lawrence of Arabia (with the LPO and Malcolm Arnold, principal), The Sound Barrier (c1952 with Ernest Hall), Fifty Five Days to Peking (1963, with Cliff Haines, trumpet), The Fall of the Roman Empire (1964, with Derek Watkins), and James Bond: Casino Royal (1967, with Bert Ezzard, high note screamer).

Because of troubles with his false teeth, Egan ended his career in 1978, although he still played the trumpet as much as possible until his death. From 1977-88, he was a permanent member of Michel Laplace's Trumpet Workshop. He also played with singer Nat Monroe (August 1978, on piccolo trumpet) and the Fulham Brass Band (1987).

From 1976 to his death, he was a teacher at the London College. After his death, all of his trumpets were given to the London College of Music.

Egan made the first recording of Henry Purcell's Trumpet Sonata No. 1 in D Major in 1958, on a V. Mahillon trumpet in D (Philhomusica under Anthony Lewis on Oiseau-Lyre LP 50171). He was versatile enough to have played under Maestros Charles Munch, Lorin Maazel, Jean Martinon, Sir Malcolm Sargent, Charles Mackarras (his favorite conductor), Thomas Beecham, Arturo Toscanini, Pierre Monteux, Paul Paray, and Herbert von Karajan, and with Dennis Brain, Isaac Stern, and Paul Tortelier, Like Eskdale, Egan favored the C trumpet. Above all, he liked the French trumpeters Eugène Foveau, Raymond Sabarich, Albert Adriano, Louis Menardi, Roger Delmotte, Maurice André, and Fred Gérard.

Egan died in London from a heart attack at the age of seventy. His last words were, I'm a trumpet player.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Egger, Rainer (b. Basel, Switzerland, Sept. 22, 1947). Swiss instrument maker. His father, Adolf Egger, was born in Basel, Switzerland, in 1911 and played the tuba. Adolf apprenticed as an instrument maker under Wilhelm Bellon, and opened his own shop in 1940. Rainer, also a tuba player who plays in an amateur quintet, guild band, and orchestra, apprenticed under his father in 1964 at the age of seventeen. He took over the shop when his father died in 1972. He also worked for a brief but important half year (1976) in Renold Schilke's workshop in Chicago.

Rainer Egger has always had a desire to learn all he could about the acoustics and materials of brass instruments. He began to concentrate on making replicas of Baroque instruments in 1976 in conjunction with Dr. Edward H. Tarr, a field already pioneered by his father. During the 1980s, he added bass trombone replicas of an early trombone by Isaac Ehe (1586-1632), and later a horn reproduction and an alto and tenor sackbut, as well as a complete set of Classical trombones. He gave lectures on brass instrument making and acoustics in Rostock, Bern, Lucerne, and various other places. He has also produced a set of Aïda trumpets for Nikolaus Harnoncourt and the Zurich Opera. His Baroque trumpet replicas are based on instruments originally made by Johann Wilhelm Haas, Johann Leonhard Ehe III, and Michael Nagel. He produces a replica keyed trumpet in G, invention and demi-lune trumpets, and a medieval slide trumpet, as well as a tromba da caccia plus modern piston and rotary valve trumpets. The business is a family-run operation with his wife Rosa (b. 1954), and son Lenhard (b. 1987), and eleven craftsmen. In 2008, Blechblas-Instrumentenbau Egger took over Galileo Trumpets, makers of high quality piston and rotary valve trumpets.

Bibl.: Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Egger Instruments" (Brass Bulletin, no. 105, I/1999); "Blechblas-Instrumentenbau Egger" (www.eggerinstruments.ch/home.htm); personal interview, Mar. 1, 2010.

Ehe (family). German brass-instrument makers. The five generations of the German family of brass instrument makers, Ehe, were among the leading Baroque craftsmen in Nuremberg. Each family member was born and died in Nuremberg. The first generation was comprised of two brothers: Isaak (baptized on Jan. 23, 1586 and buried on Aug. 25, 1632) and Georg (baptized on Dec. 25, 1595 and buried on Apr. 17, 1668). They were known not only for their craftsmanship, but also for their quarrelsomeness. Isaak established a very high standard from the beginning, as can be seen by the lavishly ornamented bass trombone made by him in 1612 (now housed in the Germanisches Nationalmuseum in Nuremberg).

The second generation of Ehe makers consisted only of Georg's son, Johann Leonhard (baptized on Dec. 7, 1638 and buried on July 22, 1707). Johann Leonhard had two sons: Johann Leonhard II (baptized on June 18, 1664 and buried on July 10, 1724) and Friedrich (baptized on Feb. 4, 1669 and buried on Feb. 21, 1743). The fourth generation consisted of three members: Johann Leonhard III (baptized on Mar. 13, 1700 and buried on Apr. 19, 1771), [Martin] Friedrich (baptized on July 23, 1714 and buried on May 28, 1779)—both sons of Friedrich, and Wolf Magnus (baptized on Nov. 22, 1690 and buried on Jan. 19, 1794)—son of Johann Leonhard II. The last important member was Wolf Magnus II (baptized on Dec. 1, 1726 and buried on Jan. 19, 1794), son of Johann Leonhard III.

The first three generations of the Ehe family prospered financially, but the last two struggled. Some of the later members were buried as paupers. Natural trumpets built by Johann Leonhard Ehe III (nos. 217, 218, and 219) in 1746 (now contained in the Germanisches Nationalmuseum) have been copied in modern times more than any other Baroque trumpets.

Bibl.: Baines, Anthony C. Brass Instruments: Their History and Development (Faber and Faber); Tarr, Edward H. "Ehe." (Oxford Music Online); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

Ehrling, Thore [Olof Gottfrid] (b. Stockholm, Sweden, Dec. 29, 1912; d. Lidingö, Sweden, Oct. 21, 1994). Swedish trumpeter and bandleader. Ehrling was the top dance bandleader in Sweden during the 1940s and '50s. He began playing alto horn as a boy, but switched to trumpet before attending the Royal Swedish Academy of Music (1931-35). While in school, he played with Frank Vernon's band (as a tenor sax player, 1930-34). After graduating, he joined Håkan von Eichwald's band (1935-38), and recorded with Benny Carter (1936) and Arne Hülphers (1936).

In 1938, Ehrling formed a jazz septet that gradually grew to a large dance orchestra by the early 1940s, and which soon became the most popular one in Sweden. Ehrling arranged most of the band's music. In 1941, he was the cofounder of Ehrling & Löfwenholm (from 1952 known as Thore Ehrling Musik, and from 1959 as Ehrlingförlagen), a successful music publishing house. In addition to swing music, Ehrling was a skilled Dixieland trumpeter.

During the early 1950s, Ehrling played fewer trumpet solos, yielding to the talented Gösta Törner. By 1955 or so, Ehrling gave up the trumpet completely, but continued leading the band until 1958. After disbanding the group, he became director of the Swedish Radio's Dance Orchestra, recording hundreds of broadcasts. During his career, Ehrling recorded over one thousand tunes as trumpeter or bandleader. Much of his music has been released on labels such as Dragon, Ancha, Phontastic, Odeon, and HMV. Ehrling also composed film music. His last recording was made in 1972.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Eichberger, Albrecht (b. Neustadt, Germany, June 13, 1950). German trumpeter. Both of Eichberger's parents were military musicians, and his brother is a fine pianist. His father was also a forest warden. He attended a music school in Saarbrücken where he studied with the famous soloist, Adolf Scherbaum. Eichberger also studied with Roger Delmotte for two years in Versailles.

Eichberger's career began as a member of the NDR Symphony Orchestra in Hamburg. Since then, most of his career has been as a soloist, specializing in Baroque and Classical music. He is a professor at the music school in Münster. His CD recordings include Works for Trumpet and Organ, Vols. 1 & 2 (Hänssler Classic) and Virtuoso Music for Trumpet and Organ.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Albrecht Eichberger's official website: www.albrecht-eichberger.de).

Eichborn, Hermann Ludwig (b. Breslau, Germany, Oct. 30, 1847; d. Gries, nr. Bolzano, South Tirol, Austria, Apr. 15, 1918). German musicologist, author, composer, and trumpeter. Eichborn's father Louis was a world-renowned banker. Eichborn received his law degree in 1870 from the University of Jena. He eventually became a deputy judge in Breslau, but relinquished a career in law in order to devote himself to music. He studied musicology with organist E. Bohn, and trumpet with Adolf Schulz; Eichborn also played the horn.

Although Eichborn was mainly known as a composer, he wrote two texts concerning the trumpet: Die Trompete in alter und neuer Zeit (published 1881 by M. Sändig) and Das alte Clarinblasen auf Trompeten (1894), which has been of particular interest to modern performers. In it, Eichborn expresses his views on the lost art of clarino playing, and opines that it is futile to attempt to reproduce this art today [i.e.,during his lifetime]. In addition, he wrote a pioneering article, "Girolamo Fantini, ein Virtuos des 17. Jahrhundert und seine Trompeten-Schule," for Monatshefte für Musikgeschichte (1890).

Eichborn lived in Munich briefly in 1890, and in Gries after 1891, where he owned a vineyard and employed a private orchestra of about twenty-five musicians.

Bibl.: Eichborn, Hermann Ludwig. Das alte Clarinblasen auf Trompeten (edition by Edward Tarr and Stephen Glover, published by The Brass Press; edition by Gerald Endsley published by Tromba Publications; English translation as "The Old Art of Clarino Playing on Trumpet" by Bryan R. Simms, Tromba Publications, 1976; and facsimile edition with an essay in German and English by Edward Tarr, Haas-Verlag Cologne 1998); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); "Hermann Ludwig Eichborn" (http://de.wikipedia.org).

Eichenberg, Walter (b. Großburschula [near Eisenach], Germany, Dec. 20, 1922). German trumpeter, composer, and bandleader. Eichenberg grew up on his family's farm in the rural area of Eschwege. He studied violin, and soon enrolled in the music school in Zschopau (Saxony), where he switched to trumpet, but was drafted into military service in August of 1941 at the height of World War II in Germany. He played in military bands for a year, but in 1942 found himself on the eastern front in battle, losing one eye. While recuperating, he secretly listened to an Allied radio station that played the music of Benny Goodman, Glenn Miller, and others, which inspired his love for big band music. He was sent into battle again, was wounded a second time, and in 1945 was briefly a prisoner of war until the fighting was over in July of that year.

Back home in Großburschla, Eichenberg received a letter from an old schoolmate inviting him to Chemnitz to join a jazz sextet, the Original American Swing Sextet. They played for three months in Burgstädt, and then in Zwickau. After six months with the group, he joined the Karl Walter Band in Chemnitz. In 1947, Eichenberg joined Kurt Henkels's radio big band in Leipzig that included the talented trumpeter, Horst Fischer. It was in Henkels's band that Eichenberg became a star trumpeter. One critic wrote, If Walter Eichenberg starts a trumpet chorus, he stands up like a rocket, playing like one too. He plays magnificently, and he's shooting every tone. Eichenberg also played in Henkels's combo that consisted of a few members of the band. A musician's poll in 1956 listed him as the top trumpeter in East Germany. In addition to playing trumpet, Eichenberg was a marvelous arranger, composer, and vocalist. By 1948, the Henkels band was forming a clear identity of its own, recording many of Eichenberg's arrangements and compositions.

In the early 1950s, Eichenberg took a short leave from the Henkels organization to write arrangements for Erwin Lehn's band in West Germany that were sent to Lehn by mail. Eichenberg rejoined Henkels's band in 1954, just in time for a documentary film about the band called Musik, Musik, Musik, produced by DEFA, a state owned film production company in East Germany (German Democratic Republic, or GDR, or DDR). Some of the works Eichenberg wrote for this film became standards in the German big band repertory.

Eichenberg became the leader of the Henkels band during the early 1960s, and wrote a string of hit tunes (often for his wife, vocalist Helga Brauer). It is possible that GDR legislation requiring that sixty percent of a band's repertoire must be non-Western may have inspired Eichenberg's creative output. Nonetheless, he wrote over two hundred pieces, including Trumpet Fox, Kaskaden, My Rhythm, Am Schnürchen ("On A Little String"), Whisky Soda, Roulette, and Grand mit Vieren. Many of his tunes were recorded by the Qualiton, Amiga, and A(E)lsteral labels, the latter being issued by Walter's son Peter. The former Henkels band was reformed, and began touring and performing on television. Eichenberg won the Kunstpreis der DDR award (the only non-classical musician to win it). It is a pity that only one long-play album was released by his band.

After Germany was reunified in 1989, Eichenberg passed the leadership of his band to Eberhard Weise, but helped with the band until 1991 when he retired. Today, he lives in the southern part of Leipzig.

Bibl.: Conrad, Gerhard. "Walter Eichenberg: Destination Swing" (IAJRC Journal, Dec.1, 2011); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Eichler, Horst (b. Heidenau, Germany, Oct. 22, 1920; d. Westendorf, Germany, July 5, 2001). German trumpeter. As a boy, Eichler learned to play piano and violin from his father before learning to play the trumpet. He studied at the Orchestral School of the Sächsische Staatkapelle and the Academy of Music in Dresden (1935-39). His teacher was Wilhelm Simon, but he possibly took a few lessons with Eduard Seifert as well. While still a student, he played in the City Theater Orchestra of Meißen (1936-37), and joined the Dresden State Opera Orchestra in 1938. After graduating, he served in the military.

Eichler was one of the principal trumpeters in the Berlin Philharmonic (1950-52; 1954-86), and also played in the Berlin Philharmonic Brass Ensemble (1954-86). He began teaching at the Berlin Conservatory in 1961, and in 1967 taught at the Hochschule der Künste in Berlin. Among his pupils was Max Sommerhalder.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Eidenberger, Josef (b. Vöcklabruck, Austria, Nov. 22, 1956). Austrian trumpeter. Eidenberger studied at the Bruckner Conservatory in Linz from 1972 to 1980. In 1977, he won first prize in a national competition for young musicians, and played as a member of the Bruckner Orchestra. From 1986 to 1989, he served as a substitute in the Bayerische Staatsoper München, and since 1987 has been teaching at the Bruckner Conservatory. He is an active soloist and chamber music performer, and was a guest professor at the Salzburg Mozarteum (1995-96).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct., 2008).

Eisensmith, Kevin (b. York, Pennsylvania, Mar. 31, 1956). American trumpeter. Eisensmith's father, Richard, was a factory foreman, and his mother, Phyllis, a secretary. While growing up in York, Pennsylvania, Eisensmith studied with Claire Gingrich, as well as with his band director, Holman James. After graduating from William Penn Senior High in 1974, he attended Indiana University of Pennsylvania where he studied with William Becker, and received his bachelor of music education degree in 1978. He then went to graduate school at Georgia State University where he studied with John Head, and earned a master of music degree. Doctoral studies were with Seymour Rosenfeld at Temple University in Philadelphia. He completed his DMA degree in 1994.

From 1979 to 1984, Eisensmith was solo trumpet of the US Army Forces Command Band in Atlanta, Georgia. He played as an extra/substitute trumpeter with the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, and did extensive freelance work. He performed in numerous shows with many celebrities, such as Carol Channing, Roberta Flack, the Lettermen, Natalie Cole, Peabo Bryson, Julio Iglesias, Barbara Eden, Andy Williams, Gladys Knight and the Pips, the Osmond Brothers, Bob Hope, Richard Harris, Bernadette Peters, Frank Sinatra Jr., Melissa Manchester, Aaron Neville, the Moody Blues, Peter Nero, Marvin Hamlisch, Doc Severinsen, and others.

Eisensmith taught at Eastern Kentucky University from 1990 to 1998. He then assumed a professorship at his alma mater, Indiana University of Pennsylvania (1998 to the present) where he teaches trumpet and jazz ensemble. He is also the principal trumpet of the Johnstown Symphony Orchestra. He has written numerous articles for various brass magazines, and for many years was the editor of a column in the International Trumpet Guild Journal. He served on the board of directors of the ITG and was its president from 2009 to 2011.

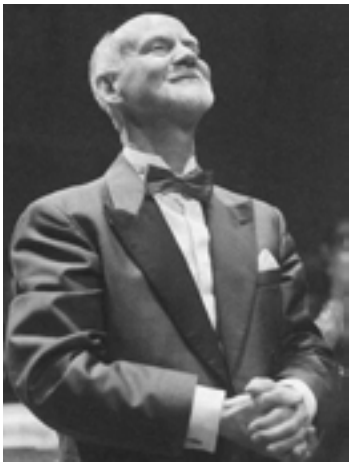
Eisensmith and his wife Kathy have two sons, Christopher and Nicholas. When not playing the trumpet, he enjoys gardening.

Bibl.: "Kevin Eisensmith" (www.arts.ipu.edu); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Kevin Eisensmith" (http://centerstage.com-selmer.com); personal interview, Jan. 20, 2010.

Eklund, Bengt (b. Norrköping, Sweden, Jan. 1, 1944; d. Göteborg, Sweden, Mar. 30, 2007). Swedish trumpeter. Eklund had an intense interest in the history of brass music. He studied in Chicago with Vincent Cichowicz and in Basel, Switzerland, with Edward Tarr.



Eklund also studied with Knud Hovaldt and Pierre Thibaud. His early career was primarily as an orchestral player with the Gärle Symphony Orchestra, Aarhus Symphony, and the Gothenburg Symphony (1966-1975).

Eklund had dual professorships at the Academy of Music and Drama at Gothenburg University, and at the Norwegian State Academy of Music in Oslo. He became one of the greatest teachers in Europe. In 1982, he founded and directed the world-famous Gothenburg Brass Band, an ensemble which performed throughout the world and won the 1988 World Championship in New Zealand. Before that, in 1970, he also founded and directed the Bengt Eklund Baroque Ensemble that consisted of twenty-four performers of the Baroque trumpet and four timpanists.

Eklund was elected president of the Euro-ITG (1994-2000) and hosted the 1997 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Göteborg. He received the ITG's Award of Merit in 2006, one year before he died of cancer. Bengt's son, Niklas, is a world-class trumpet soloist and specialist of the Baroque trumpet.

Bibl.: "Bengt Eklund" (www.trumpetguild.org.news); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Eklund, Niklas (b. Göteborg, Sweden, July 27, 1969). Swedish trumpeter. Eklund began playing the trumpet at age five guided by his famous father, Bengt Eklund (1944-2007), also a trumpeter, as were his grandfather and great-grandfather. He entered the music school at Gothenburg University (under his father), and studied privately with Bo Nilsson in Malmö and Pierre Thibaud in Paris. Eklund became interested in the natural (valveless) trumpet during the 1980s, and moved to Basel, Switzerland, to study with Edward H. Tarr at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis from 1988 to 1991. After displaying a special talent for the Baroque trumpet, Eklund embarked on a 1991 tour of England with the ensemble Concerto Köln, and was coprincipal trumpet of the Basel Radio Symphony from 1991 to 1996. In 1993, he was a soloist on the Baroque trumpet during the Euro-International Trumpet Guild Conference, as well as at the Moscow Conservatory. His reputation as a top soloist of Baroque music on the Baroque trumpet spread throughout the world as he appeared with the London Baroque, Collegium Cartusiannum (in Cologne), Drottningholms Baroque Ensemble, and Joshua Rifkin's Bach Ensemble in New York.

Eklund won first prize in the inaugural Altenburg International Baroque Trumpet Competition in Bad Säckingen, Germany, hosted in 1996 by Dr. Edward Tarr. He became a soloist under the auspices of the Joanne Rile Artists Management in Philadelphia, touring the world and releasing albums for Naxos such as The Art of the Baroque Trumpet, Vols. 1-5, and Trumpet Concertos. Eklund was nominated for a Grammy Award in 2006 for his recording of Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 for Naxos. He also participated in Sir John Eliot Gardiner's recordings, Bach Pilgrimage (DG Archive, 2000).

Eklund performed concerts in Carnegie Hall, Chicago's Orchestra Hall, Berlin Philharmonic Hall, the Concertgebouw in Amsterdam, and many other leading venues. Beginning in 1999, he also taught at the music conservatory in Göteborg. He suddenly withdrew from playing in 2009 after an embouchure accident during the previous year, but resumed performing in 2011.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Niklas Eklund's official website: www.niklaseklund.com; "Niklas Eklund" (liner notes to CD recording, The Art of the Baroque Trumpet, Vol. 1, Naxos); "Niklas Eklund" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Elam, Lawrence ("Larry") Joel (b. Oklahoma City, Oklahoma, Mar. 2, 1943; d. Hamburg, Germany, Jan. 29, 2008). American trumpeter.

While in high school, Elam was a popular and talented student: a star on the track team, the Honor Society president, and a gifted cornetist. He studied with William Vacchiano at The Juilliard School from 1962 to 1966, and with Maurice André in Paris (occasionally, between 1963 and 1966).

Elam began his career freelancing in New York City, performing with a variety of musical organizations including the Metropolitan Opera and the New York Philharmonic. He was the principal trumpet of the Australian Elizabethan Trust Sydney Orchestra (1970-75), which later became the Australian Opera and Ballet Orchestra. A highly versatile musician, he was also the star soloist in the Daly Wilson Big Band, which toured internationally. He moved to Germany in 1977, when he became principal of the Hamburg Philharmonic and the State Opera Orchestra of Hamburg. During his impressive career, he performed or recorded with Frank Sinatra, the Supremes, James Last, Dieter Bohlen, Achim Reichel, Bobby McFerrin, and the Ten of the Best trumpet ensemble (1991 to Jan. 21, 2008).

Elam's life came to a sudden end on January 29, 2008—one month before his planned retirement—when the automobile he was driving to a rehearsal went off the road and into a canal. He was sixty-four. He was survived by his life partner, Klaudia Meyer, and his two children—Debbie and Bruno.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Larry Elam" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/08/0858LElamObit.html).

Eldridge, [David] Roy ("Little Jazz") (b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Jan. 30, 1911; d. Valley Stream, New York, Feb. 26, 1989). American trumpeter. Eldridge played the drums when he was six years old, and later took up the trumpet. By the age of sixteen, he was playing professionally in carnivals and various Midwestern jazz bands. He moved to New York City at a young age, and worked in dance bands in Harlem.

During the early 1930s, Eldridge played with various groups in Pittsburgh, Baltimore, and New York. He became a huge Louis Armstrong fan. In 1935, he recorded his first solos and joined Fletcher Henderson's orchestra as lead trumpet and occasional singer. He formed his own eight-piece band in Chicago a year later, and recorded two noteworthy solos, After You've Gone and Wobash Stomp. He studied radio engineering in 1938, and added two players to his band. In 1939, he took his band to New York City where it performed a series of concerts at the Arcadia Ballroom and at Kelly's Stable.

Eldridge was one of the first African-American musicians to become a regular member of a white jazz band. When he joined Gene Krupa's band in 1941, several racial incidents occurred during tours, but onstage he became a star through his renditions of Rockin' Chair and Let Me Off Uptown. When Krupa's band broke up in 1943, Eldridge freelanced and formed his own band in New York. He joined Artie Shaw's band in 1944, and began playing with Norman Grantz's Jazz at the Philharmonic in 1948.

By the late 1940s, Eldridge's music had become old-fashioned in America. While in Paris on tour with the Benny Goodman orchestra in 1950, he decided to stay there because at that time he was much more appreciated by the French people than the Americans. He made some of his best recordings there, including Fireworks. After returning to the United States in 1951, Eldridge played with Benny Carter, Johnny Hodges, and Coleman Hawkins, the latter with whom he made some excellent recordings. He briefly performed with Ella Fitzgerald and Count Basie during the 1960s, but his relationships with them were not successful.

Eldridge suffered a stroke in the early 1970s that forced him to change his playing style. While he had been a "jazz warrior" earlier in his career, his doctor insisted that he not play with the excitement and physical exertion he was accustomed to. He managed to play drums and piano for a living, but his trumpet work all but ceased. However, his performances at the 1977 Montreux Jazz Festival with the Oscar Peterson Trio were very successful.

Eldridge was one of the pioneers of bop music. He was a great influence on Dizzy Gillespie and others who brought bop and bebop into the limelight. His best-known albums are Little Jazz, After You've Gone, Roy Eldridge in Paris, Just You—Just Me, Happy Times, Montreux 1977, and Blues in the Night. He can be seen as a member of Krupa's band in the 1941 film, Ball of Fire.

Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Elliott, Don [Helfman, Don Elliott] (b. Somerville, New Jersey, Oct. 21, 1926; d. Weston, Connecticut, July 5, 1984). American trumpeter. Elliott studied the piano at age six, and began playing the accordion at age eight. Soon afterward, he learned to play the baritone horn, mellophone, and trumpet. He worked with Bill Evans as a teenager, and also played mellophone in his high school concert band. He attended the Institute of Musical Arts (now The Juilliard School) from 1944 to 1945, and then played trumpet in an army band, after which he attended the University of Miami in 1947 where he studied arranging and played vibes.

After dropping out of college in 1948, Elliott played trumpet in the Jan Raye Trio and was a vocalist with Hi, Lo, Jack and the Dame (1948-49). He moved to New York and played vibes as a member of the George Shearing Quintet (1950-51). He later played with Teddy Wilson, Benny Goodman (1952), Terry Gibbs (1952-53), and Buddy Rich (1953). He formed his own quartet that was active from 1954 to 1960, and for five years in a row, was voted "Best Miscellaneous Instrumentalist" in a poll by Downbeat magazine (1953-57).

Elliot was influenced by the trumpet playing of Harry James, and recorded numerous albums for labels such as Victor, Savoy, Columbia, Riverside, MGM, Camden, Fantasy, Bethlehem, Vanguard, and ABC-Paramount. His solo album Double Trumpet Doings was quite popular, but his hit novelty recording, The Nutty Squirrels (1960), received the most airplay.

During the 1960s and '70s, Elliott mainly worked in Broadway show orchestras. For his last twenty years, he worked primarily as a composer and producer for commercials, television, and film scores. He made no jazz recordings after 1961, but was a special guest jazz soloist at Carnegie Hall with the New York Jazz Repertory Company in 1975. Some of his other albums include Counterpoint for Six Valves (Riverside), A Musical Offering (ABC-Paramount), Jamaica Jazz (ABC-Paramount), and Rejuvenation (Columbia). He sang on the soundtracks for films such as The Getaway (starring Steve McQueen), The Hot Rock, and The Happy Hooker. He played on, or composed music for over five thousand jingles, and recorded sixty albums altogether. Because of his versatility, he was referred to as "The Human Instrument." He sang and played trumpet, trombone, mellophone, baritone horn, flugelhorn, piano, and vibes.

Elliott was a pioneer in multi-track recording. He formed a production company and opened the first multi-track studio in New York. In his later years, he moved the studio to Westin, Connecticut, where he worked until the end of his life. He died from cancer at the age of fifty-seven.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Don Elliott" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Ellis, Don[ald Johnson] (b. Los Angeles, California, July 25, 1934; d. Hollywood, California, Dec. 17, 1978). American trumpeter. Ellis's father was a Methodist minister and his mother a church organist. He attended West High School in Minneapolis, Minnesota, after which he attended Boston University and graduated with a degree in music composition in 1956; he was a student of John Coffey. A fine jazz trumpeter, Ellis joined the Glenn Miller Band led by Ray McKinley in 1956, but later in that year was drafted into military service and spent the next two years as a musician in Frankfurt, Germany.

After leaving the army in 1958, Ellis moved to Greenwich Village in New York City. He worked briefly with Charlie Barnet's band (1958), Claude Thornhill, Woody Herman, and then joined Maynard Ferguson's band in the spring of 1959. Later that year, Ellis left the Ferguson band and became involved in avant-garde jazz, recording albums with Charles Mingus (November 1959), George Russell (1962), and Eric Dolphy (1963). He also recorded albums with his own small group.

In 1962, Ellis went to Europe to participate in several jazz festivals and workshops, and when he returned to New York, founded the Improvisational Workshop Orchestra. He took lessons from Carmine Caruso. In 1963, he was trumpet soloist with the New York Philharmonic conducted by Leonard Bernstein in Larry Austin's Improvisations. He also soloed with the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C., playing Gunther Schuller's Journey into Jazz. A live performance of these two works by Ellis at Lincoln Center in New York under Bernstein and Schuller, with Benny Golson, and Eric Dolphy was recorded in 1964, and used as part of Leonard Bernstein's television series, Young People's Concerts. Ellis moved to Los Angeles in 1964 and began graduate work in ethnomusicology at UCLA. He also took trumpet lessons from John Clyman and Louis Maggio. His study of oriental music under Harihar Rao inspired him to mix jazz with Indian rhythms and meters. He and Rao authored an article that led to important performances on the East Coast. In November of 1967, Ellis's first symphony, Contrasts for Two Orchestras and Trumpet, was debuted by the Los Angeles Philharmonic under Zubin Mehta.

Beginning in 1965, Ellis led the Hindustani Jazz Sextet that featured him on trumpet, and his former teacher, Rao, on sitar and tabla; they performed around Los Angeles until 1971. From 1967 to 1971, Ellis organized a twenty-piece big band called the Don Ellis Orchestra that included an unusual rhythm section with Indian instruments. His compositions explored complex meters and tonalities. Vocalists were added, as well as electronic devices such as ring modulators, phasers, and echoplex machines to alter the timbre of the instruments. Ellis also introduced a four-valve quarter-tone trumpet, and became famous for his solos that were distorted by electronic means. Background lighting effects were also incorporated to reflect the hippie culture of the time.

Columbia Records signed Ellis and his band in 1967. Their first album, Electric Bath, received wide acclaim and was nominated for a Grammy Award. The album also won Downbeat magazine's "Album of the Year" award and reached number eight on the Billboard jazz charts. Later albums were titled Shock Treatment, Autumn, The Don Ellis Band Goes Underground, Live at Fillmore, Tears of Joy, and Connection. Ellis also received a Grammy Award for his film score to the 1971 movie, The French Connection, starring Gene Hackman. In 1975, he composed the score for The French Connection II. Later recordings on the MSP label include Soaring and Haiku. The Don Ellis Orchestra performed on a 1976 Shirley McLaine television special titled Where Do We Go From Here? The following year, Ellis signed with Atlantic Records and released an album titled Music from Other Galaxies and Planets.

Ellis had begun having health problems in 1974 when he was diagnosed as having Mitral stenosis, a condition that causes the heart to beat in irregular rhythms. A different hospital determined that he had an atrial-septal defect. Finally, a third diagnosis indicated cardio-myopathy. Ellis experienced a ventricular fibrillation event and was near death. He later described the incident: It sounds weird, I know, but it was a remarkably beautiful experience, maybe the ultimate high. His last public performance took place on April 21, 1978 in Century City, California. A few months later, he suffered a fatal heart attack at his parents' home in Hollywood. He died at the age of forty-four, and is buried in the Sheltering Hills section of the Forest Lawn Memorial Park in Hollywood.

Ellis was an innovative jazz musician who is appreciated today for his contributions to education. His two books, The New Rhythm Book (1972) and Quarter Tones (1975), are important texts, as are his numerous articles in Jazz and Downbeat magazines. The Don Ellis Library and Collection resides in the Ethnomusicology Archives at UCLA.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Feather, Leonard & Gitler, Ira. The Biographical Encyclopedia of Jazz (Oxford University Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Don Ellis" (Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Ellis, John Robert (b. Hinsdale, Illinois, Nov. 11, 1956). American trumpeter. Ellis began playing the trumpet at age ten, taking lessons through ninth grade with Robert Bajek. After graduating from Lyons Township High School in LaGrange, Illinois, Ellis attended Elmhurst College and Indiana State University for a short while, but transferred to the University of Illinois to study with David Hickman; he completed his bachelor of music degree in 1979. Ellis then became a graduate trumpet teaching assistant at Florida State University under Dr. Bryan Goff from 1979 to 1981, earning a master of music degree. During his time in Florida, he also served as an adjunct faculty member at Valdosta State College in nearby Valdosta, Georgia.

From 1981 to 1982, Ellis was vice president and music editor of Gothard Enterprises of San Francisco, a publisher that specialized in family-oriented books. He continued his education at Arizona State University, working as a doctoral student and graduate teaching assistant to David Hickman from 1982 to 1984. His DMA dissertation is titled Treatment of the Trumpet in the Bible and Its Relationship to the Sacred Solo Arias with Obbligato Trumpet by Johann Sebastian Bach.

Ellis accepted his current position as professor of trumpet at the State University of New York-Potsdam in the fall of 1984. He plays in the Potsdam Brass Quintet (faculty) and performs frequently with the National Arts Centre Orchestra of Canada. He is a frequent soloist and clinician, and has performed with Les Violons du Roy, Chris Botti, David Clayton-Thomas, Diana Krall, Canadian Brass, and other artists. He is currently principal trumpet of the Ottawa Symphony Orchestra and the Orchestra of Northern New York, and a member of Capital BrassWorks, Canada's premiere large brass ensemble.

Ellis and his wife Patricia were married in 1978, but divorced in 1996. His current life partner is Marsha Baxter, a professor of music education at SUNY-Potsdam. Ellis has two sons: Bryan (b. 1985) and Trevor (b. 1988). His hobbies include traveling, cooking, running, and yoga.

Bibl.: Ellis, John Robert. Treatment of the Trumpet in the Bible and Its Relationship to the Sacred Solo Arias with Obbligato Trumpet by Johann Sebastian Bach (unpublished DMA diss., Arizona State University, 1984); "John Ellis" (http:directory.potsdam.edu/?function=user=ellisjr); John Ellis's official website: www.johnellistrumpet.com; personal interview, Feb. 20, 2011.

Elman, Ziggy [Finkelman, Harry Aaron] (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, May 26, 1914; d. Van Nuys, California, June 26, 1968). American trumpeter. Elman grew up in Atlantic City, New Jersey. He learned to play various reed and brass instruments. His career began as a trombone player in the early 1930s with Alex Bartha's band, and in 1936 he joined Benny Goodman's band playing trumpet. Goodman utilized Elman's strong and explosive style of trumpet playing by often featuring him as a soloist. Elman became famous for his recordings with Goodman of Bei mir bist du schön, Wrapping It Up, and his own compositions Zaggin' with Zig and And the Angels Sing. He would have become a star, had it not been for the young Harry James joining the band and eventually eclipsing Elman because of James's connection with audiences. Elman stayed with Goodman until 1940.

Elman played with several small groups including those of Lionel Hampton (1939) and Joe Venuti (1940), and was a member of the Tommy Dorsey Band (1940-43), recording such solos as Swing High and Swanee River. A brief stint in the army interrupted his years with Dorsey, but he rejoined the band after he was released from service. He formed his own band in 1947, and again from 1947 to 1949, but it was not financially successful.

During the 1950s, Elman worked in film studios, radio stations, and television, appearing in several movies such as Du Barry Was a Lady (1943), The Fabulous Dorseys (1947), and The Benny Goodman Story (1955). His health began to decline in the mid 1950s, and when he stood up to play his classic solo, And the Angels Sing, he was unable to perform it at the standard he had previously set. Although Elman appears in the movie, the solo is actually played (in the exact style of Elman) by Mannie Klein. As his health worsened, he only occasionally performed, and made his living by managing a music store in Los Angeles. Elman was also an advisor for the King Company. He died at the age of fifty-three.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Elsass, J. Frank (b. Waynesberg, Ohio, 1913; d. Jan. 1, 1981). American trumpeter. Elsass graduated from the Ernest Williams School of Music in 1934, and was retained as a teaching assistant to Williams after that. Between 1934 and 1940, he was also a cornet soloist with the Goldman Band and first trumpet in the George Barrere Little Symphony. He became the associate conductor of the band at the Williams School, and concurrently attended New York University, where he earned a bachelor of science in music education degree in 1938, and a master of arts in music degree in the following year. For a while, he played principal trumpet in the National Symphony of New York.

In 1940, Elsass accepted a position as trumpet teacher at San Jose State College (now San Jose State University) in California, and concurrently directed the Stanford University Band in Palo Alto, California. He joined the US Navy in 1942, and upon his discharge in 1945, enrolled in the school of music at the University of Michigan where he was a trumpet teaching assistant. At about this time, he and Helen Cecilia Schmoyer, a singer, pianist, and organist, were married. They had two sons, Arthur William (b. 1949) and Gilbert Roy (b. 1952).

During the summer of 1947, Elsass taught at a music camp at the University of Texas in Austin, which led to his being offered a fulltime position as trumpet and cornet teacher in the following year. While serving on the music faculty, Elsass earned a doctorate in music education there in 1956. From 1955 to 1965, he also conducted the university symphonic band, and helped direct musicals in the drama department. He was on the faculty for over thirty years during which time he authored twenty-three articles in magazines such as The Southwestern Musician and the Texas Music Educator. When he retired, he was named a Professor Emeritus. Kent Kennan, a long-time professor of music at UT-Austin, dedicated his famous Trumpet Sonata to him.

Elsass was a spirited man, and hugely dedicated to music education. He was elected to memberships in the American Bandmasters' Association, Kappa Kappa Psi, Pi Kappa Lambda, American Association of University Professors, Free and Accepted Masons, Music Educator's National Conference, Omicron Delta Kappa, Pi Delta Kappa, Texas Band Directors Association, Texas Music Educators Association, College Band Directors National Association, Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia, and Rotary Club of Austin. His retirement was necessitated by a progressive illness that eluded analysis.

Bibl.: Flawn, Peter T. "In Memoriam: J. Frank Elsass" (www.utexas.edu/faculty/council/2000-2001/memorials); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Emerson, Walter (b. New Bedford, Massachusetts, Mar. 19, 1856; d. Boston, Massachusetts, June 2, 1893). American cornetist. Emerson's surname at birth was Macy, but when he was five his mother married George Emerson, and his name was changed to Walter Emerson. They lived in Melrose, Massachusetts.

When he was very young, Emerson began playing the bugle, and became bugler with the Battery C of N.V.M. He soon learned the cornet and quickly improved, possibly studying with Henry C. Brown and L.S. Batchelder in Boston. He graduated from high school and attended a commercial college in Boston intending to learn the leather business from his uncle. But he changed his career path to that of a cornet soloist, worked very hard, and by the age of seventeen was beginning to be noticed in the Boston area.

In 1878, Patrick Gilmore was looking for a cornet soloist to replace Matthew Arbuckle, who was not able to make a European tour due to his desertion from the British military. Gilmore contacted Mr. Tom Baldwin of Boston for a recommendation for a soloist, and Baldwin immediately suggested Emerson. Gilmore auditioned Emerson and selected him as Arbuckle's replacement, and so at the age of twenty-one Emerson toured Europe with Gilmore's famed band. The tour was a huge success for Emerson; after the tour, Gilmore stated: At last America has produced a cornet player in Emerson who stands unequalled; he is the most brilliant player of the age. From the moment we landed on British soil until we left Germany, Emerson never failed to win the greatest applause from the critics. It is a pleasure to see him take the solo stand, knowing that there lived no other American who could do such honor to his country in so far as national renown could be advanced by any cornet playing. In several respects he was considered the most remarkable performer ever heard abroad and created a fervor unheard of for any instrumentalist.

Emerson memorized a vast repertoire of over three hundred solos. In addition to Gilmore's band, he was cornet soloist with Baldwin's Band of Boston, D.C. Hall's Germania Band (Boston), Reeves's American Band of Providence, Calberg's Orchestra of New York, Dieterich's Orchestra of New York, Theodore Thomas of New York, Barbarbee Concert Company, and Emerson Concert Company. His most popular solos were Emersonian Polka (also known as Emersonian Fantasie), Killarney, and Fantasie on Irish Airs. He performed these on a large-bore cornet made by the Paris firm of Antoine Courtois.

Emerson was very well liked, polished, and sociable. Always modest and never jealous, he often praised his fellow musicians. Critics called him "the greatest living cornetist," "the most brilliant performer and finished virtuoso," "the most brilliant player of the age" who was "free from all trickery, he has no equal." He may have recorded a few cylinders for the New England Phonograph Company in 1893, but they may not have been released due to his death on June 2 of that year. He died at the Hotel Edinburg in Boston due to acute peritonitis, an inflammation of the membranes lining the abdominal cavity. It is a tragedy that he died at the age of thirty-seven.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. Cornet Compendium (web); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Emery, Steven (b. c1951). American trumpeter. Emery received a bachelor of music degree from Oberlin College Conservatory where he studied with Gene Young. He then studied with Richard Burkart at The Ohio State University where he earned a master of music degree. Subsequently, he studied with Vincent Cichowicz and Adolph Herseth in Chicago.

Emery's professional orchestral experience began as utility trumpet and later assistant principal trumpet of the Kansas City Philharmonic (1976-81), and as principal trumpet of the Lyric Opera of Kansas City. From 1981 to 1988, he was principal trumpet of the Columbus (Ohio) Symphony Orchestra and the Columbus Brass Quintet. He joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra in June of 1988, and was also a member of the Boston Pops. Although not a member of these two orchestras today, he still continues performing with the Boston Pops Esplanade Orchestra.

A versatile trumpeter, Emery has played with the Brothers Heritage and the Moken Jazz Band, and as lead trumpet with various recording and touring bands in New York City. He has served as substitute principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic and Saint Louis Symphony, has played at Carnegie Hall with the Vienna Philharmonic, and performed as soloist with the Boston Symphony Orchestra at the Tanglewood Institute. He has performed world or American premieres of works by André Jolivet, Nebojsa Zivkovic, Kensaki Shimizu, and others. He has recorded for WGBH Productions in Boston, Touchstone Pictures, the Empire Brass quintet, and Proteus 7.

Emery has taught at the University of Missouri-Kansas City, The Ohio State University, Missouri Western State College, Oberlin College, Eastern Nazarene College, and the New England Music Camp. He is currently on the faculty of the Longy School of Music in Cambridge, Massachusetts.

Bibl.: Yeo, Douglas. "Trumpet Players of the Boston Symphony" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1990); "Faculty Biographies" (www.longy.edu).

Emms, John Daniel (b. London, England, July 16, 1942). British trumpeter and arranger. Emms began his career playing with various dance bands including those of Bill Gaildard, Paul Williams, Stan Tracey, Pete King, Bill Russo, and Val Merral. From 1960 to 1963, he studied arranging with Phil Parker at the London School of Contemporary Music and Arranging Techniques, and trumpet with Bert Courtley and Jerome Callet. He moved to Germany in 1970, where he has firmly established himself as a lead trumpet player and soloist with big bands, including those of Fredy Brock, Max Greger, WDR Radio, Kurt Edelhagen (1977-81), and Paul Kuhn (1981-99). From 1979 to 1986, he was the trumpet teacher at the Staatliche Musikschule Leverkusen. Emms currently resides in Cologne, Germany.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres &XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "John Daniel Emms" (www.jollyjokers.de/trump.html).

Endsley, Gerald ("Jerry") Ray (b. Denver, Colorado, June 2, 1945). American trumpeter, conductor, and publisher. Endsley grew up in Denver, Colorado. He began playing the trumpet at the age of nine; his first teachers were Eddie Keeler, Walter Birkedohl, and Charles Edwin Lenicheck. Endsley's father Clarence Ray was an organist for silent movies and later a mortician, and his mother Marguerite was a homemaker. Endsley has a brother, Glenn James (b. 1938), and a sister, Linda Lee (b. 1941).

After graduating from East High School in Denver, Endsley attended the New England Conservatory of Music, studying with Roger Voisin (1963-67) and receiving a bachelor's degree in trumpet performance. He then attended the University of Colorado in Boulder, earning a master of music degree, studying with Frank W. Baird in 1969. He also studied with Robert Nagel at the Aspen Music Festival.

Endsley's early career began as cornet soloist of the Denver Municipal Band during the summer of 1966, after which he became principal cornet and soloist until 1995 when he assumed duties as conductor. Endsley is also a leading freelance artist in the Denver area, and is contractor and trumpeter with the Denver Center Theater Orchestra (since 1986). He often performed with the Denver Symphony Orchestra, and was second trumpet of that organization during the 1978-79 season. He founded the Denver Brass Trio and the Denver Municipal Band Brass Quintet, and taught at the University of Denver from 1971 to 1976. He also taught trumpet at Denver's Metropolitan State College (1978-79), and is currently conductor of its Metro Community Band (since 2005).

Endsley founded Tromba Publications in 1970, a company that specializes in producing sheet music for trumpet and brass ensembles. He also established Endsley Brass Mouthpieces in 1978, a company that produces and manufactures custom brass mouthpieces. Endsley is the founder and owner of a small record label called Clarino Records (established in 1973). He has authored several trumpet texts, including Volume One for Trumpet, Odd Meter Etudes, Elementary Multiple-Tonguing for Trumpet, Advanced Multiple-Tonguing for Trumpet, Comparative Mouthpiece Guide, and Survey of the Word "Trumpet" and Related Terms. His solo album is titled Music for Trumpet (Clarino). He has served as an artist at the Denver Trumpet Symposium and the International Trumpet Guild Conference. He is a member of the executive board of directors of Summit Brass, Inc.

Endsley and Pamela Bertoluzzi, a flautist with the Denver Symphony Orchestra, were married in 1971. She became principal flute of the Denver Symphony in 1972, and retained this position when the DSO was re-established as the Colorado Symphony Orchestra. She retired from the orchestra in 2010, and is an adjunct professor at the University of Denver. They have two children: Shane (b. 1975), a professional jazz trumpeter and drummer, and Marguerite (b. 1978), a professional tap dancer and dance instructor. Endsley's hobbies include collecting historical trumpets and cornets, collecting and smoking pipes, and collecting knives.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Gerald Endsley" (www.mscd.edu/music); personal interview, Aug. 9, 2010.

Endsley, Shane (b. Denver, Colorado, May 24, 1975). American trumpeter. Shane Endsley began taking trumpet lessons from his father, Gerald Endsley, at the age of nine. He also took up the drums (trap set) at age thirteen. After graduating from Denver's East High School in 1993, he studied at the University of Colorado in Boulder under Terry Sawchuk for two years. Endsley then transferred to the Eastman School of Music (1995-97), graduating in jazz performance. His primary jazz professors at Eastman were Ralph Alessi and Mike Cain. He also considers Ron Miles, Art Lande, and Ron Jolly to be important mentors.

During Endsley's last year at Eastman, he began touring and recording with Steve Coleman and played many gigs in New York with such artists as Ravi Coltrane and David Murray. He moved to Los Angeles and eventually played in Ani Difranco's band. Around 2001, he formed a band with a few former college friends. The band became known as Kneebody, and has toured and recorded a great deal during the past ten years. Their first recordings were on Dave Douglas's label, Greenleaf, but more recently, they have been recording for the German label, Winter & Winter. Their 2010 album Twelve Songs of Charles Ives was nominated for a Grammy Award.

Now living in Brooklyn, New York, Endsley has performed with Chris Speed, Charlie Hunter, Ben Allison, Josh Roseman, Pearl Jam, Erin McKeown, Slavic Soul Party, The Asphalt Orchestra, Lee Konitz, Donny McCaslin, Jim Black, Dave Binney, and others. He has recorded with Steve Coleman, Ani Defranco, Ralph Alessi, Donny McCaslin, Dave Binney, Ben Allison, Erin McKeown, Jen Shyu, and Jamie Baum. His solo CDs are 2nd Guess 2001 (self-produced) and Then The Other (Low Electrical Records). He teaches for Queens College's Center for Preparatory Studies in Music program and is an active studio performer. His is also an accomplished drummer and composer.

Shane Endsley has been married to Kali Paguirigan since 2003. Their children are Mahalia (b. 2006) and Desmond (b. 2009). One of his favorite pastimes is basketball.

Bibl.: "Shane Endsley" (http://asphaltorchestra.com); personal interview, Mar. 16, 2011.

Engelke, Luis C[laudio] (b. Estrela, Brazil, Dec. 12. 1969). American trumpeter. Engelke moved to America at age five and lived in New York for a few years. He moved to the suburbs of Atlanta, and began playing trumpet at age ten. His first teachers were Larry Black, Ron Mendola, and Gary Neumann. At age seventeen, he studied at Florida State University (1987-93) with Bryan Goff and Edward Tarr, earning bachelor of music and bachelor of music education degrees. He enrolled at The Ohio State University from 1993 through 1996, earning master of music and master of arts degrees, studying with Richard Burkart. Engelke returned to Brazil in 1996 to teach at the Universidade do Rio de Janeriro and the Conservatorio Brasileiro de Música for a year. He also became a tenured member of Orquestra Sinfônica Brasileira.

Engelke returned to the United States in 1997 to become a doctoral student and graduate teaching assistant for David Hickman at Arizona State University, and completed his DMA degree in 2000. His dissertation is titled Twentieth-Century Brazilian Solo Trumpet Works (Accompanied and Unaccompanied): A Stylistic Guide and Annotated Bibliography. He also studied with Pharez Whitted, Vincent Cichowicz, and Philip Smith. In the fall of 2000, he became professor of trumpet at Towson University in Baltimore, Maryland.

Engelke has performed with The Phoenix Symphony, Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Springfield (Ohio) Symphony, Ohio Valley Symphony, Pro-Música Symphony (Rio), Music at Penn's Woods, Rome Festival, Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, Delaware Symphony, Harrisburg Symphony, Maryland Symphony, San Diego Symphony, Sydney (Australia) Symphony Orchestra, Thailand Philharmonic, and the Pro Musica Chamber Orchestra of Columbus. He has also played with various Latin and jazz groups, the Moody Blues, The Heavenly Seven, Ricky Martin, Andrea Bocelli, Paulo Moura, Ivan Lins, and Zed a Velha. He has released two solo CDs: Songs, Remembrances and Impressions (Tijuca Music) and A Brazilian Collection (Tijuca Music), as well as recordings for film soundtracks such as Villa-Lobos: Sua Vida Palxão, Stories of the Land, and Eleftera. His editions and arrangements of Brazilian trumpet music are published by Topp Brass, Triplo Press, and Balquhidder Music.

Engelke has been a board member of the International Trumpet Guild and is currently principal trumpet of the Kennett Symphony Orchestra, associate principal of the Lancaster Symphony Orchestra, and coprincipal of the Endless Mountain Music Festival. He has served as Music Reviews Editor for the International Trumpet Guild Journal for over fifteen years, and his publications include more than two hundred articles and reviews. He is currently the chair of the ITG Commissions Committee, and serves as vice president of the Musicians's Association of Baltimore (Local 40-543 of the American Federation of Musicians).

Luis and his wife Kristin Leigh (Hands) Engelke, a public school vocal and general music teacher, have been married since 2002 and have a son, David Alexander Engelke (b. 2007). Luis's hobbies include hiking, kayaking, and racquetball.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Luis C. Engelke" (biography taken from Trumpet Quartet, Vol. 1, Topp Brass); "Luis Engelke" (http://towson.edu/music/bios/engelke.htm); personal interviews, Apr. 1, 2011 and Apr. 15, 2012.

Engels, Eddie (b. Amsterdam, Netherlands, Oct. 1, 1936). Dutch trumpeter, pianist, and arranger. Engels studied with Wim Groot of the Concertgebow Orchestra (1958). He began his career playing in various American nightclubs in Germany and France, and from 1965 to 1988 played with the famed Metropole Orchestra. He also played with the Vara Dance Orchestra, Skymasters, and the bands of Rogier van Otterloo, Bert Paige, Harry van Hoof, Boy Edgar, Herman Schoonderwaldt, and Ruud Bos. He recorded with organist Louis van Dijk, and played concerts with the EBU Big Band in Amsterdam and Oslo, Norway. From 1969 to 1975, he was a soloist with the Netherlands Dance Theatre in Paris, London, and Venice, and in 1970 toured with the Theo Loevendie Consort in Poland. He also toured Yugoslavia and Romania in 1971 with the Dusko Gojkovic Big Band, and in 1975 joined the Frans Elsen/Piet Noordijk Septet. Other groups included those led by Peter Herbolzheimer, Slide Hampton, and Joe Haider.

Engels received a diploma in composition and arranging from the Berklee School of Music in 1976. He performed with the Bette Midler Show in Holland and Belgium, and was lead trumpet and soloist in the musical, Bubbling Brown Sugar, in Amsterdam. In 1979, he began teaching arranging at the Conservatory of The Haag, and traveled with Rudy Brink and Cees Smal, as well as the Netherlands Concert Jazz Band. He founded the Eddie Engels Quintet in 1985, and in 1988 established the Eddie Engels Big Band. Since 2005, he has been the piano entertainer at the Haje Hotel in Heerenveen. He has published the book, Warming Up-Training (2007).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Englebright, Scott ("Scooter") (b. Kingsburg, California, July 17, 1971). American trumpeter. Englebright began playing piano at age seven, and trumpet at age eleven. He attended the University of Nevada in Reno (1989-91), played for a while in jazz groups aboard cruise ships, and later attended the University of North Texas (1992-95). He recorded the ultra-high trumpet solo, Maynard Ferguson, with the UNT One O'Clock Lab Band. The recording eventually caught the attention of Maynard Ferguson himself, who was impressed enough to offer Englebright a job as lead trumpet in his band. Englebright accepted, and toured with Ferguson for a year and a half, recording one CD with the group—One More Trip To Birdland.

After leaving the Ferguson band, Englebright moved to Los Angeles and began playing with numerous big bands led by Tom Kubis, Buddy Childers, Steve Huffsteter, Bill Holman, Mike Barone, Jack Sheldon, Carl Saunders, and others. He toured with Paul Anka for two years, and during the mid 1990s formed the trumpet duo, Tasteebros, with Donny Dyess; the duo has released nine CDs. Englebright has also published five trumpet instruction books.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Scott Englebright" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Scott_Englebright).

English, Woodrow ("Woody") R. (b. 1954). American trumpeter and bugler. English is a native of Coldwater, Michigan. He graduated from high school at the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan, and earned a bachelor of music degree at Eastern Michigan University. He joined the US Army Band "Pershing's Own" in Washington, D.C. in 1976. He was principal trumpet from 1976 to 2010, and has been principal of the US Army Concert Band since 1991. English is the chief bugler for Arlington National Cemetery, and is currently a Sergeant Major. He has also performed with the US Army Brass Quintet for nearly thirty-five years.

English has been principal trumpet of the Alexandria Symphony, has performed with the National Symphony Orchestra, Washington Opera, and various chamber ensembles, and since 1996 has been a solo cornet of the Brass Band of Battle Creek. As a bugler, he has performed Taps hundreds of times for important military personnel and government officials, including at President Ronald Reagan's funeral in 2004. He made a digital recording of Taps for funerals whenever a bugler is unavailable, and jokes that, I think I'm the only bugler who'll be able to play for myself when I die.

Bibl.: Memmott, Mark. "Army bugle ready to tap emotions at Reagan's grave." (www.usatoday.com/news/washington/2004-06-10-bugler-reagan_x.htm); "Woodrow English" (www.bbbc.net/bios.taf?bio_id=104&b=0).

Engstrom, Howard (b. Houston, Texas, Oct. 20, 1947). American trumpeter. Engstrom grew up in Hamilton, Ontario, and began playing piano at age eight and trumpet at age ten. His first trumpet instructors were Bob Wilson, Gene Laughton, and Bert Broth. Between the ages of fourteen and twenty-three, he studied in Houston, Texas, with James Austin, earning a bachelor of music degree with honors at the University of Houston in 1970. In 1967, while still a student, he was invited by Maestro André Previn to join the Houston Symphony Orchestra as fourth trumpet. He later became the first trumpet instructor at Rice University.

Engstrom became principal trumpet of the Calgary Philharmonic in 1972, a position he held for thirty-two years until moving to second trumpet (with the title of Principal Trumpet Emeritus). He taught at the Mount Royal College Conservatory and the University of Calgary until retiring from teaching in 2012. His hobbies include mountain biking.

Bibl.: Laplace Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); www.wedgemouthpieces.com/wedge-heads/howard-engstrom.html.

Erb, Helmut (b. Speyer am Rhein, Germany, Sept. 6, 1945). German trumpeter. Erb began playing the piano at age seven, and trumpet at age thirteen. He studied with Reinhold Lösch from 1961 to 1968 at the Mannheim Musikhochschule, and upon graduation in 1968 became principal trumpet of the Stuttgart Philharmonic in 1968. In the following year, he served as principal of the Badische Staatskapelle in Karlsrhue, and from 1970 to 1982 was principal of the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra.

In order to develop a solo career, Erb took lessons with Heinz Burum in Stuttgart, Adolf Scherbaum in Saarbrücken, and Jean Pirot in Paris.

In 1982, Erb became a professor at the Hochschule für Musik in Würzburg, and formed the Helmut Erb Southwest German Baroque Soloists. In 2007, he was appointed president of the Hochschule für Musik in Würzburg. As a soloist, he has toured Europe, the United States, Mexico, and Venezuela, and has been a guest professor at the Frankfurt Hochschule (1977-82), the University of Ankara in Turkey (1994), and the University of Guadalajara in Mexico (1996). Among his pupils is Malte Burba. He can be heard on several CDs including his solo album, Trumpet and Organ (Christoporus).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Helmut Erb" (http://de.wikipedia.org/wiki/Helmut_Erb); Helmut Erb's official website: www.helmut-erb.de.

Erdmann, Thomas R. (b. Niagara Falls, New York, Sept. 29, 1959). American trumpeter, conductor, pianist, and author. Erdmann grew up in Tonawanda, New York (a suburb of Buffalo). He started playing piano at age five; his early trumpet teachers were William Davison and David Kuehn. He attended the State University of New York in Fredonia (1977-81), earning bachelor of music performance and bachelor of music education degrees studying with Dr. William B. Dederer. He earned a master of music degree studying with Dr. Herbert Koerselman at Illinois State University (1981-82), and a doctor of musical arts degree at the University of Illinois (1985-91) while studying with Dr. Michael Tunnell and Ray Sasaki.

As a trumpeter, Erdmann has been principal of the Illinois Symphony Orchestra, a member of the Peoria Symphony, Bradley University Faculty Brass Quintet, and second trumpet of the Vermont Symphony (1985-86). Since 1989, he has taught at Elon University in Elon, North Carolina where he has conducted the symphony orchestra since 2004; he also conducted the band (1989-2004). As a pianist, he has worked with Phyllis Diller, Mark Preston, Carl Fontana, and many others.

A prolific author, Erdmann has published over 180 articles in a variety of music journals including Saxophone Journal, Jazz Player, Women of Note Quarterly, Currents in Musical Thought, and Journal of the Conductors Guild. He is on the editorial staff of the International Trumpet Guild Journal, WomenArts Quarterly, and JazzReview.Com. He has authored An Annotated Bibliography and Guide to the Published Trumpet Music of Sigmund Hering (1997), Problems and Solutions in Band Conducting (2001), and How Jazz Trumpeters Understand Their Music (2011). He has edited two posthumously published trumpet etude books by Sigmund Hering (published by Carl Fischer, 2004) and is an active adjudicator, clinician, performer, and conductor throughout the United States.

Erdmann is leader of the Tom Erdmann (jazz) Quintet. His hobby is playing golf.

Bibl.: "Thomas R. Erdmann" (www.elon.edu/e-web/academics/elon_college/jazz_studies/faculty.xhtml); personal interview, May 16, 2011.

Erickson, Lynn M. (b. Chisholm, Minnesota, Apr. 6, 1956). American trumpeter. Erickson began playing the trumpet at age nine; her first trumpet teacher was Don Hakala. She attended Bethel College in St. Paul, Minnesota (bachelor of arts in music education, 1974-78), and the University of Minnesota (master of fine arts, 1978-80; doctor of musical arts, 1981-85). Her teachers include Charles Schlueter, David Baldwin, Susan Slaughter, and Vincent Cichowicz.

Erickson accepted a teaching position at Macalester College in 1986, and since 1991 has served as an adjunct faculty member at Augsburg College. She also became second trumpet of the St. Paul Chamber Orchestra in 1991. She has been an active freelance musician in the twin cities area, performing with the Minnesota Orchestra, Minnesota Opera, and various Broadway shows. She is a former member of the Summit Hill Brass Quintet (twenty-five years), which has released five compact disc recordings.

An avid runner, golfer, and die-hard Minnesota Twins baseball fan, Erickson also enjoys studying architecture, and designed and built her own home.

Bibl.: Shook, Brian. "The Trumpets of the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2011); personal interview, Mar. 23, 2011.

Erickson, Steven ("Steve") W. (b. Holdrege, Nebraska, Jan. 17, 1951). American trumpeter. Erickson began playing the trumpet at age ten, and studied with his band director, Verle Straatman. After graduating from Holdrege High School in 1969, he attended the University of Nebraska under Dennis L. Schneider (1969-76) where he earned bachelor of music education and master of music degrees. Additional study was with Gerard Schwarz, Susan Slaughter, and Vincent Cichowicz.

Erickson's orchestral career began in 1971, playing extra in the Lincoln and Omaha Symphonies. He was named principal trumpet in the Omaha Symphony when it became fulltime in 1977, and continued in that position until 2007. He was coprincipal of the Cabrillo Music Festival from 1975-1992, and taught as an adjunct professor at the University of Nebraska-Omaha from 1981 to 2009. During the 1980-81 academic year, he replaced Ray Sasaki who was on sabbatical from the University of Illinois. Now retired from orchestral playing, Erickson continues teaching privately, and teaches strings at Marrs Middle School in Omaha.

Since 1983, Steve has been married to Rebecca J. Erickson, a registered nurse. Their children are Ruthanne (b. 1989) and Carl (b. 1992). His hobbies include tennis, golf, and fly-fishing.

Bibl.: personal interview, May 18, 2011.

Ericson, Rolf (b. Stockholm, Sweden, Aug. 29, 1922; d. Stockholm, Sweden, June 16, 1997). Swedish trumpeter. Ericson began playing the trumpet at the age of eight. He saw Louis Armstrong in concert when he was eleven, and soon decided to make music his profession, turning professional in 1938. He recorded with such notables as Alice Babs, Kjeld Bonfils, and Valaida Snow.

Ericson played with Simon Brehm, and came to the U.S. in 1947, freelancing in New York until joining Charlie Barnet's Bebop Orchestra in 1949. The following year, he played with Woody Herman's Third Herd and later with Benny Goodman, Benny Carter, Charlie Ventura, Elliot Lawrence, and Wardell Gray. He returned to Sweden in 1950 to embark on a European tour with Charlie Parker. He made his first recordings as a leader between 1950 and 1952.

Ericson was back in the U.S. between 1953 and 1956 playing with the big bands of Charlie Spivak, Harry James, Dorsey Brothers, Les Brown (including a television broadcast), and the Lighthouse All-Stars. He then returned to Europe to tour with singers Ernestine Anderson and Lars Gullin (1956), and with Duke Jordan, Cecil Payne, and Art Taylor.

His next visit to the U.S. included performances and recordings with the bands of Dexter Gordon, Harold Land, Stan Kenton (1959), Woody Herman, Maynard Ferguson (1960-61), Quincy Jones, Buddy Rich, Charles Mingus (1962-63), Benny Goodman, Gerry Mulligan, Hans Last, Max Roach, and Duke Ellington (on and off between 1963-71). He spent part of the 1970s in Germany as a studio musician, and playing with Klaus Weiss (Frankfurt) and Paul Kuhn (Berlin), but made one last visit to the U.S. to play with Count Basie, Juggernaut, the Clayton-Hamilton Orchestra, and Louis Bellson.

Several of Ericson's recordings have been reissued on CD, including Rolf Ericson & His American Stars 1956 (Dragon), Stockholm Sweetnin' (Dragon), and Ellington and Strayhorn (Sittle).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Group photo: Rolf Ericson with Miles Davis and Chet Baker.

Erwin, George ("Pee Wee") (b. Falls City, Nebraska, May 30, 1913; d. Teaneck, New Jersey, June 20, 1981). American trumpeter. Erwin was born into a musical family and began playing trumpet at the age of four. He studied with Ferdinand Jacobs. By age eight, he was performing on the radio with the Coon-Sanders Nighthawks. He grew up in Kansas City and performed with concert bands and several territorial bands before joining the bands of Joe Haymes (1931-33), Isham Jones (1933-34), and Freddie Martin (1934).

Erwin moved to New York City in 1934 and worked as a studio musician. He appeared on several Let's Dance radio programs with Benny Goodman (1934-35), and then joined Ray Noble's American Orchestra (1935-36). He replaced Bunny Berigan in Goodman's band (1936), and later replaced Berigan in Tommy Dorsey's band (1937-39); in those days, Erwin played in the same style as Bunny Berigan. He then returned to the New York studios where he worked for the next twenty years, although he led his own big band (1940-42) with only limited success. He also formed his own Dixieland band in 1949 that was more successful, playing for ten years at Nick's in New York.

During the 1960s, Erwin ran a trumpet school with Chris Griffin; their star student was Warren Vaché Jr. Erwin played with the World's Greatest Jazz Band (1971), Tommy Dorsey's Ghost Band during the 1970s, the New Jazz Repertory Company (Grand Parade du Jazz in Nice, 1975-77) and his own band, Kings of Jazz. During his career, he recorded many albums for labels such as Cadence, Jazzology, Qualtro, United Artists, and Urania. Posthumously, two albums were released by the Broadway Intermission label. He was a solid player, having recorded his last album for the Dutch Jazz Crooner label just three weeks before his death in 1981. Some of his best albums include Pee Wee Erwin and His Dixieland Band (Broadway Intermission), Oh Play That Thing! (United Artists), and Swingin' That Music (Jazzology).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Escalante, Luis ("Sane") (b. Guantanamo, Cuba, Aug. 25, 1915; d. Havana, Cuba, May 7, 1970). Cuban trumpeter. One of the leading trumpeters in Cuba for sixty years, Escalante played principal in the Orquesta Sinfónica Nacional de Cuba, although his career was devoted mostly to Cuban jazz; in 1967 he joined the Orquesta Cubana de Musica Moderna. His brother, Pucho, is a trombone player. Luis was a huge influence on the young Arturo Sandoval during the 1960s, and named Sandoval as his replacement in the Orquesta Cubana de Musica Moderna in 1971. From 1939 to 1941, Escalante was coleader of the Bellamar band with Romeu, and from about 1939 to 1946 played on radio broadcasts with the Palau Brothers. From 1954 to 1960, he made his name in combos and big bands led by pianist Bebo Valdés, father of Chucho.

Escalante was a versatile trumpet player and the first Cuban jazz soloist of international fame. He was influenced by Bunny Berigan, Harry James, and later Don Fagerquist. Escalante not only influenced the great Sandoval, but also Jorge Varona of Irakere fame. Escalante can be heard on many recordings of Cuban jazz with the top musicians of his country.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Arturo Sandoval" (www.trumpetplayerprofiles.com/arturosandoval.html).

Eshed, Ilan (b. Kibutz Shamir, Israel, Sept. 8, 1945). Israeli trumpeter. Eshed began playing the trumpet at age eleven. His first teachers were Morris Cohen Aloro and Peter Falkov. He took lessons with several orchestral players of the Israeli Philharmonic Orchestra, including Irving Sarin and Roger Penning. He joined the IPO in 1967, but was immediately granted a leave to study in Chicago with Adolph Herseth, and after rejoining the orchestra in 1969, was appointed assistant principal trumpet, a position he still holds.

An active soloist and chamber music player, Eshed has appeared at numerous music festivals and toured in a trumpet and organ duo. His solo albums include Golden Israeli Trumpet (EMI), My Beloved Land (CBS), and Singing Trumpet (CBS). He taught at the Rubin Academy of Music at Tel Aviv University from 2000 to 2002.

Eshed's hobbies include sports; he has won Triathlon and Iron Man competitions in his age category.

Eshed's son Goni is also becoming a young star of the trumpet, and has won several solo competitions.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ilan Eshed" (www.ipo.co.il).

Eskdale, George [Salisbury] (b. Tynemouth, England, June 21, 1897; d. London, Jan. 20, 1960). British trumpeter. Eskdale studied the trumpet with his father, a bandmaster, and at the Kneller Hall Royal Military Academy. At about age eighteen, he enlisted in the British army and fought during World War I, possibly in India, where he was wounded by a bayonet. After his military obligation, he became a soloist at a young age, and was soon featured with St. Hilda's Colliery Brass Band and in various dance orchestras; in 1922-23 he recorded with the Savoy Havana Orchestra, with which he also played in Paris at the Théâtre Daunou in September 1923. He then played with the London Chamber Orchestra conducted by Anthony Bernard.

Eskdale played with the London Symphony Orchestra from 1932 to 1960, and from 1934 served as principal trumpet, a position he held until 1956, when he moved to third trumpet, a position he held until his death. He is perhaps best known for his landmark first recording of Haydn's Concerto in E-flat (movements 2 and 3) that was aired as a live broadcast on BBC Radio on June 23, 1938; in 1939 he recorded the two movements onto a 78-rpm disc. In 1954, he recorded the entire concerto playing a Besson E-flat trumpet with the Vienna State Orchestra on an LP album for Vanguard. In October 1935 he was also one of the first to record Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto (original octave) on a high F trumpet custom made for him by Boosey & Hawkes. [The first recording completely in the original octave was made in 1932 by Paul Spörri.] In addition, he recorded Riisager's Concertino in January 1949. Eskdale made numerous other recordings (Clarke, Purcell, etc.) placing him among the pioneers of the Baroque trumpet revival, even before Roger Delmotte, Roger Voisin, Adolf Scherbaum, and others. He was professor of trumpet at both the Royal Academy of Music and the Trinity College of Music. Among his pupils were Denis Egan, Bram Wiggins, and Howard Snell. Eskdale introduced the use of the C trumpet in the British orchestras, while Ernest Hall remained a B-flat partisan.

George Eskdale was married in Australia before joining the London Symphony Orchestra. He had a daughter, Georgina Hart, and a granddaughter, Natasha Donald.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. "European Cornet and Trumpet Soloists" (Notes to CD recording published by the International Trumpet Guild, 2004); "George Eskdale" (O. J.'s Trumpet Page: http://abel.hive.no); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpts on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Etzel, Roy [Hans Joachim] (b. Wroclaw, Poland, Mar. 6, 1925). Polish trumpeter. Etzel attended a music school in Schalzeug from 1941 to 1943. During the late 1940s, he played jazz at military clubs. From 1947 to 1952, he was a member of Kurt Edelhagen's band, and from 1957 to 1960 played with Max Greger's band. He moved to Munich, Germany, during the late 1950s where he received an award in 1959. He toured with the Hugo Strasser Orchestra from 1960 to 1966, and formed his own big band called Soundorchestra Ray Etzel, which toured Europe.

Etzel recorded dozens of albums, which were eventually distributed by Philips and MGM. They include Mr. Trumpet (Philips), Roy Etzel, Romantic Trumpet (Import), The Blue Trumpet of Spanish Brass, Mr. Trumpet International, Mexican Trumpet, and his 1991 hit album, Golden Trumpet (Tam-Tam Media).

Bibl. Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Eubanks, Duane (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Jan. 24, 1969). American trumpeter. Coming from a musical family, Duane began playing the trumpet at the age of eleven. His brothers include guitarist Kevin (The Tonight Show), trombonist Robin, and twin brother Shane (a trombonist who taught high school music for a few years, but is now an assistant manager of a Home Depot in Philadelphia). Duane stopped playing trumpet during high school, and attended the University of Maryland, earning a bachelor's degree in business administration. While in college, he performed with the university's big band, and fell in love with music. He then attended Temple University as a music major for one year (without parental support or encouragement) and studied trumpet for two years with Johnny Coles.

In 1996, at the age of twenty-six, Eubanks moved to New York City to begin his career as a jazz trumpeter. He enjoyed playing in big bands as well as smaller groups, performing with Dave Holland's big band, Jimmy Heath, James Moody, Next Legacy Orchestra, Illinois Jacquet Big Band, Oliver Lake Big Band, Benny Golson, Terell Stafford, Lionel Hampton, Mickey Roker, Mingus Big Band, Uri Caine, Bootsie Barrer, Tim Warfield Jr., The Temptations, John Hicks, Curtis Fuller, Talib Kweli, Elvin Jones, Mulgrew Miller, Louis Hayes, Robin Eubanks, Antonio Hart, Donald Byrd, Bobby Watson, Mental Images, and others.

Eubanks has had a successful recording career. In 1995, he released an album with his brother Robin titled 4 JJ/Slide/Curtis et Al (TCB). Albums as leader include My Shining Hour (TCB) and Second Take (TCB). He has toured Europe many times and has a large following there. Duane is married and has two children—son Preston, and daughter Leanna.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Duane Eubanks" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Evans, Andrew John (b. Hobart, Tasmania, Australia, Jan. 10, 1962). Australian trumpeter. Evans grew up in Hobart, Tasmania, the son of Jeffrey John (an electrician) and Judith Elaine Evans (a secretary). He has two brothers, David (b. 1963) and Matthew (b. 1973). Andrew began playing the trumpet at age thirteen and studied with Brian Sibson and Arthur Edwards. He graduated from Taroona High School in 1979 and then attended the University of Tasmania (1980-83) where he studied with Bruce Lamont. During his early college years, he was hospitalized for six months because of an infection, so Lamont brought him many trumpet recordings to listen to. The recordings inspired Evans to become a professional trumpet performer.

Evans's first fulltime playing job was as second trumpet in the West Australian Symphony Orchestra (1984-94). He became principal during the 1994 and 1995 seasons. However, he received a DAAD Scholarship to study in Berlin, Germany, with Konradin Groth from 1988 to 1990. While in Germany, he performed as an extra trumpet with the Berlin Philharmonic, Ensemble Modern, and the Australis Ensemble in Austria. He taught part-time at Monash University, and in 2001 became chair of the brass department at the Sydney Conservatory. Evans received a RHISS writing grant and a New Frontiers Grant from the University of Sydney to do research and write Music, Mutiny, Shipwreck and Murder: the fate of the three trumpeters aboard the 17th-century Dutch East Indiaman "Batavia" (1629).

A versatile musician, Evans has performed or recorded with the Sydney Symphony, Melbourne Symphony Orchestra, Graham Ashton Brass Quintet, Sydney Brass, Elision Ensemble, Australian Brandenburg Orchestra, Pinchgut Opera, Australian Baroque Brass, and the Israel Philharmonic. He enjoys performing on modern and period instruments, and is an active studio musician in Sydney. Among his best-known students are Kathryn James, Anthony Heinrichs, and Matt Dempsey.

Evans has been married to his wife Jennifer since 1990. His hobbies include home renovation and natural trumpet making.

Bibl.: "Andrew Evans" (2010 International Trumpet Guild Conference program book biography); "Andrew Evans" (www.music.usyd.edu.au); personal interview, July 5, 2010.

Evans, Brian (b. Sydney, Australia, Nov. 3, 1953). Australian trumpeter, cornetist, and lyric tenor. Evans began playing the banjo-mandolin at age seven, and then the tenor horn in his school band at age twelve. While attending Sydney Boys' High School under band director Cliff Goodchild (former tubist with the Sydney Symphony Orchestra and father of trumpeter Paul Goodchild), he studied trumpet with Alan Mann and Arthur Stender. He attended Sydney University in 1972, but took trumpet lessons from John Battersby at the Sydney Conservatorium because the university did not have instrumental instructors on staff. Evans dropped out of school in 1973 to join the Eastern Command Band (now the Australian Army Band Sydney) as principal cornet, and in 1974 went into the Australian Broadcasting Corporation National Training Orchestra for fourteen important months of study with Gordon Webb.

Evans joined the Australian Opera and Ballet Orchestra in 1975. During his lengthy tenure with the orchestra, he has played every part in the section, but specializes as solo cornet. He has also performed with most of the major ensembles in Sydney, and has worked as a commercial, jazz, and chamber musician. In 1975, he performed the Australian premiere of the Concerto for Trumpet and Brass Band by Gareth Wood.

As a high lyric tenor, Evans took vocal lessons from the late Hector P. Tinkler, and with the late Norman Gulbrandsen in Chicago. His experience includes opera, oratorio, and recitals, as well as numerous orchestral appearances. As a vocalist, he has performed with Opera Australia, Opera Mode, Sydney Philharmonia, Gosford Philharmonia, Chicago Opera Theater, Lincoln Opera, and the Gilbert and Sullivan Society of Chicago, and has held the position of tenor soloist at Rockefeller Chapel at the University of Chicago.

Evans is founder and President of the Australian Trumpet Guild (since 1998). He has also served on the board of the International Trumpet Guild (2001-07; 2011-15) and as Secretary (2007-11) and is the Australia-New Zealand membership coordinator and news correspondent. He is the ITG Vice President/President Elect (2013-15). Evans hosted the 2010 ITG Conference at the Sydney Conservatorium.

An active soloist and clinician, Evans has performed throughout the world, and was a featured artist during the 2003, 2005, 2009 and 2010 ITG conferences. He has taught at several schools in Sydney, and maintains a private studio of sixteen to twenty-four students. He also served as NSW State Secretary of the Musicians Union of Australia (1994-97), and is an advocate and lobbyist for School Child Travel Safety (since 1996).

Evans and his wife, Deborah Dietz, a horn player and band director at Hornsby Girls High School in Sydney, have two children: Kerstin (b. 1994) and Eric (b. 1991; d. 1996). Evans's hobbies include home repair and gardening.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Brian Evans" (www.thebrassstudio.netfirms.com/brian_evans.htm); personal interview, Jan. 7, 2011.

Evans, Lawrence ("Laurie") (b. South Wales, England, 1936; d. London, England, Apr. 7, 2005). British trumpeter. Evans grew up in Rhondda Valley in Glamorgan, Wales, and began playing cornet at the age of nine in a local brass band. He also played trumpet in his school orchestra and a regional youth orchestra. In 1951, he was selected as principal trumpet of the National Youth Orchestra of Wales, and two years later received a scholarship to study at the Royal College of Music in London.

Evans's college years were interrupted by military obligation. He served as principal cornet with the Royal Engineers Band from 1954 to 1957. He then returned to school, and while still a student, won a position with the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra (1957-60). In 1960, he became the principal trumpet of the BBC Welsh Orchestra. After playing with it for eight years, he became coprincipal trumpet of the New Philharmonia Orchestra in London with which he recorded a great deal of film music. He also performed regularly with the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble, English Chamber Orchestra, and Welsh Opera Orchestra (1968-74).

Evans became principal trumpet of the London Philharmonic Orchestra in 1974, a position he held for twenty years, before illness forced him to move to another position in the LPO trumpet section in 1994. His health declined to the point that he became hospitalized, so he resigned from the orchestra in 2004. He died a year later at the approximate age of sixty-nine. He was a warm person who was always the center of attention.

Bibl.: Mortenson, Gary. "The Trumpet Section of the London Philharmonic Orchestra" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2005); "Lawrence Evans 1936-2005" (www.trumpetguild.org/news); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Evans, Miles [Ian Gilmore] (b. New York, New York, July 5, 1965). American trumpeter. The son of famous arranger and bandleader Gil Evans, Miles was named after Miles Davis. He began playing drums, but soon switched to trumpet. At age nine, he sat in with his father's band (on trumpet!), and later studied at New York's High School of Music & Art. He studied jazz with his father and Miles Davis, and took trumpet lessons from Lew Soloff and Jon Faddis.

In 1982, Evans played in a British version of his father's band, and in 1983 began playing as a regular member of the Gil Evans

Orchestra. When his father died in 1988, Miles took over the band and toured and recorded until 2002. He formed his own band that played throughout the United States and Europe until 2003. Evans has performed with Sting, Miles Davis, Jon Faddis, Maria Schneider, Medski, Jaco Pastorius, Hermeto Pascoal, Quincy Jones, David Sanborn, Martin & Wood, and Paul Shaffer. Evans has taught at several New York-area colleges including the Manhattan School of Music. He has appeared at dozens of major music festivals throughout the world.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Miles Evans's official website (www.milesevans.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Evans, Paul Wesley ("Doc") (b. Spring Valley, Minnesota, June 20, 1907; d. Minneapolis, Minnesota, Jan. 10, 1977). American cornetist. Evans's father, a Methodist minister, died when Paul was two years old. Paul started in music by learning to play the violin, piano, drums, and saxophone before switching to cornet. In 1927, he joined a jazz band with Norvy Mulligan, playing saxophone and cornet, and worked as an amateur with various groups in Minneapolis and St. Paul, Minnesota, during the 1930s. After 1931, he specialized on cornet. He attended Carleton College in Northfield, Minnesota, where he earned a bachelor of arts degree in English. He also started a master of arts degree in English at the University of Minnesota. His constant reading earned him the nickname, "Doc," from his fellow musicians.

Evans played in a traditional jazz group with Red Dougherty in 1939, and in 1940 played with Joe Sullivan. A year later, he played with Eddie Condon and Tony Parenti. In the mid 1940s, he moved to Chicago and then New York City, but returned to Minneapolis to begin playing with Willie "Bunk" Johnson in May of 1947. He joined Miff Mole in 1949 in Chicago. Evans went to the West Coast in the early 1950s where he joined Turk Murphy, but soon returned to Minneapolis. Later, he made a television show with Art Hodes (1968) and played with Barney Bigard (Disneyland, 1970) and Max Rorath (1972).

Evans was a skilled Dixieland performer who hated bebop jazz, and so his lyrical solos were in the style of Bix Beiderbecke and Louis Armstrong. He made nearly forty recordings during the late 1940s and 1950s for the Audiophile, Folkways, Paramount, Jazzology, and Soma labels. Perhaps his best recording is Down in Jungle Town (Jazzology). He also recorded a live concert in 1975, just two years before his death.

Suffering all of his life from asthma and emphysema, Evans switched from cornet to trumpet during the mid 1960s because he found it easier to blow. He opened his own jazz place, The Rampart Street Club, in Mendota, Minnesota, in July of 1958, but the rise in popularity of rock-and-roll music caused it to close in 1961.

After retiring, Evans and his wife Eleanor (Hattery) took cello lessons in order to study classical music. He founded the Bloomington (Minnesota) Symphony Orchestra in 1963 and served as its conductor until his death in 1977. He enjoyed raising champion cocker spaniels, and also enjoyed taking his wife and sons Jeff, Allan, and Mark to the family fishing cabin in Northern Minnesota, where he loved to fish, canoe, paint, and read. Evans was active with the Twin Cities Musicians' Union and served for a while as its treasurer and vice president. He taught an extension course on jazz history for the College of Saint Thomas.

Evans died on January 10, 1977 at the age of sixty-nine. Since 1999, the town of Albert Lea, Minnesota, hosts the annual Doc Evans Jazz Festival. His wife and sons are responsible for the reissuing of his Audiophile recordings on compact disc. A bronze plaque in his honor hangs on a wall at Carleton College. It reads, Blowing, growing to the last day, and his own man all the way.

Bibl.: Flahterly, Mark. "The Life and Music of Paul Wesley 'Doc' Evans: 1907-1977" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2003); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Everson, Terry R. (b. Sandusky, Ohio, Aug. 29, 1962). American trumpeter, pianist, and composer. Everson began his musical career playing piano at the age of four under the guidance of his mother. He began playing the trumpet at age ten, with his first lesson being with his father. He attended The Ohio State University, receiving a bachelor of music degree in 1983 and a master of music degree in 1984, studying with Dr. Richard Burkart. Additionally, he studied with C. Wesley Orr and Frank Kaderabek.

After graduating from college, Everson worked in the Philadelphia area as a member of the Chestnut Brass Company and freelance artist. He was the first-prize winner of the 1988 inaugural Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild International Solo Competition in Columbus, Ohio. His first CD, Terry Everson, Trumpet, was produced by the ITG. He also won first prize in the 1990 Louis D. McMahon International Music Competition in Lawton, Oklahoma.

Everson has performed with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Boston Pops, Boston Modern Orchestra Project, New England and Lexington (KY) Brass Bands (principal cornet), Philadelphia Orchestra, Philadelphia Natural Trumpet Ensemble, Ray Charles, Manhattan Transfer, H.B. Smith Cornet Band (principal cornet), and many other ensembles. He has been an active church musician for over twenty-five years, currently at Metro Church in Marlborough, Massachusetts.

As a teacher, Everson has taught at Philadelphia College of Bible (now Philadelphia Biblical University), the University of Kentucky, Asbury College, Temple University, Eastern College, New School of Music, and since 1999 has been the trumpet professor at Boston University. He is also principal trumpet of the Peninsula Music Festival orchestra in Wisconsin each summer, principal trumpet of the Boston Modern Orchestra Project, and plays soprano cornet in the Brass Band of Battle Creek. He hosted the 1998 ITG Conference at the University of Kentucky, and is on the Executive Committee of the National Trumpet Competition. In 2008, he hosted the Ellsworth Smith-ITG competition at Boston University. Everson has composed numerous works for trumpet, many of which are published through his own publishing company, TREverson Music.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2007); Terry Everson's official website: www.treversonmusic.com; personal interview, Jan. 9, 2011.

Photo credits: Mark Wood (B/W); Lori Everson (red background: see color section of book).

Ewald, Michael (b. North Tonawanda, New York, May 21, 1948; d. St. Joseph, Illinois, Sept. 12, 2008). American trumpeter. Ewald studied in Los Angeles with John Clyman and James Stamp. He performed with the Burbank Symphony, Long Beach Municipal Band, Pasadena Chamber Orchestra, Pasadena Symphony Orchestra, Chicago Brass Quintet, and Chicago Chamber Brass before accepting a position as professor of trumpet at the University of Illinois in Urbana in 1990. In 1968, he and Lynette Surowiec were married. They had two daughters.

While at the University of Illinois, Ewald performed in the Illinois Brass Quintet, Sinfonia da Camera, Champaign-Urbana Symphony, and Illinois Symphony Orchestra, and toured Europe as a soloist and chamber musician. He also served as a judge at solo and ensemble competitions in the United States and abroad. An outstanding teacher, he received the College of Fine and Applied Arts Award for Instructional Excellence in 2005.

Ewald's publications include Modena Duets, Three Pieces for Two Trumpets, 29 Etudes for Bach and Telemann, and The Art of the Phrase. He hosted the 1994 International Trumpet Guild Conference at the University of Illinois and also served on the ITG Board of Directors. He taught at the University of Illinois until his untimely death in 2008 from liver cancer.

Bibl.: "In Memoriam: Michael Ewald 1948-2008" (International Trumpet Guild website: www.trumpetguild.org); "The Illinois Brass Quintet" (www.music.uicu.edu/illinoisbrassquintet/ibqbios.html).

F

Faber, Johannes [Jakob] (b. Munich, Germany, Nov. 7, 1952). German trumpeter, flugelhornist, and composer. Faber studied in Munich, Graz, and at the Berklee School of Music in Boston. In Germany, he played with the groups led by Wolfgang Dauner and Dusko Gojkovic, and from 1980 to 1991 was the soloist with the Erwin

Lehn Orchestra for the South German Radio. He played with the NDR Big Band in Hamburg, and has recorded with Bruno Castellucci, The United Jazz & Rock Ensemble, Peter Herbolzheimer, Michael Gibbs, the Johannes Faber Quartet, Klaus Weiss, Günter Lenz, and others for such labels as Mood, Stable Now Basic Sound, Electrola, and Amayena. He has been a member of the United Jazz & Rock Ensemble since 1983, and is founder and leader of the Johannes Faber Consortium, with which he released a CD titled No Coincidence in 2004.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Johannes Faber's official website: http://www.johannesfaber.info/pages/bio2.html.

Faddis, Jon[athan] (b. Oakland, California, July 24, 1953). American trumpeter. After watching a television performance by Louis Armstrong, Faddis took up the trumpet at the age of eight. During his teen years, his range developed quickly and he began playing with rhythm and blues bands in the Oakland area. Faddis studied under John Lambert (private lessons) and got advice from Bill Catalano. At age fifteen, he met Dizzy Gillespie at the Monterey Jazz Festival and they became friends. A short time later, Gillespie allowed him to sit in with his band during a jazz workshop in San Francisco.

Faddis moved to New York in 1971 to join Lionel Hampton's big band, and he also played with Buddy Rich. In his early twenties, Faddis recorded two albums for Pablo Records, and occasionally played with Dizzy Gillespie's band. He joined Charles Mingus's big band and sextet, staying with them from 1972 to 1974 and also attended the Manhattan School of Music from 1972 to 1973. During this period, he played lead trumpet with the Thad Jones-Mel Lewis Big Band from late 1971 to 1975 (USSR tour in April 1972, France in 1973), played in an alumni band with Ernie Royal and Sonny Cohn at Carnegie Hall (1973), with Randy Weston and Gerry Mulligan's Age of Dream Band (1973), and he guested with Peter Herbholzheimer's Rhythm Combination & Brass (in Berlin, November 1973). He played with Benny Carter (December 1973) and Sy Oliver (1974), joined the New York Jazz Repertory Company (1975 to 1977), and participated in the Grande Parade du Jazz in Nice.

Faddis worked for a while with Gil Evans (1976) and Chuck Mangione after which Dizzy Gillespie hired Faddis for a European tour in 1977. By this time, Faddis had mastered Dizzy's bebop style and technique, and could even play an octave higher than Dizzy.

Gillespie said of Faddis, He's the best ever, including me! After the tour, Faddis became one of the top studio players in New York. From 1977 to 1984, he seldom appeared in concert, although he did appear at the 1977 and 1983 Montreux International Jazz Festivals in Switzerland. However, in 1985, he re-emerged as a concert soloist by recording the album Legacy for Concord. He soon recorded other albums for the Epic and Chesky labels.

Faddis had formed his own jazz quintet in 1984, and in the following year, he played in a quintet led by McCoy Tyner and Jackie McLean. He also played as a bebop soloist for Slide Hampton's Jazz Masters and Lalo Schifrin. He was adept at imitating the playing styles of Roy Eldridge, Louis Armstrong, Dizzy Gillespie, and many others, as demonstrated at the 1987 International Trumpet Guild Conference, but also developed his own unique voice as a soloist. Some of his best recordings include Legacy (Concord), Jon and Billy (Storyville), Hornucopia (Epic), Youngblood (Pablo), Into the Faddisphere, Oscar Peterson and Jon Faddis (Original Jazz Classics), and Teranga (Koch).

A dedicated educator, Faddis teaches at the State University of New York in Purchase, and is a lecturer at Columbia College Chicago where he is also artistic director of the Chicago Jazz Ensemble. He often takes students to rehearsals and recording sessions, even allowing them to sit in with the band on occasion.

He was the musical director of Gillespie's band (1987-88) and has been a guest conductor and featured soloist with the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra. From 1992 to 2002, Faddis served as leader of the Carnegie Hall Jazz Orchestra. He was also one of the all-star members of Dizzy Gillespie's United Nations Orchestra. He appeared in the 1998 movie, Blues Brothers 2000, and composed the jazz opera, Lulu Noire, in 1997. He is currently the leader of the Jon Faddis Jazz Orchestra in New York. He is known for his unparalleled upper register and blistering technique.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Jon Faddis's official website: www.jonfaddis.net; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fagerquist, Don[ald] A. (b. Worchester, Massachusetts, Feb. 6, 1927; d. Los Angeles, California, Jan. 24, 1974). American trumpeter. As a teenager, Fagerquist played with Mal Hallett (1943), but soon he was playing with the big bands of Gene Krupa (1944-45 and 1948), Artie Shaw (1949-50), Woody Herman (1951-52), Les Brown (1952), Dave Pell Octet (1953-59), and Leonard Feather (1956). He was also a studio player for Paramount in Los Angeles from 1956, and worked again with Dave Pell in 1968.

After 1959, Fagerquist did very little jazz playing even though he was one of the first and best trumpeters of West Coast jazz. As a sideman, Fagerquist extensively recorded with John Graas, Shelly Manne (1953), Pete Rugolo (Ten Trumpets & Two Guitars on Mercury in 1961), Russ Garcia, Junior Mance, Shorty Rogers, Art Pepper, Mel Tormé, and Ella Fitzgerald.

As a leader, he recorded albums called 8 by 8 (Mode) and Music to Fill a Void (Mode). His short career ended when he died of kidney failure two weeks before his forty-seventh birthday

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fairweather, Al[astair] (b. Edinburgh, Scotland, June 12, 1927; d. Edinburgh, Scotland, June 21, 1993). Scottish trumpeter. Inspired by Louis Armstrong, Fairweather took up the trumpet and was mostly self-taught. He attended Royal High School in Edinburgh, as well as the Edinburgh College of Art. His National Service was spent in Egypt.

Fairweather played trombone, then trumpet with clarinetist Sandy Brown from 1948 to 1953 and worked in London with Cy Laurie (1953-54). He played once again with Sandy Brown (1954-57) and led his own record dates between 1955 and 1962. He formed his own sextet in 1958, later playing with Albert Nicholas and Alex Welsh (1963-64) and, from 1966 to 1968, with Acker Bilk.

Fairweather became a fulltime teacher (in Harrow, England) and part-time performer during the early 1970s. Also during the 1970s, he co-led a group with Alan Littlejohn. Fairweather was an arranger (and performer) for Stan Daly's band during the early 1970s, and did the same for Stan Greig's London Jazz Band from 1975 into the 1980s. A heart attack in 1983 slowed him down, and he eventually moved to his hometown of Edinburgh (in 1987) where he usually worked with Alan Littlejohn. His best album is McJazz (Nixa 9, 1957). Fairweather died at the age of sixty-six.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fairweather, Digby (b. Rockford, Essex, England, Apr. 25, 1946). British cornetist. Digby Fairweather (no relation to the British trumpeter Al Fairweather, 1927-93) started on drums, euphonium, and violin, before taking up the cornet around 1960. He took lessons from Bert Collins in 1965, plus occasional lessons from Harry Beckett, Colin Smith, and Tommy McQuarter, yet didn't learn to read music until 1984. He primarily taught himself by playing along with jazz recordings.

Fairweather formed Dig's Half-Dozen in 1970, and began recording with the group in 1975. He kept his day job as a librarian at the Southend-on-Sea Library, and performed part-time. He also worked with Joe Albany (1970), Alex Welsh, Dave Shepherd, Hugh Rainey, Ron Russell, Roy Williams, Lennie Hastings, Brian Lemon, Eggy Ley, Eric Silk, and Keith Nichols (1978-79). He quit his librarian job in 1977 to become a fulltime jazz performer. During the 1980s and '90s, he played with George Chisholm (1981), Keith Nichols's Midnight Follies Orchestra, Velvet Quartet, Pizza Express All-Stars (1981-83), Alex Welsh Reunion Band (1983-87), Great British Jazz Band (1994), his own Jazz Super Kings, Stan Barker, and various other groups. With Barker, he founded a charity in 1979 called "Jazz College." Fairweather was one of the featured artists during the 1986 International Trumpet Guild Conference in London.

Digby Fairweather has had a somewhat varied career as a librarian, writer, radio show host, and musician. He authored How To Play Trumpet in 1985, Jazz: The Essential Companion (1987), Jazz: The Rough Guide (coauthored in 1995), and his autobiography—Notes from a Jazz Life. He established the National Jazz Archive Association of British Jazz Musicians, as well as the Jazz Section of the Musicians' Union. For his excellent service, he received the BBC Jazz Society's Musician of the Year Award in 1979, the BT Jazz Award (for trumpet in 1992, and for service to jazz in 1993), the Benno Haussman Award for Service to Jazz in 1993, and the Millennium Roll of Honour from his hometown of Southend-on-Sea.

With trombonist Pete Strange, Fairweather founded, and still leads, the Great British Jazz Band (since 1994) which is active today. Despite placing the cornet mouthpiece on the far right side of his lips, Fairweather has been a top cornetist in England, producing such record albums as Jubilee (Candid), With Nat in Mind (Jazzology), Something to Remember Us By (Jazzology), A Portrait of Digby Fairweather (Black Lion), and Squeezin' the Blues Away (FMR).

Bibl.: Fairweather, Digby. Notes from a Jazz Life (Northway Books); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Digby Fairweather's official website: www.digbyfairweather.com; "Digby Fairweather" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Faku, Fezile ("Feya") (b. New Brighton, Port Elizabeth, South Africa, June 6, 1962). South African trumpeter and flugelhornist. Faku studied music at the University of Natal where he earned a Performer's Certificate in jazz. While there, he also studied classical trumpet with Michel Schnewly. He has performed jazz with many of South Africa's most prominent musicians, including Barney Rachabang, Thandie Klaasen, Duke Makasi, Winston "Manunku" Ngozi, Abdullah Ibrahim, Pat Matshikiza, Basel Coetzee, and since 1994 has been a member of the Paul van Kemenade Quintet in the Netherlands. In April of 2006, he spent two months in Switzerland as part of a residency program with the Swiss-South African Quintet, which he coleads with Makhaya Ntshoko. Faku has also worked with international musicians such as Dave Young, Gustavo Begalli, Larry Ridley, Andy Sherrer, Colin Vallon, Malcom Braff, Samuel Blaser, and Frederic Ljungkvist. Faku's solo CDs include Hommage (Challenge), Tacit (Msi/EMI), The Colours They Bring (Feya Faku Music), and Hope and Honour (Feya Faku Music).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Feya Faku Trumpet" (www.join-mozart-festival.org/programme-2012/artists/soloists/feya-faku).

Falay, [Ahmed] Muvaffak ("Maffy") (b. Izmir, Turkey, Aug. 30, 1930). Turkish trumpeter and flugelhornist. Falay, whose first name Muvaffak literally means "he who shall be successful," attended the Ankara Conservatory of Music at age seven, studying trumpet and piano. His love of Turkish folk music and jazz has given him a unique voice in the trumpet world.

Falay began his career in 1956 when he moved to Germany and eventually became a member of the Köln Radio Orchestra (1960). He moved to Sweden in late 1960 and began recording with Harry Arnold's big band. He played with the Kenny Clarke-Francy Boland Big Band from 1961 to 1966, and with Kurt Edelhagen's band in 1964. He also performed with Bengt-Arne Wallin, Boris Lindquist, and Arne Domnerus. In 1961, he and the Quincy Jones band recorded the soundtrack for the film The Boy in the Tree. From 1962 to 1967, Falay was a member of Bernt Rosengren's band. He also played with George Russell's big band (1966), Don Cherry (1971), Lars Gullin (1974), and others. In 1971, he founded his own group, Sevda, that fuses Turkish music with bop.

Falay was close friends with Dizzy Gillespie from the time Gillespie performed in Turkey on a US State Department tour. Falay's band met Dizzy at the airport, and greeted the maestro with music. Gillespie reported to his manager in America that he had discovered a fantastic trumpeter who played like Miles Davis and Lee Morgan, only better! Later on, Falay was invited to play with Gillespie's big band. Falay also participated in the Dizzy Gillespie Reunion Band in 1970.

Since 1986, Maffy Falay has been leading his own sextet, performing primarily in Europe and Sweden. In 2005, he received the Lifetime Achievement Award from the International Istanbul Jazz Festival.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "24th International Izmir Festival" (www.iksev.org/festival); "Lifetime Achievement Award" (www.iksv.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fantini, Girolamo (b. 1600; d. c1675). Italian trumpeter. Fantini was considered to be the greatest trumpeter of his day in Italy. He was employed by the Grand Duke of Tuscany, Ferdinando II, from April 1631 onwards. Fantini was the first to perform solo works with accompaniment, thereby establishing the trumpet in art music. In Rome, during the summer of 1634, he performed for Cardinal Borghese a historic concert with composer and organist Girolamo Frescobaldi. He was described as "the world's king of the trumpet," and of "singular abilities." An unknown composer wrote a madrigal with the following (translated) text:

This man, who with the sound of his warlike instrument
At his will made helmets shake,

Spears shatter, and caused steeds,
More ferocious than lightening and the wind, to shudder:
Now look how he, in a musical ensemble,
By sweetening his impetuous sound,
Makes knights and ladies alike languish with joy,
And so puts his martial talent to Love's use.
It is marvelous how art and nature together
Hold in one breast such virtue
That the greatness of ancient Misenus is obscured.
Today he is the world's king of the trumpet,
Who is sure of victory over every heart,
Arbiter of both peace and war.

His monumental method book, Modo per imparare a sonare di tromba (Method for Learning to Play the Trumpet) was published in 1638, and is the first known trumpet method ever published. It contains invaluable instructions concerning proper articulations, lipping, and other stylistic matters, as well as containing the first solo pieces for trumpet and organ.

Bibl.: Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. trans. by Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editorie); Tarr, Edward H. Complete English Translation and Critical Commentary to Fantini's "Method for Learning to Play the Trumpet" (The Brass Press).

Fardella, Charlie (b. New York, New York, c1960). American trumpeter and cornetist. Fardella is a top New Orleans trumpet and cornet player whose style is that of vintage New Orleans jazz. He played in circus bands, and later established himself in New Orleans (1980). He played with the New Orleans Ragtime Orchestra (1982) and singer Banu Gibson's New Orleans Hot Jazz during the 1980s, recording numerous albums with the group between 1983 and 1990. He was replaced by Duke Heitger when he left the band in 1990. For the past twenty years, Fardella has performed with many traditional jazz groups in the New Orleans area and has led several of his own groups. He also played for the show, Wild Women Don't Have the Blues (1992).

Fardella's albums include Charlie Fardella and His Sensation Jazz Band (Audiophile), plus recordings with Gibson on the Swing Out label such as Vintage Banu, Spreading Rhythm Around, Let Yourself Go, and You Don't Know My Mind Blues.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Farey, Everett ("Ev") (b. Los Angeles, California, 1930). American cornetist and bandleader. Farey grew up in Los Angeles, but moved with his family to San Francisco when he was in his early teens. He took up the cornet at age fourteen. After graduating from high school, Farey joined the military and was stationed in England. He had an opportunity to hear Artie Shaw's band, and learned that the band needed a new trumpet player. He played with Shaw after his service obligations, but was required to switch to trumpet. While in Europe, he married an English woman named Peg.

Farey returned to the San Francisco area in 1950 and decided to give up music. Two years later, some of his high school musician buddies convinced him to play cornet again, and to join the Canal Street Jazz Band. In 1953, he cofounded and led the Bay City Jazz Band, a traditional jazz octet that recorded for Good Time Jazz in 1956-57. The group continued through 1969. In 1953 and '54, Farey also performed and recorded with Turk Murphy's band and the Riverside Roustabouts (1954). During the 1970s, Ev Farey worked with Jim Maikock's Tappers and the Berkeley Rhythm. In 1976, he formed The New Bay City Jazz Band. In 1977, Farey joined the Golden State Jazz Band, becoming its leader in 1978.

During the 1980s, Farey mostly freelanced, but also performed with and led the Port City Jazz Band (since the fall of 1982). He is still active as a trumpeter and bandleader, and owns Radio Activity, a shop that buys and sells vintage radios. He and Peg reside in San Anselmo, California.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Ev Farey" (http://home.comcast.net); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Farley, Robert ("Bob") (b. Dartford, England, Oct. 3, 1963). British trumpeter. Farley studied with Michael Laird and John Wallace at the Royal College of Music, where he won several awards, including the Ernest Hall Memorial Prize, and began to specialize in playing the (valveless) Baroque trumpet.

Farley has performed as principal trumpet of the City of Birmingham Symphony Orchestra, The Philharmonia, The London Sinfonietta, The Orchestra of the Royal Opera House, English National Opera Orchestra, Symphony of Harmony and Invention, Stuttgart Baroque Orchestra, The Hanover Band, and the Gabrieli Consort & Players (with Michael Laird, trumpet). He is also a professor of trumpet and Baroque trumpet at the Royal Academy of Music and the Trinity College of Music.

Farley can be heard on numerous recordings, especially for the Hyperíon label. He has published the books Natural Trumpet Studies (Brass Wind Publications) and Play Latin (Faber Music).

Farley's hobbies include listening to heavy metal music, watching horror films, and walking.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Robert Farley" (www.the-sixteen.org.uk/page/3145/Robert-Farley/46).

Farmer, Art[hur Stewart] (b. Council Bluffs, Iowa, Aug. 21, 1928; d. New York, New York, Oct. 4, 1999). American trumpeter. Art Farmer was the twin brother of bassist Addison Farmer. He was raised in Phoenix, Arizona, and began learning the piano at age six. He also took up the violin and tuba, but switched to the trumpet at age fourteen. In 1945, at the age of seventeen, he moved to Los Angeles and began working with jazz musicians such as Horace Henderson (through 1945), Floyd Ray, Johnny Otis, Benny Carter, Jay McShann (1948), Gerald Wilson, Teddy Edwards, and the Roy Porter Big Band. He was known for his mellow tone, relaxed style of playing, and excellent technical skills on the trumpet.

During the 1950s, Farmer played with several name groups including those of Wardell Gray (1951-52), Lionel Hampton (1952-53, including the European tour with Clifford Brown in the band), Gigi Gryce (1955-56), Horace Silver (1957-58), and Gerry Mulligan (1958-59). He was in constant demand as a recording artist, working with Gene Ammons, George Russell, Teo Macero, Teddy Charles, and others. He is best known for being coleader of the Jazztet with Benny Golson (1959-62), but the group was financially unsuccessful.

After breaking up the Jazztet, Farmer wanted to change his sound, and switched to flugelhorn. This was the perfect vehicle for his style of playing. He played in a quartet with guitarist Jim Hall from 1962 to 1964, and then led a quintet of his own in 1965. From 1966 to 1968, he played with Jimmy Heath's band and toured Europe with them. He decided to move to Vienna in 1968 and soon was a member of the Austrian Radio Orchestra. He also worked with the Kenny Clarke-Francy Boland Big Band (1970) and the Peter Herbolzheimer Orchestra.

Beginning in 1975, Farmer occasionally returned to the United States where he sometimes played with the Clifford Jordan quintet. In 1982, a reunion band of the Jazztet was formed with Benny Golson and Curtis Fuller. Farmer also played with another reunion band, Birth of the Cool, with Gerry Mulligan.

In 1991, trumpet maker David Monette designed a new instrument for Farmer called the "flumpet" that has a tone somewhere in between a trumpet and a flugelhorn. This instrument became Farmer's signature trumpet until ill health in 1999 caused him to slow down and eventually pass away at the age of seventy-one. Although he never became a celebrity trumpeter, Farmer left a huge legacy of recordings on labels such as Prestige, Concord, Enja, Vogue, Contemporary, ABC-Paramount, Atlantic, Columbia, MPS, United Artists, Soul Note, Mainstream, Sweet Basil, CTI, East Wind, Argo, Mercury, Sonet, and Optimism. He also appeared with Gerry Mulligan in the film, I Want to Live (1958).

Much of Art Farmer's music has been reissued on compact disc. Some of the current discs are Back to the City, Early Art, The Art Farmer Septet, On the Road, A Work of Art, Portrait of Art Farmer (all on Original Jazz Classics), as well as Something to Live For (Contemporary), Modern Art (Blue Note), Meet the Jazztet (MCA/Chess), and Warm Valley (Concord Jazz).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Farrar, Fred ("Fuzzy") (b. Freeland, Pennsylvania, Jan. 15, 1893; d. Little Falls, New Jersey, Jan. 6, 1971). American cornetist and trumpeter. Farrar is best known for performing and recording with the Jean Goldette Orchestra between 1914 and 1926, a group that had an all-star cast including Bix Beiderbecke on solo cornet. He also played with the orchestras of Tommy and Jimmy Dorsey, and Russ Morgan. During his later years, beginning in 1961, Farrar taught trumpet at the Passaic Valley School in Little Falls, New Jersey. He died there just a few days before his seventy-seventh birthday.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Group photo: Fuzzy Farrar (on left) with Don Voorhees Orchestra.

Farrent, Karl (b. Wallington [near London], England, May 8, 1963). British trumpeter. Farrent began taking trumpet lessons from his father at the age of six, and at age ten moved with his family to Lengerich, Westfalia, in Germany. In 1978 at the age of fifteen, he was awarded first prize in a youth jazz competition, and during the next six years was a member of the Youth Jazz Orchestra Northrhine-Westfalia. From 1981 to 1986, he was a member of EuroJazz, and in 1982 completed his academic coursework at the Gymnasium in Lengerich.

Farrent studied jazz at the Cologne Conservatory with Manfred Schoof and Jiggs Whigham from 1982 to 1984. Since January 1, 1985 he has been the principal trumpeter with the Southwest German Radio Big Band in Stuttgart, and teaches at the Stuttgart Conservatory. Since 1993, he has also been the director of the Bow-Tie Big Band, and in 2001 he and Regina Büchner formed a small group called Jazz-it! that released a CD in 2005 titled Everything Else. Farrent has also recorded or performed with Bob Mintzer, Maria Schneider, Sammy Nestico, Bob Florence, Bill Holman, Phil Woods, Clark Terry, Slide Hampton, Max Gregor Sr. and Jr., Peter Herbolzheimer, Buddy De Franco, James Morrison, Randy Brecker, Manny Albam, Arturo Sandoval, Lee Konitz, Hugo Strasser, Südfunk-Tanzorcherster, Erwin Lehn, SWR Big Band, MHS Big Band, Köln Big Band, Frank Foster, Rob McConnell (2004), Don Menza, Toshiko Akiyoshi, and many others. He is an active studio player and has appeared at numerous European jazz festivals.

Farrent and Karin [Suhre], a trumpeter, have been married since 1989.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Karl Farrent's official website: www.farrent.com.

Faso [Fasulo], Anthony ("Tony") (b. Brooklyn, New York, 1923; d. Tamarac, Florida, Jan. 27, 1990). American trumpeter. Faso's mother was Josephine Fasulo, and his father was Luciano ("Louie") Fasulo, a barber and presser of ladies' dresses who played guitar and banjo. Tony began playing the trumpet as a boy, and at age sixteen joined Musicians Local 802 in Brooklyn. He dropped out of high school and went to California where he became a member of the Benny Goodman Band. He joined the Coast Guard for two years during World War II, and then returned to the Goodman organization. He also played in the bands of Artie Shaw and The Dorsey Brothers.

Faso worked in New York City during the early 1960s, playing in the house bands for television's Lucky Strike Hit Parade Show and The Jackie Gleason Show. When Gleason moved the show to Miami Beach, Florida, in 1964, Faso followed Gleason until 1970 when he returned to New York. He was a busy studio player, backing such artists as Ella Fitzgerald, Billie Holiday, Billy Butterfield, Peggy Lee, Mel Tormé, Stan Getz, Frank Sinatra, Ray Conniff, Louis Armstrong, Les Brown, and Billy Eckstine. His last gig was in the pit orchestra for the Broadway show, 42nd Street.

Faso and wife Irene were married and had a son, Stephan.

Bibl.: Lynch, Ray. "Tony Faso, Lead Trumpeter in Band, Television Shows" (Obituary, Sun Sentinel, Feb. 2, 1990).

Photo: Roy Eldridge during a jam session with Artie Shaw and his men. From l to r: Pat McNaughton, Tony Faso, Tommy Mace, Roy Eldridge, Artie Shaw, and Ray Conniff (Source: The Big Bands - George T. Simon).

Fassin, Robert (b. Paris, France, July 8, 1922). French trumpeter. Fassin studied trumpet with Jean Greffin and Robert Pichaureau. He became a professional trumpeter in 1941, and was the lead trumpet of the famous section with Georges Jouvin and Yves Lalouette at the Gaumont Palace in Paris (1945-54). He also played with Tony Proteau (1946), Charlie Parker (1950, radio show), and Raymond Legrand (1952), as well as playing extensively in studios as lead trumpet for records and film soundtracks (1949-65). During the mid 1950s, Fassin was considered the greatest French lead trumpet player, rivaled only by Fred Gérard. He worked mostly as a lead trumpeter with the bands of Michel Legrand (1956), Christian Chevallier (1956-57), Claude Bolling (1956-58), Roger Roger (1958), and Norman Maine (1960). In 1965, he left music to work as a taxi driver, but in 1982 began to play again. He played with the Fred Gérard Big Band in Arcueil.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Faulkner, Maurice Ervin (b. Ft. Scott, Kansas, Feb. 2, 1912; d. Aug. 7, 1994). American trumpeter, conductor, and author. Faulkner attended Ft. Hays State College in Kansas, earning a bachelor of science degree in music in 1932. He taught music in the Hays public schools while attending summer school at the Teachers College of Columbia University in New York, eventually receiving a master of arts degree in 1940. In 1937, he joined the faculty at San Jose State College in California, and in 1940 began teaching at his last post at Santa Barbara State College. His teaching was interrupted for a short while when he was drafted into the Army during the Korean War, serving as a band conductor in Korea. After returning to Santa Barbara, California, he taught and studied towards his doctorate. He received a PhD in music from Stanford University in 1956.

Faulkner was one of the faculty that lobbied to have the Santa Barbara State College included in California's state university system. Subsequently, the college became the University of California at Santa Barbara (UCSB). He was chair of the music department during the early 1950s, taught trumpet, conducted the university orchestra and brass choir, and was director of the Santa Barbara Fiesta Bowl Program. He was also conductor of the Santa Barbara Orchestra, and for many years was a board member of the Music Academy of the West in Santa Barbara (chair of board, 1949-53). He formed the All-California High School Symphony Orchestra, serving as its conductor from 1941 to 1973.

Beginning in 1951, Faulkner was a well-known author who contributed numerous trumpet articles to various music journals and magazines, including The Instrumentalist and Brass World. He was also a local music critic for newspapers in Southern California.

Maurice Faulkner was married to Suzanne . Their daughters are Katherine and Barbara.

Bibl.: Zytewski, Carl. "Maurice Ervin Faulkner, Music: Santa Barbara" (University of California: http://content.cdlib.org/xtf/view?docId=hb5g50061q&doc.view=frames&chunk.id=div00031&toc.depth=1&toc.id=).

Felber, Dani (b. Münsterlingen, Switzerland, Feb. 10, 1972). Swiss trumpeter, composer, and bandleader. Felber comes from a musical family. He took trumpet lessons from Eisuke Yamamoto, and at age twelve was a member of the Liberty Brass Band that toured England. At age thirteen, he played with the National Youth Brass Band. As a boy, he saw the movie The Glenn Miller Story starring James Stewart, and decided that he wanted to someday lead a big band.

In 1996, Felber formed the jazz group known as Jazz Dependence. He also worked with many big name jazz performers such as Clark Terry, Al Porcino, Johnny Griffin, Phil Woods, Jimmy Heath, Bob Mintzer, Dusko Gojkovic, and Franco Ambrosetti. At the relatively advanced age of twenty-nine, he studied with Bert Joris at the music school in Bern, and in 2001 formed his own big band. Today, his band includes twenty-two top performers from ten different countries, and is considered to be one of the finest groups of its kind in Europe; it won the Swiss Jazz Award in 2010. Its first CD release was More Than Just Friends.

Felber's trumpet and flugelhorn playing has been compared to that of Chuck Mangione and Art Farmer. His recordings often feature his own compositions; his newest CD, Sweet Breeze, features fifteen of his original works.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "Dani Felber Big Band" (www.swissjazzaward.ch/en/winners).

Ferber, Guy (b. Colmar, Alsace, France, May 28, 1966). French trumpeter. He continues to live in the village of Bergheim, where he grew up in a house on the edge of the Alsatian vineyards. He studied the modern trumpet (classical music) in the national music schools of Colmar and Mulhausen, and at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique of Lyons, where he obtained, respectively, a gold medal in 1983, a first interregional superior prize in 1985, and a national diploma of advanced musical studies in 1989. He then specialized in Baroque trumpet with Jean-Pierre Canihac at the C.N.S.M. of Lyons and with Edward H. Tarr at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis.

In 2001, he won first prize in the international Altenburg competition for Baroque trumpet in Bad Säckingen, Germany. At the moment he is professor of trumpet in the National Music School in Colmar.

Ferber solos throughout the world with the greatest Baroque ensembles, led by Jordi Savall, Philippe Herreweghe, Emmanuelle Haïm, Masaaki Suzuki, Frieder Bernius, Philippe Pierlot, and Thomas Hengelbrock.

In 1995 he founded the ensemble, Le Concert Royal. He specializes in the interpretation of the music of Bach and Handel, which he instructs in worldwide master classes.

Bibl.: Ferber autobiography given to Edward Tarr (translation by Tarr) on Feb. 4, 2013.

Ferguson, [Walter] Maynard (b. Verdun, Quebec, Canada, May 4, 1928; d. Ventura, California, Aug. 23, 2006). Canadian trumpeter. Few musicians ever attained such celebrity status and widespread influence as did Maynard Ferguson. The quintessential high-note trumpet player, Ferguson inspired hundreds of thousands of trumpeters and big band performers during a career lasting over sixty years.

Born in a suburb of Montreal, Ferguson was encouraged by his parents to play the piano and violin at the age of four. Ferguson stated, My parents were both school principals and music lovers. My mother had a slight prejudice towards classical music, so she was a bit disappointed when my father agreed to buy me a trumpet and my brother a saxophone, since both of us, from the age of four, were piano and violin students. My father had been a great contributor in starting the instrumental music education in the Quebec school system at that time. For that reason, sometimes during the vacation months, we would have something like 147 instruments in our basement. Our house looked like a music store, and my brother and I grew up treating the instruments like toys! I'm self-taught on hitting high notes. Years later, when I met people into yoga, I discovered that I almost breathe perfectly, which very few people do, I was playing in the upper register when I was very young. By the time I was sixteen, I think I'd already nailed the lid on my classical career! Maynard Ferguson took lessons with Harry Nelson and played solo cornet in the Black Watch Regimental Band (Goldman repertory).

By age thirteen, Ferguson was performing trumpet solos with the CBC Radio Orchestra. Considered to be a fifteen-year-old prodigy, he was given a full scholarship to attend the Montreal Conservatory of Music where he studied from 1943-48 with Bernard Baker. During this time, he played in dance bands led by Johnny LoRondo (Ellington repertory), Stan Wood, Roland David, and Johnny Holmes. He learned to play other brass and reed instruments and later became the leader of a dance band once formed by his brother, Percy (1945 to 1947). Maynard's early models were Rex Stewart, Roy Eldridge, Harry James, Bunny Berigan, and Dizzy Gillespie (whom he knew personally from 1944).

Ferguson had a natural gift for the high register of the trumpet. While the top note normally played by professional trumpet and cornet artists during the 1940s was high F, Maynard could easily hit double-high c""s. This drew the attention of several bandleaders, and soon he received offers to join various dance bands in the United States.

Ferguson moved to the United States in late 1948, and began his career with the bands of Boyd Raeburn, Jimmy Dorsey, and Charley Barnet (where he played alongside Carl "Doc" Severinsen, Ray Wetzel, Johnny Howell, and Rolf Ericson). Wetzel gave him some valuable help. When Barnet retired in 1949, Ferguson joined Stan Kenton's newly organized Innovations Orchestra, a forty-piece concert jazz band with strings. The band's first rehearsal was on January 1, 1950. Although the large group was not financially viable, they made several recordings including an album titled Maynard Ferguson that featured Ferguson's stratospheric trumpet playing.

Kenton returned to a nineteen-piece orchestra and featured Ferguson on several solos including Invention for Guitar and Trumpet, What's New, and Hot Canary. Ferguson's popularity won him the "Best Trumpeter" vote in Downbeat magazine's Readers' Poll in 1950, 1951, and 1952. Maynard was also featured on television's Ed Sullivan Show. In 1951, he married singer and actress Kay Brown, but soon remarried in 1955 to Flo Ferguson.

Ferguson left the Kenton orchestra in 1953 to work for Paramount Pictures in Hollywood, California. He played on forty-six movie soundtracks, including The Ten Commandments starring Charlton Heston, and did many recording sessions for RCA and EmArcy. Unhappy doing studio work rather than performing live concerts, he left Paramount in 1956 when he was asked to lead the Birdland Dream Band formed by Morris Levy in New York. This band recorded two albums and was short-lived, but many of the star performers of the band later formed the core of Maynard's own big band that worked for the next nine years. In 1958, he premiered the Titan Symphony by Bill Russo with the New York Philharmonic under Leonard Bernstein. In many concerts, Maynard sometimes doubled on valve trombone or euphonium.

As big bands lost popularity during the 1960s, Ferguson eventually was forced to disband his own, but he formed and led a sextet which did several recordings (1965-1967). He moved his family to India and taught at the Rishi Valley School near Madras. He also founded a boys' brass band at the Sri Sathya Sai Institute of Higher Learning, and began to study the teachings of the spiritual guru, Sathya Sai Baba. In August 1968, he moved to Manchester, England, where he signed a contract with CBS Records and formed a jazz-rock big band. The band's hit records were popular among audiences, especially for the songs MacArthur Park and Hey Jude. In 1970, his band performed on UK television as part of the BBC's Simon Dee Show (also known as Dee Time) and became hugely popular. While in England, he also began designing Ferguson-model trumpets and mouthpieces. With Holton, Maynard designed the Firebird trumpet and Superbone trombone (slide plus valves).

Maynard's new band made its North American debut in 1972. By 1973, the band relocated to New York, and was reduced to twelve musicians plus Maynard as leader and soloist. Recordings such as MF Horn 4, MF Horn 5, and Live at Jimmy's became hits, and Ferguson was popular on college campuses and at high schools throughout the United States. Subsequent albums such as Primal Scream (1976) and Conquistador (1977) brought his popularity to its all-time high. His pop hit single Gonna Fly Now made him a household name. He was selected to perform a solo as part of the closing ceremonies of the 1976 Summer Olympics in Montreal.

Despite Ferguson's popularity during the 1970s, jazz critics were not pleased with his bent for commercial-style music. The record producers at Columbia were reluctant to allow even one jazz tune on each album. Ferguson decided to make his 1982 album, Hollywood, his last with the Columbia label. He recorded three big band albums with smaller labels during the mid 1980s, and formed the jazz-fusion septet High Voltage in 1986. This group recorded two albums that received mixed reviews. In 1988, Ferguson returned to the big band format and jazz style when he formed Big Bop Nouveau. He toured with this group for the rest of his life and was inducted into the Downbeat Hall of Fame in 1992.

Throughout Ferguson's career, he was able to adapt to changing musical tastes and styles, making his bands among the few to survive past 1960. His albums trace his evolution through big band swing, bebop, cool jazz, Latin jazz, jazz-rock, and fusion styles. Countless trumpet artists and students have imitated his playing style, and it is one of the most easily recognized. He credited his unusual abilities for range (often up to triple-high c"") and stamina to breath control and his study of spiritual and yoga techniques, stating, The air power is so important, the velocity of your air stream. I like to swim

100 laps in the pool each morning when I'm home, so I'll have the air power. If you're breathing and standing correctly, you won't hurt yourself by trying for high notes.

In 2006, Maynard Ferguson had just completed a weeklong run of performances at New York's Blue Note, and the recording of a studio album in New Jersey, when he developed an infection that resulted in kidney and liver failure. He died on the evening of August 23, 2006 at the Community Memorial Hospital in Ventura, California, near his home in Ojai. He was seventy-seven years old. His life's influence was described in the Washington Post newspaper: Ferguson lit up thousands of young horn players, most of them boys, with pride and excitement. In a [high school] world often divided between jocks and band nerds, Ferguson crossed over, because he approached his music almost as an athletic event. On stage, he strained, sweated, heaved and roared. He nailed the upper registers like Shaq nailing a dunk or Lawrence Taylor nailing a running back—and the audience reaction was exactly the same: the guttural shout, the leap to their feet, the fists in the air. We cheered Maynard as a gladiator, a combat soldier, a prizefighter, a circus strongman—choose your masculine archetype.

Ferguson received the Man of Music Award from the Phi Mu Alpha Sinfonia music fraternity. In 2000, the Maynard Ferguson Institute of Jazz Studies was established at Rowan University in New Jersey, and he was awarded an Honorary Doctor of Music degree. He consistently recorded between the years 1953 and 2006, totaling seventy-five albums. He had a fan club, and continues to have numerous tribute websites on the Internet. His wife Flo passed away on February 27, 2005. Maynard had three daughters and a stepdaughter, plus a son who is deceased. His biography, MF Horn, was written by William F. Lee.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Lee, William F. MF Horn: Maynard Ferguson's Life in Music (M. F. Music, 1997); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Von Drehle, David. "Maynard Ferguson's Horn Screamed With Vulgar Passion" (Washington Post, Aug. 26, 2006); "Maynard Ferguson" (http://wikipedia.org); "Maynard Ferguson, Trumpet Player, Bandleader" (Maynard Ferguson Tribute Page: http://maynard.ferguson.net); Laplace, Michel (CD-Rom with extract on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Ferry, Dennis (b. Latrobe, Pennsylvania, Nov. 15, 1948). American trumpeter. Ferry's early trumpet studies were with his father, Tony Ferri, a big band trumpeter. He later studied with Anthony Pasquarelli at Carnegie-Mellon University (bachelor of music) and Lloyd Geisler at Catholic University of America (master of music). Additionally, he studied with James Stamp.

Ferry was a member of the United States Air Force Concert Band in Washington, D.C. before becoming principal trumpet of the Jerusalem Philharmonic, Düsseldorf Symphony, Schleswig-Holsteinische Sinfonieorchester, and Rotterdam Philharmonic. From October 1977 to December 2008, he was principal trumpet of the Suisse de Romande Orchestra in Geneva, Switzerland. During the summers between 1983 and 1996, he was principal trumpet of the Colorado Music Festival Orchestra in Boulder. In addition, he has played in the Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble and the Sextette de Cuivres de Genève.

A specialist on the Baroque (valveless) trumpet, Ferry has been a member of the early music ensembles Les Arts Florissants (Paris), La Chapelle Royale (Belgium), Gli Angeli (Geneva), and the Boston Early Music Festival Orchestra. He has released a solo album on Baroque trumpet titled Arias of Scarlatti and Melani (Harmonia Mundi). His other solo album on Harmonia Mundi is titled La Belle Epoque, and features works played on the cornet-à-pistons. He has also recorded Ponchielli's Trumpet Concerto and Robert Russell Bennett's Rose Variations on two separate albums with the Denver Municipal Band.

In total, Ferry has played on over seven hundred live radio broadcasts and thirty recordings by the Suisse de Romande Orchestra. He has published arrangements for brass quintet and an orchestral excerpt book for piccolo trumpet titled Piccolo Trumpets.

Bibl.: Hardin, Anne. "The Orchestra de la Suisse Romande Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2010); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Dennis Ferry" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Few, Guy (b. Saskatoon, Saskatchewan, Canada, Mar. 21, 1963). Canadian trumpeter, cornetist, pianist, and singer. While growing up in Saskatoon, Few studied trumpet in the military band tradition for three years with Walter Garlic and John Schoen. He then studied with Ramon Parcells until he graduated from high school from Walter Murray Collegiate Institute in 1981. Additionally, he studied trumpet during extended summer sessions at the Saskatchewan Summer School of the Arts and the National Youth Orchestra of Canada, coached by Vincent Cichowicz and Armando Ghitalla. While in Saskatchewan, he earned Associate, Licentiate, and Fellowship piano performance diplomas through Trinity College in London, England, in the studio of Sheila Shinkewski.

Guy Few attended Wilfrid Laurier University in Waterloo, Ontario, from 1982 to 1986 where he was a gold medal graduate. During his freshman year, he studied trumpet with John Tickner, and in the remaining years with Erik Schultz. He also studied piano with Garth Beckett. Postuniversity, he continued studying trumpet with Erik Schultz, and piano with Boris Lysenko. Awards include the Sylva Gelber Award from the Canada Council, as well as the CAPACOA touring artist of the year, 2009-10.

Few began working at Wilfrid Laurier University as a collaborative pianist in 1992, and in 1993 became the trumpet teacher there. He has appeared on numerous radio and television programs throughout Canada and the U.S., has taught at the Banff Centre of the Arts, and performs and teaches at music festivals around the world. Selections of his fifteen recordings include Romanza (MSR), Bacchanale (MSR) (winner of Best Classical Orchestral Recording in 2009 – Just Plain Folks Music Awards), Vocalise (self-released), Berio Sequenzas I-XIV (NAXOS), Penderecki Credo (Hänssler), and Bellows and Brass and Boyd (Springdale).

Bibl.: "Guy Few" (www.guyfew.com); "Guy Few" (www.coloursofmusic.com); personal interview, Nov. 9, 2010.

Photo credits: Sophie Hogan (upper), Cylla von Tiedemann (lower).

Fielder, William [Butler] (b. Meridian, Mississippi, July 2, 1938; d. Newark, New Jersey, Sept. 24, 2009). American trumpeter. William Fielder was born into a musical family. His father was a medical doctor who played the cornet, and his mother played the violin and piano. His grandmother was one of the original Jubilee Singers, and his brother Alvin is a drummer.

William began taking piano lessons at the age of twelve, but soon wanted to play on his father's cornet. Because of his problems with asthma, his father felt that this would be good therapy for his weak lungs, and agreed to allow him to play it. William's early cornet lessons were with Duke Otis and George Frank Sims. While in high school, he studied with William "Hillbilly" Davis, a former member of Cab Calloway's band. Davis was the band director at Jackson State College, and invited sixteen-year-old Fielder to play with the college band.

Fielder's parents wanted William to become a doctor, so he was transferred from Meridian High School to Tougaloo College Prep School where he studied physics and chemistry. But when a music scholarship was offered by Tennessee State University, William decided to pursue his dream of becoming a musician. His parents were disappointed and refused to pay for his schooling. After a year and a half of college, Fielder took the advice of Booker Little, and moved to Chicago to seek lessons in classical playing.

After arriving in Chicago in 1957, Fielder went to Orchestra Hall and auditioned for Adolph Herseth, principal trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. Herseth invited him to become a member of the Chicago Civic Orchestra alongside Charles Geyer and others. He studied with Herseth and Vincent Cichowicz, and performed as an extra with the CSO, recording Pines of Rome for RCA in 1959. Fielder also learned to play jazz on his own, and played in various local groups. He continued studying with Herseth and Cichowicz, eventually earning both bachelor's and master's degrees from The American Conservatory of Music. Fielder played with the American Conservatory Symphony & Brass Ensemble, but also with Sammy Davis Jr., Sun Ra, B.B. King (a seven month tour), and Slide Hampton. He spent some time in New York (1961), and got advice on improvisation from Donald Byrd, Dizzy Gillespie, and Lee Morgan. He then went back to Chicago to play shows with Clarence "Sleepy" Anderson (1961-63). He also played with Ray Charles, Duke Ellington, Dinah Washington, Aretha Franklin, and Kenny Burrell.

After graduating in 1965, Fielder accepted a position as trumpet teacher at Alabama State University. He also played in the Birmingham Symphony Orchestra until 1972 when he took a position at Tennessee State University, the first college he attended. While there, he also played at times with the Nashville Symphony under Dr. Thor Johnson. In 1974, he taught for one semester at the University of Oklahoma in Norman and, in the following year, accepted part-time positions at several universities in the South, including Lemoyne Owen College, Southern University (in New Orleans), Mississippi Valley State College, Florida A&M University, and Shaw University.

During his busy years of teaching (1975-79) Fielder met jazz pianist Ellis Marsalis. Ellis asked Fielder if he would teach his son, Wynton. Fielder enjoyed working with Wynton, and also helped him and his brother, Branford, in learning various jazz styles. When Wynton asked how Maurice André could play with such wonderful technical accuracy and ease in the high register, Fielder explained that André was performing on a piccolo trumpet. He then went to his car and returned with a brand new piccolo trumpet. He handed it to young Wynton and told him that if he could sound good on it by his next lesson, he could keep the horn. As it turned out, Fielder loved to purchase all sorts of new trumpets—as many as fifty or sixty—that he would trade or give to talented students. When asked why he owned several brand new Benge 3Xs, or five Bach #229 Cs, he would say, If I try a horn that is really good, I just like to buy it. You never know when a talented student may need one.

Fielder accepted his final teaching position in 1979 as a professor (his nickname soon became "Prof") at Rutgers University in Newark, New Jersey, where he headed the jazz program until his death some thirty years later. He influenced and inspired legions of musicians including Terell Stafford, Frank Lacey, Sean Jones, Ralph Peterson Jr., Terence Blanchard, Mike Mussman, Riley Mullins, Leroy Jones Jr., Brian Lynch, and Eric Wright.

At the age of thirty-two, Fielder had suffered serious vision problems from glaucoma, greatly affecting his ability to read classical music. Because of this, he focused on his jazz playing. Over time, Fielder unfortunately lost all of his teeth and had to learn to play with dentures. His determination to be the best he could be only further inspired his students. His motto was to be "gratified but never satisfied."

William Fielder developed cancer, and spent his last year in the hospital, finally succumbing to death on September 24, 2009. Wynton Marsalis said of him, Prof was a deep soul. The best lesson I learned from him was the value of integrity...I am so honored to have studied with him. Posthumously, Fielder was awarded Downbeat magazine's "Jazz Educator of the Year Award" and also was inducted into Downbeat's Jazz Educator Hall of Fame. He can be seen coaching Wynton Marsalis in the televised classical video, Jazz Duet (1992).

During Fielder's career, he performed with many great artists, including Count Basie, Art Pepper, Abbey Lincoln, Redd Foxx, Diahann Carroll, Donny Smith, Herbie Hancock, Marcus Belgrave, Gene Ammons, and many others. He recorded with Lionelle Hamanaka (album, A Different World)

He was one of the pioneers in trumpet to play both classical and jazz at a high level. He recorded with B.B. King, Sun Ra, and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, and led his own album called Love Progressive (1984). He never married.

Bibl.: Porter, Lewis. "William (Butler) Fielder" Encyclopedia of Jazz Musicians (www.jazz.com); Stewart, Marian. "William Fielder—1938-2009" (The Brass Herald, Dec. 2009); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Laplace, Michel. Bill Fielder (Jazz Hot, Nov. 2009).

Findley, Charles ("Chuck") Benton (b. Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Dec. 15, 1947). American trumpeter. Findley began playing trumpet at the tender age of three, and took his first lessons at age eight. While in high school in Cleveland, Ohio, he studied with Harry Herforth of the Cleveland Orchestra. At age seventeen, Findley played for six months with the Jimmy Dorsey Orchestra, and then attended the Cleveland Institute of Music where he studied with Bernard Adelstein. After graduation, he played again with Dorsey (six months), Jack Daugherty, and the Buddy Rich Band (two years). In 1968, he was in Las Vegas for a year, played in an orchestra at the Thunderbird Hotel, and became a top lead trumpet player.

Findley moved to Los Angeles in 1969 in order to join Louie Bellson's band. He began doing studio work, and recorded film music for such movies as Bobby Deerfield, And Justice for All, Hooper, Grease, The Enforcer, and Saturday Night Fever. He studied with Carmine Caruso in New York City, played in the Metropole Orchestra in Holland, and was a member of Peter Herbolzheimer's GRP All Star Big Band. Findley recorded Trumpets No End with Bobby Shew (1985).

As one of the top Hollywood trumpeters, Findley became a member of Doc Severinsen's The Tonight Show orchestra. He also played in Branford Marsalis's The Tonight Show orchestra for Jay Leno. Findley toured as lead trumpet with Ray Charles (Paris, 1989), Madonna, Stevie Wonder, Barbra Streisand, Michael Jackson, The Carpenters, and the Don Menza Big Band (2004). His more recent film credits include Amerika, John Q, Dingo (with Miles Davis in 1990*), Lush Life* (1993) and Nightmare Before Christmas, among others. He is also featured on Michael Davis's CD, Trumpets Eleven. Chuck is the younger brother of Robert (Bob) Findley (b. 1939).

Bibl.: Hood, Boyde. "Ten Outstanding Trumpet Players in the Los Angeles Area" (Brass Bulletin, no. 41, 1983); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Findley, Robert ("Bob") (b. Johnstown, Pennsylvania, Nov. 1, 1939). American trumpeter. The older brother of Chuck Findley (b. 1947), Robert began playing the trumpet at age nine. By age thirteen, he was performing with local high school jazz bands, and by age fourteen was playing local gigs in Cleveland, Ohio. While in high school, he was able to sit in with veteran jazz performers such as Ornette Coleman and Yusef Lateef. After graduating from high school, he toured with Ralph Marterie's band before returning to Cleveland to play for a local television show. About this time, he developed embouchure problems, and began flying to New York City each week for lessons with Carmine Caruso.

From 1959 to 1963, Findley was a member of the Glenn Miller Orchestra led by Ray McKinley, and the Tommy Dorsey Orchestra led by Sam Donahue. From 1963 to 1975, he lived in Las Vegas, starting out by playing in various lounge bands, and becoming a trumpeter for the Caesar's Palace band (split-lead for six years). In 1975, he joined Herb Alpert's Tijuana Brass and moved to Los Angeles.

As a studio performer, Robert Findley has numerous credits. Among the many Hollywood films he played for are Rocky II, A Star is Born, Scavenger Hunt, Beverly Hills Cop III, The Blues Brothers, Breaking Away, Brewster's Millions, Father of the Bride, Love at First Bite, Lords of Discipline, Karate Kid II and III, The Little Mermaid, Field of Dreams, Dirty Rotten Scoundrels, High School High, The Majestic, The Money Pit, Cousins, Chinatown, Foul Play, and Children of a Lesser God. Television credits include The A-Team, Home Improvement, Police Story, Wheel of Fortune, Laverne and Shirley, Happy Days, Barney Miller, Jeopardy, The Newlywed Game, Dynasty, Quantum Leap, Hotel, Gong Show, Hawaii Five-O, Dating Game, Mash, Sex and the City, Twilight Zone, St. Elsewhere, Going Places, Golden Girls, and Coach. He has also recorded dozens of commercials for companies such as Coca-Cola, Lexus, UPS, Budweiser, Ford Motor Company, IBM, Levi, Taco Bell, Quest, Mountain Dew, Coors, Chevrolet, Audi, Pearl Vision, and Acura. Findley wrote Bob Findley on Trumpet—A Method Book (Brassology).

Bibl.: Hood, Boyde. "Ten Outstanding Trumpet Players in the Los Angeles Area" (Brass Bulletin, no. 41, 1983); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Bob Findley's official website (www.bobfindley.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Finger, Gottfried [Godfrey] (b. Olomouc, Moravia, c1660; d. Mannheim, Germany, Aug. 31, 1730). English trumpeter of Moravian origin. Finger went to England as part of a Moravian music ensemble, and ended up working in London in 1685. He is credited as having introduced the "flat" ("flatt") trumpet, a type of slide trumpet capable of playing more pitches than the standard natural trumpet of the time.

Finger was a respected composer, and wrote four sonatas for trumpet and strings, as well as many stage and vocal works. After earning only fourth place in a composition contest in 1700, he felt slighted, and subsequently left England. He worked for Queen Sophie-Charlotte of Prussia, then Duke Karl Philipp of Pfalz-Neuburg, whom he followed to Innsbruck, Düsseldorf, Heidelberg, and Mannheim.

Bibl.: Cassone, Gabriele (Eng. trans. by Tom Dambly). The Trumpet Book (Zecchini Editore); "Gottfried Finger" (Oxford Music Online).

Finke, Helmut (b. Herford, Germany, Apr. 7, 1923; d. Vlotho, Germany, Oct. 30, 2009). German manufacturer. Finke's first trumpet lessons took place at age twelve with a military musician. He studied engineering, but was drafted into the German army in 1942. He was badly wounded in Russia in 1943. After recovering in the hospital, he was released from active duty. He resumed his engineering studies until 1945, when the school he was attending closed. He decided to concentrate on the trumpet, becoming second trumpet in the Herford Symphony Orchestra. The principal trumpet player was Walter Holy. Both of their careers would be intertwined for the rest of their lives.

Purchasing a small metal lathe, Finke initially began designing and making mouthpieces in 1950. He soon built his first trumpet, and established an instrument workshop. In 1959, Finke worked with researcher Otto Steinkopf to design and build trumpets copied from original Baroque instruments. Their attempts to make long-model trumpets were unsuccessful, but they were able to make a workable replica of the coiled trumpet held by Gottfried Reiche (1667-1734) in his famous portrait done in 1727 by Elias Gottlob Haussmann. Steinkopf designed three vent-holes that corrected several of the out-of-tune harmonics and increased accuracy in the upper register, and the instrument was made famous by Holy within a few years. Soon, the demand for Finke-Steinkopf instruments was paralleled by a worldwide interest in authentic Baroque trumpet performance practice.

Needing a larger facility to meet the demand for instruments, Finke moved his workshop to Vlotho/Exter in 1964. During the late 1960s, Finke became interested in building French horns, which later became the main trade for the company. His youngest son, John (from his second marriage), eventually took over the company. His other son, Christian, is also active with the firm.

Holy's performances of Baroque works by Bach, Telemann, and others during the early 1960s drew the attention of younger artists such as Edward Tarr, Michael Laird, Pieter Dolk, Detlef Altenburg, Reinhard Ehritt, and Wolfgang Pohle. Finke played Baroque trumpet alongside Holy in the Capella Coloniensis, one of the first early music ensembles of its kind. Finke's last public performance as a soloist was around 1988.

Bibl.: "Helmut Finke" (www.finkehorns.de); "Helmut Finke" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Firth, Edwin (b. Earby, England, Dec. 23, 1888; d. Varennes, near Amiens, France, June 1, 1918). English cornetist. His grandfather Greenwood Firth was a solo trombonist, and his father Squire Firth, a cornetist with the Black Dyke Mills Band. At the age of eleven, Edwin studied with his father, and then with Alexander Owen and William Rimmer. In 1902, at the age of fourteen, he won third place in a solo competition at the Crystal Palace, and in 1904, first place in a competition in Bradford. In 1908, he became a featured soloist with the Foden's Motor Works Band. He married one of Foden's granddaughters.

Between October 1913 and 1917, Firth recorded numerous cornet solos. He was known as "The Boy Champion Cornet Player," due to having won over forty gold or silver medals and four silver cups. He was also known for playing the trumpet in Handel's Messiah and other oratorios. He was beloved so much by the citizens of Earby, that whenever he became ill, straw was scattered on the street outside his bedroom, so that the sound of horses did not disturb his sleep.

Firth's career was interrupted in February of 1918, when he was drafted into the military and assigned to the 28th London Regiment—also known as The Artists' Rifles. He died on the battlefield in France on June 1, 1918 at the age of twenty-nine. Edwin's wife Doris gave birth to a son, Teddy, whom Edwin never saw. His wife never remarried and died in 1991 at the age of ninety-nine; Teddy died in 1994 at the age of seventy-five.

According to reports, Edwin Firth was perhaps England's greatest cornet soloist. He was an unassuming man of small physical stature (when he was a boy, his father would have him stand on a box during solo performances). A memorial stone decorated with a cornet was placed in his honor in the Thornton-in-Craven Church yard near Skipton, Yorkshiure. (See color pages.)

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. "European Cornet and Trumpet Soloists" (Notes to a CD recording published by the International Trumpet Guild, 2004); "Edwin Firth, England's Champion Cornet Player" (www.harrogateband.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Color photo of headstone: Hannah Upton

Fischer, Carl (b. Baldwin, Long Island, New York, Dec. 12, 1971). American trumpeter and bandleader. Fischer began playing trumpet as a boy, guided by his father, Charlie Fischer. The family moved to Clearwater, Florida, where Carl studied jazz with the legendary jazz cornetist Nat Adderley. He later moved to New York City where he became friends with trumpeter Wynton Marsalis who mentored him and engaged him to play with his Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra (1992). Fischer has also worked as a studio player, backing many celebrities such as Mariah Carey, Will Smith, The Four Tops, The Dolls, The Temptations, Blood Sweat & Tears, Esteban, The Supremes, Billy Joel, and many others. He often played lead trumpet in various Broadway pit orchestras (2004-05).

Fischer joined the Maynard Ferguson band in 1993 as the jazz trumpet soloist, touring the world and making recordings with the band through 1998, and again in 2000-04. He founded his own jazz trio, and a large ensemble called Carl Fischer & Organic Groove Ensemble. His solo CD from 2003 is titled Carl Fischer. He is also an active guest soloist and clinician.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Carl Fischer" (www.yamaha.com/artists/carlfischer.html).

Fischer, Gerd (b. Bad Elster, Germany, Oct. 25, 1961). German trumpeter. Fischer studied at a music school in his home town before attending a special school of music in Hallé where he studied with Günther Rössler from 1976 to 1979. In 1978, he was a prizewinner in a solo competition. From 1979 to 1983, he studied with Kurt Ramm at the Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy School of Music in Leipzig.

Fischer's orchestral career began in 1988, when he became principal trumpet of the State Opera Orchestra in Munich. The following year, he switched to the Munich Symphony Orchestra, also as principal. He was a member of the Harmonic Brass quintet in Munich from 1992 to 1996, as well as the German Philharmonic Big Band. Since 1994, he has served as principal of the Symphony Orchestra of the German Radio in Leipzig.

Fischer is an active soloist and chamber musician, and has toured Europe, America, and Asia. In 1987, he was one of the first to perform B.A. Zimmermann's extremely difficult trumpet concerto.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

Fischer, Horst ("Hackl") Volkmar (b. Chemnitz-Adelsberg, Germany, June 8, 1930; d. Cologne, Germany, Mar. 21, 1986). German trumpeter. It's too bad that more is not known of Fischer, a great big band trumpet soloist who was equal to Harry James or Maynard Ferguson. He studied violin and piano, then began playing the cornet at age eleven, and at thirteen studied at an army music school in Frankfurt. The school was bombed during World War II, so in 1943 he moved to another army music school in Bückeburg (Burgstädt). After two years, he moved to a school in Zschopau, but in 1945 it was taken over by the Russians who confiscated all of the orchestra's instruments, so he moved to a school in Castle City. Fischer left school in 1947 when he was offered a position in Ernst Knauth's dance orchestra. He had previously played with Karl Walther in 1946.

Fischer became a member of the Leipzig Radio Orchestra (1948) and Kurt Henkels Dance Orchestra (1948, as a lead trumpet). He played in Hamburg (1951), and with Erwin Lehn and the Südfunk Tanzorchester (1953-59, Stuttgart, including a concert with Miles Davis at the Beethovensaal on Dec. 18, 1957), as well as with Willy Berking (1954-56, Frankfurt am Main). He also played in Cologne (1956), and led a studio band (from 1958). His natural ability as a soloist and high note player quickly made him a star. He formed his own band for a while, and recorded the hit album, Horst Fischer and His Golden Trumpet (Decca), that sold over one million copies in 1959. Other albums followed, including High Noon and Trumpet Serenade (Decca).

He was the soloist and lead trumpet in the RIAS Orchestra in Berlin (1960-66), and during the late 1960s toured Japan with the Werner Müller Orchestra, as well as with Kurt Edelhagen's orchestra (1966-71). Having turned down an offer to play in the Stan Kenton Orchestra, he moved to Zürich, Switzerland, to play in the radio orchestra (1971-78).

Alcohol abuse became a problem for Fischer during the early 1970s, which led to his early death at the age of fifty-five. He had moved to southern Germany, and eventually settled near Cologne, but his popularity had declined rapidly, and he became nearly forgotten and penniless. He was buried without a headstone in the Chemnitz cemetery. However, a group of interested people provided for a proper burial marker in 2006.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Horst Fischer" (www.magictrumpet.de/englisch.htm).

Fischthal, Glenn Jay (b. Shell Lake, Wisconsin, Feb. 22, 1948). American trumpeter. Fischthal grew up in New York. He attended the Cleveland Institute of Music, where he studied with Bernard Adelstein, graduating in 1970. In 1970, he played as a substitute trumpeter in the Cleveland Orchestra, which resulted in his being invited to tour the Far East with the Cleveland Orchestra under Maestros George Szell and Pierre Boulez. He then continued his studies at the California Institute of the Arts in Velencia. He also studied trumpet with Thomas Stevens, Frank Kaderabek, and Robert Nagel.

Fischthal played for a short while with the San Antonio Symphony Orchestra, National Ballet Orchestra of Canada, Hong Kong Philharmonic, and the Kansas City Philharmonic. In 1976, he became principal trumpet of the Israel Philharmonic, and in 1979 was named principal of the San Diego Symphony. He became principal of the San Francisco Symphony in 1980, a position he held for twenty-five years (1980-2005). He taught at the San Francisco Conservatory for many years; among his former students are Craig Morris and Brian Anderson.

Fischthal has performed at the Grand Teton Festival, Santa Fe Opera, and many other summer programs. He enjoys golf, billiards, snow skiing, and spending time with his two wolf-huskies.

Bibl.: "Glenn Fischthal" (www.stokowshi.org/Principal_Musicians_San_Francisco_Symphony.htm); "Glenn Fischthal" (www.trumpetherald.com/forum/viewtopics.php?t=46029&start=11).

Fisher, Tony (b. Manchester, England, Feb. 27, 1936). British trumpeter and bandleader. Fisher started playing cornet at age five. His first lessons were with his father, a tuba player who led the family band known as the Silver Rockets. Fisher began playing the trumpet at age nine, and by age thirteen was a prodigy playing professionally. His early experiences were with the big bands led by Ted Heath (from 1963), Ken Mackintosh (1956-59), Eric Delaney (1959-64), Don Lusher, Oscar Rabin, and Kenny Clarke.

During Fisher's illustrious career in London (having moved there in 1965), he played with the London Symphony Orchestra, Royal Philharmonic Orchestra, Frankfurt Radio Orchestra, Metropole

Orchestra in Holland, The Beatles (Strawberry Fields Forever), Frank Sinatra, Fred Astaire, Barbra Streisand, Tom Jones, Henry Mancini, Bing Crosby, Liza Minelli, Sammy Davis Jr., Tony Bennett, and many others. He has recorded hundreds of film, television, and radio spots, and is seen each week on BBC Television's Parkinson show. He joined the Humphrey Lyttelton Band in 2008, and is currently directing the Burt Kaempfert Orchestra. For the past sixty years, except for three months in the hospital in 1980 due to a burst appendix, he has been one of the top musicians in London, and is one of several star trumpeters featured on the CD, The London Trumpet Orchestra for Cala Records.

Fisher is an active teacher, and regularly gives master classes at the Guildhall School of Music, Royal College of Music, Royal Academy of Music, Leeds College of Music, Royal Northern College of Music, and Trinity College.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Tony Fisher" (www.prozonemusic.com/brass/artists/tony-fisher.html); Tony Fisher's official website: http://ajf15.tripod.com.

Fiske, Isaac (b. Holden, Massachusetts, Dec. 23, 1820; d. Worchester, Massachusetts, Sept. 17, 1894). American maker. Isaac was the son of Bezaleel and Mary (Rice) Fiske. The family moved to Worcester, Massachusetts, in 1832, when Isaac was twelve years old. He may have apprenticed with Graves & Company in nearby Winchester before setting up his own shop in Worcester in 1842. The city was a regional center for musical activity, and many well-known brass bands from Boston often played there. Although it is known that Fiske played the cornet, it is doubtful that he was highly skilled in this regard.

The Worcester Brass Band was outfitted with Fiske instruments, and became an excellent means of advertising for him. In 1857, Fiske hired the famed cornetist and drum major Matthew Arbuckle to lead the band. This added to Fiske's reputation, although Arbuckle left Worcester in 1860. Fiske entered many of his instruments in the Exhibition of the Worcester County Mechanics' Association, periodically winning prizes between 1848 and 1857. His instruments also won other awards including First Prize for the Band Tournament of Maine. In addition, he obtained five U.S. patents for improvements in valve design. Although none of these improvements are utilized today, his designs helped to increase the speed of valve action and to produce a more consistent blowing characteristic when using various valve combinations.

In 1854, Fiske moved his shop to a new facility, but the building burned to the ground a few months later. He purchased new land for a home and manufacturing facility, later moving the shop to a larger three-story building in 1859. He employed six workmen, but increased the number to ten or twelve during the Civil War. Fiske produced superior quality brass instruments in various forms, including over-the-shoulder instruments, circular ("rain-catcher") cornets, valve trombones, baritones, cornets with Périnet piston valves, and cornets with rotary valves operated by a piston-rod setup (commonly referred to as "Fiske" valves).

Fiske retired in 1886, and sold the company to C.G. Conn & Company in December of the same year. He died of apoplexy on September 17, 1894 at the age of seventy-three.

Bibl.: Eliason, Robert E. Early American Brass Makers (The Brass Press); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

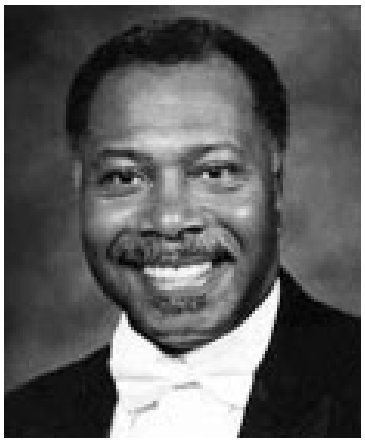
Fitzgerald, Langston J[ames] III ("Fitz") (b. Washington, District of Columbia, Sept. 17, 1944). American trumpeter. Fitzgerald grew up in Chapel Oaks, Maryland, where his father was a postman (and amateur trumpeter), and his mother, Mildred, a clerk and typist; Langston had a sister, Reneé (b. 1943; d. 1985). He began playing the piano at an early age, and the trumpet at age nine. His first teachers were his band director, Isaac C. Cook, and John Stephens. While in high school, Fitzgerald played principal in several area college orchestras.



After graduating in 1962 from Fairmont Heights High School in Fairmont Park, Maryland, Fitzgerald attended Howard University (1962-66) where he studied with Lloyd Geisler, Don McComas, William Penn, and Ambrose Jackson. He also studied at the Aspen Music Festival (summer of 1962) with Robert Nagel. Upon graduating, he became a member of the US Navy Band in Washington, D.C. (1966-70), and freelanced in the Washington-Baltimore area. He also earned a doctor of musical arts degree from Catholic University of America where he studied with Lloyd Geisler.

After completing military service, Fitzgerald joined the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra as second trumpet, a position he held from 1970 to 2003. Upon his retirement from the orchestra, he accepted a professorship at Penn State University. Fitzgerald has performed with the Saint Louis Symphony, Baltimore Opera (mostly principal, for seven years), Giovanni Brass Quintet, and the National Symphony Orchestra. For twenty years, he served as musical conductor and contractor of the Baltimore Choral Arts Society.

Among Fitzgerald's most famous students are Wallace Roney, Terell Stafford, Tage Larsen, Billy Ray Hunter, and Thomas Hooten. He and his wife, Muriel, have been married since 1970, and have a son, Langston IV (b. 1973). Fitzgerald's hobbies include fishing, motorcycling, cooking, reading, and household repair.

Bibl.: "Langston Fitzgerald III" (2010 International Trumpet Guild Conference program book biography); "Langston Fitzgerald III" (www.artsandarchitecture.psu.edu); personal interview, July 5, 2010.

Flowers, David M. (b. Steubenville, Ohio, Dec. 10, 1935; d. Arlington, Virginia, Jan. 28, 2005). American trumpeter. Flowers grew up in Weirton, West Virginia. He attended the University of Michigan, studying with Clifford Lillya, and completing a bachelor of music degree in 1958. He continued study there for his master of music degree.

Flowers's career began when he became a member of the US Marine Band in Washington, D.C. During his four years in the band, he earned a doctor of music degree at Catholic University of America, studying with Lloyd Geisler. After his service years, he joined the National Symphony Orchestra as second trumpet, a position he held from 1964 through 2005. He taught at Catholic University of America, American University, and George Mason University. An avid performer on antique trumpets and cornets, Flowers participated in the Empire Brass recording, American Brass Band Journal.

Flowers was also a musician contractor for the Washington Ballet, Choral Arts Society, Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts, Washington National Cathedral, and the Church of the Little Flower.

Flowers passed away only months after retiring. He was survived by his longtime companion, Cathy Hart, as well as by three daughters: Lynn Rigney, Marilyn Haight, and Eileen Flowers, and son Gareth, a professional trumpeter.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "David Flowers 1935-2005" (Washington Post, Feb. 6, 2005); "David Flowers Passes" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/news05/332flowers.html).

Foley, Joseph ("Joe") Damian (b. Concord, New Hampshire, Oct. 10, 1965). American trumpeter. While growing up in Concord, New Hampshire, Foley began studying the trumpet at age ten with his older brother James, currently a public school teacher. During his senior year at Concord High School (1982-83), he took lessons from Robert Stibler. He received a Trustee Scholar Award to Boston University where he earned a bachelor of music degree in 1987, and a master of music degree in 1989. His teachers there were Peter Chapman (1983-84), Roger Voisin (1984-89), and Rolf Smedvig (1987-89). He also studied composition with Samuel Headrick. Additional trumpet studies were with Arnold Jacobs, Bob McCoy, and Vincent Penzerella.

Foley was a founding member of the Atlantic Brass Quintet from 1985 to 1998, a group that won six international chamber music competitions including the International Brass Quintet Competition in Narbonne, France. He has performed numerous times with the Boston Symphony Orchestra (often as a substitute principal) and was invited to perform with the Boston Symphony Brass Quintet. He has also performed with the Boston Pops, New York Philharmonic, Boston Ballet Orchestra, Boston Lyric Opera Orchestra, Boston Modern Orchestra Project, Boston Musica Viva, New Hampshire Symphony, Opera Providence, Springfield Symphony Orchestra, and the All-American College Orchestra at EPCOT Center, and has been a featured soloist with the Boston Pops, Boston Classical Orchestra, Boston Landmarks Orchestra, and the Rhode Island Philharmonic. He has given world premieres of Harold Shapero's Trumpet Concerto (2010) and Lewis Buckley Jr.'s Capriccio (2010). As a recording artist, he has released several CDs with the Atlantic Brass Quintet and Empire Brass, two CDs with the Metropolitan Opera Brass, several with the Boston Modern Orchestra Project, and a soon to be released solo CD.

An active teacher, Foley has served on the faculties of The Boston Conservatory (1992-94, 2012-present), University of Massachusetts-Lowell (1997-2010), Boston University (1994-2006), Wellesley College (2004), Boston College (c1999-2001), Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Harvard University (2001), and the Boston University Tanglewood Institute. He is currently a full professor at Rhode Island College (since 2003) and is principal of the Rhode Island Philharmonic (since 1990) and the River Oaks Chamber Orchestra in Houston, Texas (since 2011).

Since 1991, Foley has been married to Leslie Wu Foley, Dean and Executive Director of the Preparatory and Continuing Education program at the New England Conservatory. Their two children are Daniel (b. 1997) and Maia (b. 2001). His hobbies include tennis, running, biking, Boston sports, traveling, cooking, and single malt scotch.

Bibl.: "Joseph Foley" (http://necmusic.edu/faculty/joseph-foley?id=7&sid=2); personal interviews, June 21 and 22, 2012.

Fomin [Fomine], Yevgeny [Evgeny] Yakovlyevsky [Yakovlevich] (b. Moscow, Russia, Mar. 28, 1946; d. Moscow, Russia, Mar. 13, 2008). Russian trumpeter. Fomin began playing trumpet at age thirteen. He studied with Nikolay Nikolayevich Yavorsky at the Ippolitov-Ivanov Music College in Moscow, and from 1971 to 1972 with Anatoly Basarov and Georgy Orvid at the Moscow Conservatory.

Fomin's impressive orchestral career began in the USSR Symphony Orchestra (1971-72), followed by the Academic Orchestra of the Moscow Philharmonic (principal, 1974-90), the (new) Russian National Symphony Orchestra (principal from 1990 until his death). He also taught at the Moscow Music School (1980-86), Moscow Children's Music School No. 15 (1985-?), Gnesin Academy (1989-?), and as Lev Volodin's successor at the Moscow Conservatory (1996-2008). In 1986 he was honored by the State.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. and Yevgeny Ratner. Fomin obituary, International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2008).

Forestier, Joseph (b. Montpellier, France, Mar. 5, 1815; d. Paris, France, Nov. 13, 1882). French hornist and cornetist. Originally a horn player, Forestier studied hand horn at the Paris Conservatory with Jean-François Dauprat from 1832, graduating in 1834. He easily switched to the regular cornet-à-piston with a deep V-cup mouthpiece, as a self-taught player. He played at the Théâtre Italien (soloist), then the Opéra de Paris (1844-68, cornet, then trumpet), and gave concerts with the Concerts Musard. He taught at the Gymnase Musical Militaire (from 1856), then for the military musicians at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique de Paris (1857-70).

Forestier's Complete Method for Cornet (1844) was, along with the method of Jean-Baptiste Laurent Arban, among the first of its kind. Forestier also wrote Méthode Complète pour les Saxhorns ou Bugles ou Saxotromba ou Trombone alto à trois cylindres (J. Meissonnier, editor, c1846). In addition, his solo for cornet and piano, Fantasie Brilliante, cocomposed with his accompanist, Miss J. Luce, and published in 1840, and his Variations concertantes sur un theme original, published within his Méthode Elémentaire pour le cornet à pistons (1844), are among the first known works for cornet and piano.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch derTrompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Pierre, Constant. Le Conservatoire national de musique et de déclamation: Documents historiques et administratifs (Paris, Imprimérie nationale, 1900).

Forman, William ("Bill") (b. New York, New York, Mar. 12, 1959). American trumpeter. Forman studied at the Hartt School of Music at the University of Hartford, and with Ronald Kutik, Bruce Rhoten, Mark Gould, and Allan Dean. He moved to Europe in 1981, spending the next eight years as guest principal trumpet of several orchestras in Germany and Belgium. He won several prizes in major solo competitions in Prague, Geneva, and Markneukirchen, and toured as a soloist specializing in contemporary music for trumpet.

Forman was the trumpeter with Ensemble Modern in Frankfurt from 1990 to 2001. He performed a great deal with composer Karlheinz Stockhausen, and in 2002 taught at the Stockhausen Courses in Kürten. Since 1994, he has been a professor at the Hochschule für Musik "Hanns Eisler" in Berlin, Germany. Forman is the founder of Totally Trumpet, a festival of new music in Berlin, and also plays the standard classical trumpet repertoire. Forman has released the CD, Virtuoso Trumpet Concerti.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bill Forman" (www.stockhausen.org/forman.html).

Fornarotto, Carmine Patrick (b. Hoboken, New Jersey, Mar. 17, 1930; d. Oct. 10, 2012). American trumpeter. Fornarotto began playing the trumpet at age ten and continued his musical training at The Juilliard School with William Vacchiano (master of music education degree). He began his career at the Radio City Music Hall, and also played with the City Center Ballet and Opera orchestras and the Goldman Band. He was second trumpet in the New York Philharmonic from 1962 to 1978, and fourth trumpet from 1978 to 1993. A versatile performer, he played in swing bands and recorded with Ornette Coleman (1972), J.J. Johnson (Poem for Brass, Columbia), and Gunther Schuller (1976). After retiring and living in Florida, Fornarotto was a member of the Port St. Lucie Community Band and the Ambassadors of Swing.

Fornarotto and his wife Marie Krust were married in New York City on August 29, 1954. They had two children, John and Joseph. (Joseph predeceased Carmine.) Carmine's hobbies included flying and target shooting.

Bibl.: Annibale, Ed. Trumpeters Galore (Trafford); "New York Philharmonic Trumpet Section" (www.trumpetherald.com/forum/viewtopic.php?p=807634&sid=8a6c7668d4e4f352a057a01be6dd0cc5); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Carmine Fornarotto Obituary" (www.legacy.com/obituaries/greenbaypressgazette/obituary.aspx?pid=160350898#fbLoggedOut).

Forney, Fred (b. Detroit, Michigan, June 18, 1954). American trumpeter. Forney grew up in Detroit. He began playing trumpet at age nine; his early teachers were Benedict Grycan, James Tamburini, and Gordon Smith. After graduating from Denby High School in 1972, he attended the University of Arizona in Tucson, studying with Richard Peters and Russell Plylar, and receiving a bachelor of music education degree in 1977. He was director of bands at Tempe High School from 1977 until 1980, when he studied full time at Arizona State University with Harold Hines, earning a master of music degree in 1982. He also served as an adjunct jazz instructor at ASU until 1985. He has taught at Mesa Community College since 1985, is a former director of Jazz Studies at MCC, and now teaches Music Humanities at MCC.

A highly versatile performer, Forney played with the Tucson Symphony (founding member) from 1976 to 1977 and The Phoenix Symphony from 1980 to 1982, and is an active freelance musician in the Phoenix area, having backed artists such as Johnny Mathis, Tony Bennett, Diana Ross, Carl Saunders, Bobby Shew, Natalie Cole, Ella Fitzgerald, Rosemary Clooney, Debbie Boone, Gladys Knight and the Pips, Perry Como, Dionne Warwick, Lena Horne, Bernadette Peters, Roberta Flack, Carol Channing, Dean Martin, Marie Osmond, the Smothers Brothers, the Four Freshmen, Ray Charles, Bob Newhart, Mannheim Steamroller, The Four Tops, Glen Campbell, Burt Bacharach, The Temptations, The Lettermen, Henry Mancini, Marilyn McCoy, Debbie Reynolds, Mitzi Gaynor, Al Jarreau, Roger Kellaway, Bill Watrous, and Don Menza. He has also played dozens of Broadway musicals, performed at the Telluride Jazz Festival, and at the Blue Note Jazz Club in Tokyo and Osaka. He is the Artistic Director of the Arizona Jazz Masterworks Orchestra, and has recorded countless jingles and CDs, including his own solo albums: Into the Mist (Summit), Playground, MCC Jazz Faculty, Then and Now (Summit), Faculty Nonet (Sea Breeze), Justice for the Earth (Ravenswave), The Armand Boatman Be Bop Revolution (Tempest), and Chasing Horizons (OA2). His hobbies include woodworking.

Bibl.: Fred Forney's official website: www.fredforney.com; personal interview, Aug. 1, 2011.

Foster, John [Anthony] (b. Atherton, Queensland, Australia, Nov. 20, 1977). Australian trumpeter. Foster's father David was a banker and his mother Robin, a business teacher. His older brother Gregory died as an infant in 1973; his sister Katy was born in 1974. As a child growing up in Brisbane, Foster studied violin, piano, and percussion. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first trumpet teachers were James Hardington, Yoram Levy, and Phil Ryan. In 1993, he won first prize in the Queensland Symphony Concerto Competition, performing Hummel's trumpet concerto at the age of fifteen.

After graduating from Brisbane State High School and Coorparoo State High School in 1994, Foster attended the Queensland Conservatorium of Music, studying with Yoram Levy and earning a bachelor of music performance degree with honors in 1998. He continued his studies at the Royal College of Music in London (1998-99) where he received a graduate diploma for performance under the guidance of Michael Laird, Paul Beniston, and Mark Bennett. He was awarded the Herbert Samuel Brass Prize at the Royal College in 1999.

Foster's orchestral career began while he was still in high school. He was a contracted member of the Queensland Philharmonic Orchestra (1993-98 as utility trumpet), the Queensland Symphony (1994-98 as utility trumpet), the Auckland Philharmonia Orchestra (1999-2000 as associate principal), and the Sydney Symphony Orchestra (2001 to present as second trumpet). He has served as a guest principal with every orchestra in Australia and New Zealand, and has been a guest of the Orquestra da Macau and the English orchestra, Academy of St. Martin-in-the-Fields. He also taught at the Sydney Conservatorium of Music from 2002 to 2006.

Foster is one of the world's leading historians of the Baroque trumpet and cornetto, and is an expert performer on the (valveless) Baroque trumpet. He is founder of the Australian Baroque Brass, and has recorded several CDs with it including Revolution (Tubicium), Music of a Golden Age (Tubicium), Flourish (ABC Classics), and Trumpets of the Realm (Tubicium). He has also authored a book titled The Natural Trumpet, published by Kookaburra Music. Foster has appeared with the Australian Brandenburg Orchestra, Pinchgut Opera, Sydney Philharmonia Baroque Ensemble, High Art Baroque, New Zealand Baroque Soloists, Sydney Consort, and Orchestra of the Antipodes, and has been a frequent soloist at international music festivals. In 2004, he was invited to the United States to collaborate with instrument maker Andrew Naumann in designing a new long-model Baroque trumpet. He is an active clinician and performer throughout the world.

In 2006-07, Foster suffered from a nerve problem on the left side of his face that left him unable to play for six months. Although doctors were unable to properly diagnose his condition, Foster gradually returned to playing through rest and systematic embouchure development. He was married to Lisa Foster, a high school teacher, from 2001 to 2008. His hobbies include the practice of Kung Fu, antique trumpet collecting, playing tennis, walking his pug (Henry), and watching rugby league.

Bibl.: Foster, John. The Natural Trumpet (Kookaburra Music); personal interview, July 5, 2010.

Foveau, Eugène (b. Dijon, France, Nov. 20, 1886; d. Paris, France, January 5, 1957). Next after Jean-Baptiste Arban, Eugène Foveau has been the greatest French cornet player of his day, noted for a distinguished style with almost no vibrato. During his time he had no rivals, with the possible exceptions of Emmanuel Chaine and Georges Mager. His father was also a musician. Foveau was a student of Merri Franquin at the Paris Conservatory, graduating in 1907 when he won the first prize in the annual trumpet competition. Foveau began his career in 1899 as a cornet soloist of the Union Musicale in Dijon. Then, he was solo cornet in the 1st Régiment du Génie (Versailles, 1907-10) and flugelhorn soloist at the Sirène de Paris, followed by the Garde Républicaine (1919-37).

During the years above, Foveau extensively recorded cornet solos, mostly on the Odéon label. He was also the distinguished solo cornetist at the Opéra de Paris (1919-57) and played trumpet at the Concerts Colonne (1911-14 and 1919-29). However, his career was interrupted by World War I. From 1932 to 1934, Foveau recorded on the Columbia label the major works of Igor Stravinsky with the composer conducting. His version of The Soldier's Tale became a reference even in London and the United States.

On March 3, 1925 Foveau replaced Alexandre Petit as cornet professor at the Paris Conservatory, a position he held until 1943 when he began teaching both cornet and trumpet until his death in 1957 at the age of seventy. His best student was Roger Delmotte, who illustrated throughout his career at the Opéra and as a soloist, the same distinguished style that his teacher had. Foveau also taught many other students who became legends of the trumpet, such as Raymond Tournesac (a pioneer of recitals for trumpet), Louis Menardi, Ludovic Vaillant, and Pierre Pollin (who were the greatest French orchestral trumpeters of their time), Raymond Sabarich, Jean Greffin, and Pierre Thibaud (who were among the greatest trumpet teachers in France). Also included is Georges Jouvin, who was a very famous soloist of pop music.

Eugène Foveau was influenced by violin playing and also by great tenor vocalists such as Georges Thill. Like Delmotte, his articulation was very clear and showed an elegant phrasing. Thierry Caens produced a CD reissue of some of the best recordings by Foveau, Eugène Foveau, the Cornet Player of the Century (Vivartis 02).

Foveau officially played instruments by Couesnon for many years, but also used a Lefèvre cornet and a Millereau trumpet. Foveau edited numerous etudes and solos and many composers dedicated works to him. He has been the most influential stylist in France, along with later artists Raymond Sabarich (who added the use of vibrato) and Maurice André (who opened the possibilities on the high-pitched trumpets).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe siècle (CD Rom, Oct. 2008).

Fowler, Walter ("Walt") Ernest (b. Salt Lake City, Utah, Mar. 2, 1955). American trumpeter and orchestrator. Coming from a musical family, Walter Fowler began his music studies on the piano, but switched to trumpet at the age of eight after hearing Bill Chase play lead in Woody Herman's band. Being basically self-taught, he started his music career in 1974 with Frank Zappa's band. He moved to Los Angeles in the fall of 1975, and formed the Fowler Brothers Band. He also performed with Billy Cobham, Johnny "Guitar" Watson, the Buddy Rich Band, Ray Charles, Brandon Fields (on and off since 1980), George Benson's backup band (1985-87), and Billy Childs.

As a studio musician, Fowler has recorded on soundtracks for films such as Backdraft, Regarding Henry, Pacific Heights, The Lion King, Broken Arrow, The Thin Red Line, Black Hawk Down, Ocean's 12, and Ocean's 13. His orchestrations can be heard in movies such as The Rock, Con Air, Twister, Enemy of the State, Face-Off, Gladiator, Pearl Harbor, Shrek, The Bourne Supremacy, Transformers, American Gangster, Body of Lies, and The Dark Knight.

Fowler has toured the world and performed extensively with Diana Ross since 1989. In 2001, he joined James Taylor's band. He has also worked with James Brown, Roberta Flack, Stanley Clark, Yazawa, The Doors, The Manhattan Transfer, Fishbone, Paula Abdul, Luis Conte, and many others. He is known for his fine sense of humor.

Bibl: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Fraedrich, Craig (b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, May 31, 1960). American trumpeter. Fraedrich grew up in Frankfort, Illinois, and Menomonee Falls, Wisconsin. He decided to play the trumpet when he saw Al Hirt performing with clarinetist Pete Fountain on television. He started in fifth grade, and took private lessons in high school with Steve Kossoris and Dennis Najoom. He attended the University of Wisconsin in Milwaukee from 1979 to 1981, and transferred to North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) in 1981, graduating in 1984. He then earned a master of music education degree at Arizona State University (1984-86). He studied at the Banff Centre in Canada during the summer of 1985, studying jazz improvisation with Dave Liebman and Kenny Wheeler. Other jazz instructors include Chuck Marohnic, Rich Matteson, Dan Hearle, Jack Peterson, and Frank Puzzullo. His college trumpet instructors include Dennis Najoom, Leonard Candelaria, Don Jacoby, Wayne Cook, Chuck Tumlinson, and Ken Van Winkle.

After graduating from ASU, Fraedrich won an audition for the Army Blues, serving as an enlisted musical director. He has been on the Shenandoah Conservatory of Music faculty since 1989, and has been director of the jazz ensemble since 1999. He has released numerous CDs, including Come Sunday (Trilogy), So In Love (Positive Music), Christmas Time Is Here (Trilogy), Shades of Blue (Creative Digital Products), On the Edge (Creative Digital Products), First Flight (Creative Digital Products), Sonyadora (Trilogy), and I'll Be Home for Christmas (Trilogy). He has performed with Allen Vizzutti, Marvin Stamm, Tom Harrell, Charlie Rouse, Wycliff Gordon, Rich Bierach, Cecil Taylor, and Don Thompson.

Fraedrich and his wife Monique (a mortgage banker, CPA, and CFO) have two children, Matt (b. 1992) and Tyler Brooks (stepson, b. 1989). Craig's hobbies include golf, fishing, and being a soccer dad.

Bibl.: "Craig Fraedrich" (www.craigfraedrichmusic.com); personal interview, Aug. 23, 2010.

Franks, Rebecca Coupe (b. Aptos, California, Nov. 27, 1961). American trumpeter and composer. Franks grew up in Palo Alto, California, near San Francisco, and came from a family of musicians. She followed in the footsteps of her great uncle, grandmother, mother, and brother by choosing to become a trumpeter. Her parents divorced when she was in junior high school. She is a very gifted player who was selected for the Palo Alto California Honor Orchestra, won a solo award at the Reno Jazz Festival, and participated in the Monterey Jazz Festival All-Star High School Jazz Band. She was fortunate to study jazz under the great saxophonist Joe Henderson. She later graduated from Aptos Senior High School. She was greatly influenced by Clora Bryant, the only female trumpeter to ever perform with Charlie Parker.

Living in San Francisco during the 1970s, Franks played with Circus Vargas, the Pickle Family Circus, and the Big Apple Circus, and freelanced wherever possible. She turned down a scholarship to the University of Southern California in order to travel to Venezuela, where she performed for a while. She then moved to New York City and attended the New School in addition to taking classes at New York University. She formed a partnership with the ex-San Francisco sax player Virginia Mayhew. Together, they recorded a jazz album for the Philology label. In New York, she studied with Laurie Frink and had a few lessons with Lew Soloff, Art Farmer, Wallace Roney, and Tom Harrell. Franks worked for many years in New York, performing or recording with many musicians including Lodi Carr, Cha Cha Boom, Casselberry-DuPree, Bill Cosby, Herb Ellis, Val Emmich, Penny Lang, and Samba Da. She also plays trombone as a second instrument. Her trumpet style is often compared to that of the late Chet Baker.

In 1996, Franks moved back to California where she worked as a private teacher and instructor at several private schools. She also taught at numerous music camps and gave clinics throughout the state. However, she eventually moved to upstate New York (Woodstock area), where she teaches trumpet at the State University of New York in New Paltz, does studio work, and teaches improvisation at Ulster Community College. An avid car buff, she is leader of Coupe and Her Groovemobile band, plays with John Menegon and his Mingustration Band, and composes music for film, television, and jazz ensemble. Her compositions are heard on the popular television series Melrose Place and Law and Order and she has won the John Lennon International Song Writing Contest. Franks's albums include All of a Sudden (Justice), Suit of Armor (Justice), Virginia Mayhew and Rebecca Coupe Franks—It's Time...(Philology), 100 Per Cent, and Exhibition: Tribute to Joe Henderson on her own label, RCF. Her newest album is titled Check the Box (RCF).

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "The Varied Artistic Life of Rebecca Coupe Franks" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2010); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Rebecca Coupe Franks" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Franks, Rodney ("Rod") (b. Shipley, West Yorkshire, England, May 31, 1956). British trumpeter. As a youth, Franks was not only a skilled football player, but also a talented musician. At age nine, he played in the Hammonds Junior Band, and then the Brighouse & Rastrick Band. He was a member of the Black Dyke Mills Band at age seventeen. From age fifteen to eighteen, he studied with Maurice Murphy and Philip Jones at Huddersfield University, and continued his study with Murphy at the Royal Northern College of Music where he was awarded the Holes Gold Medal in 1977. He also studied with John Dickenson. In 1977, he was appointed principal trumpet of the Bergen Philharmonic Orchestra, but left in 1983 to become principal trumpet of the Philip Jones Brass Ensemble. In 1988, he joined the London Symphony Orchestra as associate principal to Maurice Murphy, and became principal in 1990.

Franks is not only one of the world's finest orchestral trumpet players, but is also an inspiring figure, overcoming impossible difficulties at the height of his career. The hearing in his right ear began to diminish in 2002 due to a benign tumor (acoustic neuroma) located in his brain, causing his hearing to worsen until he was deaf in one ear. The tumor was removed in July of 2003, but the surgery left him unable to walk, pick up a glass of water, or play the trumpet. He also had severe balance problems that took weeks to overcome. However, within a few months, his physical abilities gradually returned, and he looked forward to playing the trumpet again.

About the time Franks was ready to begin trumpet practice, a condition known as Bell's palsy affected one side of his face, and he lost all muscle control of his embouchure. The condition went away a few weeks later, and he eventually returned to the LSO. Today, he wears a digital crossover hearing aid that transmits sound into both ears, making it possible for him to play in the orchestra. He remained principal until 2011 when he moved to coprincipal with the young Philip Cobb.

Franks is on the faculties of Guildhall School of Music, the Royal Northern College of Music, and the Royal Academy of Music in London. He is also the artistic director of the London Symphony Orchestra Brass Ensemble. He released a CD titled Saving Face on the Doyens label in 2003.

For his extensive charity work, Franks was appointed vice president of Friends of Guy's Hospital in London.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Rod Franks" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/news03/frankscd.htm).

Franquin, Merri [Jean-Baptiste] (b. Lançon, Bouches-du-Rhône, France, Oct. 19, 1848; d. Paris, France, Jan. 22, 1934). French cornetist and trumpeter. At age fifteen, Franquin taught himself to play the cornet for four years (1863-67). Showing remarkable abilities, he was advised to go to Marseille to begin his career. He moved there in 1867, and played cornet with the Marseille Casino Musical, and solo cornet at the Palais Lyrique and the Theatre Chave (until 1870). He then played in the band of the Marseille Garde Nationale as solo flugelhornist (1870-72).

At the age of twenty-three, Franquin entered the Paris Conservatory as a member of Arban's cornet class (1872-75) and J. H. Maury's class (1875-77). After graduating, began his impressive professional playing career included as first trumpet with the Concerts Pasdeloup (1876-92), National Opéra (Paris, 1880-1901), Concerts Colonne (1884-92), Opéra-Comique, Société des Concerts du Conservatoire (1892-1901), Concerts du Châtelet, and Grand Oratorio de Saint-Eustache Orchestra (1899-1901). He gave recitals at the Cercle Volney, La Trompette (with C. Saint-Saëns on piano), and at the Cercle Militaire (playing the Septuor by Saint-Saëns, and works by Duvernoy, D'Indy, and Pierné).

Franquin was a legendary teacher and professor of trumpet at the Paris Conservatory from 1894 to 1925. His most famous students include Albert Adriano, Francis Bodet, Emmanuel Chaine, Eugène Foveau, Armand-Gaston Porret, Julien Porret, and Georges Mager. As teachers, Bodet and Porret also became foremost proponents of his teachings. Franquin's Methode Complète de Trompette Moderne de Cornet à Pistons et de Bugle was widely used even by modern players such as Maurice André and Pierre Thibaud. The method includes the solo trumpet part to Legende (solo trumpet with piano, 1906) by Enescu, which was composed for the annual concours at the conservatory, and which is dedicated to Franquin.

After Xavier Teste, Franquin was an important figure in establishing the C trumpet as the leading instrument for French trumpeters. He worked with the French instrument maker Thibouville-Lamy in producing a four-valve C/D trumpet in 1912, and a five-valve C/D/D-flat/B-natural trumpet in 1916. [For more information on these instruments, please see the biography on Thibouville-Lamy.] These instruments essentially combined the C and D trumpets, giving them numerous advantages over the regular C trumpet as Emmanuel Chaine demonstrated. Franquin required all of his pupils to play this type of instrument, as well as the old (alto) trumpet in F.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (English Third Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. "les fondateurs de l'école française de trompette," Brass Bulletin, No. 29, 1980; Pipers 12, p44 (Japan); (http://mediatheque.cite-musique.fr/masc/); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Merri Franquin" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Shamu, Geoffrey. Merri Franquin and His Contributions to the Art of Trumpet Playing (unpublished DMA diss., Boston University, 2009).

Frear, Robert ("Rob") (b. Whittier, California, Dec. 26, 1959). American trumpeter. Frear began playing the trumpet at age nine; his early teachers were Gilbert Adams, Peter Marchica, Arthur Farr, and Irving Bush. After graduating from Los Altos High School in Hacienda Heights, California in 1977 he attended California State University, Long Beach (majoring in French), receiving a bachelor of arts degree in 1981. He then earned a master of music degree from the University of Southern California in 2003.

Frear has had a full and varied professional career as an orchestral musician and freelance performer. He was principal trumpet of the Israel Philharmonic (under Maestro Zubin Mehta) from 1987 to 1991, and has also performed with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, Opera Pacific, Hollywood Bowl Orchestra, Pacific Symphony, Santa Barbara Symphony, American Ballet Theater Orchestra, Bolshoi Ballet Orchestra, San Diego Symphony, Royal Opera Orchestra of Covent Garden, Joffrey Ballet Orchestra of Chicago, Long Beach Symphony, and many others. He served as associate principal of the Tucson Symphony (1985-1987), toured North America as principal trumpet with "Star Wars in Concert" (2009-2010) and was guest principal with the Mälmo Symphony in Sweden (spring 1991). He has taught at several colleges and universities in southern California, and is currently Director of Brass Studies at California State University, Long Beach.

Rob Frear has been married to trumpeter Marty Fenton Frear since 1987. (She is also an assistant librarian for the Los Angeles Philharmonic and a music copyist.) Rob's hobbies are bicycling, triathlon, physical fitness, and canine sports such as herding and agility.

Bibl.: "Robert Frear – Area Director + Trumpet" (www.csulb.edu/depts/music/brass/robert_frear.html); News Item, www.trumpetguild.org/news/news05/409frearcsulb.htm; personal interview, Nov. 29, 2012.

Freeman, Anna (b. Stawell, Australia, Nov. 18, 1954). Australian trumpeter. Freeman grew up in Melbourne, Australia. She began playing trumpet with brass bands at an early age. She attended the Victoria College of Music in Melbourne, studying with Mervyn Simpson (principal of the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra), and graduated in 1976. In 1977, she was awarded the Winston Churchill Scholarship that allowed her to study the (valveless) Baroque trumpet with Dr. Edward Tarr at the Schola Cantorum Basiliensis in Basel, Switzerland.

Freeman played in the Melbourne Symphony Orchestra as principal trumpet during the 1976-77 season. She also played with the College Baroque Trumpet Ensemble under Edward Tarr, and has been a guest principal of the Zurich Chamber Orchestra, a member of several Australian symphony orchestras including the Australian Chamber Orchestra, and soloist with dozens of ensembles in Australia, Canada, Germany, Japan, New Zealand, and the United States. From 1992 to 1999, she was principal trumpet in the Wintherhur Municipal Orchestra and taught at the music conservatory in Winterthur, Germany, and since 1999 has been a professor of trumpet at the University of Music Cologne in Aachen, Germany. Freeman has published two methods for the natural trumpet, Beyond Brass Basics (Spaeth/Schmid Music) and Technical and Musical Studies for the Baroque Trumpet (Spaeth/Schmid Music). Her recordings include Baroque Trumpet and Strings (Move), Tromba Triumphans (Winter and Winter), and In Dulci Jubilo (Guild).

Born as Paul Plunkett, Freeman had a sex-change operation around the age of forty-six. She lives in Aachen, Germany, with her wife and children.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Paul Plunkett" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Paul_Plunkett); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Paul Plunkett" (www.move.com.au/artist.cfm/173); "Anna Freeman" (http://www.markus-leuchter.de/english/index1e.html).

Frei, Fridolin (b. Oberehrendingen, Switzerland, Feb. 13, 1919; d. Neuenhof [near Baden], Switzerland, Oct. 5, 1996). Swiss trumpeter, composer, and conductor. Frei studied with Heinz Söndlin at the Zurich Conservatory. He was a member of the City Orchestra of St. Gallen (1935-37), played in the Berlin Philharmonic (1938), the Lugano Radio Orchestra (1939-40), was principal trumpet of the Beromünster Radio Orchestra in Zurich (1940-45), and served as principal of the Tonhalle and Theater Orchestra of Zurich (1944 until his retirement from orchestral playing in 1984). He also taught at the Zurich Music Academy (1946-84).

During Frei's later years, he played folk music as a soloist, and for twenty-seven years was an active conductor.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fresu, Paolo (b. Berchidda, Sardinia, Feb. 10, 1961). Sardinian trumpeter and flugelhornist. Fresu was born and raised in Sardinia, an Italian island in the Mediterranean Sea. He began playing trumpet at age eleven, played in a local band, and studied with Enzo Morandini at the Cogliari Conservatory, graduating in 1984. He also studied in Bologna, Italy, and took lessons from Enrico Rava (1982).

Fresu has taught jazz courses in Terni, and is director of the Nuroro Jazz Seminars in Nuroro, Italy. He has worked with jazz greats Gerry Mulligan, Enrico Rava, Kenny Wheeler, Tony Oxley, Lee Konitz, Albert Mangelsdorff, Bruno Tommaso (1982), Franco D'Andrea, Giovanni Tommaso, Giorgio Gaslini, Gianluigi Trovesi, Aldo Romano (1988-2001), Glenn Ferris, Palle Danielsson, David Liebman, Dave Holland, Helen Merrill, John Abercrombie, Gunther Schuller, Jim Hall, Lew Soloff, Gil Evans Orchestra, Toots Thielemans, Michel Portal, Richard Galliano, Orchestra National de France (guest), NDR Hamburg (guest), Uri Caine, Italian Trumpet Summit (with Franco Ambrosetti, Flavio Boltro, Marco Tamburini, Fabrizio Bosso), A Filetta, and in 2007 toured with Carla Bley's quartet, The Lost Chords. He also leads several of his own groups, and is an active composer of many genres of music. His latest CD is titled Mistico Mediterraneo (ECM). He has also recorded for EMI, Columbia, Blue Note, and RCA.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Paolo Fresu's official website: www.paolofresu.it/site/index.htm.

Fricano, Guy (b. 1943). American trumpeter and composer. Fricano was inspired to play the trumpet by listening to recordings of Louis Armstrong. His first teacher was Joseph T. Bondi (1931-2009). Fricano attended Roosevelt University and The Juilliard School before going back to his hometown of Chicago to perform with numerous show bands and studio orchestras. He also toured with the big bands of Stan Kenton, Woody Herman, and Buddy Rich, and for years was a member of The Tonight Show Band. For most of his career, Fricano has played in various clubs in Chicago. The Guy Fricano Jazz Sextet has recorded two albums—Jazz Inside Out in 1984 (Forever Jazz) and The New York Sessions with Cedar Walton and Ron Carter (AFP).

Several years ago, Fricano shaved his head bald in order to receive a hair-growth treatment. While performing at the Raccoon Club in Chicago, network scouts from ABC television saw him perform and liked his look. (Fricano is often called a Patrick Stewart look-alike.) They hired him as an actor for six episodes of the Father Dowling Mysteries. He also portrays a tough guy (with an eye patch) in several Spuds MacKenzie commercials.

Fricano's style of playing is highly energetic, powerful, and passionate. He often plays with blinding speed, and his compositions are quite appealing to audiences. Like the late Buddy Childers and the late Claude Gordon, Guy Fricano is a licensed pilot.

Bibl.: Herguth, Bob. "Guy Fricano" (Chicago Sun-Times newspaper, Jan. 4, 1990); Margasal, Peter. "Chicago Jazz Festival 2000" (www.chicagoreader.com); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fricke [Ficker], [Gustav] Adolph (b. Crottendorf, Germany, Apr. 5, 1860; d. Dresden, Germany, Feb. 12, 1931). German trumpeter. Fricke attended the Hillmann Music School in Annaberg in 1874. In 1876, he was playing at the Leipzig City Theater, and from 1878 to 1881, he played principal trumpet in the Ehrlich military orchestra and in the following year the orchestra that performed at the Wintergarten Concert House in Berlin. After his release from military service in 1882, he toured with the Angelo Neumann show band, and in 1883 was selected to become a member of the Royal Court Theater Orchestra in Munich, where he had the honor of performing the opera Parsifal at the Bayreuth Festival under the baton of composer Richard Wagner. Unfortunately, little is known of Fricke after he joined the Dresden Court Theater Orchestra in 1884, where he played until 1914. He was the father of the violinist Adolf Fricke (1895-1946).

Bibl.: Schreiber, Andreas. Von der Churfürstlichen Cantorey zur Sächsischen Staatskapelle Dresden (Dresden, 2003); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Friedlaender, Thomas (b. Magdeburg, Germany, June 21, 1966). German trumpeter. Friedlaender studied trumpet, jazz, improvisation, and electronic music at the Musikhochschule in Dresden. Since 1990, he has become a specialist in the performance and history of the (valveless) Baroque trumpet and the cornetto. He did advanced study at the Hochschule für Musik und Theatre in Leipzig, and studied with Bruce Dickey (cornetto), Edward Tarr (Baroque trumpet), and Jean-François Madeuf (Baroque trumpet) at the Schola Cantorum in Basel, Switzerland. He also took advanced jazz courses taught by Günter Baby Sommer, Marko Lackner, and Markus Stockhausen. Friedlaender founded several chamber ensembles, and has performed with the Dresden Chamber Choir, Musica Fiata, Lautten Compagney, and the Stuttgart Baroque Orchestra.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Thomas Friedlaender" (www.muzykadawna.com/?pages_id=24&lang=en&l=en); Thomas Friedlaender's official website: www.thomas-friedlaender.de.

Friedman, Stanley ("Stan") Arnold (b. Memphis, Tennessee, Sept. 14, 1951). American trumpeter and composer. While growing up in Memphis, Friedman learned to play the trumpet under his local band directors, Jackie Thomas (Snowden Jr. High) and L.M. Ragsdale (Central High School). He attended the University of Memphis, studying trumpet with graduate student David Shaner and horn teacher Richard Dolph, and composition with Don Freund. After receiving his bachelor of music degree in 1973, he studied at the Eastman School of Music: trumpet with Sidney Mear, conducting with Gustav Meier, and composition with Samuel Adler, Joseph Schwantner, Warren Benson, and Eugene Kurtz. He completed his master of music degree there in 1975, and a doctor of musical arts degree in 1976 (both degrees in composition).

Friedman was principal of the Winston-Salem Symphony from 1976 to 1980. He has played with Rochester Philharmonic, Syracuse Symphony, North Carolina Symphony, Memphis Symphony & Concert Orchestras, Memphis Opera, and is director of the Triad Brass Trio. He has also been principal of the Hong Kong Philharmonic (1983-84), New Zealand Symphony Orchestra (1987-92), Israel Philharmonic (1992), and has taught at Victoria University (1988-92), Tel Aviv University (1992-93), and the Interlochen Arts Academy in Michigan (1998-2001). He has worked as a studio player in Los Angeles, and has played with the Los Angeles Philharmonic. Since 2010, he has been composer-in-residence at the University of Mississippi in Oxford, and is a member of The Mississippi Brass Quintet. His solo CD is The Lyric Trumpet on the Ode label, which was awarded "Best Classical Recording" by the New Zealand Music Awards.

As a composer, Dr. Friedman won composition competitions of the International Trumpet Guild four times. His first ITG award was for Solus, an unaccompanied trumpet work premiered by John Aley during the 1977 ITG Conference at the University of Illinois. This solo remains perhaps his most often performed work. His trumpet works are published by Editions BIM, Subito Music, and AsherRoseMusic [sic].

Stan is married to Rena Feller, clarinetist with the Memphis Symphony Orchestra and instructor at Rhodes College in Memphis. Their children are Max (b. 1998) and Abbye (b. 2003). His hobbies include golf, writing novels, and writing books for children (published by Bellissima Publishing, San Diego).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Stanley Friedman" (www.olemiss.edu/depts/music/faculty_and_staff/friedman.html); Stanley Friedman's official website: www.stanleyfriedman.com; "Stanley Friedman" (www.yamaha.com/artists/stanleyfriedman.html); personal interview, Jan.24, 2012.

Friedrich, Reinhold (b. Weingarten, Baden, Germany, July 14, 1958). German trumpeter. Friedrich began playing the trumpet at age seven. His first teachers were Lutz Köhler (Hanover) and Heinz Burum, with whom he studied for five years before studying with Adolf Weresch. Friedrich attended the University of Music in Karlsruhe. In 1979, he began studying with Dr. Edward Tarr, learning to play the (valveless) Baroque and keyed trumpets, as well as the modern instrument. He also studied with Pierre Thibaud and Carl Gielow.

From 1983 to 2002, Friedrich was principal trumpet of the Frankfurt Radio Symphony Orchestra. In 1986, he won the top prize awarded (second) in the ARD competition in Munich, which marked the beginning of his impressive solo career. Since that time, he has been a guest soloist with many orchestras throughout the world, including the Berlin Baroque Soloists, Vienna Chamber Orchestra, Frankfurt Chamber Orchestra, Vienna Symphony, Bamberg Symphony, Philharmonic Orchestra of the French Radio, BBC Symphony Orchestra, Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra of Amsterdam, and many others. As a proponent of new music, Friedrich has premiered and commissioned numerous works.

A prolific recording artist, Friedrich has recorded dozens of albums for labels such as DGG, Denon, and Capriccio (now Phoenix). CDs include Barocke Trompetenkonzerte, Music for Trumpet and Percussion, Baroque Trumpet Gala, Reinhold Friedrich & Iveta Apkaina, La Belle Epoque, Italienische Trompetenkonzerte, Ruth Ziesak—Reinhold Friedrich, Molter/Endler, Reinhold Friedrich—Thomas Duis, Konzerte für Klappentrompete, Klassische Trompetenkonzerte, Modern Trumpet, and Tribute to Old England.

Friedrich teaches at the University of Karlsruhe, and enjoys an international reputation as a performer, recording artist, and pedagogue. He has served as a judge at numerous international solo competitions.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Reinhold Friedrich's official website: www.reinhold-friedrich.de.

Frosk, John ("Johnny") (b. Old Tappan, New Jersey, Oct. 23, 1931). American trumpeter. Frosk studied at the Bornoff School of Music (Winnipeg, Canada) with Albert Simeons in 1944, and in New York with Benny Baker. Frosk also did studio work in Canada (CBS, Winnipeg, 1944-47; CBS, Toronto, 1947-49). During the 1950s, he played with the big bands of Al Martino (1950), Tex Beneke, Stan Kenton, Tommy Dorsey, Jimmy Dorsey (five years), Benny Goodman (tour of Russia in 1962), and Johnny Carson's The Tonight Show band in New York led by Doc Severinsen (1964-70).

After The Tonight Show moved to Los Angeles, Frosk continued his career as one of New York's leading studio musicians. He recorded with hundreds of top jazz and pop musicians including Ray Charles, Kai Winding, George Benson, Pat Williams, John Pizzarelli, Quincy Jones, Paul Desmond, Urbie Green, Dizzy Gillespie, Manny Albam, Paul McCartney, and Tito Puente. He also played in numerous pit orchestras for Broadway shows such as Chicago, Carousel, The Red Shoes, The Will Rogers Follies, and A Chorus Line.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fruscella, Tony (b. Orangeburg, New Jersey, Feb. 4, 1927; d. New York, New York, Aug. 14, 1969). American trumpeter. Fruscella lived in an orphanage until the age of fourteen. He began playing the trumpet at age fifteen, and joined the Army a few years later. After his service duties, he played with jazz artists such as Chick Maures (1948), Lester Young (1950 and 1954), Don Joseph, Brew Moore (1953), Gerry Mulligan (1954), Allen Eager, Sonny Rollins, and Stan Getz (1955). In 1955, he recorded with Getz and also made several solo albums including I'll Be Seeing You (Atlantic), Fru'n Brew (Spotlite), and Tony Fruscella (Atlantic). More recently, compact discs of his playing have been reissued, such as Tony's Blues (Cool N' Blue) and Complete Works (4-CD set, Jazz Fantasy). Tony Fruscella died in 1969 at the age of forty-two.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Fuller, Walter O. ("Rosetta") (b. Dyersburg, Tennessee, Feb. 15, 1910; d. San Diego, California, Apr. 20, 2003). American trumpeter and vocalist. Fuller began playing mellophone and trumpet as a boy (his father played the mellophone). He began his professional career at the age of twelve with Dr. Stoll's Medicine Show, traveling with the group during the summers of 1922-24. In 1925 at the age of fifteen, he moved to Chicago where he played in Emma Smith's band for one year, freelanced, and backed Ma Rainey. Between 1927 and 1930, Fuller played with Sammy Stewart and Irene Edie, and in 1931 became the main trumpet soloist and singer with Earl Hines's big band. In 1934, he recorded the vocal solo, Rosetta, a popular recording that earned him that nickname. He continued with Hines until joining Horace Henderson's band from 1937-38. In 1938, he played with Lionel Hampton, but in 1939 returned to the Hines band, continuing with it until 1941.

Fuller formed his own big band in 1941, but it soon broke up. He then toured with several small groups, ending up in Los Angeles in 1946 and moving to San Diego later that year. However, without the large audiences and recordings of the Hines band, Fuller became more and more obscure to the public. He performed with a combo at the Club Royal for twelve years, and at the Moonglow for eight years, but his dearth of recordings after 1954 gave him little attention.

Although Fuller's main influence was Louis Armstrong, during his latter years with Hines, Fuller became strongly influenced by Roy Eldridge, Red Allen, and Sweets Edison. Fuller was married to Ida Fuller (b.1905; d. 1991). He died at the age of ninety-two, and is buried in Greenwood Memorial Park in San Diego.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Fumo, John (b. Kenosha, Wisconsin, June 5, 1957). American trumpeter. Fumo began playing at age seven when his father gave him a trumpet as a present. He began taking lessons at age thirteen, and later attended the New England Conservatory of Music (1976-78). In 1978, he moved to Los Angeles and began to play avant-garde jazz with reed player Vinny Golia, and recording for the Nine Winds label. Fumo plays trumpet, flugelhorn, and electric trumpet, and has performed or recorded with Mel Tormé, Neil Young, Johnny Mathis, James Brown, Tower of Power, Smokey Robinson, Crosby Stills and Nash, Céline Dion, Faith Hill, Tito Puente, Charlie Haden, Japan's Inner Galaxy Orchestra, Brian Setzer, John Tesh, Bon Jovi, Lou Rawls, Al Jarreau, Ricky Martin, Flora Purin, Whitney Houston, Brian McKnight, Phoebe Snow, his own groups, and many others. His albums as leader include After the Fact (Nine Winds).

Fumo is married to singer and songwriter Kelly Fumo, with whom he formed a duo called Fumosonic that has produced three CDs titled All That Is, Strange and Wonderful, and Different Place and Time, all on the Perfect Universe label. The duo performs regularly throughout the southern California area. Fumo has also recorded numerous film soundtracks including Mask, Twister, The Rock, Batman Returns, A League of Their Own, Bird on a Wire, McHale's Navy, Jingle All the Way, Blaze, and others. He has also appeared on The David Letterman Show, The Tonight Show, and the Conan O'Brien Show. As a composer, he has received grants from various institutions and foundations, including the National Endowment for the Arts.

Fumo has five brothers and one sister. He teaches at the Herb Alpert School of Music at Cal Arts.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "John Fumo" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "John Fumo" (http://www.jazz.com/encyclopedia/2007/10/18/fumo-john).

Fung, Kai Man [aka Kenneth Fung] (b. c1966). Hong Kongese trumpeter. Fung joined the Hong Kong Youth Orchestra at age fourteen, and was a member of the orchestra when it toured France and England. He studied with Henry Nowak at the Hong Kong Academy for the Performing Arts, graduating in 1987. He has played with the City Symphony Orchestra, Lim Kek Han Concert Orchestra, and the Macau Chamber Orchestra. He is a founding member of the Hong Kong Sinfonietta (principal trumpet since 1980) with which he has performed numerous concertos. He has been a guest teacher at the Hong Kong Academy for the Performing Arts, and, since about 1992, the conductor of the orchestra and band at the CCC Kei Wan Primary School (originally Church of Christ in China Kei Wan Primary School). In addition to teaching a large private studio of trumpeters, Fung is owner of the Hong Kong Victoria Music Center, a retail store that sells music and instruments in the city of North Point.

In 2001, Fung gave a recital of 19th century virtuoso cornet pieces on authentic instruments at the Macau Band Fair. His interest in the early cornet is further evidenced by his acquisition through an Internet auction of the personal music library of the famous German cornet soloist Theodore Hoch.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. "Theodore Hoch, the 'Much Beloved Solo Cornetist of Bilse's Capelle'," (Historic Brass Society Journal, 2007); "Fung Kai Man" (www.myso.org.mo/en/Fung_Ka_Man.php).

G

Gabel, Bernard (b. Metz, Lothringen, France, July 1, 1942). French trumpeter. Gabel studied with André Damon in Metz, Roger Delmotte at the Versailles Conservatory, and Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory. After winning first prize in the annual trumpet competition at the Paris Conservatory in 1968, he performed in the Garde Républicaine Band, Comic Opera Theater Orchestra, Concerts Colonne, and National Opera Orchestra. Since 1970, he has been an active soloist, mainly on the piccolo trumpet, specializing in the works of Bach, Richter, Michael Haydn, Leopold Mozart, and others. He has performed with the Stuttgart Symphony Orchestra, Zurich Chamber Orchestra, Academy of St. Martin-in-the-Fields, Jean-François Paillard Chamber Orchestra, and the National Orchestra of Brazil, among others, and has toured throughout Spain, Germany, Italy, Russia, Austria, France, Switzerland, Belgium, Denmark, and Brazil. He has made several solo albums, and can be heard on recordings with Maurice André and Pierre Thibaud.

Gabel's wife plays harp, and one of his sons, Fabien Gabel, is a noted conductor.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Upper photo by Jean-Pierre Leloir, 1972.

Gaines, Charles ("Charlie" "Devil") H. (b. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Aug. 8, 1900; d. Philadelphia, Pennsylvania, Nov. 23, 1986). American trumpeter. Gaines's early career began by playing in the dance bands of Charlie Taylor, Charlie Johnson, and others. In 1920, he moved to New York City where he joined Wilbur Sweatman's orchestra. He worked as a staff composer, arranger, and sometimes trumpeter with Clarence Williams in 1923, 1929-30, and 1934, and led a series of recording sessions. He also performed with Sam Wooding in 1923, and toured with Earl Walton. He recorded with Fats Waller's band in 1929, and by 1935, was playing with Leroy Smith as part of the Hot Chocolates revue. His band backed Louis Armstrong's in 1932, recording Gaines's own hit composition, Ants In My Pants, which he sold to the record label for a mere five hundred dollars cash.

Gaines returned to Philadelphia during the 1940s, forming his own band, which worked steadily through the 1950s. By the late 1960s, his band had become a trio, which performed regularly at the Hangover Club. He eventually became less active, and retired.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charlie Gaines" (www.allmusic.com/artist/p302083/biography).

Galbreath, Frank (b. Roberson County, North Carolina, Sept. 2, 1913; d. Atlantic City, New Jersey, Nov. 2, 1971). American trumpeter. Galbreath got his start with local bands such as the Domino Five of Washington (age fifteen) and Kelly's Jazz Hounds of Fayetteville (1929-30). He also toured with the Florida Blossoms minstrel show (for six months) and the Kinston Nighthawks. He played at the Chicago World's Fair in 1933 with Smiling Billy Steward's Floridians.

In the mid 1930s, Galbreath moved to Chicago, where he played with the bands of Fletcher Henderson, Jelly Roll Morton, Edgar Hayes, and Willie Bryant. He joined Lonnie Slappey's Swingers in Philadelphia in 1937, and soon moved to New York City to play with Lucky Millinder (1939-40). He then became a member of Louis Armstrong's orchestra until it disbanded in 1943. After a few weeks with the Charlie Barnet band, Galbreath served in the Army during World War II. During the late 1940s, he performed with Luis Russell, Tab Smith, Billy Eckstine, Sy Oliver (1947), and again with Millinder (1948-52). Starting in 1952, he played on USO tours, entertaining U.S. military troops around the world. He led his own band from 1953, and also played with the bands of Arthur Prysock and Benny Goodman. In 1960, he played with Ray Charles, and in 1961 with Fats Domino. He also worked with Sammy Davis Jr. until 1963 when he moved to Atlantic City, New Jersey, to play in various casino bands. However, ill health forced his retirement in 1969.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Frank Galbreath" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Frank_Galbreath).

Gale, "Eddie" [Edward Gale Stevens Jr.] (b. Brooklyn, New York, Aug. 15, 1941). American trumpeter. Gale's first musical experience was as a bugler in a Boy Scouts marching band. He later took trumpet lessons from Kenny Dorham, and was able to sit in with jazz musicians such as John Coltrane, Illinois Jacquet, Jackie McLean, and Booker Ervin. As he improved, his style gravitated toward the avant-garde.

Gale hit his stride during the mid to late 1960s, recording an album called Unit

Structures with Cecil Taylor for Blue Note (1966), and two other Blue Note albums (1968-69) titled Ghetto Music and Black Rhythm Happening. When his contract with Blue Note expired around 1970, Gale moved to San Francisco where he worked with Sun Ra, recording Lanquidity for the Evidence label. He became an artist-in-residence at Stanford University.

In 1972, Gale moved to nearby San Jose, California, where he remains today. The mayor of San Jose named him "San Jose's Ambassador to Jazz" in 1974. Gale established a liberal arts program with a music emphasis at San Jose State University in that same year. He also serves as Music Ambassador for the Association of World Citizens in San Francisco. Gale's other albums include Afro Fire and Joint Happening (Hyena Records).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Eddie Gale's official website (http://eddiegale.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gale, Warren Jr. (b. c1949). American trumpeter. Based in San Francisco, Gale is best known for his work with the Stan Kenton Orchestra during the 1970s. According to section mate Mike Vax, Warren was the most significant soloist in the Kenton band. Gale also performed and recorded with Buddy Rich, Joe Henderson, McCoy Tyner, John Handy, Mark Murphy, James Zitro, and Mel Martin's Bebop and Beyond (1980s).

Among Gale's recordings are Zitro, Stolen Moments, Ready for the 90s, and Trumpets. He earned a master of music degree from Hayward State University.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gambaro, Tony (b. Gloversville, New York, May 14, 1965). American trumpeter. While growing up in Gloversville, New York, Gambaro started playing trumpet at age eight in a drum corps. His first instrument was a one-valve G bugle. He developed his passion for music and his strong upper register during the six years that he played as featured soloist with the Avant Garde Drum & Bugle Corps in Saratoga Springs, New York, and while attending Gloversville High School where he graduated in 1984. His teachers include Bruce Lee, Butch Anderson, Paul Smith, Bob Relyea, Lynn Nicholson, and Roger Ingram. He attended Onondaga Community College for two years, transferring to Syracuse University for one year under Professor Mosher and Joe Riposo. While attending Syracuse University, Tony was awarded "Best Lead Trumpeter" by none other than trumpet legend Maynard Ferguson. Other groups of note he has performed with include those of Ben E. King and Bobby Vinton, and from 1987 to 1995 he was the lead trumpet player with The Blues Other Brothers band in Nashville, Tennessee. He also played lead trumpet with Alex Torres and The Latin Kings, Tower of Power (1995), rock legend Bon Jovi, and Out of Control.

Gambaro is a cofounder of Burners U.K., and a current member of the New York Players band. He is a highly versatile performer, comfortable in big band, swing, pop, jazz, and Latino settings. He is also a fine vocalist and percussionist.

Tony Gambaro is married to Cynthia Gambaro, a real estate brokerage owner. They have a son named Carson (b. 2000). Tony enjoys boating and watching movies in his home theater.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Tony Gambaro" (www.reverbnation.com/tonygambaro).

Gambati, Alessandro (b. Aug. 9, 1800; d. Aug. 24, 1867). Italian trumpeter and cornetist. Alessandro (known as Alexandre in France), along with brother Antonio (known as Antoine in France) were billed as the Gambati Brothers, and played the keyed trumpet which had been invented by Anton Weidinger of Vienna, and also a Prussian trompette à soupape (keys and valves). In 1822, the Gambati Brothers played in Tuscany, then taught in Bologna, Italy, in 1825. Their playing with the Opéra Italien in Paris from 1826 to 1828 was viewed favorably, and they were cited in Dauverné's method of 1857 as "artistes de mérite." They played occasional jobs at the Opéra including the premiere of Robert le diable by Meyerbeer (performed on valve trumpets). They also played at the Académie Royale in Paris (1827-28). However, their concerts at the King's Theatre in London (1829) did not receive such praise: Their execution is wonderful; but their instruments being furnished with keys, enable them to increase facility by means that take very much from the astonishment which they create at first hearing. Their tone is rough and raw...(Quarterly Musical Review, 1829). The Gambati brothers were substitutes for Harper and Irwin. Previously, Alessandro Gambati had played (in 1826) a concert at Hanover Square with Thomas Harper and John Norton.

Alessandro Gambati immigrated to America, probably recruited by Rivafinoli for the November 18, 1833 opening of the Italian Opera Company's new opera house in New York City, along with John T. Norton (slide trumpet) and Mr. Aupick (horn and "a new valve trumpet of his own invention"). Within a year, he was well known all along the Eastern Seaboard for his performances of concertos and solos with variations. By this time, he was playing a valve trumpet sporting two Stölzel valves. The instrument was likely an alto F or G trumpet, because reviews of his performances point out that his upper register was limited to the top of the treble staff, and that his tone was beautiful and deep in the bass clef.

Gambati's fame stems mostly from a well-documented contest between him and English slide trumpeter, John Thompson Norton. The contest was a publicity stunt staged by William Niblo, owner of Niblo's Pleasure Garden in New York City. Nearly four thousand spectators gathered for this event on August 22, 1834. Approximately half of the crowd cheered for Gambati; the other half was equally enthusiastic about Norton. The contest seemed to end in a draw, but the trophy was awarded to Norton. In response, the Gambati supporters had a different trophy made up, and awarded it to Gambati in October of that year.

Gambati and Norton were both performing in New Orleans, Louisiana, in 1835. Several rematches were discussed, but a subsequent competition was never held. Gambati performed as a soloist in New Orleans for several years and continued to occasionally perform in New York at Niblo's Pleasure Gardens throughout the next fifteen years or so. Evidently, Gambati and Norton became friends; performing together at Niblo's in 1835, and in 1838 Gambati participated in a benefit concert for Norton.

In March of 1862, a poster announcing "A patriotic Musical Festival, proposed by some public spirited ladies of Charleston in aid of the Ladies' Gunboat" was seen. The event was held at Hibernain Hall in Charleston, South Carolina, "under the direction of Professor M.S. Reeves, assisted by Professor Platte." Also mentioned in the program are G. F. Cole (piano merchant), Miss E. Sloman (another music teacher), as well as "Sig. Gambati," apparently cornetist Alessandro Gambati.

Alessandro was married to Agatha Du Prey Gambati (1822-1901). Their two daughters were Jenny Lind Gambati (1851-1947) and Virginia Gambati-Schachte (1861-1935). He is buried in the Saint Lawrence Cemetery in Charleston, South Carolina.

Bibl.: Baines, Anthony. Brass Instruments: Their History and Development (Dover); Brownlow, James Arthur. The Last Trumpet: A History of the English Slide Trumpet (Historic Brass Society); Hoover, Cynthia A. "A Trumpet Battle At Niblo's Pleasure Garden" (Musical Quarterly, 1969); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Wallace, John and Alexander McGrattan, The Trumpet (New Haven & London, Yale University Press, 2011).

Gansch, Hans (b. Kirnberg, Lower Austria, Apr. 13, 1953). Austrian trumpeter. Gansch began learning the basics of music from his father at age seven. He began playing the trumpet at age eleven, and was soon playing in his father's band. Hans studied trumpet with Franz Veigl at the Bruckner Conservatory in Linz, graduating with distinction in 1976. While a student, Gansch played principal trumpet in the Bruckner Orchestra Linz from 1974 to 1976, and was principal of the Austrian Radio Symphony Orchestra from 1976 to 1982. From the fall of 1982 to 1996, he was principal of the Vienna State Opera Orchestra and the Vienna Philharmonic. He has also played with Pro Brass, German Brass (in Japan), Austrian Brass Connection, and the Ober Österreich Brass Band.

Since 1996, Gansch has been a professor at the Mozarteum in Salzburg. Among his many former students are David Guerrier and Giulano Sommerhalder. Gansch is a soloist of international prominence who has recorded four CDs: Trumpetenkonzerte, Trompeten Karneval, Da oana Summa, and Gansch Meets Höfs (with Matthias Höfs). Hans's younger brother is Thomas (b. 1975), a trumpet player in the Mnozil Brass.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Hans Gansch" (O.J.'s Trumpet Page: http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/gansch); "Hans Gansch" (www.proarte.co.jp/english/artists2007-16.html).

Gansch, Thomas (b. St. Pölten, Austria, Dec. 31, 1975). Austrian trumpeter. Gansch learned to play trumpet from his father, Johann Gansch. His older brother (b. 1953) is Hans Gansch. From 1991 to 1994, he studied with Josef Pomberger, and from 1994 to 1997 with Adolf Holler at the Royal Academy of Music in Vienna. While a student, he subbed with the Vienna Symphony, State Opera Orchestra, and the Radio Symphony Orchestra, and played modern, classical, Dixieland, and even beer tent music (dressed up like a Bavarian!).

In 1992, Gansch was one of the founders of Mnozil Brass, with which he currently plays first trumpet. In 1994, he also became a member of Pro Brass. He can be heard with Bob Brookmeyer, and the noted Vienna Art Orchestra (1998-2006). He formed a small jazz group called Gansch & Roses, and has made numerous CDs with each of the groups he plays with. He also led a big band and is a frequent guest soloist with many other big bands, such as the Budapest Jazz Orchestra and the US Army Band (2010). In 2011, he took part in a creative Dixieland All Stars session led by trombonist Leonhard Paul. He performs on a unique trumpet, the "Ganschhorn," that he designed with Karl Schagerl.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Thomas Gansch" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Garcia, Louis K. ("King") (b. Juncos, Puerto Rico, Aug. 25, 1905; d. Los Angeles, California, Sept.4, 1983). Puerto Rican trumpeter. Garcia began playing trumpet while in high school, and played with the municipal band in San Juan. He moved to the United States during the early 1920s, and soon played with the Original Dixieland Jazz Band and a band led by Emil Coleman. He became friends with Jimmy and Tommy Dorsey, both of whom he recorded many albums with during the 1930s, and also recorded with Vic Berton (1935), Rich Himber (1936), Nat Brandwyne, Amanda Randolph, and Louis Prima (1939). He was again with Emil Coleman during the 1940s, and also worked as a studio player throughout the 1950s. However, due to failing health, he retired to southern California sometime during the 1960s and ceased playing the trumpet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Louis King Garcia" (www.answers.com/topic/king-garcia).

Gardner, Derrick Earl (b. Chicago, Illinois, June 3, 1965). American trumpeter. Gardner's parents were musicians: his mother, Dr. Effie Gardner, was a pianist/organist and choral director who is now retired from Hampton University where she was chair of the music department; his father, Dr. Burgess Lamar Gardner, was a jazz trumpeter, composer, and arranger; and his brother Vincent is a trombone player. Derrick began playing the trumpet at age nine, and played in a Ringling Bros. & Barnum & Bailey circus band. Since 1988, he has led his own sextet, The Jazz Prophets, and has toured the world. At age twenty-five, he joined the Count Basie Orchestra (1991-96), and also played with the Vanguard Jazz Orchestra (1997), Roy Hargrove Big Band (1997), Frank Foster's Loud Minority Band, and eventually worked with Dizzy Gillespie, Jon Faddis, Stefon Harris, James Moody, George Benson, Nancy Wilson, Harry Connick Jr., Rufus Reid, Clark Terry, Tony Bennett, Kenny Barron, Joe Williams, Brad Leali, and Michel Sardaby.

Gardner was featured with the Saturday Night Live Band on NBC, as well as in the Broadway musical, Thou Shalt Not, and occasionally plays with the Smithsonian Jazz Masterworks Orchestra. He formed his own record label, Owl Studios, and released two CDs as leader, A Ride to the Other Side and Slim Goodie. Gardner is currently on the jazz faculty at Michigan State University where he established the group, Professors of Jazz at MSU.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Derrick Gardner's official website: www.myspace.com/derrickgardner; "Derrick Earl Gardner" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Derrick Earl Gardner" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gardner, Earl Wesley Jr. (b. New York, New York, Apr. 19, 1950). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Gardner attended New York's Music and Art High School before joining the Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Orchestra (1976). He studied under Lou Obaleski and Carmine Caruso.

He has been a staple of the house band for the television show, Saturday Night Live, since 1985, and also performed with George Gruntz (1978), Dizzy Gillespie (1987), the Charlie Haden Liberation Orchestra (1990-92), and the Lester Bowie Brass Fantasy (1991-92). He has worked as a studio musician, and has played numerous Broadway shows. He has also recorded with Zoot Sims, Paul Simon, David Bowie, Joe Henderson (1997), Carla Bley (2003), and such groups as Talking Heads and Power Station. His trumpet is heard on the soundtrack for the movie, Stardust Memories.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Earl Gardner" (http://duranduran.wikia.com/wiki/Earl_Gardner).

Gargan, Lawrence ("Laurie") Russell (b. Ayr, Scotland, Sept. 18, 1968). Scottish trumpeter. Gargan grew up in Ayr, Scotland, the son of Tom (who left the family when Lawrence was very young) and Sherry Gargan (a school teacher). Lawrence began playing the cornet at age twelve, and the trumpet at age eighteen. He performed with several colliery brass bands, and graduated from Mainholm Academy in 1986. Gargan then attended the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama (1986-90) where he studied with Nigel Boddice and John Wallace, and was awarded the Governor's Recital Prize for Excellence.

Gargan's professional orchestra career began immediately after college. He was appointed second trumpet of the Seville Symphony Orchestra in Spain (1990-93), coprincipal of the Hong Kong Philharmonic (1993-96), principal of the Hong Kong Philharmonic (1995-2002), and principal of the Singapore Symphony Orchestra (2004 to the present). Gargan also taught part-time at the Academy of Performing Arts in Hong Kong (1994-2004), and since 2004, has served as an adjunct faculty member of the Yong Siew Toh Conservatory (National University of Singapore). In addition, he has been a guest principal of most of the leading U.K. orchestras including the London Philharmonic, Royal Philharmonic, Welsh National Opera Orchestra, BBC Philharmonic, Hallé Orchestra, and the BBC Scottish Orchestra.

As a soloist, Gargan has performed throughout the world. He was a featured performer at the 2005 and 2010 conferences of the International Trumpet Guild, and has released a solo CD titled The Lyric Trumpet and Organ. He has received many awards, including the Worshipful Company of Musicians Medal (1990).

Lawrence and wife Juliet were married in 2000, but are now separated. They have two sons Lochlann (b. 2002) and Lydon (b. 2004). Gargan travels to Scotland several times each year to be with his children, and they and their grandmother visit him in Singapore. Gargan experienced a life-changing moment when Lochlann was born prematurely, and placed in an incubator suffering multiple organ failures and seizures. Gargan was told that if Lochlann survived, his brain would be damaged, and he would possibly be paraplegic. The event changed Gargan's perspective on life, and he realized what was truly important. Lochlann survived, and is today an extremely intelligent boy who plays the piano. Gargan's hobbies include movies, reading, swimming, gourmet food, and traveling.

Beginning in the fall of 2013, Gargan becomes the initial trumpet professor and head of brass studies at a new music school in Suzhou, China.

Bibl.: "Lawrence Gargan" (2010 ITG Conference program book biography); "Lawrence Gargan Resumé" (Gargan's official website: www.lauriegargantrumpet.com); personal interview, July 10, 2010.

Garrec, Clément [Christian, Georges] (b. Paris, France, Oct 14, 1957). French trumpeter. Garrec's father, Jean, is also a noted trumpet player. Clément studied piano at age seven with Odile Mougeat, and then studied trumpet with his father at the Rennes Conservatory (1971-76). Garrec studied at the Paris Conservatory with Pierre Thibaud (1978-81). He has been a member of Concerts Colonne Orchestra (1980), Nice Opera (1980-81), Strassburg Philharmonic Orchestra (1981-90), and the orchestra of the National Opera of Paris (where he succeeded Roger Delmotte in 1990). He replaced Pierre Thibaud at the Paris Conservatory (1994) as the main professor of trumpet, along with Antoine Curé. Among his many students are Guillame Jehl (b. 1978), Vincent Gillig (b. 1971), Romain Leleu (b. 1984), and Clément Saunier (b. 1979).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Garrett, Dana M. (fl. 1915-40). American cornetist and trumpeter. Garrett played cornet in various circus bands before becoming cornet soloist of Sousa's band in 1923. After his brief time with Sousa, he played first trumpet in the Capitol Theater in Washington, D.C. He was selected to serve on the committee that designed the "Committee" trumpet for the Martin Band Instrument Company during the late 1930s. He was orchestra director and cornet instructor at Manchester College in Indiana from 1921 to 1923.

Bibl.: "Martin Committee" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "Sousa Band Roster" (www.dws.org/sousa/learn/sousas-band/5-sousa-band-roster).

Garside, Derek [Malcolm] (b. Brighouse, Yorkshire, England, Mar. 9, 1930). English cornetist and conductor. Derek was the youngest son of Percy (a professional singer) and Florence (a fine pianist) Garside. He took up the cornet at age nine, and took lessons from Fred J. Roberts. At age twelve, he played in the Clifton and Lightcliffe Band and, at age thirteen, joined the Brighouse & Rastrick Band, sitting next to his teacher Mr. Roberts (1943-47). After finishing school at age sixteen, he studied office skills such as bookkeeping and shorthand. It didn't take long, however, for him to decide that his true passion was music.

When Fred Roberts became director of the C.W.S. (Co-operative Wholesale Society) Band in Manchester, Garside was offered the position of principal cornet with the C.W.S. Band. The band recorded over 150 works on LP albums for the Fontana label, and won the British Open Championship four times plus placed twelve times within an eighteen-year period. Garside's solo career took off in 1951, when he performed Haydn's Trumpet Concerto in the Casino concert hall in Bern, Switzerland. The band continued winning many competitions and honors throughout the 1960-90s.

During the summer of 1972, Garside replaced Alex Mortimer (who suffered ill health) as conductor of the B&R (Brighouse & Rastrick) Band. Under Garside's leadership, the band won first place in the North West Area contest in 1975 and 1976. Garside then resigned from the band and moved to Wales. In late 1978, he and his wife Janne returned north to live in Huddersfield. In February of 1979, he accepted a position with the Bradford Council's music department as a peripatetic brass teacher. Beginning in 1979, he was also music director of Foden's Motor Works Band (until December of 1980). He stayed with the Bradford Council position until his retirement to Wales in 1985. After retiring, Garside occasionally performed cornet solos, conducted, adjudicated, and taught. He was selected for the Kings of Brass, an all-star band that recorded three CDs in 2001. Derek Garside is described as "the consummate gentleman at all times, and respected by all who have come into contact with him—a true legend from the world of brass bands."

Bibl.: Helme, Chris. "Derek Malcolm Garside" (www.4barsrest.com); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gasca, Luis [Louis Angel] (b. Houston, Texas, Mar. 3, 1940). American trumpeter. Gasca began playing the trumpet at the age of thirteen, and attended the Berklee College of Music from 1959 to 1960. In 1960, he also participated in a tour of Japan with Perez Prado's group, and in 1962 played mellophone for Stan Kenton. He then served in the Army from 1962 to 1963.

Gasco played in a series of bands, including those of Maynard Ferguson, Lionel Hampton (1963-64), Woody Herman (1967-68), Mongo Santamaria (1967-69), Janis Joplin (performing with her at Woodstock in 1969), Van Morrison, Carlos Santana, Count Basie, and Cal Tjader, plus his own groups. He recorded with Santamaria, Tjader, George Duke (1971), and Joe Henderson (1973). Between 1968 and 1975, Gasca led record dates for Atlantic (1968-69), Blue Thumb (1971) and Fantasy (1974-75). His albums include Born to Love You (Fantasy), Canyon Lady (with Henderson, Original Jazz Classics), Descarga (with Tjader, Fantasy), Collage (Atlantic), and The Little Giant (Atlantic).

By the mid 1970s, personal problems plagued Gasca. He did little of note during the last twenty years of his career, and wandered around the country (especially Texas) trying not to be recognized. He did, however, perform with George Benson in Maui, Hawaii, for two years (1976-77). Although one written source claims that his life ended when he was murdered in Hawaii in February of 1997, he has been enjoying a productive life performing in Mexico.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gates, Charles R. (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Jan. 17, 1960). American trumpeter. Gates began studying music and trumpet with John Kenney (band director) and Harry St. Pierre (trumpet teacher). He received his bachelor of music education degree at Louisiana State University in 1983 where he studied with Dr. James West, and attended The Ohio State University from 1983 to 1988 where he studied with Dr. Richard Burkart. He completed his doctoral degree at OSU in 1992. While in Columbus, Ohio, he played with the Pro Musica Chamber Orchestra. He has also performed with the Columbus Symphony Orchestra, Memphis Symphony Orchestra, Acadiana Symphony Orchestra, Meridian Symphony Orchestra, Tennessee Summer Symphony, Tupelo Symphony, Mississippi Brass, and Ole Miss Faculty Brass Quintet, and conducts the University of Mississippi Trumpet Ensemble.

Gates began teaching trumpet at the University of Mississippi in 1988. From 1999 to 2005, he also served as director of the University's Academic Support Center. Dr. Gates is the current chair of the department of music at the University of Mississippi. He continues to teach trumpet, and is a member of the faculty brass quintet. He has released two critically acclaimed CDs with piano accompaniment on the Centaur label: Fantasie Brilliante—A Cornet Retrospective and Twelve Celebrated Fantasies and Airs Variés by Joseph Jean-Baptiste Laurent Arban (1825-1889). He is involved with the International Trumpet Guild, and is also on the advisory board of the National Trumpet Competition.

Gates and his wife Kathryn Fergus Gates, Chief Information Officer at the University of Mississippi have two children, Sarah (b. 1988) and Will (b. 1991). Gates's hobbies include bicycling and other outdoor activities, and reading literature.

Bibl.: "Charles R. Gates" (www.olemiss.edu); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, Nov. 8, 2010.

Gay, Mace (b. Stoughton, Massachusetts, Apr. 28, 1855; d. Brockton, Massachusetts, Mar. 15, 1935). American cornetist. Gay studied the violin at an early age, but at age fourteen switched to cornet and took lessons from Henry C. Brown in Boston. By age eighteen, he was performing with several local bands and soon became bugler for the 2nd Brigade in Boston. His first important solo appearance was in 1875 with Porter's Orchestra, known also as the Society Orchestra of New England. The following year, he became soloist with Baldwin's Cadet Band, and remained with it until 1880. On occasion, he would solo with Reeves's American Band of Providence.

Gay was elected director of the Martland Band of Brockton in 1881, a position he held for fifty-five years. Although he was the principal cornet soloist with the band, he often engaged guest cornet soloists such as Milo Burke, Ernest Williams, and Walter M. Smith. Gay stayed mostly in the New England area, but did tour for a year as soloist with the Neil Burgess Minstrels in 1883. In 1885, Gay won first place in a cornet solo contest in Nantasket Beach playing Hartmann's Carnival of Venice, which brought much attention to him throughout New England.

Gay became one of America's most respected band directors. He arranged and published a great deal of band music. In addition to his duties as director and cornet soloist with the Martland Band, he conducted the 5th Massachusetts Regimental Band for twelve years. He taught over eight hundred students, among them Walter M. Smith and Kitty Rankin (Mrs. Katherine Williams). He died at the age of seventy-nine.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Geiger, György (b. Homokmégy, Hungary, Aug. 3, 1944). Hungarian trumpeter. Geiger grew up in a small village near Budapest, and studied at the Béla Bartók Conservatory and the Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest. His teachers were Rudolf Borst and Frigyes Varasdy (1962-67). While still a student, he performed as principal trumpet of the Budapest State Opera Orchestra (1964-69), and in 1970 became the principal of the Hungarian Radio Orchestra, a position he still holds. He founded the Modern Brass Ensemble (now the Hungarian Brass Ensemble), which was the first ensemble of its kind in Hungary, and which won the Ancona International Competition in 1979. The group toured Europe and the United States many times, and performed during the Second International Brass Congress in Bloomington, Indiana in 1984. The review of his performance described his playing as having a "Méndez-like facility, Severinsenesque range, and a lyricism that alluded to Maurice André."

Geiger, a tall (six-foot, six-inch), modest, and even shy man, has presented lectures and master classes worldwide; in 1985 he lectured at the International Trumpet Guild conference in Albuquerque, New Mexico.

A professor at the Franz Liszt Academy in Budapest since 1979, Geiger has released three solo albums on the Hungaroton label that illustrate his versatility, such as Playing with the Trumpet (1996). He also recorded Concerto for Trumpet by Endre Szekely with the Orchestra of the Hungarian Radio & Television (Hungaroton LP 11666), and the Concerto No. 2 for trumpet and 15 strings by Dubrovay with the Franz Liszt Chamber Orchestra (Hungaroton LP 12415). He has also published a collection of exquisite music for trumpet and harp.

In 1980, Geiger received the Ferenc Liszt Prize, and has also received the Hungarian Artist Prize for service to contemporary Hungarian music.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Varga, Bálint András. "György Geiger" (Brass Bulletin, no. 56, IV/1986); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Geisler, Lloyd [Christman] (b. Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, May 30, 1913; d. Brackney, Pennsylvania, Dec. 30, 2002). American trumpeter. During high school, Geisler studied with Harold Rehrig and later with Saul Caston at the Curtis Institute of Music in Philadelphia. Immediately after graduation, he joined the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C. as principal trumpet, a position he held for thirty-three years (1936-69). His tenure with the orchestra was interrupted during World War II when he joined the US Navy Band; he returned to the orchestra in 1946.

Geisler became the unofficial assistant conductor of the NSO in 1957, when Maestro Howard Mitchell was touring America and abroad. Geisler conducted the orchestra for numerous pops concerts, children's programs, and lighter series concerts, as well as summer performances at Wolf Trap; he was named Associate Conductor in 1961. He retired from the orchestra altogether in 1973, after thirty-seven years with the organization.

Geisler taught trumpet and conducting at the Peabody Conservatory and at Catholic University of America, as well as privately in his Arlington, Virginia, home. He was elected to a two-year term as the first president of the International Trumpet Guild in 1975. He performed the National Anthem during the 1968 Super Bowl III, and conducted the NSO in concert at the White House for one of President John F. Kennedy's state dinners.

Upon retirement, Geisler moved to Myrtle Beach, South Carolina, where he continued giving private lessons in his home, and contracting musicians for local performances. He enjoyed playing golf. He was a kind and unpretentious person, always eager to help anyone in any way.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Lloyd Geisler: 1913-2002" ("News Item," International Trumpet Guild website (www.trumpetguild.org); "Lloyd Geisler Dies" (obituary, Washington Post, Dec. 31, 2002).

Gekker, [Paul] Chris (b. Washington, District of Columbia, Jan. 18, 1954). American trumpeter. Gekker grew up in Alexandria, Virginia, and began playing trumpet at age nine. His first trumpet teachers were Roy Smith and Jack Dahlinger. While attending T. C. Williams High School, he studied with Emerson Head, professor of trumpet at the University of Maryland. After graduating in 1972, he entered the Eastman School of Music under Sidney Mear, and graduated with a bachelor of music degree in 1976. Additional private study during college was with Adel Sanchez and Gerard Schwarz. During his sophomore year, he began to perform regularly with the Rochester Philharmonic, and as a senior he was invited to join the Eastman Brass Quintet. He was awarded a Performer's Certificate for solo performance during his senior year.

Gekker won an audition in 1976 with the Kansas City Philharmonic, where he was associate principal trumpet. In 1979, he returned to the D.C. area to freelance. He was invited to join the University of Maryland faculty brass quintet, and while performing there, earned a master of music degree (1979-81). In 1981, he won an audition with the American Brass Quintet in New York City, a group he toured and recorded with for eighteen years. He was principal trumpet of the Orchestra of St. Luke's from 1982 to 1998, and was given the title of Principal Trumpet Emeritus when he left the group (although he continues to perform with it on an occasional basis). He was also coprincipal (unofficial title) with Raymond Mase of the Orpheus Chamber Orchestra from 1982 to 1998, appearing as soloist in works such as Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto, Barber's Capricorn Concerto, and Hummel's Concerto. He has been a frequent guest of the Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center and the New York Philharmonic, where he has served as guest principal trumpet. Gekker was also a guest principal trumpet of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra in 2000 when he was in California as soloist with the New Century Chamber Orchestra. In addition, he has performed as guest principal of the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra (summer 2005) and the Eastern Music Festival Orchestra (summer 2012).

As a teacher, Gekker has taught at Columbia University (1984-98), the Manhattan School of Music (1985-98), The Juilliard School (1986-98), Hartt School, and the Aspen Music Festival (1982-98). In 1998, he was appointed professor of trumpet at the University of Maryland School of Music. Among his hundreds of former students are David Krauss, Benjamin Wright, Jack Sutte, Fernando Dissenha, Mike Stodd, Brian McWhorter, Rex Richardson, Hiro Noguchi, Kevin Finamore, Michael Leonhart, and Carol Morgan.

Gekker is currently principal trumpet of the National Philharmonic at Strathmore, a member of the Washington Symphonic Brass, and performs regularly with the Post Classical Ensemble and the Wolf Trap Opera. He is featured as soloist on over thirty CDs, has recorded fifteen CDs with the American Brass Quintet, one with the Canadian Brass, and four LPs with the Tidewater Brass Quintet. He has made many recordings in jazz and commercial studio settings with Elton John, Billy Joel, and other celebrities. He appears in a DVD with Sting titled A Winter's Night. His publications for trumpet include 24 Etudes, Articulation Studies, Endurance Drills, Piccolo Trumpet Studies, and 44 Duos (all with Colin Publications). Throughout his career, Gekker has worked closely with composers, and has had many works written for him, such as Eric Ewazen's Sonata for Trumpet and Piano (1995).

Gekker is married to his wife Suzanne, a professional clarinetist and teacher. Their children are Lianna (b. 1993) and Jason (b. 1996). His hobbies include performing as a quartet with his family, reading, and sports.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Chris Gekker's official website: www.chrisgekker.com; personal interview, Apr. 27, 2012.

George, Karl [Curtis] (b. St. Louis, Missouri, Apr. 26, 1913; d. St. Louis?, May 1978). American trumpeter. George's career began in 1933 when he joined McKinney's Cotton Pickers. He also performed with Cecil Lee and the Jeter-Pillars Orchestra at about the same time. George became a well-known lead trumpeter during the swing era, playing in Teddy Wilson's big band (1939-40) and with Lionel Hampton (1941-42).

After serving in the Army (1942-43), George ended up on the West Coast, and decided to stay in Los Angeles. He was one of the first African-Americans to play in Stan Kenton's orchestra (1943). He also played with Benny Carter (1944), Count Basie (1945), Harry Johnson (1946), and led his own combo that made many recordings. George also worked with Charles Mingus, Slim Gaillard, Oscar Pettiford, and Lucky Thompson. He recorded with J.J. Johnson, Howard McGhee, Julia Lee (1946), Joe Lutcher (1947), and Wilbert Baranco.

In 1945-46, George led recording sessions that have been reissued on CDs under the Xanadu and IAJC labels. Unfortunately, just after those sessions, bad health led to George's early retirement at about age forty-five. He dropped out of the jazz world completely by the late 1940s when he moved to his hometown of St. Louis. He died in 1978 at the age of sixty-five.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Georgi, Karl-Heinz (b. Wilkau-Haßlau, Germany, Apr. 1, 1957). German trumpeter. Georgi's first trumpet lessons were at the age of eight with his father; he later studied with G. Rößler at the Spezialschule für Musik in Halle (Saxony, 1968-74), and with Kurt Ramm at the Hochschule für Musik in Leipzig (1974-79). As a gifted young soloist, he won prizes at international competitions in Prague (1971), Leipzig (1972), and Vercelli (1977).

Georgi joined the Leipzig Gewandhaus Orchestra as principal trumpet (1979, moved to second and third in 2005), but has maintained a dual playing career as an orchestral player and soloist, and has toured the United States, Israel, Canada, South America, Hong Kong, Taiwan, Japan, Cuba, and South Korea. He has released a solo CD titled Europäische Festmusik für Trompete, and taught at the Hochschule für Musik Leipzig (1987-93).

Bibl.: Jung, Hans-Rainer. Das Gewandhaus Orchester: Seine Mitglieder und seine Geschichte seit 1743 (Faber & Faber); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gérard, Fred [Monnin, Georges] (b. Besançon, France, Mar. 18, 1924; d. Vitry-sur-Seine, France, Dec. 26, 2012). French trumpeter. Gérard studied with Eugène Laborde, Alphonse Arletti, Raymond Sabarich, and Jean Greffin. He became an excellent jazz trumpeter and highly respected lead player with dozens of big bands and show bands led by such artists as Jacques Hélian (1945-51), Alix Combelle (1948-49), Ernie Royal (1950-51), Aimé Barelli (1951), Christian Chevallier (1955-59), André Persiani (1955-58), Michel Legrand (1956-57), Claude Bolling (1956-57), Martial Solal (1956-58), Harry Belafonte (1959), Judy Garland (1960), Pierre Michelot (1963), Dany Doriz (1966), Slide Hampton (1970), Dexter Gordon (1970), Geo Daly, Michel de Villers, Lucky Thompson, Django Reinhardt, Noël Chiboust, and Hubert Rostaing.

Gérard was a top studio performer who recorded with Gigi Gryce, Claude Bolling, Jef Gilson, Michel Colombier, Clifford Brown, and others. He became one of the world's leading pop trumpeters after he released a string of recordings on the Disques Festival label such as Trumpet Club, Fred Gérard, Twist Trumpet, and Sa Trompette. He was also a fine composer and arranger who published many works for trumpet and piano including his popular Toy Trumpet's Circus Parade (International Music Diffusion).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); information received from Michel Laplace.

Gerards, Hans (b. Teveren_[near Aachen], Germany, Aug. 9, 1927; d. Mainz-Hechtsheim, Germany, Apr. 29, 1998). German trumpeter. Gerards's first trumpet lessons were with his father Jacob, an amateur trumpeter. At age fourteen, he played in the Heeresmusikkorps Frankfurt am Main. From 1946 to 1948, he was a chamber musician and principal trumpet of the Städtisches Orchester and also studied with Adam Zeyer at the Staatliche Hochschule für Musik in Cologne.

Gerards was principal of the Mönchengladbach orchestra after 1948, was a member of the Rheydt City Theater Orchestra from 1950 to 1959, and also played principal in the Philharmonic Orchestra of the State Theater in Mainz until 1990. He taught trumpet at the Peter Cornelius Conservatory from 1969 to 1995, and was conductor of the St. Stephen Brass Ensemble beginning in 1969. He recorded with the Mainz Brass Quintet in 1995.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gérardy, Dieudonné (b. Liège, Belgium, Oct. 6, 1848; d. Liège, Belgium, Aug. 30, 1900). Belgian cornetist. Gérardy studied with Pierre-François Everaerts at the Liège Royal Conservatory (1863-68). He won first prize in cornet at age seventeen, and the coveted enamel medal at age twenty. In 1875, he played principal cornet in the orchestra of the bath city Spa and the Jean-Baptiste Arban orchestra in St. Petersburg. Gérardy also played at the Pavillon de Flore conducted by Nicolas Ysaye (Liège), Société du Casino (Liège, 1879), the Théâtre de Liège, and the Orchestre du Conservatoire de Liège conducted by Jean-Théodore Radoux (April 1887, along with Théo Charlier). A cornet virtuoso, Gérardy was praised by the Echo musical for his technique (clear and astonishingly rapid staccato tonguing), his charming phrasing, and his velvet tone.

In June of 1878, Gérardy became professor of cornet, flugelhorn, and trumpet at the Liège Royal Conservatory, a position he held for twenty-two years, and where Théo Charlier was among his students (1880-85). Gérardy composed a set of etudes for cornet, as well as Phantasien in B-flat Major, Op. 1 and 2, and the better known Erinnerungen an Pavlovsk, all for cornet and piano.

In 1876, he married Marie-Louise Sody from Spa. They had two children, Thérésa (b. 1876), who became a pianist, and Jean (1877-1929), who became a cellist of international renown.

Unfortunately, Gérardy died at the young age of fifty-one.

Bibl.: Macaluso, Rosario. "Le cours de trompette au Conservatoire royal de musique de Liége depuis 1826." (Bulletin de la Societie liégoise de Musicologie, Oct. 1992); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Geyer, Charles ("Charlie") E[dgar] (b. Joliet, Illinois, Nov. 25, 1944). American trumpeter. Geyer began playing the trumpet at age seven, studying with Otto Matay, a clarinetist who owned a music store in his hometown of Joliet, Illinois. He later studied with Herbert Stoskopf. While attending Northwestern University, Geyer earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1965, studying with Vincent Cichowicz. He served as principal trumpet of the Lyric Opera orchestra from 1964 to 1966, and joined the Chicago Symphony Orchestra as fourth trumpet in 1966. In addition to taking lessons from Adolph Herseth, Geyer continued his education at Northwestern University, earning a master of music degree.

Geyer was fourth trumpet in the CSO from 1966 to 1974, and during the summers of 1967 to 1974, played principal in the Grant Park Symphony. When his mentor, Vincent Cichowicz, retired from the second position in the CSO in 1974, Geyer was named his replacement. From 1974 to 1978, he was also a member of the Chicago Symphony Brass Ensemble.

Geyer became the principal of the Houston Symphony Orchestra in the fall of 1978. He taught as an adjunct professor at Rice University from 1979 to 1981, but accepted a fulltime professorship at the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, in the fall of 1980 (commuting between Rochester and Houston during the 1980-81 academic year). His wife, Barbara Butler, a Chicago trumpeter who was working as coprincipal of the Vancouver Symphony Orchestra, was concurrently hired as the other professor at Eastman in 1980. Together, they built one of the strongest trumpet studios in the world, and played in the Eastman Brass.

After Vincent Cichowicz's retirement in 1998, Geyer and Butler were hired as professors of trumpet at Northwestern University. Geyer has been a member of Chicago's Music of the Baroque since 1975, Chicago Chamber Musicians, and the Grand Teton Music Festival orchestra in Wyoming. An active soloist, Geyer has recorded (with Butler) CDs such as Music for Two Trumpets and Organ and Carmen Fantasia.

Geyer is one of the most successful teachers the world has known. Among his many hundreds of successful students are Matthew Muckey, Christopher Martin, Ethan Bensdorf, Lynn Nicholson, Paul Merkelo, Bill Williams, Markus Würsch, Kurt Weiss, Joey Tartell, Edward Reid, David Burkhart, John Hagstrom, James Wilt, Michael Martin, Byron Stripling, Jerry Hey, Philippe Schartz, Douglas Prosser, Robert Smith, and Tage Larsen. He has appeared as a guest artist and clinician throughout the world, and has performed at several conferences of the International Trumpet Guild. Geyer and Butler will assume duties as professors of trumpet at Rice University in Houston during the fall of 2013.

Currently, Geyer, Butler, and daughter Jorie Butler-Geyer (b. 1994) live in Lincolnshire, Illinois, where they maintain a stable of horses. Geyer's hobbies include woodworking, home repair, and golf.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charles Geyer" (www.music.northwestern.edu); personal interview, Feb. 15, 2011.

Ghitalla, Armando ("Mundy") (b. Alpha, Illinois, June 1, 1925; d. Houston, Texas, Dec. 14, 2001). American trumpeter. Ghitalla was a legend in his own time. His beautifully lyric playing was his trademark. Soon after he was born, his family moved to Knoxville, Illinois. He began playing the trumpet at age eight, and graduated from Knoxville High School in 1942. He studied with Joseph Gustat and Pattee Evenson. He enlisted in the navy, and performed stateside in a dance band. Upon discharge, he used the G.I. Bill of Rights to fund his studies at The Juilliard School in New York City where he studied with William Vacchiano (1946-49).

Ghitalla's professional orchestral career began in 1948, when he became a member of the New York City Opera and the New York City Ballet orchestras, and also performed with the Band of America conducted by Paul Lavalle. The following year, he became principal trumpet of the Houston Symphony Orchestra. During his second year in Houston, the Boston Symphony Orchestra was looking for a second trumpeter. Roger Voisin, the principal trumpet of the BSO, contacted Vacchiano for recommendations; as a result, Ghitalla was selected for the position. Voisin also resigned his position as principal trumpet of the Boston Pops, so that he could concentrate on his duties with the BSO. The Pops position was given to Ghitalla, and he remained there from 1951 to 1964. However, Ghitalla was not satisfied with second chair in the BSO, and friction soon arose between him and Voisin.

When Erich Leinsdorf assumed the conductorship of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, he allowed Voisin to move to a vacated third position, so that Ghitalla could move to the principal chair. So, after thirteen years as second trumpet, Ghitalla became the new principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra in 1965. However, Ghitalla was unable to begin duties as principal due to his excessive pipe smoking; he developed cancer of the lip that required surgery and a year of recovery, and Voisin was asked to play principal in his absence. A year later, Ghitalla returned, and played even better than he had before the operation. As the 1966 season began, Voisin found that performing as a section player was not in his nature, so he resigned from the BSO in 1973. Ghitalla continued as principal until his retirement from the orchestra in 1979. As principal trumpet of the BSO, he can be seen on video with André Côme, Rolf Smedvig, and Gérard Goguen performing the Fifth Symphony by Tchaikovsky conducted by Leonard Bernstein (1974).

Ghitalla was one of the world's first classical trumpet soloists to perform high profile trumpet recitals (Town Hall, 1958; Carnegie Hall, 1960). He played in the New England Brass Ensemble and with Voisin on Voisin's own recorded series, Music for Trumpet and Orchestra. Ghitalla's first recording on the Cambridge label included the first recordings of Hummel's Concerto in E and Molter's Concerto No. 2 in D (1963). He later recorded four other solo albums that included cantatas by Bach and Scarlatti, works by Copland and others, concertos by Böhme, Perry and others, plus an album of contest solos on the Music Minus One label. Ghitalla's flute-like finesse and lyrical style set a new standard for solo trumpet playing at the time. His performances and recordings with the Boston Symphony Chamber Players were also highly praised. His version of A Soldier's Tale by Igor Stravinsky (1975) is a landmark recording.

Hundreds of students benefited from Ghitalla's teaching. He served on the faculties of Boston University, New England Conservatory, Hartt School of Music, and the Tanglewood Institute. In 1979, after retiring from the BSO, he became professor of trumpet at the University of Michigan, where he replaced Clifford Lillya. He taught during several summers at the Banff Centre of the Arts in Canada, and was an active clinician throughout the world. A few of his best-known students are Timothy Morrison, Rolf Smedvig, Peter Chapman, Jeffrey Stern, David Hickman, John Marchiando, John Taber, Gabriele Cassone, and Robert Sullivan. The University of Michigan presented him with the Alumni Teaching Award and the Haugh Teaching Award. In 1994, he was awarded an Honorary Doctorate from Illinois Wesleyan University.

Ghitalla performed on a Bach C trumpet converted by William Tottle to a four-valve C/D system that was patterned after the Thibouville-Lamy trumpet owned by Roger Voisin. He also enjoyed playing his Schilke piccolo trumpets in B-flat, A, and G. His recording of the Hummel (in E) was performed on a Martin C trumpet, but later performances were played on a small-bore Bach D trumpet.

In the late 1990s, Ghitalla began having heart problems. His wife left him after about twenty-five years of marriage. According to Ghitalla, she divorced him because she got tired of taking care of an old man. He retired from the University of Michigan, and was soon offered a lucrative position at Rice University where he taught at the Shepherd School of Music. His hobbies included drawing cartoons, cooking, and tennis.

Just prior to his death, Ghitalla established the Armando Ghitalla Foundation with the purpose of sponsoring awards to and scholarships for gifted trumpet students. The Empire Brass hosted the first Armando Ghitalla Trumpet Competition in 2006, and prizes totaling $15,000 were awarded. After his death in 2001, his music library was bequeathed to his former student and friend, Robert Sullivan. Ghitalla is remembered as a kind and generous man with a gentlemanly and witty personality.

Bibl.: Glover, Stephen L. "Armando Ghitalla: An Interview" (International Trumpet Guild Newsletter, Feb. 1982); Patton, Julie L. "A Tribute to Armando Ghitalla: A Survey of His Influences on Trumpet Teachers in America and Canada Today" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2004); Tunnell, Michael. "Armando Ghitalla—Master Trumpeter, Master Teacher, Master Musician" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1997); "Armando Ghitalla" (Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extracts on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Giangiulio, Richard ("Rick") Cecil (b. Bryn Mawr, Pennsylvania, Nov. 15, 1942). American trumpeter and conductor. Giangiulio grew up in Ardmore, Pennsylvania. He began playing the trumpet at age ten. His father, Dominique, played the trombone while in the Navy, but then worked as a life insurance salesman. Richard's mother, Jennie, was a gym teacher for special education students.

Giangiulio possessed an exceptional talent for playing trumpet. He studied with Harold Rehrig (fourth trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra), and at age thirteen won the Philadelphia Orchestra's youth solo competition playing Herbert Clarke's Showers of Gold. Before performing the piece with the orchestra, conductor and trombonist Henry Charles Smith had him play it with a summer camp band. Giangiulio recalls that performance: I was a camper at Valley Forge Military Academy the weeks before the Philly performance, so Henry had me play the solo with the camp band. It didn't go well because of intonation problems, so he asked to see my trumpet. He took it to an instrument repairman who found a clothespin stuck in the bell. It seems that one of the other campers was a little jealous of my playing! The following year, Giangiulio was selected to play on the television show, Children's Hour that featured talented youths from the Philadelphia area.

After graduating from high school, Giangiulio studied at the Curtis Institute with Samuel Krauss (1960-64). He then earned a master of music degree at The Juilliard School, studying with William Vacchiano (1964-66), and won a Fulbright Scholarship to study with Maurice André at the Paris Conservatory (1966-67), winning first prize after only one year. He also took first place in the 1968 Geneva competition.

Giangiulio's career as an orchestral player began when he joined Israel's Tel Aviv Philharmonic in 1967. After a brief time as principal trumpet with the Philadelphia Chamber Orchestra, he won the principal chair of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra in 1969, a position he held until 1993 when he moved to coprincipal. He began having dental problems, which gradually made playing more and more difficult. He retired from the DSO in 2001.

Having served as conductor of the Dallas Symphony Orchestra for many of its youth and park concerts, Giangiulio became conductor of the Greater Dallas Youth Orchestra in 1980, and in 1994 was also named conductor of the New Philharmonic Orchestra of Irving. In 2006, he resigned his post in Irving, and was appointed music director of the Allen Philharmonic Orchestra. He is still active with these orchestras.

Giangiulio has released numerous solo albums on the Crystal Records label, including Pistons and Pipes, Treasures for Horn and Trumpet (with Gregory Hustis, horn), Music for Festive Occasions, Music for Ceremony and Celebration and Dallas Trumpets (with members of the DSO trumpet section, Thomas Booth and Bert Truax).

Giangiulio has three children from his first marriage: Jennifer (b. 1968), Maria (b. 1970) and Raphael (b. 1973). In 2003, he and violinist Maria Schleuning were married, and in 2009 adopted a son, Braydon (b. 2001), from China. In 1995, Giangiulio and Greg Hustis formed a mute making company called TrumCor, which has become very successful. Giangiulio's hobby, a carry-over from his youth, is tennis.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Richard Giangiulio" (http://en.wikipedia.org); personal interview, Oct. 29, 2010.

Gibson, Daryl J[ames] (b. Sheldon, Iowa, Oct. 23, 1911; d. Minneapolis, Minnesota, May 3, 1969). American trumpeter. Gibson studied trumpet with Max Schlossberg, Harry Glantz, and James Stamp. He also studied with three non-trumpeters: Miles Sery, Jaraslov Cimera, and Walter Linder. He received his B.S. and M.A. degrees in music from the University of Minnesota and his Ph.D. from the University of Iowa. After graduating, Gibson taught at the University of Minnesota and performed with the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (1934-44) under Eugene Ormandy and Dimitri Mitropoulous. From 1944 to 1945, he served as a naval officer in the Pacific Theater, returning to civilian life in 1946. He taught at the University of Montana at Missoula from 1947 to 1948, after which he became chair of the music department at Gustavus Adolphus College in St. Peter, Minnesota, a position he held until he was struck down with paralytic polio in 1952. After spending years in an iron lung at the Mayo Clinic in Rochester, Minnesota, he recovered sufficiently to return to limited teaching duties at the McPhai School of Music, Augsburg College, and Hamline University, all in the Minneapolis area. He began writing his book, A Textbook for Trumpet, after returning to teaching. The book was self-published in 1962 and assigned to the Schmitt, Hall & McCreary Company in 1967. At the time of publication, Carl "Doc" Severinsen endorsed it.

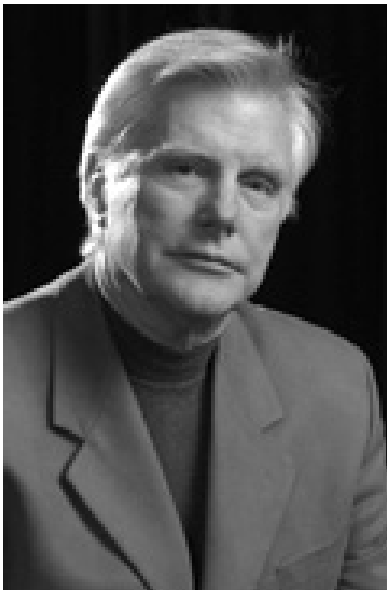
Gibson and his wife Mildred, a high school English teacher, had two sons, Thomas Leigh and Daryl Robert Gibson, the latter a professional trumpeter. (See biography below.)

Bibl.: Gibson, Daryl J. A Textbook for Trumpet (Schmitt, Hall & McCreary Co.); information provided by Daryl Robert Gibson on Feb. 5 and 10, 2013.

Gibson, [Daryl] Robert (b. Minneapolis, Minnesota, Jan. 29, 1939). American trumpeter. The son of trumpeter Daryl J. Gibson, Robert first studied with his father, and while attending the University of Minnesota (bachelor of music education, 1957-62; master of fine arts, 1965-72; PhD, 1972-76) he studied with Stephen Chenette. Gibson taught in the Minnesota public schools from 1962 to 1965, and was an active freelance artist in Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, from 1973 to 1976. He often performed with the Minneapolis Symphony (now the Minnesota Orchestra), Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra, and Saint Paul Civic Opera Company, as well as taught part-time at the University of Minnesota and other area colleges.



Gibson joined the faculty at McGill University in Montreal, Quebec, Canada in 1976 as a professor of music, a position he held until retiring in 2008. He conducted various ensembles at McGill including the McGill Wind Symphony and Chamber Winds, which performed at many universities and festivals in both Canada and the eastern U.S. Academic duties included teaching undergraduate and graduate courses and seminars, as well as trumpet instruction and chamber music coaching. He often performed with the Montreal Symphony Orchestra, CBC Montreal Orchestra, Opéra de Montréal, and les Grand Ballet Canadienne. He was a founder of the Mount Royal Brass Quintet.

Robert Gibson and his wife Mary Sue have two children, Noah and Brianna, and currently live in the Montreal area. His hobbies include reading, writing, volunteering for civic activities, and playing tennis and squash.

Bibl.: Personal interviews, Feb. 4 and 10, 2013.

Gil [Armas], Sebastián (b. Gran Canaria, Canary Islands, Spain, Dec. 15, 1972). Spanish trumpeter. Gil began playing the trumpet at the age of eight and took lessons from Santiago Luri San Vicente, with whom he later studied at the Conservatorio de Las Palmas de Gran Canaria. He also studied with Manuel Lopez Torres at the Conservatorio Municipal de Música "José Iturbi" de Valencia, again with Torres at the Conservatorio Superior de Música Joaquín Rodrigo de Valencia, with Malte Burba at Peter-Cornelius-Konservatorium in Mainz, Germany, and with Matthew Simon at Aula de Música Moderna del Liceo in Barcelona, Spain. He also attended many master classes given by Maurice Benterfa, José Orti, Pierre Thibaud, Maurice André, Guy Touvron, and others, and had occasional Baroque trumpet instruction by Edward H. Tarr.

Gil has been a member of numerous ensembles including Banda Municipal de Las Palmas (1990), Orquesta Filarmónica de Gran Canaria (1992), Orquesta Sinfónica de Tenerife (1996), Sojara Brass Quintet (1996), Gran Canaria Big Band (1997), the Big Band de Canarias (2009), and Symphony Orchestra de Castilla y Leon. In 2002 and 2005, the Sojara Brass Quintet won second prize in the Regional Competition of Chamber Music "Caja Canarias" in Santa Cruz de Tenerife. Gil has also taught at the Conservatorio Superior de Música de Las Palmas de Gran Canaria (1994-2003) and the Conservatorio Superior de Música de Canarias (2003-10). He has released a solo album titled La trompetta en los organos de Gran Canarias.

Gil is married to Carmen Nieves Ojeda Cabrera, a violin professor at the Conservatorio Profesional de Música de Las Palmas de Gran Canaria. He is an active organizer of trumpet festivals including the Teror Trumpet Festival.

Bibl.: personal interview, May 5, 2010.

Gildner, Nancy Colleen (b. Kitchener, Ontario, Canada, Jan. 29, 1955; d. Wiesbaden, Germany, Sept. 14, 2012). Canadian trumpeter. Gildner studied with Larry Weeks at the University of Western Ontario, and Martin Berinbaum at the University of British Columbia. From 1981 to 1994, she was principal trumpet of the Thunder Bay Symphony Orchestra, and taught trumpet and brass literature at Lakehead University in Thunder Bay.

Gildner moved to Germany in 1995 where she performed with numerous touring productions of Broadway shows, including the German production of Andrew Lloyd Webber's Sunset Boulevard in Niedernhausen, and Walt Disney's The Beauty and the Beast in Stuttgart. Since 2000, she has played first trumpet in Franz Hummel's Ludwig II in Füssen and the musical, Crazy Hotel, for the Hessian Radio. As a freelance musician, Gildner has toured and recorded with the Toronto Symphony Orchestra, National Ballet Orchestra of Canada, Canadian Opera Company Orchestra, London (Canada) Orchestra, Kurpfälzisches Chamber Orchestra, Ensemble Modern, United Women's Orchestra, Mainz Brass, Rosa Classic Salon Ensemble, National Theater Orchestra of Mannheim, State Theater Orchestra in Wiesbaden, and the Mainz Bach Choir.

Gildner was married to Cordula Hacke of Wiesbaden.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel, Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gillespie, John Birks ("Dizzy") (b. Cheraw, South Carolina, Oct. 21, 1917; d. Englewood, New Jersey, Jan. 6, 1993). American trumpeter. Gillespie was truly one of the most unique talents in music. He, along with saxophone artist Charlie Parker, became the leading figures in bebop jazz. He also became an important figure in the Afro-Cuban jazz movement.

Gillespie was the last of nine children of James and Lottie Gillespie. His father was a local bandleader who gave John early instructions on the piano, but died when John was only ten years old. John taught himself to play the trombone and trumpet at the age of twelve and became inspired to become a jazz trumpeter after hearing Roy Eldridge on the radio. Gillespie was offered a music scholarship to attend the Laurinburg Institute in Laurinburg, North Carolina, where he studied trumpet with Shorty Hall and played with the Laurinburg Institute Band (1933 to 1935). In 1935, he left school to begin his professional career.

Gillespie was offered a tryout with the Frank Fairfax orchestra in 1935, but Joe Facio, a trumpeter in the band, had heard about Gillespie's prowess, and feared that if Gillespie were hired, all of the trumpet solos would be given to him, so Facio managed to rig the audition by substituting poorly scribbled music for the regular music read by the contestants; Gillespie was bewildered and failed the audition. Facio remarked to the other band members, You know that little dizzy cat, the one who carries his trumpet in a paper bag, he can't read worth a damn, and so, Gillespie's nickname came into being, and his humorous stage personality retained it. In 1937, Gillespie joined Fairfax and played alongside Charlie Shavers, who introduced him to Roy Eldridge's solos. That year, Gillespie played in the great big bands of Lucky Millinder, Claude Hopkins, and Chick Webb.

In 1937, Gillespie replaced his idol Eldridge as first trumpet in the Teddy Hill Band with which he toured Europe and made his first recording, King Porter Stomp. After a year with the Teddy Hill organization, Gillespie joined the Edgar Hayes Orchestra (1938-1939) and the orchestra of the Cuban Alberto Soccaras (1938). In 1937, Gillespie had also met a young woman named Lorraine Willis at the Apollo Theatre. They were married in 1940.

Gillespie freelanced with several other bands before joining Cab Calloway's orchestra in 1939. Calloway was not always pleased with Gillespie's compositions or the way he performed his music. Within a few months, Calloway's resentment grew due to Gillespie's writing music for other bands, such as those of Woody Herman and Jimmy Dorsey.

Calloway fired Gillespie on September 21, 1941, blaming him for throwing a spitball at a spotlight during Matt Hinton's solo. The spitball was actually thrown by trumpeter Jonah Jones, but Calloway seized the opportunity to get rid of Gillespie. A fight broke out, and Gillespie pulled a knife on the bandleader, stabbing him in the buttocks; the wound required ten stitches. Gillespie and Calloway eventually reconciled, but Jones did not confess to throwing the spitball until several decades later. For the next year, Gillespie freelanced, performed jam sessions at the Minton's (1941), and played with Les Hite, Benny Carter, Coleman Hawkins, Fletcher Henderson, Ella Fitzgerald, Boyd Raeburn (1942), and Charlie Barnet.

Gillespie joined Earl Hines's orchestra in 1942, and in the following year, played with Billy Eckstine's band (until 1944). Eckstine's band was a good fit for Gillespie's compositions and style of music. In 1945, Gillespie formed his own five-piece combo that included his friend Charlie Parker. Their music planted the seeds of bebop, a style of jazz that included additional and more complex chords than traditional swing music of the time. Gillespie's compositions, such as Groovin' High, Salt Peanuts, A Night in Tunisia, and Woody n' You were perceived as radical in the late 1940s, but the style soon caught on.

Gillespie formed his first big band in 1945 and hoped to popularize bebop music through this more traditional medium, but audiences were not receptive to his style, and the group soon broke up. He began teaching bebop to several young jazz musicians including Milt Jackson, Miles Davis, and Max Roach. He performed in numerous small groups and headlined the 1946 musical revue film, Jivin' in BeBop. His puffed cheeks, ever-present beret, goatee, and heavy-rimmed glasses made him the iconic figure of bebop.

In 1946-50, Gillespie led a big band that made a sensation in France in 1948. By that time, Gillespie had heard Afro-Cuban jazz when he worked with the Cuban trumpeter Mario Bauzá in New York. Bauza introduced him to the Latin drummer Chano Pozo, who became Gillespie's congo drum player. Afro-Cuban jazz was bebop-oriented, and throughout his career, Gillespie enjoyed mixing Latin rhythms with African elements. His compositions Manteca, A Night in Tunisia, and Tin Tin Deo are excellent examples of this style.

Gillespie became an international star, leading various bands and playing at the Jazz at the Philharmonic, Newport Festival (from 1952), and Antibes Festival (1962); touring Japan (1965) with the Giants of Jazz (1971); paying a television tribute to Louis Armstrong with Doc Severinsen, Bobby Hackett, and Max Kaminsky (1972); being featured with his protégé Jon Faddis (Nice, 1977); performing at the 1980 International Trumpet Guild Conference; appearing with Maurice André on the television show, Le Grand Echiquier (1980); touring with Machito (1982), the 70th Anniversary Big Band led by Jon Faddis (1987); and giving a concert in Paris in duet with Max Roach (1989). Gillespie also helped Arturo Sandoval leave Cuba and establish his international career. He published his autobiography, To Be or Not to Bop, in 1979 and led the United Nations Orchestra from 1988 to 1992. As his trumpet playing began to weaken during the mid 1970s, he devoted much of his energy to assisting the careers of his two protégés, Arturo Sandoval and Jon Faddis.

Various stories exist as to how Gillespie's trumpet bell became bent upward, but his autobiography indicates that it was caused by a dancer accidentally falling on it during a job on January 6, 1953. For whatever reason, Gillespie liked the sound it produced, and had a new instrument built in a similar manner by King, then Schilke. The unusual shape of the instrument was also perfect for Gillespie's radical persona. Gillespie also conducted research on mouthpieces with Al Cass.

Gillespie released a steady stream of record albums between 1950 and 1992. Among his thirty-six albums during this period are Bird & Diz, Dee Gee Days—The Savoy Sessions, Jazz at Massey Hall, Diz & Getz, Sittin' In, Have Trumpet Will Excite, Dizzy on the French Riviera, Afro-Cuban Jazz Moods, The Winter in Lisbon, and To Bird With Love. Gillespie appeared on several television shows including The Cosby Show, Sesame Street, and The Muppet Show. He was crowned a traditional chief in Nigeria, and received the French cultural award title of Commandeur de l'Ordre des Arts et des Lettres. The University of California bestowed the title Regents' Professor on him, and he received an Honorary Doctor of Music degree from the Berklee College of Music. He also received a Grammy Lifetime Achievement Award and was given the Kennedy Center Honors Award. Other awards include ASCAP's Duke Ellington Award (1989) and the Polar Music Prize in Sweden (1993).

Gillespie received a star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame and was inducted into the Big Band Hall of Fame (1982). President George H.W. Bush presented him with the National Medal of Arts. A November 26, 1992 concert at Carnegie Hall formally celebrated Gillespie's seventy-fifth birthday, but the famed trumpeter was unable to attend due to having become ill and hospitalized. He died of pancreatic cancer on January 6, 1993 and is buried in the Flushing Cemetery in Queens, New York. He was survived by his wife of fifty years, Lorraine, daughter Jeanie (Bryson) and grandson Radji-Birks Bryson-Barrett. Gillespie was a devout believer of the Bahá'í Faith.

Bibl.: Gillespie, Dizzy. To Be or Not to Bop (University of Minnesota Press); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Maggin, Donald L. Dizzy: The Life and Times of John Birks Gillespie (Harper); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Dizzy Gillespie" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom with extracts on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Photos: With Clark Terry in 1980, by Gérard Demonchy. Dizzy with Ian Hamer. Dizzy with Arturo Sandoval. Dizzy in Nice 1986, signing an autograph for Cédric Laplace, by Lisiane Laplace. Dizzy's signature puffy cheeks, Monte Carlo 1978, by René Pernelli.

Gillette, Mic (b. 1951). American trumpeter. Gillette grew up in California. He began playing trumpet at age four under the guidance of his father, Ray Gillette, who played trombone with the big bands of Harry James, Tommy Dorsey, Stan Kenton, and others. At age fifteen, Gillette (doubling on trumpet, trombone, and tuba) joined the Gotham City Crime Fighters, a group that later became known as Tower of Power. He toured with the groups Tower of Power, Cold Blood, and Sons of Champlin until 1984, when he stopped touring in order to help raise his first daughter with wife Julia. However, he continued playing as a studio recording artist, backing celebrity musicians and groups such as Santana, The Rolling Stones, Quincy Jones, Rod Stewart, Elton John, Jefferson Starship, the Doobie Brothers, Blood Sweat and Tears, and The Fundamentals.

Gillette became burned out with music, and instead ran a landscaping service business for fourteen years. He returned to music as a member of Tortilla Soup, and played with the Strokeland Superband, as well as his own group called Funky Loophole. In 2009, he rejoined Tower of Power. He is also currently performing with vocalist Josh Pfeiffer in Northern California.

Gillette is an excellent arranger, and has worked with name artists on numerous recordings. His new solo CD is titled Ear Candy, on the BKA Records label.

Bibl.: Mic Gillette's official website: www.micgillette.com.

Gilreath, Amy S. (b. Kingsport, Tennessee, July 23, 1963). American trumpeter. Gilreath grew up in Church Hill, Tennessee. She began playing trumpet at age nine, guided by Karl Zimmerman. She graduated from Volunteer High School in 1981 and attended Eastern Kentucky University from 1981 to 1985, earning a bachelor of music education degree studying with Richard Illman. From 1985 to 1990, she studied at the University of Illinois with Michael Tunnell and Ray Sasaki, receiving master of music and doctor of musical arts degrees. Her dissertation is titled A Descriptive Study of Soviet Union Trumpet Concertos. She has also studied with Arnold Jacobs, Susan Slaughter, and Vincent DiMartino.

Gilreath has been teaching at Illinois State University in Normal since 1990 and was promoted to the level of full professor in 2004. She was a member of the Dallas Brass in 1993, and has performed with the Brass Band of Battle Creek, Velvet Brass, Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, and the New John Philip Sousa Band. She is currently principal trumpet of the Illinois Symphony Orchestra, the Illinois Chamber Orchestra, Heartland Festival Orchestra, a member of Monarch Brass and Stiletto Brass, and was principal of the Peoria Symphony Orchestra for nineteen years. Gilreath spends many of her summers teaching at the Orvieto Musica TrumpetFest and Chamber Ensemble: Chamber Brass in Italy. She has also performed in Spain, France, Germany, England, Austria, and Hungary. Her solo CD is titled Enjoying Life (self-produced).

An active member of the International Women's Brass Conference, Gilreath was cohost of its 2003 and 2006 conferences. She has also served as a board member of the International Trumpet Guild. Her awards include the Outstanding Alumnus Award from Eastern Kentucky University, Outstanding Teacher Award from Illinois State University, the ISU College of Fine Arts Research Award (2007), and the ISU School of Music Research Award (2007).

Gilreath and James Major (Dean of the College of Fine Arts at ISU) have been married since 1996. Her hobbies include traveling and raising animals.

Bibl.: "Amy S. Gilreath" (www.cfa.ilstu.edu); personal interview, May 11, 2011.

Girard, George (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Oct. 7, 1930; d. Jan. 18, 1957). American trumpeter. Girard was a student of Johnny Wiggs and played in local clubs in 1946 with bands led by Jimmy Archey (on tour) and Phil Zito, among others. His first recordings were with Zito.

In 1950, Girard formed the Basin Street Six that included the young clarinetist, Pete Fountain. Four years later, Girard formed a large band that played at the Famous Door. He regularly broadcasted on CBS and played in Los Angeles with Johnny St. Cyr.

At the age of twenty-five, Girard developed cancer and underwent surgery in the following year. He began playing again within six months, but could not maintain his strength, and was forced to quit playing the trumpet a short time later. He sang for a while, but died of cancer on January 18, 1957 at the age of twenty-six.

During his brief life, Girard became a top Dixieland player. He recorded for Storyville, Imperial, Good Time Jazz, Southland, and Vik. His best album was titled Stompin' at the Famous Door (Vik). Some of his recordings have been reissued on CD, including Basin Street Six (GHB) and Sounds of New Orleans, Vol. 6 (Storyville).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gisbert, Greg (b. Mobile, Alabama, Feb. 2, 1966). American trumpeter. Gisbert's father played piano and saxophones, and his mother played the trumpet. His family moved to Denver, Colorado, in 1971 when he was five years old. Gisbert began his music career playing drums, and by the age of ten, was performing with his father's dance band. However, he switched to trumpet during his teen years. He attended the Berklee College of Music in Boston for one year (1984-85), but soon began playing jazz trumpet for a living at the age of nineteen.

While still a young man, Gisbert performed with an impressive list of jazz artists, including Buddy Rich (1985-86), the Woody Herman Orchestra (1987-89), Akiyoshi-Tabackin Big Band (beginning in 1989), Lew Anderson (1989), Gary Burton (1989), Mingus Epitaph (1990-92), Buck Clayton (1991), John Hicks (1992), Norman Simmons (1992), Phil Wilson, Tony Bennett, Mel Tormé, Mickey Tucker, John Fedchock, Joe Williams, Ella Fitzgerald, Sarah Vaughan, Maria Schneider, Danny D'Imperio, Clark Terry, Frank Wess, Tom Harrell, Sammy Davis Jr., Loren Schoenberg (1997), and the Bob Montgomery-Peter Olstad Big Band.

Gisbert has recorded several albums as leader, including Big Lunage (Capri), Harology (Criss Cross), On Second Thought (Criss Cross), and Court Jester (Criss Cross). He has also recorded as a sideman for labels such as VSOP and Concord Jazz (with Scott Hamilton). He is a founding member of Convergence, a trio based in Denver, and has taught as an artist-in-residence at the University of Miami. Gisbert now lives in Littleton, Colorado.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Greg Gisbert" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Giuffredi, Andrea ("Giuffro") (b. Parma, Italy, Feb. 7, 1965). Italian trumpeter. Giuffredi began playing trumpet at age nine. He participated in a popular music orchestra, and was trained by a trombonist, Ennio Guidetti. His natural embouchure made the bell of the trumpet point upwards, a condition that denied him admittance into the conservatory in Parma. He auditioned a year later and was admitted as a trombone player because the professors felt that his lips were too large to play the trumpet. After switching teachers, he was allowed to play the trumpet his own way. He received his diploma in 1985. His teachers were Maurizio Mineo and Franco Titani, and he had a few lessons later on with Pierre Thibaud in Paris, and Vincent Cichowicz in Chicago.

Giuffredi began his career at age seventeen with the Symphony Orchestra of the Italian Radio and Television. A highly skilled classical and jazz player, he has performed in a wide range of capacities and ensembles during the past thirty years, including the Orchestre Rai in Turrin and Milan, Teatro Comunale in Firenze, Teatro Regio in Parma, and backing celebrities such as George Michael, Liza Minneli, and Luciano Pavarotti. He was also the trumpet soloist with I Solisti Veneti from 1990 to 1996. In 2006, he toured with Ennio Morricone and Filarmonica Teatro alla Scala, and toured with Ten of the Best (Japan, 2009). He also played as a lead trumpet in several famous television shows in Italy.

Giuffredi has performed around the world as a jazz and classical trumpeter. He has participated in several international trumpet conferences and has presented master classes at numerous universities and conservatories. As a studio player, he can be heard on over thirty CDs, and has released his own solo albums that include Tribute to Pavarotti (Summit), Forme d'arte (Summit), and L'Anacoreta (Summit). Giufreddi has taught at the International Academy of Music in Milan for over twenty years. His brother Corrado is a classical clarinet player.

Bibl.: Evans, Brian. "A Tale of Two Andreas" (The Brass Herald, Aug. 2010); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Andrea Giuffredi's official website: www.Andreagiuffredi.com.

Glantz, Harry (b. Proskuroff, Russia, Jan. 1, 1896; d. Bay Harbor, Florida, Dec. 18, 1982). Russian-born American trumpeter. The Glantz family immigrated to America when Harry was five years old. His father was a violinist, and his uncle Nathan played the saxophone. Young Harry began learning to play the violin at an early age, but didn't show much promise with the instrument. He described his first encounter with the cornet: My father brought home a landsman, a fellow musician, for a glass of tea. He [the friend] put his cornet in the bedroom. I went in and opened the case and became enthralled with the beautifully engraved gold Holton cornet. I took it to my lips and played it. The two men rushed in to speak to me. They asked if I wanted to play the cornet instead of the violin. What a relief for all; I didn't get a licking and they were spared hearing me play the violin again. The man who changed my life was George Brandman. He traveled with a circus band and was a bandleader...I was eleven years old then. Immediately after that encounter, my father ran out and bought me a used cornet with the Arban book for a total of $1.25.

Glantz's father took young Harry to various cornet teachers including Jacob Borodkin, but eventually he was able to study with the great Max Schlossberg of the New York Philharmonic for a few months, and later with Christian Rodenkirschen of the Philadelphia Orchestra. For a while, he took lessons with Gustav Heim, but Heim was often rude to him because he was Jewish, so he left Heim's studio. Glantz began playing at weddings, dances, and Bar Mitzvahs, and played with Irving Aaronson (1909), Vladimir Dubinsky, and a ragtime band (1911). At age fifteen, he became the first trumpet of the Russian Symphony Orchestra conducted by Modest Altschuler in New York (1912-13). At age seventeen, he played first trumpet in the National Opera Company orchestra in Montreal.

Glantz's big break occurred in March 1915 when he was invited to play first trumpet in the San Francisco Exposition Orchestra conducted by Camille Saint-Saëns. Most of the players in this group were handpicked from several of the leading orchestras in America. Through various contacts in the orchestra, he was invited by Maestro Karl Muck to play principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra for a few weeks, and then principal of the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski (October 1915 to December 1917).

When World War I broke out, Glantz joined the US Marine Band in 1917, to avoid being drafted. After his release, he played principal trumpet with the New York Symphony under Walter Damrosch (1919-22), and toured with it in the first American tour (1920) made by an American symphony orchestra. He also played in dance bands led by Harry Raderman & Nathan Glantz (1921), and Ben Selvin (1921) with whom he also recorded. Glantz then played principal trumpet in the San Francisco Symphony for one season (1922-23). The following season, he became principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic under Mengelberg and Toscanini. On August 9, 1924 Glantz performed Quinto Maganini's Tuolumne: a California Rhapsody for Orchestra and Trumpet Obbligato (dedicated to Glantz in 1920) with the New York Philharmonic. The audience's reaction was overwhelming, and Glantz took sixteen curtain calls! (He gave another performance of this work on April 24, 1938.) He recorded Ein Heldenleben by Strauss under Mengelberg (1928, on the C trumpet), and toured Europe with Toscanini in 1930. Glantz remained in the NYP until 1942, when he was invited to play first trumpet in the NBC Symphony under Arturo Toscanini. During his tenure with the NBC Symphony (1942 until the disbanding of the orchestra upon Toscanini's death in 1954), Glantz was the undisputed king of orchestral trumpeters.

A portrait of Glantz once appeared in Life magazine with the caption: Trumpeter Harry Glantz of the NBC Symphony is the champion of the U.S. symphonic trumpeters. Though born in Russia, he was trained in the U.S. He is noted for his large, brilliant tone and tremendous agility in playing rapid passages. Glantz also played with André Kostelanetz, the Dave Rubinoff Radio Show, and Pablo Casals in Puerto Rico (1958). He can be seen playing in a pit orchestra in the film, Burleske (Paramount, 1930) along with trumpeter Benny Baker and trombonist Sam Lewis, as well as in Hymn of All Nations with the NBC Orchestra under Toscanini.

Glantz published two articles—"Trends in Trumpet Playing" (Symphony magazine, Oct. 1951) and "Trumpet Player—Or Artist?" (Symphony, Feb. 1953). He also recorded all of the US Army bugle calls on a disc for RCA that was issued to army posts during World War II. He preferred to play the B-flat trumpet, but utilized the C trumpet on occasion. He claimed, "Other trumpets did not interest me at all." Louis Davidson said that Glantz couldn't play the high-pitched trumpet in F, and that he never played the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach. This is not quite true, however, since the New York Times reported on November 22, 1926 that Glantz had performed this work the night before, together with Saint-Saëns's Septet, in the ballroom of the Hotel Plaza with the New York Chamber Music Society. Furthermore, Olin Downes in the same newspaper reported that Glantz had performed the B Minor Mass with the Bach Cantata Club on May 2, 1928 "on a small trumpet especially designed for the purpose."

Glantz was a well-respected musician and man. He and Toscanini had a great rapport and respect for each other, but this was put to the test during a rehearsal with the New York Philharmonic when the maestro became upset at Glantz for being insubordinate (the incident actually involved another member of the section), and asked him to leave the rehearsal. As Glantz left the stage, he uttered the historic words, The trouble with you, Maestro, is you don't know how to handle men. Despite their argument, Toscanini welcomed Glantz to the concert that evening with open arms, and gave him a quick kiss on the cheek.

After leaving the NBC Symphony in 1954, Glantz became very involved in teaching, and it seemed that nearly every trumpeter wanted to study with him. Among his hundreds of students were Bernard Adelstein, Norbert Carnovale, David Zauder, Frank Kaderabek, Bernie Glow, Charlie Spivak, Alfred Weissman, and Charles Colin. He continued teaching after moving to Florida in 1954. In 1972, he assumed duties as professor of trumpet at the University of Miami where he taught until his death in 1982. He was replaced by Gilbert Johnson, former principal trumpet of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Glantz was posthumously awarded the Honorary Award by the International Trumpet Guild.

Bibl.: Davidson, Louis. Trumpet Profiles (self-published, 1975); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); various authors. "Harry Glantz: The Golden Age of Trumpet" (New York Brass Conference For Scholarships, 1978); "Harry Glantz" (www.windsongpress.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom with extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Photos: Glantz with Arturo Toscanini. Trumpet section of the New York Philharmonic: Harry Glantz, William Vacchiano, and Nathan Prager.

Glasel, John ("Johnny") [Jonathan Samuel] (b. New York, New York, June 11, 1930). American trumpeter. Glasel attended Yale University during the early 1950s, studying with Robert Nagel. After graduating, Glasel played in the New Haven Symphony Orchestra, and freelanced as a versatile classical and jazz musician. Additionally, he has studied with Roger Voisin (seven months), Carmine Caruso (1953), Murray Karpilovsky, Maurice Grupp, and William Vacchiano.

Glasel performed with Bob Wilber's jazz groups, The Wild Cats, and The Six (1945-1948, 1954-56). He recorded with Sidney Bechet, and was a charter member of the New York Brass Quintet (1954-61), formed by Robert Nagel and Harvey Phillips. In addition, Glasel performed and recorded with Gil Evans, Bill Russo (1959), Frank Sinatra (1980-81), John Denver, Astrud Gilberto, and Ray McKinley's Glenn Miller Tribute Orchestra (1956). He was also busy as a session player in New York, recording hundreds of jingles, television and film soundtracks, and backing dozens of jazz and pop artists. He played in numerous pit orchestras for Broadway shows and at Radio City Music Hall.

As leader, Glasel released four albums, Jazz Sessions (Paramount), Free Fall (Columbia), Westchester Workshop (Fresh Sounds), and The John Glasel Brasstet. He published several Baroque transcriptions for brass quintet, plus Relaxation Techniques, Bks. 1-3 (Chamber Music Library). He can also be heard on several early New York Brass Quintet recordings.

Glasel was the president (1983-92) of Local 802, the largest musicians' union of the American Federation of Musicians (over 17,000 members in NYC), and was also the trustee of the union's pension fund. Now retired from music, he is currently the secretary of Health Care for All/NJ, and was appointed to the New Jersey Health Care Access Study Commission by Governor Jon Corzine.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "About John Glasel" (http://blog.nj/njv_john_glasel/about.html).

Gleissle [Gleisle, Gleißle], Walter (b. Mannheim, Germany, Oct. 9, 1919; d. Leonberg, Germany, Dec. 21, 1961). German trumpeter. Gleissle first learned to be a brass instrument maker, passing his exam with distinction. During this period he was a private student of Kurt Müller (principal trumpet in the Mannheim State Theater). After surviving World War II in an air force band, he became a leading classical trumpeter in Germany, but was also comfortable in jazz and pop settings. He was principal trumpet of the Südwestfunk Radio Orchestra (SWF) in Koblenz/Kaiserslautern (1948-51) before joining the Symphony Orchestra of the Südwestfunk in Baden-Baden (1951-61).

Gleissle is best known for his fifteen recordings of Baroque and Classical trumpet concertos—mostly the cantatas by Bach. In addition to his recordings of the Haydn Trumpet Concerto in E-flat (with the Stuttgart Pro Musica on the Vox label) and Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto in F (1960 on Victor), Gleissle also recorded at the SWF Radio pieces such as Hungarian Fantasy by Franz Hauck, Rhapsody by Harry James, Carnival of Venice by Del Staigers, and the Concerto by Wladimir Rosenberg [Wal-Berg]. Tragically, he was killed in an automobile accident when the car he was riding in slid off an icy road while returning home from a concert in Stuttgart. He had just performed Bach's Christmas Oratorio. He was forty-two years old. He was the brother-in-law of the noted trumpet player Reinhold Lösch. His son Helmut is also a trumpet player.

Bibl.: Gleissle, Helmut. "Walter Gleissle My Father" (Brass Bulletin, no. 117, I/2002); Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "Walter Gleissle" (Brass Bulletin, no. 105, I/1999); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Glickstein, David [D. Luckstone] (b. c1903; d. after 1941). American trumpeter. Glickstein was only sixteen when he became principal trumpet of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra in 1919-20. He later held a quick succession of principal orchestra jobs: New York Philharmonic (1920-21), Cleveland Orchestra (1921-22), New York City Symphony (1922-23), and Cincinnati Symphony (1923-24). He performed Mottl's arrangement of Bach's Second Brandenburg Concerto in 1920, and again in October 1938 with the NBC Symphony under Maestro Arturo Toscanini. He also played with the bands of John Philip Sousa, Arthur Pryor, and Edwin Franko Goldman (the latter in 1921).

Glickstein was a talented and versatile player who later played third trumpet (in the section with Harry Glantz) in the New York Philharmonic (1926-27) and in the NBC Symphony under Toscanini (1937-41). He became famous as a studio player during the 1930s in B. A. Rolfe's Lucky Strike Orchestra, at the Roxy Theater, and finally in the Hollywood studios. He played a Conn 40B "Connqueror-model" trumpet during the 1930s.

Bibl.: Clark, Keith. "The Beginning of a Legend: The Young Mr. Glantz and His Contemporaries" (New York Brass Conference for Scholarships, 1978); Thornton, Mary. "Trumpet Players of the Cleveland Orchestra 1918-1993: An Addendium" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1994); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Glogow, Stan [Krystian Stanislav Glogowski] (b. Kraków, Poland, Oct. 24, 1947). Polish trumpeter. Glogow's family immigrated to Germany in 1957. At age fifteen, Glogow began playing the trumpet guided by his father, a former classical trumpet player in Kraków. Glogow later studied with Stan Germanistik.

Glogow is a popular Dixieland player and television artist with his own band, and has performed with Peter Herbolzheimer, the Dutch Swing College Band, and Hugo Strasser. Some of his albums include Trumpet Romance (1997), Dreams 4 Two (2001), and 'S Wonderful (2002).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Glover, Stephen ("Steve") L. (b. Portsmouth, Virginia, Aug. 6, 1947). American trumpeter. Glover grew up in Chesapeake, Virginia. He began playing cornet at age eleven (1958); his first teachers were Robert Martin and Richard Dill. After graduating from Great Bridge High School in 1965, he earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1972, studying with John F. Sawyer at the George Peabody College of Music at Vanderbilt University, and a master of arts degree there in 1973. He served in the Continental Army Command Band in Ft. Monroe, Virginia, from 1966 to 1968.

Glover founded The Brass Press publishing company in Nashville, Tennessee, in 1970, which he owned and operated until 1989; he sold it to Editions BIM in Switzerland in 1999. He published over 160 editions of trumpet and brass music, including a facsimile of Girolamo Fantini's Modo per imparare a sonare de tromba (Method for Learning to Play the Trumpet) and an English translation of Johann Ernst Altenburg's Versuch einer Anleitung zur heroisch-musikalischen Trompeter-und Pauker-Kunst (Essay on an Introduction to the Heroic and Musical Trumpeters' and Kettle-drummers' Art).

Glover was the founding editor of the International Trumpet Guild Newsletter and Journal in 1976-78, served as editor in 1989-90 and 1996-99, designed the ITG logo, and created the first ITG website in 1996. He was a member of the ITG Board of Directors in 1976-82 and 1996-99, and did the typesetting, layout, and design for the ITG Journal from 1976 to 2001, as well as serving as its advertising manager. In 2001, he received the ITG Award of Merit for outstanding service to the trumpet world.

Glover developed a second career in 1990 as a grant-writing specialist. He was Volume Manager for Honeywell's Space and Strategic Division (1990-93), Volume Manager for E Systems Raytheon (1994-95), and worked for other firms including Lockheed Martin (1997), Litton Avondale Industries (1999), Lucient Technology (2000), Lend Lease Actus (2001), Health Net Federal Services (2002-03), General Dynamics (2003), Missier Dowty USA (2003), Northrop Grumman (2004), and Shipley Associates (1997-2005).

Glover established the Stephen L. Glover/The Brass Press Archive through Summit Brass, Inc. in honor of his daughter, Sherri Glover (1969-2003), who was killed in a motorcycle accident by a drunk driver. The collection contains hundreds of Baroque and Classical music manuscript copies, and numerous research materials concerning the history and repertoire for brass.

Glover's hobbies include music, chess, basketball, photography, and computers.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuives & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Stephen L. Glover" (http://steveglover07.com); "Stephen L. Glover" (http://steveglover07.com/Stephen%20L%20Glover%20Resume%202007.htm); personal interview, Oct. 5, 2011.

Photo credit: Vera H. Olcott, courtesy of the International Trumpet Guild.

Glow, Bernie (b. New York, New York, 1926; d. Manhasset, Long Island, New York, May 8, 1982). American trumpeter. During the 1950-1970s, Bernie Glow was perhaps the most often heard trumpet player in America. He recorded hundreds of television commercials, movie soundtracks, radio jingles, television shows, and record albums as a backup artist. Glow was the leading studio trumpeter on the East Coast, equaled only by Mannie Klein on the West Coast.

Glow began playing trumpet at age nine. His grandfather knew the famous Max Schlossberg of the New York Philharmonic, and arranged for young Bernie to take lessons from him. Because of Schlossberg's age and failing health, he no longer normally accepted beginning students, but the personal connection to Bernie's grandfather persuaded him to accept Bernie as a student. After Schlossberg's death, Glow studied with two other greats of the trumpet world: Harry Glantz and Nat Prager. While in high school, Glow was influenced by Snooky Young and Billy Butterfield. He developed his early jazz and big band skills while playing with several high school friends who would later become famous musicians—Stan Getz, Tiny Khan, Shorty Rogers, and George Washington Jr.

At age sixteen, Glow dropped out of school in order to go on the road with the Richard Himber Orchestra. Two years later, he played with Xavier Cugat's band and the Raymond Scott orchestra on CBS Radio. In 1945, he joined Artie Shaw's band, then Boyd Raeburn's band. In 1948, he went on the road with Woody Herman's Second Herd. In the following year at the age of twenty-three, Glow became a leading freelance musician and studio player in New York City. From 1953 through the late 1970s, Glow was the number one trumpeter with the NBC and CBS studio orchestras, and performed a wide variety of musical styles each day.

Glow played in backup bands for many giants of the music world, and recorded hundreds of hit records for artists such as Dionne Warwick, Aretha Franklin, Janis Ian, Astrud Gilberto, Ray Conniff, Benny Goodman, Frank Sinatra, J.J. Johnson, Sarah Vaughan, Tony Bennett, Peter Nero, Perry Como, The Pascals, Kay Starr, Wes Montgomery, Billy Eckstine, Buddy Greco, Dizzy Gillespie, George Benson, B.B. King, Wilson Pickett, Laura Nyro, Billie Holiday, Mel Tormé, The McGuire Sisters, Bob Brookmeyer, Tito Puente, Lovin' Spoonful, Gato Barbieri, and Grover Washington Jr. Some of the recordings were hits, including Sketches of Spain (1959), Miles Ahead (1957), Porgy and Bess (1958), and Queen Nights (1962). He was also a regular lead player for several television shows including The Milton Berle Show, The Tonight Show, and The Perry Como Show.

Glow was a very humble person who earned the respect of every trumpet player in the world. In 1969, New Yorker magazine featured Glow in an article that provides much insight into the world of studio and lead trumpet playing. Marvin Stamm, one of today's leading New York studio trumpeters, said of Glow, For me, he was absolutely the greatest.

Glow died in May of 1982 at the young age of fifty-six from an extremely rare blood disorder. He was survived by his wife Gail, and three daughters.

Bibl.: Chadbourne, Eugene. "Bernie Glow" (All Music Guide); Whitworth, William. "Bernie Glow—Lead Player" (New Yorker, Dec. 10, 1969); "Bernie Glow, 56, Trumpeter on the Stage, Radio and TV" (New York Times, May 10, 1982).

Goetting, R. Chandler (b. Mascalero, New Mexico, c1939). American trumpeter. Goetting, a Laguna-Caddo Indian, grew up in Amarillo, Texas. He graduated from Amarillo High School in 1957, spending his last two summers of high school at the National Music Camp in Interlochen, Michigan. He studied engineering at the University of New Mexico and Michigan State University before attending The Juilliard School on scholarship where he studied with William Vacchiano for two years. While in New York, he was a 1963 winner of the Young Concert Artists soloist program, and performed offstage parts with the Metropolitan Opera. He was also a member of the American Symphony Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski, and participated in performances of Gershwin's Porgy and Bess with the New York City Opera.

Goetting became one of the world's leading orchestral trumpeters. He was principal of the Kansas City Philharmonic from 1964 to 1966, principal of the St. Louis Symphony Orchestra from 1966 to 1972, principal of the Santa Fe Opera Orchestra during the summers of 1966-68 and 1970-75, and played one summer with the Casals Festival Orchestra. The majority of his career, however, was as principal of the Symphony Orchestra of the Bavarian Radio in Munich, Germany. He took lessons from Maurice André, learned to play the Baroque (valveless) trumpet, and performed on occasion with the Edward Tarr Trumpet Ensemble, Munich Bach Orchestra, Musica Rinata Mümnchen, and Munich Pro Arte. He was also an active soloist throughout Europe between 1975 and 2000.

Goetting and his wife Susan (Jenkins) Goetting (an oboe and English horn player in the Munich Philharmonic) retired to the rural town of Amherst, Wisconsin, where they enjoy horses, cycling, skiing, and mountain climbing.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Reaban, Derek. "R. Chandler Goetting" (www.trumpetherald.com/forum/viewtopic.php?t=31039&start=7).

Goeyens, Alphonse (b. Brussels, Belgium, Jan. 5, 1867; d. Molenbeek-St. Jean, Belgium, Apr. 17, 1950). Belgian trumpeter. Goeyens was the next performer after Charlier to play Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in the high (written) octave. He first performed it on February 23, 1902 on a soprano F trumpet built by the Brussels firm, Mahillon. He performed it again in 1906 or 1907 on a piccolo B-flat trumpet.

Goeyens graduated from the royal conservatory of Brussels in 1880, and in 1889 became the trumpet professor there until 1923. In 1890, Goeyens received the Order of the Chevalier de Léopold. In 1891, he married Blanche Platteil from Schaebeek (b. 1872).In 1897 Gevaert, the conservatory director, gave him an administrative position so that he could specialize in the high register.

In 1909 and 1910, his class contained seven and eight students, respectively. The instructional methods in use in his class for the degré initial were by Arban, Dauverné, Pietzsch, and Carl Höhne, as well as twenty-four vocalizes by Marchesi. For the degré moyen, etudes by Duhem and Demersseman, as well as 30 petits préludes and twenty two-part inventions by Bach (transcribed by Sauveur from harpsichord works) and excerpts from old and modern works were required, as well as concertos by J. Haydn and Hertel. It was Goeyens who in 1929 made the first published edition of the Haydn concerto piano reduction. In addition, Goeyens seems to have been the first to require his advanced students to play the piccolo trumpet in high F or B-flat. Its repertoire included the Fantini method (1638), excerpts from works of Bach and Handel, and the concerto by Leopold Mozart.

Bibl.: Annuaire du Conservatoire royal de musique de Bruxelles (Brussels, 1910); Dahlqvist, Reine. Bidrag till trumpeten ach trumpetspelets historia (PhD. Diss., Gothenburg University, 1988), 2 vols.; Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

Goff, Bryan (b. Joplin, Missouri, Aug. 10, 1944). American trumpeter. Goff grew up in Boulder, Colorado. After studying with Frank W. Baird, and graduating from Boulder High School in 1962, he enrolled at the University of Colorado where he continued to study with Baird, earning bachelor of music education (1966) and master of music (1968) degrees. He became a member of the US Air Force Academy Band in Colorado Springs in 1968, serving until 1972.

Goff became professor of trumpet at Florida State University in 1974. He performed with the Tallahasee Symphony Orchestra and the FSU Brass Quintet, and built a strong studio of students during his thirty-five years there. Among his many former students are Jerry Bryant, Etienne Charles, Bryan DePoy, Jennifer Dearden, John Ellis, Luis Engelke, Mark Geatches, Steven Everett, Matthew Inkster, Greg Jones, Anthony Kirkland, Karl Mailand, Michael Miles, Christopher Moore, Joseph Parisi, David Reynolds, William Richardson, Christopher Sala, Carolyn Sanders, David Spencer, William Takacs, Britton Theurer, Bradley Ulrich, and David Ware.

Taking a strong interest in the (valveless) Baroque trumpet, Goff studied in Germany with Dr. Edward H. Tarr in 1988, and in Tallahassee, Florida, in 1991 when Tarr was a guest lecturer at FSU. Goff was also heavily involved with the International Trumpet Guild, serving as treasurer from 1981 to 1997. He is also a past president of the National Association of College Wind and Percussion Instructors (NACWAPI).

Retired in 2009, Goff became Professor Emeritus at FSU. During his career, he was named the Robert Braunagel Professor of Music and was also awarded the Florida State University TIP Award for excellence in teaching, and the Award of Merit from the International Trumpet Guild.

Goff and his wife Nancy, a junior high band director and elementary music teacher, have a daughter Jennifer (b. 1972). His hobbies include gourmet cooking, golf, and traveling.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott), Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bryan Goff" (http://mailer.fsu.edu/~bgoff/b.htm); personal interview, May 20, 2011.

Goguen, Gerald J. (b. Rumford, Maine, 1925; d. Walpole, New Hampshire, July 28, 2002). American trumpeter. Goguen began playing the trumpet as a child in Fitchburg, Massachusetts. After high school, he enlisted in the Army, and served for three years during World War II in various military bands. An officer took a liking to his playing, and saw to it that Goguen stayed in the United States during the war. After his military duties, he attended the New England Conservatory under the G.I. Bill of Rights, studying with Georges Mager and Marcel Lafosse (1947-51).

Goguen's first symphony job was with the Central Florida Symphony, but after two years there, he won a position as fourth trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, a position he held from 1952 to 1978. He taught at the New England Conservatory from 1964 to 1979, and performed and recorded with the New England Brass Ensemble. He recorded an album with E. Power Biggs and Armando Ghitalla, Glorious Sound of Brass (1962).

After his retirement from playing the trumpet in 1979, Goguen devoted his energies to collecting classic MG sports cars; his 27 MGs formed the basis of the Westminster (Vermont) MG Car Museum, which he established in 1984. He also owned and operated a successful MG mail order parts business, and was a ski instructor at several resorts in Vermont. He died of a brain tumor at the age of seventy-seven.

Bibl.: Yeo, Douglas. "Trumpet Players of the Boston Symphony" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1990); "Gerald Goguen, 77, BSO Trumpet Player" (The Boston Globe, Aug. 1, 2002); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Goldie, Don [Donald Elliott Goldfield] (b. Newark, New Jersey, Feb. 5, 1930; d. Miami, Florida, Nov. 19, 1995). American trumpeter. Goldie's father, Harry "Goldie" Goldfield, was a trumpet player in Paul Whiteman's orchestra for fifteen years (replacing Henry Busse). His mother, Claire St. Claire, was a concert pianist who played jazz on the side. As a child, Don studied violin, piano, and trumpet, but specialized in trumpet starting at the age of ten. By the time he was fourteen, he was playing in his father's band, and in 1944 played with Paul Whiteman.

Goldie earned a scholarship to the New York Military Academy, and later studied trumpet with Nat Prager of the New York Philharmonic, winning a talent award on Arthur Godfrey's Talent Scouts Show. He served in the Army (1951-54), and upon discharge played with Joe Mooney (1955-59), Tony Parenti (1957), Neal Hefti, Buddy Rich, and Gene Krupa. His excellent technical skills and virtuosic style of playing made him a leading soloist in Jack Teagarden's last band (1959-63).

After Teagarden died in 1964, Goldie became a studio player and trumpeter on Jackie Gleason's mood recordings. He recorded a great deal for Chess/RCA, Jazzology, and his own label called Jazz Forum. He recorded eleven albums, some of which are Trumpet Calliente (Chess/Argo), Brilliant! (Chess/Argo) and Don Goldie's Jazz Express (Jazzology).

Goldie moved to Miami, Florida, in the mid 1960s and continued playing at hotels and clubs. He recorded throughout the 1970s and early 1980s (his last album was in 1982), but diabetes gradually brought about a decline in his playing, forcing his retirement from the trumpet in the late 1980s. Although he performed as a singer (with an excellent impersonation of Louis Armstrong), Goldie became depressed and committed suicide on November 19, 1995 at the age of sixty-five.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Don Goldie" (www.allaboutjazz.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Goldman, Edwin Franko (b. Louisville, Kentucky, Jan. 1, 1878; d. New York, New York, Feb. 21, 1956). American cornetist, conductor, and composer. Goldman was the son of David Henry and Selma Franko Goldman. The family lived in Louisville (Kentucky), Evansville (Indiana), and Terre Haute (Indiana). His father died in Terre Haute when Goldman was eight years old, and in 1887 his mother moved him and her four children from a previous marriage (Edwin, Mayer, Irma, and Alfred) to New York City.

At the age of nine, Goldman studied cornet with George Wiegand at the Hebrew Orphan Asylum. At age eleven, he won a scholarship to attend the National Conservatory of Music in New York City where he studied composition with Anton Dvořák, and cornet with Jules Levy and Carl Sohst. A year later, he became first cornet in the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra where he played from 1899 to 1909.

Goldman founded the New York Military Band in 1911 and renamed it the Goldman Band in 1918. They performed a series of concerts in Central Park, at The Green at Columbia University, and at other venues in the city. They were often featured on the radio as well.

Goldman was prolific. He composed Scherzo for cornet and concert band, Jupiter and Espanita for cornet and brass band, and Air and Variation for cornet trio. In addition, he wrote Foundation to Cornet and Trumpet Playing (1914), Daily Embouchure Studies, and Practical Studies for Cornet. With Walter M. Smith, he coedited Arban's Method (1936, C. Fischer) and for the same publisher, edited the 36 Celebrated Studies by Bousquet (1938). His band compositions number over 150 and include marches such as On the Mall, Boy Scouts of America, Onward-Upward, The Children's March, Kentucky March, The Interlochen Bowl, Bugles and Drums, Jubilee March, and March Illinois. His manuscripts are now in the library of the University of Iowa. His unpublished autobiography, Facing the Music, is in the Library of Congress.

Goldman received three Honorary Doctorate degrees and a star on Hollywood's Walk of Fame. The Goldman band shell in Allentown, Pennsylvania's West Park is named in his honor (Goldman was the first guest conductor there in 1927.) He founded the American Bandmasters Association in 1929 and became its second Honorary Life President after John Philip Sousa. He was known for his congenial personality and dedication to music. His son Richard Franko Goldman is a composer.

Bibl.: Jolly, Kirby R. Edwin Franko Goldman and the Goldman Band (diss. New York University, 1971); "Edwin Franko Goldman." (Oxford Music Online); Laplace, Michel. Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Goloshchokin [Goloshekin], David (b. Moscow, Russia, June 10, 1944). Russian trumpeter, flughornist, violinist, vibraphonist, pianist, and tenor saxophonist. Goloshchokin, a multitalented jazz musician, attended the Leningrad Conservatory where he learned to play a variety of instruments, arrange, and lead a jazz band. He once played with Duke Ellington (1971), and in 1989 founded the St. Petersburg Philharmonic Jazz, which has become one of the most prominent jazz groups in Russia. He has released fifteen LP albums and ten CDs, and has toured Germany, Cuba, Portugal, Finland, Sweden, Norway, Poland, and the United States. While in the U.S. in 1989, he participated in a jazz group that appeared on The Tonight Show with Johnny Carson in Los Angeles. He was given the honor of the title of People's Artist of Russia in 2000.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gonella, Nat[haniel Charles] (b. London, England, Mar. 7, 1908; d. Gosport, Hampshire, England, Aug. 6, 1998). British trumpeter. Gonella was one of seven children in his family. His father drove a hansom cab and then become one of the first of London's motorized taxi drivers. He died in 1915, when Nat was six years old. Nat's mother was unable to support the large family, and so placed him and two of his siblings in an orphanage. Despite his dislike for its school, the orphanage had a brass band, in which Nat played drums at the age of nine. He soon began playing the trumpet, and also learned to play the violin and clarinet. As a boy, he worked in various theater bands, most notably with Archie Pitt's Busby Boys for four years. He played violin, clarinet, and trumpet in Bob Dryden's Louisville Band (1928-29) and with Archie Alexander (1929). When he joined Billy Cotton's band (1929-30), he was a featured trumpet soloist, and recorded with it. From that point on, he played trumpet exclusively, but also sang at times. Nat's brother Bruts was also a trumpeter. In 1930, Nat and Betty Godecharle were married, but were divorced in 1936.

Louis Armstrong was a big influence on Gonella whose style of playing and singing closely imitated Armstrong, resulting in his becoming known as the "Louis Armstrong of England." He first heard Armstrong in concert in July of 1932 at the London Palladium. When Armstrong left his trumpet at the Boosey & Hawkes music store for cleaning, Gonella begged the storeowner to allow him to return it to Armstrong at his hotel. When Armstrong learned of Gonella's scheme and interest in his music, the two became friends.

Gonella played with Roy Fox (1931-32), Ray Noble (on and off from 1931-34), and Lew Stone (1932-35). He formed his own band called the Georgians (the name stemming from his popular hit solo, Georgia On My Mind, with Cotton's band). Gonella's band reached great popularity and made Gonella a star throughout England. He made fifty-seven recordings in 1936, and sixty-four in the following year.

Gonella visited the United States in 1939, and recorded with Jack Kirby's Sextet. Gonella and Stella Moya were married in 1940, and returned to England where he joined the British Army in 1941, playing in several service bands in North Africa, Sicily, and Italy, until the summer of 1945 when he was discharged. After World War II, Gonella's popularity declined, and he played less than before. He tried to form a new band and play bebop, but was unsuccessful. Most of his performing during the late 1940s through the 1950s was as a solo artist in variety shows. Gonella's marriage to Stella broke up in 1946. Some years later, he married a third wife, Dorothy Collins.

In 1959, Gonella formed the New Georgian Jazz Band that had some success during the 1960s and '70s. He appeared as the subject of a This is Your Life television program in 1959. He regained some of his previous popularity when he released three albums in 1975. However, ill health during his late '60s forced him to stop playing the trumpet, although he occasionally sang.

Some of Gonella's best alums include Crazy Valves (ASV), Mister Rhythm Man (EMI), Yeah Man (Harlequin), and How'm I Doin'? (Old Bean). He appeared in the 1937 film, Sing As You Swing, and a biography of him called Georgia On My Mind was written by Ron Brown and Cyril Brown, and published in 1985. A television show titled Fifty Years of Nat Gonella was broadcast throughout England in 1984. In 1994, the city of Lancashire renamed the square in front of the town hall the Nat Gonella Square. Gonella had one daughter (from his first marriage).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Voce, Steve. "Obituary: Nat Gonella" (www.independent.co.uk/arts-entertainment/obituary-nat-gonella-1170238.html); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

González, Dennis [Heinasirkda] (b. Abilene, Texas, Aug. 15, 1954). American trumpeter. González comes from a musical family, and began playing piano when he was very young, but switched to trumpet at age eleven. He studied music at the University of Kansas, The Ohio State University, and Arkansas State University, learning to play bass clarinet, soprano sax, alto sax, baritone sax, bass sax, drums, and trombone, as well as exotic instruments such as tabla, musette, melodica, and zither.

González moved to Dallas, Texas, in 1977 where he began teaching in the public schools. He has kept an active role in the national and international jazz scene by performing at numerous festivals and recording for labels such as Silkheart, Music & Arts, Clean Feed, Koch Jazz, Konnex, Gowi, Brut, 8th Harmonic Breakdown, and his own label, Daagnim (Dallas Association for Avant-Garde and Neo-Impressionist Music). His style of playing is similar to that of pocket trumpeter Don Cherry.

In 1978, González began hosting a radio show called Miles Out for KERA-FM in Dallas, which was nationally syndicated on National Public Radio. He continued the program for twenty-one years, leaving only because the station switched to talk radio. González also produced a show for the University of North Texas's KNTU-FM.

González has recorded with dozens of leading jazz artists including Charles Brackeen, Oliver Lake, Cecil Taylor, Andrew Cyrille, Frank Lowe, Max Roach, George Cartwright, Mark Helias, Ellery Eskelin, Ahmed Abdullah, Roy Hargrove, Malachy Favors, and Fred Hopkins. Among his albums are Stefan (Silkheart), Namesake (Silkheart), Catechism (Music & Arts), Debenge-Debenge (Silkheart), The Earth and the Heart (Music & Arts), Bannar (Silkheart), and Worshippers Come Nigh (Silkheart).

For a few years during the late 1990s, González stopped performing. However, in 2001 he made a comeback when he formed Yells at Eels with his sons Aaron (a bassist) and Stefan (a drummer and vibes player). The trio continues to perform, and has released record albums that include Before Today.

Besides being a musician, González has written and published two books of poems, Xi and Cu. He is fluent in six languages and has taught jazz workshops at many Dallas-area colleges, as well as in Slovenia. He is also a visual artist and has had many showings of his art. González currently teaches at North Dallas High School and Spence Middle School.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Dennis González" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Dennis González" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Gonzalez, Jerry [Jr.] (b. Bronx, New York, June 5, 1949). American trumpeter and percussionist. Gonzalez's father was a jazz drummer, and his mother sang in a choir. Gonzalez began playing the trumpet at age twelve after being inspired by jazz percussionist Mongo Santamaría. His early trumpet influences were Miles Davis and Dizzy Gillespie.

Gonzalez attended New York City's Music and Art High School (1964-67), and studied trumpet and percussion at the New York College of Music and at New York University. He became a close friend of classmate Kenny Dorham, and worked with Pupi Legarreta, Monguito Santamaría (Mongo's son), the Beach Boys, and Dizzy Gillespie. (Gonzalez played conga drums on Gillespie's Portrait of Jenny album in 1970).

During the 1970s and '80s, Gonzalez performed with many of New York's finest jazz musicians including Eddie Palmieri, Manny Oquendo, Clifford Thornton, Clark Terry, Chocolate Armenteros (1970s), Machito, Ray Barretto, Tito Puente, Paquito D'Rivera, Tony Williams, Archie Shepp, Joe Chambers, Woody Shaw, Kirk Lightsey, Chico O'Farrill, McCoy Tyner, Franco Ambrosetti, Bob Belden, Don Byron, James Williams, Tito Rodriguez, Art Blakey, Hilton Ruiz, and Max Roach. He also led his own group, Ya Yo Me Cure.

Gonzalez is best known for his performances and recordings with his Fort Apache Band, a group that mixes Latin rhythms with post bebop jazz. Among Gonzalez's albums are Fire Dance (Milestone), Pensativo (Milestone), Earthdance (Sunnyside), Rumba Para Monk (Sunnyside), Jerry Gonzalez and the Fort Apache Band (Milestone), Ya Yo Me Cure (American Clave/Pangaca), Obtala (Enja), Molindo Café (Sunnyside), Crossroads (Milestone), Y los Pirates del Flamengo (Lola), and Rumba Buhaina (Random Chance). He also appears in a film documentary about Latin jazz called Calle 54 (2000). His Apache band won Downbeat magazine's readers' and critics' polls for "The Beyond Group of the Year" in 1995 and 1996, "Best Jazz Group" in Playboy magazine's readers' poll in 1997, and was selected as the "Best Latin Band" for the New York Jazz Awards in 1997.

Gonzalez moved to Madrid, Spain in 2000. He continues to be a leading Latin jazz performer on trumpet and percussion.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Jerry Gonzalez" (www.last.fm/music/Jerry+Gonzalez/+wiki).

Goodchild, Paul William Dominic (b. Sydney, Australia, Aug. 23, 1960). Australian trumpeter. Goodchild began playing the trumpet at age three under the guidance of his father Cliff, former principal tuba with the Sydney Symphony, and as a child, also played piano and percussion. His other early trumpet teachers were Lew Campbell, Norm Harris, and Ernest Llewellyn. He lists his mentors as John Robertson and Gordon Webb.

Goodchild's progress playing the trumpet was extraordinary. After graduating from Waverley College (a high school) in 1978, he immediately toured Australia with the Bolshoi Ballet Orchestra as principal trumpet; he also performed with the Australian Opera during that same year. At age eighteen, he became the third trumpet of the Sydney Symphony Orchestra, and since 1988 has served as associate principal trumpet. Throughout the 1990s, Goodchild taught as an adjunct faculty member at the Sydney Conservatory of Music. He regularly performs with the Australian Chamber Orchestra, Australian Ensemble, Sydney Brass (of which he is artistic director), and the Waverley Bondi Beach Band (of which he is conductor). He has served as a guest lecturer at the Newcastle and Woollongong conservatories, as well as at music camps with Pan Pacific and Youth Music Australia. With his group, Sydney Brass, Goodchild has been an artist-in-residence at the Hale School in Perth and the Shenyang Conservatory in China. Among his best-known students is David Elton (principal trumpet of West Australian Symphony Orchestra). Goodchild also serves as principal trumpet of several of Sydney's freelance orchestras including the Sydney Philharmonia Orchestra, Sydney Opera House Orchestra, Sydney Scoring Orchestra, and Sydney Bach Orchestra. In addition, he often performs with the Chamber Soloists of Sydney and the Collegium Musicum at The University of New South Wales.

Goodchild is considered to be one of Australia's finest soloists and chamber musicians. He has released a CD titled Mixed Dozen on the 1M1 Records label that includes recital works by Honegger, Martinů, Hindemith, Ibert, Bernstein, and others. He has also recorded Sydney Brass Plays Stanhope for the Tall Poppies label. He is a champion of the trumpet works by Australian composer Alan Holley (b. 1954).

Goodchild and his wife Yvette have been married since 1998, and have a son Morley (b. 2002), and a daughter Alana (b. 2004). His hobbies include wine tasting, cooking, cricket, golf, and playing obscure chamber music.

Bibl.: Keane, Greg. "Notes" to CD Mixed Dozen (1M1 Records); "Paul Goodchild" (www.sydneysymphony.com); personal interview, July 9, 2010.

Goode, Brad (b. Chicago, Illinois, Oct.10, 1963). American trumpeter. Goode began playing guitar and violin at an early age, but switched to trumpet at the age of eleven. At age fourteen his family moved to East Lansing, Michigan, where he also began playing the bass a year later. He began to play trumpet professionally while attending East Lansing High School, and in 1981 enrolled at the University of Kentucky, studying with Vincent DiMartino. Before graduating in 1985, he performed in many capacities in nearby Louisville, Cincinnati, Detroit, and Chicago.

Goode attended graduate school at DePaul University in Chicago as a bass major, and from 1986 to 1998, led his own jazz group. During the summers of 1985 and 1986, he performed in the Aspen Jazz Ensemble at the Aspen Music Festival. In 1997, he moved to Cincinnati to teach jazz at the University of Cincinnati, and for five years, was a member of the Columbus (Ohio) Jazz Orchestra. In 2004, he and his wife Carol Keeley moved to Boulder, Colorado, where he teaches jazz at the University of Colorado, and is an active freelance musician in the Denver area.

During his successful career, Goode has performed and recorded with numerous jazz musicians including Woody Herman (1990-96), Barrett Deems (1990-97), Ira Sullivan (tours), Eddie Harris, Red Rodney (1983), Joe Henderson, Lee Konitz, Al Grey, Jimmy Heath, and Alan Hood. As leader, he has recorded CDs such as Toy Trumpet (SteepleChase), Inside Chicago, Vols. 1-4 (SteepleChase), Shock of the New (Delmark), By Myself (SteepleChase), Hypnotic Suggestion (Delmark), Nature Boy (Delmark), Brad Goode (Sunlight), and Polytonal Dance Party (Origin). He has also recorded dozens of albums as a sideman. Goode is known for his burning solos and impressive high register. His hobbies include snow skiing, hiking, and snowshoeing.

Bibl.: Michel Laplace. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Brad Goode's official website: www.bradgoode.com; "Brad Goode" (http://music.colorado.edu/faculty/brad-goode).

Goodwin, Henry [Clay] (b. Columbia, South Carolina, Jan. 2, 1907; d. New York, New York, July 2, 1979). American trumpeter. Goodwin grew up in Washington, D.C. He began playing drums and then the tuba while in junior high school. He switched to the trumpet at the age of fifteen and soon played with Sam Taylor's School Band. He traveled to Europe in 1925 with the Claude Hopkins Orchestra that included the jazz sax player Sidney Bechet. It backed the show, Revue Nègre, featuring Josephine Baker (Paris and European tour). Goodwin also visited Argentina with Paul Wyer's group.

After Goodwin returned to the United States in the late 1920s, he settled in New York and began working with Elmer Snowden and Cliff Jackson's Krazy Kats, making his first recordings in 1930. In 1933, he returned to Europe with Lucky Millinder. Upon his return to the U.S., he played in the big bands of Willie Bryant, Charlie Johnson (1935-36), Cab Calloway (1936), Edgar Hayes (1937-40), and Kenny Clarke (1938).

After 1940, Goodwin played mostly in small groups including those of Sidney Bechet (1940-41), Cecil Scott (New York), Art Hodes (at Stuyvesant Casino, New York), Mezz Mezzrow (Nice Festival, 1948), Bob Wilber (1948-49), Jimmy Archey (1950-51), and Earl Hines (1956). He was active into the 1960s, mostly as a Dixieland player in the New York area.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Goodwin, James ("Jim") R. (b. Portland, Oregon, Mar. 16, 1944; d. Portland, Oregon, Apr. 19, 2009). American cornetist and trumpeter. Goodwin had no formal music training, but was a natural musician. He was influenced mostly by Louis Armstrong, Bix Beiderbecke, Red Allen, and Wild Bill Davison. Goodwin was a star baseball player in high school, and worked in his father's stock brokerage company. After high school, he joined the Oregon National Guard, and later moved to New York City to study finance by working on Wall Street, but his finance career was short-lived, and he returned to Portland to become a musician.

Goodwin's career began as a cornetist in Monte Ballou's (his godfather) Castle Jazz Band. In 1969, he moved to San Francisco where he worked as a Dixieland musician. He enjoyed watching the Oakland A's baseball team, and joined their pep band. In 1974, he toured Europe with Max Collie's Rhythm Aces. He lived for a while in Holland and married a Dutch artist, but the marriage did not last long. He returned to San Francisco, but in 1985 moved back to Portland.

Goodwin led a simple life, usually staying with friends or sleeping outdoors. He didn't smoke, use drugs, or tell off-color jokes, and owned no property other than a suitcase of clothing. He toured Europe annually, often departing with his cornet, a few pairs of underwear, a toothbrush, and forty dollars in his pocket. He enjoyed his freedom so much that he often turned down lucrative offers to travel with name bands. He did nothing to promote himself, and was better known in Europe than he was in America.

During his forty-year career, Goodwin performed with many of California's top jazz musicians, including Barry Martyn, Mannie Klein, Joe Venuti, and Phil Harris. He recorded a fine CD of cornet-piano duets in 1992, Dave Frishberg-Jim Goodwin—Double Play (Arbors). He was a popular musician and person with many friends and admirers: he offered his knowledge of business to others, helping establish the Portland Brewing Company (a microbrewery), and serving for a while on the board of directors of Congo Enterprises. For twenty-five years, he lived with his life partner, Retta Christie.

Late in life, Goodwin began to drink too much, and his health deteriorated. Having not been to a dentist in years, he lost one of his front teeth, and unable to play the cornet, performed on piano until he died at the age of sixty-five.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "James R. Goodwin Tribute" (http://jazzlives.wordpress.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gordon, Alexander [Aleksandr] Berngardovich (b. St Petersburg, Russia, Aug. 19, 1867; d. Leningrad, USSR, Nov. 12, 1942). Russian cornetist, trumpeter, conductor, and composer. Gordon studied at the St. Petersburg Conservatory with Wilhelm Wurm and Johann Gustav Metzdroff (Metsdorf), graduating in 1887. His first performing jobs were in various theater and summer orchestras in Helsinki from 1887 to 1889. He was awarded the position of principal trumpet in the Bolshoi Theater orchestra in Moscow on September 3, 1890, having evidently won out over Vassily Brandt, only because Brandt was late to the audition. [See humorous story in biography of Vasily Brandt.]

Gordon was principal trumpet with the Bolshoi orchestra from 1890 to 1895 (Brandt was principal cornet from 1890 to 1909.) He then worked mostly as a cornet soloist, was known for his beautiful, full tone, and received numerous medals for his fine playing. In 1895, Gordon was transferred to St. Petersburg where he played at the Théâtre Mariinsky as principal cornet from 1895 to 1912, and became Wurm's successor at the conservatory. He was made a full professor in 1912, and served as vice director of the conservatory orchestra department. He continued performing as a soloist and wind band conductor, and was a popular conductor of summer spa orchestras.

Gordon is considered an important teacher and one of the founders of the first Russian trumpet school. He and Brandt remained close friends and colleagues throughout their careers; Brandt dedicated his 34 Orchestral Etudes to him. Gordon composed several works for orchestra, as well as marches and dance music. He also wrote over two hundred etudes for trumpet and cornet.

Gordon taught at the St. Petersburg Conservatory until 1942 when he, along with Emile-Joseph Trognée and many others, died of starvation during the Siege of Leningrad.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press); Bolotin, Sergey. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians Performing on Wind Instruments (Leningrad, 1969); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gordon, Claude E[ugene] (b. Helena, Montana, Apr., 5, 1916; d. Big Bear Lake, California, May 16, 1996). American trumpeter. Gordon began playing the cornet at age five, and was a professional performer by age eight. His family was musical, and his father was a friend of the great cornetist Herbert L. Clarke. The family formed a small orchestra and became staff musicians for a northwest radio station. They also toured the northwest states and played at hotels and resorts. Claude graduated from Great Falls (Montana) High School.

Gordon moved to Los Angeles in 1936 to begin studying with Clarke, which continued until Clarke's death in 1945. Gordon then studied with Louis Maggio in Los Angeles for three years. He began performing as a freelance trumpeter, and played shows at the Earl Carrol Theatre and in the NBC and CBS studios under noted conductors such as Lud Gluskin, Leith Stevens, Paul Weston, and Erich Korngold. Then, he formed his own dance band in the late 1950s. In 1959, the Claude Gordon Orchestra competed against 183 bands from the United States and Canada, and won the American Federation of Musicians' dance band contest. They made a recording titled Claude Gordon at the Palladium. His studio trumpet work can also be heard today on reruns of older television shows on Nick at Nite and I Love Lucy starring Lucille Ball and Desi Arnaz. He also played for stars such as Johnny Mathis, Nat King Cole, and Frankie Laine.

Despite Gordon's success as a performer, he is primarily remembered as a legendary teacher. All of his methods are based on his studies with Louis Maggio and Herbert Clarke. The use of pedal tones is key to his development system. He gave thousands of private lessons including some by telephone and letter/taped correspondence. He published six trumpet study books: Systematic Approach to Daily Practice; Daily Trumpet Routines; Physical Approach to Elementary Brass Playing; Velocity Studies; Brass Playing is No Harder than Deep Breathing; Clarke-Gordon Technical Studies for Bass Clef. He also published an eighty-five-minute color video titled The Seven Natural Elements of Brass Playing. In addition, Carl Fischer published his editions of the methods of Arban and St. Jacome. His students are too numerous to list, but Ron W. Blomberg, Eric Bolvin, Paul Cacia, Matt Graves, Stan Mark, Bob O'Donnell, and Fred Sautter are among the most prominent ones.

Gordon was formally recognized when La Sierra University in Riverside, California, awarded him an Honorary Doctorate of Music and Letters degree in 1992. He died of cancer at his mountain home at Big Bear Lake east of Los Angeles on May 16, 1996. His wife Patty continues to sell his books and video through the Claude Gordon Music Enterprise.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bks. 1 & 2 (Schott); Claude Gordon Music Enterprise website: www.claudegordonmusic.com; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Gordon, David F[orbes] (b. Narragansett, Rhode Island, Oct. 2, 1976). American trumpeter. At age eight, Gordon began learning to play the trumpet from his father, John Gordon, who had studied with Ernest Hall in England. At age thirteen, David began studying with Nedo Pandolfi, and during his senior year at Narragansett High School, with William Vacchiano. After graduating in 1995, he enrolled at both Columbia University and The Juilliard School (1995-99) where he studied for three more years with Vacchiano, and during his senior year with Mark Gould. He earned a bachelor of philosophy from Columbia, and a bachelor of music from Juilliard.

Gordon won a position as principal trumpet of the Charleston Symphony Orchestra, and began in the fall of 1999. In 2002, he accepted the principal trumpet chair with the Seattle Symphony Orchestra, and in 2006 began teaching as an adjunct professor at the University of Washington. He has participated in music festivals at Tanglewood, Schleswig-Holstein, and the Pacific Music Festival in Japan. Since 2000, he has spent his summers as principal of the Grant Park Symphony in Chicago.

Gordon and his wife Valerie Muzzolini Gordon, principal harp of the Seattle Symphony, have a daughter Anals (b. 2010). His hobbies include traveling, snow skiing, surfing, and playing tennis.

"David F. Gordon" (www.musicofremembrance.org/david gordon); personal interview, May 17, 2011.

Gordon, Frank Alfred (b. Milwaukee, Wisconsin, Sept.27, 1938). American trumpeter and composer. Gordon graduated from Milwaukee's North Division High School in 1957, and immediately went to New York City to study with Donald Byrd. Along with the help of saxophonist Cannonball Adderley, Byrd convinced Gordon to return to Milwaukee to study music at the University of Wisconsin. After spending three years there (1963-66), he moved to Chicago and eventually finished his bachelor's degree in music at Roosevelt University in 1970. While in Chicago, he took advantage to study with Bunky Green, Donald Byrd, Eddie Harris, and Muhal Richard Abrams.

Gordon moved to New York City in 1976 to join up with the Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Band. During his twenty-three years there, he toured the world and recorded with Lena Horne, Illinois Jacquet, Charli Persip (1980), David Murray, Quincy Jones, Art Blakey, Sam Rivers, Muhal Richard Abrams, Duke Ellington Orchestra, and others. He also taught at the New School in New York City, Jamey Aebersold Jazz Camps, the New York public schools, and Rutgers University in Newark, New Jersey (from 1992). He also received four grants from the National Endowment of the Arts to have his musical compositions performed in New York City. In addition, he was a founding member of the Ebony Brass Quintet.

Frank Gordon moved to Savannah, Georgia, in 1999. He taught music appreciation at Armstrong Atlantic State University. Then, in 2005, he moved to Okinawa, Japan where he teaches at the Osaka School of Music in Osaka. He has released two solo albums, Clarion Echoes and Jazz Night Once More. He has also recorded with Max Roach and Eddie Harris, and appears in the films, Texas Tenor: The Illinois Jacquet Story, Cotton Club, Thad Jones/Mel Lewis Live at the Domicile, and Lena Horne on Broadway.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Frank Gordon" (www.myspace.com/frankgordon); "Frank Gordon" (www.jazz.com/encyclopedia/gordon-frank).

Gordon, Joseph ("Joe") Henry (b. Boston, Massachusetts, May 15, 1928; d. Santa Monica, California, Nov. 4, 1963). American trumpeter. Gordon studied at the New England Conservatory with Fred Berman. He worked in Akron, Ohio, with Pete Diggs's Band, and in Boston with Sabby Lewis in 1947. During the 1950s, he was with Georgie Auld, Lionel Hampton, Art Blakey (1954), Charlie Parker (whenever Parker was in the Boston area), Don Redman (1955), Dizzy Gillespie (1956), Horace Silver, and Herb Pomeroy (1957-58). His idol was Dizzy Gillespie, although he was perhaps most influenced by the trumpet playing of Clifford Brown (whose place he took in Blakey's band).

In 1958, Gordon moved to Los Angeles, and performed or recorded with Harold Land, Dexter Gordon, Benny Carter, Barney Kessel, Shelly Manne (1958-60), Thelonious Monk, Helen Humes, and Charlie Mariano. His solo albums include Introducing Joe Gordon (Mercury) and Joe Gordon Lookin' Good (Contemporary). He also recorded for Emercy in 1954 and appeared in the film, The Proper Time. Gordon died in a house fire on November 4, 1963 as a result of his accidently dropping a lit cigarette in his bed. He was thirty-five years old.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Tomashefsky, Paul. New England Jazz History Database (www.jazzhistorydatabase.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gorham, Charles J. (b. Atlanta, Georgia, June 16, 1930). American trumpeter. Gorham began studying trumpet at the age of eight under the guidance of his father, an amateur trumpeter. Later teachers in his childhood included Roy Lee, Powell Everhart, Robert Landholt, and John Dilliard. When Gorham was fourteen, he had an opportunity to play for Herbert L. Clarke, Edwin Franko Goldman, and composer Percy Grainger at the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, and to play as an extra with the Atlanta Symphony.

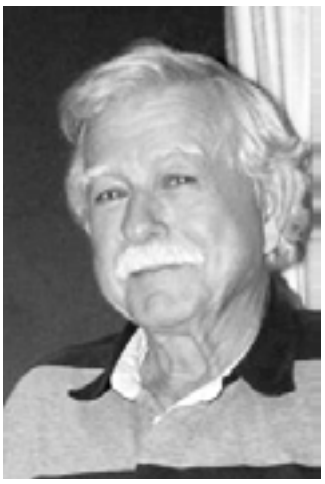
After graduating from Brown High School in Atlanta (1948), Gorham attended the Oberlin Conservatory, graduating in 1952. He was invited by Maestro George Szell to join the Cleveland Orchestra as assistant principal trumpet, but was soon drafted into military service.

He spent the next four years in Washington, D.C. as a member of the US Air Force Band. While in the service, he earned a master of music degree studying with Lloyd Geisler at Catholic University of America.

Upon release from the military, Gorham accepted a position at the Baldwin-Wallace College Conservatory in Cleveland, and often performed with the Cleveland Orchestra under Maestro Robert Shaw. Gorham joined the faculty at Indiana University in 1961 and became chair of the brass department in 1969. With the urging of tubist Harvey Phillips, Gorham spearheaded the formation of the International Trumpet Guild with Robert Nagel in 1973. He assembled an Interim Steering Committee that included David Hickman, David Baldwin, Thomas Stevens, Ward Cole, and Robert Levy. Gorham hosted the first meeting of the ITG at Indiana University in May of 1975, and later served as its fourth president from 1981 to 1983.



Before retiring in 1994, Gorham was one of the leading teachers in the United States. Among his many students were Edmund Cord (selected to be Gorham's replacement at IU), David Monette, John Carroll, Kathy Kvet, Leonard Foy, David Baldwin, Ken Cox, John Lindenau, Jonathan Fields, Kim Dunnick, and David Brown. He occasionally performed with the Indianapolis Symphony, Ft. Wayne Philharmonic, Bloomington Camarata Orchestra, and the Indiana University Summer Festival Orchestra. He published numerous editions of brass ensemble and trumpet solo literature, as well as orchestral excerpts from the symphonies of Gustav Mahler. Gorham received the ITG's Award of Merit in 2006.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Charles Gorham Award of Merit" (program booklet for the 2006 ITG Conference at Rowan University).

Gosling, Daniel ("Dan") A. (b. Park Ridge, Illinois, May 23, 1962). American trumpeter. Gosling grew up in Elkhart, Indiana. At age eight, he began taking piano lessons from his mother, and at age ten began playing the trumpet, studying with Gerald Knipfel, band director at Elkhart Central High School where Gosling graduated in 1980. Gosling attended the University of Illinois from 1980 to 1984, studying with David Hickman, Ray Sasaki, and Michael Tunnell. After graduating in 1984, he studied with Vincent Cichowicz at Northwestern University, earning a master of music degree in 1985. His later mentors were Marvin Perry II, Philip Collins, John Rommel, and Charles Geyer.

Gosling was a member of the Indianapolis Chamber Orchestra from 1985 until 2008, and the Indiana Brass Quintet from 1986 to 1994. He often played with the Cincinnati Symphony and the Louisville Orchestra between 1989 and 2000, and was third trumpet of the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra from 2001 to 2004. In addition, he served as personnel manager of the Indianapolis Chamber Orchestra from 1988 to 2008. He has also taught as an adjunct faculty member at Ball State University and Butler University. Recently, Gosling has become well known as the inventor of ChopSaver lip balm.

Gosling and violinist Noelle Gosling have been married since 1996, and have a son named Anthony (b. 1998). Gosling's hobbies include running, swimming, all sports, and travel.

Bibl.: personal interview, Aug. 15, 2011.

Göß [Goess], Hermann (b. Gallmersgarten, Germany, Sept. 15, 1940). German trumpeter. As a boy, Göß wanted to become the next Louis Armstrong on the trumpet. At age eleven, he took a job as a hotel elevator operator, and whenever the lift was empty he would close the doors and practice. One amusing anecdote tells of his surprise upon seeing Louis Armstrong enter his elevator one day. Without hesitation, young Hermann began playing his trumpet, to which Armstrong replied, "Second floor, please."

Göß eventually played in the Niedersachsen Orchestra and the State Theater Orchestra in Braunschweig. After 1966, he spent most of his career in the Munich Philharmonic. He is now retired.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Hermann Göß" (www.blechschaden.de/ensemble/hermann-goe.html).

Gould, Mark (b. New York, New York, Sept. 22, 1947). American trumpeter. Gould comes from a musical family—although his parents were music lovers, not professional musicians. He began playing the trumpet at age eight or nine when he joined the band at his elementary school in Mt. Vernon, New York. At age thirteen, he began spending his summers at the National Music Camp at Interlochen where he became friends with another student, Gerard Schwarz. From the age of fourteen through seventeen, Gould studied with Robert Nagel.

After graduating from high school at the age of seventeen, Gould attended Boston University as a liberal arts major. He dropped out of school after one year, and went to New York City to play in a rock-funk band, but returned to BU the following year in order to avoid the military draft. He wanted to change his major to music, but his father discouraged him from doing so, stating that he would not pay Mark's tuition if he went into music. So, Mark played in a Boston-based rhythm and blues group called The Bagatelle while earning a degree in sociology. He then made a living working for a health food company in Boston, and played trumpet as a sideline. He considers Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin of the Boston Symphony Orchestra strong influences on his playing.

Gould moved to New York City in 1970 in hopes of becoming a fulltime musician; his friend, Gerard Schwarz, helped him get established. He took a few lessons from Theodore Weis in 1972, and won the principal chair in the Springfield (Massachusetts) Symphony in the same year. He also took lessons from Allan Dean and Louis Ranger. He became a principal trumpet of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra in 1973 (Mel Broiles was the other principal trumpeter.) Gould became a member of Schwarz's New York Trumpet Ensemble, and became its leader when Schwarz left New York to become the conductor of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra in 1975.

Gould has performed at the Vermont Mozart Festival, Waterloo Music Festival (1980-84), Mederia Bach Festival, and the Caramoor Festival. He has recorded with the New York Trumpet Ensemble, Canadian Brass, Empire Brass, Samuel Pilafian, Chamber Music Society of Lincoln Center, New York Philharmonic, and the Mostly Mozart Festival in New York, as well as making dozens of recordings with the Metropolitan Opera. He has been a soloist with many orchestras including the Seattle Symphony (conductor of the Pops series in 1987), San Diego Symphony, Buffalo Philharmonic, Hartford Symphony, and others. He joined the faculty at The Juilliard School in 1982, where he teaches trumpet and wind band. Among his best-known students are Michael Sachs, David Bilger, Marc Reese, Billy Ray Hunter, Charles Porter, Douglas Prosser, Jens Lindemann, and Matt Shulman.

Now one of the leading trumpeters in the world, Gould is in demand worldwide as a clinician and soloist. He is also a fine conductor who has appeared with numerous bands, orchestras, and brass bands including the Brass Band of Battle Creek in Michigan. He has presented recitals and seminars at the conferences of the International Trumpet Guild and the Lake Placid Brass Institute. He has toured with Summit Brass, and is the founder and leader of the rap group, Pink Baby Monster, a highly controversial and X-rated music entertainment group comprising three trumpets and percussion. Works by David Amram and Tom Pierson were dedicated to him.

Gould's recording genres range from Baroque music to Dixieland, from classical to rap, and from jazz to pop. His first solo album was Café 1930 (Angel); other CDs include Cousins, Festival of Trumpets (with Gerard Schwarz), Trumpets in Stride (with the New York Trumpet Ensemble on Summit Records), Silks and Rags (with Samuel Pilafian on Angel), Under the Big Top (with Pilafian, Angel), A Grand Sousa Concert (with Pilafian, Angel), Trumpet Recital (King Records), and Brandenburg Concertos with the Philharmonia Virtuosi of New York (Columbia Masterworks). He made the video, Mark Gould & Pink Baby Monster, Live at Juilliard. Gould retired from the Metropolitan Opera a few years ago in order to devote more time to Pink Baby Monster.

Bibl.: Dudgeon, Ralph. "A Conversation with Mark Gould" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2001); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Gouriev [Guryev, Guriev], Leonid [Yevgenyevich] (b. Moscow, Russia, Apr. 11, 1973). Russian trumpeter (who spells his own name "Gouriev"). Gouriev studied with Vladimir Golubev at the Moscow Music School No. 23 from 1983 to 1987, with A.M. Pautov in the Schnittge Music College in Moscow from 1988 to 1992, and then attended the Moscow Conservatory where he studied with Yury Usov from 1992 to 1997. During his last year there, he won second prize in the Moscow Conservatory International Trumpet Competition, and became Usov's teaching assistant. In 1998-99, he obtained a postgraduate chamber music diploma at Superior Cons. of Luxemburg (Prof. Charles Consbruck). In 2001, he also studied the (valveless) Baroque trumpet with Edward H. Tarr at the Handel Academy in Karlsruhe, Germany and with Andreas Lackner in Austria. He has been a member of the Moscow State Orchestra (playing mostly first and third chairs) in 1993-2003, and of the "New Russia" State Symphony Orchestra and "Moscow Soloists" Chamber Orchestra under Yury Bashmet since 2003. In 2003, he also became first Baroque trumpeter in the Baroque ensemble "The Pocket Symphony" and the "Pratum Integrum" orchestra. He is the founder and leader of the Russian Baroque Trumpet Ensemble.

Gouriev is also active as a teacher of methodology: since 1999 at the Music School of Moscow Conservatory and at the Conservatory itself, as well as at the Moscow State University of Culture and Arts. In 2007, he became professor of Baroque trumpet in the Faculty of Historical and Contemporary Performance (founded in 2005) at Moscow Conservatory. In 2009, he was preparing a Ph.D. dissertation on the natural trumpet for the History of Foreign Music Department of the Moscow Conservatory under Prof. M. Saponov.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press). Gouriev, Leonid. Personal information sent to Tarr (emails, April 4, 2009 and Mar. 2, 2013).

Goykovich, Dusko [Dusan Gojkovic] (b. Jajce, Yugoslavia [Bosnia], Oct. 14, 1931). Yugoslavian trumpeter. Goykovich studied at the Academy of Music in Belgrade (1948-53) and played in the Radio Belgrade Big Band (1951-55). He moved to Germany in 1956, and soon worked with the Frankfurt All-Stars, making his recording debut with the group in that year. He also played with Kurt Edelhagen's radio orchestra (1957-60). Goykovich accepted a scholarship to study at the Berklee School of Music in Boston (1961-63).

Maynard Ferguson invited Goykovich to join his band in 1963. After a year, Goykovich toured with Woody Herman (1964-66), then returned to Germany where he worked with the Sal Nistico-Mal Waldron band, Philly Joe Jones, the Kenny Clarke-Francy Boland big band (1968-73), Slide Hampton, and his own small groups. He formed a rehearsal band in 1966, but it broke up in 1976 due to difficulties with scheduling the leading musicians. Goykovich founded a new band in 1986 that is still active today. Many of the band's charts are composed or arranged by Goykovich.

Goykovich has made many recordings, including as leader: After Hours (Enja), Soul Connection (Enja), Bebop City (Enja), Balkan Blue (Enja), Balkan Connection (Enja), Celebration (Hot House), Slavic Mood (Vista), It's About Blues Time (Ensaya), Live At The Domicile (Session), and Swinging Macedonia (Enja).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Dusko Goykovich" (www.enjarecords.com).

Gozzo, Conrad [Joseph] ("Goz") (b. New Britain, Connecticut, Feb. 6, 1922; d. Burbank, California, Oct. 8, 1964). American trumpeter. Gozzo studied with his father, a trumpet teacher. In his hometown, he won a competition playing Bride of the Waves by Herbert L. Clarke. At age sixteen, he began playing professionally as a member of Isham Jones's band (1938), and over the next four years, he also played with Tommy Reynolds, Red Norvo (1939-41), Johnny "Scat" Davis, Bob Chester, Claude Thornhill (1941-42), and Benny Goodman (1942).

Gozzo was in the Navy (1942-44) where he played in Artie Shaw's service band. After his military days, he returned to the Goodman band for a short while (1945) and then played in Woody Herman's First Herd (1945-46). He was mainly a lead player, but occasionally soloed on tunes such as Stars Fell On Alabama. After the Herman band, he played with Boyd Raeburn, Tex Beneke (1947), and played television shows with Paul Lavalle.

At the age of twenty-five, Gozzo moved to Los Angeles (1947) and began working in the movie, television, and radio studios. He was the lead trumpet on Bob Crosby's radio programs (1947-51) and was a member of the NBC staff orchestra, recording hundreds of tracks with celebrities and top musicians such as Billy May, Buddy Rich, Dean Martin, Frank Sinatra, Glen Gray, Shorty Rogers, Marty Paich, Les Brown, Stan Kenton, Henry Mancini, Ray Conniff, Jerry Fielding, Nelson Riddle, Ray Anthony, Steve Allen, Rosemary Clooney, Al Hirt, Peggy Lee, George Shearing, Andy Williams, Dinah Shore, Fran Warren, and John Williams.

A few of the films in which Gozzo played first trumpet are Ben Hur, Cleopatra, Bye Bye Birdie, Call Me Madam, The Gene Krupa Story, and The Benny Goodman Story. His only solo album is titled Goz the Great (Victor), although he is perhaps best known for his solo, A Trumpeter's Prayer on the Tutti's Trumpets album with fellow trumpeters Mannie Klein, Pete Candoli, Joe Triscari, Shorty Sherock, and Uan Rasey.

Unfortunately, Gozzo was a heavy drinker and gambler; his alcoholism led to a heart attack, and he died on October 8, 1964 at the age of forty-two. On November 19, 1989 the New Britain Symphony (his hometown orchestra in Connecticut) performed a "Tribute to Goz" concert for his family and friends. The guest trumpet soloist was David Hickman who performed the Concerto by Arutunian, as well as A Trumpeter's Prayer by Tutti Camarata. The special program booklet for the concert contains letters from forty-two individuals who paid tribute to Gozzo. Pete Candoli said, He was respected and looked up to by thousands throughout the world. He was and still is "The Greatest." Al Hirt wrote, I have many fond memories of Conrad Gozzo, a man I considered to be the best first trumpet player of all time. Uan Rasey wrote, He raised the level of lead trumpet playing to a new high. Brought great fire and excitement to the whole band—wherever he played. And Frank Sinatra said, It was always a great thrill and an unforgettable honor to have worked with my dear friend "Goz." What a marvelous talent.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "A Tribute to 'Goz'" (The New Britain Symphony program, Nov. 19, 1989); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Grabandt, Christian (b. Hameln, Germany, Feb. 19, 1966). German trumpeter. Grabandt found an old trumpet when he was eleven and taught himself to play. He studied from 1983 to 1986 at Wichita State University in Kansas, but transferred to William Paterson College in Wayne, New Jersey, where he completed a bachelor of arts in jazz degree in 1988. He moved to New York City and performed in various Latin and Salsa bands including Chico Mendoza's Latin big band, Sahib Shihab's big band, the Glen Vargas Salsa band, and the Something Different jazz quintet. He also taught jazz history at the Hudson School in Hoboken, New Jersey.

Grabandt returned to Germany in 1989, where he led a big band at a music school in Wunstorf and taught at music schools in Hanover and Salzgitter. He also taught trumpet for the youth big band of Niedersachsen. He performed with the NDR Big Band Hamburg, The Temptations, The Supremes, and was the trumpeter for the rock opera, Love or War. He also played with his own jazz quintet, 8 Til Late, and the Experimenti Berlin. He later (1993-2002) became a member of the RIAS Big Band Berlin that backed numerous jazz artists such as Clark Terry, Shirley Bassey, Tony Bennett, Conte Candoli, Jon Faddis, Kenny Wheeler, Claudio Roditi, and Lalo Schifrin. He recorded with the Berlin Brass Band, the hr Big Band, German Symphony Orchestra, and his own section The Berlin Horns.

From 1997 to 1999, Grabandt taught jazz trumpet at the Hanns Eisler Musikhochschule in Berlin. Since 2003, he has been the leader of the Brandenburg Youth Big Band, and teaches at various jazz and rock workshops throughout Germany.

Grabandt is married to piano teacher Amy Grabandt and they have two daughters. Their hobbies include running, canoeing, camping, and cooking.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Grabowski, Randy (b. Spring Valley, Illinois, May 15, 1954). American trumpeter. Grabowski's early trumpet lessons were with his father. After graduating from LaSalle-Peru Township High School in 1972, he studied with Ron Modell at Northern Illinois University before transferring to Indiana University, where he earned a bachelor of music education degree in 1976, studying with Louis David-son. He then went on the road with a professional pop music group, settling in Reno, Nevada, in 1977, where he played with several show bands at the MGM Grand and the Reno Hilton casinos. He backed many celebrities including Frank Sinatra, Tony Bennett, Dionne Warwick, Shirley MacLane, Sammy Davis Jr., and others. He also performed with the orchestras of Ray Charles, the Manhattan Transfer, Aretha Franklin, Moody Blues, Mannheim Steamroller, Jimmy Dorsey, Benny Goodman, Nelson Riddle, Harry James, and others.

Grabowski received a master of music degree from the University of Nevada-Reno in 1984, studying with Roscoe Booth, and a doctorate in trumpet performance from Indiana University in 1988, studying with Charles Gorham. Grabowski is currently the professor of trumpet at the University of Northern Iowa, as well as principal trumpet of the Waterloo/Cedar Falls Symphony Orchestra. During the summers, he has performed at various festivals including the Bear Lake, Great Music West, and Spoleto Music Festival. He has also performed with the Reno Philharmonic, Great Basin Brass Quintet, Cedar Rapids Symphony, Chestnut Brass Company, and the Indianapolis Symphony Orchestra.

Grabowski and his wife Karen, a reflexologist and visual artist, have been married since 1981, and have a daughter, Jennifer Grabowski Mesenbrink (b. 1984). His hobbies include reading, gardening, hiking, traveling, and cooking.

Bibl.: Randy Grabowski's official website: www.randygrabowski.net; personal interview, Feb. 23, 2011.

Grafmyer, James ("Jim") Boyd (b. Denver, Colorado, May 29, 1935; d. Pueblo, Colorado, Aug. 13, 2009). American trumpeter. Grafmyer grew up in Denver and started his music career on French horn, which he played with the Denver Junior Police Band. He switched to trumpet in 1945 (age ten) after hearing a performance by Harry James. He attended North High School and studied trumpet with Phil Romero and Eddie Keeler. He later studied with Donald Reinhardt, Claude Gordon, and Harold "Pappy" Mitchell.

Grafmyer joined the Navy in 1955 and played in several Navy concert bands and dance bands. Most of his twenty-five years in the Navy were spent teaching at the Navy School of Music and the Naval Academy Band in Annapolis. In 1956, he married trumpeter Nancy Corbetta. After his retirement from the Navy, he and his wife formed a dance band in Denver called the Aristocrats of Music. He also played with the Nostalgia dance band. He and Nancy ran a bugling service to provide military honors for veterans.

Grafmyer continued to teach for many years and published the text, Trumpet (self-published, 1975), a compilation of teaching ideas of various authors including ideas of his own. He suffered from many serious health problems: he underwent a triple bypass heart operation and later lost both legs to diabetes. He is buried next to the church that baptized him, Holy Family of Denver.

Bibl.: "James B. Grafmyer (1935-2009)" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2010); personal interview with Nancy Grafmyer, Dec. 26, 2009.

Graham, George (b. Chicago, Illinois, Feb. 13, 1937; d. July 26, 2011). American trumpeter. Graham grew up in Los Angeles. He had the opportunity as a child to observe recording sessions at various studios because his father was a professional trumpeter. At age twelve, he became friends with trumpeter George Werth, a leading studio player from whom he took lessons. He later studied with Irving Bush. After high school, he played in several Air Force bands around the world, and after three-and-a-half years in the military, returned to Los Angeles where he eventually graduated from Los Angeles Valley College, studying with Bob MacDonald.

Graham joined the Si Zentner band in 1961, touring with it for two years, and in 1963 moved to Reno, Nevada, where for the next fifteen years he worked in various nightclubs and casino showrooms. In the late 1970s, he moved to Las Vegas to work in a similar capacity, and in 1980 returned to Los Angeles to work in the Hollywood studios. He recorded hundreds of movie soundtracks, and was a featured soloist in the 1999 film, The Thomas Crown Affair. He recorded with hundreds of artists including Frank Sinatra, Benny Carter, Mike Vax, Jack Sheldon, Tom Kubis, Bob Florence, Ray Anthony, Rosemary Clooney, Louie Bellson, Barry Manilow, B.B. King, and Steve Allen, as well as playing in various musicals. He also released the solo CD, With Time To Give Some Back, for Pippo Records. He was a featured artist during the 2003 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Ft. Worth, Texas.

Graham was a fantastic lead trumpet player and exciting soloist. During the early 1980s, he mentored the young trumpet player Wayne Bergeron, helping him break into the Los Angeles studio scene. After Graham's death at age seventy-four, Bergeron posted on an Internet blog the following: One of the biggest thrills of my career was getting to finally play in Bob's [Florence] band next to George. Man, what a huge sound!! I always felt like I had a straight mute in sitting next to him. Besides George's great musicality, he was a kind man with a big heart and a twisted sense of humor. There's not one note I play that doesn't have a little George Graham in it.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "George Graham" (www.trumpetmaster.com/vb/f131/george-graham-20110.html).

Granitsky, Il'ya [Mineyevich] (b. Irkutsk, Siberia, Russia, Jan. 2, 1923). Russian trumpeter. Granitsky studied at a music school in his home city, took lessons from Alexander Popov at the Irkutsk Musical College from 1941 to 1942, and, after a year in the Music College of the Gnesin Institute in Moscow, studied with the great Mikhail Tabakov (at the Gnesin Institute) from 1942 to 1948. In 1949, he won first prize in a solo competition at the Budapest International Youth Festival. In 1946, Granitsky became principal trumpet (and sometimes principal cornet) at the Bolshoi Theater, a position he held until 1976. In the trumpet section, he was known as one of the most reliable "controllers," i.e. counters of measures of rest. He taught at the Gnesin Institute from 1959 to at least 1992, when Viktor Kisnichenko and Alexander Skvortsov were among his pupils..

Bibl.: Bolotin, S. Biographical Dictionary of Musicians Performing on Wind Instruments (1969, Leningrad); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Tarr, Edward H. East Meets West (Pendragon Press).

Gransden, Joe (b. Yonkers, New York, 1971). American trumpeter. Gransden was raised in Buffalo, New York. He comes from a musical family, and graduated from Georgia State University with a degree in jazz performance. Early in his career, he toured with the Tommy Dorsey and Glenn Miller ghost bands, and played in a variety of pop shows. He lived in New York City for a few years, but has mostly lived in Atlanta, Georgia, where he performed with the Tempest Little Big Band. Although Gransden's early musical influences were Kenny Dorham and Miles Davis, he has a natural singing voice that is often compared to that of Chet Baker and Frank Sinatra. Since 1996, Gransden has performed both as a singer and a trumpeter.

Gransden has performed with numerous artists including Toshiko Akiyoshi and Chico O'Farrill, but his group, The Joe Gransden Trio, has brought him the most recognition. Among his albums are I Waited for You (Brass Menagerie), Charissa's Song (Summertime), Close to My Heart (Summertime), I'll Be Home for Christmas (Summertime), Live at Churchill Grounds (Summertime), and Joe Gransden Plays and Sings (Summertime).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Joe Gransden's official website: www.joegransden.com.

Grant, Gary Emory (b. Plant City, Florida, July 13, 1945). American trumpeter. Grant's early trumpet lessons, beginning when he was nine, were with his father, Harry Grant; he later studied with the great Bud Brisbois.

Grant attended North Texas State University in the mid 1960s (now the University of North Texas), where he was a member of the One O'Clock Lab Band. After that, he was in a Navy band for four years. He toured and recorded with the Woody Herman band for two years, and moved to Hawaii where he performed in a big band and a smaller group called Tantalus, both founded by him, for three years. In 1975, he moved to Los Angeles where he has become one of the top studio musicians, as well as recognized as an excellent arranger, composer, and producer. He has backed recordings on over three thousand CDs, and has performed in a wide variety of styles including classical, rock, jazz, funk, country, and pop. He has worked with many leading musicians including Elvis Presley, Ray Charles, Whitney Houston, Michael Jackson, Barbra Streisand, Chicago, Arturo Sandoval, Rod Stewart, Wayne Bergeron, Don Menza, Gordon Goodwin, Maynard Ferguson, Roger Neumann, Stevie Wonder, Frank Sinatra, Natalie Cole, and Pat Williams (2010). In the past twenty-five years, he has belonged to Jerry Hey's brass section.

Grant's film credits include over five hundred feature movies, such as American Gigolo, Back to the Future I, II, and III, Caddyshack, Dirty Dancing, Austin Powers, Contact, Firefox, Coneheads, Ghostbusters, Hercules, Alladin, Pretty Woman, Absence of Malice, Forrest Gump, What Women Want, Author Author, and The Abyss. Television credits include ABC Theme, Comic Relief, E.R., HBO Sports, CHiPs, HBO Boxing, and The Simpsons. His solo CDs are Breakout (2003) and Don't Hold Your Breath (2010).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Gary Grant's official website: www.garygrantmusic.com/about.html.

Graswurm, Hans-Joachim (b. Berlin, Germany, Sept. 20, 1934; d. Berlin, Germany, May 9, 1986). German trumpeter and flugelhornist.

Graswurm attended the East Berlin Conservatory from 1956 to 1961, where he formed his first jazz combo. Known as the leading chorus man of the DDR, he played with the Jürgen Fromm jazz group from 1960 to 1962, and in January of 1962 played in the Berlin Radio orchestra led by Günter Gollasch. Over the next fifteen years, he also performed with the Modern Blues Sextet and Berlin-Leipzig combo, radio jazz ensemble "Studio IV," the rock jazz group "SOK," and with Hans Rempel. He was a guest with Klaus Lenz's Modern Soul Band, the Günter Fischer sextet (1979, making it a septet), and the Dixieland All-Stars of Berlin. During the 1980s, he was trumpet professor at the Hanns Eisler Hochschule für Musik in Berlin, and in the late 1980s played in a group called Fusion (the new name for Lenz's band when he left it). He was an excellent composer and arranger, and is married to vocalist Claudia Graswurm. He died at the relatively young age of fifty-one.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch dser Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Grau, Carlos Benetó (b. Villanueva de Castellón, Valencia, Spain, June 18, 1969). Spanish trumpeter.

Grau began his musical training at the Lira Castellonense Music Society Music School, and later graduated from the Royal Conservatory of Madrid, studying with José María Ortí. In 1988, he became a member of the Gran Canaria Philharmonic Orchestra and the Spanish National Youth Orchestra (until 1992). In 1989, he was a founding member of the Spanish Brass Luur Metalls quintet that won the Sixth International Brass Ensemble Competition in Narbonne, France, in 1991. Now a fulltime quintet, SBLM has toured the world and released over fifteen recordings.

Grau's hobbies include cooking, reading, and movies.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); concert program, Chautauqua Institution, Aug. 15, 2011.

Graves, Samuel (b. New Boston, New Hampshire, July 1794; d. Wells River, Vermont, Nov. 18, 1878). American maker. Samuel Graves founded Graves & Company and established its first shop in West Fairlee, Vermont in 1824. He moved the company to Westchester, New Hampshire, around 1830, where it became the largest musical instrument factory in America. Partners in the company were Cyrus Graves, Charles Alexander, and Henry P. Anderson.

In 1831, the company became jointly owned by Samuel Graves and Charles Alexander, and was known as Graves & Alexander. Between 1832 and 1845, Samuel W. Richardson was added as a partner. After 1833, when Alexander sold his portion of the business, it was called Graves & Co. James Keat (1813-45) worked for the company between 1837 and 1842, signing his instruments, "J. Keat for Graves/Co. Winchester NH." Before 1856, the firm made mostly woodwind instruments, but after that, through Kent's influence, it made only brass instruments. A fire in 1848 destroyed the factory and caused severe financial problems by 1850. The company was sold to Samuel's son, George M. Graves, in 1851. George moved the company to Boston, Massachusetts. His father soon joined him at the firm, although he was not an owner. Graves & Company became the leading manufacturer of brass instruments in America. The firm was especially known for its top quality keyed bugles in B-flat and E-flat, designed by James Keat.

After 1858, there was a succession of various owners and name changes. The famed bandmaster Patrick S. Gilmore purchased the company in 1866, changing its name to Gilmore & Company. In the following year, Gilmore took on a partner, Elbridge G. Wright, and the company was named Wright, Gilmore & Company. Two years later, Wright bought Gilmore's interest in the firm and renamed it E.G. Wright & Company. The final sale of the company occurred one year later, in 1869, when Wright & Company merged with Henry Esbach, Louis F. Hartman, and Samuel Graves (with sons George and William) to form the Boston Musical Instrument Manufactory.

Bibl.: Eliason, Robert E. Keyed Bugles in the United States (Smithsonian Institution Press); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published, 2001).

Gray, Russell (b. Clydebank, Scotland, Oct. 11, 1968). Scottish cornetist and conductor. Gray began playing the cornet at age nine, and won several solo competitions after playing only three years. At age twelve, he became principal cornet of the Clydebank Burgh Band, and at age seventeen studied with Phillip McCann at Huddersfield University. He also played in the Black Dyke Brass Band. Gray has toured the world as a cornet soloist, performing throughout Europe, Canada, Australia, New Zealand, South Korea, and the United States. In 1993, he was a founding member of the Quintessence Brass Ensemble.

Gray's conducting career began in 1998 when he was appointed musical director of the Stavanger Brass Band in Norway. He also conducted the NSK-RHP Ransomes Band and the Sola Brass Band until 2001, when he returned to Scotland to teach cornet at the Northern College of Music in Manchester. He has conducted numerous brass bands in the United Kingdom, including Foden's Band. He has led several bands to national championships, and has guest conducted the Wrexham Symphony Orchestra, Queensland Pops Orchestra, and the Cambrian Philharmonic Orchestra. He is active with youth bands including the National Youth Band of Norway and the National Youth Band of Scotland.

In 2002, at the ITG Conference in Manchester, he performed Willi Liebe's Zungenbrecher (Tongue Twister). It was followed by the first British performance, together with Richard Carson Steuart, of Peter Lawrence's entertaining Dialogue: From Méndez mit Liebe for two trumpets and band (depicting a "duel" between Rafael Méndez and Willi Liebe), that had been premiered in Bad Säckingen's Sixth Trumpet Festival only days earlier.

He made two noted CDs: The Arban Collection, Egon CD 114 (2002, on an Arban-model cornet dated c1866) and The Arban Collection II, Egon 145 (2008).

Gray is married to Marcika Gray.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Russell Gray" (http://uk.yamaha.com).

Green, Donald ("Don") (b. Garden City, Michigan, May 2, 1949). American trumpeter. Green's father was an electrician, and his mother a homemaker and occasional waitress who was a former cosmetologist. Donald began playing the trumpet at age seven when the family lived in Westland, Michigan. Two years later, they moved to Long Beach, California, with another move to Whittier, California, when Donald was in junior high school. After graduating from Whittier High School in 1967, Green enrolled at The Juilliard School where he studied with William Vacchiano. Just before leaving for New York, however, he studied briefly with Warren Roche, Thomas Stevens, and Irving Bush (the latter for breathing lessons). After spending a year at Juilliard, Green decided to transfer to the University of Southern California because he sorely missed his high school sweetheart. He was at USC from 1968 to 1971, where he studied with Stevens and James Stamp, and earned a bachelor of arts degree.

Green returned to New York City in 1971, and again enrolled at The Juilliard School. He was able to perform as assistant principal trumpet of the New Jersey Symphony in 1973 while earning his master of music degree. He accepted a position as second trumpet of the Seattle Symphony (1973-74), then as associate principal of the Houston Symphony Orchestra (1974-75), followed by principal of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra (1975-82). While with the DSO, Green served as an adjunct professor of trumpet at the University of Michigan (1980-82).

In the fall of 1982, Green won the position of associate principal of the Los Angeles Philharmonic. He held this position for nearly eighteen years, and was made acting principal of the orchestra when Stevens retired in December of 1999; he was named principal in 2001 after a series of auditions. He was also active in the Los Angeles studios, and was a visiting lecturer at the University of California-Los Angeles (UCLA) from 1994 to 1996. Since 2006, Green has been an adjunct professor at USC. He retired from the Los Angeles Philharmonic in the fall of 2012, and was replaced by Thomas Hooten (previously principal of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra).

Green has performed with the Summit Brass, and taught at its Keystone Brass Institute in Colorado and its Rafael Méndez Brass Institute in Arizona. He has given master classes around the world, and was a featured artist at the first Bremen Trumpet Days in Germany. In addition to his previously listed teachers, Green studied with the late Pierre Thibaud in Paris. Green was inducted into the Danish Trumpet Guild in Copenhagen.

Known for his quick wit and colorful sense of humor, Green is an expert at playing practical jokes on people. One such instance occurred when the Los Angeles Philharmonic toured the East Coast during the early 1980s. While the orchestra was in New York City, it happened that the Detroit Symphony Orchestra was also going to be in town. Green investigated where the DSO members were staying, and when they were scheduled to check in. He purchased an old overcoat, headscarf, knit hat, sunglasses, etc. at a thrift store, and disguised himself as a homeless person. He sat on the sidewalk outside of their hotel with an old hat full of dollar bills and coins in front of him, and waited for the orchestra to arrive. As the bus pulled up and the DSO members filed out, Green played a "unique" rendition of the University of Michigan's fight song on his trumpet. As people tossed coins in the hat (or did not), he remarked, Alan, you always were a cheapskate!"or some similar remark. He was soon identified, and had a pleasurable meeting with his friends.

Green was married in 1970, but divorced in 1996. He has one son, Jason (b. 1970). Green's hobbies include genealogy and traveling.

Bibl.: Greig, Murray. "The Los Angeles Philharmonic Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Jan. 2005); "Donald Green" (www.laphil.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal interview, June 4, 2010.

Green, Vincent ("Vince") (b. Seattle, Washington, Aug. 26, 1963). American trumpeter. Green grew up in Seattle, Washington, and Portland, Oregon. He began playing the French horn at age ten, and while attending Shorecrest High School in Seattle, also learned to play the trumpet; he won several awards for his outstanding playing. His early teachers were Rich Fowler, Dave Lamaroux, and Steve Keene.

After graduating in 1981, Green attended Western Washington University as a trumpet major, studying with Dr. Wayne Gorder, and earning his bachelor of music degree in 1987. For graduate school, Gorder recommended that he study with Gorder's own teacher, David Hickman, at Arizona State University. Green completed his master of music degree at ASU in 1990, and often performed with The Phoenix Symphony, Phoenix Symphony Brass Quintet, and other professional ensembles. He also served as principal trumpet of the Phoenix Chamber Orchestra. While Hickman was on sabbatical during the spring of 1988, Green studied at ASU with Anthony Plog.

Hickman selected Green to be one of his doctoral students and graduate teaching assistants in the fall of 1990, but when an offer was given to Green to become the trumpet professor at Western Washington University (replacing his mentor, Wayne Gorder), Green decided to accept the professorship. During his many years at WWU, Green has also performed with the Pacific Northwest Ballet orchestra, Seattle Symphony Orchestra, and Seattle Opera orchestra. He is also an active composer and arranger.

Green and Kristen Reitz-Green, a Juilliard-trained hornist who recently changed careers to become an oil paint artist, were married in 2000, and have two children: Keeley (b. 2001) and Jaden (b. 2003). Green's main hobby is building custom free-standing meditation buildings. He also enjoys brewing his own beer.

Bibl.: "Vincent Green" (www.wwu.edu/music/bio/green.shtml); personal interview, Feb. 14, 2011.

Greene, Frank David (b. Ft. Meade, Maryland, Apr. 21, 1963). American trumpeter. Greene is one of today's top lead players. He grew up in San Jose, California, and began playing the recorder at the age of three and the trumpet a year later. He was inspired by his parents' Herb Alpert recordings and hearing Maynard Ferguson in concert, and became totally hooked on the trumpet as a lifelong instrument. His early teacher was Bill Nicolosi, and he later studied with David Burkhart. While in high school, Greene played with Dave Eshelman's City College Big Band.

After graduating from high school, Greene attended North Texas State University (now the University of North Texas) from 1982 to 1985 on the Marvin Stamm Scholarship, studying with John Haynie and playing lead in the One O'Clock Lab Band. At age twenty-one before graduating, he joined Woody Herman's band as lead trumpet (1985-86).

Greene moved to New York and began playing lead trumpet, and recording with dozens of artists including Dizzy Gillespie's All Star Alumni Band, Clark Terry, Jon Faddis, Gerald Wilson, Frank Foster, Nicholas Payton, Dianne Reeves, Frank Wess, Jimmy Heath, the Vanguard Jazz Orchestra, Bob Mintzer, Christian McBride, Natalie Cole, McCoy Turner, Roy Hargrove, Lou Rawls, Ray Charles, Charlie Khan, Queen Latifah, Paul Anka, Venesa Williams, Paquito de Riviera, Maria Schneider, John Williams, Dave Brubeck, and the New York Voices. He also played the Broadway show, The Producers, for six years (also recording the movie soundtrack) and the show The Little Mermaid for two years. In addition, Greene played lead trumpet on The David Letterman Show and the Today Show.

For three and a half years, Greene was lead trumpet in Maynard Ferguson's band (1993-97). He also toured with Ray Charles and recorded numerous television commercials and movie soundtracks. He published two books, Brass Concepts and The Quiet Mind. In addition, he conducts a clinic called "How to Get What You Want... Right Now!" and teaches online trumpet lessons. His hobbies include watching soccer, professional surfing tournaments, and professional football.

Bibl.: Biggs, Philip. "Frank Greene" (The Brass Herald, Dec. 2009); "Frank Greene Biography" (www.FrankGreeneMusic.com); personal interview, Dec. 18, 2009.

Greenhoe, David (b. c1944). American trumpeter. Greenhoe grew up in Davison, Michigan, and played in the Michigan Youth Orchestra. While in high school, he attended the International Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, and studied with Clifford Lillya, professor of trumpet at the University of Michigan. He earned bachelor and master of music degrees at the Eastman School of Music, and a doctorate in music at the University of Iowa. His other teachers include Gilbert Johnson, Sidney Mear, Edwin Betts, Gordon Mathie, Karl Rucht, Arnold Jacobs, Robert Grocock, and Graham Young.

Greenhoe's career began as a member of—and soloist with—the US Marine Band in Washington, D.C. (1964-68). He then taught at Ball State University in Indiana, and in 1979 accepted his final post as trumpet professor at the University of Iowa. A versatile performer, Greenhoe has been a member of the Quad Cities Symphony (principal since 1979), Cedar Rapids Opera Theater Orchestra, the Lake Placid Sinfonietta in New York (summers), and Iowa Brass Quintet. He has performed with the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra, Rochester Philharmonic, Ft. Wayne Philharmonic, Gregg Smith Singers, Da Camera Brass Quintet, Chuck Mangione, and Buddy Morrow. Greenhoe retired in 2009.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "David Greenhoe" (www.uiowa.edu/~music/faculty_staff/profiles/emeritus_greenhoe.shtml).

Greenup, Garth (b. Corvallis, Oregon, Apr. 22, 1971). American trumpeter. Greenup grew up in Oregon. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his first teachers were George Recker and Rick Faunt. A talented youth, he was three times selected to solo with his high school All-State Orchestra, performing concertos by Arutunian, Tomasi, and Tartini. After graduating from Lebanon High School in 1989, he attended Arizona State University where he studied with David Hickman, and earned a bachelor of music degree in 1994. He then played with the Civic Orchestra of Chicago (1994-95) and enrolled at Northwestern University where he studied with Vincent Cichowicz, completing a master of music degree in 1995. Additionally, he studied with Adolph Herseth.

Greenup became principal trumpet of the Charleston Symphony Orchestra in 1995, before assuming his current position as principal of the New Jersey Symphony Orchestra in 1996. He is a frequent soloist, specializing in Baroque works such as Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2. He was a silver medalist in the 1998 Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition. His hobbies include woodworking and mountain biking. He is currently building a vacation home in Oregon in his spare time.

Bibl.: "Garth Greenup" (www.njsymphony.org); personal interview, July 7, 2011.

Greig, Murray (b. Leamington Spa, England, Mar. 4, 1966). British trumpeter. Greig began playing cornet at age seven, and played flugelhorn in the Loughborough Youth Brass Band. He added trumpet to his musical activities at age fourteen, studying with Don Blakeson. From 1984 to 1988, he attended the Royal Northern College of Music in Manchester, studying with Howard Snell, and was also influenced by Alan Stringer. While a student, Greig was selected to play principal trumpet in the European Community Youth Orchestra under Maestro Claudio Abbado. Upon graduating with honors, and receiving the Cecil Kidd Prize, he became coprincipal of the Orchestra of the Royal Ballet Sadler's Wells in 1988. During his distinguished career as an orchestral musician, he has performed with the English Northern Philharmonia (1989 to present), Philharmonia (guest soloist), Royal Philharmonic, Royal Opera House Covent Garden, Bournemouth Symphony, BBC Philharmonic, Royal Liverpool Philharmonic (with Alan Stringer, trumpet), and many studio orchestras. He has played (valveless) Baroque trumpet with the Northern Chamber Orchestra, Manchester Camerata, Orchestra of the Golden Age, The Wallace Collection, and the Yorkshire Classic Brass. He founded the Orfeo Trumpet Consort (quartet) in 1995, and can be heard on the CD, The London Trumpet Sound (Cala), with several of England's finest trumpeters.

Greig has taught at the National Youth Orchestra, and began teaching at the Royal Northern College of Music in 1989. He also teaches at Chetham's School of Music, gives master classes in Europe and North America, and is participating in a world wide project concerning teaching methods. He completed a master of music degree at Leeds University in 2001. He hosted the 2002 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Manchester, and has served on the ITG board of directors.

Greig's hobbies include golf, watching football, and fine food and wine.

Bibl.: Keim, Freidel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Murray Greig Interview" (www.r-o-d-d-y-t-r-u-m-p-e-t.cc/mgreig.html).

Griffin, Gordon Claude ("Chris") (b. Binghamton, New York, Oct. 31, 1915; d. Danbury, Connecticut, June 18, 2005). American trumpeter. Griffin was one of the greatest big band lead trumpeters. His primary fame came from playing in the Benny Goodman Orchestra in a section that included Pee Wee Erwin, Harry James, and Ziggy Elman. Glenn Miller called this section "the marvel of the age." Duke Ellington said it was the best he had ever heard, and Harry Glantz asked Goodman, What the hell do you feed those trumpet players? Raw meat?

Griffin began playing piano at the age of five, but didn't continue for long. After several years without playing any instrument, he began playing the trumpet at age twelve, and by fifteen, was playing professionally in a local dance band. His early career began with the orchestras of Scott Fisher, Charlie Barnet (on and off between 1933 and 1935), Joe Haymes, and Rudy Vallee. He also worked at CBS radio in New York where he replaced Bunny Berigan, who left to start his own band. Griffin left CBS to join the Goodman organization in May of 1936, and continued with it until August of 1939. He played lead trumpet in the historic Carnegie Hall concert in 1938, taking only one solo, on Blue Room. James and Elman were the main trumpet soloists, but due to his unassuming personality Griffin was very happy just to lead the three-trumpet section.

In addition to recording with Benny Goodman, Griffin participated in many sessions with Charlie Barnet in 1935, which were that band's first recordings. The trumpet section comprised Tutti Camarata, Griffin, and Eddie Sauter. Griffin also recorded with Mildred Bailey (1935), the Little Ramblers (1935), Teddy Wilson (1936), Miff Mole (1937), Raymond Scott (1939), Charlie Parker (1952), Artie Shaw, Tommy Dorsey, Louis Armstrong, Frank Sinatra, Ella Fitzgerald, Billie Holiday, Sarah Vaughan, Tony Bennett, and Mel Tormé. Griffin also recorded four solo records as a leader in 1947.

In 1936, Griffin began dating singer Helen O'Brien, even though she had been dating Tommy Dorsey. Their attraction was immediate, and the two soon eloped, but when Helen's father (a police captain) heard the news that his daughter had married a musician, he issued an all-points bulletin for their arrest. Even though the couple spent their wedding night at the police station, their happy marriage lasted sixty-four years until Helen's death in 2000. They had six children.

Goodman offered Griffin the opportunity to keep touring with his band, but Griffin chose to stay near home with his wife, so they could raise a family. Griffin returned to the CBS studios where he played for such radio programs as the Philip Morris Show, The Lucky Strike Hit Parade, and The Camel Caravan. He became perhaps the most often-heard trumpeter of the day through his theme solos for television programs such as The Jackie Gleason Show (he created the famous trumpet solo on the theme), The Toast of the Town (which later became The Ed Sullivan Show) with conductor Ray Bloch (the trumpet section on the Ed Sullivan Show consisted of Griffin, Bernie Privin, Thad Jones, and Jimmy Nottingham), and for stars such as Frank Sinatra, Milton Berle, Patti Page, Eddie Fisher, Gary Moore, Kate Smith, Carol Burnett, and others. Griffin also appeared as a musician in several movies, including Hollywood Hotel (1937) and The Big Broadcast of 1937. He played lead trumpet on the soundtrack of The Benny Goodman Story, but had to return to New York before the filming, so Buck Clayton filled in for him on screen. While filming the Benny Goodman Story, Wilbur Hatch heard Griffin play and asked him to play lead trumpet on a new show called I Love Lucy. Griffin was reluctant to leave New York and uproot his family, so he turned it down and the job went to a very young and talented Tony Terran. Griffin's tenure with CBS lasted over thirty years, although he occasionally toured for short periods with various big bands including Warren Covington's European tour during the 1970s.

Near the end of his life, Griffin's son Paul (also a trumpet player) recorded his father's memoirs, and additional recordings were made by trumpeter Louise Baranger, which were edited by Warren Vaché Sr. for a book titled Sittin' In with Chris Griffin (Scarecrow Press). Griffin's stories can also be read in Bill Crow's book, Jazz Anecdotes (Oxford University Press). Griffin himself coauthored a trumpet method together with Pee Wee Erwin. During the last year of his life, Griffin was a guest artist at the Litchfield Jazz Camp, appeared on a number of radio shows, and was featured in an article in the New York Times. Plans were made for a DVD on the life of this great trumpeter, however, doctors discovered melanoma, and Griffin died a short time later in Danbury, Connecticut, on June 18, 2005 at the age of eighty-nine. Paul established the Griffin House Bed and Breakfast in Jeffersonville, New York, that featured a room displaying many photos and other memorabilia of his father. Unfortunately, the Griffin House has been closed.

Griffin was described as a generous, modest, quick-witted and loving man. He certainly played as well as his former Goodman section colleagues, but his somewhat anonymous career as a studio musician (and lack of ego) kept him out of the limelight.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Chris Griffin" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Chris Griffin" (www.answers.com); "Chris Griffin" (www.trumpetguild.org).

Photo: Harry James, Ziggy Elman, and Chris Griffin.

Grin, Freddy (b. Schoten [today: Haarlem Nord], the Netherlands, Dec. 20, 1925). Dutch trumpeter. Grin's mother was a pianist, and his father was a violinist and orchestra concertmaster. His brother Hans Grin (1921-2002) was principal trombone in the Netherlands Radio Philharmonic Orchestra. Grin started on violin, but began playing trombone under the guidance of Jan Eisenberger, and later studied trumpet with Willem Burbach (Hilversum) and Marinus Komst. His first professional trumpet position was in the Opera Orchestra of Omroep. In 1941, he joined the Radio Orchestra AVRO, and from 1943 to 1944 was principal trumpet of the Netherlands Opera Chamber Orchestra at The Hague. In 1947, he was a prizewinner in the Geneva competition, the first ever from his native country.

Grin became principal cornet and trumpet of the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra in Amsterdam in 1945, a position he held until retiring in 1984. Grin played under maestros Willem Mengelberg, Erich Kleiber, Nikolaus Harnoncourt, Leopold Stokowski (1947), Antal Doráti, and Bernard Haitink, among others. He taught at the Amsterdam Conservatory from 1955 and the Arnheim Conservatory from 1962 to 1966, as well as the conservatory in Groningen from 1965 to 1984. He was an active soloist, and toured Germany with organist Jean Langlais (b. 1907; d. 1991), and the United States with his wife, soprano Ina van Duyn, performing Bach's Cantata No. 51. During the 1970s, he led and recorded with the ensemble, Brass United. In 1975, he was a founding member of the International Trumpet Guild. He was honored in the mid 1980s in Bayreuth and in the early 1990s in France. He authored two books, 1888-1988: 100 Jaar trompettisten van het Concertgebouworkest (1988) and De Trompet - Oorsprong en Ontwikkeling (1994).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siecle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Groot, Willem ("Wim") (b. Krommenie [near Zaanstad], the Netherlands, Oct. 7, 1919; d. Amsterdam, the Netherlands, Dec. 17, 2008). Dutch trumpeter. Groot learned to play the flugelhorn from his father, and later switched to the trumpet. As a youth, he played in a fanfare corps and studied with Marinus Komst in Amsterdam.

Groot began his career as the youngest member of the AVRO Orchestra in Hilversum, but is best known for being principal trumpet of the Royal Concertgebouw Orchestra from 1941 to 1982. He also performed and recorded with the Amsterdam Chamber Orchestra and the Concerto Amsterdam under Jaap Schröder and André Rieu, and was a professor of trumpet at conservatories in Amsterdam, Maastricht, and Tilburg. With the Amsterdam Chamber Orchestra he recorded the Hummel concerto, and he performed Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 many times in public. His best students were Eddie Engels and Charlie Green.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Groth, Konradin ("Konnie") (b. Berlin, Germany, Apr. 18, 1947). German trumpeter. Groth was one of four brothers who were taught to sing by their mother, an excellent soprano. They began singing at about age five, and participated in a boys' choir at church. Konradin began playing the trumpet at age six, and played in his church brass ensemble. At age eight, he took lessons from Heinz Döring. When he was eighteen, he began studying at the Berlin Hochschule für Musik with Fritz Wesenigk, principal trumpet of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra (1965-68). He soon won first prize in the Youth Music Competition in Germany, and made the decision to become a professional musician. He won a scholarship to attend the Interlochen Music Camp in Michigan where he studied one summer with Robert Grocock.

In 1968, at age twenty, Groth was invited to play as second trumpet in the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra. After two years in this position, he won a job as principal of the German Opera Orchestra (1970-74). When his former teacher Wesenigk retired from the BPO in 1974, Groth became his replacement. At that time, the other principal trumpeter was Martin Kretzer. Groth participated on all of the BPO's recordings from 1974 through 1998, when he left the orchestra.

Groth began teaching in 1974 at the Orchestra Academy of the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra, and starting in 1987 also taught at the Hochschule der Künste Berlin (full professor in 1998). He has taught many of Germany's finest trumpeters including the famous Wolfgang Bauer. His three-volume book of tonguing and breathing exercises is published by Zimmermann Music Frankfurt. Groth has presented master classes and solo concerts throughout the world, and in 1984 premiered the Concerto for Trumpet by Siegfried Matthus with the Berlin Philharmonic.

Groth has released three solo albums with organ, two albums as a member of German Brass, and three discs with the Berlin Philharmonic Orchestra Brass Ensemble. In addition, he has participated in two albums with the Canadian Brass. He has also recorded a great deal of chamber repertoire for trumpet. To remain physically fit, he plays squash, rows, and runs in the woods.

Bibl.: Irish, John. "Konradin Groth: German Virtuoso" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Mar. 2001); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Guarente, Francisco ("Frank") Saverio (b. Montelmilleto, Italy, Oct. 5, 1893; d. New York, New York, July 21, 1942). Italian-born American trumpeter. Guarente received a formal classical music education in his native Italy before moving to the United States in 1910 to live with his brother in Allentown, Pennsylvania. He was an early member of Creatore's Band, and toured the southern states with Don Philippini's Symphony Orchestra. He moved to New Orleans in 1914, presumably for health reasons, and took a job in a bank. He became interested in jazz, and soon traded classical lessons in return for jazz tips from King Oliver. Soon, Guarente was playing with the Mars Brass Band (in Milneburg), and in ragtime groups at Kolb's Restaurant (1914), Tom Anderson's restaurant, Triangle Theatre Orchestra (1914-1916), and with Tony Parenti. He might have influenced Bix Beiderbecke.

In 1916, Guarente toured throughout Texas under the name of Ragtime Frank. He then played with the Alabama Five, but joined the Army during World War I. After his service, he moved to Philadelphia and joined Charlie Kerr's band.

In 1921, Guarente became a member of Paul Specht's dance orchestra that was one of the first to spawn a smaller group of its members, called the Georgians. For the next four years, Guarente performed and recorded (forty-two songs) with Specht's groups, including during a European tour in 1923. Guarente was an indispensable part of both bands, and became leader of the Georgians. From 1924 to 1928, he played mostly in Europe. His newly formed New Georgians groups became very popular, and he became known as a leading soloist.

In 1927, Guarente played with Carroll Gibbon's Savoy Orpheans, the Rhythmic Eight, and freelanced. He returned to the U.S. in 1928, rejoining Specht's large band, but by this time, Guarente's style of playing had become old-fashioned. In the early 1930s, he mostly worked as a studio player and lead trumpeter in various bands, including those of Victor Young (1930-36), Jack Teagarden, the Dorsey Brothers, Bing Crosby, the Boswell Sisters, and others.

During Guarente's career, he recorded for several labels including Columbia, Banner, Kalophon, Zonophone, and HMVB. Ill health in 1941 caused him to give up the trumpet forever. He died in 1942 at the age of forty-eight.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Frank Guarente" (http://jazzagemusic.blogspot.com); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Guarneri, Mario (b. Oakland, California, Dec. 5, 1942). American trumpeter. Guarneri grew up in Berkeley, California, until he was eight years old, when he and his family moved to Orinda, California (near San Francisco). His first teachers were Eddie Smith and Hans Adelman. After graduating from Miramonte High School in 1960, he attended the University of Southern California from 1960 to 1964, studying with James Stamp and Lester Remsen, and earning a bachelor of music degree. He did graduate work at The Juilliard School in New York City with William Vacchiano from 1964 to 1966. He also studied with Vince DeRosa, Roy Poper, and Charles Budd.

Guarneri was a member of the Los Angeles Philharmonic from 1960 to 1983 (mostly second trumpet), and also taught at the California School of the Arts. From 1981 to 1992, he was principal trumpet of the Los Angeles Chamber Orchestra, as well as a studio musician, recording over three hundred movie soundtracks: his trumpet solos are featured in Rocky II, Lonesome Dove, and The Godfather III. In addition, Guarneri has played with the New York Philharmonic, San Francisco Symphony Orchestra, Radio City Music Hall, Barnum and Bailey Circus, Earl Hines, Frank Zappa, Sarah Vaughan, Roger Kellaway, and the San Francisco Opera & Ballet Orchestra. He was also a member of the Los Angeles Brass Quintet, taught at the California Institute of Art (from 1970) and the University of California-Los Angeles (1980-93), and has been teaching at the San Francisco Conservatory (since 1992). In 1987, he lectured, performed, and was a judge at the International Trumpet Guild Conference at Western Michigan University.

A highly versatile musician, Guarneri has made solo recordings including classical albums such as Concerto for Trumpet and Bassoon (Crystal), After the Butterfly (Nonesuch), and Mario Guarneri Performs Kupferman, Hindemith, Wolpe, and Subotnick (Musical Enterprises/ The Berp). His jazz CDs include From My Heart, Choices, and Tell Your Story (each on the GuarneriJazz label). He invented the B.E.R.P. (Buzz Extension and Resistance Piece) in 1986, a device clamped to the mouthpiece receiver of a trumpet that allows the player to play the mouthpiece only while holding the trumpet in a normal manner.

Guarneri and flautist Janet Ketchum were married in 1987 and had three children: Miles (b. 1972), Julia (b. 1989), and Adam (b. 1992). They were divorced in 1999. His hobbies include hiking, yoga, composing, and traveling.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Mario Guarneri" (www.berp.com/jazz/bios.htm); "Mario Guarneri" (www.sfcm.edu/faculty/guarneri.aspx); personal interviews, Mar. 1, 2011 and Mar. 6, 2011.

Guérin, Roger (b. Sarrebruck, France, Jan. 9, 1926; d. Saintes Maries de la Mer, France, Feb. 6, 2010). French trumpeter. Guérin was considered by many to be the greatest French jazz trumpeter during the 1950-80s. He studied the violin at age eight, and began playing the trumpet at age eleven or twelve. He soon joined the Beynes Municipal Band (1937-46) and later served in the French army, playing in the 151st Infantry Regiment Band based in Metz, and taking lessons from professor Narbonne. During this time, Guérin heard the new jazz style of bebop by listening to recordings of Dizzy Gillespie and Charlie Parker on the Firestone Voice of America radio show, and captivated by this new style, formed a jazz (army) group with sax player Teddy Hameline.

After his military obligations, Guérin moved to Paris to study with Jean Greffin of the Paris Opera and began his professional career on October 1, 1947 as a violin and trumpet player in the Aimé Barelli Orchestra. He also jammed with numerous musicians including several leading American jazz players such as Roy Eldridge (1950), Kenny Clarke (1949), and Charlie Parker (1950). At age twenty, Guérin entered the Paris Conservatory where he studied with Raymond Sabarich until 1950, and composition with Jean Barraqué. He made a recording with Rex Stewart in 1948 and performed with the Claude Bolling Orchestra, and later (1950-53) with Django Reinhardt. Guérin quickly became the leading jazz trumpeter in Paris, which resulted in invitations to perform with all of the finest jazz artists in the country. He also began doing studio work in 1949, playing many recordings and radio broadcasts. In 1951, he met and married his first wife, singer Monique (later known under the name of Aldebert) with whom he had a son, Jean-Michel (b. 1952).

The 1950s and '60s saw a huge output of recordings by Guérin. He began playing the flugelhorn, and soon added it to his jazz trumpet performances (1954). His recording of I Remember Clifford won him the Django Reinhardt Prize, and his recording of Suite en Ré bémol pour Quartette de Jazz with Martial Solal won the Stan Kenton Prize. In 1958, Guérin and a few others represented France by becoming members of the International Youth Band of George Wein and Marshall Brown. The band performed in New York where Guérin had a chance to meet jazz greats Thelonius Monk, Miles Davis, and Maynard Ferguson. In Newport, Louis Armstrong sat in with Guérin and the IYB. In 1962, Guérin married his second wife, Lily.

In 1959, Guérin replaced Clark Terry in the Quincy Jones Orchestra of Paris. The orchestra performed at the Olympia for three weeks with Nat King Cole and toured Switzerland. In 1962, Guérin joined Dizzy Gillespie's band, forming a lifelong friendship with his early jazz idol. Beginning in 1965, Guérin began leading big bands and became a popular swing trumpet soloist. In that same year, he took part in a recording session with Woody Shaw, and performed with Snooky Young at the Lugano Festival. He recorded an album with trumpeter Ivan Jullien, and, with singer Claude Nougaro, he played the trumpet part for the song, Armstrong (Nougaro's tribute to Louis Armstrong sung to the tune of Go Down Moses), which became a popular hit.

In 1966, Guérin founded the Paris Jazz All Stars, previously known as the Grand Jazz Orchestra of Paris. He was among the first French musicians to experiment with free jazz (something he ultimately did not care for).

Guérin spent part of 1969 in the United States, playing at Donte's in Los Angeles and traveling to New Orleans. After returning to Paris late that year, he became conductor of the Casino de Paris for a Zizi Jeanmaire review. He also played with the Slide Hampton Brass Ensemble (French radio, 1970) and Trompettes de Paris with Roger Delmotte and Georges Jouvin (1971-72) that presented a television show in April of 1971. On February 21, 1970 Guérin costarred with Maurice André in a television special called Side by Side: The Trumpet. During the following years, he performed with numerous artists including Dino Cagnasso (1978), Martial Solal (from 1980), Cat Anderson (Feb. 1979), Bill Coleman (Apr. 1980), Ella Fitzgerald (1980), Doc Cheatham, Kenny Clarke, Duke Ellington, John Lewis, and many others. He also recorded accompaniments with singers Maxim LeForestier, Jacques Bertin, Judy Garland, and Ella Fitzgerald. In 1979, he was selected to perform with Gunther Schuller in Rolf Liebermann's twelve-tone work, Concerto for Jazz Band and Orchestra.

During his career, Guérin performed and recorded with hundreds of leading musicians. He recorded soundtracks for numerous films including Les Orgueilleux (1953), A bout de souffle (1959), J'irai cracher sur vos tombes (1959), Paris Blues (1960, with Louis Armstrong and Duke Ellington), and others. He appears onscreen in films such as Nous irons à Paris (1949), Les Joyeux Pèlerins (1951, with Aimé Barelli), and Les Oeufs Brouillés (1976). He wrote several articles about jazz and jazz performers, taught big band at the St. Germain-en-Laye Conservatorie (1965), and trumpet at the Centre d'Information Musicale (1976-80). He also taught in the cities of Aulnay (1976-91), Souillac (1976-80), Le Mans (1976-77), Châtenay-Malabry (1980), Evron (1980-83), and Paris (1981-90). He recorded for many labels including Pacific, Decca, Mercury, DRG, Oreil Studio, Nuance, Carlyne Car, Vogue, Presto, Swing, Philips, Gaumont Musique, Versailles, Columbia, Epic, Pluriel, and Ducretet-Thomson. A truly versatile musician, Guérin was an accomplished trumpeter, vocalist, violinist, and pianist who opened the way for a new generation of French jazz trumpeters represented by Jean-Loup Longnon, Michel Delakian, Eric LeLann, and François Chassagnite.

In 1990, Guérin left Paris and retired to Saintes Maries de la Mer in Southeast France. He continued playing with local musicians until January 20, 2010, just two weeks prior to his death at age eighty-four. Among his many pupils are Bernard Balestier, Jean-Paul Briffaux, François Chassagnite, Patrick Fabert, Philippe Gibrat (trombone), Michel Laplace (in Nîmes, 1979 and 1981), and René Périnelli (informal lessons). Guérin was a friendly man with a good sense of humor. Numerous jazz musicians performed at his funeral on February 10, 2010.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Roger Guérin or The Jazz Trumpet (Der Jazzfreund, 1993); Laplace, Michel. "Roger Guérin (1926-2010)" (manuscript of article submitted to the International Trumpet Guild Journal, February 2010); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. a study and a complete discography, extracts on mp3 and a video clip; Oct. 2008); Laplace, Michel. "Roger Guérin (1926-2010): A Jazz Trumpet Great of the Twentieth Century" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Oct. 2010).

Guerrier, David (b. Pierrelatte, Drôme, France, Dec. 2, 1984). French trumpet and horn soloist. Considered to be a true genius of the trumpet and horn, Guerrier has already reached a level of achievement that eclipses others of his generation. He first learned to play the trumpet and cornet at the age of seven from Serge Vivarès at a music school in Tricastin. He then studied with Pierre Dutot at the Villeurbanne School, and then at the Conservatoire National Supérieur de Musique in Lyons, graduating with distinction (1997-2000). He also studied the natural (valveless) trumpet with Jean-François Madeuf (1998-2001) and the horn with Michel Garcin-Marrou (2002-2005). Postgraduate studies on trumpet were with Hans Gansch at the Mozarteum in Salzburg (2002-03) and on Vienna horn with Roland Berger in Vienna (2004).

Since age fourteen, Guerrier has won first prize in every competition he has entered, but one: the Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Competition (Bad Säckingen, Nov. 24-26, 2000), where Andrey Kovalinsky edged him out for first. The many others included Concours Lutèce (Paris, 1996), Markneukirchen (1997), Porcia (1998), Maurice André International Concours (Paris, 2000), Young Concert Artists Guild (New York, 2000), and Munich Competition ARD (2003), among others.

He toured with the Mediterranean Youth Orchestra, European Union Youth Orchestra, and the third Académie du Musique des XXe siècle under the direction of Pierre Boulez and David Robertson (summer 1999). His solo tours with piano accompaniment have taken him all over Europe, the United States, and Mexico. Guerrier was guest soloist with the Coahuila Camerata (Mexico), Basel Symphony Orchestra, Geneva Chamber Orchestra, Venice Chamber Orchestra, Musica Viva (Portugal), Concerts Colonne, Lyons Chamber Orchestra, Bordeaux National Orchestra, Toulouse National Orchestra, and his own Turbulences Brass Ensemble; he also performed in concerts in the United States (2004).

In late 2004, he joined the Orchestre National de France as principal horn. He left it in 2009 to play one season, also as principal horn, with the Orchestre Philharmonique du Luxembourg. At the moment he has no fixed orchestral position, but he occasionally performs as founder-member with a newly-formed group that plays on original instruments, La Chambre Philharmonique. He was featured with the Caratini Jazz Ensemble (2006), and on French television in The Night of David Guerrier (2007), where he played pieces by Böhme, Mozart, Tomasi, Ligeti, Klosé, Arban, and Al Hirt—switching among trumpet, cornet, horn, and ophicleide!

Guerrier has made numerous recordings on trumpet and horn. He is also active as a performer on the natural trumpet, natural horn, and keyed trumpet, and can also play trombone, violin, and clarinet. He presented recitals at the 2001 and 2002 ITG conferences. His hobbies are fishing and instrument collecting.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Mathez, Jean-Pierre. "4th Concours de Trompette Maurice André, Paris, 2000" (Brass Bulletin, no. 112, IV/2000); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); personal information given to Edward Tarr (email, Feb. 27, 2013).

Guggenberger, Wolfgang (b. Sonthofen, Bavaria, May 19, 1957). German trumpeter. At age eighteen, Guggenberger (not to be confused with the Frankfurt trumpeter of the same name, see entry below) won first prize in a local youth competition, the European Prize in the National Youth Music Competition, and achieved a great deal of attention when he won second prize in the German Music Competition in Bonn in 1978. He studied at the Richard Strauss Conservatory in Munich with Rolf Quinque, and at the Musikhochschule in Trossingen with Horst-Dieter Bolz. He also studied for two years with Vincent Cichowicz, Adolph Herseth, and Arnold Jacobs in Chicago.

Guggenberger played in the Konzerte des Deutschen Musikrates from 1982 to 1992, cofounded the Jan Koetsier Trio in 1988, and has released three solo CDs, among them Music for Trumpet and Organ on the Ambitus label. From 1986 to 2005, he taught at the Richard Strauss Conservatory, and in May 2005 was appointed professor of trumpet at Trossingen Music University in Southwest Germany. As a noted pedagogue, Guggenberger, whose publications include Basics Plus (Rundel Music Publishers), has presented solo concerts and master classes around the world, and is a member of the German Music Council.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Wolfgang Guggenberger Masterclass" (www.trumpetguild.org/news/news05/418guggenbergertrossingen.htm).

Guggenberger, Wolfgang (b. Memmingen, Bavaria, Mar. 6, 1962). German trumpeter. Guggenberger (not to be confused with the Munich trumpeter of the same name [see entry above]) began playing in a local Posaunenchor, and studied from the age of twelve with Alfred Storz, a former trombonist with the Berlin Philharmonic. After participating in the military music corps in Ulm, he studied with Kurt Nagel at the Hochschule für Musik in Heidelberg-Mannheim from 1982 to 1986. He was a member of the National Theater Orchestra in Mannheim in 1985, played in the Opera House and Museum Orchestra in Frankfurt beginning in 1986, and was a member of the Festival Orchestra in Bayreuth in 1989 and the Gustav Mahler Festival Orchestra in Kassel in 1991 and 1995. Guggenberger has performed with the Frankfurt Chamber Brass Quintet and the larger Frankfurt Chamber Brass, and freelances with numerous ensembles including the Frankfurt City Stage Big Band and the Bamberg Symphonic Big Band.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Trumpet section of the Frankfurt Opera and Museum Orchestra. Front row: David Tasa, Markus Bebek, and Wolfgang Basch; back row: Wolfgang Guggenberger and Dominik Ring

Gunn, Russell (b. Chicago, Illinois, Oct. 20, 1971). American trumpeter. Gunn's family moved to East St. Louis when he was nine years old. He began playing the trumpet a year later, but his musical interests were focused on rap music. Although his desire was to become a rap musician, Gunn changed directions at age sixteen, and made jazz his career. While in high school, he participated in an award-winning big band that performed in 1989 at the Montreux Jazz Festival in Switzerland. Gunn was given an award there for "Most Outstanding High School Trumpeter." After high school, he received a full music scholarship to attend Jackson State University in Mississippi. He spent two years there, but returned to East St. Louis where he freelanced. He also worked as a musician on several cruise ships.

Gunn developed a rather unique style of playing that is based on traditional jazz (influenced by Clifford Brown, Miles Davis, Booker Little, Lee Morgan, and Freddie Hubbard), rap music (his early idol was LL Cool J), and HipHop. The well-known jazz conductor Oliver Lake encouraged Gunn to move to New York, so Gunn made the move in 1994, joining Wynton Marsalis's Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra for their Blood on the Fields tour. Gunn soon became a regular member of the LCJO, and also performed with the Jimmy Heath band, Branford Marsalis's Buckshot Lafongue (1995), Marcus Roberts, Roy Hargrove, James Moody, John Hicks, Oliver Lake, and several R&B bands. Gunn was also selected to play lead trumpet with the Mississippi Symphony Orchestra for Gunther Schuller's Journey Into Jazz, and recorded the television soundtrack for Moon Over Miami.

Gunn is considered by many to be one of the future giants of jazz trumpet. He spent most of 2000 touring with D'Angelo, and released a Grammy-nominated CD titled Ethnomusicology, Vol. 1 (self-produced), named after his own group of the same name. Other recordings followed, including vols. 2, 3, and 4 of Ethnomusicology, Russell Gunn Plays Miles, Young Gunn, Young Gunn Plus, Blue on the D.L., Smokin' Gunn, Love Requiem, Gunn Fu, and Mood Swings. He has already performed at many of the world's leading venues.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Russell Gunn" (www.allaboutjazz.com).

Guriev [Guryev], Yevgeny (b. Belgorod region, Russia, 1983). Russian trumpeter. Guriev is perhaps the biggest star of the young generation of trumpeters in Russia. He first studied with Nikolai Alexandrovich at the Kharkov Central Special Music School, then from 1997-2000 with N. Kulak there, and in 2000 enrolled at the Gnesin Institute, where he studied with Vladimir Aleksandrovich Dokshitser.

Since 2003, Guriev has been a member of the famed Bolshoi Theatre Orchestra in Moscow, and in 2006 was named one of its principal trumpeters. He entered the RAM Gnesin to study with professor Vyacheslav Prokopov, and in 2005 won first prize in the first International Competition "Rimsky-Korsakov" in St. Petersburg. In 2009, he also won first prize at the Timofei Dokshitser International Trumpet Competition in Moscow.

Guriev has taught at the RAM Gnesin since 2009, and is the founder of the Timofei Dokshitser Brass Quintet of the Bolshoi Theatre. He presents solo concerts throughout the world, and was a featured artist at the 2011 International Trumpet Guild Conference in Minneapolis, Minnesota

Bibl.: 2011 ITG Conference Program Booklet; Shook, Brian. "Bolshoi Theatre of the Russian Federation Trumpet Section," (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2012).

Photo in the large hall at the Moscow Conservatory by Miriam Hickman.

Gustat, Joseph ("Joe") (b. c1887; d. date unknown). American trumpeter. Gustat was the principal trumpeter of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra during the 1920s and '30s. He was a famous teacher who taught at the Saint Louis Institute of Music and taught Miles Davis when Davis was a high school student. Other important students included Elwood Buchanan and Levi Madison. His expertise was sought by Bix Beiderbecke, Rafael Méndez, Dizzy Gillespie, and Armando Ghitalla.

Gustat was greatly interested in all aspects of breath control, and published an article about it in School Musician magazine in October of 1936. For many years, he played on a Conn 8B trumpet (made from 1932 to 1940), an instrument commonly referred to at the time as a "Gustat." He composed a lovely solo, In the Mist (Caprice).

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2009); Reaban, Derek. "Joseph Gustat" (www.trumpetherald.com).

Gutterer, Werner (b. Triberg, Germany, Apr. 14, 1920; d. Hamburg, Germany, Sept. 11, 1991). German trumpeter. Gutterer's early music education was with his father Josef, a spa orchestra conductor. He studied trumpet at the Staatlichen Musikhochschule in Freiburg and studied trumpet and violin at the Karlsruhe Musikhochschule. During World War II, he joined a German Army music corps, and after the war, he played dance music at various military clubs. In 1948, he became a member of the German Radio Orchestra in Hamburg where he played in dance orchestras led by Kurt Wege, Franz Thon, Alfred Hause, Günter Fuhlisch, and Jo Ment.

He toured and recorded with Hans-Joachim Kulenkampff, and he was a guest trumpeter with the orchestras led by James Last and Bert Kaempfert, making numerous record albums with them. Bert Kaempfert's grandson was one of his pupils. His solo album is titled Trumpet Pops on the Import label.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Güttler, Ludwig (b. Sosa, Erzgebirge [Saxony], Germany, June 13, 1943). [East] German trumpeter and conductor. Güttler studied piano, organ, cello, and accordion beginning in 1948, then French horn and trumpet beginning in 1957. He was playing Bach's oratorios by age fifteen. From 1961-65, Güttler studied with Armin Männel at the Felix Mendelssohn-Bartholdy Musikhochschule in Leipzig. He became principal trumpet of the Handel Festival Orchestra in Halle in 1965, and from 1969 to 1980 was principal of the Dresden Philharmonic and of the Bach Orchestra of the Leipzig Gewandhaus. He was a professor at the Carl Maria von Weber Musikhochschule in Dresden from 1979 to 1990.

Before the Berlin Wall came down in early 1990, Güttler was unknown in the Western world. However, a flood of recordings produced during the 1970s and '80s came pouring into Western Europe and the United States during the late 1990s, making him a household name among trumpeters. He has produced more than fifty solo albums, including Classic Trumpet Concertos, The Golden Trumpet, English Brass Music of the 17th Century, Italian Trumpet Concertos, Ludwig Güttler: Trumpet and Corno da Caccia, Music for Trumpet, Corno da Caccia and Organ, and Ludwig Güttler Corno da Caccia for labels such as Berlin Classics, Eterna, Laserlight Digital, and Time-Life Music. He has championed the use of the four-valve corno da caccia, a modern instrument in B-flat (trumpet pitch) designed after the circular hunting horns of the seventieth century. In 1993, the German Phono Academy of Hamburg named him the "Discovery of the Year."

An extremely tall and gangly man, Güttler is a sight to behold atop a conductor's podium. He has conducted many Baroque and Classical chamber orchestras, and founded and conducts the Ludwig Güttler Trumpet Ensemble and the Ludwig Güttler Brass Ensemble. In 1985, he also founded the Virtuosi Saxoniae Chamber Orchestra and the Leipzig Bach Collegium. He has served as a judge at several international solo competitions in Paris, Munich, and other places.

Besides his extraordinary musical career, Güttler received the Deutscher Stifterpreis in 1996 for leading efforts to restore the Dresden Frauenkirche (Church of Our Lady), a beloved landmark that was destroyed during World War II. It arose from the ashes in 2005. He is currently the chairman of the board of the Society for the Support of the Rebuilding of Dresden's Frauenkirche.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); "Ludwig Güttler" (www.answers.com); "Ludwig Güttler" (www.bach-cantatas.com/Bio/Guttler-Ludwig.htm).

H

Haas, Johann Wilhelm (baptized Aug. 6, 1649; buried July 2, 1723). German maker. The Haas family of brass instrument makers was the most famous of all of the Nuremberg makers. In 1719, the Nuremberg business agent C.S. Dresde wrote that, There are others here who work for less…[b]ut…Mr. Haas is the best and most highly regarded. In his treatise of 1795, Johann Ernst Altenburg stated (pg. 10, translated), Be that as it may, trumpets made by J. W. Haas in Nuremberg and set with angel-heads are commonly held to be the best.

Johann Wilhelm Haas, who probably learned his trade from Hanns Hainlein, became a master in 1676. His trumpets exist in three types, from the simple to the ornate, which doubtless reflect price categories. The most ornate are of silver with gilded ferrules, garlands bearing the initials J.W.H. along with a forward-looking leaping rabbit (Haas in German = hare), elaborate engraving, and castings. They also include a casting of an angel with outstretched wings. Johann Wilhelm introduced the "late Baroque" bell flare, which displays a narrower bell throat and more rapidly expanding terminal flare than those by earlier makers. The following generations of the Haas family made no changes in design to his trumpets, and their instruments are found in great numbers throughout all of Europe.

Haas's son and grandson eventually took over the family business, but continued to sign their instruments with his name instead of their own. Johann Wilhelm's youngest son, Wolf Wilhelm (1681-1760, master in 1706) was head of the firm and was also highly respected as a maker. His instruments still depicted a leaping rabbit, but with its head looking backwards. Wolf Wilhelm's son Ernst Johann Conrad (1723-92, master in 1748), born the same year that Johann Wilhelm died, was the last of the successful family makers; the leaping hare on his instruments looks forward.

No instruments survive by his son Johann Adam (1679-1817, master in 1796), who died in poverty.

Bibl.: Bate, Philip. The Trumpet and Trombone (Faber & Co.); Smithers, Don L. "The Trumpets of Johann Wilhelm Haas: A survey of four generations of Nuremberg brass instrument makers" (The Galpin Society Journal, 1965); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Tarr, Edward H. "Johann Wilhelm Haas" (The New Grove Dictionary of Music and Musicians, Vol. 10, pg. 626).

Photos courtesy of the National Music Museum, the University of South Dakota - Mark Olencki, photographer.

Haas, Wolfgang G[eorg] (b. Cologne, Germany, June 9, 1946). German trumpeter and publisher. Haas studied at the University of Cologne with Adam Zeyer, and in Switzerland with Edward Tarr (Basel, Schola Cantorum, 1960-79). Additionally, he studied with Henry Mueller, Walter Holy, Franz Willy Neugebauer, and Hellmut Schneidewind. He has performed with the German Federal Armed Forces Music Corps, Musica Negativa, Brass Art, Edward Tarr Brass Ensemble, Gürzenich Orchestra, and Trio con Voce Colonia. He is an active soloist and has recorded several CDs for trumpet and organ. He also taught at the Cologne Conservatory (1969-2009).

In 1985, Haas founded The Wolfgang G. Haas-Musikverlag Köhn, a publishing company mostly devoted to brass music. Of its over two thousand publications to date, approximately one hundred are for trumpet, and one hundred fifty are for brass ensembles. In 2008, he also began publishing Brass Journal Plus, a quarterly magazine. Haas has authored several books, biographies, and complete catalogs of composers such as Albert Hiller, Stanley Weiner, and Jiří Laburda.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Wolfgang G. Haas" (www.worldlingo.com/ma/dewiki/en/Wolfgang_G._Haas); Wolfgang G. Haas official website: www.haas-koeln.de.

Haase, Rudolf (b. Kamenz, Germany, June 6, 1935). German trumpeter. Haase began studies with Wilhelm Simon, and from 1954 to 1957 attended the Dresden Conservatory, studying with Erwin Wolf. From 1957 to 1958, Haase was principal trumpet of the Schwerin State Chamber Orchestra. He also taught at the Dresden School of Music from 1960 to 1980, and was principal of the Essen Philharmonic from 1982 to 1998. He taught at a music school in Essen from 1984 to 1997.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Habermann, Heinz (b. Tüddern Kreis Geilenkirchen, Germany, May 4, 1925; d. Sülfeld, Holstein, Germany, Feb. 14, 1991). German trumpeter. Habermann learned music from his father, a conductor. As a youth, he played piano, bassoon, viola, and trumpet. His first professional work as a trumpeter was in Hamburg with the National German Radio, and with the dance orchestras of Kurt Henkels and Viktor Reschke. He also did studio work for radio, television, and films.

Habermann became well known when he joined the orchestras of Bert Kaempfert and James Last. In 1965, he formed a duo with friend and trumpeter Manfred Moch called The Tattoos which recorded numerous albums between 1965 and 1975, including Non Stop Dancing, Pops Goes the Trumpet, and Party Pops. He also recorded with jazz artists Chet Baker, Joe Pass, and Phil Wilson.

Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hackett, Robert ("Bobby") Leo (b. Providence, Rhode Island, Jan. 31, 1915; d. Chatham, Massachusetts, June 7, 1976). American cornetist. As a boy, Hackett (one of nine children) learned to play the ukulele, guitar, and violin, and began playing the cornet at about the age of twelve. He dropped out of school at the age of fifteen in order to take a steady job as a musician at a local Chinese restaurant and at local ballrooms that broadcasted shows over the radio. He began playing professionally in 1929.

In 1933 at the age of eighteen, Hackett played in various club bands in Providence and Cape Cod. In the following year, he and Johnny Crandon formed The Harvard Gold Coast Orchestra, which performed at various New England colleges. The group consisted of four professional musicians and four medical students from Harvard University. Hackett also began performing on occasion with Ted Roy in Boston, at the Crescent Club with the clarinet player Pee Wee Russell (1933), and at Cape Cod (summer 1934). In 1936, Hackett formed a Dixieland band, which performed nightly at The Theatrical Club in Boston. With the help of newspaper critic George Frazier, the band received widespread attention and drew large crowds.

Hackett moved to New York in 1937 where he joined the Joe Marsala Band with Eddie Condon. Soon, he became coleader of a band that played at Nick's club in Greenwich Village. A month later, he was invited by Benny Goodman to solo with his orchestra during a Carnegie Hall concert in which he played I'm Coming Virginia in a tribute to the great Bix Beiderbecke. In 1938, Hackett recorded some famous sides with Eddie Condon: Carnegie Drag and Serenade to a Shylock. A year later, Hackett left the band at Nick's and played clubs with Eddie Condon, Jack Teagarden, Teddy Wilson, and others.

With the encouragement and a loan from MCA Records, Hackett formed his own big band in 1939, which played at the New York World's Fair, the Famous Door, the Ben Franklin Hotel in Philadelphia, and several clubs in New York. He made some of his first recordings at that time including Embraceable You, which became his theme song. However, within six months, the band was bankrupt. Still owing MCA three thousand dollars, and wanting to marry his childhood sweetheart (Edna), Hackett accepted a lucrative offer to play with Horace Heidt's Musical Knights. In mid 1940, he took leave of Heidt's band in order to record (along with Billy Butterfield) the soundtrack for the film, Second Chorus, starring Fred Astaire.

Hackett joined the Glenn Miller band in 1941, but developed dental problems, so Miller allowed him to switch to guitar for most of the concert pieces, but he still played cornet whenever possible. His recordings of String of Pearls and Rhapsody in Blue (on cornet) made him very popular. Miller negotiated Hackett's MCA debt down to one thousand dollars so that he could stay with the band. In 1942, the Miller band (including Hackett) appeared in the movie, Orchestra Wives.

When Miller joined the Air Corps in late 1942, Hackett became a studio musician for NBC and participated in several recordings of national broadcasts of the Condon Town Hall Concerts. A year later, he briefly toured with Katherine Dunham and then replaced Red Nichols in Glen Gray's Casa Loma Orchestra, with which he remained until 1946. He also became a staff musician for ABC, a position he held for fifteen years. In addition, he performed in numerous special concerts and recordings including Louis Armstrong's acclaimed 1947 New York City Town Hall Concert and Frank Sinatra's recording of Body and Soul (1947).

Hackett made many recording in the 1950s, including the Music For Lovers Only series for Jackie Gleason. He often appeared on television with Gleason, and on Martha Wright's weekly program. He reformed his band in 1952 and began a seven-month series of broadcasts for WMGM Radio. Hackett's sextet opened the very first Newport Jazz Festival in 1954, televised by ABC and recorded for the Library of Congress. He made four important recordings in October of 1955: Struttin' With Some Barbecue, Muskrat Ramble, Do You Know What It Means To Miss New Orleans, and Bugle Call Rag. He appeared with Eddie Condon's band at Constitution Hall in January of 1957, and at the same time was guest soloist with the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C. Later that year, his sextet toured the United States and Canada and made the recording, The Gotham Jazz Scene, for Capitol Records. He also recorded three additional albums with Jack Teagarden for the Dormouse label. After the tour, Hackett resumed his studio work and club dates in New York. In 1959, his quartet recorded twelve songs for Capitol.

The 1960s were also productive for Hackett. His various ensembles recorded for Columbia and Epic, and in 1962-63 played with Benny Goodman. In 1965, his band became the official group for Tony Bennett, touring Europe in 1965 and 1966. His band then recorded for Happy Jazz Records and Verve. In the late 1960s, he formed a quintet with Vic Dickenson, which toured a great deal before settling at the Roosevelt Grill in New York City. They recorded several albums called Live at The Roosevelt Grill for the Chiaroscura label.

In the fall of 1970, Hackett joined Ronnie Bill's Dixieland Band in Cape Cod, where he purchased a house in 1971. During that same year, he traveled to Japan with Dizzy Gillespie and toured Europe. In 1974, he recorded an album with saxophonist Zoot Sims for the Flying Dutchman label called Strike Up The Band that featured his last recording of Embraceable You. In Cape Cod, he formed his own record label, Hyannisport Records that produced several recordings featuring him and Dave McKenna. He often performed in Cape Cod with his son, Ernie, a drummer. In 1974, Hackett took part in the Grande Parade in Nice (France).

Hackett died of a heart attack on June 7, 1976. During his career, he took lessons from Ernest Williams, Fred Berman, and Benny Baker. Hackett mainly played cornet, but at times the trumpet with a little more drive. He was best known for his smooth and beautiful style of cornet playing. His musicianship made him a king of romance songs for millions. Because of his dental problems, he did not have an impressive range or technique, but his improvisations showed a great knowledge of harmony.

Bibl.: Ciccolo, John."Robert Leo Hackett 'Bobby'" (www.libertyhall.com/bobby.html); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Bobby Hackett" (www.gleasonmusic.netfirms.com/hackett.htm); Sudhalter, Richard. Lost Chords (Oxford University Press, 1999); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. an extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Haderer, Andreas ("Andy") (Baden [near Vienna], Austria, Dec. 16, 1964). Austrian trumpeter and flugelhornist. Haderer attended a classical music school in Vienna in 1983. He began his career as first trumpet in the Broadway show, Cats, in Vienna. He became a leading jazz soloist and studio player, and toured with various jazz groups throughout Japan, Hungary, Finland, Norway, and other countries. He has played with the bands of Conte Candoli, Art Farmer, Phil Collins, Quincy Jones, Clark Terry, the Brecker Brothers, Michael Gibbs, Patti Austin, Joe Zawinul, Mel Lewis, Diane Schuur, and many others including the Vienna Art Orchestra and the Vienna Big Band Machine.

In 1985, Haderer played in the Radio Big Band of Zurich. Since 1986, he has been a member of Peter Herbolzheimer's Rhythm Combinations & Brass, and since 1989 a member of the WDR Big Band in Cologne, Germany. In 1999, he became a professor of jazz trumpet at a music school in Cologne, and teaches at the Mainz Music High School.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Andy Haderer" (http://de.wikipedia.org/wiki/Andy_Haderer).

Hagans, Timothy ("Tim") Lewis (b. Dayton, Ohio, Aug. 19, 1954). American trumpeter. Hagans grew up in Dayton, Ohio. He began playing the trumpet in fourth grade; his teacher was Kermit Simmons, a former member of Woody Herman's band. After high school, Hagans attended Bowling Green State University in Kentucky, studying with Ed Betts for two years (1972-74), but quit to join Stan Kenton's orchestra (1974-77). He later became a member of Woody Herman's band, but was fired after one month because Herman felt that his solos were too weird, and because Herman didn't like the fact that Hagans had first played with Kenton. Hagans's biggest jazz influences were Freddie Hubbard, Woody Shaw, Miles Davis, and Thad Jones.

Hagans moved to Sweden (1977-81) and had great success there by performing with many American musicians that visited, including Thad Jones (1979-82), Ernie Wilkins, Sahib Shihab, Dexter Gordon, Kenny Drew, and Horace Parlan. Hagans also played with the Danish Radio Orchestra. During this time, he developed an embouchure problem due to his lower lip rolling out of the mouthpiece, so he sought lessons with Leif Bengtsson, who helped him correct the problem. Hagans returned to the United States in 1982 and settled in Cincinnati where he played in the Blue Wisp Big Band. He debuted his solo recording in 1983 and taught jazz for one year at the University of Cincinnati. He developed more embouchure problems, but received help from Bobby Shew who was touring in the area.

Hagans and his wife Rebecca moved to Boston in 1984. He performed with Jimmy Mosher, Bert Seager, and the group Orange then Blue. He also taught at the Berklee School of Music for two years (1984-86). The couple moved to New Jersey in 1987 which allowed him to work in New York City with numerous leading jazz musicians such as Mel Lewis, Joe Lovano, Fred Hersch, George Russell, Bob Belden, Bob Mintzer, Gil Evans, Maria Schneider, the Yellowjackets, Steps Ahead, and many others.

Hagans's solo albums include From the Neck Down (Mopro), No Words (Blue Note), Blue Spirits (Blue Note), and Hubsongs (Blue Note) with his friend Marcus Printup (1998). His personal favorite album is Audible Architecture (Blue Note). He has recorded dozens of other albums as a sideman. He has three daughters: Jasmine, Iris, and Lilly.

Bibl.: LaBarbara, John. "Tim Hagans, Audible Architect" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1998); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hagstrom, John (b. Chicago, Illinois, Nov. 5, 1965). American trumpeter. Hagstrom grew up in Chicago. He attended the Eastman School of Music in Rochester, New York, where he received bachelor and master of music degrees studying with Barbara Butler and Charles Geyer (1983-88). He then became a member of the US Marine Band in Washington, D.C. for six years (last three as principal trumpet). In the fall of 1994, he accepted a teaching position at Wichita State University in Kansas, and became principal of the Wichita Symphony Orchestra and Wichita Brass Quintet.

Hagstrom became the fourth trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in 1996, and moved to second trumpet a year later. He also served as head of the trumpet studio at DePaul University in downtown Chicago for many years. His solo CD, Music for Trumpet and Winds (Albany Records), was recorded with the DePaul University Wind Ensemble.

Since 2004, Hagstrom has been a design consultant for Yamaha of America, developing various models of trumpets and mouthpieces. He has presented lectures and performances for the conferences of the International Trumpet Guild, and is an active soloist and clinician. Hagstrom's hobbies include cooking and auto restoration.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); "John Hagstrom" (www.trumpetguild.org/2002conference/bios.html); "John Hagstrom" (www.trumpet-world.com/2010/07/john-hagstrom.html).

Halary, Antoine [Jean Louis] [Halary Père] (b. Paris, France, Jan. 14, 1788; d. Paris, France, May 16, 1861). French designer and manufacturer. Halary apprenticed with Courtois after which, in 1825, he purchased a brass-making company from Jean-Hilaire Asté. According to the archives of Sudre, the company that later purchased Halary's company, it was Halary who actually invented the valve cornet in 1825. This is certainly arguable because there is no patent for Halary's cornet. It could be, however, that Halary was the first to make a three-valve cornet. This point has been mentioned in Dauverné's method of 1846, as well as his method of 1857.

Halary also invented a type of disc valve (plaques tournantes) in 1835. He served on a large committee of instrument makers given the task of reorganizing the instrumentation of military bands. The committee became outraged with Adolphe Sax (not a committee member) who convinced the French military to purchase a huge quantity of instruments from his company. In 1857, Halary & Son opened a shop in London and received permission to manufacture Sax-model instruments in 1859. This company was later sold to Sudre in 1873.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Halcox, Patrick ("Pat") John (b. Chelsea, England, Mar. 18, 1930). English trumpeter. Halcox began playing piano at age four. At age seventeen, he switched to trombone, but after his stint in the Royal Air Force (1948-50), he permanently switched to trumpet. After his military service, he studied to be a research chemist, but played trumpet part-time with the Brent Valley Jazz Band and the Albermarle Jazz Band (1950-54). He decided to make his living in music when he joined Chris Barber's quintet in 1954. (The quintet later grew to seven, nine, and finally eleven players.)

Halcox's entire career was with the Barber band, lasting from 1954 to 2008 (a total of fifty-four years). The band made numerous recordings for labels such as Black Lion, Jazzology, Great Southern, and Storyville. Halcox was featured many times as a trumpeter, but he also played piano and sang. (His vocal solo on Ice Cream made it a popular hit.) Halcox also led his own bands on various occasions, recording for Columbia (1960), Plan Life (1980), Jazzology (1989), and Lake. Halcox also played on various film soundtracks, including Look Back in Anger (1959) and The Loneliness of the Long-distance Runner (1962).

During his long and varied career, Halcox performed and recorded with many guest artists with the Barber band, including Muddy Waters, Edmund Hall, Louis Jordon, Trummy Young, Russell Procope, Don Ewell, and Art Hodes. He led his own bands during the summers of 1980 to 1985. Halcox retired in 2008 at the age of seventy-eight.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Pat Halcox" (http://en.wikipedia.org); "A Tribute to Pat Halcox" (www.chrisbarber.net); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Haliday, Joseph (b. Yorkshire, England, 1774; d. c1835). Irish musician. Haliday is the inventor of the keyed bugle, later called the Kent Bugle and the Royal Kent Bugle. The instrument had five saxophone-like keys on its bell that rendered it mostly chromatic. Although similar in design to the keyed trumpet, its history and repertoire are completely different. (See Weidinger's biography concerning the keyed trumpet.)

Haliday's family moved to Dublin, Ireland, when he was an infant. As a young man, he became the bandmaster of the Cavan Regiment of Militia. He married Margaret Philpot and they had thirteen children, four of whom died in early childhood. He enjoyed writing poetry and becoming involved in the politics of the day.

Haliday patented his five-keyed bugle in 1810. A lawyer filing the papers misspelled his name as "Halliday," which later caused confusion concerning true ownership of the patent. He sold the patent to Matthew Pace, a well-known instrument maker, for the low sum of £50. Pace foresaw the potential of the keyed bugle and sold many instruments to military bands. Much to the consternation of Haliday, Pace did not protect his patent. Subsequently, several other manufacturers began producing keyed bugles. As a result, keyed bugles became ubiquitous throughout Ireland, England, and the United States until around 1870.

Bibl.: Eliason, Robert E. Keyed Bugles in the United States (Smithsonian Institution Press); Dudgeon, Ralph T. The Keyed Bugle (Second Edition) (Scarecrow Press).

Hall, Barrie Lee Jr. (b. Mansfield, Louisiana, June 30, 1949; d. Jan. 24, 2011). American trumpeter. After graduating from Evan E. Worthing Senior High School in Houston, Texas, Hall attended Texas Southern University, where he became interested in jazz, and soon became a member of the TSU jazz band. His style of playing was in the tradition of Bubber Miley, Cootie Williams, and Ray Nance.

Hall joined Duke Ellington's orchestra in 1973, the last year of Ellington's life. He stayed with the band under the direction of Mercer Ellington, and became its leader for a year after Mercer died in 1996. He continues to play on an occasional basis with the Ellington organization under Paul Ellington.

Hall has been deeply involved in church music for most of his life, and has adapted many of Ellington's compositions to a gospel style. He has also performed with Sebastian Whitaker's small group, and with Louis Bellson's big band.

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Barrie Lee Hall's official website: www.barrieleehalljr.com/bio.html; Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hall, Ernest [Alexander] (b. Liverpool, England, Aug. 24, 1890; d. Oct. 16, 1984). British trumpeter. Hall's father played the cornet, and gave Ernest his early music training. Ernest then studied with Walter Morrow at the Royal College of Music in London (1912). He played solo cornet at the Liverpool Empire Theater (1897), was invited to be soloist with the Miss Wells Band (Southport), and played as a member of the Cotton Harmonic Society, Royal Court Theatre (Liverpool, 1904-08 as second cornet), Hippodrome Theatre (1911 as solo cornet), and Lyric Theatre (London) where he performed The Chocolate Soldier by Oscar Strauss on the orchestral alto trumpet in F. In 1912, he toured the United States as third trumpet with the London Symphony Orchestra under Maestro Arthur Nikisch.

Hall served as a musician in the military from 1914 to 1919, and then played in the Thomas Beecham Opera Company. He played Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 in London for a Promenade Concert under Henry Wood, and then joined the London Symphony Orchestra as principal trumpet from 1924 to 1929. From 1930 to 1950, he was principal trumpet of the BBC Symphony Orchestra. He gave the English premiere of Haydn's Concerto (London, on B-flat trumpet) on March 30, 1932 with the BBC Symphony conducted by Percy Pitt. He played fourth trumpet in the Royal Philharmonic Orchestra from 1941 to 1956.

Hall was director of the brass section of the National Youth Orchestra from 1950 to 1973, and taught at the Royal College of Music in London from 1924 to 1962. Among his many students were David Appleyard, Malcolm Arnold, Crispian Steele-Perkins, David Mason, Philip Jones, Brian Broughton, Eric Bravington, M. Clothier, Jean-Pierre Mathez, George Reynolds, Laurie Evans, Cliff Haines, Michael Hinton, Ralph Izen, William Overton, Richard Walton, Stanley Woods, and Frank Renton.

As a soloist, Hall recorded Handel's Let the Bright Serafim (1928) and Bach's Cantata No. 51 (1928). He published two books, Difficult Passages (orchestral excerpts in two volumes). Early in his career, Hall played the cornet and trumpet in F, but then switched to the soprano D and B-flat trumpets. He was a B-flat trumpet advocate, pitted against George Eskdale who played mainly on the C trumpet.

Bibl.: Aitken, T. "Ernest Hall" (Brass Bulletin, vol. 49, 1985); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hall, Larry (b. 1948). American trumpeter. Hall is from Indianapolis, and studied with William Adam at Indiana University. After graduating, he toured and recorded with Buddy Rich (1974), toured with the Woody Herman band, and during the 1970s played with OX, later renamed Seawind. He moved to Los Angeles where he has become a top studio musician. He has recorded hundreds of film tracks and television theme tunes including CHiPs, Cagney & Lacey, Coach, and Too Close for Comfort. He has performed with the bands of Arturo Sandoval, Wayne Bergeron, Natalie Cole, Larry Carlton, Dianne Reeves, Rosemary Clooney, Lee Ritenour, Jason Robert Brown, the Big Phat Band, and the Resonance Big Band.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Annibale, Ed. Trumpeters Galore (Trafford); "Larry Hall Tribute Page" (www.lastudiomusicians.org/larryhalltributepage.htm).

Hall, Robert Brown (b. Bodainham, Maine, June 30, 1858; d. Portland, Maine, June 8, 1907). American cornetist and composer. Hall's first cornet lessons were with his father, a professional cornet player who played E-flat cornet in a band. Hall started on the E-flat cornet but changed to the B-flat soon after. He also took lessons from Herbert Manser, Newell Perkins, and Melvin Andrews.

Hall began his career as a cornet soloist in Old Orchard, Maine, and became the soloist with Baldwin's Band at Nantasket Beach. His first conducting job was with the city band in Bangor, Maine, in 1883. It was at this time that he began to compose.

Hall became a professor and head of music at Colby College near Boston. By this time, his reputation as a soloist had been established; he was often compared to the greatest soloists of the area, Henry C. Brown and Bowen R. Church. Hall had a tremendous range and was often heard leading his band in parade, playing marches an octave higher than written.

R.B. Hall was a noted composer, especially for his sixty-two known marches. Lyon & Healy published many of them. For this reason, he was dubbed the "New England March King." His best-known marches include Tenth Regiment—Death or Glory, Independentia, The New Coloniel, and The Officer of the Day. His solo compositions included Stella Polka, Annie Laurie with Variations, Carnival of Venice, and Bolero for two cornets.

Hall enjoyed drinking beer and spent many evenings away from his family in a local tavern. He suffered a possible stroke in 1902 that left him crippled, although he was still able to play the cornet. On June 8, 1907 at the age of forty-eight, he died in poverty from nephritis, a deterioration of the kidneys, possibly caused by his drinking.

At his funeral, the Westerville Band performed his March Funabre. The band shell in Averill Park (Westerville) was named the R.B. Hall Memorial in his honor, and his Boston "3 Star" cornet was placed in the Westerville Museum. Unfortunately, the band shell deteriorated and has since been removed. Shortly after his death, the State Legislature declared the last Saturday of June as "R.B. Hall Day."

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Halliwell, William (b. Roby Mill, Lancashire, England, Mar. 11, 1864; d. Apr. 24, 1946). British cornetist and conductor. Halliwell is famous today as one of the leading brass band conductors of all time, as well as being a distinguished cornet soloist from around 1885 to 1895.

Halliwell began playing the harmonium (a small organ) as a boy, and by age twelve, was playing organ at church. He began playing the cornet at age sixteen in order to join the Upholland Temperance Band, in which he became cornet soloist and bandmaster four years later. He was engaged as cornet soloist with the Wigan Rifle Band in 1887, and soon also became its bandmaster. He toured extensively as a cornet soloist until he was appointed senior bandmaster of the whole Brigade of Territorials in 1894. He later led the Standish Brass Band, and in 1910 became leader of Foden's Motor Works Band. He conducted performances for King George V and Queen Mary four times.

During Halliwell's long and successful career, he was conductor of dozens of the finest brass bands in England, winning an impressive seventeen first place, thirteen second place, twelve third place, six fourth place, six fifth place, and eleven sixth place wins between 1905 and 1939. He was known as an extremely modest man, and is buried in the Upholland Church Cemetery.

Bibl.: Littlemore, Allan. "British Open Championships—William Halliwell (1864-1946)" (www.4barsrest.com/articles/2004/art406g.asp).

Hamer, Ian (b. Merseyside [near Liverpool], England, Sept. 11, 1932; d. Brighton, England, Sept. 3, 2006). British trumpeter, composer, and arranger. Hamer came from a musical family; his father Wilf was a bandleader, and brothers George and Stuart played clarinet and trumpet, respectively. Ian's first professional experience was in his mother's band, and while serving in the Royal Air Force, he was able to continue playing in it.

Hamer joined jazz groups led by Carl Barriteau (1950) and Oscar Rabin (1954). He moved to London in 1953, and in 1955, joined an octet put together by Tubby Hayes, the Vic Lewis big band, and the band of Ivor and Basil Kirchin. In the following year, he played with the Vic Ash Quintet. During the 1960s, he co-led a band called The Six Sounds (from 1963), and his own Ian Hamer Sextet (from 1966). He also played at various times in the bands of Jack Parnell, Eric Delaney, Grace Cole, Harry South, John Dankworth, Mike Gibbs, Ted Heath, James Last, Woody Herman, Thad Jones/Mel Lewis, Kenny Wheeler, Clark Terry, Lalo Schifrin, Peter Herbolzheimer, and others. He recorded with The Beatles (Got To Get You Into My Life), Bing Crosby, Tom Jones, Dusty Springfield, Shirley Bassey, Barbra Streisand, James Last, and Matt Monro. He was also a member of the Top of the Pops studio band for nearly twenty years.

Hamer moved to Brighton in the 1980s, devoting a great deal of his time to his group, Ian Hamer and the Sussex Youth Jazz Orchestra. He was a great inspiration to many young jazz students, many of whom went on to become professional musicians.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ian Hamer" (www.scoredchanges.com/hamer.htm); "Ian Hamer (musician)" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ian_Hamer_(musician).

Hamilton, John ("Bugs") (b. St. Louis, Missouri, Mar. 8, 1911; d. St. Louis, Missouri, Aug. 15, 1947). American trumpeter. Hamilton grew up in St. Louis, but moved to New York City at age nineteen. He briefly played with Chick Webb's band in 1935, and later joined the bands of Billy Kato, Bobby Neal, and Kaiser Marshall (1935). He is best known for his work with Fats Waller from 1938 to 1942, and in 1943, he played with Eddie South. He contracted tuberculosis in 1943, and died in 1947 at the young age of thirty-six.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "John 'Bugs' Hamilton" (www.allmusic.com/artist/john-bugs-hamilton-p220381/biography).

Hammes, Ernie (b. Esch-sur-Alzette, Luxembourg, Aug. 18, 1968). Luxembourger trumpeter. Hammes studied at the Esch-sur-Alzette Conservatory, Metz Conservatory, Manhattan School of Music, and the Berklee School of Music. His teachers include Lew Soloff, Claudio Roditi, and Joël Sand. A highly versatile trumpeter, Hammes is comfortable in jazz, classical, and big band settings.

Hammes has performed at over one hundred jazz festivals worldwide, and has toured with Paul Anka, The Supremes, Maynard Ferguson Big Bop Nouveau, the Dizzy Gillespie All Stars, Duke Ellington Orchestra, James Moody, Claude Bolling, Bob Mintzer, Claudio Roditi, Lew Soloff, Carla Bley, Slide Hampton, and many others. As a classical player, he has performed with the BBC Wales Symphony Orchestra, Luxembourg Philharmonic, and Latvia Philharmonic Chamber Orchestra. Since 1994, he has also been the leader of the Army Big Band in Luxembourg, and is currently playing with the Consabora Salsa Orchestra, Festival Brass, Not just Brass, and Symphonic Brass. He is founder and director of the Luxembourg Jazz Orchestra, and since 1987 has been principal trumpet of the Luxembourg Army Concert Band.

Hammes has recorded over thirty albums as a sideman. He has also recorded several solo CDs, including Festival, Stepwise, Night Lights, Trumpet Classics, MF Horn 6: Live at Ronnie's, and Freed & Feier (featuring many of his compositions).

Bibl.: "Ernie Hammes" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Ernie_Hammes); Ernie Hammes's official website: www.erniehammes.com.

Hammes, Thomas (b. Osann-Monzel, Germany, May 25, 1978). German trumpeter. Even as a boy, Hammes showed great talent as a soloist by winning several local music contests. However, it was when he won a prize in the German national youth competition that his career path was set. He participated in the regional youth orchestra in Rheinland-Pfolz, and in 1993 studied with Peter Leiner at the Musikhochschule des Saarlandes in Saarbrücken.

Hammes has performed with the Frankfurt Radio Symphony, State Philharmonic Orchestra of Halle, London Brass, Symphony Orchestra of the North German Radio in Hamburg, German Symphony Orchestra in Berlin, Munich State Opera Orchestra, and the Berlin Philharmonic. Since 2001, he has been principal of the Southwest Radio Symphony Orchestra in Stuttgart. His solo CDs include Debut (2001) and Torelli Trumpet Concertos (Brilliant Classics).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Handke, Paul A. (b. Grünberg, Silesia, Germany, Nov. 23, 1867; d. Chicago, Illinois, Feb. 14, 1944). German trumpeter. Handke began playing trumpet at about the age of seventeen while in the Prussian Army. He then studied in Munich with Albert Meichelt (1914-1985), and was later trained in Vienna while playing principal trumpet in the Vienna Court Theater Orchestra. Handke married Meichelt's daughter Elisabeth in 1898, and played with the Vienna Philharmonic during the 1899-1900 season, but immigrated to the United States in 1901 to join the Philadelphia Orchestra; he became principal trumpet in 1902. Prior to World War I, he played summer tours of Europe with the Ballmann Symphonic Band.

Besides playing in the orchestra, Handke played at the Spring Bethlehem Festival (1903) and the Cincinnati May Festival (1904). He played principal trumpet in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra from 1903 to 1907, and became the orchestra's second trumpet from 1907 to 1912 (alongside Otto Schubert). He worked as Librarian of the CSO from 1916 to 1943, and held the post of second cornet/ fifth trumpet from 1925 to 1933. During the 1920s and 30s, he also worked part-time in various theater orchestras and entertainment groups in Chicago.

In 1909, Elisabeth left Handke for a former first violinist of the Chicago Symphony. They had three children together.

Handke is known for his handwritten copy of the Haydn trumpet concerto that he brought with him to America from Vienna. The solo part was published by Schilke Music Products. Handke died in Chicago in 1944 at the age of seventy-six.

Bibl.: Crown, Thomas. "The Chicago Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section 1902-1932" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2011); "Paul Handke" (www.Stokowski.org/Philadelphia_Orchestra_Musicians.htm); Laplace, Michel. Trompete, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Handy, W[illiam] C[hristopher] (b. Florence, Alabama, Nov. 16, 1873; d. New York, New York, Mar. 28, 1958). American cornetist. As a youth, Handy studied cornet, organ, and music theory with Y.A. Wallace at the Florence District School for Negroes. He took lessons from Carl Lindstrom of the Gilmore Band and played in several groups such as the Bessemer Brass Band (1892), Hampton Cornet Band (c1894), and the Nashville Band with the noted cornetist Elmore Dodd. He toured as a soloist with Mahara's Minstrels from 1896 until 1900 (alongside Elmore Dodd and George Swan on cornets). In 1898, Handy also performed with P.G. Lowery at the Omaha Exposition. From 1900 to 1902, Handy taught band at the Alabama Agricultural and Mechanical College in Montgomery, Alabama, and from 1903 to 1905 directed the Knights of Pythias band in Clarksdale, Mississippi. Soon after that, he formed his own band called the Memphis Orchestra that he moved to New York City in 1917, and that recorded in the same year. He also toured with Jelly Roll Morton in 1926 and with trumpeter Clarence Davis in 1932. With Henry Pace, he cofounded Pace and Handy Music Company in 1918. He also founded the Handy Record Company in 1922, but no records were manufactured.

Handy produced an extensive concert of African-American music at Carnegie Hall in 1938. He played with Billy Butler's orchestra at the Apollo Theater in New York in 1936, and recorded a series of jazz records with an all-star group of musicians in 1939. NBC Radio broadcasted an entire concert of his compositions in 1940 that was one the first programs ever dedicated to the music of a black composer. He was blinded by an accident in 1943 and so turned much of his attention to composing and publishing. From 1943 until his death in 1958, he was involved in several productions at World's Fairs.

Handy composed one hundred fifty works, his best-known being Memphis Blues (1912), St. Louis Blues (1914), and Beale Street Blues (1916). He earned the title of "The Father of the Blues."

Bibl.: Handy, W.C. Father of the Blues. An Autobiography (DaCapo); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Handzlik, Leon (b. Warsaw, Poland, Nov. 3, 1880; d. Multnomah County, Oregon, Dec. 6, 1967). American cornetist. Handzlik immigrated to America with his family when he was about twelve years old, and settled in Portland, Oregon. He studied the cornet with his father, and at age seventeen became the cornet soloist with the Homestead Carnegie Library Band in Pennsylvania. Later, he was selected to play in the famous touring bands of John Philip Sousa, Frederick Innes, and Arthur Pryor, and performed at the 1915 World's Fair in San Francisco. He was also a soloist with the Panama Pacific Exposition Band.

During his later years, Handzlik played in the 41st Division Band of the Pacific (two years) and led various military bands in Portland. He was also an active cornet and trumpet teacher: Portland Conn Company (from 1925), Lucas Music Company (Sieberling, 1926). He died at the age of eighty-seven.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Haneuse, Arthur (b. Horn, Belgium, July 30, 1922; d. Feb. 2, 2010). Belgian trumpeter. Haneuse studied at the Paris Conservatory under Eugène Foveau beginning in 1944, and became a member of the Paris

Opera Orchestra in 1952. Haneuse was a leading recording artist at the time, and performed the Symphonie Concertante by Gail Kubik (1914-84) under the baton of the composer for the French radio. He also played the premiere of the Concertino by André Jolivet (with the composer conducting) in Abbaye de Royaumont, near Paris, on June 10, 1950. He recorded Bach's Brandenburg Concerto No. 2 on a soprano F trumpet with the Basel Chamber Orchestra in 1961 (Philips label), and recorded an album of Baroque works with Roger Delmotte and the Vienna State Opera Orchestra conducted by Maestro Hermann Scherchen (Westminster/DG, 1960).

Haneuse was married to violinist Michèle Darfeuille-Boussinot. He discontinued trumpet playing in the mid 1980s in order to study psychology, earning a PhD in Paris in 1987. He died at the approximate age of eighty-eight.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom, Oct. 2008).

Hänsch, Renold ("Arnold") (b. Potsdam, Germany, July 27, 1966). German trumpeter. Hänsch's father, a trumpeter, sent his ten-year-old son to study with Herbert Kamprath at the Gebrüder Benda Music

School in Potsdam from 1976 to 1983. Hänsch then studied at the Hanns Eisler School of Music in Berlin with Hans-Joachim Graswurm from 1983 to 1987. After graduating, he freelanced in Berlin, and in 1991 earned a degree in music pedagogy.

From 1985 to 1989, Hänsch played in the funk/rock group, LAMA, and did studio work for the radio. He played flugelhorn in the Central Orchestra of the East German National People's Army (NVA), and in the big bands of Dieter Keitel and Alfons Wonneberg. In addition, he played in the Hubert Katzenbeier Sextet and the Rolf von Nordenskjöld Orchestra. He formed his own big band in 1993, and played in the Berlin Radio Big Band and studio orchestra of Günter Gollasch. He has worked as a freelance musician in show bands and theater orchestras in Germany, Austria, Russia, Switzerland, and Italy.

Hänsch taught jazz, Dixieland, big band, and trumpet at the Hanns Eisler School of Music in Berlin from 1988 to 1995, and since 1991 has also been teaching at the Potsdam City Music School. Other teaching posts have been at the University of Potsdam (1994-96), Berlin Temple Music School (1992-96), and the music school in Neubrandenburg (1995-96). He founded the Big Pack big band at the Johann Sebastian Bach Music School in Potsdam, and since April 2001 has been leading a big band at the Berlin Free University. He presents jazz workshops, works as a theater manager, and is a composer and arranger. He loves to fly, and has a private pilot's license.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Hansen, [Frederik] Thorvald (b. May 3, 1847; d. Jan. 24, 1915). Danish trumpeter and cornetist. Hansen was an important, versatile, and highly regarded musician who also played piano, organ, violin, and conducted. He composed primarily for the cornet, although a Romance pour le Violon, pieces for oboe and horn, a brass quartet (1904), and some vocal works also survive. He was a member of the Royal Lifeguards Band of Copenhagen (1872-74), and from 1882 until his death, was principal trumpeter in the Royal Danish Orchestra (Det kongelige Kapel), vice conductor of the Tivoli Wind Band and Concert Hall Orchestra, and assistant organist in Our Lady's Church (Vor Frue Kirke) of Copenhagen. From 1893 until his death, he taught trumpet at the Royal Danish Conservatory of Music; a manuscript of his method for low F trumpet survives there.

His Sonata, op. 18 (1903) for cornet and piano, dedicated to his patron Count W. Schulin Zeuten, is still performed today. Zeutin greatly admired Hansen's performance of the cornet solos in the August Bournonville ballets, and presented him with a beautiful cornet. For many years, his sonata was a required audition piece for vacant positions in the Royal Danish Orchestra. Hansen himself performed his sonata on April 6, 1903 in the Copenhagen Kammermusikforeningen [Chamber Music Society].

Bibl.: Edward Tarr. Preface to Thorvald Hansen, Sonata for Cornet and Piano (Spaeth & Schmid).

Hanson, Fay (b. Ogden, Utah, Aug. 13, 1913; d. Ogden, Oct. 16, 1973). American cornetist. At the age of sixteen, Hanson traveled to Los Angeles for cornet lessons with Herbert Clarke. Prior to that, she studied with Hyrum Lammers, who had retired in Ogden after having played the vaudeville circuit for many years. She became an excellent soloist, but soon discovered that her work as Clarke's teaching assistant showed her that she had an exceptional talent for analyzing students' problems. Ultimately, she became one of the greatest teachers of brass.

Hanson studied at the University of Washington and the University of Michigan, although she was never enrolled as a student. She also studied for a while at Weber State College and the Eastman School of Music. She became a brass teaching specialist and assistant band director at Weber State College (now Weber State University), and was head of its summer music camp. She gave hundreds of clinics and master classes at state and national music conventions, and taught at the Gunnison (Colorado) Music Camp for sixteen years (until 1963). She was especially good at teaching beginning trumpet and cornet students. She led the Ogden Trumpet Choir, consisting of twelve high school cornetists, which toured and performed many concerts during the 1950s and 1960s, and appeared on the national television program, the Today Show.

Hanson had a keen interest in all physical aspects of playing. She worked with several doctors in Ogden to develop a large set of "videos" made from individual X-rays of the inside of the oral cavity and throat as subjects played. Her knowledge of physical anatomy helped her become an expert at diagnosing physical playing problems. Much of her ideas and findings are published in her book, Brass Playing: Mechanism and Technic (C. Fischer, 1968).

Fay married a musician, Glenn Hanson; they had a son, Gregg, now director of bands at the University of Arizona in Tucson, and a daughter, Leigh, who is a retired special education teacher residing in Colorado Springs, Colorado. Hanson died of cancer in 1973. She was posthumously awarded the OSMA award from Tau Beta Sigma in 1974.

Bibl.: Hanson, Fay. Brass Playing: Mechanism and Technic (Carl Fischer); personal interview with Gregg Hanson, February 12, 2010.

Hara, Tomonao (b. Kanagawa, Japan, Oct. 21, 1966). Japanese trumpeter. Hara began playing trumpet at the age of eleven. Mostly classically trained, he played in his high school brass band in Chiba, and delved into jazz while in college as a music education major. He started playing professionally fulltime at age twenty-three. He released his first CD in 1993 at the age of twenty-seven and has released an album nearly every year since then. His style of jazz trumpet resembles that of Wynton Marsalis, and is perhaps best captured in his 2002 CD, Pinocchio. He spends a great deal of his time performing in the United States, and recorded the CD, Do that Make you Mad?, with trumpeter Brian Lynch. Hara, who performed on the soundtrack for Takeshi Kitano's film, Brother, in 2000, is known for his precise playing and straight-ahead jazz style. He has led his own jazz quartet and quintet since 1992, and has performed with Billy Higgins, Jimmy Cobb, John Hicks, Dusko Gojkovic, NHK Symphony, and Yuki Arimasa.

Bibl.: "Tomonao Hara" (http://jazzinjapan.com/interviews/235-tomonao-hara.html); "Tomonao Hara" (www.japantimes.co.jp/text/fm2008022211.html); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Harbaugh, John (b. Waterloo, Iowa, Nov. 6, 1953). American trumpeter. Harbaugh grew up in Waterloo, Iowa. He began playing trumpet at age nine and studied with Dennis Vance, graduating from West High School in 1971. He earned a bachelor of music education degree at the University of Northern Iowa, studying with Keith Johnson (1971-75), a master of music education degree at North Texas State University (now University of North Texas), studying with John Haynie (1975-77) and serving as a graduate teaching assistant, and worked toward a doctorate in music at Indiana University with William Adam (1981-83) as his associate instructor.

Harbaugh taught at the University of Idaho (1977-81), played with the Buddy Rich Big Band (1982), the brass section for Paul Anka (1983-85), and Tom Jones (1985-87). He was professor of trumpet at the University of Alaska-Fairbanks (1988-2002), and in the fall of 2002, accepted his current teaching position at Central Washington University. He has recorded as a jazz trumpet soloist with the London Symphony Orchestra, and has served as principal trumpet with the Yakima Symphony and other regional orchestras in Washington and Alaska. He has performed in bands backing Charo, Bob Newhart, Sammy Davis Jr., Mel Tormé, Clark Terry, Bob Hope, Andy Williams, Tony Bennett, Gerry Mulligan, and the Manheim Steamroller, as well as in pit orchestras for various Broadway musicals such as The Color Purple, South Pacific, and High School Musical. His three-DVD series is titled A New and Different Way of Getting More Music Out of the Trumpet (self-produced). He is a board member of the National Trumpet Competition.

Harbaugh and his wife Teresa, a pianist and accompanist, have five children: Ingrid (b. 1981), Heidi (b. 1983), John (b. 1987), Ben (b. 1995), and Tom (b. 1995). He enjoys his hobbies of being a gentleman farmer and target shooter.

Bibl.: "John Harbaugh" (www.cwu.edu/music/john-harbaugh); personal interviews, July 10 and Aug. 3, 2012.

Harbison, Pat[rick] L. (b. Jeffersonville, Indiana, Feb. 21, 1955). Harbison started playing the trumpet at age nine in his school band. His early teachers were Delbert Hoon, Russ Plylar, Ken Slone, and William Adam. During his teens, he became a protégé of Jamey Aebersold, the well-known jazz instructor. Harbison attended the University of Louisville where he studied with Leon Rapier, graduating in 1977. He then freelanced in New York City, performing with a variety of jazz, Latin, and dance groups. He also took trumpet lessons from Carmine Caruso.

Harbison left New York in 1980 to do graduate work at Indiana University, studying jazz with David Baker and Dominic Spera, and trumpet with William Adam. During those years, he performed and recorded with David Baker's 21st Century Bebop Band that included bassist Robert Hurst and tubist Harvey Phillips. He also worked with the legendary singer, Johnny Hartman. He began teaching at the Aebersold Jazz Workshop in 1976, and became a faculty member at the Cincinnati Conservatory from 1984 to 1997. During those years, he led his own jazz quintet and also played and recorded with John Von Ohlen's Blue Wisp Big Band, the PsychoAcoustic Orchestra, and many other jazz groups. He is currently a jazz instructor at Indiana University where he teaches jazz history and improvisation, coaches jazz ensembles, and leads his own jazz quartet. He also plays with Jamey Aebersold's quintet and the cooperative group, Rhythmico, with percussionists Steve Houghton and Michael Spiro, and guitarist Corey Christiansen.

An active composer, Harbison has published 20 Authentic Bebop Jazz Solos, Technical Studies for the Modern Trumpet, and Trumpetology, all published by Aebersold. His solo CDs include After All (WholeTone) and Conspiracy Theory (WholeTone). He presents clinics and master classes worldwide. Along with fellow trumpeter Alex Yates, he is active promoting 21st Century Trumpet, a series of ventures including performances, clinics, workshops, and online resources for trumpet students and professionals that encourages effective learning, expands concepts of musicianship, and promotes the elimination of the archaic and limiting separation between the jazz and classical worlds.

Harbison and his wife Kristin Berkman Harbison have two children: William (b. 1980) and Alissa (b. 1983). He is a sports fan who also enjoys literature, psychology, and history.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Pat Harbison's official website: www.patharbison.com; personal interview, Nov. 8, 2010.

Harden, Wilbur (b. Birmingham, Alabama, Dec. 31, 1924; d. June 1969). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Harden's career began in 1950 when he played in the blues groups of Roy Brown and Ivory Joe Hunter. After a stint playing in a Navy band, Harden moved to Detroit. He performed and recorded with Yusef Lateef in 1957 and recorded three important LP albums with John Coltrane in 1958 for Savoy. (These have since been reissued on CD: The Complete Savoy Sessions with John Coltrane.) Harden played with Tommy Fanagan, Elvin Jones, Thad Jones, Kenny Burrell, Pepper Adams, Doug Watkins, Billy Mitchell, and Barry Harris. He specialized in playing flugelhorn, making him a pioneer among jazz trumpeters.

At the age of thirty-four, Harden was forced to retire due to health problems. He did manage to record one tune with trombonist Curtis Fuller in 1960, but was unable to finish the album; Lee Morgan was brought in on short notice to complete the session. After that, nothing was heard from Harden, an introverted person who, during good health, possessed a warm and lyrical tone strongly influenced by Miles Davis. Other recordings by Harden include The King and I (Savoy) and Other Sounds (Original Jazz Classics).

After a solid but short career of only about ten years, Harden died at the age of forty-four. Posthumously, he was inducted into the Alabama Jazz Hall of Fame in 1991.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch Der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry. The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hardenberger, Håkan [Ulf] (b. Malmö, Sweden, Oct. 27, 1961). Swedish trumpeter. Hardenberger has been billed as "The World's Greatest Trumpeter," a title befitting his prodigious talent. He began playing the trumpet at age eight, studying for many years with Bo Nilsson of the Malmö Symphony Orchestra. By the age of twelve, he was flawlessly performing difficult piccolo trumpet concertos. He attended the Paris Conservatory where he studied with Pierre Thibaud (1979-82) before studying with Thomas Stevens in Los Angeles. He also took lessons from Timofei Dokshitser, Adolph Herseth, Edward Tarr, and James Stamp.

Hardenberger's fame quickly spread due to his recordings on the BIS and Philips labels. By age twenty, he was considered to be a star in the trumpet world, appearing as soloist with many orchestras throughout Europe. Since that time, he has appeared with the Los Angeles Philharmonic, Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Vienna Philharmonic, London Philharmonic, The Philharmonia, Berlin Radio Symphony, Academy of St. Cecilia Orchestra, BBC Philharmonic, Orchester des Bayerische Rundfunk, NHK Symphony Orchestra, Oslo Philharmonic, New Zealand Symphony Orchestra, Cincinnati Symphony Orchestra, New York Philharmonic, and many others.

Besides performing the standard classical trumpet repertoire, Hardenberger is a champion of new music for the instrument. He has commissioned many important new works, and composers such as Sir Harrison Birtwistle, Hans Werner Henze, Rolf Martinsson, Olga Neuwirth, Arvo Pärt, and Mary Anthony Turnage have dedicated works to him. It is in this genre of music that Hardenberger has no equal on trumpet.

Hardenberger's many albums include Baroque Trumpet Concertos (Philips), Classical Trumpet Concertos (Philips), Telemann Trumpet Concertos (Philips), Endless Parade (Philips), Gruber Aerial [and other works] (DGG), and Exposed Throat (BIS); he has also recorded for labels such as EMI, Sony Classical, and Decca. He regularly appears at important international festivals, and presents master classes throughout the world.

Hardenberger is a professor at the Malmö Conservatory, and a Fellow at the Royal Northern College of Music in Manchester, England. He is also a frequent lecturer at the Center for Advanced Musical Studies at Chosen Vale.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Håkan Hardenberger's official website: www.hakenhardenberger.com.

Hardin, Linda Anne [Farr] (b. c1954). American trumpeter and author. Hardin received her bachelor of music degree at Georgia State University in 1976. She studied with Keith Amstutz at the University of South Carolina where she received a master of music education degree in 1978, and a PhD in music education in 1990. She began her teaching career as a graduate teaching assistant, and became a public school band director in 1978. Before retiring from teaching in 2004, she received the Teacher of the Year award in 1985, 1996, and 2002. In 2003, she was given the Beaufort County Teacher of the Year Award.

Hardin was editor of the International Trumpet Guild Journal from 1978 to 1996. For her outstanding contributions, she was awarded the ITG's Award of Merit in 2006. As an author, she has published A Trumpeter's Guide to Orchestral Excerpts (W.R. Welch, 1977; Second Edition by Camden House, 1986), A Horn Player's Guide to Orchestral Excerpts (Broad River Press, 1978), Yamaha Band Student Teacher's Resource Guide and Yamaha Student Workbook (Alfred Pub. Co., 1994), and Inside John Haynie's Studio (coauthor, University of North Texas Press, 2007). She has also edited several science fiction stories.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Award of Merit: Anne F. Hardin" (www.trumpetguild.org/2006conference/awards.html).

Hardman, William ("Bill") Franklin Jr. (b. Cleveland, Ohio, Apr. 6, 1933; d. Paris, France, Dec. 5, 1990). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Hardman studied the trumpet and trombone as a youth and was influenced by Louis Armstrong and Roy Eldridge. While in high school, he began playing with Tadd Dameron, and from 1953 to 1955 joined Tiny Bradshaw's band. He later played with Jackie McLean and began his first stint with Charles Mingus (1955-56).

Hardman is perhaps best known for his playing with Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1956-58, 1966-69, 1970, 1975-76). He also played with the Horace Silver Quintet (1958), Lou Donaldson (1959-66), Lloyd Price (1966), Charles Mingus (1969-72), Bill Lee (1972), Billy Higgins (1972), and led his own combos now and then from the late 1970s. He also formed the Brass Company in the early '70s that had a large horn section patterned after the group by Miles Davis and Gil Evans. Hardman won the Downbeat Critic's Poll in 1973.

Hardman was a hard driving bebop player who could play quite lyrically at times. His later playing was influenced by trumpeters such as Benny Bailey, Joe Gordon, Kenny Dorham, Fats Navarro, and Clifford Brown. Some of Hardman's recordings include Home (Muse), Politely (Muse), Focus (Muse), Saying Something (Savoy), and Colors (Strata-East). Recent CD compilations include What's Up (Steeplechase), Reflections of Buhaina/Featuring Bill Hardman (Savoy), and Jackie's Pal (Original Jazz Classics).

Hardman moved to Paris in 1988 and performed regularly throughout Europe. He died two years later from a stroke. He was survived by his wife Roseline Hardman and their daughter, Nadege, born in Paris.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St Martin's Press); Watrous, Peter. "Bill Hardman, 57, Trumpeter Known For Improvisations" (The New York Times, Dec. 8, 1990); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books).

Hardy, Emmett Louis (b. Gretna [near New Orleans], Louisiana, June 12, 1903; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, June 16, 1925). American cornetist. Hardy was one of the early jazz cornetists, although he started by playing piano and guitar. He was highly regarded as a musician, and was the person who had the most influence on Bix Beiderbecke. Considered to be a child prodigy, the legend tells that Hardy outplayed Louis Armstrong on cornet in 1919 in an informal cutting contest in the Crescent City. Hardy started playing cornet at age twelve or fifteen, took lessons from Manuel Manetta, and played in the Algiers Juvenile Orchestra (1916-17). His first professional experiences were with Papa Jack Laine's band (1917, 1918) and Brownlee's Orchestra of New Orleans. He also led his own band.

Hardy was in a combo that backed vaudeville artist Bee Palmer, who took the band on the road, but when they reached Davenport, Iowa, Hardy joined a riverboat band for the next eight months. He returned to New Orleans by the end of 1919, leading another one of his own bands, but soon joined yet another riverboat band led by Tony Catalino. After establishing himself in Chicago, Hardy became a member of the New Orleans Rhythm Kings that used a two-cornet instrumentation. However, the Chicago musicians union caused him problems, and he returned to Brownlee's Orchestra in New Orleans. Although the band made several commercial recordings, Hardy was not present when they were made. He did make a few homemade wax cylinder recordings with some of his friends, but these have been lost.

Hardy was said to be a better cornet player than Bix Beiderbecke. Hardy's playing was described as having been more lyrical than any other New Orleans jazz cornetist. One of his relatives described him as a shy and unassuming man, with a dry sense of humor, and who was easily frightened by sudden loud noises. He was also superstitious about passing cemeteries. He was somewhat skilled in metalworking; he made his own mouthpieces and added a second water key to his cornet. Hardy died just four days after his twenty-second birthday due to tuberculosis.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Emmett Hardy" (http://en.wikipedia.org/wiki/Emmett_Hardy); "Emmett Hardy" (www.answers.com/topic/emmett-hardy).

Hardy, Francis (b. Armentières, France, Nov. 20, 1939). French trumpeter. Hardy began playing the bugle in a Fanfare in 1947. He began studying trumpet at the Tourcoing Conservatory, and from 1959 to 1963 was one of the last students of Raymond Sabarich (and considered one of his most gifted followers) at the Paris Superior Conservatory. Hardy won competitions in Geneva in 1963, and Munich in 1964.

Hardy began his career as coprincipal trumpet at the Paris Opéra Comique Orchestra, later integrated into the Paris Opera, where he stayed from 1963 to 1983. As a concert artist, he was very active during the 1970s with many great organ players such as Francis Chapelet (with whom he also recorded, specializing in Baroque music), André Isoir, Jean-Louis Gil, and Odile Pierre. In 1971, he premiered the very difficult Heptade by Jolivet with Sylvio Gualda on percussion. He also played with the Bernard Thomas Chamber Orchestra, and later with the Bordeaux-Aquitaine Brass Ensemble. He has taught at the music schools or conservatories in Bourges, Châtellerault, Poitiers, Périgueux (2000-04), and Bordeaux (1988-2004), and has been a guest teacher at the Schweitzer Institute of Music in Montreux, Switzerland.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hargrove, Roy [Anthony Jr.] (b. Waco, Texas, Oct. 16, 1969). American trumpeter. Considered to be among the best of the "Young Lions" of the 1980s jazz world, Hargrove is a versatile musician who is comfortable performing traditional jazz, bebop, avant-garde, and rap music. He grew up in Dallas where he attended Booker T. Washington High School for the Performing and Visual Arts. He started playing at age nine on his father's cornet, and took lessons from Bart Marantz during high school, while playing in the high school band under Dean Hill. The famous Wynton Marsalis visited Hargrove's high school when Hargrove was a junior, and was impressed enough with his playing that he arranged to have Hargrove sit in with several leading jazz artists, including Dizzy Gillespie. This led to Hargrove's playing a European tour with Frank Morgan during the summer of 1987.

After graduating from high school, Hargrove worked with Jack McDuff, Clifford Jordan, Art Blakey's big band, and Johnny Griffin (1988). He then attended the Berklee College of Music in Boston for one year (1988-89). During that time, he was playing several nights each week in New York, which prompted him to transfer to New York's New School in 1990. He began recording as leader of his own quintet for RCA/Novus in 1989.

Hargrove toured with the Jazz Futures (1991), played in the Jazz in Marciac Festival (1992), Carnegie Hall (1994), with Jackie McLean (1992), and recorded with Teresa Brewer in 1991 and Sonny Rollins in 1993, was commissioned by the Lincoln Center Jazz Orchestra to write The Love Suite: In Mahogany (1993), and led his own short-lived big band in 1995. In 1996, he performed at the Havana Jazz Festival, which inspired him to form his own Afro-Cuban group, Cristol. During the next two decades, Hargrove performed or recorded with Frank Morgan (1990), Steve Coleman, Helen Merrill, Ralph Moore, Dave Brubeck (1995), Shirley Horn, John Beasley, Oscar Peterson, John Mayer, T.S. Monk, Christine McBride, Jimmy Smith (1995), Jimmy Cobb, Ray Charles (Jazz in Marciac Festival, 1997), Trumpet Summit, and others. In 2009, he led a successful big band, but currently plays with a bop quintet and a funk group called RH Factor.

Among Hargrove's many albums (as leader) are Diamond in the Rough (RCA/Novus), Public Eye (RCA/Novus), The Tokyo

Sessions (RCA/Novus), The Vibe (RCA/Novus), Of Kindred Souls (RCA/Novus), With the Tears of Our Time (Verve), Family (Verve), Parker's Mood (Verve), Habana (Verve), Voodoo (with rapper D'Angelo), Approaching Standards (Jive/Novus), Moment to Moment (Verve), Hard Groove (Verve), RH Factor (Verve), Distractions (Verve), Nothing Serious (Verve), Ear Food (Emarcy) and Emergence (Emarcy). Hargrove won Grammy Awards in 1998 and 2002.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Roy Hargrove" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Roy Hargrove" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Harig, Matthias ("Motz") (b. Saarbrücken, Germany, Aug. 22, 1960). German trumpeter. From age ten to eighteen, Harig studied trumpet with Willi Thorn, and became interested in jazz during his teens. He played in regional jazz bands and attended jazz workshops with Uli Beckerhoff, Jiggs Whigham, and Siggi Kessler. He started his jazz career around 1982, performing at various clubs in Germany, Austria, Switzerland, and France, as well as at numerous international jazz festivals throughout Europe.

As a freelance artist, Harig has performed on radio and television, toured with Broadway musicals such as Hair and Elvis (1991-96), recorded many film soundtracks, and participated in numerous CD recordings with groups such as State of Things, Tumbao, Manuel el Chachi, CMMC Big Band, Experimental Orchestra Berlin, and the Berlin Big Band, among others. He is currently working in Berlin.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Harjanne, Jouko (b. Rauma, Finland, June 21, 1962). Finnish trumpeter. Harjanne began playing the trumpet at age seven, and at age eleven began studying with Raimo Sarmas at the Tampere Conservatory before studying with Henri Adelbrecht and Timofei Dokshitser. From 1978 to 1984, Harjanne was alternate principal trumpet of the Tampere Philharmonic Orchestra, and since 1984 has been principal of the Finnish Radio Symphony Orchestra in Helsinki. He has also played with the Finnish Brass Ensemble, Brasstime Quartet, and the Protoventus Ensemble.

Harjanne's solo career began when he won second prize in the Prague competition in 1987. In 1989, he was named Brass Player of the Year at the Lieksa Brass Week in Helsinki (of which he is now artistic director), and in 1990 he won first place in the Ellsworth Smith-International Trumpet Guild Solo Competition. In 1997, Harjanne was nominated for an honorary membership in the Finnish Trumpet Guild. For the past twenty years, he has toured the world, giving concerts and master classes at leading venues and schools of music, and serving as a jury member at numerous international trumpet competitions. Since 1986, he has been a professor at the Sibelius Academy in Helsinki.

A partial listing of Harjanne's recordings includes The Russian Trumpet (Alba), The Great Trumpet Sonatas (Alba), Trumpet Rhapsody (Alba), What A Wonderful Christmas (Alba), Romantic Trumpet (Alba), Norva (Fuga), Elegy (Cryston), Dramatic Legend (Cryston), Concert Pieces (Cryston), Festive Trumpet (Cryston), Symbiosis (Cryston), Slavonic Fantasy (Finlandia), Velvet Trumpet (Finlandia), Angel Music (Finlandia), Trumpet Aria (Finlandia), Proclamation (Finlandia), American Trumpet Sonatas (Finlandia), Trumpet Concertos (Finlandia), Finnish Trumpet Concertos (Finlandia), Trumpet Experience (Alba), Trumpet Concerto with RSO (Finlandia), Total Trumpet (Jase), Trumpet Adagio (Finlandia), Virtuoso Trumpet (Finlandia), Profile (Finlandia), and Concertos (Finlandia). He has soloed with major orchestras around the world and has been a judge at several international trumpet solo competitions.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Jouko Harjanne's official website: www.joukoharjanne.com.

Harkins, Edwin ("Ed") (b. Decatur, Illinois, Nov. 20, 1940). American trumpeter and composer. Harkins grew up in Champaign, Illinois. He began playing trumpet at age ten; his first trumpet teachers were Everett Kisinger and Victor Self. After graduating from Champaign High School in 1958, he enrolled at the University of Colorado as a business major, but after a year transferred to Illinois Wesleyan University as a music major, graduating with a bachelor of music degree in 1963. He studied briefly in Chicago with Renold Schilke before studying with Robert Nagel in 1963-65 at Yale University where he received his master of music degree. He also attended the Tanglewood Institute, studying with Roger Voisin. He again studied with Schilke in 1965-66, and performed with the Contemporary Chamber Players while studying composition at the University of Chicago. He then became a composition major at the University of Iowa in 1966-68, performed in the Center for New Music, and completed his PhD in 1968. Among his composition teachers are Gunther Schuller, Mel Powell, and Ralph Shapey.

From 1968 to1970, Harkins taught music theory at the New England Conservatory. When the conservatory began its jazz degree program in 1969, Harkins was selected to give classical lessons to the jazz trumpet majors. Wanting to perform more, Harkins resigned his position and moved back to New Haven, Connecticut, where he commuted to New York City for lessons with Carmine Caruso, Roy Stevens, and others, and to play gigs. He played with Little Anthony and the Imperials, the International Ice Follies, the Barnum and Bailey Circus, and other groups. His wife Bonnie (married in 1962), a teacher of students with learning disabilities, helped support the two of them. (She is now retired after serving for many years in the music department at the University of California-San Diego as a concert manager and graphic artist. Her hobby is silversmithing.)

In 1972, Harkins accepted a position as a Fellow at the Center for Music Experiment at the University of California-San Diego, where he taught trumpet and participated as a vocalist and composer in the Extended Vocal Techniques Ensemble quartet. Working with composer Robert Erickson, he became perhaps the world's leading trumpet performer of avant-garde music. His lecture and performance of Erickson's unaccompanied solo, Kryl at an International Trumpet Guild conference during the late 1970s established him as the superstar of contemporary music for trumpet. Harkins has performed in concert with other leading avant-garde performers including Vinko Globokar, Mark Dresser, and George Lewis. He has recorded works by Robert Erickson, Iannis Xenakis, Roger Reynolds, Bernard Rands, Edwin London, and many others for labels such as New World, Neuma, CRI, Philips, Lovely Music, Gena, O.O., and 9 Winds.

Harkins teamed up with Philip Larson to form the duo [THE], a modern composer/performer duo, which has been active for nearly forty years, and included a collaboration with John Cage and Toru Takemitsu in 1986. Harkins has performed with the San Diego Symphony, New Haven Symphony, and has been a guest soloist with the Los Angeles Philharmonic Green Umbrella Series, with Continuum in New York City, and leading contemporary ensembles around the world. He is deeply involved with advanced rhythm reading, a subject he teaches at UCSD, and about which he is writing a book.

Bibl.: "Edwin Harkins" (http://musicweb.ucsd.edu); personal interviews, Mar. 20, 21, 22, 2011.

Photo credit: Bonnie Harkins

Harnie, Edmond (b. Hal, Belgium, Sept. 15, 1920). Belgian trumpeter. Harnie began learning music and the trumpet at an early age, and by 1938 was playing in a local band. He later performed with Roger Rose & Heure Bleue Orchestre (1942-43), Ernst Van't Hoff (1943-44), Charlie Calmeyne (1943), Bobby Naret (1944), Paul Gason (1945), the Internationals, and Fud Candrix (1951-53). In France, he joined Eddie Warner (with Lalo Schifrin on piano), and Jacques Hélian (1956-57, alongside Pierre Thibaud on trumpet). Back in Belgium, he worked with Francis Bay (1958-61), Jack Sels, and Bert Paige. He also performed in Germany with Werner Müller and the Clarke-Boland Big Band. In Brussels, Harnie plays with Sadi (television shows), the BRT Jazzorkest led by Etienne Verschueren (for twenty years), EBU (European Broadcasting Union) Big Band, and at the West Music Club (2011). He played on numerous recordings and received a special award in 2000 at the Belgian "Django d'Or." He was an active trumpeter well into his eighties, but is now retired.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Edmond Harnie" (www.jazzinbelgium.com/person/edmond.harnie).

Harper, Philip (b. Baltimore, Maryland, May 10, 1965). American trumpeter. Harper grew up in Atlanta, Georgia. He began playing the trumpet at age ten under the guidance of his older brother, Danny. Another brother, Winar, is a noted drummer. Philip's career started in the groups led by Jimmy McGriff (1983), Little Jimmy Scott, Jackie McLean (1983), and Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1987-89, playing in France in 1988). Philip and his brother Winar formed the Harper Brothers Band that was quite popular from 1988 to 1993.

Harper has recorded with Cecil Brooks III, Betty Carter, Joe Chambers, Harry "Sweets" Edison, Cedar Walton, Errol Parker, Etta Jones, Houston Person, and many others. He has played with the Mingus Big Band (1995-96), led his own recording dates, and freelanced in New York City since the age of eighteen. He attended Rutgers University, studying with William Fielder, and the Hartt

School of Music at the University of Hartford, studying with Jackie McLean. He later played with Benny Golson and Jimmy Cobb (2005).

Harper has made over fifty recordings. Among his own CDs as leader are Soulful Sin (Muse), The Thirteenth Moon (Muse), Harper Brothers (Verve), Remembrance (Verve), You Can Hide Inside the Music (Verve), and Artistry (Verve).

Bibl.: Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Philip Harper" (www.allaboutjazz.com).

Harper, Thomas (b. Worchester, England, May 3, 1786; d. London, England, Jan. 20, 1853). English trumpeter, son of Richard and Ann Harper. When Thomas was ten years of age, the family moved to London where he studied music with R.T. Eley. He later became a member of Eley's Royal East India Volunteers Band for seventeen or eighteen years, and played horn and trumpet with the Adelphi and Drury Lane Theater orchestras during the last seven years of that period. In 1821, he succeeded John Hyde as principal trumpet in the King's Theater in the Haymarket, Italian Opera, the Concert of Ancient Music, the Philharmonic Concerts, and all major concerts in London. He also performed at all of the important music festivals nearby.

Considered to be the premier trumpeter in England, he was elected to the Royal Society of Musicians in 1815. He was a favorite in solo obbligati parts such as "The Trumpet Shall Sound" from Handel's Messiah, and "Let the Bright Seraphim" from Handel's Samson. The Morning Herald in London gave a wonderful review in 1845, praising, "The Trumpet Shall Sound," with Harper's trumpet obbligato, which rang out its clear and silvery tones, electrifying and enchanting the auditory.

Harper became professor of trumpet at the Royal Academy of Music from at least 1829 to 1845. Around 1830, he published a twenty-one-page collection of unaccompanied solos, duets, and trios for the keyed bugle that he and others had composed. He revised the trumpet and bugle calls in Hyde's Preceptor, which were accepted by the British military. He is best known for his slide trumpet tutor, Instructions for the Trumpet (1835, second expanded edition 1837), which is also the first method for the so-called Russian valve trumpet, cornet-à-pistons, and the keyed bugle. His instrument of choice was the English slide trumpet that he improved and had manufactured by John Köhler.

Harper had three sons and a daughter. Thomas John Harper Jr. (1816-98) became his successor and was a highly acclaimed trumpeter.

Bibl.: Webb, John and Scott Sorenson. Instructions for the Trumpet (facsimile edition of Harper tutor with comments) (Spring Tree Enterprises).

Harper, Thomas John Jr. (b. London, England, Oct. 4, 1816; d. London, England, Aug. 27, 1898). English trumpeter. Thomas Jr. was the son of England's finest trumpeter, and became his father's successor as principal trumpet in all of the leading orchestras in London during the mid 1850s. He was professor at the Royal Academy of Music from 1884 to 1893, where he taught John Solomon (1856-1953). He also taught at the Royal College of Music from 1884 to 1893 and was Sergeant Trumpeter to Queen Victoria from 1884 until his death. Like his father, he was a strong proponent of the English slide trumpet. It was due to his popularity that the slide trumpet endured as late as 1890 in England, even though most other countries including France, Germany, and the United States had adopted valve instruments.

Giving in to modern thinking of the time, Harper understood the benefits of valves and gave performances featuring the cornet and slide trumpet. He wrote methods for both instruments, Harper's School for the Cornet à pistons (c1865) and Harper's School for the [Slide] Trumpet (c1875), stressing in the latter that the cornet should not be used in the performance of music intended for the natural or slide trumpet.

Harper studied at the Royal Academy of Music from 1830 to 1836, and was a member of Costa's famed orchestra. He was a fine violinist and player of the pianoforte, who for a while played violin in the opera orchestra of Her Majesty's Theatre. He devoted most of his career to the trumpet, performing for royal weddings, christenings, exhibitions, openings, and visiting sovereigns. His obituary described his playing of the trumpet obbligatos in Handel's Let the Bright Seraphim and The Trumpet Shall Sound as "smooth, silvery, and unforced." He was personally described as being tall, handsome, and sporting a dark beard. He retired in 1885.

Two of Harper's brothers, both of whom predeceased him in death, were well known in musical circles—Charles Harper, first horn in Costa's orchestra; Edmund Harper (of Belfast), organist to Marquis of Downshire and a leading professor.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (English Third Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); "Thomas John Harper" (obituary, The Musical Times, Oct. 1898).

Harrell, Thomas ("Tom") Strong (b. Urbana, Illinois, June 16, 1946). American trumpeter and composer. Harrell's family moved to Los Altos, California (near San Francisco), when Tom was six because his father had taken a teaching job in psychology at Stanford University. Tom began playing the trumpet at age eight, and by age thirteen was playing in several local groups. He attended Stanford University and earned a bachelor's degree in music composition in 1969. Following graduation, he joined the Stan Kenton Orchestra, and after leaving Kenton a year later, played with Woody Herman (1970-71), Azteca (1972), and the Horace Silver Quintet (1973-77). He then freelanced for a while, played with the Sam Jones Big Band, Lee Konitz Nonet (1979-81), George Russell, and the Mel Lewis Orchestra (1981).

Harrell's life has been plagued with psychological problems resulting from a diagnosed case of schizophrenia. He attempted suicide while in college, but medications helped his condition. His wife,

Angela, travels with him and sees to it that he takes his medications. However, Harrell still appears to be "tuned out" while on stage when not playing. He speaks in a low monotone and rarely looks at people when they talk to him. Nonetheless, his performances are spectacular and he possesses a keen intellect. He has composed or arranged hundreds of big band charts for his own groups, as well as for many other top performers such as Phil Woods (1983-89) and Dizzy Gillespie (1987).

A prolific recording artist, Harrell has released over two dozen albums as leader. They include Moon Alley (Criss Cross), Stories (Contemporary), Visions (Contemporary), Sail Away (Contemporary), Upswing (Chesky), Time's Mirror (RCA), Labyrinth (RCA), Art of Rhythm (RCA), Bop Stew (Concord Jazz, with Phil Woods), Evolution (Concord Jazz, with Phil Woods), Aurora/Total (Adamo), Play of Light (Blackhawk), Form (Contemporary), Open Air (Contemporary), Passages (Chesky), Look to the Sky (Steeplechase), Paradise (Bluebird), and Trumpet Legacy (Milestone). He has also extensively recorded with Lee Konitz, Bill Evans (1979), Bob Brookmeyer, Lionel Hampton, George Robert, Charlie Haden's Liberation Orchestra, Lew Soloff, Nicholas Payton, Eddie Henderson, Donald Byrd, Mark Murphy (1979), Bob Berg, Arnie Lawrence, John McNeil, Gerry Mulligan, Charlie Shoemake, and Michael Davis.

A cool and hard bop player, Harrell has led his own groups, including an occasional big band, since 1989. He has received numerous composition commissions, grants, and awards including a Grammy nomination, SESAC award, and Downbeat magazine's critic poll awards. He has performed at every major jazz festival in the world and is considered to be one of the world's finest jazz musicians.

Bibl.: Keim,Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Tom Harrell" (http://www.allaboutjazz.com/); "Tom Harrell" (www.answers.com/topic/tom-harrell).

Harris, Benjamin Michel ("Benny" "Little Benny") (b. New York, New York, Apr. 23, 1919; d. San Francisco, California, Feb. 11, 1975). American trumpeter and composer. Harris was a self-taught musician who learned the French horn as a child, and at age eighteen took up the trumpet. His first professional playing job was with Tiny Bradshaw's band in 1939. He played with Earl Hines in 1941 and 1943, and spent most of his career performing in New York with musicians such as Benny Carter, Pete Brown, John Kirby, Herbie Fields, Don Redman, Coleman Hawkins, Don Byas, and Thelonious Monk. He recorded with Clyde Hart in 1944 and with Don Byas in 1945.

After 1945, Harris began playing less and less. He was a member of Dizzy Gillespie's big band in 1949 and appeared on a recording with Charlie Parker in 1952. He retired from playing in the mid 1950s and moved to Sacramento, California, and later to San Francisco. Today, Harris is considered to be an influential early bop player, but is perhaps best known for some of his compositions that include Ornithology, Crazeology, Reets and I, Wahoo, and Lion Den.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Harris, John (b. 1672; d. 1731). English maker. John Harris was the son-in-law of the famous trumpet maker William Bull, instrument maker and trumpeter in London for the "King's Musik." He took over Bull's business upon Bull's retirement in 1709-10. Harris is best known for his conversions of natural trumpets into English slide trumpets.

Bibl.: Brownlow, James Arthur. The Last Trumpet: a history of the English slide trumpet (Historic Brass Society); Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions).

Harris, Maurice [Maury] (b. Chicago, Illinois, Feb. 25, 1921; d. Palm Desert, California, Dec. 2, 2005). American trumpeter. He was the son of Russian immigrants who moved to Los Angeles in 1936. Although he wanted to play the trombone as a boy, his parents could only afford a used trumpet, which he excelled on. He became a professional trumpet player at age sixteen, performing in nightclubs and burlesque clubs. At age eighteen, he enlisted in the military and played in the Army Band at Fort Dix in New Jersey. After his service years, he returned to Los Angeles and became Freddy Martin's featured trumpet player at the Coconut Grove.

Harris became a top studio performer, playing in the MGM Orchestra and recording at Warner Brothers Studios for Bugs Bunny cartoons. He is remembered for his bugle calls in the film, Fort Apache, and for his walk-on appearance in the movie Grand Hotel. As a television studio performer, he played live on numerous variety shows with Bob Hope, Jack Benny, Dean Martin, Jerry Lewis, Red Skelton, Groucho Marx, Steve Allen, Johnny Carson, and others. He also recorded with Artie Shaw, Benny Goodman, Jerry Fielding, Henry Mancini, David Rose, Andre Previn, John Williams, and Maynard Ferguson. He was a member of Doc Severinsen's The Tonight Show band for twenty-five years, and performed with the Hollywood Parade Show.

Harris was married to Ruth Harris with whom he had five children: April, Linda, Cathleen, Debby, and Nicola.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct.

2008); "Maurice Harris: Tonight Show Bandmember" (Obituary, The Los Angeles Times, Dec. 11, 2005).

Hartl, [Johann] John F. (b. Schönberg, Austria, 1876; d. St. Louis, Missouri, 1956). Austrian trumpeter, violinist, and violist. Hartl immigrated to the United States in 1909 at the approximate age of thirty-three. He joined the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in January of 1912, replacing Jacob Borodkin who resigned midseason as principal trumpet. When Edward Llewellyn was hired as the new principal trumpet that fall, Hartl moved to the second chair where he played until 1915. He then accepted a position as second trumpet of the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra, which he left in 1916. From 1917 to 1920, he was third trumpet and a second violinist in the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra. In 1921, he returned to Saint Louis as fourth trumpet and violist. He retired from the orchestra in 1942 at the age of sixty-six. He died fourteen years later.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Crown, Thomas. "The Chicago Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section 1902-1932." (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2011); "John F. Hartl" (www.stokowski.org/Principal_Musicians_St.Louis_Symphony.htm).

Photo: Minneapolis trumpet section (1917-20) l to r, Herman Bossenroth, Johann Hartl (seated), William Thieck, and Albert Koehler.

Hartmann, John (b. Auleben, Prussia, Oct. 24, 1830; d. Liverpool, England, Apr. 3, 1897). Prussian cornetist. Hartmann, whose father was a peasant farmer, came from a large family; they inherited some musical instruments from his grandfather. Hartmann played the violin and cornet, learned musical harmony, and attended a music school in Sondershausen for four years.

When he came of age, Hartmann was drafted into the Prussian army and was assigned as a musician and solo cornetist to the Cuirassiers in Cologne for three years. His brother Ernest was at the same time a member of a band in Germany, but was recruited by an English brass band of the Crystal Palace Company. At Ernest's urging, John joined his brother's band as soon as his military commitment was fulfilled, in 1855.

Hartmann served as cornet soloist of the Crystal Palace Band and composed numerous works for band and for solo cornet. He was offered, and accepted a position as director of the Tyrone Militia Band in Sheffield. He later joined a regiment in Sunderland and went with it to Ireland. He then assumed leadership of the band of the Royal Sherwood Foresters in Nottingham, a band considered the best in England at the time. When the band was discharged, he joined the 2nd Battalion of the King's Own 4th Foot at Chichester. After three years stationed in Corfu with this band, Hartmann went to London on a leave and while there, petitioned for reassignment, stating that the climate did not agree with his health. He was reassigned to the 12th Lancers at Hounslow for four years. At first, he did not enjoy his duties in Hounslow; the bandsmen were lazy and unhappy that they were assigned stable duty and other nonmusical chores each day. A few months later they were relieved from these chores and became an excellent band.

The Duke of Cambridge attempted to enlist Hartmann to serve with his regiment in Aldershot, Leeds, and Manchester, but Hartmann decided instead to retire. He returned to Germany, but without friends or family, he soon went back to London and spent his remaining years composing and arranging music for several of the publishing houses in England. He composed many works for cornet, the most well-known being Arbucklenian Polka (dedicated to Matthew Arbuckle), The Champion, Columbia Polka, DeBereit's 6th Air Varie, The Favorite, Lizzie Polka, Pretty Jane, Silver King Polka, and Facilita. He died at about the age of sixty-seven.

Bibl.: Rehrig, William H. (Edit. Paul Bierley). The Heritage Encyclopedia of Band Music (Integrity Press); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hartwich, Ute (b. Gelsenkirchen, Germany, Oct. 4, 1969). German trumpeter. A specialist in the (valveless) Baroque trumpet, Hartwich first studied the modern trumpet with Friedemann Immer at the Music Academy in Cologne. Through him she developed a keen interest in the historical instrument, and in 1997 she received a scholarship to the Sibelius Academy of Music in Finland where she studied valve and Baroque trumpet with Juhani Listo. From 1999 to 2001, she attended the Schola Cantorum Basilensis, studying with Edward Tarr, and in 1999 began teaching Baroque trumpet at the Felix Mendelssohn Bartholdy Hochschule für Musik in Leipzig. She has also served as a lecturer at the music school in Nuremberg.

Hartwich has been a member of the Academy of Ancient Music Berlin and the Westphalian Brass Ensemble (2003-08), has played valve cornet in The Passion of Brass quintet, and is the founder of the early music group, anima mea. Hartwich has performed with Concerto Cologne, Cantus Colin, The Baroque Orchestra, Lautten Company Berlin, Capella Augustina, Tafelmusik Toronto, Freiburg Baroque Orchestra, German Chamber Philharmonic Bremen, and Musica Antiqua Cologne. Her debut CD from 2001 is titled Musik der Hofkapelle zu Kremsier. She can be heard on many CDs and is the recipient of the 2005 Nicholas Harnoncourt Prize of the Canton of Zurich.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Ute Hartwich" (www.akamus.de/musiker.cfm?REDID=361).

Harvison, Emery V. (b. West Memphis, Arkansas, Feb. 23, 1970). American trumpeter. Harvison grew up in Winnfield, Louisiana, and was self-taught on the trumpet. His parents were Vaughn Harvison (a mechanic) and Adele (a stay-at-home mother). After graduating from Winnfield High School in 1988, Emery attended Louisiana State University where he studied with James West, and graduated with a bachelor of music degree in 1993. He then became a graduate teaching assistant to David Hickman at Arizona State University where he earned a master of music degree in 1995. He was the first prizewinner of the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute-United Musical Instruments Solo Competition in 1994.

Harvison became a member of the Phoenix Symphony Orchestra in 1996. Although his primary position during the past seventeen years has been as second trumpet, he has also served in every position including principal. He taught at Arizona State University during the spring of 2003, and has recorded for Summit Records and other labels.

Harvison and his wife Rolanda have a daughter (Jill) and a son (Allen). Harvison is an avid golfer.

Bibl.: "Emery Harvison" (www.PhoenixSymphony.org); personal interview, Jan. 17, 2010.

Photo by Robert Strava.

Hasenöhrl, Jan (b. Prague, Czech Republic, Apr. 2, 1961). Czech trumpeter. From 1976 through 1981 (ages fifteen to twenty), Hasenöhrl studied with Václav Junek at the Prague Conservatory, and from 1982 to 1986 continued his studies at the Royal Academy of Music. He won several competitions, including the Prague "Spring" Competition. He began his career at eighteen, performing in a studio orchestra that recorded soundtracks for films. At age twenty-two, he became the principal trumpet of the National Theater Orchestra, and from 1987 to 1990 was in the Prague Chamber Orchestra. Since 1990, he has worked mostly as a soloist, performing a wide variety of music. His tours have taken him throughout Europe, as well as Japan, South Korea, Mexico, United States, and South America. His CD is titled Five Trumpet Concertos (Victor Entertainment).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Jan Hasenöhrl's official website: www.janhasenohrl.com.

Hasselmann, Ronald ("Ron") H[enry] (b. Chicago, Illinois, Mar. 3, 1933). American trumpeter. Hasselmann began playing trumpet at age nine, and studied with William Hebs and Ralph Martierie. After graduating from Lane Technical High School in 1950, he attended Northwestern University where he received a bachelor of music degree (1950-54) while studying with Renold Schilke. From 1954 to 1956, he played principal trumpet in the 7th Army Symphony Orchestra of Europe. He then returned to Northwestern University where he earned a master of music degree under Arnold Jacobs and Adolph Herseth in 1957. While in graduate school, he performed as principal of the Lyric Opera Orchestra of Chicago.

Hasselmann became associate principal trumpet of the Minnesota Orchestra in 1958, a position held until 1999. He was an adjunct professor at St. Olaf College (1963-81) and the University of Minnesota (1970-81). He was also associate personnel manager of the Minnesota Orchestra for nineteen years. He continues to travel with Keith Brion's New Sousa Band, and plays locally with the Lake Wobegon Brass Band and the Senior Synod Band. He also teaches privately.

Hasselmann and his wife Bea, founder and director of the Metropolitan Boy Choir, have three children: David (b. 1957), Laurie (b. 1959), and Judy (b. 1963; d. 2010). His hobbies are tennis and traveling. Now retired, he and his wife continue to live in Minneapolis.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Ronald Hasselmann" (www.sjmusic-series.org/artists/hasselmann.htm); personal interview, June 5, 2011.

Hatt, Nelson [Ernest] (b. San Antonio, Texas, 1944; d. Glendale, California, Dec. 8, 1995). American trumpeter and flugelhornist. Hatt grew up in San Antonio, Texas, and attended Rice University. He received a bachelor of arts degree and then briefly continued graduate studies in bioacoustics. His passion, however, was in trumpet playing. He left school to freelance and teach privately in the Houston area beginning in 1969. He also played with the Houston Pops Orchestra. During the 1970s, he settled in Los Angeles and soon joined the Glenn Miller Orchestra (1971-72), Woody Herman's Thundering Herd (1974-78), and the Buddy Rich band (1973). The rest of his career was spent working in Los Angeles television and movie studios. He performed on hundreds of recording sessions and was heard in numerous television commercials. He played on soundtracks such as Star Trek and Rocky II. He enjoyed helping young musicians get their start, among them Allen Vizzutti. He died at the age of fifty-one due to a stroke following heart surgery.

Bibl.: Levinson, Peter. "Nelson Ernest Hatt: In Memoriam" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, May 1996); "Nelson Hatt; Trumpeter Specialized in Big Band Music" (Los Angeles Times, Dec. 15, 1995); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Haug, Edward ("Eddie") Julius (b. San Francisco, California, Aug. 4, 1925; d. Kelowna, British Columbia, Canada, May 22, 2001). American trumpeter. Haug's father Julius was a second violinist in the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra and a well-respected conductor in the area. His mother Alma was a librarian for the San Francisco Symphony and the San Francisco Opera. Edward began playing violin, but soon switched to the trumpet, stating that he couldn't stand the sound of the violin so close to his left ear. His first trumpet lessons were with Benjamin Klatzkin, and later with Charles Bubb.

During World War II, Haug enlisted in the US Army for three years. He then supported himself and his first wife by freelancing in the San Francisco area. In 1950, Maestro Pierre Monteux hired him as assistant principal trumpet of the San Francisco Symphony Orchestra. In 1952, he also joined the San Francisco Opera orchestra as principal, but relinquished that position in 1980 when the San Francisco Symphony opened a new auditorium and became a fulltime orchestra. However, in 1981, Haug decided to leave the symphony and return to the opera orchestra, remaining there until his retirement in 1985. He also performed with the Little Symphony, Golden Gate Park Band, Bach to Mozart Ensemble, and the Carmel Bach Festival. He often doubled on French horn. He taught at the San Francisco Conservatory from 1946 to 1985.

After retiring in 1985, Haug and his wife Roslyn Frantz moved to Okanagan Valley in British Columbia where he played with the Okanagan Symphony Orchestra and the Viva Musica Opera Company. He loved the wilderness, camping, and backpacking. He had two daughters, Rachel and Greta. Haug died of complications from pneumonia at the age of seventy-five.

Bibl.: Kosman, Joshua. "Edward Haug, 75, Former Trumpeter Extraordinaire" (obituary, San Francisco Chronicle, May 25, 2001); "Edward Haug" (www.stev.org/arts_revs/haug_5_29_01.php).

Hautzinger, Franz (b. Seewinkel, Austria, Mar. 11, 1963). Austrian trumpeter. Hautzinger studied trumpet and composition at the Hochschule für Musik in Graz from 1981 to 1983, but lip palsy forced him to take six years off from the instrument. He moved to Vienna in 1986, and in 1989 began playing again, joining the Nouvelle Cuisine big band and the octet, Striped Roses. In that year he was given a teaching position for ensemble conducting, composition, and arranging at the Vienna Hochschule für Musik und darstellende Kunst. He has since maintained a busy career as an avant-garde jazz trumpeter with the Klangforum Wien, Ensemble Zeitkratzer, The Temptations, Elliott Sharp, Joachim Kühn, Butch Morris, Klaus Öhring, John Cole, Gil Evans, Lon Reed, Tony Oxley, John Tilbury, Derek Bailey, and others, besides leading his own projects.

While touring various countries such as India, Nepal, America, and Mexico, Hautzinger began to incorporate many of their musical styles into his improvisations and compositions. In 1997, he began playing the four-valve quarter-tone trumpet, which he featured on his first solo album, Gomberg, in 2000. Other publications include Zong der se Boboolink, the book Musik der Prozesse (2000), the world premiere of Zen for Welsh, and a U.S. tour (2001).

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Franz Hautzinger's official website: www.franzhautzinger.com.

Hawdon, Richard ("Dickie" "Dick") (b. Leeds, Yorkshire, England, Aug. 27, 1927; d. Leeds, Yorkshire, England, June 23, 2009). British trumpeter and flugelhornist. Hawdon learned to play the cello before taking up the trumpet at age seventeen. After serving in the army, he played with the Twin City Washboard Beaters in 1948, a group he ended up leading until 1950 (then known as the Yorkshire Jazz Band). In 1950, Hawdon married Barbara Moran. He moved to London in 1951 and formed his own band. From 1951 to 1952, he also played with Chris Barber's group. In 1952, Hawdon replaced Ken Colyer in Christie Brothers' Stompers (until 1954), then played with the Don Rendell 6 (1954-55), Tubby Hayes (as trumpeter and arranger, 1955-57), a big band led by Basil and Ivov Kirchin (1957), John Dankworth (1957-63), Harry Gold, Sid Phillips, Oscar Rabin, and Ronnie Scott, and for brief periods with Terry Lightfoot (1961-62, 1963), then back with Dankworth and Cleo Laine in late 1963.

Hawdon was a versatile performer who could play traditional New Orleans jazz, as well as bebop. His early idols were Louis Armstrong and Clifford Brown. Hawdon was a brilliant soloist even though he did not crave the limelight. He once said, I'd like to be an extrovert. I look as miserable as sin on the stand, even when I'm having a ball. Despite his shy personality, he became known as "The English Clifford Brown" because of his similar style of playing.

Dickie Hawdon was active as a performer into the 1980s. He took a teaching position at the Leeds College of Music in 1968, and became head of the school from 1972 to 1993 after which he retired. He worked as musical director at the Batley variety club, booking many big-name acts and artists. As luck would have it, the first performer he engaged was his boyhood idol, Louis Armstrong. Hawdon also played in the pit orchestra at the Prince of Wales Theater, London.

Hawdon and his wife had a son and two daughters. Hawdon was a composer of some note, even writing a song for each of his daughters—Cool Kate and One for Janet. These two works were performed and recorded when he was in Dankworth's band.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Voce, Steve. "Richard Hawdon: Jazz trumpet and bandleader" (obituary in The Independent, Aug. 1, 2009); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Photo: Hawdon on far right.

Hawkins, Erskine [Ramsey] (b. Birmingham, Alabama, July 26, 1914; d. Willingboro, New Jersey, Nov. 11, 1993). American trumpeter. Hawkins's father Edward was an American soldier who lost his life in France during World War I. His mother Cary was a cafeteria worker at Ramsey High School (from which he received his middle name.) Hawkins learned to play the drums, alto sax, baritone sax, and trombone as a child but switched to the trumpet at age thirteen. In addition to learning music at the Tuggle Institute (now Tuggle Elementary School), Hawkins excelled in basketball, football, and tennis.

After graduating at age sixteen from Birmingham's Industrial High School where he studied music under John T. Fess, Hawkins accepted a tennis scholarship to the Alabama State Teachers College (now Alabama State University). He played in the jazz group, the Bama State Collegians, that often toured to earn money for the music school. After graduating with a music degree in 1934, Hawkins stayed on to teach music and play with the band. The group left the school and turned professional in 1934. By 1938, they were called the Erskine Hawkins Orchestra and performed a three-year stint at the Savoy Ballroom in New York City. Greatly influenced by the recordings of Louis Armstrong, Hawkins and Armstrong eventually became good friends, and Armstrong would always join Hawkins on stage whenever he visited the Savoy Ballroom. For years, many of the nightly performances were broadcasted on the radio.

Hawkins had a strong upper register and would often blow loud, high, and even bombastic solos. He had good fast fingering technique, and some of his solos were close to Harry James in style. Although some jazz writers disliked his flamboyancy, musicians called him "The 20th Century Gabriel" because of his excellent technique and wide range (up to the double-high c'''). Hawkins was a good blues player (although not at the level of Dud Bascomb featured in Bobby Johnson's orchestra) and his band made several popular recordings including the tunes After Hours, Tuxedo Junction (original version), and Tippin' In. Hawkins's band maintained its popularity into the 1950s, but was cut to a small group by the mid '50s. During the 1960s, Hawkins regularly played at the Embers Club in New York City, and from 1967 to 1989, he played at the Concord Hotel in New York's Catskill Mountain resort area in Willingboro, New Jersey. In 1971, the Strong label recorded the Hawkins reunion (big) band, his last recording.

Erskine Hawkins appeared in the short film, Deviled Hams, in 1936, and recorded for labels such as Vocalion (1936-38), Bluebird (1938-42), Victor (1945-50), Coral (1950-51), and King (1951-53), plus later albums for Decca, Imperial, and Stang. He was a fine composer who penned such tunes as Tuxedo Junction (made famous by Glenn Miller in the 1940s), Gabriel's Heater, Gin Mill Special, Dolomite, and Norfolk Ferry.

Hawkins was an inspiration to young Ray Charles, and was one of the first five inductees into the Alabama Jazz Hall of Fame in 1978. He received an Honorary Doctorate in Music from Alabama State Teachers College in 1947. Since 1985, the city of Ensley, Alabama, holds the "Function in the Junction" festival in Erskine Hawkins Park on his birthday. He was married to Florence Browning, a schoolteacher, in 1935. His second wife was Gloria Dumas. He died on November 11, 1993 at the age of seventy-nine and is buried in Elmwood Cemetery in Birmingham.

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Erskine Hawkins" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Erskine Hawkins" (www.encyclopediaofalabama.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. excerpt on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Haynes, Graham Bentley (b. Queens, New York, Sept. 16, 1960). American cornetist and composer. Haynes began playing the trumpet at age twelve, but switched to cornet soon afterward. His first teacher was his father, Roy Haynes, a professional jazz drummer. Graham attended Queens College from 1979 to 1981, studying music composition. While a student, he got his start by playing with Jaki Byard's Apollo Stompers (1978-83), local funk bands, and with Michael Carvin (1981-82). In 1980, he and Steve Colman formed a group called Five Elements, which broke up in 1988.

Haynes spent most of the 1980s as a freelance musician in New York City. A versatile musician, he could play funk, hip hop, and acid rock styles. He performed avant-garde music with David Murray's big band, Cassandra Wilson, Abbey Lincoln, Ralph Peterson, George Russell, James Carter, Don Byron, and Oliver Lake. He also led his own funk septet called No Image that recorded one album for Muse before disbanding in 1991.

Haynes lived in Paris, France, from 1991 to 1993. He was immersed in world music and developed a unique style. After returning to the United States in 1993, he recorded with Rodney Kendrick, Arcana, Ed Blackwell, Uri Caine, Lonnie Plaxico, Bobby Previte, George Adams, Bill Laswell, Greg Osby, Geri Allen, Roy Haynes, and many others. Among his albums are The Griot's Footsteps (Antilles), Tones for the 21st Century (Verve), BPM (Knitting Factory Works), Art (Blue Note), What Time It Be (Muse), Transitions (Antilles), Nocturne Parisian (Muse), and Full Circle (RKM). Haynes continues to tour the world.

As a composer, Graham Haynes has received grants from the National Endowment for the Arts and Meet the Composer. Since 2000, he has collaborated as music director and composer for multimedia projects such as Electronic Church, Sights and Sounds, Afrofuturistic, A Cruel New World, Improvizations, and 51st Dream State. He has also composed works such as The Promise and music for the 2003 PBS film, Flag Wars.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Graham Haynes" (www.allaboutjazz.com); "Graham Haynes" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Haynie, John J[ames] (b. Ralls, Texas, Dec. 14, 1924). American trumpeter. Haynie began learning to play the cornet at the age of nine from G. C. Collum in Cisco, Texas. He also received training from his high school band director, Robert Maddox. After graduating with honors from Mexia High School, he enrolled in music at Texas Tech University, but after one semester enlisted in the military (1943-45). Upon discharge, Haynie was awarded the Good Conduct Medal in Battle, The World War II Victory Medal, and three battle stars.

Haynie returned to Lubbock, Texas, and resumed studies at Texas Tech. After one year, he transferred to the University of Illinois where he studied with Haskell O. Sexton, and completed his bachelor of music and master of music degrees in 1950. There, he also met his future wife, Marilyn Hindsley, a flutist and pianist, daughter of Dr. Mark Hindsley who was director of bands at Illinois.

Haynie began teaching at North Texas State University (now University of North Texas) during the summer of 1950, where he remained for nearly forty years, and taught hundreds of trumpet students. Among his best-known students are Marvin Stamm, Raymond Sasaki, Leonard Candelaria, and A. Keith Amstutz. He worked with radiologist Dr. Alexander Finlay on the inner workings of the oral cavity during trumpet performance, and pioneered new understanding of the mechanics of trumpet playing.

Among Haynie's many publications are the books, Development and Maintainence. Twelve Study Groups, and High Notes—Low Notes—and All Those In-between. He also recorded two LP albums of contest solo repertoire for Crest records. (These and other live performance recordings have been reissued on CD by Pender's Music in Denton, Texas.) Haynie and Anne Hardin coauthored the book, Inside John Haynie's Studio: A Master Teacher's Lessons on Trumpet and Life that has become a widely read text for trumpet.

Haynie's awards include the Fessor Graham Award (1984) from UNT, the Distinguished Achievement Award from the University of Illinois (1991), the Lifetime Achievement Award from The North Texan magazine (2006), the Edwin Franko Goldman Memorial Award from the American Bandmasters Association, and the Award of Merit from the International Trumpet Guild (2003). In addition, Cisco High School (where Haynie first began his music studies) dedicated its new music facility the J.J. Haynie Band Hall. He is an avid golfer and fisherman.

Bibl.: Haynie, John and Anne Hardin. Inside John Haynie's Studio: A Master Teacher's Lessons on Trumpet and Life (University of North Texas Press); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "John James Haynie" (http://music.unt.edu); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hazel, John T. (b. Bellefonte, Pennsylvania, Sept. 28, 1865; d. Williamsport, Pennsylvania, June 26, 1948). American cornetist. John was the son of Frank and Margaret Hazel. When he was nine, he began studying the cornet, and at age eleven went to Philadelphia to hear the "World's Greatest Cornetist," Jules Levy. The performance made such a strong impression on Hazel that he decided to become a cornet soloist.

As a teenager, Hazel performed in several area bands. His first solo performance in public was at age seventeen while he was a member of the Albion Hotel Orchestra in Atlantic City, New Jersey. He soon joined Hadley's National Band of Providence, D.C. Hall's Germania Band of Boston, and Gilmore's band under the direction of Victor Herbert. (Hazel had once soloed with the Gilmore Band under Gilmore when Hazel was fifteen.) In the late 1880s, he was a member of the Boston Festival Orchestra.

Hazel earned a national reputation as a "technical wizard" for his fast tonguing. In 1891, he performed on a national tour as a soloist, and in the latter part of 1891 and early part of 1892, was a soloist at Schaufer's Garden in Atlantic City. By coincidence, the great Jules Levy was also performing in town. The two became rivals for the rest of their lives: Hazel enjoyed telling a story about one of his own concerts in 1903, when Levy walked up to the bandstand and leaned against the platform as Hazel executed a difficult technical solo. After Hazel's brilliant performance, Levy simply walked away without saying a word. Because Hazel was in his prime, and Levy by then a disillusioned old man, many people felt that Levy secretly admired Hazel's playing and wanted simply to listen more closely. Others felt that Levy was too conceited to admire any other cornetist, and that his obviously rude gesture was meant to intimidate Hazel.

Between 1903 and 1910, the Edison Phonograph Company's staff orchestra that accompanied hundreds of vocalists and instrumentalists employed Hazel. During this time, he recorded several solos and two duets with Herbert Clarke. He also recorded for the Columbia and Zonophone labels. In 1910, he became director of the Repasz Band in Williamsport, Pennsylvania, a position he held for thirty-eight years until his death in 1948.

Hazel was a fine composer and arranger: his best-known cornet solos are Le Secret Polka, Fantasie on Irish Airs, and Fantaise Characteristic; his many marches include Blue Jackets, Spirit of America, and Gerry's Triumphal March.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published).

Hazzard, Don P. (b. Rockford, Illinois, Sept. 30, 1947). American trumpeter. Hazzard grew up on a farm near Rockford, Illinois. He began taking trumpet lessons from Eddie Retzlow at age ten. During his senior year of high school, he enrolled at the Interlochen Arts Academy where he studied with Ray Lichtenwalter and graduated in 1965. He attended the University of Michigan (1966-69), studying with Clifford Lillya and receiving a bachelor of music degree. He then studied with Ernest Bastin at Ohio University, earning a master of music degree in 1970. Hazzard began doctoral studies at the University of Michigan in 1970, but accepted a position as second trumpet with the North Carolina Symphony in 1971. After a year in the orchestra, he left to become the trumpet professor at Florida State University (1972-74).

Hazzard moved to Chicago in 1974, where he worked for Schilke Music Products. After about six months, he became principal trumpet of the State Symphony Orchestra of Mexico (1974-75) before accepting his final position as principal of the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra in 1976. He retired from the principal chair in 1999, but remained with the orchestra on a part-time basis until 2009 when it became insolvent.

Hazzard taught at the University of Hawaii from 1977 to 1988, and since 1976 has played with the Honolulu Brass Quintet. He considers his greatest honor to have been selected to perform for Maurice André's master class at the 1972 National Trumpet Symposium in Denver.

Hazzard is married to Claire Sakai Hazzard, former associate concertmaster of the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra. Now semiretired, he enjoys investing in real estate and performing with the Honolulu Brass Quintet.

Bibl.: personal interview, July 22, 2011.

Head, Emerson W. (b. Wilmington, North Carolina, Apr. 9, 1935). American trumpeter. Head began playing cornet before studying trumpet at the University of Michigan with Clifford Lillya, earning bachelor and master of music degrees. He taught for two years in the public schools of Jacksonville, Florida, before spending three years as director of instrumental music at Wake Forest University in Winston-Salem, North Carolina. He earned his doctorate in music at Catholic University of America in Washington, D.C., studying with Lloyd Geisler.

Head taught trumpet and conducted several ensembles at the University of Maryland for thirty-six years (1968-2004). He instructed countless students, many of them musicians in various military bands in the D.C. area. He received the Albert Schweitzer Medal in 1986 for outstanding teaching. He was an active recitalist in America, and toured Europe as a soloist in 1994. He was a guest professor at the National University of Seoul in South Korea in 1996. He produced one LP album, Emerson Head Trumpet, on his own label (Trumpeter Recordings).

During his career, Head performed as a member of the Jacksonville Symphony Orchestra, Winston-Salem Symphony, Brevard Music Festival Orchestra (eighteen summers), National Chamber Orchestra, Washington Concert Opera Orchestra, and Washington Ballet Orchestra. He also served as a guest principal in the National Symphony Orchestra, Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, and the Smithsonian Chamber Orchestra. He has also performed with the Theatre Chamber Players of the Kennedy Center, University of Maryland Brass Quintet, Filene Center Orchestra, and given recitals with guitarist Brian Head. He conducted the Jacksonville Youth Orchestra, Prince Georges Philharmonic Orchestra, and the Metropolitan Washington Bahai Choir.

Head retired in 2004, and moved to Brevard, North Carolina. He is founder and conductor of the Brevard Philharmonic, and is a member of the Looking Glass Brass quintet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Emerson Head" (www.lookingglassbrass.com/players.html).

Head, John (b. Atlanta, Georgia, 1938). American trumpeter and conductor. Head learned to play the trumpet while growing up in Atlanta, Georgia. He earned a bachelor of music degree from Stetson University, and studied with William Adam at Indiana University while pursuing his master's degree. After graduating, he became principal trumpet of the Birmingham (Alabama) Symphony Orchestra and a member of the Aspen Festival Orchestra in Colorado during the summers. He was principal of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra from 1963 to 1990.

Head has taught at Georgia State University and Clark Atlanta University. His four solo albums with organist Sue Mitchell-Wallace are The Classical Wedding, The Joyous Wedding, From Humility to Hallelujah, and Christmas Majesty, all on the Hope label.

Since retiring as a trumpet player, Head has become a skilled conductor; he was assistant conductor of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra under Maestro Robert Shaw, and since 2002, has been the conductor of the Atlanta Pops Orchestra. He led the New Sigmund Romberg Orchestra on a tour of Taiwan during the fall of 1999, and has guest conducted the Buffalo Philharmonic, Rochester Philharmonic, Toledo Ballet, National Ballet Orchestra of Canada, The Florida Orchestra, Tampa Ballet, and many other organizations. Head is also the current president of the Atlanta Federation of Musicians union.

Bibl.: "Principals of the Atlanta Symphony Orchestra" (www.trumpetherald.com); "John Head" (www.altieriandassociates.com/pops/pages/meet.html).

Hebs, William (b. Germany, 1882; d. Oct. 2, 1960). German trumpeter. Hebs immigrated to the United States in 1903 at the age of about twenty-one, and became a U.S. citizen in 1907. He joined the Saint Louis Symphony Orchestra as second trumpet (1910-15) and the Chicago Symphony Orchestra as second trumpet (1915-21). When America entered World War I, many German-born members of the CSO were investigated as German sympathizers. Hebs was accused of having pro-German sentiments, supposedly because he had a brother and stepbrother who were members of the German army, and for not standing while the orchestra performed the Star-Spangled Banner. He was subsequently cleared of all accusations.

Hebs moved to New York City in 1921, and played in a newly formed nonunion orchestra for the New York Stadium concerts. He also performed with the Sousa Band, Chicago Opera Company, and Grant Park Symphony Orchestra.

Bibl.: Crown, Thomas. "The Chicago Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section 1902-1932." (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2011).

Heckmann, Werner (b. Obersuhl, Germany, Jan. 2, 1961). German trumpeter. Heckmann began playing the trumpet at age eleven, and developed an immediate passion for the instrument. In 1975 and 1977, he won prizes in the national youth music competition, Jugend Musiziert, and also participated in the youth orchestra of the German Philharmonic. After graduating from high school in 1980, he enrolled at the music college in Würzburg, studying with Helmut Erb, and graduating in 1984. He was immediately hired as an adjunct teacher at the college, and became principal trumpet of the Würtzembergischer Staatorchester. He has been a member of the State Opera Orchestra of Stuttgart since 1981, and of the ensemble, German Brass, since 1994.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Werner Heckmann" (www.german-brass.de).

Hedwig, Douglas Frederick (b. Jamaica, New York, June 24, 1951). American trumpeter. Hedwig began playing the trumpet at age nine. He studied with Wilfred "Bob" Roberts for seven years, then with Alfonso Maiorca. After graduating from Garden City High School in New York (1969), Hedwig enrolled in the Manhattan School of Music, earning a bachelor of music degree (1973), studying with Mel Broiles and William Vacchiano. He earned a master of music degree at The Juilliard School (1974-76), studying with William Vacchiano. Additionally, he studied with Carmine Caruso, Roy Stevens, Armando Ghitalla, and John Glasel. Later, Hedwig studied with Edward Treutel at The Juilliard School (1984-86), becoming the school's first trumpeter to earn a doctor of musical arts degree. His dissertation topic was the trumpet and organ as a recital ensemble.

Highlights of Hedwig's performing career include tenure as an associate member of the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra (1973-2000), first cornet and frequent soloist with The Goldman Band at Lincoln Center, NY (1976-2005), and cofounder and performer with the Metropolitan Brass Quartet (1976-86) and Piedmont Brass Quintet including concert tours of the U.S., Canada, and Japan. A highly versatile musician, he has also worked with Dave Brubeck, Mel Tormé, The Jackson Five, Sam and Dave, and Larry Harlow, and was an original orchestra member of several Broadway shows including Gershwin's Porgy and Bess (1976-77) and Richard Rodgers's Rex (1976).

Hedwig began his teaching career when he served on the music history faculty at The Juilliard School (1984-87). He became an adjunct faculty member at the Brooklyn College Conservatory of the City University of New York (1985), and was professor of trumpet and chair of the Brass Department (fulltime from September 1987 until he retired in 2012). He cofounded and served as executive director of Orvieto Musica, a chamber music festival in Orvieto, Italy (1994-95). He is a founding member of the Historic Brass Society Steering Committee (1988-91) and Board of Advisors (1991 to present). He served on the music panel for the Fulbright Scholarship Committee (1996-2000), and was elected president of the National Association for Civil War Brass Music, Inc. (2007).

Hedwig is a recognized authority on the history of the European posthorn, and has released a CD titled The Art of the Posthorn for MSR. His other major recordings include a CD with the Metropolitan Brass Quartet (Three Centuries for Four Brass, MSR), two CDs with the Federal Music Society on which he plays the English slide trumpet (New World Records), and many CDs and DVDs with the Metropolitan Opera Orchestra.

An active conductor and composer, Hedwig has conducted numerous symphony orchestras, wind ensembles, big bands, and brass bands. He has served as Commander and Conductor of the 89th Army Band, New York Guard (since 2007). For the 2012 150th anniversary of the bugle call, Taps, Hedwig composed Tone Poem on Taps, which was recorded by the Maryland Defense Force Band (Altissimo Records).

Hedwig and Mimi Jones, a book editor and now a novelist, were married in 1982 and have a son Marcus (b. 1986), who is also musically inclined, playing the baritone horn and the guitar, and composing music. Hedwig's hobbies include traveling, hiking, studying national anthems and flag symbols, and watching baseball.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Douglas Hedwig's official website: www.douglashedwig.com; "Douglas Hedwig" (www.brooklyn.cuny.edu/pub/Faculty_Details5.jsp?faculty=134); personal interview, Mar. 10, 2011.

Photo credit: Christian Steiner (upper photo)

Heikkinen, Esko (b. Kuusjärvi, Finland, July 4, 1953). Finnish trumpeter and conductor. Heikkinen began playing the trumpet at age fourteen under the guidance of his father Unto, a professional dance band musician. Esko joined the Kontioranta Military Wind Band in 1970, and continued in the Military Department of the Sibelius Academy from 1973 to 1974. He then played principal trumpet in the Guard's Band from 1975 to 1983.

Heikkinen's first contact with jazz music was with the Tapiola Big Band. He then joined the top big band in Finland, the UMO, in 1976, and also played with the Jukka Linkola Octet. He received the Yrjö Award of the Finnish Jazz Association in 1998, and is well known as the lead trumpet of the UMO Big Band. He has also taught jazz at the Sibelius Academy, and served as the first president of the Finnish Trumpet Guild. In 1990, he founded and continues to conduct his own big band, Super Brass.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Esko Heikkinen" (www.viapori.fi/~lassi.ikaheimo/blosari/composers.html#heikkinen).

Heim, Gustav (b. Schleusingen, Thuringen, Germany, May 8, 1879; d. Ithaca, New York, Oct. 30, 1933). German trumpeter. Heim grew up in Germany, where he had his first music and cornet lessons with his father. He attended the Music School in Schleusingen from 1893 to 1897, and then entered military service as a cornet and flugelhorn soloist for the 95th Regiment of Hildburghausen. While still in the military, he was given a two-year furlough to attend the World's Fair of 1904 in St. Louis, where he became a cornet and trumpet player for the Choral Symphony Society and the World's Fair Orchestra.

When Maestro Fritz Scheel of the Philadelphia Orchestra heard Heim at the Fair, he hired him as his principal trumpet. Two years later, Heim was hired by Dr. Karl Muck, conductor of the Boston Symphony Orchestra, where he played for fourteen seasons (1907-20). During this time, Heim founded his Boston Philharmonic Band, in which he played as its cornet soloist. Due to a BSO strike, Heim left Boston and was later replaced by Georges Mager.

In 1920, Heim played as principal trumpet of the Detroit Symphony Orchestra for one season. The following year, he played with the New York Philharmonic Orchestra (1921-23), and then the New York Symphony Orchestra (1925-28). He spent a year in the Cleveland Orchestra (1923-24), and performed many times with the Worcester Festival Orchestra (notably, 1925-32). He also played with the American Symphony Orchestra (1928-29), and then became a member of the short-lived Beethoven Symphony Orchestra and the New York Oratorio Society.

Heim recorded several solo works including A Post in the Forest, Fehrbelliner Reitersmarsch, Hie guet Brandenburg Allewege!, Inflamatus-Stabat Mater, Trumpeter of Sakkingen, and Weber's Last Waltz. He also recorded many works as a member of the New York Symphony Orchestra and Boston Symphony Orchestra.

Heim opened a teaching studio in New York City. One of his most famous students was William Vacchiano, who later became principal trumpet of the New York Philharmonic. Vacchiano credited Heim as the person who convinced him to play on large cup German-style mouthpieces because of the huge volume of tone they produce. Another famous student was Harry Glantz, later to become principal of Toscanini's NBC Symphony and other major orchestras. However, Heim was often rude to Glantz because Glantz was Jewish, so Glantz left his studio.

Heim designed a mouthpiece that produced a dark tone; many jazz artists from Shorty Baker to Miles Davis played on a Heim-designed mouthpiece. Gunther Schuller wrote about Heim that he had an "alive quality inside the sound."

Heim owned a summer home in Maine, and also managed the Sunset Inn, a summer colony for tourists.

Heim died from heart disease at the Cornell Medical Center in Ithaca, New York on October 39, 1933 at the age of fifty-four. His wish was to be buried with his "pal," his gold trumpet.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); "Gustav Heim." (O.J.'s Trumpet Page, http://abel.hive.no/trumpet/heim); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Heinisch, Heinz [Hermann] (b. Blumberg, Germany, Aug. 6, 1934). German trumpeter. Heinisch's father and grandfather were trumpeters. He studied with Oskar Kirchner and Heinrich Teubig (from Leipzig), and played in the Radio Symphonic Orchestra in Berlin in 1960, and second trumpet in the Dresden Staatskapelle Orchestra from 1962 to 1999. He recorded with Ludwig Güttler. He also makes custom mouthpieces (although not commercially) and is an avid antique collector.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Third English Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Heinisch [Hainisch; Hanisch], Johann [Baptist] (b. Straußnitz, Bohemia, 1706; d. Vienna, Austria, Oct. 30, 1751). Austrian trumpeter. Little is known about Heinisch other than that he flourished at the municipal court in Vienna from 1725 until his death. Significantly, he and his successor, Ferdinand Weidlich (d. 1758), were both pupils of Franz Anton Küffel (Oberhoftrompeter, fl. pre-1711; d. May 20, 1754). After beginning his studies with Küffel on January 1, 1725, Heinisch was appointed imperial court trumpeter (Kaiserlicher Hoftrompeter) in 1727, and from June 10, 1730 until his death he ascended to the position of musical imperial court trumpeter. Heinisch was highly praised for his upper register clarino playing, frequently up to G above high c'''. Sinfonias and obligato parts in opera and oratorio arias were written for him by the leading Viennese court composers, including Georg von Reutter Jr., Fux, Caldara, and Predieri; Reuter wrote two concertos for him.

Heinisch must have been one of the greatest trumpeters of all time. As head of the musicians in Vienna, Johann Joseph Fux was asked to write official assessments of the musicians. In 1727, he said of Heinisch that he recently came into imperial service as a successor of the court trumpeter Andreas Pernember and that he distinguished himself and rendered excellent musical service. He also said in 1732 that Heinisch was an entirely special virtuoso in a manner that no one can surpass him. Heinisch has also happily discovered certain tones on the trumpet which the chapelmasters indeed hitherto wanted, but no trumpeter except him was able to produce. Fux recommended that Heinisch's salary be doubled because of his "uncommon merit."

"Lo stuol che Apollo onora," the penultimate aria from the opera Il Parnaso accusato, e difeso, which Reutter composed in 1738 for Heinisch and the alto castrato Gaetano Orsini (as Giove), is by far the most highly virtuosic piece ever written for trumpet. Not only does the trumpeter have to play high g''' ten times (more than in all other trumpet works together), but also twenty-two f'''s and f#'''s and thirty-eight e'''s; these acute pitches are reached both by passagework (in sixteenths and thirty-seconds) and skips. In addition, the trumpeter's endurance is put to a hard test.

In 1746, five years before his death, Heinisch performed in Artaserse by Andrea Bernasconi (1706-84). The following report characterized his high playing in a trumpet aria: After this singer appeared another, who only recently came from Venice. This singer sang an adagio aria like an angel, if it is allowed to say so. Heinisch, the famous trumpeter, played a solo in this aria so artful and high that it was nearly impossible that it could have been played by a human because the trumpet behaved like a little flute. At the end of the aria, this female sang a trill so long and lovely that I truly believed that she would run out of breath, and thus Herr Heinisch made in the same manner a long and even longer trill on the trumpet with her.

As a teacher, Heinisch trained Johann Caspar Köstler (d. 1795), who later received a position at the Salzburg court and himself trained Andreas Schachtner, for whom Leopold Mozart wrote his well-known trumpet concerto. In 1731, Heinisch married Maria Anna Catherine Turnovsky (1708-?), from Vienna. They had three daughters: Theresia (an imperial court and chamber singer whose later married name was Pettmann), Regina, and Josepha. During the last four years of his life, Heinisch was often ill and needed to be replaced in the orchestra.

Bibl.: Tarr, Edward H. The Trumpet (Eng. Third Edition) (Hickman Music Editions); Lindner, Andreas. Die kaiserlichen Hoftrompeter und Hofpauker im 18. und 19. Jahrhundert (Hans Schneider); Bauer, Markus. "…Johannes Heinisch[,] Kayl: musicalischer Hoff Trompeter"[:] Versuch einer musikalischen Biographie des musikalischen Hoftrompeters von 1727-1751 (Masters thesis, University of Graz, 2008).

Heitger, Raymond ("Duke") (b. Toledo, Ohio, May 10, 1968). American trumpeter. Heitger's father Ray was a professional jazz clarinet and soprano sax player. As a child, Raymond listened to his father's record collection, becoming keenly interested in the music of Bunny Berrigan, Louis Armstrong, Bix Beiderbecke, Bobby Hackett, Roy Eldridge, and Red Allen. He started out playing the drums, piano, and clarinet, but switched to cornet at the age of eight. His first gigs were in his father's band at age twelve.

Heitger studied music at the University of Toledo under David Brown, and played with his father's Cakewalkin' Jass Band until 1991. He moved to New Orleans in 1991 and began playing with Jacques Gauthe's Creole Rice Jazz Band (1991-93; France in 1991), John Gill's Dixie Syncopators (1994-98), Chris Tyle's Silver Leaf Jazz Band (since 1993), Hal Smith's Creole Sunshine (1997-99), and others including Butch Thompson, Banu Gibson (on and off since 2003), Jim Cullum, James Dapogny, Dick Hyman, Fred Starr's Louisiana Repertory Orchestra, Kenny Davern, Doc Cheatham (1996), Dan Barrett, Jay McShann, Lars Edegran, Jon-Erik Kellso, Oriole Romani's New Orleans Stompers (2010), and others.

Duke Heitger's interest in early jazz struck gold when he joined the retro-swing Squirrel Nut Zippers, whose platinum CD, Hot, sold over one million copies in 1997. Since then, Heitger has performed throughout the world at many of the leading venues such as the Hollywood Bowl. He led the Steamboat Stompers band and has released six albums as leader: Duke Heitger and the Steamboat Stompers (GHB), Rhythm Is Our Business (Fantasy), Krazy Kapers (Jazzology), Prince of Wails (Stomp Off), What Is This Thing Called Love (Jazzology), Doin' the Voom Voom (Arbors). Heitger is also an excellent composer.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Duke Heitger's official website: www.dukeheitger.com.

Held, Friedrich ("Frieder") (b. Kelheim, Donau, Germany, Nov. 24, 1948). German trumpeter. Held began playing piano and violin, but switched to trumpet at age fifteen. He studied with Hans Rast, and in 1968 began lessons with Rolf Quinque. A highly versatile player, he also learned to play cornet, flugelhorn, slide trumpet, and Baroque (valveless) trumpet.

Held has performed with the Augsberger Trumpet Ensemble, Collegium Aureum, Augsberger Brass Quintet, Munich Bach Trumpet Ensemble, BRASS PUR, and big bands led by Joe Viera, Thomas Zoller, and Dusko Goykovich. He has toured most of Europe, China, Brazil, and South Africa, and can be heard on over fifty albums and CDs. His solo albums include Bach Trumpet Gala, Vols. 1-4 (ARS-Musici). He is also a skilled arranger for jazz combo, big band, and brass ensembles.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hell, Josef (b. Innsbruck, Austria, Nov. 28, 1925). Austrian trumpeter. Hell began playing the trumpet at age thirteen, and studied in Innsbruck and Vienna. He became principal trumpet at the Landestheater, and with the Innsbruck Symphony Orchestra in 1943, and was principal of the Vienna State Opera Orchestra in 1952. Since 1970, he has led trumpet choirs in Vienna, and until 1992 played with the Vienna Philharmonic and taught at the Vienna Hofmusikkapelle (full professor in 1970). He played on Helmut Wobisch's solo album titled The Virtuoso Trumpet on the Vanguard label (reissued in 1993), and was decorated by the state with the first class medal for science and art.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hellmers, Bruce J. (b. Sydney, Australia, Dec. 2, 1954). Australian trumpeter. Hellmers began playing the trumpet at age nine; his early teachers were George Green, Leonard Fischer, and Robert Campbell-Stewart. He participated in the Australian Broadcasting Commission Training Orchestra, studying with Lawrence Elam and Gordon Webb for two-and-a-half years, before beginning his career by freelancing in Sydney with the Sydney Symphony Orchestra and as principal trumpet of the Elizabethan Theatre Trust Orchestra in Melbourne (opera and ballet). He taught at Scots College in Sydney for thirty years, and has been an adjunct instructor at the Sydney Conservatorium since 1993. He became principal of the Australian Opera and Ballet Orchestra in 2002, and was a member of the New Holland Chamber Brass.

Hellmers and his wife Judy, a professional violinist and director of strings at Scots College, have two children: Duncan (b. 1988) and Rees (b. 1991). Hellmers's hobbies include boating, home building, beer and wine tasting, and gardening. He is the current treasurer of the Australian Trumpet Guild.

Bibl.: "Blunt Retires as Principal of Australian Opera and Ballet Orchestra" (www.trumpetguild.org/news02/news_aust.htm); personal interview, July 4, 2011.

Helseth, Tine Thing (b. Oslo, Norway, Aug. 18, 1987). Norwegian trumpeter. Helseth began playing trumpet at age seven. Her rise to stardom in the trumpet world began in her teens when she won a series of awards and prizes: first prize in the 2004 National Soloists Championship of Norway, second prize in the 2005 Theo Charlier International Trumpet Competition, Prize of Honor in 2005 from the Oslo Music Teachers Foundation, second prize in the Eurovision Young Musicians Competition (Vienna, 2006), also in 2006 the Swedish-Norwegian "Prince Eugen's Culture Prize", the Luitpold Prize for the most outstanding and interesting young artist of the year, Newcomer of the Year at the 2007 Norwegian Grammy Awards. She also received a 2009 Borletti-Bultoni Trust Fellowship, and was a featured soloist during a worldwide television broadcast concert of the 2007 Nobel Peace Prize ceremonies. Her teachers were Heidi Johanessen (Norwegian National Opera Orchestra) and Arnulf Naur Nilsen; she took occasional lessons with Ole Edvard Antonsen.

Helseth has toured the world as a recitalist and guest soloist with orchestras such as the Vienna Symphony Orchestra, Vienna Chamber Orchestra, Zurich Chamber Orchestra, Stuttgart Chamber Orchestra, Ulster Orchestra, Philharmonic Baden-Baden, Shanghai Symphony Orchestra, Beethoven Academy, Norwegian Chamber Orchestra, Slovenian Radio Symphony Ljubljana, Oslo Camerata, Württemberg Philharmonic, Norwegian Army Band, London Concert Orchestra, her tenThing (female brass ensemble), and the radio orchestras of Prague, Sweden, and Denmark. Her solo albums include Classical Trumpet Concertos and My Heart Is Ever Present, both on the Simax label.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Tine Thing Helseth" (http://en.wikipedia.org); Tine Thing Helseth's official website: www.tinethinghelseth.com; http://www.facebook.com/TineThingHelseth?v=info.

Hemphill, Shelton ("Shad") (b. Birmingham, Alabama, Mar. 16, 1906; d. New York, New York, Dec. 2, 1959). American trumpeter. Although Hemphill never made any recordings as leader, Louis Armstrong called him "the greatest first trumpet player in the business." Hemphill got his start playing with Bessie Smith in Fred Longshaw's band in early 1924, and later attended Wilberforce College. He played with Horace Henderson's Collegians and the bands of Benny Carter (1928-29), Chick Webb (1930-31), Mills Blue Rhythm Band (1931-37) [see photo with Hemphill on far right], Louis Armstrong (1937-44), and Duke Ellington (1944-49). As a soloist, he recorded with Bessie Smith (1925), and appeared in films with Louis Armstrong (1942) and Duke Ellington (1949). After 1949, he freelanced in New York City, but eventually retired from performing due to ill health. He died at the relatively young age of fifty-three.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Shelton 'Scad' Hemphill" (www.alabamamusicoffice.com/artists-a-z/h/958-hemphill-shelton-qscadq).

Photo: With Mills Blues Rhythm Band (far right).

Henderson, Edward [Jackson, Edward] ("Eddie") (b. New York, New York, Oct. 26, 1940). American trumpeter. Born as Edward Jackson, his name was changed to Edward Henderson when his stepfather legally adopted him after his real father's death (when Edward was nine years old). His birth father was a professional singer in the black pop group, The Charioteers, and his mother was a professional dancer at the Cotton Club. For a while, his mother was a roommate of Billie Holiday and Lena Horne. She introduced young "Eddie" to Louis Armstrong, who gave him his first lessons on the trumpet. He also became friends with Miles Davis who became his musical mentor, and took a few lessons with Lee Morgan and Freddie Hubbard. Other influences include Booker Little, Woody Shaw, and Clifford Brown.

Eddie's stepfather was a medical doctor. The family moved from New York to San Francisco when Eddie was around ten years old. In 1954, at the age of fourteen, Eddie studied at the San Francisco Conservatory of Music with Edward Haug. During his teen years, his interests turned mostly to sports, in which he was quite gifted, making the All-City Basketball and All-City Track teams. He was also a champion figure skater and was the first Afro-American to compete in the national championships. But, when Eddie turned eighteen, he dropped out of school to join the Air Force (1958-61).

After finishing his military duties, Dr. Henderson challenged Eddie to go to college and make something of himself. Eddie told him that he wanted to become a medical doctor, but his stepfather told Eddie that he didn't believe he had the brains to do it. When Eddie enrolled at the University of California-Berkeley, his stepfather refused to help with tuition. Eddie paid his way through college by working as a desk clerk, earning a bachelor of science degree in zoology. He then attended Howard University in Washington, D.C. and finished his medical degree (1968) by playing jazz at night.

Dr. Eddie Henderson began practicing medicine in New York and continued playing jazz on the side. In 1970, he became a member of Herbie Hancock's influential Mwandishi sextet, an experience that convinced him that music would always be a big part of his life. He stayed in the band for three years, and then left to form his own group. He also performed with Philly Joe Jones, Joe Henderson, Elvin Jones (1978-80), Pharaoh Sanders, and in Art Blakey's Jazz Messengers (1973). Henderson began incorporating electric-fusion jazz, and his band released several popular selling albums.

Henderson returned to San Francisco and practiced medicine from 1975 to 1985 while still performing as a jazz musician. During the late 1980s, he moved back to New York and resumed playing traditional acoustic jazz. Now a full time musician, Henderson began releasing a string of albums for labels such as Capricorn, Blue Note, Capitol, Steeplechase, Milestone, Keystone, Sirocco Jazz, EPC, Groove Jazz, Kind of Blue, and Sharp Nine. In addition to his nearly twenty albums as leader, he has also recorded on many dozens of other recordings with such artists as Rob Bargad, Kenny Barron, Gary Bartz, J.J. Johnson, Billy Harper, Herbie Hancock, Victor Lewis, Sonny Fortune, Charles Earland, Norman Conners, Donald Brown, Richard Boalger, Ilhan Ersahin, Will Downing, Steve Barrios, Joe Chambers, Pete and Sheila Escovedo, Joe Farnsworth, and many others. He also performed with Dexter Gordon, Johnny Griffin, Max Roach, Elvin Jones, Slide Hampton, Benny Golson, Joe Henderson, McCoy Tyner, and others.

Today, Eddie Henderson is considered one of the world's leading and most innovative jazz trumpeters. He is on the faculty of The Hartt School of Music at the University of Hartford, and The Juilliard School (since 2007).

Bibl.: Erdmann, Tom. "Knowledge Enhances All Gifts: An Interview with Eddie Henderson" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2003); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hendrickson, Steven ("Steve") (b. c1951). American trumpeter. Hendrickson grew up in Iowa. He studied at Luther College with Robert Getchell, earning a bachelor of arts degree in music and philosophy in 1973. He continued his studies in Chicago as a member of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago where he was coached by Adolph Herseth, William Scarlett, Charles Geyer, and Arnold Jacobs. He freelanced there for several years, often performing with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra, Lyric Opera Orchestra, and Chicago Brass Ensemble.

Hendrickson became assistant principal trumpet of the National Symphony Orchestra in Washington, D.C. in 1982, and was promoted to principal in 1988. An active soloist, he has released an album titled Music for Trumpet and Organ (MSR Classics) with William Neil, and taught at the Peabody Conservatory in Baltimore for seventeen years. He is currently an adjunct faculty member at the University of Maryland.

Bibl.: "Steve Hendrickson" (http://myriamavalos.com/listen.html).

Hendrie, Andrew ("Andy") (b. Dalmellington, Ayshire, Scotland, Oct. 2, 1948). Scottish trumpeter. Hendrie's early playing experiences were in various brass bands including the Dalmellington Silver Band. After joining the Ayrshire Youth Orchestra, he decided to pursue orchestral playing as a career. He attended the Royal Scottish Academy of Music and Drama in Glasgow, and later the Royal Manchester College of Music in Lancashire.

After college, Hendrie spent three months in the BBC Training Orchestra. He then went to London and became second trumpet in the Sadler's Wells Opera Orchestra–later, the English National Opera–alongside Denis Egan, principal trumpet. Seven years later, Hendrie became second trumpet in the BBC Concert Orchestra, which performed mostly light music for radio broadcasts. After eight years, he became subprincipal. He also teaches at Goldsmith's College. Hendrie and his wife Nan Christine, an opera soprano, have a son, Ross (b. 1983). Hendrie enjoys fine food and wine.

Bibl.: Harrell, Martin. "The BBC Symphony Orchestra Trumpet Section" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Sept. 1995); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Henry, André (b. Le Cheylard, France, Jan. 28, 1969). French trumpeter. Henry learned to play trumpet at the age of twelve by listening to the recordings of Maurice André. He later studied with Jacques Jarmasson at the National Conservatory of Music in Avignon, receiving first prize in trumpet in 1987, and first prize in cornet in 1988. He met Pierre Dutot in 1991, who encouraged him to enter various solo competitions. Subsequently, he studied with Dutot at the National Conservatory of Lyons, and won first prize in trumpet. Other prizes include first in the Rhone-Alpes Competition, first in the International Wind Instruments Competition in Toulon (1992), second in the Guebwiller Competition (but with a special prize for the interpretation of contemporary music) and first in the 1996 Geneva Competition.

As a soloist, Henry has performed in many countries including Russia, China, Japan, Taiwan, Brazil, Venezuela, Germany, Spain, Portugal, Canada, Poland, Belgium, Macedonia, and the United States. He has appeared as a soloist with I Solisti Veneti, Ensemble Orchestre de Paris, Hannover Chamber Orchestra, St. Petersburg Symphony Orchestra, Simon Bolivar Symphony Orchestra, China Philharmonic, and the Venezuela Chamber Orchestra, among others. He has also been a guest teacher throughout the world. From 1993 to 2000, he was principal trumpet of the Pays de la Loire National Symphony Orchestra in Nantes. Since 2000, he has been the guest principal trumpet of the China Philharmonic Orchestra. He has endorsed Stomvi Trumpets since 1996, and is an editor for Editons Billaudot in Paris. Works for trumpet by Vincente Roncero, Marc Steckar, and Ivan Jevtić were dedicated to him.

Bibl.: Glover, Stephen L. "The Trumpet Competition of the 52nd International Competition for Musical Performers in Geneva" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Dec. 1996); "André Henry – Profile" (http://andrehenry.net); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Herbst, Franz (b. Ober-Grafendorf [near St. Pölten], Austria, Nov. 5, 1873; d. Leipzig, Germany, Jan. 12, 1962). Austrian trumpeter. Herbst was the principal trumpet of the Leipzig Gewandhausorchester from October 1, 1899 to September 30, 1936. He taught at the Leipzig Conservatory from 1908 to 1939. Among his best-known students are Franz Petzold, Kurt Ramm, Fritz Richter, and Ernst Meinhardt.

Dr. Walter Niemann praised Herbst in the Musikalisches Wochenblatt of December 23, 1909 for as performance of Bach's Christmas Oratorio I-III under Maestro Karl Straube—one of the most beautiful concerts of this winter—in the St. Thomas Church with the following words: One must feel admiration for Mr. Herbst's heroic excursions, mostly crowned with success, concerning the overcoming of the difficulties of old trumpet parts that are superhuman for modern instruments and unfortunately never entirely conquerable.

Furthermore, we can read in the Neue Leipziger Zeitung from December 25, 1921 about how a train on which the Gewandhausorchester was traveling through Switzerland five years earlier made a stop in Stein, across the Rhine River from Säckingen, Germany, the city which Nessler's opera, Der Trompeter von Säckingen (1884), had made world famous. While the train paused, allowing the musicians to enjoy the view, trumpeter Herbst played the heart-rending aria, "Behüt dich Gott" —so beautifully that all the listeners' hearts became warm, and the stationmaster did not allow the train to roll again until the jubilating fanfare flared up once again. From the train window...Arthur Nikisch, who had once conducted the world premiere in Leipzig, viewed the proceedings. (Both translations from the original German by Tarr.)

Herbst edited several publications of trumpet solos and etudes.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete, Bk. 2 (Schott).

Herforth, Harry Best (b. Pittsburgh, Pennsylvania, Sept. 19, 1916). American trumpeter. Herforth grew up near Pittsburgh. He studied with Carl McVicker, and attended the New England Conservatory, where he studied with Georges Mager, principal trumpet of the Boston Symphony Orchestra. After serving in the Army (1941-44), Herforth joined the Boston Symphony Orchestra as third trumpet (1946-51), and then played trumpet and cornet with the Cleveland Orchestra (1951-58). He was one of the founding members of The Cleveland Brass Ensemble, consisting of five members of the Cleveland Orchestra. After leaving the orchestra, he became a well-known teacher at Kent State University until his retirement.

Herforth had an interest in jazz music ever since his boyhood friendship with Billy Strayhorn, the famous jazz pianist and composer. During Herforth's retirement, he played in the TOP Swingband (Tough Old Pros, in his early 90s!) and published numerous transcriptions of music for brass ensembles. He and his wife Lydia have been married for nearly sixty years.

Bibl.: "Harry B. Herforth" (Musician Profiles" (www.topswingband.com/profiles.html); "Harry Best Herforth": (www.stokowski.org/Boston_Symphony_Musicians_List.htm); "Harry Best Herforth" (www.stokowski.org/Cleveland_Orchestra_Musicinas_List.htm).

Hering, Sigmund (b. Warsaw, Poland, May 10, 1899; d. Jan. 5, 1986). Polish-born American trumpeter. Hering graduated from the Royal Academy of Music in Vienna where he studied trumpet with professor Franz Rossbach, and composition with professor Franz Schrecker. He became principal trumpet of the Cleveland Orchestra in 1923, and the Philadelphia Orchestra under Leopold Stokowski in 1925. He moved to second trumpet in 1952, and remained with the orchestra until 1965.

Hering was considered one of the finest teachers of his day. He taught privately and at the Settlement School in Philadelphia for twenty years. His best-known student was Gilbert Johnson, who later became principal of the Philadelphia Orchestra. Hering published a large number of books for trumpet including 30 Etudes, Fifty Recreational Studies for the Young Trumpeter, The Sigmund Hering Trumpet Course (in four volumes), Sigmund Hering Etudes in All Major and Minor Keys, 38 Recreational Etudes for the Progressing Trumpeter, 32 Etudes, 40 Progressive Etudes, 28 Melodic and Technical Etudes, 23 Orchestral Etudes for the Advanced Trumpeter, Bach for Two Trumpets, and More Miniature Classics for Two Trumpets. In total, he composed 408 etudes for trumpet.

Bibl.: Erdman, Thomas R. An Annotated Bibliography and Guide to the Published Trumpet Music of Sigmund Hering (Edwin Mellen Press).

Hernàndez, José L. (b. Mexicali, Baja, California, Aug. 27, 1958). American trumpeter and singer. José is the youngest of eight children born to Estevan and Maria Eva H. Hernàndez. He grew up in Pico Rivera, California, and began learning to sing at age five. He took up the trumpet at age twelve and eventually studied music composition and arranging at the Grove School of Music in Hollywood (1979-82).

Having musical roots that go back to 1879, Heràndez is of the fifth generation of mariachi musicians in his family. He is the founder and leader of Mariachi Sol de Mexico (in 1981), an internationally famous group. An exciting and powerful trumpet soloist, his performances have made him perhaps the world's leading Mariachi trumpeter today.

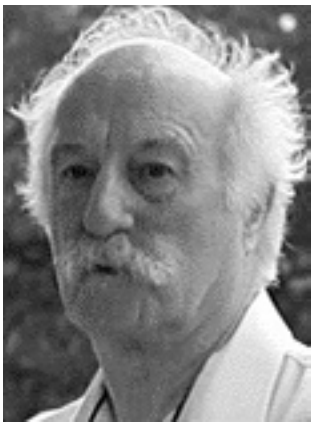
José and Teresa Alicia Hernàndez have been married since 1979, and have four children: Katrina (b. 1986), Melody (b. 1991), and twins Cristian and Crystal (b. 2000).

Bibl.: Mariachi Sol de Mexico website: www.soldemexicoonline.com/josebio.html; "José Hernàndez" (http://en. wikipedia.org/wiki/José_Hernàndez).

Herriot, Bobby (b. Edinburgh, Scotland, c1933). Scottish trumpeter and conductor with Canadian citizenship. Herriot grew up in Scotland. He began his playing career in several local brass bands, including the Newtongrange Silver Band, Dalkeith Burgh Band, and the City of Edinburgh Band. He attended the Royal Military School of Music, Royal College of Music, and the Royal Academy of Music. After college, he served in the Regimental Bands of the Royal Dragoons and the Royal Horse Guards until 1954. He studied with Walter Hargreaves and Jack Mackintosh (at Kneller Hall).

After freelancing in London, Herriot left his native Scotland in 1957 to join the Royal Canadian Air Force, which assigned him to the Edmonton Tactical Air Command Band, and Ottawa's RCAF Central Band. In 1960, he was transferred to the North American Aerospace Defense Command Band in Colorado Springs, Colorado. He left the Air Force in 1966 and moved to Vancouver, British Columbia (Canada), where he freelanced and lectured at the University of British Columbia's School of Music. Herriot moved to Toronto during the early 1970s, led his own dance band, and became director of the 7th Regiment and the Royal Canadian Artillery Band. He later again retired from the Air Force with the rank of lieutenant colonel.

Herriot became well known throughout the United States and Canada during the 1970s when he was an artist-clinician for the Getzen Company. He was a guest soloist with hundreds of high school and college concert and marching bands, performing Doc Severinsen-style solos that displayed his extraordinary high register. In order to be heard in large football stadiums, Getzen developed a Bobby Herriot-model trumpet that had an upright bell similar to that of Dizzy Gillespie. Herriot was also an active conductor in Toronto, leading the Greater Toronto Area Teachers Wind Ensemble and other bands.



Herriot was elected president of the Toronto Musi-cians' Union, and served as the Canadian vice president of the American Federation of Musicians in the U.S. He has received the Canadian Band Association's National Band Award, and has published several collections of beginning trumpet solos through Encore Publications, and The Bobby Herriot Trumpet Method through Neil Kojos Music.

Bibl.: Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Bobby Herriot" (www.tcband.ca/conductor.htm).

Herseth, Adolph Sylvester ("Bud") (b. Lake Park, Minnesota, July 25, 1921; d. Oak Park, Illinois, Apr. 13, 2013). American trumpeter.

Herseth was widely considered to be the greatest orchestral trumpeter of all time. His fifty-three-year tenure as principal trumpet of the Chicago Symphony Orchestra is the longest of any principal trumpeter in the world.

Both of Herseth's parents were of Norwegian ancestry. His father Adolph Augustinus Herseth was a Latin teacher, school superintendent, and public school band director. His mother Cora, a piano player, bore four children: older sister Agnus (now deceased), Adolph, younger sister Edith, and younger brother John, a retired dentist. "Bud" grew up in Decorah (Iowa), Letcher (South Dakota), and Bertha (Minnesota).

Herseth began playing the trumpet at age seven, but had no private lessons until late high school when he attended a summer music camp at the University of Minnesota. There, he took several lessons from James Greco, a member of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (now the Minnesota Orchestra). Herseth was inspired when he heard Greco perform in an orchestra concert during the camp. Early orchestra recordings his father had played for him that included Louis Davidson, Georges Mager, Harry Glantz, and Saul Caston as principal trumpeters also inspired him. His hobbies at that time were music, stamp collecting, and sports. He was quarterback of his high school football team, and was a regular basketball player for four years. He also played piano and sang in several choirs.

During his later years of high school, Herseth was hit in the mouth while playing basketball. The accident left a permanent scar that left him unable to play the trumpet for a while, so for two months he played the baritone in the band until his lip healed. At his graduation ceremony in 1939, he gave his valedictorian speech on The Future of Music.

Upon graduation, Herseth attended Luther College in Decorah, Iowa as a mathematics major. He sang in the Men's Chorus, and played in the band and a makeshift orchestra. He had to work to earn his way through college because his father had recently died. The band director insisted that he play cornet in the band, so Herseth sold his Conn 22B trumpet in order to afford to purchase a Conn cornet. During his junior and senior years, Herseth was hired by the college to teach freshmen trumpet students. He graduated in 1943 with a degree in mathematics, a subsidiary major in music, and minors in physics and education. On September fifth of that year, Herseth and Avis Marie Bottemiller, his elementary school sweetheart and fellow trumpeter in the Bertha elementary band, were married; they had three children: Christine (b. 1944); Stephen (b. 1947); Charles (b. 1950).

While in college, Herseth was enrolled in the Navy Reserve officer-training program, and upon graduation enlisted in the US Navy. He played in the Iowa Pre-flight Naval Band in Iowa City without being required to take part in boot camp. He later attended the Navy School of Music in Washington, D.C. for one month before being assigned to active duty in the South Pacific, where he spent seven months in Manila playing in a concert band during the day and a dance band at night.

Upon discharge from the service in January 1946, Herseth attended the New England Conservatory, paid for by the GI Bill of Rights. His goal was to become a university teacher. I really did not have any intentions of being a professional trumpet player. I wanted to get a master's degree for teaching purposes. I wanted to study with a high-class symphonic trumpet player because I enjoyed hearing those guys play.

At NEC, Herseth studied for three semesters with Marcel Lafosse, a member of the Boston Symphony Orchestra and solfeggio teacher at the conservatory. Lafosse taught him to become an elegant player and smoothed off some of the rough edges I had while playing in the Navy. Lafosse also introduced him to the C trumpet. During Herseth's last year at NEC, he was finally able to get into Georges Mager's studio (Mager was principal of the BSO.) Mager was very exciting to listen to. Those concerts are in my head like tapes. Herseth was told to go to the Bach factory in the Bronx and purchase a good large-bore C trumpet. At that time other orchestras were mainly using B-flat trumpets, but Mager and Lafosse preferred the C trumpet because of their studies at the Paris Conservatory.

In 1947, Roger Voisin was offered the principal trumpet chair in the Chicago Symphony Orchestra. While Voisin contemplated moving from his third position in the BSO, Herseth received a telegram inviting him to audition for the third chair in Chicago. So, in November of that year, Herseth went to New York City and played for Maestro Artur Rodzinski at his apartment. After Herseth had played for about an hour, Rodzinski asked Herseth what experience he had in orchestra playing. Herseth's reply was, None! The maestro told Herseth that he was interested in offering him the principal position (Voisin had recently declined), but wanted to hear him again, this time in Orchestra Hall in Chicago. The following month, Herseth played in Chicago for Rodzinski, the CSO's concertmaster, and the general manager. After about a ninety-minute audition, Herseth was hired.

Following the Chicago audition, Mager invited Herseth to play as an extra with the BSO in performances of Mahler's Second Symphony under Leonard Bernstein. Herseth had previously played for two summers in an orchestra at Tanglewood under Bernstein. It was there that he had made the decision to become an orchestral trumpeter. Herseth also played with the Boston Pops Orchestra under Arthur Fiedler.

Herseth started playing with the Chicago Symphony Orchestra during the summer of 1948. His tonal quality and playing style gradually shaped the sound of the brass section and the entire orchestra. He was known for his singing style of playing. Music is a communicative art. Every instrument in a way is an imitation of the human voice. The human voice offers lyrics, melody, and all the different sounds that can be made. They tell a complete story more than anybody can on an instrument...That's what every instrumentalist should try to do: to tell a story like the singers do...That for me is the ultimate. Herseth also played throughout the 1950s and 1960s as a member of the Chicago Symphony Brass Quintet, which toured for two weeks each fall and two weeks each spring during orchestra vacations. Renold Schilke was the second trumpeter. The quintet made one LP recording for Audiophile.

Herseth was forced to take a six-week sabbatical in 1952, when an automobile accident severely injured his embouchure and teeth. I was off for six weeks, then came back and played the last two weeks of the season. At home I couldn't even play out of the staff but when I got down here in the hall, with the orchestra, it all happened—Tchaikovsky "Fifth Symphony," everything!

In April 1968, the brass section of the CSO joined the brass sections of the Cleveland and Philadelphia orchestras to record the album The Antiphonal Music of Gabrieli, which won a Grammy Award for "Best Instrumental Ensemble." We had a great time doing that. It was a lot of fun. Never tuned, nothing, just sat down and played. No conductor.

Herseth performed solos over one hundred times with the Chicago Symphony. On occasion, he also appeared as a guest soloist with other orchestras, as he felt that this was an important way to keep on top of his game. However, solo playing as a career was not interesting to him. I'm not into the "bag" of making solo records. I've turned down any number of requests to do that sort of thing. I think I got my fill of playing solos while in high school and college. I still like doing it. I'm required to do it occasionally as part of my job in the orchestra. When I found out how much higher the musical quality of orchestral compositions was as compared with solo compositions, I said to myself "The real gratification, in a musical sense, is here with this hundred-piece group, not with an accompanist." For me, there is no thrill that I could have in solo playing that even comes close to the musical thrill of playing the stuff that we play every week. Even the little pitsy-patsy Mozart parts. If you do them right, in the right context, with the right people around you, it's fantastic! I'll take that over solo playing anytime. There's a lot more [repertoire] and it's a lot better. I don't know of any trumpet solo that can begin to compare with one of the great Mahler symphonies, or Strauss tone poems, or Stravinsky's "Petrouchka," nothing. I've never felt anything from the solo literature that even scratches the surface of the music we do here. So, in a sense I'm selfish. I'm doing it for musical gratification.

In 1988, Herseth premiered Karel Husa's Concerto for Trumpet and Orchestra, commissioned by the CSO, but did not particularly enjoy the piece. I'm an old square in terms of choice of music...I am not "Avant Garde." They can splash that stuff on the wall all they want, but I don't want to.

During the late 1980s, Herseth played Monette trumpets as well as his Bach instruments. The rest of the trumpet section refused to play Monette horns, resulting in some friction within the section because of the lack of blending tone qualities. Herseth gradually came back to using his Bach trumpets in the orchestra. He also played on large Bach mouthpieces, typically a 1B for most repertoire, and a 1C for French repertoire. He also played eight or so other mouthpieces with various keys and types of trumpets needed for each orchestral work (he kept a large notebook of preferred equipment choices for each work.) Herseth began to perform the Second Brandenburg Concerto by Bach in 1963, and three years later recorded it under James Levine with the CSO. He played it on a Couesnon piccolo trumpet with a 7E Bach mouthpiece. He also toured the world many times with the CSO, and recorded over five hundred LPs and compact discs with it. One of the recordings included Haydn's Trumpet Concerto in E-flat under Claudio Abbado.

As a teacher, Herseth has coached hundreds of students that now occupy major performing and teaching positions around the world. In his early years with the CSO, he taught at Northwestern University, but quickly resigned in order to devote more of his energies to the orchestra. He gave lessons to the trumpet sections of the Civic Orchestra of Chicago for decades, and taught several private lessons each week throughout his career. Among his students are Frank Kaderabek, Dale Marrs, William Scarlett, Edward H. Tarr, and George Vosburgh.

Herseth introduced some aspects of the French orchestral trumpet style through the Chicago Symphony. His favorite trumpeters were Louis Davidson, Harry Glantz, Maurice André, and Maynard Ferguson. Like many other orchestral trumpeters, he was interested in the phrasings of singers, and his favorites are Jussi Björling and Frank Sinatra. His secure articulation and commanding tonal presence in the orchestra earned him the nickname, Conductor from the Back Row. Many musicians in the orchestra, particularly those who were seated far from the conductor, depended on his musical clarity to assist in accurate ensemble playing.

In 1983, Herseth was made an honorary member of the Royal Danish Guild of Trumpeters. In 1996, he was named "Instrumentalist of the Year" by Musical America magazine, and was the first orchestra musician to receive this distinction.

Herseth retired from the Chicago Symphony Orchestra in 2001 after fifty-three years as principal trumpet, but played with it two more years as an active extra or substitute player. After retiring, he was able to present master classes and workshops at conservatories and universities around the world. Following his retirement, the New York Philharmonic performed a concert in his honor and presented him with an award for his outstanding musical service to orchestral playing. The International Trumpet Guild gave him its Honorary Award for lifetime artistic achievement. The New York Times stated that Herseth was Quite possibly the most dazzling player on his instrument in the world today. He received Honorary Doctorate degrees from Luther College and the New England Conservatory, and is a Charter Member of the Symphonic Hall of Fame of the National Trumpet Symposium (Denver). In addition, he was selected as a member of Sir Georg Solti's World Orchestra for Peace, consisting of many of the finest orchestra players in the world.

Herseth was an avid golfer for most of his life. He also enjoyed fishing, French Impressionist paintings, and spending time with his children and grandchildren. He practiceddaily and continued to teach. He remained a humble yet supremely confident man and musician. During his long career, if asked by someone who he is and what he does, his answer was always, I'm a trumpet player in a symphony orchestra.

Bibl.: Neidig, Kenneth L. "Man Alive, What A Kick This Is!" (The Instrumentalist, Apr. 1977); Phillips, Harvey. "The Evolution of the Chicago Symphony Brass Sound" (The Instrumentalist, Sept. 1989); Woolworth, William Neal. A Biography of Adolph Herseth: His Performance and Pedagogical Contributions (unpublished DMA diss., Arizona State University, 1993); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3, video clip; Oct. 2008).

Photos: Playing, by Vera H. Olcott. Herseth with Arnold Jacobs

Hession, Patrick E[dward John] (b. Lafayette, Indiana, Apr. 29, 1968). American trumpeter. Hession began playing trumpet at the age of twelve when he was inspired by hearing Maynard Ferguson on television. His first performing experiences were at church, and he soon began listening to Maurice André recordings. During the summer before his senior year of high school, he suffered from a collapsed lung, and while unable to play the trumpet for two months, listened to recordings of Ferguson. After recovering, he was able to play some of Ferguson's solos, which landed him summer jobs at the Cedar Point Amusement Park in Cleveland, Ohio. After high school, he played at the Walt Disney Theme Park Resort in Florida, and with the All-American College Marching Band (1990) and Show Band (1991). He also played with the jazz ensembles at Ball State University (1989-91) and the University of Nevada Jazz Ensemble (1992).

Hession joined the Lionel Hampton Band (1992-96) with which he played at various festivals in 1995 and 1996. He won a music scholarship to the University of Nevada in Las Vegas, and during four years studying there, freelanced in the area. He accepted lead trumpet positions with the Glenn Miller Orchestra (1996-98), Royal Caribbean Cruise Lines (on and off, 1994-2000), Maynard Ferguson's Big Bop Nouveau (2000-2006), Scott Gwinnell Jazz Orchestra (2006 to present), Paul Keller Orchestra (2008 to present), Toledo Jazz Orchestra (2007 to present), and the Harry James Orchestra (2008 to present). He has played lead in numerous show bands, including those for CATS, The Color Purple, Legally Blonde, The Rat Pack is Back!, All Shook Up!, and The Producers. He has played as a backup musician for dozens of celebrities and jazz greats including Paul Anka, Randy Brecker, Conte Candoli, Jerry Lewis, Joe Williams, Snooky Young, Bob Mintzer, The Four Freshmen, and The Mills Brothers, just to name a few.

Hession is currently living and working in Detroit, Michigan. He has published a trumpet book titled Hession's Sessions (self-published). He credits Bill Hodges, Walt Blanton, Stan Mark, Bobby Shew, Tom Porrello, Michael "Rocky" Winslow, Tony Barrero, Jeff Anderson, and Larry McWilliams as his teachers.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Trumpet Player Patrick Hession of Detroit, Michigan" (www.trumpetplayerprofiles.com/patrickhession.html).

Heuvelman, André (b. Veenendaal Grewup, Holland, Feb. 10, 1966). Dutch trumpeter. Heuvelman studied with Wim van Schaik from 1978 to 1983 in his home town, and with Ad van Zon at the Rotterdam Conservatory, part of the Codarts University for the Arts, from 1983 to 1992 (graduating Cum Laude in 1989). He also studied with Ludwig Güttler in Leipzig, and with Hannes Läubin in Stuttgart. In 1987-89, he was a member of the European Youth Orchestra.

Heuvelman joined the Rotterdam Philharmonic Orchestra in 1990, and became principal trumpet in 1997. Since 1990, he has also been a professor at the Rotterdam Conservatory, and a member of the Netherlands Wind Ensemble and Combattimento Consort. He is also a professor at Fontys College of Music in Tilburg. As a soloist, he has toured the Netherlands, United States, France, and Colombia, and has released solo CDs for the NBE, Brilliant, and VPRO labels.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); http://www.andreheuvelman.com/home/Contact,_about_%26_guestbook.html.

Hey, Jerry (b. Dixon, Illinois, 1950). American trumpeter, composer, and arranger. Hey comes from a musical family; his father played trombone, his mother played piano, and two brothers played brass instruments. Hey attended the National Music Camp at Interlochen, Michigan, for two summers while in high school, and later attended Indiana University where he studied with William Adam. Hey left IU after only two years in order to begin working as a performer and arranger. He was an original member of the group, Seawind, which moved to Los Angeles, and became somewhat famous on a national scale by playing with Barbra Streisand (Las Vegas), and Quincy Jones who noticed Hey's arranging and composing skill, and asked him to write several works for Jones's productions.

Soon, Hey was known as a leading composer and arranger, winning Grammy Awards in this capacity in each year 1981-84, and 1991. In 1997, he composed Jedi Rocks for the Special Edition of the film, Starwars: Return of the Jedi. Hey has performed on hundreds of recordings by many of the biggest names in music, including Michael Jackson.

Bibl.: "Jerry Hey" (www.seawindjazz.com/BAND.HYM); "Jerry Hey" (http://en.wikikpedia.org).

Hickman, David ("Dave") R[ussell] (b. Duncan, Oklahoma, June 19, 1950). American trumpeter. Hickman grew up in the small oil and farming community of Kimball, Nebraska, where he studied music with Harry E. McNees (1960-68). He attended the University of Colorado in Boulder (B.M. degree in 1972) and Wichita State University in Kansas (M.M. degree in 1974), studying with Frank Baird and Walter Myers, respectively. He also studied with violinist Oswald Lehnert, and in a master class under Maurice André in Denver (1972).

Hickman was the national winner of the orchestral division of the Music Teachers National Association Solo Competition in 1972, the Naftzger Young Artists Award in 1974, and twice was selected as principal trumpet of the National Repertory Orchestra (1971 and 1972). In 1973, he was chosen as the Young Trumpet Artist by the National Trumpet Symposium in Denver where he performed a full concert of concertos with orchestral accompaniment. He attended the 1974 Tanglewood Music Festival where he received the C.D. Jackson Prize, and studied with Armando Ghitalla and Roger Voisin.

After serving as a graduate teaching assistant at Wichita State University, and playing in the Wichita Brass Quintet (faculty) and the Wichita Symphony Orchestra, Hickman became an assistant and associate professor of music at the University of Illinois (1974-82). He played in the Illinois Brass Quintet (faculty), the Saint Louis Brass Quintet (1976-90), and was a key figure in establishing the International Trumpet Guild by serving on its Interim Steering Committee. He presented a lecture-demonstration on the keyed trumpet during the 1975 organizational meeting of the ITG at Indiana University, hosted the 1977 ITG Conference at the University of Illinois, and was elected ITG President (1977-79). He continued studies with Adolph Herseth during his eight years in Illinois. At the age of twenty-seven, Hickman was selected by Musical America magazine as one of the top ten new solo artists, and was the only brass player so honored.

It was during the late 1970s that Hickman's solo career blossomed. He was represented by Joanne Rile Artists Management in Philadelphia, and made over two thousand guest solo appearances with five hundred orchestras worldwide (1978-2002). His European agent was Konzertdirection Schlotte in Salzburg, Austria. Hickman and Jane Williams were married in 1975 and had two sons, Michael (b. 1979) and Timothy (b. 1985).

Hickman became an associate professor of music at Arizona State University (Tempe) in 1982, was promoted to full professor in 1983, and was awarded the distinction of Regents' Professor in 1989, a position he still holds. He formed the large brass ensemble Summit Brass in 1984, and established its annual two-week seminar, the Keystone Brass Institute (Keystone, Colorado, 1986-92). Summit Brass moved the institute to Arizona State University in 1993, and renamed it the Rafael Méndez Brass Institute after the famed Hollywood trumpeter. Since 1993, the institute has moved to various locations in the United States, including Cincinnati, Boulder, and Denver. Hickman also organized the 1995 International Brassfest, which attracted over fourteen hundred brass players to the Indiana University campus; he also organized the 1996 International Brassfest in Long Beach, California. Through the generous support of the Méndez family, Hickman established the Rafael Méndez Library in the School of Music at ASU in 1993.

In 1987, Hickman and Summit Brass established a record label named Summit Records, which produced many recordings, mostly of brass music (1987-96). The company was sold to Hickman's mother, Dorothy Hickman, and when she passed away in 1998, David purchased it, but sold most of his stock in 2000 when his divorce from Jane was finalized. The company is still prospering in Tempe, Arizona.

Hickman recorded nineteen solo albums and CDs on the Crystal, Clarino, and Summit labels, as well as eleven CDs with Summit Brass and four with the Saint Louis Brass Quintet. His many publications include The Piccolo Trumpet (1973—the first method for the piccolo trumpet), The Piccolo Trumpet Big Book, Trumpet Lessons with David Hickman—bks. 1-5, Music Speed Reading, 15 Advanced Embouchure Studies, and over two hundred editions or arrangements of trumpet solos and ensemble works. His teaching text, Trumpet Pedagogy: A Compendium of Modern Teaching Techniques, is widely used, and his method for beginning trumpeters, 100 Progressive Lessons for Trumpet, has also gained popularity.

Hickman has presented clinics and master classes at more than four hundred major university campuses worldwide. He taught at the Brevard Music Festival (summer 1975), Banff Centre for the Arts (summers 1984-97), Bremen (Germany) Trumpet Days, Rafael Méndez Trumpet Festival in Mexico City, and many other music festivals. He has served as an artist-faculty member at numerous ITG conferences, and has been a judge at many national and international solo and chamber music competitions. His proposal to the ITG for a major international trumpet solo competition resulted in the establishment of the Ellsworth Smith-ITG Solo Competition, of which he served as Judge Chairman during the inaugural competition at The Ohio State University in 1988. Hickman received the ITG Award of Merit in 2005, and was named Alumnus of the Year by the University of Colorado in 2011.

Hickman's long teaching career has produced hundreds of professional trumpeters who now occupy important positions in symphony orchestras, military bands, chamber groups, and universities. His most famous students include Joe Burgstaller, David Bilger, John Marchiando, Thomas Booth, Douglas Carlsen, Stephen Anderson, Micah Wilkinson, and Jens Lindemann. He established the publishing company, Hickman Music Editions, in 2005. About Hickman, Michel Laplace wrote, He is one of the best classical soloists of the 1980-1990s (a great piccolo specialist according to Jens Lindemann) and a very distinguished soloist on the cornet, worthy as a successor to Herbert L. Clarke.

In 2009, Hickman and pianist Miriam [Ball] Hickman were married. His hobbies include watch collecting and desert off-road driving.

Bibl.: Bowman, Joseph. "David Hickman Goes On Record" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, June 2003); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Morgan, Huw. "David Hickman" (The Brass Herald, Oct. 2008); Neidig, Kenneth (with David Hickman). "Advancing the Virtuoso Tradition" (The Instrumentalist, Dec. 1989); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl.; extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Hightshoe, Robert B. (b. c1924). American trumpeter. As a teenager, Hightshoe was selected to play in Leopold Stokowski's All American Youth Orchestra, and received a scholarship to attend The Ohio State University in 1942. He became first trumpet and a charter member of the Columbus Philharmonic, and played principal in the Columbus Little Symphony and the Columbus Symphony Orchestra. He also founded and led the Columbus Symphony Brass Quintet.

Hightshoe taught at Everett Junior High School in Lancaster, Ohio, for forty years. He was an adjunct professor at The Ohio State University for many years, and participated in the Brass Band of Columbus (charter member). In 1997, he was elected to the Columbus Senior Musicians Hall of Fame.

Bibl.: "Robert Hightshoe" (http://seniormusicians.homestead.com/1997.html).

Hilbrand, Lothar (b. Dalaas, Austria, Dec. 6, 1949). Austrian trumpeter. Hilbrand studied for two years in Innsbruck with Hans Zorn, and three years at the conservatory in Feldkirch with Alexander Jessner. He studied the (valveless) Baroque trumpet privately with Dr. Edward H. Tarr.

From 1978 to 1989, Hilbrand performed with the legendary Laurentius von Schnifis brass ensemble, which toured Austria, Germany, Switzerland, and the United States, playing an average of sixty concerts each year. He is a piccolo trumpet specialist, and also played natural trumpet in the Altenburg Ensemble. He participated in the recording Against The Tide by the Feldkirch Trumpet Consortium.

Hilbrand was a member of the Vorarlberg Symphony Orchestra for ten years. He has been a professor at the Vorarlberg State Conservatory for many years, producing a legion of excellent students during the past several decades.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hillyer, Lonnie (b. Monroe, Georgia, Mar. 25, 1940; d. New York, New York, July 1, 1985). American trumpeter. Hillyer grew up in Detroit and took up the trumpet at age eleven, studying at Larry Teal's studio. He made his debut with pianist Barry Harris. In 1959, he visited New York and recorded with Yusef Lateef. He taught trumpet in Detroit until the summer of 1960, when he moved to New York where he soon worked with Slide Hampton (1960), Joe Henderson (1960), Barry Harris (1962-63), and Charles Mingus (1960-61, 1964-65, 1971-73).

Lonnie Hillyer and alto sax player Charles McPherson co-led a small group in 1966, but Hillyer decided to retire in 1973 at the age of thirty-three. He taught music for the rest of his brief life. Some of his recordings have been reissued recently on CD including Cry!/Tender (Original Jazz Classics), Live at the Five Spot (Prestige), and Mingus Mingus! (Candid).

Bibl.: Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008).

Hilser, Georg (b. Schramberg, Germany, Oct. 22, 1947). German trumpeter. Hilser studied with Adam Zeyer before attending the Richard Strauss Conservatory in Munich, where he studied with Hellmut Schneidewind and Rolf Quinque. While a student, he began his professional playing career in a spa orchestra in Wildbad, and as a member of the Münster Municipal Theatre Orchestra and the Cologne Opera Orchestra.

Hilser began his fulltime orchestral career in 1972, when he joined the Bonn Beethoven Hall Orchestra. He left the orchestra in 1976 to join the trumpet section of the Berlin Philharmonic, and during the summers of 1982 and 1983, he played with the Bayreuth Festival Orchestra. He has recorded with the Ludwig Güttler Brass Ensemble, Berlin Philharmonic Brass Ensemble, and the German Brass.

Hilser enjoys spending time with his family, walking, bicycling, and camping in his RV.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Georg Hilser" (www.berliner-philharmoniker.de).

Himmler, Ralph ("Mosch") (b. Landau, Germany, Sept. 26, 1962). German trumpeter. Himmler studied jazz and pop music with Ack van Rooyen, Eric van Lier, Bert Joris, Rob Madna, and Ferdinand Povel in Hilversum, Holland, from 1987 to 1992. A highly versatile performer, he plays a wide variety of instruments including all types of trumpets (natural, piccolo, bass, flugelhorn, cornet, etc.), baroque flute, French horn, didgeridoo, and percussion. He also plays all styles of music including jazz, Dixieland, classical, and baroque.

Himmler has performed with numerous groups including the Dutch Jazz Orchestra, Berlin Radio Dance Orchestra, Friedrichstadt Palastorchester, Rogau Monotones, RIAS Dance Orchestra, and the Al Grey Quintet. Since 1997, he has been a member of the Winestreet Dixie Company ensemble, and is a member of Das Blech, consisting of seven brass and one percussion. He is a big band conductor and a professor at the Saarland School of Music. His colleagues in Das Blech describe him as, pony-tailed, a prankster from the Rhineland Pfalz, who is nevertheless seriously passionate when it comes to the trumpet.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); "Ralph "Mosch" Himmler, Trumpet" (www.dasblech.com/ralfhimmler_en.htm).

Hines, Harold C[henny] (b. Chicago, Illinois, June 21, 1918; d. Mesa, Arizona, Apr. 2, 1998). American trumpeter. Hines grew up in Springfield, Illinois, where he attended public schools. He studied with Haskell Sexton at the University of Illinois, where he earned a bachelor of music education degree, and then taught band in a small town near Champaign, Illinois, for one semester before enlisting in the Army Air Corps. During his military years, he served as band director of the 543rd Army Air Corps band stationed at Bakersfield, California.

After World War II, Hines taught at Southern Illinois University for two years, and earned a master's degree in music there as well. He then accepted a one-year position (1951-52) as director of bands at Drake University in Des Moines, Iowa, while Gordon Bird was on academic leave. Hines moved to Tempe, Arizona, in the fall of 1952 to assume the position of director of bands and trumpet professor at Arizona State College (now Arizona State University), a position he held from 1952 to 1966. From 1966, he taught trumpet (only) at ASU until his retirement in 1982 when he was succeeded by David Hickman.

Hines hosted the 1979 International Trumpet Guild Conference at ASU. He was a member of the Arizona Band Directors Association, and served a term as its president. He was also a member of the College Band Directors National Association, Music Educators National Conference, and the American Bandmasters Association.

After retirement in 1982, Harold Hines taught privately, mostly to beginning trumpet students. His wife Gerry died in 1993. Hines died in 1998 due to a stroke. He was seventy-nine. The ASU Foundation established a memorial scholarship in his honor.

Bibl.: Zajec, Victor and Martha. "Memorials and Tributes to Members of the American Bandmasters Association" (www.americanbandmastersassociation.org).

Hino, Terumasa (b. Tokyo, Japan, Oct. 25, 1942). Japanese trumpeter. Hino's father was a dancer and trumpeter. He taught Terumasa to tap dance at age four, and the boy took up the trumpet at age nine. By age thirteen, Terumasa was playing professionally in local groups, and later at US Army base camps (1957-60). He also played with his brother Motohiro Hino, led his own groups (from 1961), and played with the Hideo Shiraki Quintet (1962-65). Although self-taught, his early influences were Lee Morgan, Freddie Hubbard, and Miles Davis.

Hino played in Europe (1973-74) and moved to New York City in 1975, working regularly in Japan and the Big Apple through the 1990s. He performed with Jackie McLean, Joachim Kuhn, John Scofield, Elvin Jones, the Gil Evans Orchestra, Ken McIntyre, Chick Corea, Herbie Hancock, Carlos Garnett, Larry Coryell's Eleventh House, Hal Galper, Greg Osby, Sam Jones, David Liebman, Masabumi Kikuchi, and many others. He is comfortable playing hard bop, free jazz, creative fusion, post-bop, and rock music.

As Japan's leading jazz trumpeter, Hino has released too many albums to list, but a representative list includes Bluestruck (Blue Note), From the Heart (Blue Note), Blue Smiles (Blue Note), Unforgettable (Blue Note), Spark (Blue Note), Vibrations (Enja), Fuji (Enja), Taro's Mood (Enja), Triple Helix (Enja), Hi-nology (Takt), Alone Again (Takt), Into Eternity (Columbia), Into the Heaven (Columbia), Hip Seagull (Flying Disk), May Dance (Flying Disk), Speak to Loneliness (East Wind), Live (Three Blind Mice), and Journey to Air (Canyon).

Hino is a noted composer. He has appeared at numerous jazz festivals around the world.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Minor, William. Jazz Journeys to Japan: the heart within (University of Michigan Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); "Terumasa Hino" (http://en.wikipedia.org).

Hipps, Merrimon ("Mike") T. Jr. (b. c1937). American trumpeter. Hipps received a bachelor of music degree from Florida State University in 1959. Later study was with William Vacchiano and Arnold Jacobs. He joined the trumpet section of the Minneapolis Symphony Orchestra (now the Minnesota Orchestra) in 1964, playing mostly fourth trumpet until retiring in 1999. He has also performed with the Grand Teton Festival Orchestra, American Ballet Theatre Orchestra, Virginia Symphony Orchestra, Minnesota Brass Quintet, Santa Fe Opera Orchestra, and the Saint Paul Chamber Orchestra. In 2009, he was given the Ernst Von Dohnanyi Excellence in Music Performance Award.

Bibl.: Annibale, Ed. Trumpeters Galore (Trafford).

Hirt, Al[ois Maxwell] (b. New Orleans, Louisiana, Nov. 7, 1922; d. New Orleans, Louisiana, Apr. 27, 1999). American trumpeter. Al Hirt was the biggest trumpet celebrity in America during the 1960s. His fifty-five record albums and numerous television appearances made him a household name.

Hirt began playing the trumpet at age six when his father, a New Orleans policeman, purchased a used trumpet at a pawnshop. Al soon played with the Junior Police Band. He eventually graduated from high school in 1940. He attended the Cincinnati Conservatory (1940-43) under Dr. Frank Simon with the intention of becoming a classical musician. However, the recordings of Harry James and Roy Eldridge inspired him to learn jazz.

When the United States became involved in World War II, Hirt left school and joined the Army (1943-46) where he played in the 82nd Army Air Force Band. After his service, he performed with the jazz orchestras of Jimmy Dorsey, Tommy Dorsey, and Ray McKinley. In 1948, he worked as a staff musician for New Orleans radio station WWL's The Dawn Busters. Hirt won a radio talent contest in 1949 that led to his employment by Horace Heidt. He made his recording debut in 1955 as a Dixieland player with Monk Hazel on the Southland label. He left the studio in 1957 to work with clarinetist Pete Fountain. In order to support his wife Mary (Patureau) and their growing family, Hirt took a day job as a salesman for a pest control company. As it turned out, the owner of the pest control company, trumpeter Mike Lala, owned a nightclub on Bourbon Street called Dan's Pier 600, and hired Hirt as the trumpeter of a Dixieland band that performed there nightly. This led to the recording of four albums for Audio Fidelity.

In order to gain a wider audience, Hirt took the band to Chicago and played for a while at the Palmer House hotel. A talent agent happened to hear the group and arranged for them to appear in Las Vegas (Riviera Hotel, Dunes Hotel, Harrah's Club). They played to packed houses each night for nearly a year and became a leading attraction on the Las Vegas strip. The agent booked Hirt's group on several television shows including the Dinah Shore Show, Jack Parr Show, Tonight Show, Jimmy Dean Show, Today Show, Ed Sullivan Show, Andy Williams Show, Perry Como Show, Bell Telephone Hour, and others. RCA signed Hirt to record in 1960.

A string of hit recordings were made between 1960 and 1965 making Hirt a national celebrity and a wealthy man. Tunes such as Java, Sugar Lips, and Cotton Candy sold millions of copies. Hirt played a soldout concert at Carnegie Hall (1965) and made a best-selling album with the Boston Pops orchestra with conductor Arthur Fiedler titled Pops Goes The Trumpet (1964). For that album, he studied Haydn's Concerto under Roger Voisin. With his fame and fortune, Hirt opened his own nightclub in New Orleans that was successful for over twenty years. His brother Gerald "Slick" Hirt, who had previously played trombone in Louis Prima's band, joined Al's Dixieland group and performed at Al's nightclub for years. Hirt even had his own New Orleans television variety show, Fanfare, in 1965.

Al Hirt appeared in several movies including Rome Adventure (1962), World by Night II (1964), Lovers Must Learn, and others. He continued to release popular albums (totaling fifty-five) that included Holiday for Trumpet (1962), Louisiana Man, Trumpet and Strings, Our Man in New Orleans, Live at Carnegie Hall, The Greatest Horn in the World, Al Hirt in New Orleans, Al Hirt at the Mardi Gras, Honey in the Horn, and Brassman's Holiday. He received twenty-one Grammy Award nominations and received a Grammy Award in 1963 for Java. His band was invited to perform at President John F. Kennedy's inaugural ball in 1961. He and Doc Severinsen were dueling trumpet celebrities during the half time show of the 1967 Super Bowl football game, and the Leblanc Corporation produced an Al Hirt-model trumpet in the late 1960s. In addition, Hirt recorded the theme of the television series, The Green Hornet, that was later featured in the 2003 movie, Kill Bill. For a while during the late 1960s, he was an owner of the New Orleans Saints professional football team.

Hirt's career was at its peak. Being a large man (6 feet-2 inches tall and over 330 pounds) he obtained a variety of nicknames including "Jumbo," "Uncle Jumbo," Al "He's the King" Hirt, "Sugar Lips," "King of the Trumpet," and "The Round Mound of Sound."

Despite his wealth and popularity, Hirt's personal life was not always easy. His wife of thirty-two years died, and he began to have serious health problems because of his weight. He underwent gastroplasty (stomach stapling) around 1966. Crowned the "King of the Mardi Gras" in 1970, Hirt was being carried through the streets in a float during a parade when a spectator tossed a piece of cement at Hirt, striking him in the mouth. Hirt had to undergo surgery to repair his lips and needed months away from the horn to recover. The television comedy show, Saturday Night Live, aired a parody skit of the accident called "Let's Hit Al Hirt in the Mouth Contest." Hirt played with Duke Ellington (1970) and Ella Fitzgeralad (1972). Louis Armstrong liked his powerful playing, and that good New Orleans Soul pouring out of his horn. Later he did duets with Maynard Ferguson (1986).

Hirt married Zide Jahncke and had one child, but was divorced three years later. He took care of this child, plus eight children from his earlier marriage to Mary. He later married Beverly Estabrook Essel, a friend of over forty years, in 1990. In 1987, he performed Ave Maria for Pope John Paul II during the Pope's visit to New Orleans. Hirt considered this to be one of his most important performances.

The last years of Hirt's life were mostly spent in New Orleans. He continued performing at his club and at the Jazz & Heritage Festival. He gave numerous talks to area high school bands about the importance of staying in school and keeping after their music studies. He mentored several young performers, including Wynton Marsalis, in the early 1960s, even giving Wynton one of his own trumpets. Hirt enjoyed deep sea fishing and spending time with his children and numerous grandchildren.

Hirt suffered a stroke in 1998 and developed edema (an abnormal accumulation of fluid under the skin) in his legs that forced him to be in a wheelchair. He died the following year from liver failure and is buried at the Metaire Cemetery in New Orleans. He was a humble man who was very generous and kind. His fame caused many of his jazz peers to criticize his jazz playing as being too commercial, but Hirt said many times, I'm a pop musician and I've got a successful format. He was fifteen times voted by readers as the "World's Best Trumpeter" in Playboy magazine's jazz poll.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Kernfeld, Barry (Edit.). The New Grove Dictionary of Jazz (St. Martin's Press); Yanow, Scott. Trumpet Kings (Backbeat Books); "Al Hirt" (Wikipedia: http://en.wikipedia.org); "Al Hirt" (www.anb.org); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. extract on mp3; Oct. 2008).

Hoch, Theodor[e] (b. Finsterwalde [near Berlin], Germany, Jan. 9, 1842; d. Brooklyn, New York, Feb. 12, 1906). German cornetist. Hoch began playing cornet at an early age in the town of Spremberg. At age ten, he moved to Berlin where he eventually became a member of the famed Kaiser Franz Guard Grenadier Second Regiment Band. In 1867, the band won first prize at the Paris Exposition, and Hoch received the gold medal for his cornet solo playing from the hands of Napoléon. Hoch visited America in 1872, when the band played at the World's Peace Jubilee. On a return trip in 1876, Hoch and the band performed at the Centennial Exposition in Philadelphia. Hoch also played in the Johann Strauss Orchestra in Vienna. Between 1875 and 1881, he was soloist with the celebrated orchestra of Benjamin Bilse in Berlin.

Hoch immigrated to the United States in 1881, and worked as a cornet soloist, teacher, and composer. In 1896, he toured with the Mozart Symphony Club of New York. His Tutor for the Cornet (1880) is based on his principle of placing most of the pressure of the mouthpiece against the lower lip, thus allowing the upper lip to vibrate freely. This method gave him an extraordinary range. His prize student, Ernest Albert Couturier, had an impressive six-octave range.

Hoch composed a few orchestral works and many solos for the cornet. Among them are Alpine Flowers, American Fantasia, Echoes of the Valley, Fantasie Brilliante, Souvenir de Bellini, Swiss Song: Romance, Une Perle de l'Océan, Remembrance of Prague, and Greetings from the New World. He often performed on an "echo-cornet" built to his design by the Conn Company. This instrument had two bells; a fourth valve directed the sound to a muted bell, but otherwise it functioned normally. He ended many concerts in which he unfurled an American flag from the long bell of a Conn herald trumpet while playing the Star Spangled Banner.

Bibl.: Bridges, Glenn. Pioneers in Brass (Sherwood Publications); Schwartz, Richard I. The Cornet Compendium (self-published); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Tarr, Edward H. "Theodore Hoch, the 'Much Beloved Solo Cornetist of Bilse's Capelle'" (Historic Brass Society Journal, 2007); (www.historicbrass.org/Portals/0/Documents/Journal/2007/HBSJ_2007_JL01_004_Tarr_7978.pdf).

Hodel, Martin ("Marty") (b. Lubondai, Belgian Congo, Jan. 8, 1964). American trumpeter. Hodel's parents were American medical service workers who were in the Belgian Congo at the time of Martin's birth. Martin grew up mainly in Harlan, Kentucky. He began playing the trumpet at age ten; his father, Dr. Paul Hodel (a clarinet player), gave him his first lessons, and he also took several lessons from Dee Romines (a graduate trumpet student at the University of Tennessee at the time). After graduating from Harlan High School in 1982, Hodel attended Goshen College from 1982 to 1987, studying with Craig Heitger. He continued his studies from 1988 to 1990 with James Ketch at the University of North Carolina in Chapel Hill, earning a master of music degree in jazz, classical trumpet, and conducting. He was a North Carolina Visiting Artist from 1990 to 1992, and taught trumpet at Goshen College from 1992 to 1995. He attended the Eastman School of Music where he studied with Charles Geyer and Barbara Butler from 1995 to 1997, and completed his doctor of musical arts degree in 2001. Hodel studied the (valveless) Baroque trumpet with Edward H. Tarr from January through May of 2007. He has also studied with Allen Vizzutti, Donald Hunsberger, Raymond Mase, David Hickman, and Anthony Plog.

Hodel has taught at St. Olaf College in Minnesota since 1997. He toured with the Dallas Brass in 1996-98 and 2004-06 and was a member of the Minnesota Orchestra during the 2005-06 season. With organist Bradley Lehman, he formed the Hodel-Lehman Duo that has toured the United States and Europe. Among their CDs is In Thee Is Gladness (Larips Records).

Hodel and his wife Shana K. Hodel, a Montessori schoolteacher and pianist, have three children: Anika (b. 1995), Christoph (b. 1997), and Julia (b. 2000). His hobbies include photography, gardening, bicycling, and fishing.

Bibl.: "Martin Hodel" (www.stolaf.edu/depts/music/faculty/winds.html); personal interview, Apr. 7, 2011.

Hoese, Johann Georg (b. Leipzig, Germany, 1727; d. Ludwigslust, Germany, Oct. 12, 1801). German trumpeter. In 1747, Hoese became Court and Field Trumpeter in Schwerin; since he had the title of a Field Trumpeter, he must have participated earlier in a military campaign, probably during the War of the Austrian Succession. He was an extraordinarily gifted clarino soloist for whom Johann Wilhelm Hertel, a court composer in Schwerin beginning in 1754, wrote his Trumpet Concertos Nos. 2 and 3, probably before 1757-58. (It is a misconception that Hertel wrote all five concertos for Hoese. Dahlqvist has shown that both the Concerto No. 1 and the double concerto for trumpet and oboe must have been written in 1748-49, while the composer was in Neustrelitz. His Concerto a 5 for trumpet, two oboes, and two bassoons must have been composed in Berlin during a brief period in 1747, or the first half of 1748. This instrumental combination also corresponds to that used in Prussian military music. It is not known for which trumpeter these three concertos were written.) Hertel also wrote difficult trumpet parts in the sinfonias to some vocal works from 1754.

Beginning in 1763, Hoese received an extra yearly payment of sixty thalers because of his particular skill "in concerto playing." He also played a string instrument in the Ducal orchestra, and in June 1773 took over his ill father-in-law's position as timpanist. Hoese retired on March 22, 1800 with a full pension, and died of consumption at the age of seventy-four. Hoese can be seen in G.D. Matthieu's painting (1770) of the Ducal orchestra, standing at the left, holding a long trumpet and a part marked "Clarino I."

Bibl.: Dahlqvist, Reine. Bidrag till trumpeten och trumpetspelets historia ... (dissertation, University of Gothenburg); Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott).

Hoffman, Edward ("Ed") (b. Evanston, Illinois, Oct. 29, 1944). American trumpeter. Hoffman grew up in the Chicago area. He began playing trumpet at age nine; his first teachers were Joe Judkins and Robert Schreffler. After graduating from Maine Township High School in 1962, he studied with Ed Turrentine at Lawrence University from 1962 to 1966, and pursued graduate studies with Roger Voisin at the New England Conservatory from 1966 to 1968. He has also studied with Richard Metzger, Armando Ghitalla, Vincent Cichowicz, and James Stamp.

As an orchestral player, Hoffman has been a member of the Phoenix Symphony Orchestra (1972-76), North Carolina Symphony (1976-82), and the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra (1982-2010) where he performed every trumpet position in the orchestra. He has also played with the Boston Symphony Orchestra, Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, Baltimore Chamber Orchestra, and the Milwaukee Symphony Orchestra. He has taught at Northern Michigan University (while in the Air Force from 1968-72), Northern Arizona University (1973-76), St. Augustine College (Raleigh, NC), and the Peabody Conservatory (since 1985). While in North Carolina, he taught at the Eastern Music Festival. During recent summers, he has traveled to Hong Kong to teach and serve as a mentor for the aspiring musicians of the Asian Youth Orchestra. He also produced many educational programs for the Baltimore Symphony Orchestra, and has published several compositions for trumpet including Four Miniatures (Tromba Publications) and Advanced Interval Studies (Hickman Music Editions).

Hoffman is married to violinist and computer programmer Anita Hoffman. His hobbies include photography, fly fishing, hiking, canoeing, painting, Toastmasters, and cooking.

Bibl.: personal interview, Aug. 26, 2011.

Höfs, Matthias (b. Lübeck, Germany, Sept. 27, 1965). German trumpeter. Höfs began playing trumpet at age six, and at age ten began studying with Peter Kallensee, with whom he continued during college at the University of Music and Theater in Hamburg. In 1984, Höfs studied with Konradin Groth at the Karajan Academy of the Berlin Philharmonic, graduating with distinction. From 1984 to 2000, Höfs was principal trumpet of the Philharmonic State Orchestra in Hamburg, and in 1985 became a member of the large ensemble, German Brass.

During his early career, Höfs received numerous honors, prizes, awards, and grants, including a Hanse Cultural Prize from the City of Lübeck (1983), first prize in an all-university solo competition (1987), the Eduard-Soehring Prize (1988), grants from the German Council on Music and Mozart Music Society (1989), and first prize in the International Music Competition in Markneukirchen (1990). He has also been a guest trumpeter with many leading ensembles including the Berlin Philharmonic, Munich Philharmonic, Villa Musica, Deutsche Kammerphilharmonie Bremen, and the Linos Ensemble.

As a soloist, Höfs has released six CDs: Gansch Meets Höfs, Trumpet Acrobatics, Un Concerto Italiano, An English Concert, Solo de Concours, and The Trumpet Shall Sound. He has also recorded with the German Brass, and written numerous arrangements for it.

Since 2000, Höfs has taught as a professor at the University of Music and Theater in Hamburg. He has been a guest teacher at numerous schools around the world, including the Tchaikovsky Conservatory in Moscow, Royal Conservatory in Copenhagen, and the Guildhall School of Music and Drama in London. In cooperation with the German trumpet making company Thein, he has for years been further developing existing instruments and creating new ones.

Bibl.: Keim, Friedel. Das große Buch der Trompete (Schott); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom; Oct. 2008); Matthias Höfs's official website: www.matthiashoefs.de; personal interview, Feb. 16, 2011.

Hohstadt, Thomas (b. Ryan, Oklahoma, Sept. 5, 1933). American trumpeter. Hohstadt grew up in Stillwater, Oklahoma where he graduated from high school in 1951. He began playing professionally at the age of fifteen when he joined the Horace Heidt dance orchestra. He played a terrific classical rendition of the Flight of the Bumble Bee with the orchestra in a c1948 broadcast (Laplace misspelled him as William Hollstad in his CD-Rom). He attended the Eastman School of Music, and graduated with a bachelor of music degree. He was awarded a Fulbright scholarship upon graduation, and for five years studied at the Vienna Academy of Music where he earned a diploma. He then returned to the Eastman School where he received a doctor of musical arts degree in 1962.

Hohstadt was awarded prizes by the F.E. Olds & Son Company for two scholarly papers titled Solo Literature for the Trumpet (1959) and Modern Concepts in Music for Brass (1967), the latter being the title of his doctoral thesis; Olds published excerpts of both. Following his college years, Hohstadt performed as a member of the Oklahoma City Symphony, Lake Placid Sinfonietta, US Army Band, and the Rochester Philharmonic. He then turned his career toward conducting, and studied with Pierre Monteux, Gustav Xoslik, Frederick Fennell, and Paul Vini. He became the principal trumpet and assistant conductor of the Honolulu Symphony Orchestra in 1962, and later conductor of the Midland-Odessa Symphony in Texas and the Amarillo Symphony (ten years). He published numerous articles on trumpet playing and music.

Recently, Hohstadt has devoted his time to religious matters, and is an instructor at the International Worship Institute. He has published several texts on religion including Dying to Live and I Felt God...I Think.

Bibl.: "Thomas Hohstadt" (www.next-wave.org/about.html); Laplace, Michel. Trompette, Cuivres & XXe Siècle (CD-Rom incl. The Flight of the Bumble Bee mp3; Oct. 2008).

Hois, Charles ("Charlie") F. (b. Mar. 25, 1930; d. Lebanon, Pennsylvania, Feb. 21, 2010). American trumpeter. Hois grew up in Philadelphia. He attended the Tanglewood Music Festival during the summers of 1948, 1949, and 1950, and graduated from the Curtis Institute in 1950. After serving for two years in the US Marine Corps (1950-52), he played first trumpet in the Ballet Russe de Monte Carlo Orchestra in New York for three seasons (1952-55). He became principal trumpet of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra in 1960, and played in the Chautauqua Symphony Orchestra during the summers of the 1960s and '70s. During his career, he taught at Duquesne University and Carnegie Mellon University.

In 1992, a few years before his retirement in 1996, Hois moved to the second trumpet position in the PSO. He was active in the Gateway to Music program in the Pittsburgh schools and was considered to be a warm and generous man with a modest nature. He was diagnosed with lung cancer in 2008 and died at the age of seventy-nine. He and his wife had three sons, Jim, Brian, and David.

Considering that Hois was a member of the Cleveland Orchestra for four years (1955-59) and principal of the Pittsburgh Symphony Orchestra for thirty-two years, it is surprising that more information is not available about this important musician and teacher.

Bibl.: Thornton, Mary. "Trumpet Players of the Cleveland Orchestra" (International Trumpet Guild Journal, Feb. 1994); Rotstein, Gary. "Orbituary: Charles F. Hois/PSO trumpeter for 36 years, nearly all as principal" (www.Post-Gazette.com).

Holbrook, Jeffrey ("Jeff") D. (b. Urbana, Illinois, Jan. 18, 1984). American trumpeter. Holbrook grew up in Normal, Illinois. At age ten, he began studying trumpet with Joseph Burzinski, and during high school took lessons in Urbana from Dr. Michael Ewald, and from Michael Davison during three summers at the Interlochen Arts Camp in Michigan. While in high school, he was principal trumpet of the Chicago Youth Symphony Orchestra, Illinois All-State Honors Orchestra, and the Band of America's Honor Band.

After graduating from high school, Holbrook attended The Juilliard School from 2002 to 2006 where he studied with Raymond Mase and Mark Gould, earning a bachelor of music degree. Immediately after graduating, he assumed duties with the Seoul Philharmonic Orchestra in South Korea where he is currently associate principal trumpet. He has performed and recorded with the American Brass Quintet, was a member of the 2005 National Repertory Orchestra in Breckenridge, Colorado, and participated in the Festival dei Due Mondi in Spoleto, Italy (summers 2003 and 2004).

Holbrook and his wife Sophie, a trumpet player and band director, were married in 2008. He is an avid sports fan, and enjoys traveling and good wine.

Bibl.: Jeffrey Holbrook's official website: www.jdhtrumpet.com; personal interview, Aug. 21, 2011.

Holland, Herbert Lee ("Peanuts") (b. Norfolk, Virginia, Feb. 9, 1910; d. Stockholm, Sweden, Feb. 7, 1979). American trumpeter.

Holland acquired his musical training at the Jenkins Orphanage in Charleston, South Carolina. He then played in several territorial bands before joining Alphonse Trent's orchestra (1928-33) and making his first recordings (1930).

Holland played with Al Sears (1932), the Jeter-Pillars Orchestra, Willie Bryant, Jimmy Lunceford, and Lil Armstrong's Big Band (1935-36). In the late 1930s, he led his own group in Buffalo, New York, but moved to New York City in 1939 where he later played with Coleman Hawkins (1940) and Fletcher Henderson (1940-41). Although Holland was often featured on recordings with Henderson's band, he left Henderson's society orchestra to join Charlie Barnet's band (1941-46). After that, he toured Europe with Don Redman's orchestra (1946), and like several members of Redman's group, decided to stay in Europe. He lived in Paris and Stockholm during the last thirty-two years of his life. He played with Ray Ventura, Don Byas, Mezz Mezzrow, and appeared on television with Claude Bolling (1960) and in festivals such as the Comblain-la-Tour (1964).

Holland led recording sessions in Europe (1946-48, 1950-52, 1954, 1957, and 1959-60), recording a total of forty-six albums, which unfortunately were not distributed in the United States. One of the best was Peanuts Holland-Michel Attenoux & Son Orchestre, recorded in 1952 on the Swing label. Recent compilation CDs of Holland's playing include Geneva (TCB), 1947 (Classics), and Drop Me Off in Harlem (GRP/Decca).

